Early voting set for four local elections

Voters to decide school fund issue

AUSTIN (AP) - Texans begin casting ballots Monday on whether to allow some local property tax money to be shifted from richer to poorer school districts to help meet a court order for equitable education funding.

It's the first time voters will speak directly on a proposal after three Texas Supreme Court rulings against the state's school finance system.

The proposed constitutional amendment made it to the May 1 ballot only after a bitter partisan battle in the Legislature. It remains the center of controversy as early voting starts Monday.

Supporters of Proposition 1, led by Gov. Ann Richards, say it's the most practical avenue to a constitutional plan that will answer court objections by a June 1 deadline and keep public schools open.

"The one thing I will remember when I vote ... is the school children of Texas," said Richards, a Democrat whose effort is supported by some Republicans.

"What I guess I would like for the public to remember is that it means jobs to this state," Richards said.

She says Texas' ability to attract new business would take a beating if lawmakers fail to pass a plan by the court deadline, thus triggering an order to halt state school funding and headlines about potential school closings.

Some back-breaking work last week should produce some mind-boggling results in Hereford in a few years.

Members of the Rotary Club of Hereford plus a couple helpers potted 500 -- count 'em -- seedling trees that will be planted around town in a few months.

The club received the seedlings through the National Tree Trust, a non-profit corporation dedicated to the purpose of encouraging and assisting in the planting of trees and preserving the nation's natural resources and environments.

Hereford Rotarians are joining their fellow members throughout the country in the tree-planting project.

After about six months, or until the seedlings are deemed ready for transplanting, public areas, such as city parks and school grounds, as well as some private property will be the sites for the trees to grow and prosper.

Roland Saul, Rotary Club president, said the club will take suggestions about possible planting sites.

The main criteria for planting locations is that the trees be readily visible to the public.

"We could even plant them in a front yard -- but not a back yard -- where the trees would be seen," he said.

The seedlings -- Arizona cypress, bald cypress, green ash and honey locust -- are donated by about a dozen major forest product companies to the National Tree Trust which, in turn, furnishes the plants to organizations interested in participating in the program.

Besides offering trees for community tree-planting, the NTT provides seedlings for beautification of the nation's highways and roads.

Members of the Rotary Club gathered at the John Pitman Municipal Golf Course one evening to put the bare root seedlings in two-gallon containers. Dirt from the farm of club member Ken Rogers was mixed with potting soil for the job.

After all 500 had been potted, a club member, Dennis Hicks installed a drip water system to ensure that the trees will receive adequate moisture during coming months.

Through the good auspices of a Rotary member, City Manager Chester Nolen; the golf pro, Dave Kaesheimer, and the groundskeeper, Mary Haun, the trees will remain in an out-of-bounds area at the city-owned course until ready for transplanting. Haun is supporting the project by agreeing to check the plants periodically and turn water on, when needed.

Hicks said, depending on weather conditions, the trees will require watering for about an hour, twice a week. The system he installed, which used 500 feet of tubing, will provide a gallon per hour.

The club president pointed out that the seedlings and containers came free of charge. Only expense incurred is in the irrigation system, estimated at a worth of about $200 retail.

About 20 club members, plus a club sweetheart, Wendy Warrick, and a Hereford High School student, Quincy Curtis, shoveled dirt, packed the containers and toted the potted plants to get the job done in approximately three hours.

The next day, some sore hands and backs were testimony to the effort. When the plants show signs of life this spring, though, the club members will know it was worth the aches and pains.

Rotary Club puts energies to work

Members of the Hereford Rotary Club gathered last week to work on a community service project, potting 500 seedling trees given to the club by the National Tree Trust. The Hereford club is joining other Rotarians in the national project.

'Share-the-wealth' pushed as means to keep schools open

By PEGGY FIKAC

Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) - A share-the-wealth school funding proposal gives Texas its best chance to keep public schools open and get state leaders' focus off the courtroom and onto the classroom, backers say.

"It allows us to meet the court's requirements and to get past the school finance issue and concentrate on improving the quality of instruction," said Rep. Libby Linebarger, D-Manchaca.

Ms. Linebarger sponsored the proposed constitutional amendment on the May 1 ballot with Sen. Bill Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant. Early voting begins Monday.

Ratliff said lawmakers' alternatives without the amendment - such as school consolidation - are "Draconian."

He and Ms. Linebarger are part of the "Save Our Schools" campaign for the proposed constitutional amendment, which would allow some local property tax money to be shifted from wealthier to poorer school districts.

Other key backers include Gov. Ann Richards, the Texas Chamber of Commerce, school board and administrators' associations, three of the four major state teacher groups, a number of property-wealthy school districts, and poor districts that have waged the court battle for fair access to funds.

Proposition 1 stems from repeated Texas Supreme Court orders for the state to even out funding available to property-rich and poor school districts that levy similar local tax rates. Schools rely mainly on state aid and local taxes, with some federal funds.

Lawmakers, in their last effort to meet the court order, approved the current school funding system. Under it, some local property tax money is shifted from wealthier to poorer school districts within single-county or multi-county education districts.

But the state Supreme Court said the system violates the Texas Constitution. The justices gave lawmakers until June 1 to come up with a constitutional plan.

Backers say Proposition 1 would give lawmakers a tool to do by making such fund-sharing constitutional.

Supporters also dispute opponents' claims that the measure would result in a $2.4 billion tax increase over two years.

The proposal on the ballot doesn't require a local tax increase, they say. But some also add that unless lawmakers put enough state money into any school funding plan, local tax increases will be required to maintain programs and meet growing enrollments.

Backers say only about one-10th of school districts would share some of their property wealth with their poorer counterparts under a plan that has been proposed to implement Proposition 1. Most districts would benefit, they say.

The state already redistributes local funds under the current County Education District system, which has been declared unconstitutional.

Unless the state can continue doing so, backers say the approximately $400 million coming from the richer school districts will have to be made up somewhere else, such as higher local taxes in the other districts.

Supporters of the measure also dispute opponents' claims that the measure would erode schools' local control of their taxes.

If Proposition 1 doesn't pass - and lawmakers don't pass a different plan by June 1 - supporters predict at the least a public relations disaster for Texas due to a court-ordered cutoff of state funds and the potential closing of schools.

"Even one day of that happening is going to be a PR nightmare for Texas," said Margaret Justus of the Save Our Schools campaign.

Gov. Richards said she hopes that when Texans cast their votes, "I'd like for them to think that they want me to be able to stay on the road as I do, selling Texas, and be able to say that our public education system's a good one."

'Robin Hood' = higher taxes

By PEGGY FIKAC

Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) - Their aim: to defeat the share-the-wealth school funding amendment on the state ballot.

Their motto: "Vote Your Conscience & Your Pocketbook by Saying 'No' to the 'Robin Hood' Taxes on May 1."

They are Texans Against Robin Hood Taxes, a Republican-led group that contends Proposition 1 would result in massive higher taxes and wouldn't end the continuing court battle over fair school funding.

The group calls the measure Democratic Gov. Ann Richards' "proposed $1 billion tax hike," drawing fire from those who support the plan to allow redistribution of some local property taxes from wealthier to poorer school districts.

Dallas businessman Tom Pauken, a leader of Texans Against Robin Hood Taxes, called Proposition 1 a "stupid way" to try to answer a Texas Supreme Court order for lawmakers to write a constitutional school funding plan by June 1.

"There are plenty of alternatives available short of a massive property tax hike," Pauken said.

He said the proposal "doesn't do anything to improve the quality and accountability of education" and sets Texas on the road to an income tax because it wouldn't end court fights over school funding.

Opponents also say the measure would erode local school districts' authority by allowing lawmakers to set local school district tax rates.

"This is major blow to local control of schools," said Karen Hughes, state GOP executive director. The State Republican Executive Committee has passed a resolution opposing Proposition 1.

The Association of Texas Professional Educators also came out against the measure. It would prefer a state income tax to improve public education spending, with a reduction in property taxes and sales taxes.

The teachers' group is critical of those who say tax restructuring is needed but that an income tax isn't presently a political possibility.

"We have been laboring for 24 years with an identified inequitable public school funding system, and now the status quo bandwagon is overloaded with individuals who have chosen to do what is politically correct and not what is right," said Cathy Fletcher, association president.

