Montana standoff ends with Freemen giving up

By LEN IWANSKI

Associated Press Writer

JORDAN, Mont. (AP) - With hugs and prayers, the Freemen traded their pastoral refuge on the windswept Montana plains for cramped jail cells, planning to carry their anti-government crusade to the courtroom.

The group's 16 remaining members surrendered to the FBI and left their ranch Thursday night, ending the longest armed siege in modern U.S. history and avoiding the bloodshed of Waco and Ruby Ridge. The siege at the remote ranch the group called Justus Township lasted 81 days.

They came out in their own vehicles, meeting the FBI at the compound entrance. Some hugged before being patted down and escorted, unhandcuffed, to transport vans. Others formed a circle holding hands and bowed their heads in prayer.

As two vans and a sedan carrying the Freemen left the 960-acre ranch for Billings and the Yellowstone County Jail, an FBI agent in a following vehicle waved an American flag out the window, an apparent gesture of triumph.

And a few minutes later, a half dozen FBI agents drove to "sentry hill," where Freemen lookouts had peered at them for more than 11 weeks. One of the agents climbed onto the trailer parked there and hauled down a Confederate battle flag the extremists had hoisted earlier in the day.

Fourteen Freemen spent the night in jail and were expected to appear in federal court today. They face charges including circulating millions of dollars in bogus checks and threatening to kill a federal judge.

The two people not facing charges, wives of Freemen members, accompanied the group on the 3-1/2-hour trip to Billings. It was not clear where the women went after arriving at the jail.

Since March, 633 federal agents rotated in and out of the standoff, working 12-hour shifts, said FBI Agent Thomas T. Kubic, the local FBI commander. There were up to 150 in the Jordan area at any one time.

FBI Director Louis J. Freeh lauded the policy of "patience and resoluteness" that he credited for the outcome.

"We will all say a little prayer tonight for this peaceful settlement of a difficult situation," President Clinton told a state dinner Thursday night.

The final surrender negotiations began early Thursday morning, but dragged on until evening. Kubic said the delay was because the Freemen were cataloging the "evidence" they say proves their grievances against the government, which they have called a "corporate prostitute."

The agreement called for the Freemen documents to be handed over to Karl Ohs, a state legislator who has acted as a mediator, for safekeeping.

Local boy injured in car-bicycle accident

A Hereford boy was injured Thursday night when the bicycle he was riding collided with a car.

The accident occurred a week after another local child was injured in a car-bicycle accident on the city's east side.

This time, Jesse Rangel, 11, was riding his bike in the 1100 block of 13th Street, near the intersection with Star.

According to police reports, James Tice, 40, of Hereford was driving his 1995 Chevrolet Suburban east on 13th.

Tice passed the intersection of Star, then turned into a private driveway. He told officers he saw Rangel pedaling his bike toward the vehicle.

Rangel then struck the drivers side door of the Suburban, which had come to a stop.

Rangel was transported to Hereford Regional Medical Center by ambulance, where he was treated and released.

On June 5, 10-year-old Yvette Garcia was injured when she was struck by a moving car at Irving and Forrest. She was found to have failed to stop at a stop sign before entering the intersection.

Police in Thursday's accident determined Rangel was at fault by riding his bike on the wrong side of the street.

No citations were issued.

Electronic mail sorting

Incoming mail at the Hereford Post Office is processed electronically when it arrives with bar codes. Working at the Carrier Sort Bar Code Sorter, Brad Johnson loads mail to run through the sorter. Three runs through the sorter produce stacks already arranged by street and number for delivery by letter carriers. Bins on the right catch the sorted mail.

Hereford's post office gets equipment for sorting mail

Electronic equipment that sorts mail at a rate up to 39,000 pieces in an hour is up and running at the Hereford Post Office.

Installed in the spring, the Carrier Sort Bar Code Sorter is in full service, said Charles Britten, postmaster.

"We had some problems at first," Britten said, adding that two sorters were installed to ensure one is always available.

When the U.S. Postal Service puts a bar code sorting system into full service, probably next year, all mail will be sorted at local offices by the CSBCS.

Presently about half of the mail that comes to Hereford is bar coded. In a week, approximately 62,000 pieces of mail go through the CSBCS. An equal number is sorted by hand.

When the electronic sorting process is completed in the post office, carriers pick up the mail for their routes already in delivery sequence, by number and street.

In a month, a half-million items are sorted, one way or another, for delivery in Hereford and rural routes of Deaf Smith County.

The electronic equipment being used ordinarily sorts about 29,000 letters in an hour. Each item goes through the machine three times, said Britten. The first time, it reads bar codes. Then, it verifies codes. And, finally, mail is sorted into order of delivery.

In postal operations now, Hereford mail goes to Amarillo for bar coding, then is dispatched to its destination. If the Amarillo equipment cannot place the bar code on items, there is equipment in Abilene that reads electronically and encodes the mail.

Hereford postal customers can do themselves and postal workers a favor, Britten said, by notifying the office when they want their mail held for later delivery.

"We really need to have notice a day ahead," he said, "so we can program it." Britten said a answering recorder is placed on the post office telephone to accommodate calls about holding mail.

"Be sure to give name, address and telephone number," he reminded.

Financial profits, losses of Congress members noted

By LARRY MARGASAK

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - What a difference a year made for Rep. Enid Greene. On paper, she went from millionaire to pauper.

The 1995 financial reporting form of the former Enid Waldholtz, R-Utah, had more catastrophic changes than any other in the annual disclosure ritual by members of the House and Senate.

Many filed forms that were virtual carbon copies of prior years. Once again, House Majority Leader Dick Armey - who once slept in the House gym to save money - listed no assets beyond his congressional salary of $148,400. At least he earns more than the $133,600 gross pay of the House and Senate rank and file.

Except for lawmakers granted an extension, disclosure information made public today includes broad ranges of investment income, assets and liabilities, along with a precise accounting of non-congressional income, business transactions, travel paid by interest groups and positions held outside Congress.

The forms are designed to expose conflicts of interest, not to reveal a member's precise net worth.

The story of Greene has become a saga that could become a television movie some day. After her then-husband, Joseph Waldholtz, suddenly disappeared last November, Greene said she learned he fooled her into believing he brought huge investments into their marriage. Those holdings were reported as assets on her 1994 disclosure form.

Waldholtz pleaded guilty last week to four criminal charges, admitting he provided his wife false information for her taxes and falsified spending reports from her congressional campaign.

For 1994, Greene listed three assets valued at more than $1 million each; real estate worth more than $500,000 in Pennsylvania; and a Utah residence valued between $250,001 and $500,000.

Her unearned income included rent on Pennsylvania property of $15,001-$50,000 and dividends of at least $100,000 and possibly more than $1 million.

In her new form, covering 1995, Greene listed five assets: three valued between $1,001 and $15,000 and two at $1,000 or less. Her largest unearned income is $1,001-$2,500 from interest on a loan.

Greene also reported major tax problems. She estimated she owes $15,001-$50,000 in Utah taxes for 1992-93-94, and $50,001-$100,000 to the federal government for tax years 1992 through 1995.

She also owes $10,001-$15,000 on a bank loan for her former residence.

While Greene's financial fortunes fell, those of Sen. John Kerry greatly improved because of his marriage to Teresa Heinz. Her former husband, the late Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., was heir to the Heinz food empire and her fortune has been estimated at $760 million.

The couple reported joint ownership of a painting worth up to $5 million.

Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, chairman of the House Banking Committee, has among his retirement assets a blind trust worth $15,001-$50,000.

The New York Republican said he began the trust after a controversial stock deal that allowed him to make a $37,125 profit in a single day in 1993.

Arizona governor indicted

By PAUL DAVENPORT

Associated Press Writer

PHOENIX (AP) - Even before Fife Symington was elected governor in 1991, federal investigators were poking through his shaky real estate empire and tangled personal finances.

