Acting out fantasies

Old West kept alive by groups

By Dianna F. Dandridge
Hereford Brand Staff Writer
Guns are not toys and should never be played with, but this weekend a different kind of enthusiasts did just that.

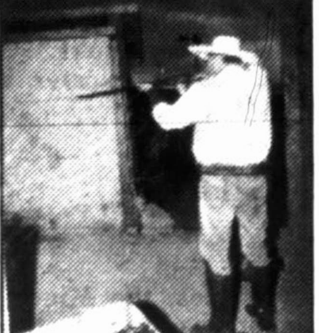

The Tierra Blanca Rangers and the Canadian River Regulators brought out authentic Old West weapons and returned to the days when sidearms and Derringers were as common as today's automobile. Members of the group arrived on the Tierra Blanca in authentic Western attire, carrying authentic period firearms, and donning the persona of what could have been an Old West character.

They show up ready to use the guns of the past, including the black powder weapons. "For most of us, this is living out a childhood fantasy," said Jacobite Jack, a "Scottish drifter" with a deadly aim. "Most people have an interest in playing cowboy. Some of us just never outgrow it." Members of the cowboy action shooting clubs shoot both authentic and replica guns dated from 1800 to the early 1900s. The ammunition of choice is self-loaded black powder. Not all members are old-timers who can remember the last days of the Old West. The groups' ages range from 14 to 87. Many local VIPs participate, donning the costume and persona of their choice. Deaf Smith County Commissioner Johnny Latham takes on the guise of "Peso Juan"; Alco manager Dave Jorgenson is one of many gunslingers; and radio personality Captain Billy, likes the idea of being an Old West sheriff. During the cowboy shooting action events, shooters participate in a number of events with Derringers, side arms, rifles and shotguns. Some of the matches include simple targets; for others, the shooters are given a scenario and are scored on how well they react. "The most important thing, is to have fun," Captain Billy said. "We keep safety in mind for all the events. We use ear plugs, and no alcohol is allowed while the guns are in use." Matter of fact, loaded guns are only allowed in specified areas and all firearms must be unloaded before leaving the area. After the early evening events, guns are put away, and club members

Skies should light up

By Kitt Jennings
Hereford Brand Staff Writer
The sky over Hereford should be lit up Saturday as the Deaf Smith County Chamber of Commerce orchestrates its supposed-to-be annual Fourth of July fireworks display.

Wes Klett, Jamie Nino and Diane Kreig organized the first display put on in Hereford, held in 1991 in honor of area Desert Storm veterans. After drought canceled last year's Independence Day fireworks display -- one of three times the aerial pyrotechnics have been postponed -- chamber executive vice president Sid Shaw said he hopes this year's show will attract hordes of community residents. Shaw and Kreig decided that holding the show on a Saturday would attract larger crowds than if it were on July 4, which is next Sunday.

The activities will kick off about 5 p.m., with live entertainment and a free watermelon feast planned to fill the time until the fireworks presentation begins. The display should last 25 to 30 minutes and KPAN Radio will broadcast music for the display. Food booths, at no charge to non-profit groups, will pepper the grounds at Veterans Park as well.

"(Hereford residents) definitely missed the fireworks last year. I think they regretted that we didn't have any," Shaw said. "They'll definitely be more inclined to come to the show this year."

Which is precisely why the chamber has coordinated the event in Veterans Park. "It allows people not to have to travel a lot and it keeps local people from going elsewhere," Shaw said. "I'm the one that picked that place," City Fire Marshall Jay Spain said. He said the location was selected for maximum safety and spectator space. With the number of people the annual show usually attracts, safety is a prime concern for Shaw, Krieg and Spain. Shaw urges the public to make safety a priority while celebrating. He reminds everyone planning to attend that

Couple really digs keeping a garden

By Dianna F. Dandridge
Hereford Brand Staff Writer
Relaxing hobby or food-producing venture, gardening remains an annual task undertaken by folks of all ages and all backgrounds. Don and Judy Minchew are among those avid gardeners who enjoy this summertime diversion. Don grew up on a farm near Easter and Judy grew up in the city, and both always remember having a garden in their younger years. "There's just something about the spring time that makes you want play in the soil and plant things and see them grow," Judy said, using her hands to express herself. And for 24 years, she and her husband have been playing in the soil, growing the things they like and experimenting with others.

"The first thing we bought after we were married was a tiller," she said. "It's just something natural about wanting to grow things." She said their first garden was about 1,000 square feet, the next year it doubled in size. Now its small enough to accommodate just the two of them and necessary jars of salsa. Their garden, though done on a small scale, utilizes both modern and traditional methods to make the best crop out of the space available. Don uses PVC pipes to irrigate furrows of potatoes, peppers, squash, tomatoes, cucumbers and for the first time sunflowers. "We irrigate rather than sprinkling," Don said. "We watered just before the rain Monday."

Shaw settles in at new job

■ New chamber chief pleased by reception, people's readiness to pitch in to boost community

By Don Cooper

Hereford Brand Managing Editor

Anyone who starts a new job always runs into something unexpected. Of course, the unexpected may be good or bad, but whatever, it's still a surprise.

For Sid Shaw, who took over the executive vice president's job with the Deaf Smith County Chamber of Commerce on June 1, the biggest surprise has been the people of the Hereford area.

"I found the people are more receptive to helping out than I had imagined," Shaw said. "People in this town jump when it's time to do something to help the community... people's attitudes have really been great."

Shaw said his first month on the job has "been fantastic. I have had a great reception from the public as the new kid on the block."

"I'm not unfamiliar with the chamber's activities," Shaw said, noting he has served as president of the organization. "I'm not a stranger to the job the chamber does."

Shaw, who succeeded Don Cumpton as chamber executive vice president, said the changeover is hectic because of the expansion project under way at the chamber office.

The chamber, which just purchased the building from the Caviness family, is building a 450-square-foot expansion on the west side of the structure. The expansion is being financed in part by a $10,000 gift from the property's former owners.

The chamber also plans to do some renovations on the interior of the building, Shaw said.

When the construction project is completed, the building will be home to both the chamber and the Hereford Economic Development Corp., now headed up by Cumpton.

"When this (project) is done, I anticipate great things with the HEDC and chamber working together," Shaw said. "I can't wait for Don (Cumpton) to get down here and help us - his skill in public relations will help both of us. We have a good relationship with the HEDC, and I see great things with it and the chamber working together on economic development."

In looking at the Hereford business climate, Shaw again expressed optimism.

"We recognize that our economy is tied to cattle and agriculture," he said, "but there are a lot of people who are starting small businesses and there are so many areas where small businesses will play a vital role in this community."

"Of course, it would be good to get a company that would bring in 200 jobs," he said, "but we will gain just as much if we could get 10 companies with 20 jobs."

The climate for business in Hereford is favorable, Shaw said.

"We have a fine school system; we have a great health center and clinics, and probably the model senior citizens facility anywhere and look at the YMCA and the Aquatic Center. Hereford has a lot to offer," he said.

"I see this as a real plus when you're trying to recruit a new business or expand an existing business," he said.

Gardening

Along with irrigation pipes, the Minchews add mulch and grass clippings to the furrows.

"The mulch keeps the soil moist and cool," Don said. "Early in the spring, I add some fertilizer and till it in. But the mulch makes it easier to see the weeds. That's about all I do, other than water and weed."

Like most gardeners, the Minchews have their favorite garden items, but they also know when it is cheaper to let someone else grow the crop.

"Our favorite is green beans," Judy said, "but we can go to Andrews and get them cheaper than raising them ourselves."

A staple in the Minchew garden is the tomatoes.

"Tomatoes are expensive to buy," Judy said. "So we always grow some."

She says they've grown potatoes in other places, but had never tried them here.

"The soil is so clayey, we weren't sure how they would do. Right now it looks like a lot of potatoes, but there won't be that many once the vines are gone," she said. "We'll leave them in the ground until a hard freeze. That's where we store them."

Banked on the south by railroad ties and the fence on the north, the Minchew garden offers more than just the vegetables coming

Fireworks

"there'll be kiddos running around," and motorists should keep especially alert as they drive to and from the park.

To eliminate accidents in the crowd, "people should not bring fireworks, they should simply enjoy this show," Shaw said.

"See, you're not allowed to shoot fireworks in the city limits, so I issue tickets or take you to see the judge," Spain said. Mere possession of fireworks inside the city limits is grounds for a ticket.

"There will be zero tolerance for any persons shooting fireworks in the park," Hereford Police Lt. Ben Barrick said.

Despite organizers' sensitivity to safety issues, "there's always a chance that a shell

Longtime Hereford businessman Sid Shaw (left), new executive vice president of the Deaf Smith County Chamber of Commerce, sees good things happening because of the teamwork between the chamber and the Hereford Economic Development Corp., which is headed up by executive director Don Cumpton (right). Joining Shaw and Cumpton outside the chamber office is chamber president Chris Leonard.

Shaw said he wants the chamber to be more involved with other community organizations, providing support and assistance to any group that wants its help.

"We always will be here for anyone who wants to use the chamber in a supportive way," Shaw said. "We stand ready to assist anyway we can."

He said he hopes to develop a more accurate community calendar, which would help every organization in the Hereford area plan activities without conflict with other groups.

"We have a community calendar, but there aren't too many people who come and check it. We will make an effort to provide a more accurate calendar."

Another area where Shaw sees a need for improvement is in membership.

"One of the areas I would like to see developed more is increasing the chamber membership. Right now, there are over 400 members, but in a town this size, we should have 1,400 - I want to see us get to a better point with membership," he said.

"We have a lot of business members, but we could stand to have a lot more individual members - people who aren't directly tied to a business, but who are active in a lot of things in the community. We will work hard over the next 12 months to increase membership," he said.

Although Shaw doesn't think he'll run into any big surprises as he settles into his new role, he said he has found one thing he hadn't known about Hereford.

"It's surprising just how much activity there is in this community. There's something for everyone who wants to be involved. It's probably always been that way, but until now I didn't realize just how much," he said.

will misfire," Spain acknowledged, adding "but if you walk somewhere, you could always get run over. (The Hereford Volunteer Fire Department) will be ready on the scene."

On a local level of preparation, the Hereford VFD receives and stores the fireworks until the preparations for the actual show begin. The hazard-wary effort does reach outside the state, however, because Western Enterprises Inc. of Oklahoma supplies the fireworks and the professionals trained to detonate them for the display.

"They know what they're doing," Spain said. With safety-conscious, expectant crowds, and professionals monitoring preparations for the display, Shaw expects an enjoyable event.

"It is important for us to remember the significance of the event, and I expect this to be a very good show," Shaw said.

YOU ARE MY ART
(Margaret Schultz)

So often I've called on my charming flame,
And found fair and friendly aid in my chores.
So other poets have adopted my aim,
While you pull the strings to publish their scores.
You taught the silent how to sing aloud,
And got those crude in writing on the right route.
You led the learned poets to soar in their crowd
And gave elegant bards the gift of repute
I am most proud of the work that I composed
Since you changed the tune of my writing straits.
You turned the aims when bards were indisposed
But learned to write because of your pleasing traits.
But you are all my art, and advance in kind
As high as learning of my naive mind.

The contest, which drew entries from across the United States, was judged by Lubbock poet William Wenthe.)

WONDER AND THE GIFT
(Jerry Rattliff)

I wonder about sunrises,
Sunsets and stars.
I wonder about highways,
Camels and cars.
I wonder about oceans
And land's yet to be.
I wonder about you,
And I wonder about me.
I wonder about everything
From happiness to sorrow.
I wonder about yesterday,
I wonder about tomorrow.

It's not the destination
That gives me such a lift.
It's the journey that's important.
As I wonder at the Gift
I wonder why I wonder,
And where will this wonder go.
Do I wonder why I wonder?
Or wonder why I know.
I wonder if I really know,
Will I ever understand
Is the gift in the pen,
Or is it in the hand?
I wonder, is the end
Really just the start?
Is the gift in the hand,
Or is it in the heart?

● HISD construction leads the way for city; building is up in '99

By Kitt Jennings
Hereford Brand Staff Writer

With Hereford Independent School District reaping the benefits of a $14.3 million facilities grant, it seems as if construction in Hereford is booming.
In May, city building and zoning clerk Becky Reinart granted 14 construction permits totaling $3,779,210, a significant improvement over May 1998 when 15 permits were valued at only $658,400.
For the year, the number of permits issued has dropped by 10 to 40, but the $9,438,860 value is $8,234,558 more than last year.
Reinart only issued one residential permit since January, contributing a menial $125,000 to the almost 9.5 million gained this year, as compared to single $100,000 residential permit allocated in '98.

"There's more (construction) than last year, that's for sure. It's definitely up," Reinart said. She credits most of the jump in the value — $3,405,000 — to the new facilities in progress at Hereford High and Junior High schools.
"The school really doesn't add tax value, but anything that's new to Hereford is an improvement to the community and it's good for our kids," Reinart said.
From January to April this year, in each respective month, seven, five, eight, and six permits were administered for a total of 26, netting $5,113,748 more than the 35 permits from the same months in '98.
However, with a new restaurant, car wash, credit union drive-up and self-storage facility all in the works, opinions on the construction are largely positive.
Reinart weighed the prospect of any negative side to the construction, and said, "If it keeps people employed or improves our community, it's good for Hereford."