Among proposed alternatives to Proposition 1:

-A constitutional amendment to restrict court oversight of school funding and define an equitable school funding system. This hasn't been able to muster enough votes in the Legislature to go on a state ballot, and even if it were approved by lawmakers, it couldn't go to voters before the Supreme Court's June 1 deadline.

Rep. John Culberson, R-Houston, said the state would be OK if lawmakers passed just about any school funding plan before the June 1 deadline and put his proposal on a ballot later this year. "There are no other options out there that will solve the problem permanently," Culberson said.

-Set up a voucher system to allow students from under-performing school districts to choose another public or private school. Proposition 1 supporters have said this wouldn't solve the equity problem.

-Allow voters in each county to decide on a countywide tax rate for schools, or to decide on ratifying the current county education district tax. This would also be a tax funds redistribution plan.

Random audits show 30 percent of grocery scanners make errors

HOUSTON (AP) - Grocery shoppers in Texas sometimes pay more than they should at checkout lines because of inaccurate electronic scanners, the Texas Department of Agriculture says, but the state's random audits do not show any widespread cheating.

"I want consumers to be alert and aware, but I don't think consumers should be afraid," agency spokeswoman Lorie Woodward said Friday.

Thirty percent of Texas grocery stores audited randomly over the past six months showed at least one overcharge per audit, Ms. Woodward said. Ms. Woodward said as many as 26 percent of the stores in the state also showed undercharges, which are not recorded.

In the Houston area, officials have checked 210 stores and uncovered 95 violations since 1992, Ms. Woodward told the Houston Chronicle.

"We know these errors exist and they occur, but I don't think it's widespread intentional effort to defraud consumers," she told the Chronicle. "Because we don't feel there is malicious intent, I think (the spot audits are) serving as a deterrent."

"When you look at it on a per-time basis, which is where it really affects the consumer, the error percentage rate is less than 2 percent of the stuff that we sample," Ms. Woodward said.

She noted that most stores have policies to make up to consumers for overcharges that are discovered, and have internal monitoring programs to check for pricing errors. But the state program probably helps deter deliberate dishonesty, she said.

"The thought of having someone out there that is actually watching and protecting the consumer would be a deterrent if there was somebody considering taking advantage of the consumer," Ms. Woodward said.

The Agriculture Department began its random inspections of scanners in the state's 8,000 grocery stores in 1990. Only seven states have a scanner inspection program, Ms. Woodward said.

Since September, 1,471 stores with scanners have been audited, about 12 times more than in fiscal 1991, the first year of the program, when there were 33 violations bringing in $18,000 in fines.

In 1992, there were 26 violations, generating more than $10,000 in fines. The exact amount of fines so far this year is unknown because of a record-keeping backlog, Woodward said.

A walk with the Mailman leads to hundreds of homes

By JENNY STRASBURG
San Angelo Standard-Times
SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) - This city of some 86,000 people can be dangerous.

Dogs roam the neighborhoods unchecked. Garden hoses lie in wait to trip the careless pedestrian.

And through it all, residents rely on the U.S. mail to get through safe and sound.

That's where Ralph Jernigan comes in.

He's the Mailman.

He carries a bag.

Fueled by nothing more than a toaster pastry and a cup of coffee, Jernigan begins his day. Before his work is done, he will have visited 369 homes and walked eight and a half miles.

He arrives at the Southwest Station before 7 a.m. and immediately begins to "case" the day's mail - a three-hour process of sorting packages, magazines and catalogs and placing every letter, bill and postcard in the slot with its corresponding address.

Jernigan says many people think mail carriers spend the whole day outside. In reality, their in-office work claims nearly half the day. And that's after the mail already has been separated according to routes.

He bundles the mail in order, with rubber bands - "two rubber bands," he explains, "both ways, so the letters don't slip out."

Similarly, he arranges the magazines and catalogs, referred to in the business as "flats," he says - "mostly because they're ... well, flat."

On a recent day, Jernigan sorted his stacks of Reader's Digests.

"If people don't get their Reader's Digests, they start complaining," Jernigan muses. "They don't care about getting checks or bills, but if they don't get their Reader's Digest, they're upset."

By the time Jernigan loads his truck and hits the streets, it's 10 o'clock.

He drives to his route and parks his mail truck in the same place every day, in the College Hills area just a few blocks from Angelo State University. He stuffs mail into his leather mail pouch, worn soft after 15 years of companionship.

"This is a pretty part of the route," he says, then seems worried the compliment is unfair to the rest of the neighborhood.

"Well, the whole route is really nice," he says.

"I love a day like today. It's nice and cool, the wind's blowing, you're out here by yourself, just walking around."

"And you get paid for it."

Energized, Jernigan sets out at a brisk pace on his slender, muscular legs. He's a little hard to keep up with, even for someone not burdened with pounds of mail.

He walks down one side of the street and back on the other. He constantly shuffles mail in preparation for the house he'll hit next.

Meanwhile, he delves into a topic only a mail carrier could fully appreciate: the myriad possibilities of mailbox placement.

PUTTING UP A GOOD FRONT

There are a few things that a homeowner can do to insure that your home will make the best seller list before it's put on the market. The following tips will help your home to make the best seller list. 1. The first thing a prospective buyer sees is the front of the house. Make sure the front door, windows, screens and shutters, if you have them, are cleaned or freshly painted. 2. Make sure gutters and downspouts are clean and tightly attached to eaves of the house. 3. Trim shrubbery and seed lawn or add grass plugs if there are bare spots, plant some flowers for added color. 4. As silly as it sounds, replace old worn garbage cans. 5. If the driveway has oil stains a thin coat of do-it-yourself blacktop will cover the stains and look more attractive. Now your home is ready for the best seller list and we as professional real estate agents are ready to find prospective buyers for you.

Jernigan experiences life one step at a time along his route

"I've got one house with a ficus tree sitting out on the porch, completely covering the mailbox," Jernigan says. "You'd never see the box. It's a humongous ficus."

But Jernigan pulls the branches aside and deposits the mail.

Thirty-nine-year-old Jernigan takes his work very seriously.

Gliding over plush lawns on a chilly afternoon, he explains that mail carriers are the last of a dying breed, the stubborn end to a line of personal service providers.

"It used to be that the milkman came to the door every day, and the breadman. The mailman is the last person to come to every door every day."

He seizes a stack of letters from his pack and pushes onward under the clear sky.

That's why he likes delivering mail in a neighborhood like the one he has, where he gets to walk up to each house.

"I'd never see anybody otherwise. I would lose some of the personality of the job. The elderly, they kind of depend on that; it's a part of their day, especially the people who can't get out.

"The mail is their life. A lot of people shop through the mail, get letters from their relatives, their Social Security check ... I mean, everything. They know you're going to come by."

Jernigan relays a story involving an elderly woman who was waiting outside when he got to her house.

"I'm really glad to see you," she said. "I've been waiting for you."

The woman had locked herself out of her house. "I go around back, and she's got this old rickety table set up and a chair where she'd tried to climb up to open a window. She'd managed to open it about two or three inches."

Jernigan opened the window and squeezed his 5-foot-11-inches and 155 pounds of low-fat mass through. "It was a really small window. It kind of reminded me of being born, I guess."

He landed on top of the kitchen sink, went through the house and unlocked the front door.

"The thing that got me was ... instead of calling somebody else, she knew I was going to be there."

Jernigan delivered mail in Austin for nine years before he moved to San Angelo six years ago. From routes past and present, he has some colorful anecdotes.

Such as this one: "About five years ago, it was the last time Christmas was on a Monday. That meant it would be Tuesday before we could deliver any parcels from Saturday, and there would be a lot of Christmas presents in those parcels."

"So the post office decided to deliver some parcels on Christmas day. I volunteered - time and a half, you know."

"I got up to the first house, 8:30 on Christmas morning. It was obvious this was a Christmas present, the way it was wrapped. I could smell the turkey roasting. I could hear kids going crazy in the background. I could hear Christmas music playing."

"I thought, this will be neat. I'm going to give them one more present. I rang the doorbell, and this lady comes to the door with her hair in curlers and she's got this robe on, and you can tell she's been up half the night."

"I thought, here's my chance to just put a smile on her face. I said, 'Here's one more present you can open.'