Years of subpoenas, grand jury statements and media speculation ended Thursday when Symington was charged in a 23-count indictment with fraud, lying to lenders about his financial worth and trying to use his office to get out of a $10 million loan.

The former millionaire developer, elected in 1991 on a promise to run the state with the same acumen he applied to his business, became the second Arizona governor in a decade to face criminal charges.

Symington, 50, defiantly proclaimed innocence.

"After all this time, the people of Arizona are entitled to hear the facts and reach their own judgments," he said. "The days of secrecy and innuendo and endless leaks are over."

The great-grandson of the steel industrialist Henry Clay Frick and cousin of the late Sen. Stuart Symington of Missouri, Symington began his own political ascent when another Republican governor got into legal trouble.

In 1988, then-Gov. Evan Mecham was indicted on charges he hid a campaign loan. Symington was among the first to demand his resignation.

Mecham eventually was impeached for misusing public funds for a loan to his car dealership. He was acquitted of the criminal charges.

Symington was summoned to appear in federal court July 10. His lawyer, John Dowd, said pretrial preparations could be lengthy.

Arizona's Republican leadership quickly closed ranks behind Symington, who has vowed to remain in office through the end of his second term in 1998 and has even talked confidently of a third term.

"Legislators are not juries and they're certainly not prosecutors," said Republican House Speaker Mark Killian. "The governor will have his chance before a jury of his peers and that's the way it ought to be."

Scientists find gene mutation that causes a common skin cancer

By PAUL RECER

AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Researchers have identified the gene mutation responsible for basal cell carcinoma, the skin tumor that is the most common form of cancer in humans.

In reports published today in the journals Science and Cell, scientists say the mutation of a gene called "patched" allows the uncontrolled growth of tumor cells in the skin, causing a type of cancer that strikes 750,000 Americans annually but is seldom lethal.

The researchers also found that the same gene mutation, when inherited, is the cause of basal cell nevus syndrome, or BCNS, a rare disorder that causes a variety of symptoms, including skin cancers, abnormal bone development, jaw cysts and spinal defects. BCNS affects between 1 in 57,000 and 1 in 164,000 people.

A California team led by Matthew P. Scott, a Howard Hughes Medical Institute researcher at Stanford University, identified the patched gene in the fruit fly and found that its mutation caused developmental problems in the insect.

Guided by the fruit fly gene pattern, Scott's group located the patched gene in mice and then in men.

Scott learned that Dr. Ervin H. Epstein Jr., a University of California, San Francisco, dermatologist, was leading a search for the human gene that causes BCNS. He contacted Epstein and suggested that patched gene may be the BCNS gene.

The two groups combined their efforts and confirmed that people with BCNS did, in fact, inherit the mutated patched gene.

They also found that the same gene was present in basal cell carcinoma tumors, the skin cancer caused by excessive exposure to sunlight. When non-tumor cells in patients with skin cancer were tested, the researchers found a normal patched gene. This supported the idea that ultraviolet rays from the sun cause the mutation that leads to skin cancer, the researchers said.

The Scott and Epstein study is published in Science.

An international team of researchers led by Allen E. Bale of Yale University also identified the patched gene and related it to both BCNS and to the more common basal cell carcinoma. This research is in the journal Cell.

Discovery that the patched gene regulates embryo development before birth and cell division later in life suggests that it may be fundamental in the understanding of cancer, said Dr. Richard Klausner, director of the National Cancer Institute.

"It's going to tell us a great deal about cancer and human development," he said in a statement.

Scott said that patched has apparently been a part of the genetic pattern of life for millions of years because it is present virtually unchanged in fruit fly, mouse and human, creatures separated by eons of evolution.

"Some of the genes we study are doing the same thing in human and in fruit fly," said Scott.

Fruit flies are used in research because they hatch, reproduce and die within days, allowing genetic study of many generations within a short time.

Pairs of the patched gene regulate cell growth by helping to turn off another gene, called Hedgehog, that triggers cell division. People who inherit one mutated copy of the patched gene have birth defects, mostly affecting the bones. Two mutated, or missing patched genes can lead to rapid development of skin cancer.

The normal patched gene prevents runaway cell growth throughout life. Researchers believe if the gene is mutated in cells of the skin by excessive sunlight, then spontaneous basal cell carcinoma can develop. This type of cancer grows slowly and usually is controlled with surgery. But left untreated, the cancer can cause widespread destruction of tissue, often on the face.

Basal cell carcinoma is different from squamous cell carcinoma, another type of skin cancer, which is more likely to spread but is also usually controlled by surgery. A more frequently lethal and less common skin cancer is malignant melanoma, which can spread rapidly and invade a number of other tissues.

Local Roundup

City gets a little more rain

Hereford recorded a high temperature Thursday of 89 degrees and a low this morning of 62 degrees, according to KPAN Radio. The city recorded 0.15 of an inch of rain, bringing to 1.51 inches the month's total rainfall -- which is 10 times the precipitation recorded during the first five months of 1996. For tonight, look for mostly cloudy skies with a 60 percent chance of thunderstorms -- some possibly severe -- with locally heavy rainfall possible. Low will be in the lower 60s with southeast to south wind at 5-15 mph. Saturday, skies will be partly cloudy. There will be a 40 percent chance of mainly afternoon thunderstorms, a high in the upper 80s and south to southwest wind 10-20 mph and gusty.

ATF begins probe of fire incidents

White church blazes less publicized than black reports

By RICHARD KEIL
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) - By early next week, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms hopes to have details on nearly two-dozen fires at white churches it is investigating as it probes more-publicized blazes at more than 30 mostly-black Southern churches.

As the ATF struggles to help solve the blazes at black churches that have taken place since January 1995, bureau records show the agency also is probing arsons at 23 other non-black churches that have taken place during the same time period.

A copy of the list, which was distributed to ATF agents around the country earlier this week, was obtained by The Associated Press.

While the June 7 fact sheet provides extensive details on the cases involving fires at black churches, it includes no analysis of the other church fires.

But it includes a section listing all "open ATF church fire investigations nationwide since January 1995." It lists a total of 48, 35 of which occurred this year.

In a separate category, the sheet said 25 of the fires have been at black churches, which means 23 occurred in others; the number of fires in black churches has since grown to 34, with another blaze at a black congregation in Oklahoma on Thursday currently under investigation.

"That was an internal document, prepared for us and the Treasury Department, and I realize that things like this only beg more questions," John Limbach, an ATF spokesman, said Thursday. "We're trying to pull our data together, and we should be able to answer some of the questions about those other fires by early next week."

While it was unclear where the non-black churches were located, civil rights groups tracking Southern church burnings said they have found few examples of anything but black churches going up in flames.

"If white church fires were on the increase, with racism as a reason, we'd be on it in a heartbeat," said Angie Lowry of the Montgomery, Ala.-based Southern Poverty Law Center, which studies racial issues. "I'm not seeing it here in Alabama, and we're not seeing it anywhere else."

But one ATF official, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said one problem with keeping track of church burnings is that until recently the federal government did not keep such records on its arson investigations.

"If you go back five years, you won't find any more evidence that we've investigated a church burning than you would that we've investigated a warehouse fire," the ATF official said.

But even before President Clinton ordered the ATF to help solve the string of arsons at black churches, the agency increasingly was becoming involved in those cases - which means the agency likely is investigating more black-church fires than other types.

And in some cases, state figures tell another tale.

In Alabama, for example, a string of fires at black churches in the western part of the state has drawn headlines. But state fire marshal John Robison said there have been 37 arson fires in churches there since 1990 - 19 at black churches, 18 at white.

However, Lowry said, the fact that white churches greatly outnumber black churches in Alabama means that, in a proportional sense, black churches are burning with greater frequency.

Another important factor is that the ATF normally is not called in to investigate an arson fire unless state or local officials make a formal request - usually when they conclude the blaze is suspicious.