Long-term Success Involves Short-term Setbacks

Have you ever looked at someone and thought his or her life must be a bed of roses? Remember, appearances can be deceiving.
The stock market has looked pretty rosy in recent years. The Dow Jones Industrial Average has increased more than 2,500 percent in the past 25 years. This amounts to an average of about 14 percent per year. If you had put $10,000 into a portfolio mirroring the Dow, it would have grown to more than $269,000 in that time.
These results, however, were not achieved without some thorny periods. A study of those 300 months by one mutual fund company found that such an investment would have lost money in 112 months, or three out of every eight. Monthly losses of 5 percent or more over the 25-year period were not uncommon. Some declines were dramatic, such as the 23.2 percent drop in October 1987.
Yet the bottom line is a 2,500 percent increase. The lesson is that over the long term, the stock market is a good place to be.

Still, would it be possible to take advantage of short-term movements to make a quick profit? The study found no obvious patterns over the 25 years. Significant monthly movements, both up and down, came without warning. Sometimes there was a succession of good or bad months. Other times, the market moved quickly up and down and back again. Significant monthly declines came in good years, and significant monthly gains occurred in poor years.
To illustrate the value of staying in the market (and the folly of trying to "time" the market), the study compared a hypothetical investor with terrific timing to one with dreadful timing. If you'd had the nerve to invest in the Dow on Oct. 19, 1987 - the day of the big 508-point drop - your money would have grown to seven times its original value by July 31, 1998. If your timing was terrible, and you'd invested the day before the drop, your money still would have grown to nearly five-and-a-half times what you'd put in.
Over the long run, the stock market's upward movement has been strong and clear. Investors who simply bought and held equities for at least 10 years have generally done well.
People who appear successful and content didn't get there without setbacks. Into each life some rain must fall - and that applies to the stock market, too. But those who remember that every rainstorm eventually ends are more likely to enjoy the silver lining behind the clouds.

 FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

EDITORIAL

Don't burn Constitution to save flag

With the Fourth of July serving as its backdrop, the U.S. House of Representatives is again trying to trample on the freedoms that we soon will be celebrating.

The House voted 305-124 to amend the Constitution to allow legislation that would ban desecration of the flag.

The measure, which was co-sponsored by Rep. Larry Combest, R-Lubbock, whose district includes Deaf Smith County, now moves to the Senate.

The anti-flag desecration amendment flies in the face of the freedoms we Americans claim to cherish. It also would alter the First Amendment for the first time in more than 200 years, restricting the guarantee to free speech that has made the United States unique in the community of nations.

Burning the flag is a reprehensible act, but it still is a political expression guaranteed by the Constitution.

The anti-flag desecration amendment is a prime example of political expediency. No one will gain any political points by opposing the amendment, so members of Congress who should know better are lining up to endorse a piece of legislation that should be relegated to the trash bin.

Many of the lawmakers who are supporting the anti-desecration amendment claim their actions are in support of the nation's veterans. But they could better show their support for those who served by standing up for the Constitution and refusing to pander to what they wrongly perceive to be a burning issue.

The anti-flag desecration amendment is the legislative equivalent of burning the Bill of Rights, and we would prefer to see a political extremist burn a U.S. flag than to see the U.S. Congress shred our Constitution.

If it weren't for bad luck ...

Dianna F. Dandridge

Seventy-two hours last week definitely caused me to believe that if it weren't for bad luck, I'd have no luck at all. That or maybe I'm the reincarnation of Secondhand Rose.

I used to hate the things old Grandpa Jones, Buck Owens and Roy Clark would make fun of on "Hee Haw," but after last weekend, I completely understand the sentiment.

It all started with the purchase of a lightweight, second-hand, electric weed eater. I bought it mainly so my son, who is kind of small, could trim up some of the lawns he's cutting.

A legal driver again

Don Cooper

After five years, I am once again a legal driver.

It wasn't that I couldn't drive legally, I just was supposed to have a licensed driver over 18 in the front seat next to me when I got behind the steering wheel.

I was certainly surprised to learn I've been driving illegally for the past five years.

And, I wouldn't have known of my violation of Texas traffic laws if I had been prompt in responding to my mail.

In early May, I received a notice from the Texas Department of Public Safety that my driver's license would expire on my birthday, June 24. All I had to do was fill out a form, and send a photocopy of my auto insurance and a check or money order for $24 to Austin and my driver's license would be renewed for six years.

That's a good deal, and I put the DPS packet where I wouldn't forget it — which I promptly did. In fact, I forgot all about the DPS license renewal card until Tuesday morning when I realized my driver's license would be expiring on Thursday.

I hustled off to the DPS driver's license office Tuesday afternoon. I had my proof of insurance, my old driver's license and a check for $24.

Everything was moving smoothly until the DPS clerk Monica asked:

"Why do you have to have someone over 18 in the front seat when you're driving?"

"What!"

"Your license has a restriction on it," she said.

"What kind of restriction?"

"You have to have a licensed driver over 18 in the front seat with you when you drive?"

"That's crazy," I said. "I've never had that." She showed me the license.

I looked at it closely. Sure enough, there it was printed in bold capital letters: REST: B.

"That means you have to take the driving test," the other clerk, Rachel, said mischievously.

I didn't look forward to a driving test. I haven't taken a driving test since I got my Arkansas driver's license (on my second try) back in 1962. Well, that's not quite right. I took a driving test in 1966 when I got my car, truck and bus license in Berlin.

I was supposed to take a driving test when I lived in Missouri, but I moved back to Corpus Christi before my old license expired.

I guess I was lucky because Rachel and Monica were not like so many people in government offices — they took a look at me, concluded that an aging baby boomer might need a lot of things, but a licensed driver on the front seat isn't one of them.

So, rather than just telling me it's on the license, so I have to take the driving test, they wheeled into action.

Monica checked back through my DPS records and found out the "B" restriction had been slapped on my license in November 1994 when I moved from New Mexico to Atlanta, Texas.

At the same time, Rachel was doing a license check with New Mexico and found out that state's restriction "B" is for corrective lenses. She quickly concluded the DPS clerk in Atlanta had just looked at the New Mexico license and punched in "B" instead of "A," which is the corrective lenses restriction in Texas.

Within seconds, Monica had changed the restriction to "A" and took my picture for the new license.

Once again, I can drive anywhere by myself — legally.

Thanks, Rachel and Monica.

Business taking on Pentagon

Walter R. Mears
 The Associated Press

Blending the tactics of a presidential campaign with a marketing pitch out of corporate America, an alliance of business leaders is trying to reorder the federal budget to cut defense spending in favor of education, health care and other needs.

It is an unlikely mission for big business executives, easily labeled as part of the military-industrial complex that pushes defense budgets and weapons contracts.

More than 400 corporate leaders, retired military officers and former government officials have signed on with Business Leaders for Sensible Priorities.

"We're not peaceniks," says Ben Cohen, the Ben & Jerry's ice cream man who is the president and the major donor to the organization. "We are businessmen."

Organizations bent on pruning defense spending are nothing new. And the debate about budget priorities between military and domestic needs has been going on for decades, especially the last one, since the fall of the Soviet Union and the end of the Cold War.

This debate claims to be different because it isn't coming at the issue from the left, although there certainly are liberals on its roster. Leaders of the group say that its members and support come from across the political spectrum, that even boardroom conservatives want to do something about defense spending; they consider wasteful.

It also is different for the way it is trying to change minds, not by lobbying inside the Beltway but by campaigning outside. Cohen said the budget for that campaign will be $3 million this year, $6 million next.

And the first target is Iowa, where Cohen said there will be television ads comparable to those of the candidates competing for the opening caucuses of the 2000 campaign next winter. The group plans to spend about $800,000 to make its issue seen and heard there.

Cohen said the organization has six staffers in the state now. It also is going to be the scene of a showy bus tour, with street theater, music and giant, inflatable visual aids on the way federal money is being spent. And as an added attraction, free ice cream.

Essentially, the organization is trying to market an issue instead of a product or a candidate.

Their case is that without a Cold War, the United States still has a Cold War defense budget. "We are now, literally, in an arms race with ourselves," Cohen said.

Their blueprint for changing that was drawn by Lawrence Korb, an assistant secretary of defense in the Reagan administration, in an alternative budget that would cut Pentagon spending by $48 billion without, he says, diminishing needed capabilities.

Congress, and the administration, are going in the opposite direction, increasing defense spending. The House has just approved nearly $290 billion for defense next year. That's $1.4 billion more than the increased budget President Clinton recommended. There's more to come for peace-keeping forces in Kosovo — $1.5 billion to $2 billion a year by administration estimate, twice that according to outside analysts.

Clinton's defense budget seeks an increase of $112 billion over the next five years, to $319 billion in 2005. Republicans in Congress said it wasn't enough. And that was before the bombing campaign against Yugoslavia.

That is not a promising setting for an effort to reduce Pentagon spending. The leaders of Business Leaders for Sensible Priorities say theirs is not just another effort.

Their backing, background and techniques make this one different, they say. They believe they can put their issue on the public agenda, using professional market research, paid advertising, public relations and other corporate tools to mobilize opinion.

To do all that, they are going to have to create a market. There is no sign now of a national mood favoring defense cuts. Cuts aren't a topic in the 2000 presidential campaign; increases are.

Bad luck

Sunday didn't prove to be much better. Both kids got up in a snit and didn't want to go to church. Then when we got home, I realized I had forgotten to turn on the crock pot, so Sunday dinner was still raw.

Capping Sunday afternoon was the screaming and smoking coming from the washing machine.

The washer is new to me, but it still is used, but I really expected it to last more than two weeks.

Of course, Monday began with a deluge. I always know it's raining hard when kids and dogs find their way to my bed.

Water was all the way up my driveway and into my storage shed as I got ready to leave for work. And, getting to work was lots of fun. Any route I chose had a portion of the road under water.

About mid-morning, while on my way to an appointment, I traveled down 25 Mile Avenue and suddenly the van's transmission lurched and the front end shimmied.

I heard a loud pop and lost all power and steering capabilities. I managed to get it out of the road and coasted to a stop in the parking lot. The lot is on a hill and the transmission wouldn't hold, so I used the emergency brake.

I managed to get to the appointment, and back to work, where I tossed the ball bearings I picked up in front of the car. In so doing, I hit the desk with a finger nail. Needless to say, I wanted to curse out loud cause it hurt like %$#@!

The weed eater is probably a lost cause. I'll get a new antenna for the TV and replace the glass with wood. We can try to keep Badger in the back yard and hope the snakes stay elsewhere.

Sunday dinner will be just as good Monday, I suppose. And the company I bought the washer from is willing to work with me on getting it fixed.

A friend will go look at the car as soon as he can untrack his wrecker - I hope before my nail grows back.

And, sooner or later the rain will stop. That is a promise.

I think the moral to this story is when you have to depend on second-hand stuff, you can only count on bad luck, or worse, no luck at all.

The Bush Style

Presidential race could parallel '94

By Michael Holmes

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — For a preview of how George W. Bush might campaign for president, look at the way he first ran for governor.

"I've already seen this movie," says Chuck McDonald, the spokesman for Democrat Ann Richards' 1994 re-election campaign. "It worked then. There's no reason to believe it can't work now."

After announcing in November 1993 that he would challenge Richards, Bush quickly raised a huge amount of money, breezed to the GOP nomination with almost no primary opposition, joked about being the former president's son, then talked nonstop about four proposals.

As he starts his second presidential campaign trip this week, Bush again is raising large amounts of money, enjoys a wide poll lead over primary opponents, jokes about being the former president's son, and says he'll have his specific proposals in due time.

"There's been a lot written and said about how unprecedented this campaign is, but that's only because it's taking place on a national stage," McDonald said.

Many pages from the Bush campaign look like reprints of his first battle plan:

Fund raising

In 1994, the nationally known Richards was a fund-raising powerhouse from New York to Hollywood. Undaunted — and equipped with a famous family name — Bush raised $16.4 million, ending 1994 with a $2.5 million surplus.

This year, Bush has been raising money only since March, but he collected $7.6 million in 28 days and could hit $20 million by June 30. He admits thinking about forgoing federal matching funds and spending limits.

THE NOMINATION

In 1994, the "real" GOP gubernatorial primary took place in a Houston office building. There, Bush met with oilman Rob Mosbacher, who'd been the party's candidate for lieutenant governor four years earlier.

When they emerged, Mosbacher bowed out of the governor's race. Millionaire Dallas businessman T. Boone Pickens gave the race a look, but also passed. The nomination became Bush's for the asking. He faced only an unfunded, 68-year-old demolition contractor in the primary election.

This year, Bush has soared to a whopping lead in opinion polls, with the latest Time-CNN survey putting him at 54 percent among Republicans and 40 points ahead of the No. 2, Elizabeth Dole. His first campaign trip got saturation media coverage.

"Not having to face a well-financed primary opponent launched the governor's career in politics," said Mark Sanders, a GOP consultant who worked for Mosbacher.

"If he'd had to spend millions of dollars and there had been a brutal Republican primary, he wouldn't have had the resources or the stamina he showed in that general election," Sanders said.

PERSONAL QUESTIONS

Brutal hardly describes the 1990 Democratic primary that nominated Richards. Rivals made an issue of her past, including alcoholism and her refusal to say whether she'd ever used drugs.

But four years later, Bush said he wouldn't get personal,

Several Hereford Independent School District teachers and administrators recently attended the Texas Rural Systemic Initiative (TRSI) Systemic Leadership Institute to learn more about high-quality mathematics and science and to develop strategies for improving math and science in the district.

Monica Alaniz, Cindy Bailey, Kelly Goodin, Twyla Jones, Beth Killebrew, Marilyn Leasure, Michelle Merkel, Jana Morgan, Amy Scott and Pam Stephens attended the four-day institute in San Antonio, along with more than 160 representatives from school districts, universities, education service centers and other agencies.

"The teachers were very impressed," Marilyn Leasure, former Hereford Junior High School principal, said the teachers were impressed.

"We had three schools represented and the conference time allowed the teachers to share ideas across campuses. Overall, the institute was valuable for Hereford schools," Leasure said.