"She didn't miss a beat. I'd barely gotten that out of my mouth before she said, 'If it's not batteries, I don't want it.'

"And she still didn't smile. So I gave her the present and walked away and thought how it really ruined my whole day."

And then there are the four-legged menaces.

"I've been bitten by dogs twice," Jernigan says. "Two terriers."

He's not ashamed of this fact.

"Big dogs keep their distance, because they're a little more experienced. I just have to bend down like I'm going to pick up a rock or something, and they'll run."

"The little dogs - like terriers and poodles - they're the ones that bite, because they'll come up and nip at your heels."

But the yipping antagonists preferred Jernigan's calves.

"One guy (the owner) was yelling behind me, saying, 'Don't worry! He won't bite!' The guy yelled that twice. Then the dog jumped up and got me in the calf."

"Of course, they can't get much higher, which is good."

Jernigan's canine experiences have convinced him of the virtues of knee-high socks.

Even though, he admits, government-issue legwear doesn't necessarily look all that cool.

Knee-high socks also provide job security, Jernigan says.

"I wear the tall ones for support. If I'm going to walk 16 more years until I retire, I want to be sure I'm healthy enough to do that."

"I don't think there's anything I'd rather do. I enjoy it too much. I love, I absolutely love, walking."

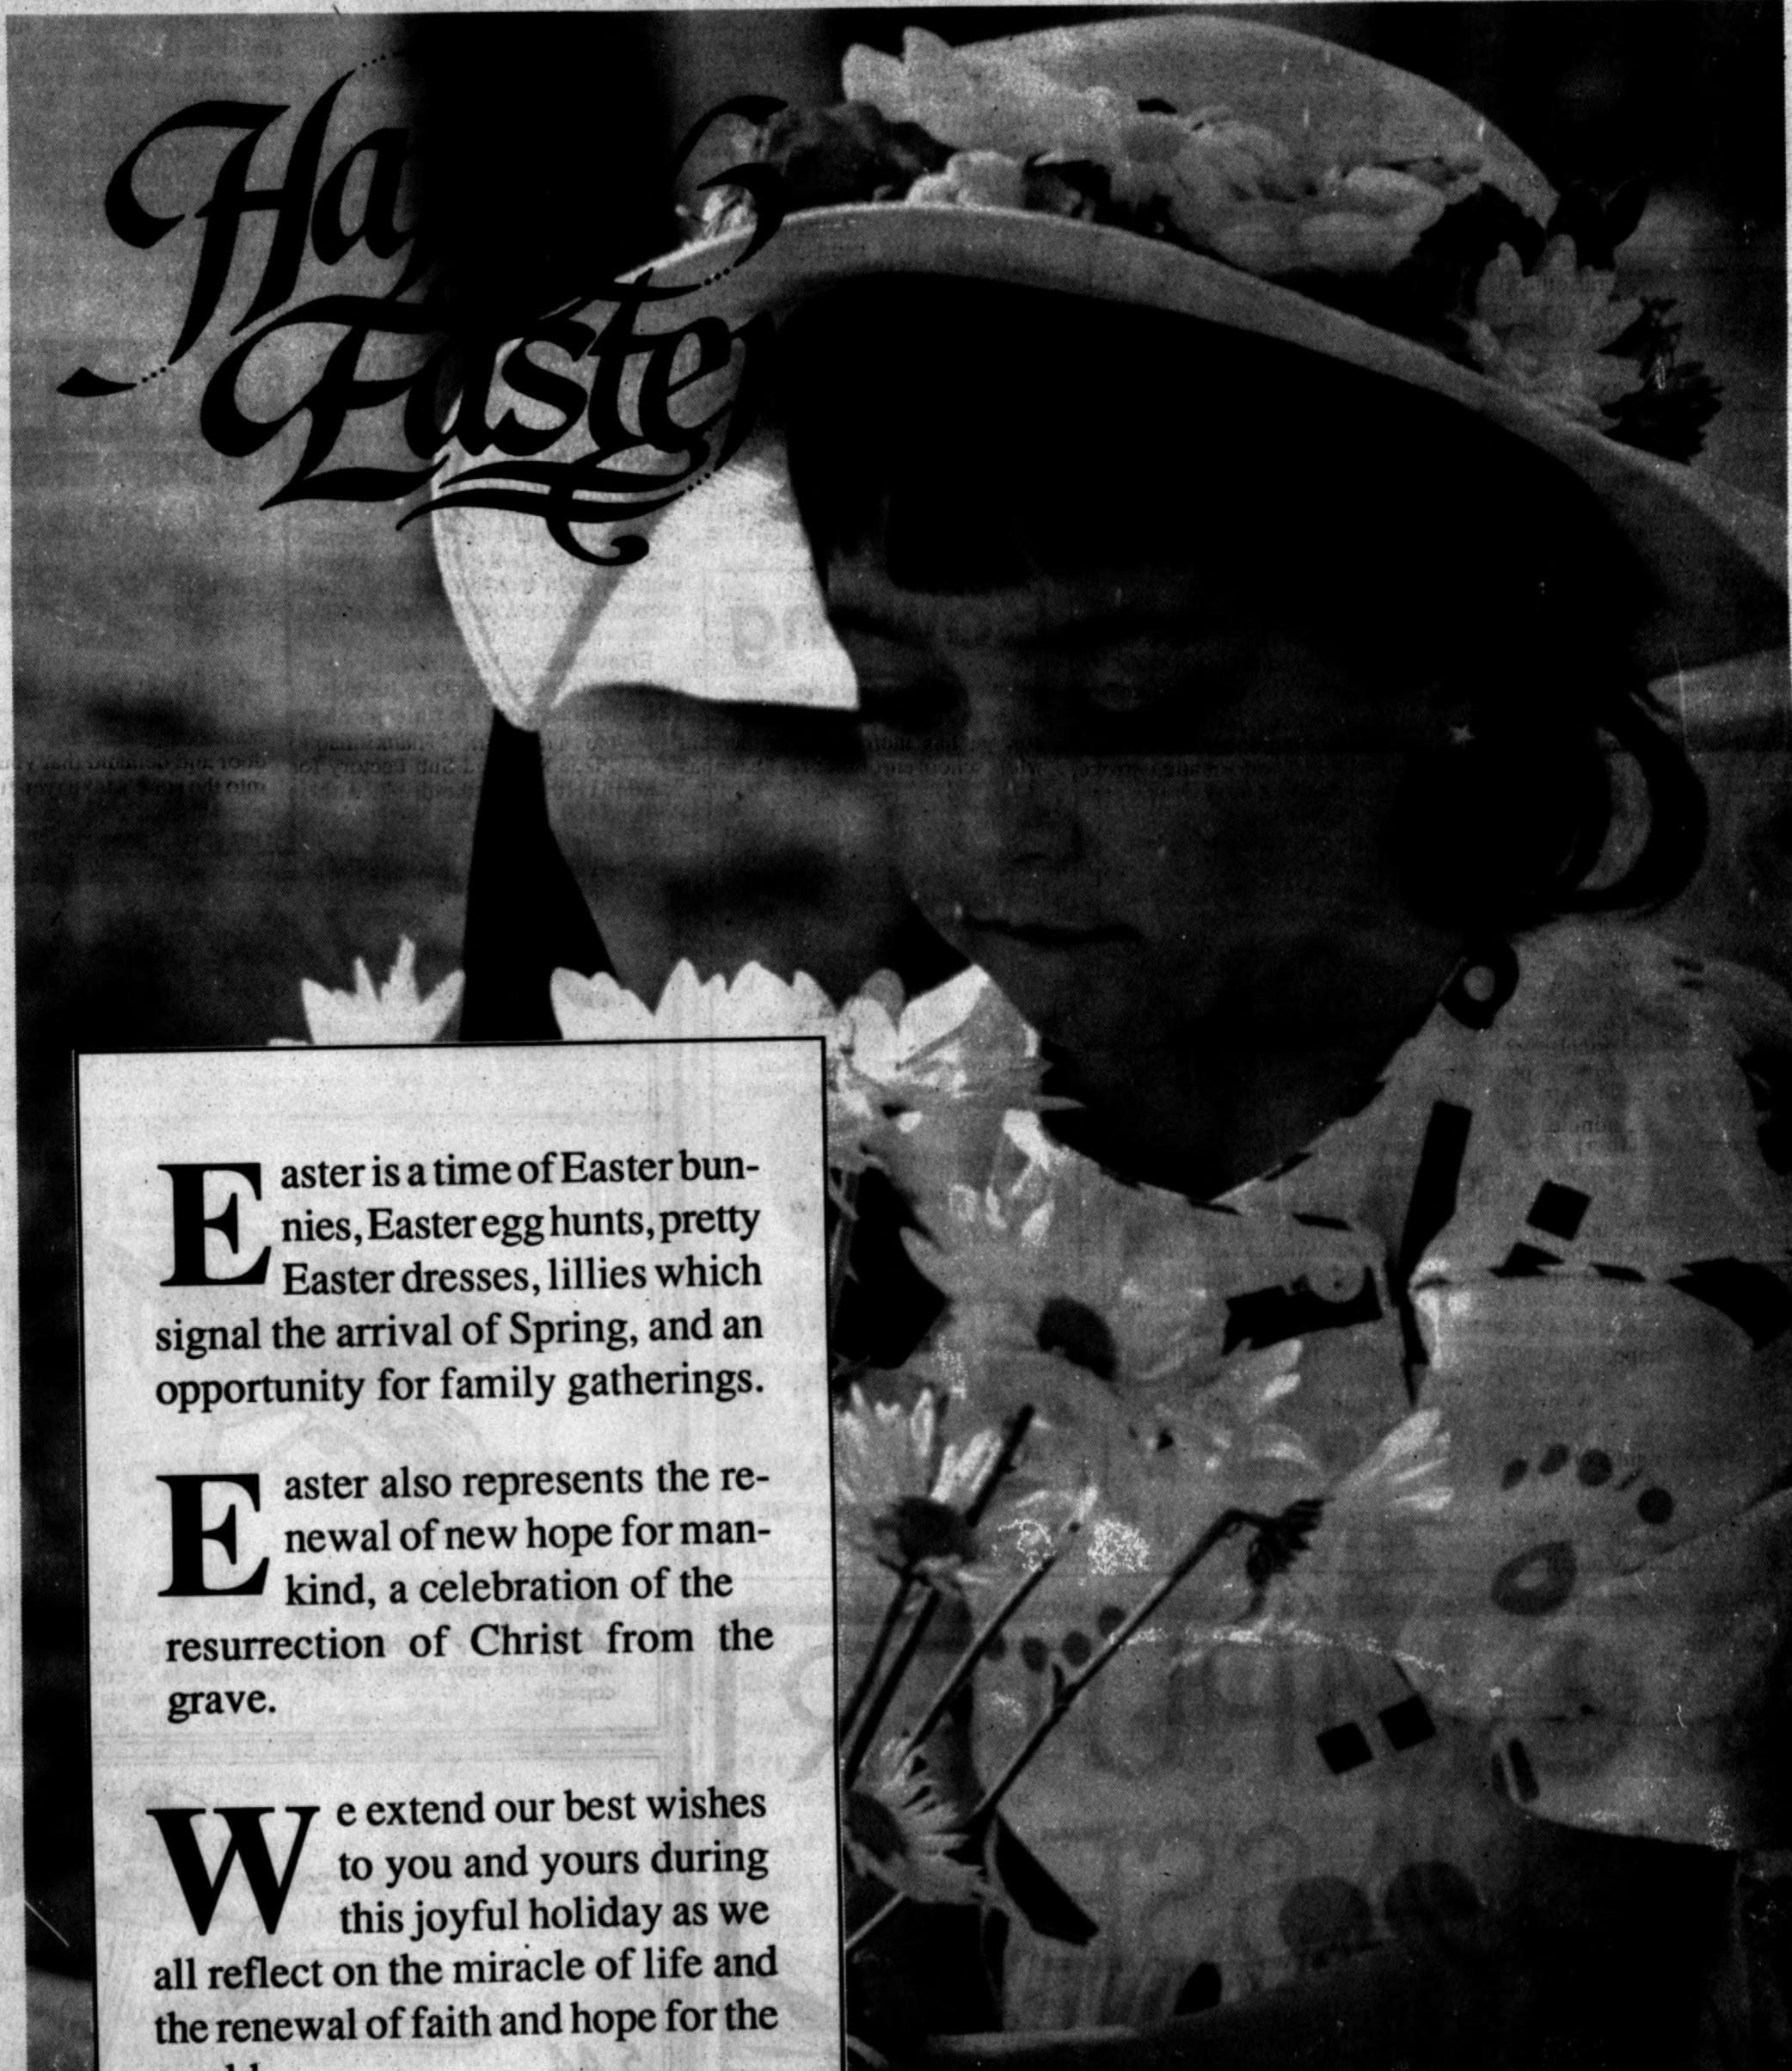

"There aren't that many jobs where you could go out and make this kind of money, with this kind of benefits, with no college education."

When he joined the Postal Service, Jernigan had just finished six years in the Army after high school. Combined, his years of civil service will allow him to retire at a relatively young age.

He plans to pursue other interests - perhaps a teaching degree - depending on what kind of shape he's in.

Meanwhile, Jernigan says, carrying mail is the best job he has ever had.

"The personal aspect of this job is what I enjoy most," he reflects.

TSCRA investigated 144 cases Thefts cost ranchers millions in '92

The theft of livestock and ranch equipment in 1992 cost Texas and Oklahoma cattlemen and farmers millions of dollars, according to the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, the Fort Worth-based producer group that has fought the theft problem for more than a century.

In an annual report given to members attending the recent 116th annual TSCRA convention in Austin, Don C. King, secretary-general manager, said during the last year, 33 field inspectors of the TSCRA developed 144 theft cases, primarily involving cattle thefts.

Inspectors, all certified peace officers with special Texas Ranger commissions, worked closely with state and local law enforcement officers and recovered or accounted for 2,407 head of cattle and horses, 51 trailers, 47 saddles and miscellaneous ranch property valued at $3,036,816.