Those calls come far more frequently from rural fire officials who often lack the resources to conduct thorough investigations themselves, the ATF official said.

"That's the kind of thing that typically leads us to investigate Southern churches, in rural areas, and, of course, many of them are black," he said.

Rural churches - black or white - are also favorite targets of vandals, largely because their isolation makes arson easier to get away with than would be the case at a church in a well-lit, urban area.

Democrat announces support of Phil Gramm for U.S. Senate seat

By MICHELLE MITTELSTADT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Conservative Democratic Rep. Ralph Hall, who often has defied his party's leadership and sided with Republicans, has revealed he is endorsing GOP Sen. Phil Gramm over Democratic nominee Victor Morales in the Senate race.

Hall, of Rockwall, announced his support for Gramm on Wednesday in an interview with The Associated Press to discuss his upcoming introduction of legislation banning federal funding for physician-assisted suicide.

Gramm "has been good for Texas," Hall said. "I have great admiration for him."

The eight-term congressman, who is one of the most conservative Democrats in Congress, added: "I know I'm a conservative and he's a conservative, and I don't know what Mr. Morales is."

Hall's action is sure to provoke a stir in Texas Democratic circles - a fact that hasn't escaped his attention.

"I'm going to take a lot of heat on this," he said wryly. "It probably will not be pleasant, but at least they'll know where I stand."

Gramm, who is seeking a third six-year term, probably could teach Hall a thing or two about divided political loyalties, having jumped from the Democratic Party to the GOP in the early 1980s with great fanfare.

The senator welcomed the news.

"Ralph Hall is well known for his courage, and he has both my thanks and my deep respect," Gramm said Thursday night. "I know this endorsement might be used by the national Democratic Party as an excuse to punish him. That makes it all the more meaningful."

Hall cited Morales' support for gun control, abortion rights and allowing gays in the military as part of his concern about voting for the Democratic Senate nominee.

But he seemed most concerned about Morales' reluctance to define his position on some high-profile issues.

The criticism isn't a new one. Morales has been attacked by Democratic primary opponents and Republicans who fault him for not making clear his stance on pivotal policy questions.

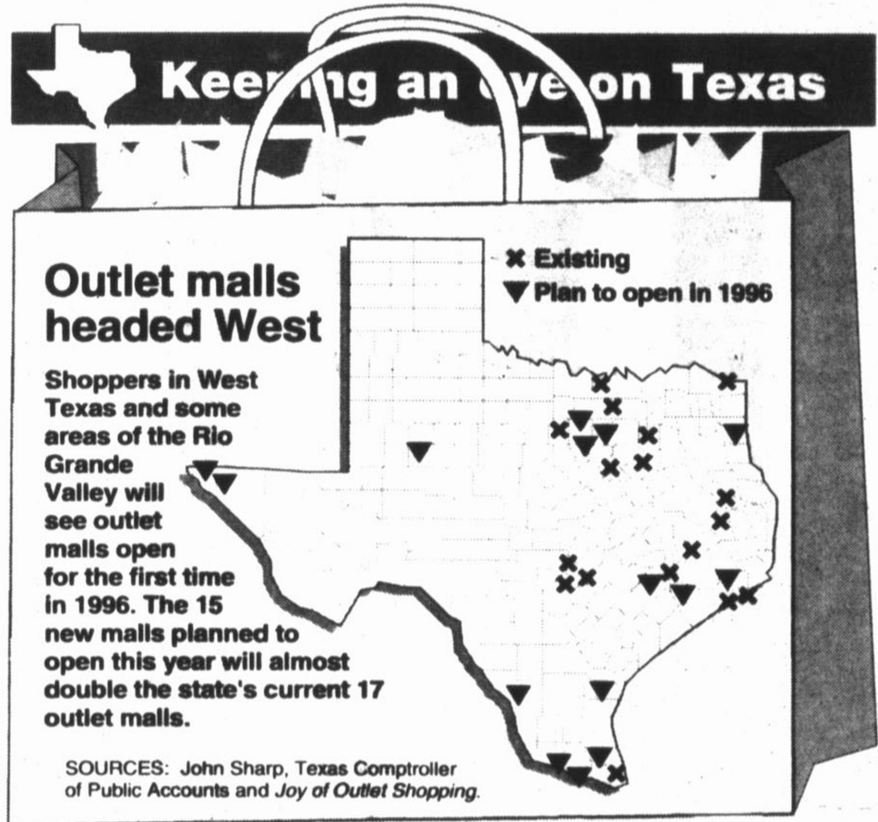

"It would be difficult for me to elect anyone to a six-year term who is either indifferent to the views of those I represent - or will not take a position on them," Hall said.

Morales couldn't immediately be reached for comment Thursday night.

Hall often has been courted by Republicans eager to get him to switch parties. Asked if he is contemplating following Gramm's footsteps, Hall said: "I don't have to change parties to vote a conservative vote."

Hall has been a reliable vote for Republican initiatives to cut government, rein in federal spending and balance the budget. He voted for more of the GOP's vaunted "Contract With America" provisions last year than the Republicans' own third-ranking leader, Rep. Tom DeLay of Sugar Land.

Asked why he is choosing to make public his support for Gramm instead of just quietly voting for him in November, Hall said, "I think conservatives have to take a position."

Tax relief committee sets public hearing

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) - As the governor's school property tax study committee prepared to meet the public for the first time today, hints about what it may hear already have been dropped.

"Everyone has heard the old adage: Don't tax you; don't tax me; tax that guy behind the tree. Everyone also has a different view on who the guy behind the tree is," noted a report from the private Texas Taxpayers and Research Association.

Gov. George W. Bush is convinced that many Texans are upset with rising school property taxes. Cities and counties also levy property taxes, but they aren't involved in this debate.

The school levy now raises about $10 billion a year, and the latest round of tax appraisals indicates the total is going up.

To help find the guy behind the tree, Bush created his Citizens' Committee on Property Tax Relief.

Headed by state Insurance Commissioner Elton Bomer, the panel has been told to find out what Texans think of school property taxes and what replacement they might prefer.

"I expect to hear from homeowners and businesses," Bomer said before today's hearing in El Paso.

Bomer said he plans 14 hearings around the state before reporting to the governor and Legislature in late September.

"We're going to be the eyes and ears of the governor," he said.

Freedom of Information compliance lags behind times, say journalists, lawmakers

WASHINGTON (AP) - Getting information out of the government remains a long, slow paper shuffle, despite the advent of the electronic age, say journalists and lawmakers who want the Freedom of Information Act to reflect the times.

"We need to make clear that the FOIA is not just a right to know what's on paper records but applies equally to electronic records," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., coauthor of a bill that would do just that.

Leahy called the act "one of the most significant tools Americans have to inform themselves about what their government is doing or not doing."

Legislation that Leahy and Sen. Hank Brown, R-Colo., introduced "would address the biggest single complaint of people making FOIA requests: delays in getting a response," Leahy told a House subcommittee Thursday. "For some agencies, the delays can stretch to over two years. Long delays in access can mean no access at all."

Their bill has been voted out of committee and is ready for a Senate vote. Rep. Steve Horn, R-Calif., chairman of the House Government Reform and Oversight subcommittee on government management, information and technology, said he plans to offer similar legislation in the House shortly.

"I think it's unconscionable when I hear the FBI has a four-year wait" to provide requested documents, Horn said.

But J. Kevin O'Brien, who heads the FBI's Freedom of Information and Privacy Acts section, said changing to electronic transmission of data would ease the physical work but not the mental processing.

"Great care is taken to ensure that no material to which the requester is entitled is erroneously withheld and that no material that should be withheld is inadvertently released," he said.

That work, he said, "can't be sped up."

At the end of May, the FBI had 15,259 requests on hand, including 248 involving about 2.6 million pages that must be reviewed, he said.