Sessions included "How Students Learn," "Mathematics and Science Education for All Students," "Texas Essential Knowledge and Skills: Math Standards for the 21st Century," "Coordinating Funding Resources," "The Role of Leadership in Systemic Change" and more.

HISD is participating in the TRSI, a statewide project led by West Texas A&M University focused on improvement of mathematics and science education in eligible Texas counties.

wrote, "The networking opportunities are appreciated. Isolation is such a large problem in rural schools."

"One parent told me that it was a wonderful eye-opening experience," Christine Purkiss, TRSI deputy project director, said. "The parent's goal now is not only to become involved with the education system but to be informed and knowledgeable enough to participate and help make a difference."

Universities and agencies represented included WTAMU; Texas Engineering Experiment Station; Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi; Texas Tech University; Angelo State University; Texas A&M University; Lawrence Hall of Science; Exploratorium in San Francisco; San Antonio Urban Systemic Initiative; North East Independent School District; El Centro Independent School District from El Centro, Calif.; Texas Statewide Systemic Initiative; Texas Regional Collaboratives for Excellence in Science Teaching; and Fort Worth Museum of Science and History.

CANYON - Works on paper by a cowboy artist will be featured through Aug. 22 at the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum.

The exhibit, "Edwin Borein: The Artist's Life and Works," features 54 watercolors, etchings, and pen-and-ink sketches, all from collections of the Rockwell Museum in Corning, N.Y., include examples of Borein's "Stampede" rodeo posters, depictions of Western wildlife and Hispanic missions, and his highly regarded imagery of longhorn cattle and cowboy life on the open range.

Borein (1872-1945) was raised in California at a time when cattle were still driven down the main street of his home town. His sensitivity to the behavior of animals, his inclination to draw what he experienced came naturally and with less formal art training.

He lived the lifestyle he chose to depict and became a proficient roper, rider and saddlemaker. Ranching and Hispanic themes characterized his work throughout his career.

Mayor won't honor comic

PEOPLE

GEORGETOWN, S.C. (AP) — Chris Rock has been locked out of his hometown.

Mayor Lynn Wood Wilson said the comedian is just too vulgar to be honored with one of the oversized gold-colored keys to the city.

"I am not attacking Mr. Rock," Wilson said in a statement, "but simply believe a key to the city should be given to someone whose work and notoriety stems from activities all Georgetownians can be proud of."

He added: "It is common knowledge a good deal of Mr. Rock's comedy material is not suitable for our youth and is offensive to many Georgetownians."

Holders of the gold key include basketball's Charlotte Hornets, South Carolina Gov. Jim Hodges and rap star LL Cool J.

Rock is returning for a show next week.

An estimated 54,000 fans from South Korea, Japan and neighboring Asian countries flocked to Olympic Stadium for the four-hour extravaganza, a benefit show for needy children.

Some people said ticket prices — up to $250 a seat — were too high in the face of the nation's economic difficulties.

Other groups, including a Korean War veterans association, noted that the concert fell on the 49th anniversary of the breakout of the Korean War, a day they said should be observed quietly.

There were no protests around the stadium, though 1,500 police officers were deployed.

Other guest entertainers included Mariah Carey, Boyz II Men, violinist Vanessa Mae and actor Steven Seagal.

They plan to set off from New York in October in a 105-foot catamaran called PlayStation.

The record is six days, 13 hours and three minutes.

O.J. Simpson

HOUSTON (AP) — O.J. Simpson chastised an evangelist this year for buying one of his old football trophies with the intention of melting it, saying the preacher should have given the money to a women's shelter.

Organizers of a traveling jewelry show believe they've found a way to accomplish both goals.

Friday, they began dismantling and melting Simpson's 1972 American Football Conference Player of the Year trophy, using the metal to make angel-shaped pins. The pins will be free to those who can prove they donated at least $100 to a battered women's program.

"Anything that provides funding for domestic violence programs and shelters is something we will support," said Belsie Gonzalez of the Houston Area Women's Center.

The meltdown at this weekend's International Gem and Jewelry Show comes shortly after the five-year anniversary of the slaying of Simpson's ex-wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, and waiter Ronald Goldman.

Simpson was acquitted of the killings, but a civil jury ordered him to pay $33.5 million to the families of the victims, prompting the auction of his personal items.

The pins are similar to those worn by Mrs. Simpson's sister, Denise Brown, during the former running back's criminal trial. Simpson earned the award while playing for the Buffalo Bills.

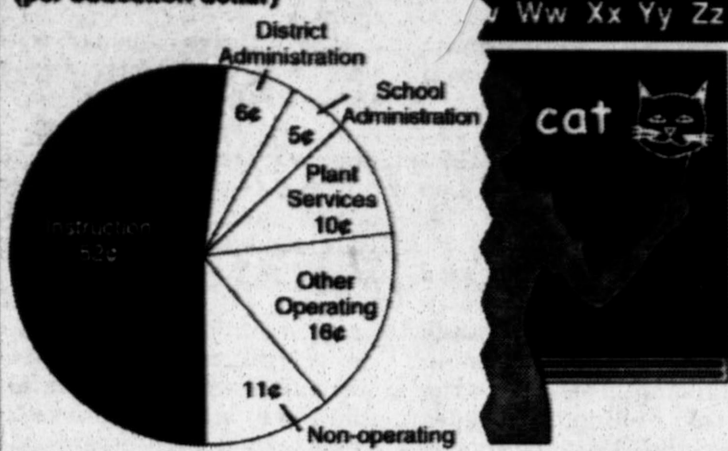

The Rockville, Md.-based jewelry show bought the trophy for $4,000 at a February auction. A television evangelist bought a public service award at that auction and vowed to melt it into the shape of a knife, the weapon used in the double slaying.

Pacino is making his Los Angeles theater debut at 59. He appears in Eugene O'Neill's "Hughie," running through July 25.

Court goof over a pronoun leads to another trial

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An unclear antecedent to a pronoun appears to have helped a man serving a life sentence for murder win a new trial.

Somewhere, a grammar teacher is crowing "I told you so."

Dario Rodriguez, 25, was convicted of murder in 1996 in the shooting death of Leo Rosas Jr., 26, on Aug. 14, 1994.

A three-judge panel of the Fourth Court of Appeals in San Antonio ruled this week that the trial court erred in not allowing the jury the option of finding Rodriguez guilty of the lesser charge of involuntary manslaughter.

Rosas was standing in the street with his wife, buying ice cream from a street vendor, when he was shot in the chest by one of a burst of 15 shots from a .22-caliber rifle.

During the trial, Rodriguez said his statement to the homicide investigator was that an acquaintance fired the rifle but that the acquaintance didn't mean to kill anyone.

The officer's report stated, "he did not mean to shoot the guy," and the officer testified that "he" referred to Rodriguez and not the acquaintance.

The officer's unclear reference was apparently enough to persuade the court.

In an opinion written by Justice Sarah B. Duncan, the officer's version "offers evidence that while Rodriguez intended to shoot, he did not intend to cause death."

"The officer's testimony, coupled with the forensic evidence indicating the shots were fired from a distance of 450 feet and the uncontroverted evidence establishing the fatal shot was fired at dusk, were sufficient to raise (the issue of) recklessness and therefore the lesser offense of involuntary manslaughter," Duncan added.

Bush uses his brother's political clout for money

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Texas Gov. George W. Bush took advantage of his younger brother's political clout Friday during a four-city swing through Florida expected to raise $2 million for his Republican presidential bid.

Florida Gov. Jeb Bush joined his older brother for a mid-day campaign stop at Metropolitan Ministries, a homeless center and charter school just north of downtown Tampa.

"For the first time in my life, I'm going to do what he tells me to do when I come to this state," George W. Bush said, adding that Jeb Bush would chair his state campaign. "I'm going to rely on my little brother to carry the state of Florida."

The brothers spent the day moving across the southern half of the state — visiting Fort Myers, Tampa, Fort Lauderdale and Miami.

After adding to his already substantial campaign war chest, the older Bush promised supporters a positive campaign.

"I'm here to tell you I'm running. I'm not turning back," he said. "I intend to be the next president of the United States."

The Bushes have a strong track record with Florida voters. Former President George Bush carried the state in 1988 and again in 1992. Jeb Bush, defeated in the closest governor's race in Florida history in 1994 against a strong incumbent, won in a landslide victory last November.

Jeb Bush said it's the right time for his older brother to be president. "Our country needs his kind of leadership, his big heart," he said.

The brothers spent two hours at an urban charter school and homeless shelter near downtown Tampa visiting with school children and employees.

"I really enjoyed it," said 12-year-old Wayne Faison, who spent nearly five minutes seated between the two, showing them his reading skills and computer ability. "These are kind of famous people and I had butterflies at first."

The brothers then sat down with about 40 of the elementary-age children and were asked questions ranging from their ages to their thoughts on gun control.

Emerson honored by TGCA

By Yuri Soto

Hereford Brand Sports Editor

Thirty years of coaching experience will be recognized July 7th in Austin when Martha Emerson accepts the Honor Coach Award given by the Texas Girls Coaches Association.

Emerson was one of three nominees and former track coaches to be chosen Honor Coach by the TGCA. Joann Sparks, who retired in 1994 from Longview, and Carole Adamcik, who retired from Lexington in 1990, were the others nominees for the award.

"I feel very honored and very humbled too by being selected by my fellow associates," Emerson said of her selection. "To me, there's no finer honor than being selected by your peers."

This achievement caps a career grown from humble beginnings.

Emerson's career started in 1961 as teacher and coach at Colorado City. She coached junior high volleyball during that three-year stint.

From there, Emerson moved on as junior high basketball and track coach at the Loraine School District.

She came to Hereford's La Plata Junior High in 1968, where she did not plan to be a coach.

"I came here originally to get a job and support a family," Emerson said. "I had no intention of coaching."

But more interesting things started happening for Emerson after moving from Loraine.

Emerson started directing the girls' intramural activities program at La Plata Junior High.

In 1973, Emerson began the girls' track program that sowed the seeds for today's success in the sport.

"When I started coaching, I didn't think terribly about whether I was going to win state championships," Emerson said. "When I started in Hereford, I was told one year in junior high that I was going to coach track. I didn't have the slightest idea what I was going to do."

But it didn't take long for Emerson to get adjusted to being a track and field coach. Her goal was to make her athletes feel good about their athletic abilities.

"I've always worked very hard in trying to coach every single girl," Emerson said. "I wanted every girl who wanted to be in athletics to get a chance to compete."

Emerson's success in coaching track and field included two team district championships, four team district second-place finishes, over 100 regional qualifiers, 28 state qualifiers, a state champion in the 3,200-meter run in 1991, a state third-place finisher in the 1,600, a four-time TGCA Track All-Star coach and three Academic All-State athletes.

But that's only in track and field. Emerson also was a coach of boys' and girls' cross country and was equally successful in sending athletes to regional and state competitions, as well as winning district championships.

"My philosophy is that every kid has a chance to find some success," Emerson said. "It was always rewarding to me to see an athlete that was not very good getting better and better and contributing something to the track team."

Emerson has seen women sports come a long way from her early days as a coach and as a high school athlete.

"Back in 1968, the year I started, we had a little bit of volleyball and a little bit of tennis in the high school only," Emerson said. "One reason I had such a successful intramural program in junior high was because girls were itching to play something. It didn't matter what it was, they just wanted to play something."

Emerson was the only female junior high coach back in those days. She was in charge of both La Plata's and Stanton's female extracurricular sports.

It wasn't until four years after she arrived in Hereford were the girls' basketball and track programs were established in the schools.

"Girls were so excited that they were ready to get into it," Emerson said. "I think all the girls needed was just a chance to find some success."

Girls now have an abundance of success stories as opportunities have grown throughout the years.

"Imagine how far girls athletics has come to in the past 50 years," Emerson said. "Today, girls are stronger, faster and have more sports to participate in."

Emerson was a high school basketball player in Clarksville, Ark., where she graduated from in 1949.

"We only had basketball and baseball for a few months during the year," Emerson said. "Now our athletes play year-round."

Despite all the athletic successes she experienced as a coach and athlete, Emerson knows the value of a good education.

"As far as I am concerned, education is the most important thing you can do. You come to school to get an education," Emerson said. "All my athletes have been competitive in academics."

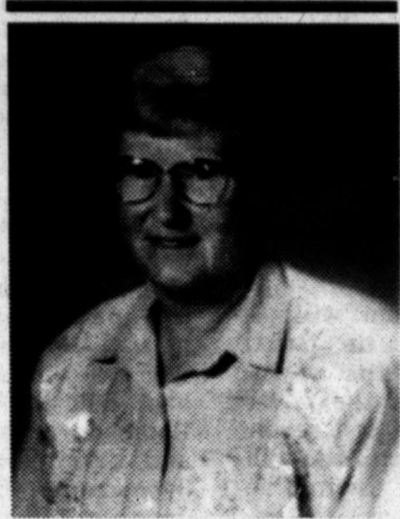

Emerson went to college in Clarksville at College of the Ozarks, graduating with a bachelor's in science in 1952. She received her master's degree in education from West Texas A&M in 1974.

"I came from a family where education was important," Emerson said. "It wasn't if you were going to college, but when are you going to college?"

Emerson's greatest accomplishment as a coach has been the satisfaction she gets when her athletes work hard, strive to reach a goal and getting to that goal.

"One time I had a girl right after we started our track program who ran the mile and finished sixth, contributed one point in the district meet and said 'I finally contributed something to the track team'," Emerson said. "Those are things to me that make coaching worthwhile."

Girls' athletics in Hereford enjoyed a steady climb in acclaim for many years. And many of those achievements very likely born upon the wings of a young educator who always believed every kid had a chance to find some success.