He emphasized the role played by brand inspection in solving many of the cattle-related cases and recovery of animals.

The TSCRA employs approximately 82 brand inspectors who each year identify up to six million head of cattle at the time of their sale. Inspectors report their findings to the Fort Worth headquarters where the information is processed for computer retrieval. TSCRA has the only centralized and computerized brand inspection records in the United States.

Cases worked in 1992 by field inspectors and other law enforcement officers, when presented for prosecution, resulted in more than 860 years of prison, probated, deferred, suspended and community service sentences for offenders. The courts ordered those convicted to pay $271,686 in restitution to the victims. Fines, court costs and other compensation were assessed in the amount of $66,003.50.

In Texas, the theft of livestock is a felony offense, even for the theft of one animal. King encouraged cattlemen and owners of farm and ranch equipment to protect themselves from theft. He suggested a call to a field inspector or the Fort Worth office for information on theft prevention and brand information.

'92 feed grain yields set record high

WASHINGTON (AP) - Yields for all feed grains reached record highs with the 1992 crop, the Agriculture Department says.

Corn yields were 21 percent higher than in 1991, grain sorghum was up 23 percent, barley increased 13 percent and oats were 29 percent higher, according to a recently released situation and outlook yearbook on feed.

Domestic feed grain use in 1992-93 is expected to hit a record high of 196 million tons, up from the high of 185 million tons the previous season.

"The rise is largely due to increased livestock numbers and more grain used for food, seed and industrial products," the report said.

But U.S. exports of feed grain were expected to be 19 million tons below the record 70.6 million set in 1979-80, it said.

"Feed and residual use of corn is expected to reach 5.2 billion bushels, up over 6 percent," the report said. "This growth is supported by higher meat production in the cattle, hog and poultry sectors. Further, the quality of some of the 1992 crop, particularly in the northern part of the corn-growing regions, was diminished by late maturation."

When there are freezing temperatures before maturity, corn starch production ceases. Consequently, the weight of premature corn is lower than mature corn, the report said.

"From June to November 1992, average prices received by farmers for corn declined from $2.47 per bushel to $1.98 as the condition of the crop improved and record yields were apparent," it said.

"Although the condition of the crop was rated generally good as the harvest began, the maturity of the crop was several weeks behind normal and remained subject to greater-than-normal loss from frost."