O'Brien said the average turnaround time of processed cases in 1995 was 923 days, or 2-1/2 years. The average time for all cases finished that year - including those in which no files were found - was 292 days, just under 10 months. The budget President Clinton proposed for 1997 seeks money for 129 more people to clear FOIA requests.

Jane E. Kirtley, executive director of The Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, testified of "widespread failure of federal agencies to make records available." She requested legislation mandating that electronic records be provided for FOIA requests.

Otherwise, Kirtley said, "Agencies will continue to refuse to provide electronic information to requesters and will deny them the opportunity to utilize the agency's own enhanced ability to retrieve and analyze the records."

Kirtley said the Clinton administration has ordered changes that make information more accessible.

But Byron York, investigative writer for The American Spectator, a politically conservative magazine, said he was stonewalled when he tried to find out how much was spent developing Vice President Al Gore's plan to reinvent government. He got no response to two FOIA requests, he alleged.

Reporter Eileen Welsome recounted her difficulties in using the act to research a series for The Albuquerque Tribune on 18 people injected with plutonium during the Manhattan Project that won her a Pulitzer Prize in 1994. She said her initial 1989 FOIA request to the Energy Department produced only a few insignificant documents.

"It was not a conspiracy so much as a complete lack of interest on the part of the bureaucrats whose job it was to dig out the documents," Welsome testified.

It wasn't until her newspaper's attorneys became involved in August 1992 that the records started "to trickle in," she said. Since then, many of them have been put on the Internet, available electronically.

Speaking on behalf of the Society of Professional Journalists, the American Society of Newspaper Editors and the Newspaper Association of America, Welsome encouraged passage of Leahy's bill.

"With the widespread use of computers, it is important that the changes be implemented across the board wherever reasonable," she said. That would ensure that "requesters have the opportunity to receive the documents either in paper or electronic form."

Ann Landers

Internet user sees nothing wrong with anonymous sexual encounter

Dear Ann Landers: I just saw another letter in your column about people who met on the Internet and ended up leaving 15-year marriages and children for the "perfect" other woman or man. I have another story to tell.

My husband uses a video camera to hook up with other Internet enthusiasts. It seemed rather innocent at first, except that most of these "friends" were part of sex groups where people can view each other in action. They also have "chat" sessions, exchange addresses and phone numbers, and have interactive verbal sex (phone sex, typed out). People don't realize that the new, highly touted phone technology for the Internet is mostly used for sexual purposes.

My husband sees nothing wrong with this and spends hours at the computer. He tells me he isn't tired when he's up until 2 a.m., but he often falls asleep on the sofa and I have trouble getting him up in the morning. I don't see how he can function at work, let alone at home. I can't remember the last time we had sex.

My husband insists it's no violation of his marriage vows if he has an anonymous sexual encounter with someone over the Internet. He says as long as there is no physical contact, it's perfectly OK. Please don't suggest counseling. He has spent thousands of dollars in counseling and says he has never talked to his therapist about anything of substance. -- Fed Up in Nebraska

Dear Fed: How much more of this insulting behavior are you going to take? Do you want to live the rest of your life like this? You need some professional guidance. Please get it.

Dear Ann Landers: Internet phobia reminds me of the nuclear-monster movies that proliferated during the Cold War and the "mad scientist" films of an earlier era. Each time we experience an advance in technology, it is greeted with fear by those who do not understand it.

I use the Internet for graduate research. I also sit in on meetings of bird-watchers, weavers, Adult Children of Alcoholics and a diabetic support group. I can do all these things without burning gasoline or wasting time commuting.

I have made new friends all over the world -- a sheep farmer in New Zealand, a bird-loving nun in Scotland and a Peace Corps veterinarian in Zaire, to name a few. The Internet also opens a world of friendship and activities to handicapped people, the elderly and others who cannot get around easily.

People on the Internet are real, live, breathing humans with kids, jobs and mortgages. In spite of rumors to the contrary, the Internet doesn't harbor a higher percentage of perverts and kooks than the average grocery store.

I have kept in touch with a pen pal from Ireland since sixth grade and people think that's wonderful. Yet, they look askance at my on-line correspondents. Why? They are simply pen pals who use keyboards instead of pens.

I feel sorry for those whose spouses have deserted them for on-line romances, but I'll bet they would have found extramarital adventures without a computer.

Internet users should be as cautious in striking up new friendships as they would be when meeting people in person for the first time. They should use common sense. And parents should monitor their kids' use of on-line services instead of expecting the government to do it for them. -- Baton Rouge Fan

Dear Bat: Thanks for accentuating the positive, but I'm afraid more people are interested in cybersex than bird-watching. You've made some excellent points, however, and I thank you for writing.

Library display for June

Chris Hendershot, son of Larry and Marlene Hendershot, is currently displaying some of his 15,000+ sports cards at the Deaf Smith County Library. Probably his most interesting cards are the baseball cards which came packaged with chewing tobacco. These are quite old and originally belonged to an uncle. Chris says the funniest of his mostly basketball collection are the early Dennis Rodman cards showing Rodman looking "normal."

To Your Good Health

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I am a 53-year-old woman. For the last three years I have been having seizures — dizziness and shaking. Afterward I feel numbness and weakness in the left arm and leg. I usually have a headache before the seizure. At the hospital, they never test me until the next day, then my doctor sends me home. The symptoms last about three days. What is wrong? — Mrs. R.C.

ANSWER: I searched your letter for some clue to what might be causing your episodes. Indeed, some of your description fits the seizure profile. Most of it fails in that regard — the leg and arm pain and the extended duration of symptoms. Some symptoms might indicate circulation problems, others neural.

Your melange of symptoms presents a real stumper — for me, and apparently no less so for your doctor.

Has anyone been in a room with you during an episode? If so, try to bring that person along for your next doctor's appointment. An eyewitness account can be more valuable than the patient's own description.

I would not be concerned about a day or two of delay before testing. If there were a brain tumor, for example, it would show up long after the fact. An electroencephalogram would identify aberrant brain waves indicative of seizures.

I assume that your tests have been negative.

I'm far from comfortable with this answer. I'd wager that a visit to a neurologist — who can review afresh all your symptoms and test results — would be helpful.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: Will you please comment on the condition called "bezoars"? I am an elderly woman having a problem with bloating and gas no matter what I eat. I have always eaten lots of fiber. This was mentioned by a doctor as part of the bezoar problem. Thank you for any light you might shed on this subject. — Mrs. F.S.

ANSWER: I really doubt the bezoar idea, but since you raise the subject, I should explain it.

A bezoar (BEE-zoar) is any conglomeration of indigestible material in the stomach. Large amounts of orange or grapefruit pulp, persimmon peels and bits of hair are the most common stuff of bezoars.

Not many people have the problem, but those who have had parts of their stomachs removed are prone to it.

If a bezoar enlarges, it can block passage of food from the stomach to the rest of the digestive tract. Sudden weight loss could occur, and there would be vague abdominal discomfort, nausea and vomiting.

Look over the report on digestion I'm sending you. Others can order a copy by writing: Dr. Donohue — SR124, P.O. Box 5539, Riverton, NJ 08077-5539. Enclose $3 and a self-addressed, stamped (55 cents) No. 10 envelope.

A gastroscope can outline a bezoar, which can then be broken up by a scope attachment.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: My 8-month-old son has an ear infection. I was surprised to hear the doctor say that, because he did not pull at his ear, which I always thought was a sign of ear infection. Can you comment? — W.K.

ANSWER: Ear tugging can mean anything. Even ear pain can be an iffy complaint. For diagnosis you need an otoscope, a lighted instrument that affords a close-up look at the most immediate evidence available — the state of the eardrum, the tympanic membrane.

A redness and bulging of that structure is a more reliable sign.

Another testing device emit tiny bursts of air. If the drum does not respond, you can suspect an ear infection.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him at P.O. Box 5539, Riverton, NJ 08077-5539.