Braves pummel Clovis, 7-0

By Yuri Soto

Hereford Brand Sports Editor

The Hereford Braves baseball team rested over the past week and a half.

"We played so many games that we needed rest because we had a lot of tired arms," Braves coach Jon Dan Alaniz said. "The rest really helped out."

He was right. As it turned out, the respite was just what the doctor ordered.

With two outs in the second inning and the bases loaded, Andrew Ramirez broke a close game wide open with RBI single, helping the Hereford Braves to a 7-0 victory against the Clovis Wildcats at White-face Field.

The game was suspended after three and a half innings due to thunderstorms.

The Braves got an early 1-0 lead in the first inning when Andrew Ramirez scored ran to home plate before Richard Salinas was tagged out while caught between a throw between first and second base.

"For these guys being off a week and a half and not doing much, they came out playing," Alaniz said. "I think everybody's having fun now so that's the bottom line."

Ramirez would give the Braves a 3-0 lead in the second with his single that sent Brady Daniel and Andrew Villareal home.

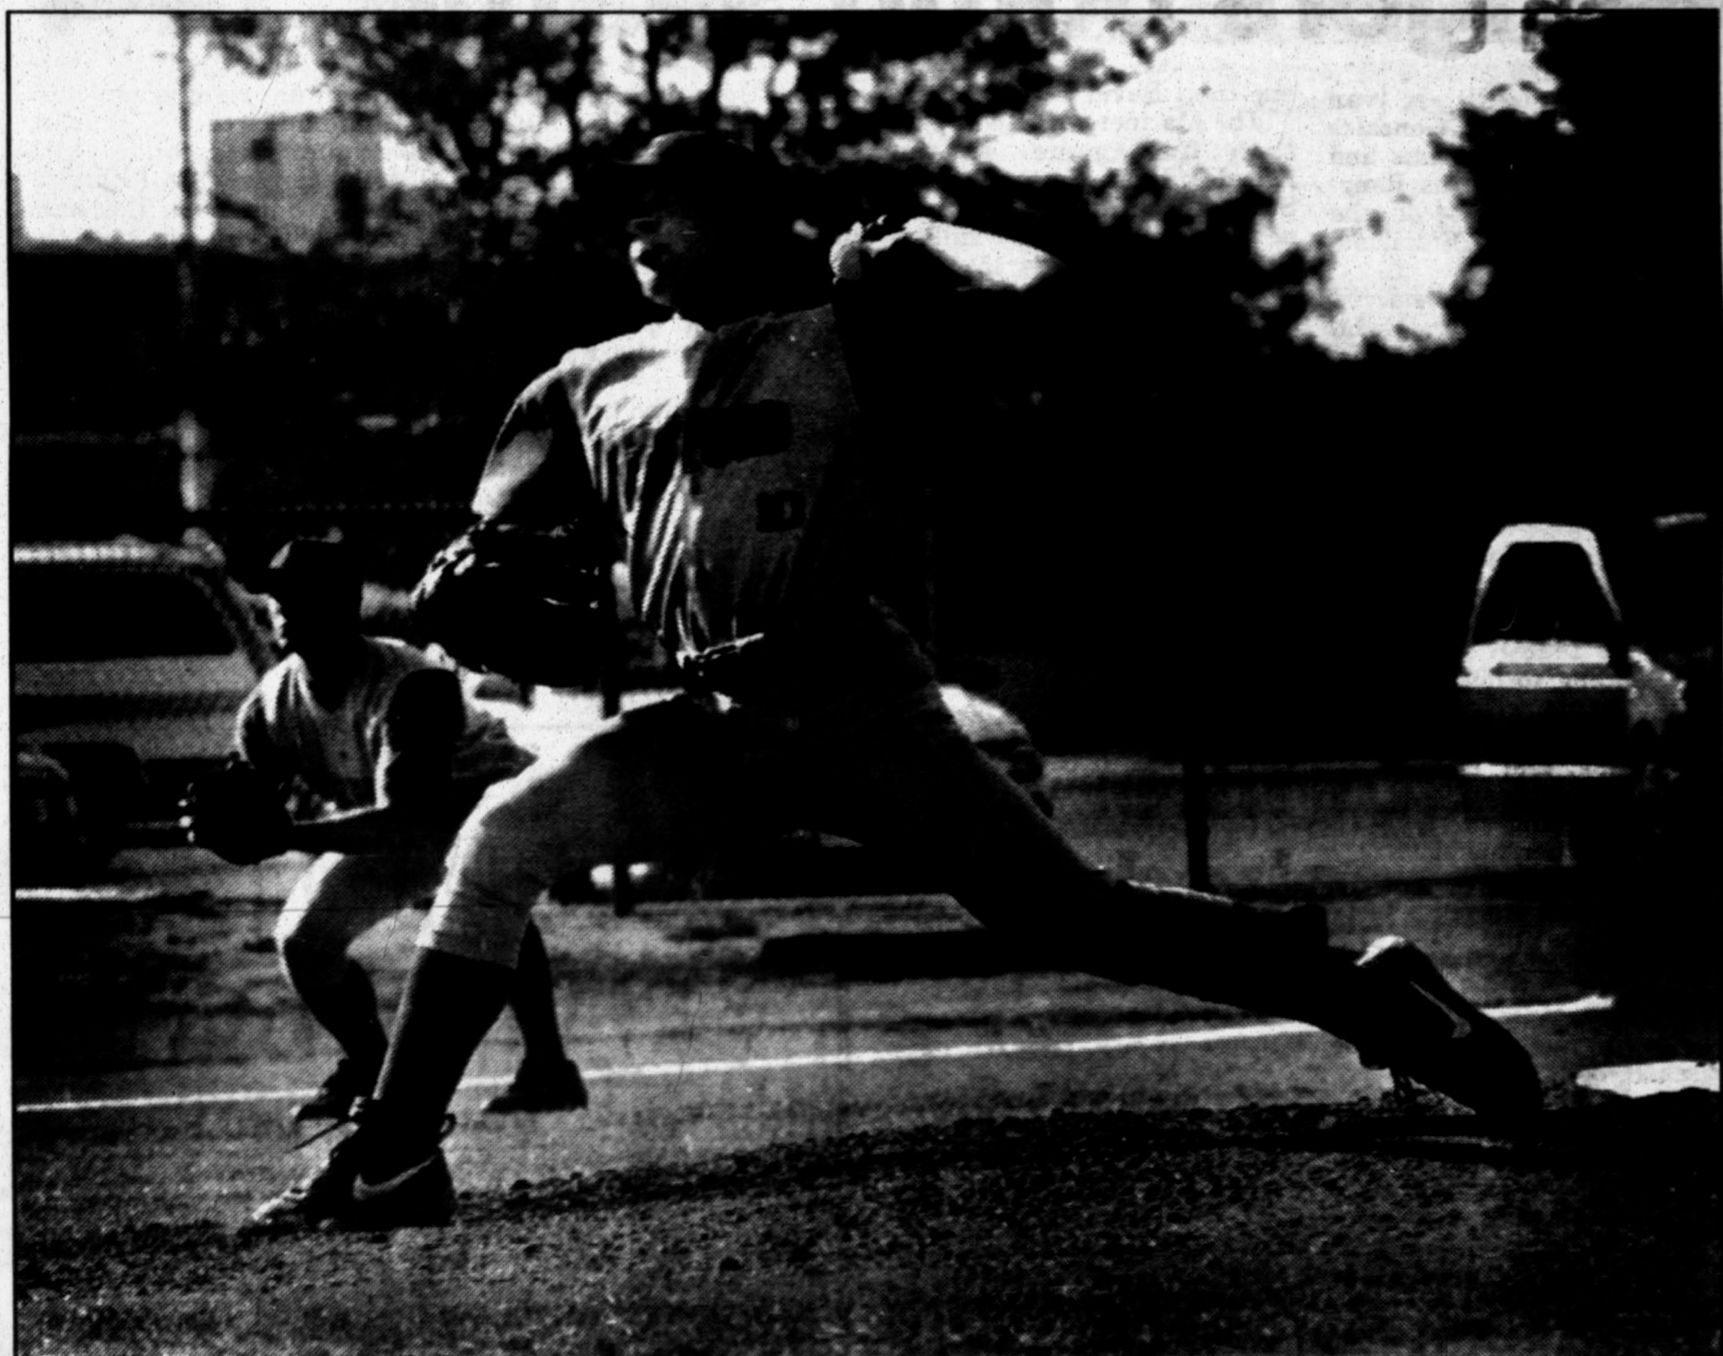

"I guess everybody was feeling good, I was feeling good," Ramirez said. "We just came out to have fun and play."

Toby Torres made it 4-0 on a home plate steal.

Clovis had a chance to score when it put runners at second and third base, but both Fraser and Josh Rowin struck out to end the top of the inning.

In the third, Torres added insurance runs with a single that scored Andrew Villareal and Brady Daniel for a 6-0 lead by Hereford. Torres scored the final run on an error by Clovis' Josh Rowin when the ball was thrown to the Braves' dugout.

The team returns to play in a doubleheader today against Amarillo Palo Duro.

Braves pitcher Eddie Lacey pitches in action against Randall. Lacey struck out four batters and allowed one hit in three innings of work in the Braves' 7-0 victory against the Clovis Wildcats. The games was ended in the fourth due to thunderstorms.

Spurs win NBA title in five games

NEW YORK (AP) — San Antonio's incredible run through the playoffs ended with a missed shot at the buzzer, a wild celebration in front of a stunned Madison Square Garden crowd and the Spurs' first NBA title.

San Antonio became the first of the old ABA teams that joined the league 23 years ago to win the championship, outlasting the New York Knicks in a thrilling finish for a 78-77 victory Friday night in Game 5.

The title wasn't assured until the Knicks failed to score on the game's final play, an inbound pass from Charlie Ward that found Latrell Sprewell too far under the basket.

His awkward shot missed, and the Spurs stormed the court, their wives, children and girlfriends soon joining them to celebrate.

"It's a journey that goes to show that hard work and persistence truly pays off," said David Robinson, who had been criticized during his 10-year career for not being able to lead his team to a title.

The victory, keyed by finals MVP Tim Duncan's 31 points, gave San Antonio a 15-2 record in this postseason, tying the second-best playoff run in NBA history.

And with the way the 23-year-old Duncan combined with Robinson to form a dominant Twin Towers, the Spurs figure to be contending for more titles in the years ahead.

For now, though, this first title of the post-Jordan era will be the one they savor.

"This is incredible. It feels so great out here," Duncan said. "We kept our focus and we pulled it out."

Said coach Gregg Popovich: "That's what it's all about for me, watching all the joy they felt when this was accomplished."

The final game of the series turned out to be the best of the bunch, with a back-and-forth fourth quarter featuring Sprewell, who scored 35 points, and Duncan doing most of the work for their teams.

The winning points, however, came from the shortest player on a team known for its height — 5-11 point guard Avery Johnson, who hit a wide-open corner jumper with 47 seconds left.

Sprewell, closely guarded, missed a jumper with 26 seconds left, and the Spurs ran much of the remaining time off the clock before Robinson missed a runner that didn't hit the rim. Johnson then fired the ball off the back of the rim from long range, avoiding a 24-second violation, and the Knicks had only 2.1 seconds to set up the final shot.

Ward's pass found Sprewell almost directly under the basket, and his momentum carried him to the wrong side of the backboard and prevented him from getting a decent shot.

"We were trying to get a layup, Charlie threw an excellent pass, I was just so far under the basket, and with their size I didn't have a shot," Sprewell said.

The fans at the Garden, after a moment of silence, gave the Spurs a polite ovation as the teammates swarmed each other near New York's basket.

"We fought hard," Sprewell said. "We didn't want them to win on our court, but they played well. They deserved it. They were the best team this year."

Duncan finished with seven points in the fourth quarter, 31 in all and nine rebounds. "I've got Tim and you don't. That's the difference," Popovich told Knicks coach Jeff Van Gundy in the locker room after the game.

Robinson, dismissed for so long as a softie because of his genteel manner and losing history, had 15 points and 12 rebounds.

Jaren Jackson added 11 points and Mario Elie 10 for the Spurs, whose season of success ended with 46 victories in their final 53 games and resounding playoff victories over the Timberwolves, Lakers, Trail Blazers and Knicks.

"I don't know if people thought it wouldn't be important for me, but I know how important and special it is," Duncan said. "I'll celebrate as much as I can before I go back to training camp."

As for New York, its quest for its first NBA championship since 1973 ended in disappointment. But at least the Knicks went down with a fight.

Sprewell scored 14 of his career playoff-high 35 points in the fourth quarter as the Knicks were unable to get anything offensively from Allan Houston or Larry Johnson.

Houston finished with 16 points, none in the fourth quarter, and Johnson also failed to score in the fourth and finished with just seven.

Combined with the absence of Patrick Ewing because of his torn Achilles' tendon, the Knicks simply did not have enough to keep pace with a San Antonio team that was too big and too good.

"I felt bad for Patrick," Robinson said. "But really that wasn't our concern. We had to get ourselves together."

"That team is very good, gave us as good a match as any team that played us in the playoffs. That team had some serious fire. They played great and worked their tails off. They don't have anything to hang their heads about."

Sprewell scored New York's first 10 points of the fourth quarter, including a 3-pointer for a 66-63 lead with nine minutes left, while Duncan scored the first six for San Antonio.

A three-point play by Marcus Camby off an assist from Sprewell put New York ahead 71-68 with 6:21 left. A dunk by Camby made it 73-70, and a 3-pointer by Mario Elie tied it at 75-all with 3:12 minutes left.