World coarse grain production and consumption are forecast at all-time highs in 1992-93, the report said. "However, world trade in coarse grains is forecast down 2 percent, largely because of a projected 6-million-ton drop in imports by the former Soviet Union. Excluding the former Soviet Union, world imports are forecast up about 5 percent," it said.

Marketing channels. Proceeds from the sale will be used to pay for transportation, handling and storage of the commodity and for developmental activities in agriculture and food processing.

The Agriculture Department will pay for all ocean transportation.

Seventy-five percent of the corn will be shipped on U.S. flag vessels, in accordance with cargo preference requirements.

TCFA sponsoring research projects

In an effort to help feedyards in Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico continue to operate in an environmentally sound manner, the Texas Cattle Feeders Association is sponsoring several research projects that will yield valuable information on groundwater preservation and dust and odor control.

The most recent project, according to TCFA Environmental Manager Tom McDonald, is fly ash research funded primarily by Southwestern Public Service Company with help from the U.S. Department of Agriculture and Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

The project is designed to see if fly ash can help stabilize feedyard pens and reduce dust emissions. Fly ash is a byproduct of coal-fired power plants.

In addition, TCFA and the extension service are looking at alternative ways that farmers can incorporate feedyard manure into their fertilizer programs. Results from several studies are very positive.

In studies at the Ester Research Station, feedyard manure was applied to irrigated cropland at 20 tons per acre to determine its effect on forage production and groundwater.

"Farmers have long used manure as an environmentally safe organic fertilizer," said McDonald. "We wanted to see if it was more economical to apply a higher load of manure every two or three years instead of a lighter application every year. And, of course, we wanted to verify our knowledge that feedyard manure is environmentally sound."

According to the results, farmers can use feedyard manure at 20 tons per acre on irrigated cropland in a two-crop rotation. Yields were very similar to crops grown with commercial fertilizer and there was an economic advantage of $4 per acre with the manure treatments.

Runoff water from test fields that underwent a 20-ton manure application per acre contained less than 0.5 to 2.5 milligrams per liter of nitrogen. EPA standards for human drinking water are 10 milligrams per liter. Nitrate movement was very similar for both manure and commercial fertilizer treatments and poses no threat to the groundwater supply.

A study using 30 tons per acre is currently underway, McDonald said, using similar parameters to the 20-ton study.

"We're very encouraged at the result of these tests -- it affirms that manure is an environmentally sensitive organic fertilizer that area farmers can incorporate into their fertilizer programs," said McDonald.

Course on computer set April 21 by TAES

LUBBOCK -- A computer program easily adaptable to the record-keeping needs of farm and ranch enterprises will be taught by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in a one-day course on April 21, in Lubbock.

The course, "Introduction to Quicken," results from numerous requests for an introduction to Quicken software. The class will be held at the Texas A&M Agricultural Research and Extension Center in Lubbock, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

"The best use of a computer is for record-keeping," said Dr. Jackie Smith, economist and management specialist who will be the instructor. "Quicken is not specifically designed for agricultural use but is easily adaptable for that purpose. This course is intended for those that want to improve their managerial skills by upgrading their record-keeping system."

The course will begin with an overview of Quicken and its components, basic data entry, generating simple reports and the many utilities found in Quicken.

Tips for speeding data entry using quick keys, memorizing and splitting transactions, and using categories and classes to facilitate reporting will be covered. Advanced topics such as transaction groups, transfers between accounts and payroll record-keeping also will be demonstrated.

Although the class is modeled after a two-day course taught at the Halfway Training Center, computers will not be available for participant use. Instruction will be by lecture and demonstration only. No computer experience is necessary.

A registration fee of $20 will be charged, covering participant and spouse. Advance registration is not required but may be paid on arrival.

Texas bluebonnets do well in the wild, but not in captivity

By ANITA BAKER

FORT WORTH Star-Telegram
FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) - Don't let Texas' vast fields of bluebonnets fool you. Despite its proliferation in nature, the state flower isn't always easy to tame at home.

The bluebonnet that for centuries has turned the landscape into a sea of blue each spring is slowly finding a place in gardens, but not without a little help from its admirers.

About the only thing the experts agree on is that bluebonnet seeds should be planted in the fall.

But depending on which expert you ask, bluebonnet seeds need to be scratched, nicked, soaked in water, bathed in acid and/or inoculated before going into the ground.

A few experts recommend just letting nature take its course. Most feel that without some intervention, bluebonnets aren't their showy best in gardens.

The problem is the thick coating nature applies to assure that the annual plant survives Texas' hot summers. Its thickness slows germination, preserving some of the seeds for future growth in case disaster wipes out a season's worth of plants.

"If it is complicated, my customers won't do it at all," Randy Weston, co-owner of Weston Gardens in Bloom in Fort Worth, said about the various recommended procedures to improve seed germination. "You had better keep it as simple as possible."

In recent years, researchers and flower growers have lessened some of the toil by developing bedding plants for fall and full-grown plants for spring.

Bluebonnet seed has been on the market for at least a decade.

And after a bit of work by Texas A&M University researchers, the wildflower now comes in varying shades of blue, pink and white. Even an Aggie maroon has been developed.

Researchers say the maroon will be on the market officially in another year or two, but Weston said he has finagle a limited number of plants for sale.

The bluebonnet's popularity has markedly increased, said Sharon Madigan, assistant manager at Calloway's Nursery at 6080 S. Hulen St.

"I've worked in the nursery business about six years and it has always been a big seller, and it has grown by leaps and bounds in the last couple of years, even with the non-traditionally colored ones."

Even though area nurseries usually sell out of bluebonnet plants quickly, the demand still doesn't compete with petunias, marigolds and other traditional bedding plants.

The original blue remains the most popular, several nurseries said. But the Abbott pink, the light-blue Worthington - named for the Fort Worth hotel - and a mixed lavender helps in the conversion of atmospheric to allow the roots to develop over winter.

"Scarification can damage some seeds and increases the number of seeds vulnerable to extreme weather conditions and disease-causing organisms," the center warns.

What the center does recommend, however, is that dampened seeds be inoculated, or dusted with bacterium Rhizobium before planting. Rhizobium helps in the conversion of atmospheric nitrogen to a form the plant can use. But the bacterium needed to specifically for bluebonnets is not yet widely available commercially.

Jerry Parsons, who developed the multicolors of bluebonnets for Texas A&M, believes scarification with acid is the best way to ensure germination. The process has worked well for years, he said.

Several years ago Parsons appeared on a television show to discuss the new scarified seed. The response was tremendous, he said. The TV station's phone was busy for hours with calls from people asking where to buy the seed.

"I really don't know what caught the attention of the public," Parsons said. "When we put it on the market, skeptics said people would not buy bluebonnets because they can go on the highways and see them by the millions."

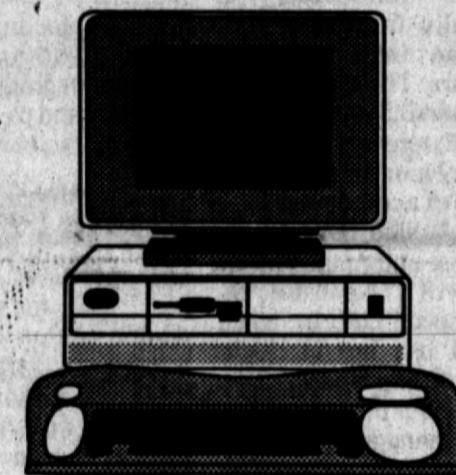

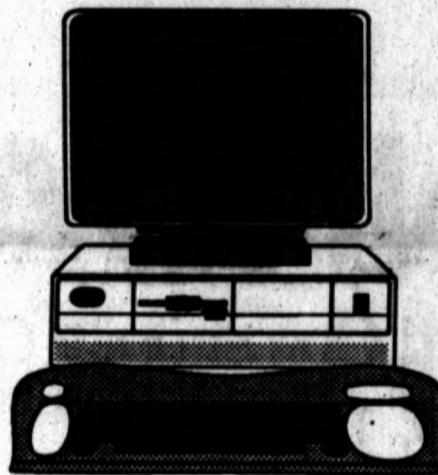

Since then, millions of seeds have been sold, he said.

"People drove from Dallas to get the first transplants when they came on the market in San Antonio about 1985," he said.