Hints from Heloise

Dear Heloise: Our home is only a year old and the concrete driveway is already stained with oil and grease. These stains are unsightly and I'd like to try to remove them. Do you have any ideas? — D.S., Shreveport, La.

Sure do, and they are economical and easy to do.

To remove fresh grease or oil stains from your concrete driveway, sprinkle uncolored, clay-type cat-box filler or dry cement on the area.

Rub in with an old, stiff broom and then leave it for several hours or overnight. Sweep it away and discard. If the stains are stubborn, you may need to repeat the process.

For older stains, there are commercial cleaners available in automotive or building-supply stores. There are pressure washer machines you can rent and use in conjunction with the commercial cleaner for really old, stubborn stains. — Heloise

WINDOW RIBBONS

Dear Heloise: We have a glassed-in sun porch with lots of windows. Our beautiful goldfinches and robins were flying into the windows and I'd find them dead on the ground underneath. This is an idea I came up with and it works.

Take a suction cup and tie a narrow ribbon on it — I guess the movement of the ribbon keeps them away (put it in the middle of the window on the outside). Use leftover Christmas ribbon in bright colors.

Note: Be sure and use ribbon used for gift wrap (the kind that can be curled with the swipe of a scissor). Other ribbon won't flutter when it gets wet. — L.H., Springfield, Mo.

Bulls focus on winning Game 5

By MIKE NADEL
AP Sports Writer

SEATTLE (AP) - Few are talking about the Chicago Bulls' place in history. Or about Phil Jackson's possible retirement to Montana. Or about Michael Jordan's pending free-agency. Or about Dennis Rodman's mind games.

The subject is basketball once more, and that makes the Bulls happy.

Tonight, Chicago again will try to wrap up its fourth NBA title in six years. And unlike Wednesday, when the Bulls didn't respond well to the distractions - or to the outstanding play of the Seattle SuperSonics - they insist they will be ready.

The two days off between Games 3 and 4 gave players, media and fans all too much time to think, analyze and plan. Before Game 4, Steve Kerr said, "there was terrible karma" for his Bulls.

"People were bringing boxes of (NBA champion) t-shirts into the locker room," he said. "We were rehearsing the trophy ceremony. We were making public-service announcements to avoid violence back in Chicago. All the questions I was being asked dealt with our place in history.

"Nobody wanted to talk about winning the fourth game. It was extremely distracting."

And the Sonics took advantage, playing by far their best game of the series, winning 107-86 and avoiding a sweep. Another victory tonight will send the teams back to Chicago for Game 6 on Sunday.

"I heard they were getting their parade ready. Well, now they've got to clean it up," Gary Payton said. "I hope if they get prepared again, we can get 'em to have to clean it up again."

Said Hersey Hawkins: "When they were already printing t-shirts, we thought, 'We might as well have fun.' We were very loose."

Jordan said that every year at the NBA Finals, there is too much stink about the preparations being made in anticipation of a team winning the title.

"The league has to get ready," Jordan said. "That's one of the things (the Sonics) will learn if they ever get in that position."

Jordan, coming off a poor performance in Game 4, doesn't plan to let Seattle get into such a position this year.

"We learn from our mistakes and we remember," he said. "We remember the lashing we took, and we want to turn it around."

Whenever given a chance to face a team that beat them this season, the Bulls won the rematch - usually handily. One of those turnarounds came against the Sonics, who won at home Nov. 26 but suffered their most lopsided loss of the season Jan. 10 at Chicago.

"When teams beat us, they've got to pay the price," said Ron Harper, who is questionable for Game 5 with a sore knee. "I expect us to be ticked off, and to respond."

That attitude is one of the many reasons Chicago won an NBA-record 72 games during the regular season and had a shot at a history-making postseason. With Wednesday's loss, the Bulls' best possible playoff mark is 15-2 - which may or may not be good enough for them to claim the mythical title of top team ever.

The Sonics expect to see the Bulls at their best tonight.

"We know Chicago is going to come out a lot more aggressively," Hawkins said. "They'll probably throw everything at us in the first quarter. But I think we can respond by playing good defense and matching their intensity. When we're on, we don't think anybody can beat us."

When talking to the media Thursday, the Sonics repeatedly uttered the one-game-at-a-time cliché because the task of beating Chicago four straight seems too daunting.

After all, the Bulls had only one two-game losing streak all year and didn't suffer their fourth defeat until Feb. 4 - in the season's 45th game.

Stewart, Austin pace US Open field

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. (AP) - They come from two different worlds and brought vastly different games to the first round of the U.S. Open. The only thing Payne Stewart and Woody Austin had in common was a share of the lead.

Austin, in his first U.S. Open, played the type of steady, mistake-free round required of Open winners. Stewart, the 1989 Open champion, suffered, scrambled and came up with great iron shots down the stretch.

They each shot a 3-under-par 67 for a 1-stroke lead over 1993 U.S. Open champion Lee Janzen and John Morse, the only player from Michigan in the field.

New Zealand's Frank Nobilo, Irishman Philip Walton and Paul Azinger were among the group at 1-under 69.

"I was not very pleased with the way I drove the ball, but I putted extremely well and I have totaled 67," Stewart said. "So, I am very happy."

Stewart joined the PGA Tour two years out of college and has two major championships among his nine professional wins.

Austin spent four years between mini-tours and his job as a bank teller in Florida before finally making it to the PGA Tour last year.

He played his first U.S. Open like a veteran on a day when a soft, soggy Oakland Hills Country Club gave way to an unusual amount of birdies, but still had enough bite to make a fool out of some of the game's best players.

Austin, the PGA's rookie of the year last season, was the only player in the field to not make anything worse than a par. He made three straight birdies on putts of no more than 6 feet, and had a couple of good par-saving putts down the stretch.

"I don't think I can improve," Austin said. "I never had a downhill chip. I never had a downhill bunker shot. I never had a bunker shot at all. I always had the ball where I had to have it."

Stewart, on the other hand, was all over the place, but it didn't always cost him. On the par-4 14th hole, he was under a tree, hit a punch shot that clipped another tree, then played an 8-iron short of the green and holed a 40-footer for par.

By the time he made two short birdie putts down the stretch, he was in with a 67.

"There was some ugly out there. There was some pretty," he said. "I didn't feel like I drove the ball very well, but I got away with it. I had a lot of fun out there, and I am going to laugh all day long about it, too."

How much longer Oakland Hills stays accessible depends on the weather. A downpour on the eve of the 96th U.S. Open made the 6,974-yard, par-70 course play much longer, and few players managed par from the rough.

But the greens were holding 4- and 5-irons from 200 yards out, and the softness took some of the scare out of the slopes.

Nuggets switch point guards in two trades

DENVER (AP) - In his seemingly unending search for a true point guard, Bernie Bickerstaff dodged the draft and traded for a proven veteran.

Bickerstaff sent former first-round draft picks Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf and Jalen Rose to Sacramento and Indiana on Thursday in separate trades that brought the Denver Nuggets veterans Mark Jackson, Ricky Pierce and Sarunas Marciulionis.

"We brought (draft prospects) in, and the decision we ultimately made was that we needed a veteran player playing point guard more than we needed a young player at that spot," said Bickerstaff, Denver's coach and president of basketball operations.

"I don't have any reservations that (Jackson's) a true point guard and he'll get it done. The guy's very, very intelligent."

When Thursday's trades were complete, Denver had sent Abdul-Rauf to the Kings for Marciulionis and the 37th pick in the June 26 draft. Rose and Reggie Williams went to Indiana for Jackson and Pierce.

Denver and Indiana also swapped first-round picks in the draft, with the Pacers moving to No. 10 and the Nuggets dropping to No. 23.

Bickerstaff said he may select a point guard at No. 23, but his real search began when he selected Chris Jackson with the No. 3 overall pick in 1990. Jackson changed his name to Mahmoud Abdul-Rauf a year later and stirred a national controversy last season with his refusal to stand for the national anthem.