Sprewell hit from the line with 3:12 left to give New York a 77-75 lead, and Duncan made only one of two from the line 39 seconds later when he had a chance to tie it. The Knicks committed a 24-second violation with 1:53 left, Robinson missed a hook shot and Larry Johnson missed a 3-pointer before Avery Johnson hit from the corner to give the Spurs a 78-77 lead with 47 seconds left.

They turned out to be the final points of the game. The Knicks didn't score over the final 3:11.

"Nobody wanted to lose and it really showed," Sprewell said. "I'll bet it was a fun game to watch."

Jackson scored the final three points of the first half and the first five points of the second, then stole the ball from Sprewell, leading to two free throws by Elie that made it 47-38. The Knicks could have quit right there, but instead came right back with a 10-0 run that included five points from Sprewell and four from Houston for a 48-47 lead.

A jumper by Houston completed a 16-3 run and gave the Knicks a 54-50 lead with 2:29 left in the third, but the Spurs scored six of the final eight points of the period to take a 59-58 lead into the fourth.

Camby found himself in early foul trouble again, picking up two personals in the first 3 1/2 minutes, but the Knicks didn't let it hurt them. Sprewell scored on a drive off an offensive rebound to give New York a 21-15 lead, and it was 23-20 entering the second.

A 6-0 run — a jumper by Kurt Thomas, an inside move by Larry Johnson and a fast break layup by Houston — put the Knicks ahead 30-22.

The Spurs, behind 16 1/2-half points from Duncan, steadily chipped away and took a 40-38 lead into the locker room on Jackson's 3-pointer with six seconds left in the half.

Rangers bomb Seattle, 14-4

SEATTLE (AP) — Ivan Rodriguez and Juan Gonzalez each had two home runs and five RBIs as the Texas Rangers beat Seattle 14-4 in the opener of the final Kingdome series Friday night.

Lee Stevens also homered against the Mariners, who were without Ken Griffey Jr. because of a sinus infection. Rookie Ryan Glynn (1-2) got his first major league victory for the Rangers, who had a season-high five homers.

The AL West-leading Rangers won their third straight, while Seattle lost for the sixth time in seven games.

Seattle, which leads the majors with 132 homers, got one from David Segui.

The Mariners, who will play their final games at the Kingdome on Saturday and Sunday, will move to their new home, the $517-million Safeco Field, on July 15.

Glynn won in his sixth start in the majors after losing to the New York Yankees' David Cone and Boston's Pedro Martinez. Mike Munoz and Dan Patterson combined for 3 2/3 innings of hitless relief as the Mariners managed just six hits.

The Mariners took a 3-1 lead with two runs in the fifth off Glynn, but the Rangers came back to break the game open with a six-run sixth. Gonzalez hit a solo homer off starter Paul Abbott.

Stevens added a two-run homer off Frankie Rodriguez (2-2) for Texas, which had 18 hits.

Rodriguez, the Rangers' catcher, hit a three-run homer on the first pitch by Mel Bunch to give the Rangers a 7-3 lead.

Rodriguez, who had a team-record nine RBIs and two homers in Seattle on April 13, had a solo homer in the first and got his fifth RBI on a sacrifice fly in the eighth. Gonzalez followed with a two-run homer, his 21st, off Bunch. He also had a two-run single in the ninth.

In four games in the Kingdome this season, Rodriguez is 8-for-18 with four homers and 14 RBIs.

Segui's homer in the sixth knocked Glynn out of the game.

In the fifth, Russ Davis had an RBI groundout and Brian Hunter added a sacrifice fly for Seattle. In the Mariners' second, Dan Wilson grounded into a double play with the bases loaded for a run.

In 5 1/3 innings, Glynn allowed four runs on six hits and two walks. Abbott gave up three runs on five hits and three walks in five innings.

Courier hospitalized

Courier sent to hospital after five-set, 4 1/2-hour victory against Dutchman Schalken

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Jim Courier conjured up the pugnacious spirit of Jimmy Connors, pumping his fists, urging the clamorous crowd to its feet, grunting and grinding his way through 67 games in 4 1/2 hours of roasting heat.

On a day when gray-haired John McEnroe teamed in triumph with Steffi Graf, and 17-year-old Mirjana Lucic flexed her muscles at the expense of Monica Seles, it was Courier who again produced the most flat-out drama.

Courier's second straight five-setter, a 7-6 (7-2), 3-6, 3-6, 7-5, 13-11 test of endurance and will Friday against the Netherlands' Sjeng Schalken, left the 28-year-old American so drained he had to go to the hospital. He was given rehydration fluids through an intravenous drip, then released.

"That's Jim's strongest quality — his heart," Pete Sampras said. "He's going to lay it on the line and fight as hard as he can. Today was the perfect example."

In the 97-minute fifth set of one of the longest matches in Wimbledon's 113-year history, Courier had to cope with the near constant pressure of being behind a game on serve.

Schalken, his face a blotchy red and his legs rubbery, finally blinked at 11-11 when he double-faulted for the 14th and 15th times. He saved three break points, but not a fourth one set up by Courier launching himself toward the net to spear a backhand volley.

When Courier boomed a backhand return on the next point, and Schalken's backhand sailed long to make it 12-11, Courier motioned with his fists to the fans three times to rise to their feet and raise their voices even louder.

There were plenty of Americans among those fans, and they recognized the kind of showmanship Connors used to brandish. Cries of "C'mon, Jimbo," cascaded down on Courier, just as they used to on Connors.

Courier, who had saved one match point in the fourth set and another in the fifth, wasted none of the crowd's support now. He held at love and punched the air with clenched fists once again as the match ended after 4 hours, 24 minutes.

Courier's flagging career has been thoroughly rejuvenated on English soil this year. He scored riveting five-set victories over Tim Henman and Greg Rusedski to help an underdog U.S. Davis Cup team beat England on carpet at Birmingham in April. And in the second round at Wimbledon, he knocked off No. 12 Carlos Moya in five sets.

Now Courier, a four-time Grand Slam champion who hadn't reached the fourth round of a major since the 1997 Australian Open, will again face the sixth-seeded Henman, who beat Sebastian Grosjean 6-1, 6-7 (8-10), 6-3, 6-2.

"I want to win this match desperately," Henman said.

The winner won't have to worry about No. 3 Yevgeny Kafelnikov in the quarterfinals. Kafelnikov split the first two sets with Cedric Pioline, then retired after falling behind 1-0 in the third, saying he pulled his right hamstring. Kafelnikov won the first set 6-3. Pioline, the 1997 runner-up, took the second 6-4.

In a match pitting No. 1 against No. 595, Sampras beat qualifier Danny Sapsford 6-3, 6-4, 7-5.

Sapsford, a 30-year-old Englishman, said beforehand he would retire after the tournament. He hadn't won a match this year before Wimbledon but concluded his career by playing in the Court 1 stadium.

"The only time I felt slight nerves was the second I stepped foot on the court," Sapsford said. "There was a big roar, and the stadium seemed to spin a little bit."

Other seeded men to reach the round of 16 were No. 7 Mark Philippoussis, No. 9 Greg Rusedski, and No. 13 Karol Kucera.

A few days after 16-year-old Jelena Dokic bumped off the top-seeded woman, Martina Hingis, another teen titan, Lucie, sent the No. 4 Seles home, 7-6 (7-4), 7-6 (7-4).

Lucie, who has had the look of a potential Grand Slam champion since her pro debut in 1997, bounced and a grinned after putting away a volley to secure her biggest victory in a major tournament.

The 30-year-old Graf, seeded No. 2, beat Corina Morariu 6-1, 6-3, and she'll next play Belgian Kim Clijsters, a 16-year-old qualifier competing in her first Grand Slam tournament. Clijsters upset No. 12 Amanda Coetzer 6-2, 6-4.

Graf's big show came a few hours later. She teamed with the 40-year-old McEnroe, a three-time Wimbledon singles champion and five-time doubles champ, in a 6-2, 6-4 mixed doubles victory over Jeff Coetzee and Eva Melicharova.

"I'm not totally extinct yet," McEnroe said. "I always felt like, if I stepped on the court in a major, I wanted to feel like I had a chance to win the tournament. That's when I stopped playing. We do have a chance, I believe, to win (the mixed doubles title)."

"I was looking forward to this from the moment we decided to do it, and I tried not to stink."

Teen-agers Anna Kournikova and Venus Williams both won, and they'll meet in the fourth round.

Kournikova advanced when Ines Gorrochategui retired in the second set with a shoulder injury, trailing 7-5, 3-1. Williams beat Sarah Pitkowski 6-1, 6-1.

Williams said she's been able to scout Kournikova during the tournament.

"I'm at home and I'm watching the BBC, watching Wimbledon with everyone else, and they always put her match on," Williams said. "It seems like the British really love Anna, which is great."

Kournikova, seeded 17th, reached the semifinals in her only other appearance at Wimbledon in 1997. Williams, seeded sixth, made the quarterfinals last year.

Rules of GOLF

Editor's Note: Upon the suggestion of one of our regular readers, who finds great frustration in playing with those who fail to observe the rules sanctioned by both the United States Golf Association and The Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrews, Scotland, we've decided to publish the Rules of Golf each week in our summer sports pages when space permits.

Rule 2. Match Play

2-4. Concession of Next Stroke, Hole or Match

When the opponent's ball is at rest or is deemed to be at rest under Rule 16-2, the player may concede the opponent to have holed out with his next stroke and the ball may be removed by either side with a club or otherwise.

A player may concede a hole or a match at any time prior to the conclusion of the hole or the match.

Concession of a stroke, hole or match may not be declined or withdrawn.

Reds beat Astros, 10-7

HOUSTON (AP) — The race is heating up in the NL Central Division.

And for awhile Friday night, it looked like a serious beanball war, if not an all-out brawl, might break out in the Reds-Astros game.

Cooler heads ultimately prevailed as Cincinnati went on to win 10-7. But both teams were talking about head hunting after division-leading Houston's second straight loss to the Reds, who trail the Astros by only two games.

The ugliness between the two teams started in the second inning when Greg Vaughn, the Reds' leading slugger, was hit by Chris Holt's pitch. Vaughn said it was no accident.

"When they throw at my head with a 90-mph pitch, it makes me angry," Vaughn said. "It's part of the game. I don't have any problems with pitching inside."

"But when you miss with three pitches at my head and hit me with a fourth, I have a problem. It's a rough game. I know that. I understand pitching inside, getting knocked down and getting hit. But I have two kids and I don't like people throwing at my head.

"A good thing about this league is pitchers have to hit. If they do that, then you have to go after them."

Holt denied throwing at Vaughn, and Astros interim manager Matt Galante said, "It was just a couple of pitches inside. No big deal."

But Reds starter Brett Tomko retaliated by hitting Derek Bell, who had homered earlier, with a pitch in the sixth. Bell moved briefly like he was going to charge the mound, and yelled several things to Tomko before going to first.

After the game, Bell refused comment on the confrontation. But Tomko said he was just doing his job.

"I never try to hit anybody," he said. "I was just pitching inside. I didn't think much about it, and then I look around and he was halfway to the mound. Then I heard him yelling."

No one in the Astros dressing room was buying the "just pitching inside" claim.

"The game of baseball is supposed to be played a certain way," Jeff Bagwell said. "If you were watching the game, you know why (Bell being hit) happened."

"I don't think it will carry over. We'll start over the next game. It's just part of the game."

Michael Tucker went 3-for-4 with a home run and a triple and four RBI on his 28th birthday, and Eddie Taubensee had a two-run single.

Reds manager Jack McKeon didn't want the beanball dispute to detract from the play of his team, which has won five straight.

"You've got to give our guys credit," he said. "When we've gotten behind or have been tied, we've come back. Tucker had a great night and Taubensee came through. I just hope we keep adding to this. Hopefully we can get two more from them."

"It's always good to have good things happen on your birthday" Tucker said. "You want to have games like this against teams you're trailing."

Campaign 2000

Vice President Al Gore (left) expects to have raised between $15 million and $18 million by the end of the month, while his challenger former New Jersey Sen. Bill Bradley anticipates raising more than $10 million.

Bush has biggest warchest; Bradley closes in on Gore

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Gov. George W. Bush, out front in opinion polls, now is leading Vice President Al Gore and every other presidential candidate in the race to raise money, too.

Gore's only Democratic opponent, former New Jersey Sen. Bill Bradley, is closing in on the vice president.

Gore will have raised $15 million to $18 million by the end of June, a campaign aide said. Bradley, a former professional basketball player, is expected to have raised more than $10 million, according to a source close to the Bradley campaign, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Bush expects to report at least $20 million in fund raising on the next round of federal campaign finance reports, campaign spokesman David Beckwith said. Republican officials, including some close to Bush, said the fund-raising figure could be closer to $23 million.

"You can't do this without a very broad base of support," Beckwith said. "We have a network of volunteers who are helping us all over the country."

Texas governor gets some help from his brother

Bush's top Republican competitors each raised about $2.5 million over the past three months.

Arizona Sen. John McCain should lead the rest of the GOP pack. McCain has said he would raise $4.3 million, including $2.5 million during the most recent quarter. In addition, he has transferred $2 million from his Senate campaign treasury to his presidential effort.

Publisher Steve Forbes also is expected to raise $2.5 million in the second quarter, aides said. During the first quarter of 1999, Forbes contributed $694,000 of his own money but raised only $18,538.

Former American Red Cross President Elizabeth Dole has taken in more than $3 million so far, including the $686,253 she raised during the first three months of the year.

Clinton draws battle lines

"I think a promise made in an election year should be kept in the years when there are no elections."

President Clinton

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton, racing against the 2000 political calendar, promises "to be working right up to the very end" of his term.