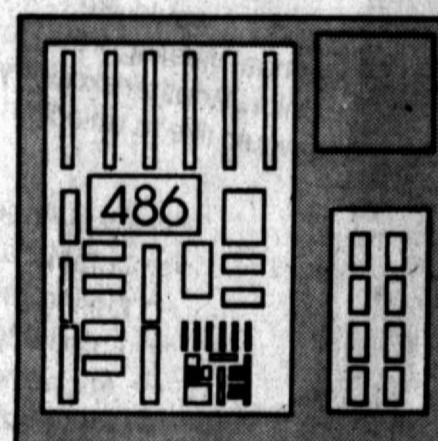

"Who would think people would go in and pay $4 for a pot of bluebonnets when they can go see them on the highways and see them by the millions."

FANCY STATIONERY

Dear Heloise: Decorative stationery can be expensive, so I decided to make my own.

I used different color nail polish and simply brushed a few strokes on the top left side of the stationery and also put the same design on the envelope.

I've made some with glitter polish that really looks attractive. My friends love to receive my "art work."

SAFE FOOD: AVOID FOODBORNE ILLNESS

Foodborne illness is a master of disguise.

Many people believe they may have the flu or a virus when they get sick with foodborne illness because the symptoms are similar. Symptoms can include diarrhea, vomiting, stomach cramps and nausea. In a few cases, people may get chills, fever and headaches.

While there is not much one can do to protect against the flu, foodborne illness can be prevented in most cases by proper handling of foods.

The illness is caused by tiny organisms called bacteria that are present in food. Bacteria grow and multiply rapidly at room temperatures. A food contaminated with this bacteria doesn't always look, smell or taste bad, so it's important to use food safety principles with all susceptible foods.

Prevention begins when you buy food at the grocery store. Safe handling continues as the food is stored, prepared, cooked and served.

These simple rules should be followed. Keep everything clean. Keep hot food hot. Keep cold food cold. Don't cross contaminate foods.

Cleanliness of people and surroundings is the best way to prevent the spread of bacteria and contamination of foods. Always work with clean hands, hair and fingernails. Wash hands with soap and water for 20 seconds before handling food and after blowing nose, touching hair or face or using the toilet. Bacteria also can be spread by sores, pimples or cuts. Clean utensils and work surfaces are essential. To avoid cross contamination, utensils, surfaces or hands that touch raw meat, poultry or eggs should always be washed before touching another food.

Cooking or refrigeration can control food contaminants. This means keeping hot foods hot enough and cold foods cold enough. The temperature range at which bacteria grow most rapidly is 40 degrees F to 140 degrees F. Don't leave perishable foods in this "danger zone" for more than 2 hours.

Once food is cooked, keep it hot until served and refrigerate leftovers quickly. Don't leave food on the counter to cool or thaw. Be sure to thoroughly reheat leftovers. Select such perishable foods as meat, poultry, seafood, eggs and dairy products last when shopping at the grocery. Go straight home and refrigerate immediately. Never leave them sitting in a hot car.

Keeping foods cold is usually not a problem at home, but situations that may demand special attention are carried lunches, picnics, cookouts, camping or tailgating. Ice chests need to be used for all perishable foods such as cold cuts, fried chicken, other meats, meat or egg salad sandwiches, deviled eggs, potato salad and dairy products.

Most foodborne illness is mild and lasts only a short time. However, it can be serious and lead to complications for pregnant women and young children, the elderly, or those already weakened by poor health.

For more information on keeping food safe to eat, contact your local Extension office at 364-3573 or call the USDA Meat and Poultry Hotline at 1-800-535-4555 (10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Eastern time, Monday through Friday).

Educational programs conducted by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service serve people of all ages regardless of socioeconomic level, race, color, sex, religion, handicap, or national origin.

Condition your leather book covers and keep them new by rubbing them with lanolin or saddle soap.

Breast screening set in Hereford May 28

The Don and Sybil Harrington Cancer Center and High Plains Baptist Hospital Mobile Mammography Unit will be in Hereford from 10 a.m. until 3 p.m. May 28 at South Plains Health Care Providers, Inc., 603 E. Park.

Exams are done by appointment only. For information or to schedule an appointment, call 1-800-377-4673 or 1-359-4673.

The total cost of the screening is $70. This includes the x-ray, physical breast exam and the radiology fee for reading the mammogram. Funding has been provided by the Texas Department of Health to allow for free breast screenings for women who qualify.

The major goal of the clinic is the early detection of breast cancer. The clinic provides low cost screening which includes a breast exam by a registered nurse trained in breast cancer detection, teaching of breast self-examination and a mammogram.

Currently, the most effective method known to win the battle against breast cancer is early detection. Early detection is best done by following the guidelines recommended by the American Cancer Society for breast cancer screening for women who have no signs or symptoms of breast cancer. The guidelines are:

1. Learn and perform breast self-examination every month.
2. Have a physical examination every year.
3. Have a mammogram according to recommendations by age:

AGE

35-39 years of age--one baseline mammogram.

40-49 years of age--a mammogram every 1-2 years.

50 and over--yearly mammograms.

Tips for clearing office

Long considered a key to productivity, the organized work space may also help to relieve stress in today's downsized corporate environments.

Creating order out of office chaos is easier than you think. The organization experts suggest the following ten tips to manage clutter.

1. Attack File Drawers First. Remove old notes, drafts and duplicate copies from files every six months. Then ship inactive records to company storage and relegate periodically consulted files to a credenza.

2. Clear Desktop Documents. Alphabetize paperwork relating to current projects in desk drawer files, with a next step reminder jotted on a desktop calendar, to-do list or ongoing project status chart.

3. Put Supplies in Their Place. Collect pens, pencils, scissors, tape and notes in a desktop or desk drawer organizer to increase workspace.

4. Create a Tickler File. Categorize project reminders by month and date in a daily tickler file. Keep the file off your desk, but consult it every morning for follow-up action.

5. Resist Hard Copy Duplication.

Avoid computer printouts, especially if the information is stored on a back-up disk or data cartridge, where it can be easily accessed.

6. Manage Your Mail. Empty your in-box twice a day and immediately handle items requiring only a quick note, phone call or staff meeting. Note less pressing priorities on a calendar or to-do list, and route or file all remaining items.

7. Think Double Duty. Sign letters while you're on hold. Update expense accounts while waiting for an appointment. Peruse your "reading" file while on a train or plane, marking items of interest with tape flags for easy filing back at the office.

8. Try one-touch tracking. Try to handle paperwork once. If it is not possible to complete a task the first time around, at least move it a step or two closer to completion.

9. Be Ruthless. When in doubt, throw it out. This includes subscriptions you will never have enough time to read.

10. Clear Clutter Daily. Take a few minutes at the end of the day to clear off your desk. It's a sure-fire way to reduce clutter, increase productivity and boost morale in today's overworked and understaffed offices.

Collect the maximum from your insurance

If you have a fire or any type of accident that damages your home or household belongings, having the right records can help make for a smoother and more accurate claim settlement.

Experts report that three out of every five American families do not keep a detailed record, videotape or photographs of what is in their home or apartment. For those who do keep a record, one third store it at home, where, in a disaster, it could be destroyed along with the rest of their belongings.

To make certain you are prepared, the experts recommend the following:

-Videotape or photograph every item of value in your home.

-Keep a written record of those items.

-Save receipts for anything new you purchase.

-Put it all in a safe deposit box away from your home.

It's also a good idea to re-evaluate your insurance policy every year to make sure you have the right coverage. Taking these steps, you can prepare for an emergency and speed up your insurance claims.

ANNETTE THOMASON, RUSSELL EVER

Marriage planned

June 12 is the wedding date set by Lubbock residents, Annette Marie Thomason and Russell Allen Evers. The couple plans to wed in Spur.

The bride-elect is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J.W. Thomason of Spur and the prospective bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sonny Evers of 236 Beach.

Americans love their pets

So you think America's favorite pet is Fido the dog, or is it Fifi the cat? Well, it depends on the statistics you are looking at according to Lisa Cortner, executive director of The HomeCare Council, the consumer education division of Enforce Products, manufacturers of flea and tick products for pets.

Overall, close to 60 percent of all households own a pet. In fact, by percentage more homes have dogs than cats. However, if you look at sheer numbers, the cats outnumber the dogs with there being 5 million more cats than dogs. In fact, homeowners own an average of two cats and only 1.5 dogs.