Butler watches Cedeno spark LA

By The Associated Press
It will be a long time before Brett Butler can play for the Los Angeles Dodgers. He still found a way to help the team win without even wearing a uniform.

Butler, who lives in the suburbs of Atlanta, went to see his teammates play the Braves on Thursday night. From his seat near the visitors' dugout, Butler dispensed some advice that turned into a 6-3 victory.

The Dodgers were trailing 3-0 when they tied it in the sixth. One of the hits was by Roger Cedeno, the rookie who took over for Butler in center field when he left the team in May for throat cancer surgery and the subsequent treatment.

"Brett told me to move up," Cedeno said. "He told me to get on top of the plate, make him throw it inside."

The next inning, those words turned into Cedeno's first major league homer, a three-run shot off Tom Glavine.

"I didn't know the ball was gone," said Cedeno, who hit only 12 homers as a minor leaguer and finally homered on the 181st at-bat as a major leaguer. "I don't hit that many home runs."

After Cedeno crossed the plate, Butler told him, "See, I told you." The loss was the second straight bad outing for Glavine (7-4). He allowed 12 hits and seven earned runs to Colorado last weekend and then gave up nine hits and six runs in 6 1-3 innings Thursday.

"It was a slider," Glavine said of the pitch to Cedeno. "I had been throwing great sliders all night, but I hadn't thrown him one. I gambled. I threw him something different and it didn't work."

The loss was the fifth in seven games for the Braves, their worst slide since losing six of eight in April.

Los Angeles starter Ismael Valdes (7-4) recovered from a shaky first inning, giving up eight hits in six innings before a blister knocked him out. Three pitchers finished, with Todd Worrell working the ninth for his league-leading 18th save.

Second baseman Mark Lemke, who came off the disabled list just before the game, drove in two runs for the Braves with a homer in the third and an RBI grounder in the fifth.

Giants 12, Astros 8
Barry Bonds had four hits, including his first homer in over a month, and San Francisco held on after leading 9-0 after two innings.

Bonds' two-run shot came in the eighth inning and was his first homer since May 11, when he hit his then-major league leading 17th. The 102 at-bat homerless string was the longest of his career, eclipsing a 92 at-bat stretch in 1989.

Visiting Houston had a six-run fifth that included a pinch-hit grand slam by Sean Berry that made it 9-7. Derrick May's run-scoring single in the sixth pulled the Astros within one, but the Giants added a run in the sixth on Stan Javier's RBI double.

Cubs 6, Padres 3
Terry Shumpert's three-run homer with two outs in the bottom of the 14th, his first as a National Leaguer, dropped San Diego to its seventh straight loss.

Shumpert, who came on as a defensive replacement, hit an 0-2 pitch from Willie Blair (0-4).

The Cubs tied it 3-3 with two outs in the eighth on an RBI single by Dave Magadan.

Tony Gwynn led off the Padres fourth with his third homer of the season. After not hitting a home run in 326 at-bats since last August, Gwynn has homered three times in his last 28 at-bats.

Mets 2, Cardinals 1

Robert Person (1-1), called up from the minors earlier in the day, allowed three hits in seven innings, and New York got back-to-back home runs from Todd Hundley and Jeff Kent in the seventh.

The Cardinals, who dropped to 13-15 at home, scored in the eighth on a single by Willie McGee.

Andy Benes (3-8) didn't allow a runner past first until the seventh, when Hundley led off with his career-high 17th homer and Kent followed with his sixth.

Rockies 4, Phillies 1

John Vander Wal had three hits, including a two-run homer, and drove in three runs, and Bryan Rekar continued his mastery of Philadelphia.

Rekar (2-2), who returned from a six-week stint in the minors on Monday, allowed the visiting Phillies four hits through eight innings. Of Rekar's six major league wins, three have come over Philadelphia.

The Phillies' run came in the fourth on an RBI single by Pete Incaviglia.

Marlins 4, Pirates 3

Florida improved to 1-31 when trailing after eight innings as Devon White's two-run single in the ninth stopped Pittsburgh's five-game winning streak.

The Marlins had lost four of five overall and were only 1-7 in Pittsburgh since last season. The Pirates had won nine of 10 and were coming off a 7-1 California road trip.

Brewers' Jaha swats monster shot vs. A's

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

John Jaha was probably the only person in the park who didn't see his monster home run.

"I just hit it nice and easy and I didn't watch it," the Milwaukee first baseman said of his 458-foot blast that almost left County Stadium. "I realized I hit it pretty far, so I just put my head down and started trotting."

While Jaha circled the bases, others watched the ball fall about 15 feet short of the fence that circles the bleachers.

"Without a doubt that's the longest home run I've ever seen here," Milwaukee manager Phil Garner said of the seventh-inning blast off Todd Van Poppel that highlighted the Brewers' 16-3 rout of the Oakland Athletics on Thursday night.

"I want to take a tape measure out there because I bet that ball landed more like 478 feet," Garner said. "That was a bomb. Off the bat, I thought it was out of the stadium."

The only player ever to hit a ball out of the current configuration of County Stadium is Cecil Fielder, who did it in 1991.

As far as Oakland was concerned, just about everything the Brewers hit appeared to be out of the stadium.

"We had lousy pitching," Athletics manager Art Howe said. "We played a lousy game tonight, period. We got killed."

Pat Listach drove in three runs and Matt Mieske went 3-for-3 with a triple, a homer and two walks as the Brewers roughed up Oakland starter Steve Wojciechowski (5-4) for nine runs, six earned, on nine hits and a balk in 4 2-3 innings. It got worse against Oakland's bullpen.

Jaha's second homer of the night traveled only 394 feet.

Rangers put Clark on DL

BOSTON (AP) - The Texas Rangers placed Will Clark on the 15-day disabled list and activated Kurt Stillwell, who started at second base Thursday night against the Boston Red Sox.

Stillwell was put on the disabled list May 18 with a pulled muscle in his right rib cage. In a four-game winning run in the 10th inning with his second major league hit, capping the fifth Boston comeback in the game.

Visiting Texas blew leads of 1-0, 2-1, 4-3, 6-4 in the ninth and 7-6 in the top of the 10th.

The Red Sox, who lead the major leagues with 15 extra-inning games, tied the score 7-7 on John Valentin's seventh homer of the season, with one out in the 10th. Mike Henneman (0-4) then walked Mo Vaughn and Bill Haselman before Delgado singled down the left-field line off Dennis Cook.

Heathcliff Slocumb (2-5) got the win despite allowing the go-ahead run to score in the top of the 10th on a bases-loaded RBI grounder by Ivan Rodriguez.

Royals 10, Orioles 2

Craig Paquette had four RBIs to back the three-hit pitching of Doug Linton and relievers Tim Pugh and Mike Magnante.

Cal Ripken tied the world record set by Japanese player Sachio Kinugasa by playing in his 2,215th consecutive game. Kinugasa was in the crowd at Kauffman Stadium.

Linton gave up Brady Anderson's solo home run, but retired 13 of the last 14 batters he faced before being replaced with two outs in the seventh.

Indians 6, Yankees 2

Orel Hershiser and two relievers combined on a five-hitter and Eddie Murray drove in three runs to lead Cleveland at New York.

Hershiser (6-4) allowed one run on four hits, struck out five and walked one in 7 1-3 innings.

NCAA finds violations at Georgia

By PAUL NEWBERRY
AP Sports Writer

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) - When Jim Donnan came to Georgia six months ago, he called it one of the best coaching jobs in college football.

He still feels that way, but the task of restoring the Bulldogs to national prominence just got much tougher.

The NCAA has formally accused Georgia of serious recruiting violations in the program before Donnan was hired to replace Ray Goff.

"It worries me that these things may have happened, but I also know that they occurred prior to us taking the job," Donnan said. "Unfortunately, people around the country won't know who the coach was at the time, they'll just know it was the University of Georgia."