But as he draws deep battle lines with Republicans on issues as diverse as gun control and class size with only 19 months left in his presidency, he acknowledges reality: "The closer you get to the election the more difficult it will be to pass anything." In his weekly radio address today, Clinton announced $1.2 billion in grants to hire 30,000 teachers for the new school year — a program approved by Congress with bipartisan support last year, when lawmakers were up for re-election.

This year, Clinton said, "unfortunately there are some in Congress who are backing away from their commitment to reduce class size" by financing a total of 100,000 new teachers.

"I think a promise made in an election year should be kept in the years when there are no elections," he said.

The president answered questions for 74 minutes Friday at a news conference meant to showcase his commitment to domestic issues now that Kosovo is no longer a preoccupation.

On Tuesday, he is due to unveil a proposed Medicare prescription drug benefit, which aides will work through the weekend to finalize.

He noted that he has been open since 1992 to the controversial idea of a means-testing requirement that links premium costs to beneficiaries' incomes for doctor visits and services. But The Washington Post reported today that Clinton has dropped that idea from the prescription plan in the face of strong opposition in Congress.

The president cracked jokes and laughed at times, but thumped the podium and wagged his finger at other moments. On questions about his moral leadership and what responsibility he personally bears for the Washington partisanship he so decried, he adopted a husky, profound tone of voice.

He said the "shattering effect" of the high school shooting at Littleton, Colo., troubled Americans more than the Monica Lewinsky scandal and impeachment ordeal ever did. "I think people are worried when they see ... the fabric of life still under great strain, in spite of the fact that we have quite a lot amount of prosperity," he said.

As for his legacy, "I'll be remembered when I'm gone," said the second U.S. president ever to be impeached.

He challenged what he characterized as a do-nothing GOP-run Congress to approve his proposals for Medicare, Social Security, gun control, education, child care and campaign finance.

The bride's nephew, Andrew Gallagher, son of Steve and Amanda Gallagher of Hereford, served as ring bearer.

The bride, given in marriage by her uncle, Steve Gallagher, wore a dress designed with a halter-style bodice of reembodyered lace embellished with sequins and pearls. The open-back style featured four satin strands adorned with flowers and pearls. Satin rosettes and streamers decorated the back, with a semi-cathedral train.

The two-tiered, fingertip length veil was attached to a rose and lace headpiece adorned with pearls.

She carried a bouquet of lilac and purple silk flowers, purple and lilac roses, baby's breath and white lace.

Her attendants wore satin tea length dresses with a halter back that crisscrossed. They carried bouquets of lilac and purple silk flowers trimmed with purple roses, baby's breath, and white lace streamers.

After the ceremony, the couple was honored with a reception at Westview Christian Church. Karissa Carbajal; Lori Deleon; Tara Green; Amanda Gallagher, aunt of the bride; Beth Haile; Lynra and Latonya Tackitt, cousins of the bride; Jennifer Martinez; and Ashley Kent, cousin of the bride, assisted with the reception.

The cake was a four-tiered, stair step vanilla cake garnished with purple roses and ivy. Candles and matching toast glasses accented the table.

After a wedding trip to San Antonio, the couple will reside in Amarillo.

The bride graduated from New Covenant Christian Academy in Amarillo in May 1999 as valedictorian of her class. She plans to attend Amarillo College next spring.

The groom graduated from Borger High School in 1994. He attended Frank Phillips College in Borger, where he received an associates degree in science and art.

Lezly Faye McWhorter and Cody Jim Welch, both of Lubbock, exchanged wedding vows on the evening of June 26 in First United Methodist Church of Hereford.

The bride is the daughter of Steve and Jenny McWhorter of Hereford.

The groom is the son of Bill and Juanette Welch of Midland.

Officiating at the ceremony was Rev. Jeremy Grant of the First Presbyterian Church of Hereford.

Natalie McWhorter, sister of the bride, served as maid of honor. Bridal attendants were Heather Johnson and Nicole McWhorter, cousins of the bride, Angie Pasternak and Michelle Wall.

Jason Lewis served as best man. Groomsmen were Nick Biggs, David Boes, Heath Jackson and Tim Tucker.

Blair Geismar, Dennis Ehler, Shawn Grandi, Brett Posey and Russell Van Husen seated the wedding guests.

Candle lighters were Hank McWhorter and Shelby Welch.

Wedding music was provided by Tommie Kay Stevens on piano.

Vocalists, Lynn Kriegshauser and Michael Brewer, performed "That's All I Ask of You" and "The Lord's Prayer."

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore an elegant designer gown of white satin. The bodice was beaded with pearls and featured an off-the-shoulder neckline. She wore a shoulder length tulle veil. She carried a hand-tied bouquet of white roses and white tulips with white French chiffon ribbons.

Bridal attendants wore tea-length sage green dresses with off-the-shoulder necklines. They carried bouquets of tightly wound clusters of pink roses tied with sage French chiffon ribbon.

After the ceremony, the couple was honored by a reception at the Hereford Country Club. Music was provided by Adam Treff.

Katie McWhorter, Emily McWhorter, Hannah McWhorter and Chelsea Welch assisted at the reception.

that the writers of Scripture found a walk on the labyrinth necessary to salvation.

"However, we are all aware that both in the ancient Hebrew Scriptures and in the Christian Testament, the writers make use of rich metaphors in order to express the truths about life that concrete language cannot portray."

Among those metaphors, she said, are journey, walking in the wilderness and "to walk in the way of the Lord."

"To walk in the way of someone is to follow them," she said. "To walk the labyrinth can be to follow the Holy Spirit, to follow Christ to God."

Probably the earliest Christian labyrinth was found in the fourth-century basilica Repartus in Algeria, she said. "The words 'Santa Eclesiaat' at the center confirm its Christian origin."

The effects of the labyrinth lie not in its specific design, but "will be shaped out of what you personally bring in experience, in faith, in confusion," she added.

Children frequently play hopscotch on it, she said.

"Find your own pace. Do what feels comfortable—some have crawled the path, others have danced it—there is no authoritative guide that defines the significance of the labyrinth or its parts. Use your own imagination as you search for God in your soul."

The Rev. Lauren Artress, canon at Grace Cathedral, is inviting people of all traditions from around the world to walk the labyrinth on Dec. 31, 1999, as part of a global celebration of the new millennium.

Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: It was courageous of you to run that letter from the Nevada prostitute. I wonder if your client newspapers caught flak for printing it.

I, too, am a "Nevada Sex Worker." I enjoy my job and am grateful that the state of Nevada, in its infinite wisdom, accepts the fact that there is a legitimate market for my skills. I work in a licensed brothel and entertain as many as 150 men in every three-week working period. (I then get one week off.)

It is an enormous help to have someone such as you acknowledge the need for legalization of the work we do. You really are a tremendous force for good in this world, Ann. — Marjorie in the West

Dear Marjorie: I appreciate your support and am pleased to tell you that many readers wrote to applaud my courage. The verdict was not unanimous, however. Keep reading for another point of view:

Ann Landers (you are NOT "dear" to me): That letter you printed from the Nevada prostitute was disgusting. I tore the whole page out of the newspaper so my children would not see it. I wonder how many papers canceled your contract because of it. I hope you will respond in print since others who think like I do would be pleased to see it. — A Mother of Four Teens in Weatherford, Okla.

Dear Mother of Four Teens:

College Report

Aaron Caraway of Hereford and Terri Beth Teaschner of Dimmitt were named to the Dean's Honor Roll for the spring 1999 semester at Abilene Christian University.

Caraway is the son of Bill and Becky Caraway and a 1997 graduate of Hereford High School. He is a sophomore biochemistry major at ACU.

Teaschner is the daughter of Terry and Ruby Teaschner and a 1995 graduate of Dimmitt High School. She is a senior environmental science major.

To make the Honor Roll, a student must complete at least 12 semester hours for grades and earn a 3.45 or higher grade point average.

Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene has announced that three Hereford residents have made the Honors List for the spring 1999 semester.

Rachel Wilks has made the HSU President's List, which honors students who completed 12 or more semester hours with a perfect grade point average of 4.0 for that semester.

Scott Burkhalter and Scott Shaw have made the HSU Dean's List, which honors students who completed 12 or more semester hours with a grade point average of 3.75 or better for that semester.

Sorry to disappoint you, but I did not receive any cancellations. What appears under my byline reflects life in the real world, and I plan to keep it that way. Keep reading for more:

From Fred in Los Angeles: I very much appreciated your column on prostitution. I am a disabled man who visits prostitutes regularly. We are known as "johns." In my youth, I attempted to establish relationships with women I met at work but had no success. From the age of 30 to the present (I am now in my 70s), I have enjoyed the company of many prostitutes who were extremely kind and generous. Not one ever mentioned my physical disability. I believe it is an outrage that a woman whose only crime is making men happy for a fee should go to jail. Something is wrong with a society that thinks that way.

Dear Fred: Your letter makes a lot of sense. Thanks for the support.

New York: I live in an exclusive apartment building on Park Avenue. There are some well-known celebrities here. Among the tenants is an attractive, middle-aged woman who has male callers of various ages from 10 in the morning until well past midnight. The doorman says she sells jewelry. She has a business card that says "Consultant." This X-rated bimbo has two garage spaces for her Mercedes and Jaguar. I can't get a second space for my Ford. Can you help?

Dear N.Y.: Sorry, I live in Chicago, and I don't have a vote. Here's the final word:

Tortola in the British Virgin Islands: The Dutch have always been way ahead of the rest of the world in maturity, good common sense and courage. Prostitution is legal in the Netherlands. The women are government inspected for "health problems" every month. The Netherlands has fewer cases of venereal disease than almost any country in the world. — A Global Traveler and Professor of Philosophy

Dear Global Traveler: You've given me the perfect example with which to close the subject. Thank you on behalf of all the people you helped me educate today.

Gem of the Day (Credit Wayne Gretzky, recently retired hockey superstar): You miss 100 percent of the shots you never make.

Museum Meanderings

By Troyce Hanna

Summer is the time for vacations, family reunions, swimming, baseball, picnics, and the time for a new year for the Deaf Smith County Historical Society and the Deaf Smith County Museum.

The annual meeting was held May 11 at Hereford County Club. Members of the board of directors elected to serve another three-year term were Cheryl Betzen, Jeri Bezner, Cindy Cole, Troyce Hanna, Sandy Josseland, Emily Knight, Betty Kriegshauser and Ella Marie Veigel.

Officers elected to serve for the ensuing year are Theresa Artho, president; Cindy Cole, vice president; Cheryl Betzen, secretary; and Peggy Hyer, treasurer.

Museum director, Paul Edwards, reported 2,444 visitors signed the register from 36 states and 6 foreign countries.

Activities at the museum have included three club meetings, a 50th wedding anniversary reception and seven weddings in the chapel.

The E.B. Black House has been busy with 11 weddings, 15 showers, eight parties, three meetings and four photograph settings.

The Trunk Programs of the museum have been well received. Valerie Artho has assembled various items related to the way of life of the Indians who lived in this area; the Pioneers who settled on the High Plains; and the Cowboy, how he dressed, worked and lived on the big ranches.

The items in each trunk can be handled and displayed as a hands-on experience. Arrangements are made through the schools with teachers who have classes related to these subjects.

Clubs and organizations of the community have also heard these programs at their meetings.

Anyone interested in scheduling a Trunk Program can contact the museum at 363-7070.

Valerie is working on a World War II Trunk Program. Memorabilia to portray the history of that era is needed. This would include such items as clothing, photos, uniforms, medals, patches, flags, military items, ration books and interesting stories. Anyone with one or more of these items who would like to share them for safe keeping is asked to consider letting the museum have them.

The garden committee chaired by Jan Furr has been really busy this past year. They have completed the Ruby K. Sears Memorial Garden located just north of the museum. A lot of work has been done at the E.B. Black House yard and garden, too.

Copies of the centennial cookbook, "Deaf Smith County Classics," are still for sale. They are available at Nails by Rhonda, Chamber of Commerce office, Wishes, Kid's Alley, Merle Norman Gift Garden and at the museum.

The oral history and video committee, chaired by Helen Rose, plans to record personal experiences of people who have lived through the depression era and World War II. Anyone willing to share their experiences is asked to call the museum.

A new buffalo bones exhibit is now on display in the museum courtesy of the Pantex Plant. Mason and Hanger geologist Mike Keck found the bones of a bison bull in the watershed of a playa lake on the Pantex grounds in Carson County in 1996. The bones are estimated to be 650 to 1,200 years old. The details of the dig and determination of age are explained in the exhibit which will be on display until Sept. 1.

Six members of the Deaf Smith County Historical Society met with the Panhandle Tourism Marketing Council to pursue the possibility of forming an XIT Association to promote the history and heritage of the XIT Ranch. Each county involved will contribute to a brochure to be used in promoting tours of the area.

Anyone interested in helping with a particular project at the museum or E.B. Black House is welcome to participate. Remember volunteering is what makes the world go round.

Memberships are due for renewal with the beginning of the new year. Dues are $5 per person and new members are always welcome. Life memberships are available for a one-time fee of $250.

Any cash contribution made to the Deaf Smith County Historical Society as a non-profit organization is tax deductible.

Why in the world is the Death Tax still alive?

VOTERS SAY IT'S BAD

77% would vote for a member of Congress who supported the repeal of the Estate Tax (which is really a Death Tax).¹

COMMUNITIES SAY IT'S BAD

The Death Tax is a leading cause of why family farms and businesses go under - leading to thousands of layoffs across America.²

EXPERTS SAY IT'S BAD

For every $1 taken from a family owned business to pay Estate Taxes, another $1 is wasted in order to prepare and comply with the tax.³

BUSINESSES SAY IT'S BAD

96% of manufacturing firms and 90% of minority-owned firms feel that the Estate Tax impedes their long-term business growth.⁴

CONGRESS SAYS IT'S BAD

The Joint Economic Committee found that the costs to collect the tax are roughly equivalent to what it takes in - a little over 1% of the federal budget.⁵

America gets it. You get it. Get your legislator to get it.

ing Center this fall. Upon their graduation next May, they hope to pastor or be associate pastors where the Lord calls them.