Each year, The HomeCare Council speaks with thousands of pet owners about taking care of pets and they offer this advice:

-Healthy pets are happy. Make sure pets have received proper inoculations and are given proper medication and treatment when ill. Bathe dogs and cats when needed with a proper PH-balanced shampoo and use only as directed.

Miss Thomason graduated from Spur High School and South Plains College in Lubbock. She is employed by Surgical Associates of Lubbock.

Evers graduated from Hereford High School and plans to attend Texas Tech University this fall. He is employed by Methodist Hospital of Lubbock.

-Keep pets safe. Make sure yards are free of dangerous objects and substances that could harm a pet. For those in apartments, make sure windows are kept closed to prevent an accidental fall. Watch fence gates so pets can't escape and get harmed by passing cars or other animals.

-Provide identification tags for cats and dogs. Make sure the pet has identification tags and can be returned to you should it lose its way.

-Feed appropriately. Each pet has its own special diet. Respect that diet and do not feed a pet any food that may be spoiled or unhealthy.

-Always have fresh water available. Keep water clear of food particles.

-Treat fleas early. Treat fleas in the yard, inside the home and on the pet with Enforcer's flea and tick products found in hardware stores.

-Give pets lots of playtime, love and exercise. Keep pets healthy by keeping them active through lots of attention and affection.

Between The Covers

By REBECCA WALLS

We at the Deaf Smith County Library wish you all a very Happy Easter. Hopefully the weather will begin to warm up and the spring flowers can blossom without fear of freezing. Remember we have a number of gardening books and now is the time to start getting the ground cleared and ready. One of the new books coming out this week is Step-by-Step Landscaping put out by Better Homes and Gardens.

Now that the time has changed we all have an extra hour to while away at our leisure. (HAI!) To fill this hour you may want to get a good book, and we have some good ones this week.

Stephen Hunter's Point of Impact is the suspenseful story of Bob Lee Swagger. Bob earned the name "Bob the Nailor" back in the jungles of Vietnam, but today he lives in a trailer in the Ouachita Mountains in Arkansas. Bob wants to be left alone, but because he knows more about killing one-on-one than any one else, he is the perfect man for the job. RamDyne Security, a shadow organization tied to the CIA and military intelligence seduces Bob into leaving his Arkansas home for one last mission for his country. The plan is executed to perfection until the final moment. Later headlines proclaim Bob a national hero turned murderer, targeted by every law enforcement agency in the country as well as other RamDyne operatives.

Bob has no choice but to turn the role of pursued into the role of pursuer. His only ally is FBI agent Nick Memphis of the New Orleans office and they alone est the terms for revenge.

The time in America's history centered around the Orphan trains in intriguing to many of us. Power in the Blood by Greg Matthews begins in the year 1869 in Schenectady, New York, where a Mrs. Dugan dies leaving three abandoned children. Clay the eldest, Drew the youngest and their sister Zoe have no hope of surviving alone in the big city. In hopes of a better life for the children the decision is made by the authorities to send the children west on the "orphan train."

Final Argument by Clifford Irving has a different little twist to it. Ted Jaffe leaves his position as prosecutor in Jacksonville to enter a partnership with a prestigious Sarasota law firm. Leaving Jacksonville also means leaving Connie Zide, a hauntingly beautiful woman with whom Ted was having an affair. The affair had begun around the time Ted was prosecuting Darryl Morgan for the murder of Solomon Zide, Connie's billionaire husband. A few years after moving to Sarasota Ted hears from a client an admission of perjury that leads him

The children are separated and adopted by couples in three different states. The life they encounter in the west wasn't the most pleasant and as soon as they could the boys went off on their own in search of the others. The people that are encountered along their journey are vivid personalities such as: Lovey Doll Pines, a lady of the evening; Reverend Wixson, a preacher with a sale used to detect the precise moment the soul leaves a dying body; Nevis Dunnigan, an artist whose paintings are found over the bar in many saloons in the west, and Slade the mysterious drifter who comes and goes with the wind. Sixteen years after their separation a bizarre reunion takes place under the open skies of Colorado.

For the person who cannot relax unless they are being scared witness The Angel Maker by Ridley Pearson is for you. At the shelter for runaways in Seattle, Washington, the volunteers struggle to rescue and rebuild lives. Daphne Matthews, a police psychologist thinks she has seen it all until 16 year-old Cindy enters the shelter. "Can't you stop them?...Can't you stop that barking?" Cindy asked desperately. Cindy keeps clutching her abdomen. Daphne lifts the girls shirt and finds her skin colored an iodine-brown from surgery and a 3-inch incision laced with broken stitches. The incision was so fresh it had not yet scabbed over and Cindy was losing a lot of blood. It appears that someone is illegally harvesting human organs for transplant. Daphne turns to the best cop she knows for help, Lou Boldt. Together Daphne and Lou discover a high-tech, highly profitable underground industry and a doctor gone "very very bad". The case becomes very personal and frightening when Sharon Shaffer, Daphne's friend and fellow shelter volunteer is abducted. The evidence indicates that Sharon is about to become the next organ donor.

Final Argument by Clifford Irving has a different little twist to it. Ted Jaffe leaves his position as prosecutor in Jacksonville to enter a partnership with a prestigious Sarasota law firm. Leaving Jacksonville also means leaving Connie Zide, a hauntingly beautiful woman with whom Ted was having an affair. The affair had begun around the time Ted was prosecuting Darryl Morgan for the murder of Solomon Zide, Connie's billionaire husband. A few years after moving to Sarasota Ted hears from a client an admission of perjury that leads him back to the Zide murder case. Ted now believes Darryl to be innocent but because of the legal system is unable to represent Darryl himself. Ted Jaffe refuses to accept that verdict and begins his own war with the legal system at the risk of his career, marriage and personal safety to save a man he has grievously wronged.

The Wesley United Methodist Church, 410 Irving, will be sponsoring a stew supper from 5:30-8:30 p.m. Thursday, April 15, at the church.

Tickets, which are priced at $3 per person, may be purchased from church members or at the door.

At the awards banquet, it was announced that the Hereford club won first place in the scrapbook competition, received first place in achievement on the gold level and was named as the outstanding sponsoring club.

Those present attended educational workshops and participated in the caucusing of officer candidates.

Use safety sense

Every year in America, drunk drivers cause more than 22,000 deaths and 345,000 accidents.

There are ways you can help protect yourself and your loved ones from death or injury by drunk drivers.

Don't drive drunk. Set a good example for children and friends. Before a party or a night-on-the-town, choose a designated driver who will not drink alcohol and will see that

Salad supper planned

A salad supper was planned when members of the Hereford Rebekah Lodge #228 met Tuesday evening with 17 members present.

The supper is scheduled Tuesday preceding the Rebekah Degree which will welcome a new member.

During the business meeting with Noble Grand Anna Conklin presiding, reports included 18 visits to the sick, 57 cheer cards, 10 dishes of food and two flowers.

Conklin served as hostess to Shirley Brown, Faye Brownlow, Susie Curtissinger, Jo Irbeck, Peggy Lemons, Erma Loving, Dorothy Lundry, Rosalie Northcutt, Sadie Shaw, Leona Sowell, Nelma Sowell, Verna Sowell, Dorothy Collier, Irene Merritt, Ben Conklin and Tony Irbeck.

others get home safely. If you do over-indulge, ask someone else to drive.

Help keep drunk drivers off the road. Hosting a party? Remember it's easier for your guests to get drunk than to get sober! Don't be too generous when you pour, nor too fast to refill an empty glass. Be sure to offer non-alcoholic beverages, too. Serve plenty of high protein foods with cocktails. A full stomach will delay the effects of alcohol somewhat, but it will not prevent drunkenness. Stop serving alcoholic beverages about one and one half hours before guests depart, and never let intoxicated guests drive.

Encourage your teenagers to avoid drinking and driving situations.

Statistically, teens are most often and most seriously affected by drunk driving, both as drivers and as passengers. Discuss this problem with your children in a non-threatening manner. Find out what they think about it. Talk about how they can help when friends drink too much. Be sure they know if their school offers programs such as Students Against Drunk Driving or Safe Rides. Instruct your children never to enter a car with an intoxicated driver and be certain they know you want to be called - whatever the hour - if they need a safe ride home.