The NCAA case, revealed Thursday by the university after it received a letter of inquiry, alleges that one of Goff's assistants, Frank Orgel, told a potential recruit last year that he would be paid $7,500 to sign with Georgia and $500 a month while enrolled, along with the use of an automobile.

The NCAA also cited possible violations by Dan Calloway of Riviera Beach, Fla., a youth sports organizer who allegedly represented Georgia in dealings with athletes and improperly provided cash, meals and airline tickets.

Donnan said he learned of the NCAA's preliminary investigation when he arrived in Athens last December to accept the job. He said athletic director Vince Dooley assured him the case was minor, but further allegations revealed in the spring increased the scope of the case.

"It wouldn't have affected my decision to take this job," Donnan said. "I've always felt this is one of the best jobs in the country. We still plan to make this program better inch by inch, but maybe it's with shorter inches now."

Donnan discussed the case with his players Thursday as many of them were packing up to head home for summer break. It was another blow for a program that suffered through a tumultuous 1995 season, in which Goff faced a mandate to show significant improvement or lose his job.

The Bulldogs went 6-6 and Goff was dismissed.

"It seems like we're the nail and they keep hammering us in the ground," said quarterback Earl Chambers, a redshirt freshman. "I hope it's not that serious."

Dooley said the Bulldogs wanted a "speedy conclusion" to the case. But the university's lawyer, Ed Tolley, said he may ask for a one-month extension of the NCAA's Aug. 16 deadline to respond to the 10 charges in the letter of inquiry, which was received Tuesday.

"One of our problems is the Olympics, getting where I need to go and getting in and out," he said, noting that the university is host to gymnastics, volleyball and soccer during the Atlanta Games.

Once the university completes its investigation and responds to the NCAA, a hearing could be set before the Committee on Infractions. Tolley said that likely would occur in November, which would be the final month of the upcoming football season.

"We take these allegations very seriously," university president Charles Knapp said. "If we have violated NCAA rules, we will take our punishment."

But the NCAA did not charge the university with the dreaded "lack of institutional control," indicating that investigators felt the actions of Orgel and Calloway did not involve other athletic department officials.

"I don't think we have an athletic program that's out of control," Knapp said.

The NCAA began a preliminary investigation of Georgia's football program in September, and investigators questioned Goff on campus in December.

Goff was fired that month, but university officials said his dismissal wasn't related to the alleged recruiting violations. They also said the formal NCAA charges would not affect a nearly $1 million severance package with the former coach.

The NCAA claims that Orgel told a prospect in January 1995 that he would receive $5,000 to sign with Georgia and $300 a month during his enrollment. Later that month, after the athlete committed to another school, Orgel allegedly called him to raise the amounts to $7,500 to sign and $500 per month, along with the use of an automobile during his sophomore season.

Through his lawyer, Kim Stephens, Orgel denied the charges. Orgel, who was fired like most of Goff's assistants after Donnan was hired, recently was named athletic director of Dougherty County schools in south Georgia.

"He never broke any NCAA rules," Stephens said. "I think when we develop all the information in this case and present it to the NCAA, they'll realize he has not done anything wrong."

The NCAA also cited possible violations by Calloway, who allegedly tried to funnel players to Georgia and Michigan State. The Spartans already have appeared before the infractions committee and are awaiting sanctions for recruiting violations.

The NCAA says Calloway allegedly made improper contacts with five potential recruits in 1993 and '94, providing them with cash, meals and tickets to athletic events. He also is accused of buying airline tickets for three prospects to visit the Athens campus and providing them with spending money.

"He has no Georgia ties whatsoever," Dooley said. "But there's no question he has some schools he likes more than others."

The university did not reveal the names of any players involved in the case, but said none ever enrolled at the university. It has been reported that Florida players Reidel Anthony and Fred Taylor and Auburn defensive back Martavious Houston had dealings with Calloway.

Former Nebraska RB caught driving drunk

Rams' No. 1 pick finds trouble again

By BETH HARRIS
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - St. Louis Rams running back Lawrence Phillips, already on probation for assaulting a former girlfriend, was arrested for drunken driving early Thursday.

Phillips, this year's top draft pick of the Rams, allegedly had a blood-alcohol level twice the legal limit when a California Highway Patrol officer spotted him speeding with a flat tire on the westbound 60 freeway shortly after 2 a.m.

"He was upset," said Sgt. Ernie Garcia, CHP spokesman. "That's all we're going to say."

The front left tire of Phillips' 1995 gold Mercedes was smoking as he drove past a CHP patrol car near the 605 freeway interchange, according to CHP Officer Pablo Torres.

"He was driving at a high rate of speed and lane straddling," Garcia said.

The officer pursued Phillips for five miles before pulling him over at the San Gabriel Boulevard exit in Rosemead. Phillips lives in suburban North Hills. He lived at a group home in West Covina as a teen-ager.

Phillips failed two breath tests at the scene, registering blood alcohol readings of .15 percent and .16 percent, Torres said. California's legal limit is .08 percent.

Phillips was booked at the Los Angeles County sheriff's Century station, and released about 7:30 a.m. Arraignment was scheduled for Monday.

The Rams had not been aware of the arrest.

"We won't have any comment," team spokesman Tony Wyllie said. "We won't comment until we have further details."

Phillips, 21, is on a year's probation after pleading no contest to charges of misdemeanor assault and trespassing for dragging his former girlfriend down three flights of stairs. He is attending group counseling sessions.

The assault resulted in a five-game suspension last season at Nebraska, where Phillips helped the Cornhuskers win the 1995 national championship.

Phillips' mishaps have continued with the Rams. He overslept for the first day of the team's mini-camp in April, but was not fined since he was not under contract at the time.

Vacationing motorists shouldn't forget that getting enough sleep is essential

By LYNN BULMAHN
Waco Tribune-Herald

You're loading the car for your vacation trip. You've packed the suitcases, maps, sunglasses, cooler, snacks, favorite tapes, the kids' stuff, tools, sporting goods items, suntan lotion, first-aid kit, camping gear and extra blankets and pillows -- things you absolutely can't do without. There's one more thing you shouldn't forget. Getting enough sleep.

Too many times, vacationing motorists are so eager to get to where they're going they don't allow adequate time for sleep. They end up going too many miles without enough rest and risk dozing off at the wheel. "Most people are stubborn. They want to get an extra mile in when they're getting tired driving," said Robert Gieski of the Center for Sleep Disorders at Waco's Hillcrest Baptist Medical Center. "I know of an accident where a driver who'd fallen asleep killed four people."

When you're driving, being asleep for even a few seconds is dangerous. You -- or someone else -- could get killed. The American Automobile Association's Foundation for Traffic Safety says if you are drowsy, you can fall asleep and not even know it. And if you wake up, you probably can't tell how long you've snoozed. AAA is urging drivers to take safety precautions and make sure they've had adequate sleep before driving.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration estimates some 50,000 motor vehicle crashes are caused each year by sleepy drivers. The National Transportation Safety Board says sleepy drivers probably cause some 57 percent of all fatal accidents. "It's a matter of people pushing themselves, trying to get in that extra mile," Gieski said. "If you're tired enough, your eyelids are going to drop."

He said drivers always need to be aware of the possibility that drivers near them are nodding off. Some may have sleep disorders. Experts count 30 million insomniacs, 20 million sleep apnea patients and a quarter million narcolepsy patients in the American population, Gieski said. Many of them drive. However, even the healthiest among us can go to the Land of Nod. "Usually, you're asleep before you even realize it," Gieski said. How dangerous is a sleepy driver? He's about as bad a driver as someone who's driving drunk, according to state troopers surveyed in a national poll by AAA. All of the officers surveyed said they have stopped a motorist on suspicion of drunk driving who turned out to be sober but dangerously sleepy. Half of those surveyed said they'd ticketed drowsy drivers for such offenses as reckless driving and driver inattention. Seventy-six percent of the officers said drowsy driving is an important highway safety problem. And 83 percent said they agreed with the statement that "a driver who falls asleep at the wheel is just as dangerous as one who is driving drunk."