They have learned by experience what it is to stand in faith and believe in God for the best. All members of the community are invited to come hear this couple as they minister in words and music.

Military Muster

Marine Cpl. Flavio Cardenas, son of Flotio and Alba Cardenas of Hereford, recently participated in Fleet Week 1999 in New York, while assigned with 2nd Battalion, 6th Marines, 2nd Marine Division, Camp Lejeune, N.C.

Cardenas was one of 10,000 military service members who participated in the 12th annual celebration, one of the largest public salutes to the sea services. The six-day event showcased the city's appreciation for and honored the contributions and sacrifices made by men and women of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard.

A parade of 12 U.S. Navy and U.S. Coast Guard ships and one Royal Canadian Navy vessel initiated the festivities.

In addition, fly-overs conducted by various military aircraft accentuated the grant event.

Service members made appearances on popular television programs, participated in athletic events and food competitions, and attended professional baseball games in addition to experiencing the unique lifestyle the city had to offer.

Cardenas is a 1996 graduate of Hereford High School.

Marine Lance Cpl. Shama L. Hernandez, son of Nacho Hernandez and Dee Hernandez of Hereford, and Marine Lance Cpl. During the deployment, they participated in the exercise Eager Mace, an exercise conducted to improve the interoperability between Kuwait and U.S. military forces. They also participated in Edged Mallet, a bilateral training exercise with the Kenya military.

The men conducted port visits to Australia, Hawaii, Hong Kong, Kenya, Singapore and Thailand. While in port, they had the opportunity to be involved in multiple community relations projects.

Their unit is an expeditionary intervention force with the ability to rapidly organize for combat operations in virtually any environment. MEUs are composed of more than 2,000 personnel and are divided into an infantry battalion, an aircraft squadron, a support group and a command element. With the combination of these teams, Hernandez' unit supplies and sustains itself for either quick mission accomplishment or clearing the way for follow-on forces.

San Miguel, a 1996 graduate of Hereford High School, joined the Marine Corps in February 1997.

YOUR EYES

CONTACTS "STUCK"?

Before the optometrist signs off on a patient as a competent contact-lens wearer, the individual must know how to insert and remove lenses properly to avoid damage to the lenses or the eyes. In time, the wearer learns to do this easily and naturally.

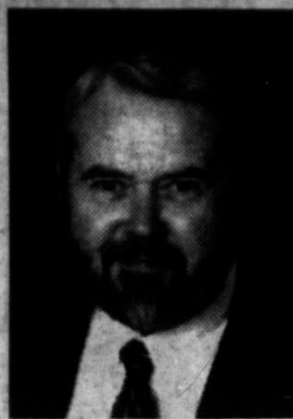

Occasionally, though, even for a wearer who has mastered these skills, a lens can get "stuck." It can be difficult to remove a contact lens. Sometimes the lens seems to be sticking to the cornea, or may have slipped onto the white of the eye, ending up in the wrong place above or below the cornea or in the corner.

Stop! Don't try to dig it out. Best yet: flush the eye with rewetting solution, wait a moment or two and try again. If the lens seems to have slipped off the cornea, roll the eyes and look to the extreme right or left; the lens should slip into place. Or look in the mirror, with a light to the side of the eye. Can you see the lens's shadow? In a pinch, call the optometrist for help.

MINDING YOUR OWN BUSINESS

Don Taylor

How employees steal from themselves

"Don, this is a true story," the letter read. "I want to tell you how one of my employees cost himself a $2,000 raise." Then in one page in clear, concise terms the writer of the letter - a savvy business owner, regular reader and friend - told me the story.

It made me think of early work years. Was I guilty of similar indiscretions? As I thought about the jobs I'd held, I remembered several situations where I'd made it easy for my bosses to keep me from being overpaid. No raise or promotion.

The letter I mentioned in the opening paragraph pointed out of the many ways employees can steal from their own success. As I considered turning this thought into a column, I talked with other business owners and managers. Between us we came up with several ways folks can limit their own salaries and success.

Self-limiting actions

- Arrive late and leave early. If you arrive five minutes late every morning and leave just 10 minutes early each evening you've saved yourself more than one and a half week's work each year. It's like getting eight free vacation days. Of course, your employer may view it as you missing more than 60 hours of work.
- Stretch your lunch hour and breaks. If you take an extra-long lunch just once a week - say just an extra 30 minutes - you avoid working another 25 hours each year. When the boss is gone is a great time.
- Spend a lot of phone time on personal business. Call your sister, your spouse and any friends you haven't talked to since yesterday. It does make your day go faster. Your boss probably won't even notice if you make your calls when he or she is on the phone, too.
- One business owner told me about an employee who would spend an hour on the phone calling all over town trying to find the cheapest price. This person often bragged to other employees how easy it was to find bargains. The owner lamented that the employee spent $10 dollars worth of "work" time to save a "personal" dollar.
- Do a little Internet surfing and sharpen up your computer game skills. This will speed up your workday. One company executive said he thought it was healthy for employees to spend time surfing the Internet during work hours. Want to guess what business this executive was in?

Some Books Worth Reading

Between the Covers

By Martha Russell

Is there a whoopee cushion or a snake that jumps out of a can at your house? No home should be without either one of these items. No, you don't have to rush out to Amarillo to get one. They are available to your children at your Deaf Smith County Library. If you don't have a child in your home, borrow one. Sign them up for the Summer Reading Club and help them win these and other amazing and wonderful prizes, just for reading!

You certainly don't want to do without a report on the Summer Reading Club activities. Last Tuesday we were privileged to have the Lambs of God, a local mime group, perform for our summer reading program participants. More than 250 children attended and, after the mime show, made clown face magnets. Lots of paint and glue! Staff and carpet survived well. This Tuesday at 10:00 a.m., children will learn to juggle and will make bean bags to use for practicing and perfecting the skill. In the coming weeks, children will make puppets and see a magic show. Open a Book! On With The Show!

A bit of library history for you. Way back when, Panhandle libraries got together and decided that it would be mutually helpful for each library to choose an area or two of concentration for collection development. Limited resources prohibits (and still do prohibit) each individual library from having an adequate bank of information on every topic that might be required for people in its service area. Working together would provide needed resources for everyone in the area, an otherwise impossible task.

At that time, the Deaf Smith County Home Demonstration Clubs met at the county library and were very active in supporting it. When the new building was built, the Home Demonstration Clubs assisted in equipping the kitchen. Their involvement resulted in an above average library collection of home and family living materials. So, it was natural for Deaf Smith County Library to commit to concentrating on enlarging and maintaining this section to be available to all the Panhandle. Accompanying the home and family living materials was a sizable collection of needlework, crafts, and sewing books and materials.

When I started working here, I noticed that we have tons of books on cross stitch, quilting, crafts, sewing, etc. and almost every day new ones come in. The shelves are getting crowded, I thought. Can't we stop now? I didn't realize that we are a major resource for this type of material, and that other libraries have their own specialties. I just thought that since Rebecca is very creative and does all this needle stuff, she likes these kinds of books and buys a bunch of them. What a system!

The Panhandle was the first area of the state to implement reciprocal borrowing. Not only can patrons from Dimmitt, Friona, Canyon or any other city in the Panhandle come to Hereford and check out Deaf Smith County Library's collection of sewing and family living books, but people in Perryton, Dalhart, and Childress can get these items on Interlibrary Loan.

Panhandle folks have always been pioneers. It's no different for library-type folks in the Panhandle. Harrington Library Consortium and Texas Panhandle Library System continue to do innovative and cooperative things that are recognized throughout the state as examples. Rebecca has found out as she has worked in Texas Library Association on a state level that systems in other areas are not so privileged as to have such wonderful cooperation, nor are they attempting such bold new things as we are. We're leading the way for the rest of the state. Your tax dollars at work, folks!

Speaking of needlecraft, etc., Beyond the Garden Gate is the newest addition to our cross stitch collection. It really has some beautiful and delicate flower patterns for lots of different occasions.

A little late for Father's Day, but no less relevant is Comrades: Brothers, Fathers, Heroes, Sons, Pals by Stephen E. Ambrose. This is a celebration of male friendships. Acclaimed historian Ambrose begins his examination with his brothers, his first and forever friends, and then takes us through some great male friendships of history - Dwight D. and Milton Eisenhower, Lewis and Clark, Crazy Horse and He Dog, the Custer brothers, and finally, his friendship with his dad.

In I'm a Stranger Here Myself, Bill Bryson recounts his sometimes disconcerting reunion with the land of his birth. After living in Britain for two decades, Bryson recently moved back to the United States with his English wife and four children. They were greeted by a new-and-improved America that boasts microwave pancakes, 24-hour dental floss hotlines, and the staunch conviction that ice is not a luxury item. The book is filled with hysterical scenes of one man's attempt to reacquaint himself with his own country, but it is also an extended, if at times bemused, love letter to the homeland he has returned to after twenty years away.

In new fiction, Charming Billy by Alice McDermott finds the family of Billy Lynch at his wake, remembering Billy who has just succeeded in drinking himself to death. No remembrance of Billy is complete without remembering that girl, that Irish girl.

On Long Island one summer years and years ago, Billy fell in love with a beautiful young Irish woman who had come to America to work for a wealthy family. Billy wanted to marry Eva, even gave her a ring. But she went back to Ireland to care for her relatives, promising to return. Then Dennis, Billy's cousin, had to break the news: Eva had died of pneumonia. Billy Lynch never got over it.

Billy began courting Maeve not long after, but for the rest of their lives together, he, she, and Dennis shared a hidden, twisted grief. It falls to Dennis' daughter to find the truth in their story, and she pushes deeper and deeper into Billy's past, she reveals how the consequences of Billy's love for Eva eventually bound them all together in ways they hardly could have imagined.

Harvest equipment, elevators wait for wheat fields to dry

Growers appreciate the rain, but need some dry heat

By Dianna F. Dandridge

Hereford Brand Staff Writer

Under a calm, blue summer sky, combines and grain trucks sit idly, waiting for fields to dry enough to complete harvest. Grain elevators wait, too, with ample storage space for the new crop.

Recent rains have area fields so wet heavy equipment mires down as it tries to cut the grain.

"I don't think people realize just how wet we are," said Joe Ward, who farms west of Hereford. "Up north, we may still have a few places under water, but around here most of it has soaked in."

Ward said some areas received less rain than others, and many farmers were able to get in the fields as early as Tuesday to start cutting wheat again.

"Others may have to wait a week or more before they can get in the fields," he said.

Ward did say the excess rain has been good for other businesses, such as shredders. "It's made the CRP really get growing. Now it needs to be cut. Shredders can get in the fields, even if the combines and trucks can't."

"Some farmers out near Bootleg, Adrian and Vega have already gotten into their fields," Joe Artho, manager of Hereford Grain Corp., said. "Thursday, we received about 480,000 bushels."

Artho said the wheat is ready. "Yield is excellent, but the protein is almost nonexistent."

Ernest Brown, a farmer near Bootleg, said most producers in his area are way behind in their cutting, with only about one-third of the acreage cut.

"Right now we're getting on with it," Brown said. "But we just got out of a field that was too muddy to cut. Other fields are still a little green because of the cooler weather."

Like many other local wheat growers, Brown hopes the warm dry weather will continue for another few days. He wants to be finished cutting by next week.

The wet weather, which prevents machinery from cutting, also leads to other problems.

The biggest concern, according to wheat experts, is the likelihood of wheat kernels cracking if not harvested when ready.

Also, dry stalks break easily, causing the wheat to fall to the ground, making it worthless for anything other than animal feed.

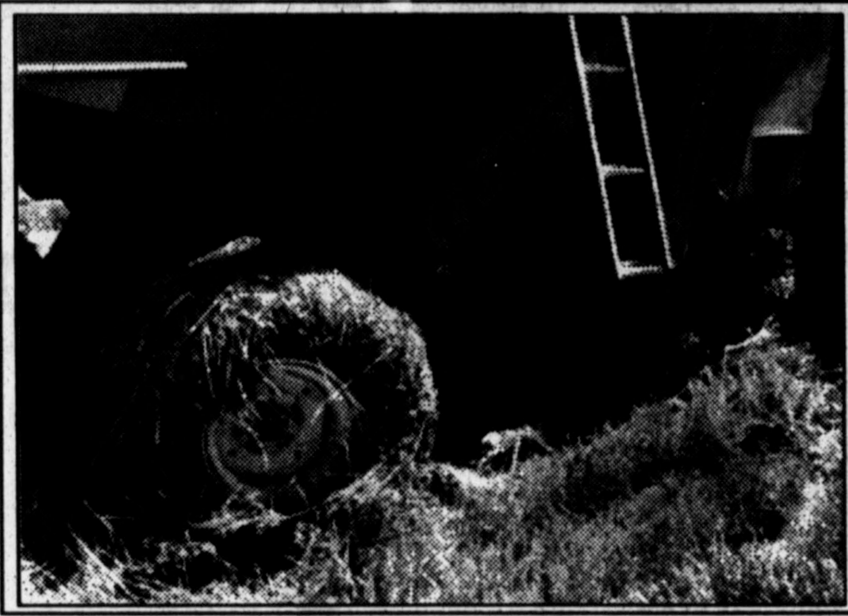

Even with the unusual wet spring and early summer, Artho says he hasn't heard of any fields being beaten down by the excess moisture.