In the long-term, you can help prevent alcohol-related deaths and injuries by supporting effective deterrents in your state. Through letters and petitions, urge local officials to adopt and enforce drunk driving laws, and get involved with a group that has a successful program in your community.

—YOUR EYES—

IS IT TIME FOR AN EYE EXAM?

Regular optometric examinations are important to guard your vision and your eye health. How often should you see the eye doctor? It depends on your age and your general health though vision changes or eye strain signal an immediate visit.

Unless parents note problems earlier, it's advisable to bring a youngster for preliminary testing by age 3. Conditions such as amblyopia (or "lazy eye") are best corrected if treatment starts early. Children and teenagers should be seen every year, because their visual acuity may change rapidly as they grow.

For those between 20 and 35, who are in good health and have no history of eye problems, checkups every two years are probably adequate. After 35, eyes should be checked every year, because vision changes quickly at this time. Reading glasses or bifocals may be appropriate. Regular examinations for the over-35s will also include tests for glaucoma and other eye diseases.

"Neighbors Caring For Neighbors"

Appreciation extended

Hereford Crimestopper board member, Mike Harris, at right, recently presented Bill Lummus, Thriftway manager, a certificate of appreciation for the stores' support to the organization.

Applications available to youth

Young people who care about the environment, take note: Applications are now available for the 1993 Global Youth Forum, scheduled to take place on May 20 to 21 at the University of Colorado in Boulder, Colo.

Sponsored by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) and convened under the corporate patronage of S.C. Johnson & Son, Inc., the Global Youth Forum give today's young environmentalists an opportunity to learn from each other's successful community actions through two days of workshops, talks, exhibitions and performances.

Participants will be selected on the basis of their personal environmental actions and must be actively involved in a project in their community, either individually or as part of a group.

Those interested, up to age 25, can write or call for an application; Dulcie de Montagnac, UNEP Global Youth Forum, One UN Plaza, Room DC1-590, New York, NY 10017; (212) 963-7781 or 7474; Fax: (212) 963-8193 or 4116.

Citrus prices dropping

Here's a juicy bit of good news: the Florida Department of Citrus (FDOC) reports consumers can expect the price of Florida oranges, grapefruit and specialty varieties to decline even further in the next few months.

Based on a recent forecast by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) of a larger Florida citrus crop and historical pricing trends, Dr. Bob Behr, director of economic research for the FDOC, notes that retail prices for fresh Florida oranges should drop 20 to 25 percent below last season, fresh Florida grapefruit by 15 to 20 percent, and the specialty varieties (including tangerines, tangelos and templets) by an average of 15 percent. These prices are at the lowest levels since the mid-1980s and, pound-for-pound, are the best value in the produce aisle.

Florida citrus products can help more than the pocketbook; they're an excellent source of vitamin C and other nutrients that may play a role in preventing cancer, heart disease and other illnesses.

MINDING YOUR OWN BUSINESS

Don Taylor

CHANGING BANKS

(First of Two Parts)

Barry sat in my office and poured out his heart. He told me how he was working hard to make his business prosper. He feels that he is succeeding in spite of his banking relationship.

From the beginning, his banker thought his idea was dumb. He told Barry the business wouldn't work and that he was foolish to try it. Barry believes that the bank finally agreed to make the loan because it was co-signed by his uncle, one of the banks leading customers.

Barry was desperate for money, so he accepted the harsh terms the bank offered. Later, when Barry couldn't pay all of the principal due, his banker reminded him that he had known the idea wouldn't work. Finally, after badgering Barry for several days, the banker accepted a partial payment and renewed the loan.

Some of the pressure is off now that Barry's business is flourishing. However, Barry feels that it has been a one-way street. Barry's banker has never come to his location to look at the business. Barry doesn't feel that the bank is interested in his accomplishments. Barry came to me for advice on changing banks.

Same song, second verse

Diane's story is similar. Diane doesn't feel that her bank takes her business seriously, although the business has been her family's only source of income for eight years.

Occasionally, Diane needs expansion capital to grow her service business. She feels that her banker uses her borrowing requests as an opportunity to deliver "I told you so" lectures, though her credit record is flawless. Diane's business is growing and her company has a strong reputation in the community.

As in Barry's case, no one from the bank has ever made a personal visit to Diane's business. In fact, she could recall once when her banker had even called on the phone. That call was a reminder that her short-term loan was due the following week. "That was not my idea of a courtesy call," she said.

Diane cried the day she found out that her banker was purchasing services from her competitor. Her bank did not invite her to bid on their business and to make matters worse, the competitor banked with another lender. Diane came to me for suggestions on selecting a new bank.

To change or not to change

Barry and Diane's stories are true. I have changed their names and disguised their businesses to protect their confidentiality. Their business situations are common. Over the years I have listened to dozens of similar stories.

I encouraged Barry and Diane to approach the decision of changing banks as objectively as possible. Establishing a banking relationship is like building a lasting marriage. It requires the interest and effort of both parties. However, a marriage has spiritual, emotional and physical aspects, while a banking relationship is strictly business.

Consequently, you should approach a decision to continue or terminate a banking relationship in a business-like manner. I remind my clients that banks are in business to make money. No matter how closely a bank will work with your business, they will ultimately make decisions that favor their own interests. There is nothing wrong with that as long as the bank remains focused on meeting their customer's needs.

Your bank should be interested in helping you grow and prosper because it is good business for them to do so. Meanwhile, you must focus on whether or not the bank in question can meet your firm's short-term and long-term financial needs.

Next week we will discuss some valid reasons for changing banks. We may even have a suggestion or two for some of our banker friends. Don't miss "Changing Banks" - Part Two.

You may write to Don Taylor in care of "Minding Your Business" PO Box 67, Amarillo, Texas 79105.

Perry glad to be 'Home Free' on ABC

Marian Mercer, Matthew Perry and Diana Canova head the cast of ABC's new comedy series, Home Free, airing Wednesdays. In the show, Perry stars as a newspaper reporter living a life of relative luxury with his mother (Mercer) until his high-strung, recently divorced sister (Canova) moves home to get her life in order.

By John Crook

Thoma Wolfe was wrong: You can go home again. Heck, you don't even have to leave in the first place.

Home Free, airing Wednesdays on ABC, takes a comic look at the growing phenomenon of adult children who are driven, like the buzzards of Hinkley, Ohio, back to their home nest. Certainly 22-year-old newspaper reporter Matt Bailey (Matthew Perry) is perfectly happy with his rent-free life at home, with its matchless laundry service and food just like Mom used to make...and still does.

This idyllic lifestyle is interrupted by the abrupt arrival of big sister Vanessa (Diana Canova), a tightly wound control freak who has bailed out of a crummy marriage. With her two kids (real-life siblings Andi and Scott McAfee) in tow, Vanessa has moved home in search of a less stressful life - in law school, no less.

Matt is sympathetic and supportive, but his genuine affection is tempered by still-vivid childhood memories of Vanessa's Joan Crawford-like raids, when she yanked the pacifier from his little lips and barked, "Matthew, what's next, a cigarette!"

Perry, whose last regular series role was in a Fox Network fizzler called Boys Will Be Boys (a.k.a. Second Chance) was attached to the project even before a script had been written.

"Matt is basically a more perfect vision of me than me," Perry says.

Vanessa, the compulsive organizer who turns her daughter's simple pizza party into a full-blown South Pacific luau (complete with tiki torches and homemade poi), proved harder to cast, and the young actor read with several candidates before the producers auditioned Canova (Soap, Throb).

"If you met her, you'd hate her," Perry deadpans. "No, the thing is, Diana can walk into a room and do or say anything, I mean anything - and you still like her."

That natural warmth is crucial in a character who borders on the abrasive. Bickering abounds, he says, because Matt and Vanessa automatically fall back into their old patterns now that they are living together again.

The relationship, while loving, is "kind of an Oscar and Felix thing, where's she's more disciplined and organized, more 'clean up your room' and I'm more 'hey, calm down.' But Matt and Vanessa learn from each other, that's the really good thing, they keep learning from each other."

Home Free originally was set for the 1992 fall season but was bumped at the last minute. Perry admits this was frustrating at the time but hopes that introducing the show during a less