Some 78 percent of the troopers polled said they thought that drowsy driving is an equal problem for truck drivers and motorists alike. Some times of the day or night are especially risky for dozing off. Almost everyone tends to feel sluggish and drowsy in mid-afternoon, AAA says. It reports that many fatigue-related car crashes occur between 1 and 4 p.m. Nighttime is also risky. Sleep becomes irresistible late at night, AAA says. It recommends motorists not drive between 2 and 6 a.m. However, any time you are prone to get sleepy, you shouldn't be driving. Tell time by your own biological clock. If you are drowsy early in the morning or late in the evening, stay off the road at that time. How do you tell whether you're too sleepy to drive? AAA lists some too sleepy to drive signs:

- Your eyes close or go out of focus by themselves.
- You have trouble keeping your head up.
- You can't stop yawning.
- You have wandering, distracting thoughts.
- You don't remember the last few miles.
- You drift between lanes, tailgate or miss traffic signs.
- You keep jerking the car back into the lane.
- You have drifted off the road and narrowly missed crashing.

Even one of these symptoms means you're in danger of falling asleep at the wheel. You need to pull off the road and take a nap in a safe, well-lighted area. As with many health problems, an ounce of prevention beats a pound of cure. Gieski has some suggestions how to prevent snoozing at the wheel. "For most of us, it's simple," he said. "Get a proper night's sleep. Go to bed at the normal time, earlier if you can."

If you're traveling with another adult, switch off the driving. And keep each other awake. Don't let the other front seat passenger doze while you drive. It could be catching.

Experts count 30 million insomniacs, 20 million sleep apnea patients and a quarter million narcolepsy patients in the American population, Gieski said. Many of them drive. He's about as bad a driver as someone who's driving drunk, according to state troopers surveyed in a national poll by AAA. All of the officers surveyed said they have stopped a motorist on suspicion of drunk driving who turned out to be sober but dangerously sleepy. Half of those surveyed said they'd ticketed drowsy drivers for such offenses as reckless driving and driver inattention. Seventy-six percent of the officers said drowsy driving is an important highway safety problem. And 83 percent said they agreed with the statement that "a driver who falls asleep at the wheel is just as dangerous as one who is driving drunk."

Some 78 percent of the troopers polled said they thought that drowsy driving is an equal problem for truck drivers and motorists alike. Seamstress replicates Old Glory

By MICHAEL WALLACE
San Antonio Express-News
SAN ANTONIO - Leonor Bonilla may be the modern day Betsy Ross. At least for San Antonians, she's as close as they come.

Bonilla stitched her way into the hearts of patriots throughout the world with her needlework on thousands of flags for a quarter of a century.

With Flag Day today, commemorating the 219th anniversary of the U.S. flag, it makes perfect sense that Bonilla replicates a modern version of Old Glory which, according to legend, Ross created.

"When I go out and see that flag, I'll have a bond with it," Bonilla said of her work. "Like a mother with her child."

Bonilla, 67, spent two days making a flag 30 feet by 50 feet which will be displayed today as part of the 1996 Flag Day ceremony in the parking lot of Dixie Flag Manufacturing Co.

Flag Day is celebrated in memory of the day in 1777 when the Continental Congress adopted the Stars and Stripes as the official flag of the United States. It first was celebrated on its centennial in 1877.

Today's celebration will feature patriotic music, flag displays and tours of Dixie Flag's plant.

The celebration also will culminate Bonilla's 26-year career as a seamstress, which began from scratch, just like each flag she's made.

"Sewing was something that I was taught by my mother at a very young age in Piedras Negras, Mexico," said Bonilla, who was born in Texas. "Once I came back to America, I stuck with it."

She learned about the then 11-year-old Dixie Flag Co. in 1969 through an unemployment office.

She was hired days later by founder by H. Pete Van de Putte, Sr., and has been stitching flags and banners for the company since.

"At first, someone would bring me some material and say, 'Make the whole flag,'" she said. "It was hard but I got the hang of it. I would put the flag together from scratch." And piece by piece the company has grown from five employees to about 60 today. As it's grown, so has patriotism.

Plant manager George Draghici never experienced patriotism until he migrated from Romania 11 years ago.

"I came from a dictatorship where there were no laws and no patriotism," said Draghici, who was hired shortly after coming to America. "There are people all over the world who would give their lives to come here."

Draghici, 45, said although he's happy with his growth as an American citizen, there are too many people who don't appreciate the meaning of Flag Day.

"When we first started celebrating Flag Day, there were so many people who didn't appreciate it," he said. "If you asked people what's special about June 14, I bet 65 to 70 percent will tell you they don't know. There's a lot of stories, blood and history involved with Flag Day and there are (Americans) who don't appreciate the value of it."

Another longtime employee says the challenge of making Flag Day a success is the best part of being in the business.

Genny Barron, a 15-year employee, said the U.S. flag is very symbolic.

"You can look at the flag and know right away what the 50 stars stand for and what the 13 stripes mean," said Barron, 38, director of corporate sales. "As Flag Day has grown, more of the community and military bases have gotten involved and its going to grow and grow."

Bonilla says the joy of sewing flags keeps her alive.

"When you put all your effort in something like this, it makes you feel good."

She has no objections to being compared to Ross.

"It could be fate or history that has me here doing this," Bonilla said. "If there's a difference between me and Betsy Ross, it's that she did everything by hand and now I do it by machine."

NEW YORK (AP) - Vincent Canby is giving up his starring role, but he's staying on as a featured player.

The 71-year-old New York Times mainstay is giving up the chief theater critic job he's held since December 1994. He'll return to his previous post as Sunday theater critic.

Canby will be succeeded by Ben Brantley, a Times theater critic since 1993. Brantley previously worked as a staff writer for The New Yorker and Vanity Fair and as a film critic for Elle magazine.

Canby will be bumping Margo Jefferson from the Sunday job. Jefferson, a 1995 Pulitzer Prize winner for criticism, will write on a wider range of cultural topics.

NEW YORK (AP) - Jordan's King Hussein can add a legal degree to his list of titles.

Hussein was awarded an honorary law degree by New York University for his dedication to democracy and efforts to bring peace to the Middle East.

"King Hussein has been an inspiring voice in the forums of the world during difficult times," said University President L. Jay Oliva at a ceremony and dinner Monday.

Hussein was accompanied by his American-born wife, Queen Noor, and other members of his family. His 15-year-old son Prince Hashem received an NYU jacket.

321 Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

This is a dramatized version of facts taken from the Book of Genesis intending to show some of the customs of these ancient and traditional times.

A BRIDE FOR ISAAC
ABRAHAM'S STEWARD, ELIEZER, HAS GIVEN COSTLY GIFTS TO REBEKAH FOR GIVING HIM AND HIS CARAVAN WATER, BECAUSE HE HAS RECEIVED THE SIGN THAT SHE IS TO BECOME ISAAC'S BRIDE....

NOW REBEKAH HURRIES TO HER HOME, FILLED WITH EXCITEMENT....

I MUST TELL MY FAMILY ALL ABOUT THIS!

...THERE IS A FAMILY COUNCIL AS SHE SHOWS THEM THE GOLDEN EAR-RING AND THE BRACELETS....

NOW REBEKAH'S BROTHER, LABAN, DASHES TO MEET THE STRANGER.

....HE SENSES GREAT IMPORTANCE IN WHAT HAS HAPPENED AND SPEAKS THIS TO ELIEZER: "COME IN TO MY HOUSE! WHEREFORE STANDEST THOU OUTSIDE? SEE, I HAVE PREPARED FOR THEE AND THY CAMELS!"