"The biggest thing is just not getting beat down before the farmers can get back in the fields," he said.

Unlike elevators in Kansas, Nebraska and South Dakota that report no space to hold this year's crops, Hereford Grain is ready to handle anything that comes in. "We're in real good shape," Artho said. "The feedyards use the feed grains as fast as we get them and that leaves plenty of room for the wheat this time of year." He continued to say last year's crop has almost all

Mired in mud

The weight of this antique combine on Joe Ward's wheat field on west Harrison Highway was just too much. The combine gouged deep ruts with both the front and rear wheels. Between the heavy clay soil and the wheat stubble preventing the soil from drying quickly, Ward expects it to be at least next week before he can move the combine and continue to harvest in the field. Ward takes advantage of the wet fields to get the lighter weight shredders in and cut the CRP which has benefitted greatly from the recent rains.

Northern wheat producers have another problem - many custom cutters have moved on, leaving fields uncut. They face the problem of being able to get it cut before it rots, if the fields don't start to dry soon.

Mechanical harvester top priority for citrus growers

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — Little has changed over the past few hundred years in how oranges are picked. Human workers climb up a ladder, handpick the fruit into bags and later dump them into bins.

All that may be about to change.

The race is on to develop a machine that can pick the fruit off of Florida's largest orange trees. Finding a mechanical harvester is a top priority for the Florida Department of Citrus.

Growers say the labor pool of human pickers is shrinking from the federal government's crackdown on illegal immigrants, costing the industry $54 million during the season that ends this month.

Citrus officials worry that without enough pickers, growers will be forced to leave oranges on trees. They also believe that mechanical harvesting will lower costs for Florida growers and keep them competitive with Brazil, the world's largest orange producer.

The citrus department has earmarked $2.5 million in next year's budget for research and development.

"Getting a fruit harvester is priority No. 1," said Joseph Marshburn, a member of the Florida Citrus Commission, the governing board that sets policy in Florida's citrus industry. "We want something that works, is fast and commercial."

Farmworker advocates dispute growers' claims that there is a labor shortage and view efforts to develop a mechanical harvester as a way for growers to avoid paying competitive wages.

At least half of Florida's orange pickers are undocumented, illegal workers. Growers are unwilling to pay higher wages to career pickers, traditionally middle-aged black Americans, now that their source of cheap labor is drying up, said Greg Schell, an attorney for the Migrant Farmworkers Justice Project in Belle Glade.

"They have determined it would be cheaper to use a mechanical harvester," he said.

Mechanical harvesting is just in its infancy. But some citrus officials believe 75 percent of Florida's processed orange crop could be harvested by machine in 10 years. That is a considerable portion of the Florida orange crop considering almost all of the state's oranges are processed, or used for juice.

Oranges are the state's biggest crop, representing $1.1 billion of Florida's $6.2 billion in agricultural cash receipts.

A mechanical harvester would only be used on oranges headed for the juice processor. Oranges intended for table fruit would still be picked by hand to prevent bruising.

In the United States, mechanical harvesters would likely only be used in Florida. Most of the oranges produced in Arizona, California and Texas are sold as table fruit. Grapefruit would still be picked by hand since most of Florida's grapefruit crop is used as table fruit.

For years farmers have used mechanical harvesters for crops such as cherries, olives and apples. But oranges have proved tougher to pick by machine because their stems are thicker than other fruit, said Galen Brown, the state citrus department's harvesting program administrator.

Six types of mechanical harvesters are currently being developed under the aegis of the citrus department.

So far, only one type, known as the "trunk, shake and catch" model, is available for commercial use. This past season those machines were used to harvest only 5,000 acres of Florida's 658,000 acres of orange groves.

The "trunk, shake and catch" machines comes in two parts. On one side of a tree, a mechanical "shaker" on wheels grasps the trunk of the tree with two rubber donut-like hands and shakes the tree. On the other side is a long, mobile conveyor belt that catches the oranges and moves them into a bin. The bin is periodically dumped into a large truck. The shaker and catcher move along a grove row in tandem. The machines can only be used on trees with trunks 18 inches or larger.

Other mechanical harvesters being developed look like something from a sci-fi movie.

The "canopy area shake and catch" model, from afar, looks like toothbrush bristles attached to a crane. The "continuous travel canopy shake and catch" model has porcupine-like spikes that move through trees like a paint rollerbrush.

A few growers that have decided to try mechanical harvesting are taking a wait-and-see attitude and are leasing instead of buying the machines, which can cost anywhere from $100,000 to $300,000.

The various machines under development will reduce a grower's harvesting costs anywhere from 10 percent to 75 percent.

Writing Want Ads that really sell!

Unsure how to write a Classified Ad that will get results? Follow these pointers and you'll soon have an empty space in your storage room and cash in your pocket.

For starters, look at ads which offer the same item/products. Get a sense of going rates and ideas for how to make your ad stand out. Once you're ready to write, begin with exactly what you're selling: "Dining room set, maple, six chairs." Then, remember these hints:

- Give the price. A newspaper consultant says 70 percent of classified readers won't respond to an ad with no price.
- Use key words to describe what you're selling. The key words for a car are make, model, year, body style, color, mileage and price. If it's a house, key words are location, type of construction, number of bedrooms and baths, and condition.
- Don't use abbreviations. It's tempting to abbreviate and save money if ads are billed by the line. Brand ads are billed by the words, so spell them out so readers won't be confused trying to figure out abbreviations.
- Don't be misleading. Think accurate and factual when you write. Be sure to include a phone number and the best times to reach you.

AMC documentary series is gem of an idea

By Suzanne Gill
©TVData Features Syndicate

The premise of Backstory, premiering Sunday, June 27, on American Movie Classics, is deceptively straightforward: Tell the story of the making of a special movie. The first Backstory, "Roman Holiday," is the pilot for a possible new series on the cable channel. Its narrator is the distinguished actor Donald Sutherland, whose participation is the first evidence of the show's quality.

A decision on the series' future will be based in part on the reaction of viewers to this initial episode — though, honestly, the only real question seems to be why someone hasn't produced a library of documentaries like this before.

Carolyn Jacobs is the writer, director and executive producer of the half-hour program, which is followed by a screening of the film in question, William Wyler's charming 1953 romantic comedy Roman Holiday, starring Audrey Hepburn, Gregory Peck and Eddie Albert.

Jacobs has chosen a wonderful subject for her first Backstory. To begin with, Roman Holiday was filmed on location in Rome — a rarity in film at the time. (Consider that, just 14 years earlier, Gone With the Wind was produced entirely on a Hollywood back lot.)

A mere eight years before Wyler and his crew arrived to film the romantic tale of a princess in love with a commoner, Rome was an Axis capital, and the only Americans around were enemy troops. Here was a film that veterans of that time could see with their wives. It was a vicarious honeymoon at the theater.

In addition, Roman Holiday marked the American screen debut of the luminous Hepburn. She won the 1954 best actress Oscar for her performance and went on to become a leading box office attraction in such films as Sabrina, Funny Face, Breakfast at Tiffany's and My Fair Lady.

But this behind-the-scenes story isn't all spun sugar.

Roman Holiday had its genesis in the period of the Hollywood blacklist and Sen. Joseph McCarthy's communist witch hunt.

The film's true author, Dalton Trumbo (Spartacus, Exodus), wrote the screenplay to support his family while in prison for refusing to cooperate when a congressional committee asked him to name friends who may have been communist sympathizers. Trumbo couldn't sell the script under his own name, so a friend, Ian McLellan Hunter, "fronted" for him. Hunter's name remains on the film to this day.

"I didn't think my father had done anything wrong," says Christopher Trumbo, who was a boy at the time.

"It's the duty of a citizen to stand up to an oppressive government. To have behaved other than he did would have been contrary to his very being," he adds.

Also interviewed are Wyler's daughter Catherine, assistant cameraman Peter Poor and several of the film's stars. Albert is sweetly eloquent in his reminiscences, summing it all up in the words, "It was a pity to take the money, really."

There's no hint of tabloid expose in Backstory, no impulse to "dish" on an honorable artistic achievement — though the documentary does offer an honest insight into the disintegration of Peck's marriage during the filming.

At a time when television strains and contorts itself in an effort to keep the viewer's interest, here is an idea rich in possibilities and elegant in its simplicity.

Dressed in Edith Head's Oscar-winning costumes, Audrey Hepburn won the 1954 Academy Award for best actress playing Princess Ann, the royal swept off her feet by American Joe Bradley (Gregory Peck) in Roman Holiday. The film is the subject of the first Backstory documentary, airing Sunday on American Movie Classics.

HOROSCOPES

★ ★ June 27-July 3 ★ ★

ARIES – March 21/April 20
You have to look out for yourself this week, Aries. There's a lot going on, and the only way to make any progress is to be concerned about No. 1. While it may seem selfish, you will get a lot accomplished this way. Your superiors will be impressed with your efforts.

TAURUS – April 21/May 21
While you want to help a friend in need this week, Taurus, it's not in your best interest to do so. Assisting him or her only will get you into a sticky situation. A loved one needs your advice about a family matter. Be honest with him or her. Leo plays an important role on Thursday.

GEMINI – May 22/June 21
Turn to a loved one when you're feeling down early in the week. He or she always has been able to make you feel better, and this time will be no exception. An acquaintance offers you a potentially lucrative deal on Friday. Look at all of the pros and cons before responding. Remember, you can't get something for nothing.

CANCER – June 22/July 22
Don't be too critical of yourself when you make an honest mistake at work. Anyone could have done the same thing. Just work to correct the problem. Things will be back to normal in a few days. That special someone drops by unexpectedly. Listen to what he or she has to say; it's important.

LEO – July 23/August 23
Don't let work take over your life this week. While what you do from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. is important, it isn't the only thing you should focus on. Spend time with those closest to you. You haven't done that in a while, and they have a lot to tell you. Scorpio plays a key role on Wednesday.

VIRGO – Aug 24/Sept 22
Several people are depending on you this week, Virgo. Don't let them down. Stay focused on the tasks at hand, and work diligently. Your efforts will be rewarded. A good friend asks for your advice about a relationship. Be honest with him or her — even if your opinion won't be appreciated.

LIBRA – Sept 23/Oct 23
Don't be taken in by a co-worker's foolish prank. Keep your eyes and ears open, and just try to be logical. Then, you won't fall for his or her game. That special someone has an interesting proposition for you. Look at it from all angles, instead of just accepting immediately. Is this really as good as it sounds? It probably isn't.

SCORPIO – Oct 24/Nov 22
Try not to be too demanding of a loved one's time. He or she has a lot to do and can't spend every minute with you. However, don't take this to mean that you two are growing apart, because that's certainly not the case. He or she is just busy right now. Aquarius plays an important role late in the week.

SAGITTARIUS – Nov 23/Dec 21
Don't back down from an argument with an acquaintance. Stand your ground, because you know that you are right. Those around you definitely support your position. A close friend introduces you to someone interesting. While you're intrigued, don't get involved with him or her. This isn't the one for you.

CAPRICORN – Dec 22/Jan 20
This week, you're presented with the perfect opportunity to advance your career. Don't pass it up. Work diligently, and you're sure to make a lot of progress. A loved one needs your help with a family problem. While you don't want to get involved, you have no choice. Just do what you can.

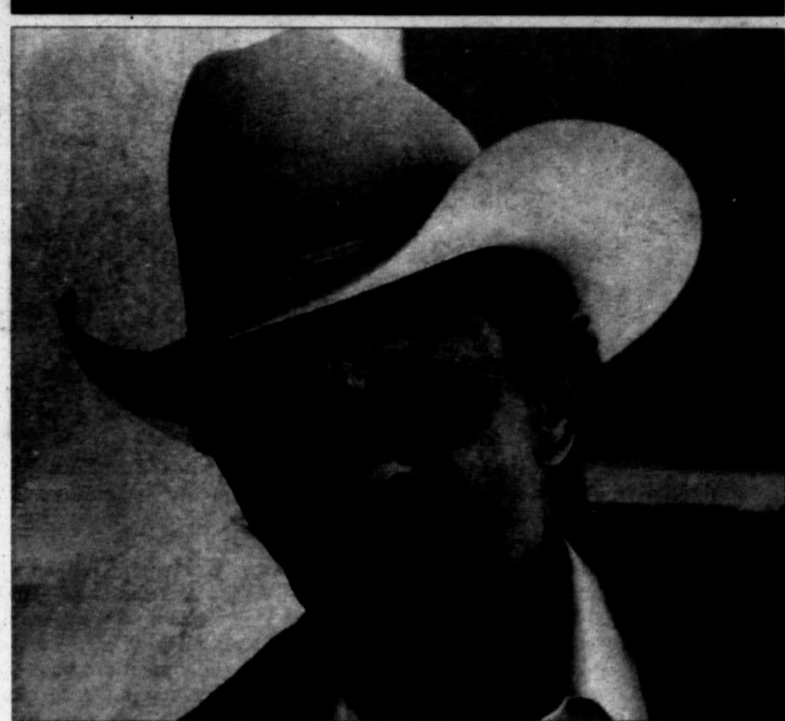

AQUARIUS – Jan 21/Feb 18
You don't seem to have a minute to yourself this week, Aquarius. Everyone wants something from you, and you just can't say no. Don't get frustrated. Try to help everyone; they'll appreciate your efforts. Things will calm down during the weekend.

PISCES – Feb 19/March 20
While you're normally very laid-back, you get excited this week. You see something that you really want, and you go after it. Don't worry — there's nothing wrong with that. In fact, those closest to you will be impressed with your actions.

Hot dog vendor Gary Zemola, a.k.a. "The Super Duper Weenie Man," and his stand are profiled in A Hot Dog Program, airing Wednesday on PBS (check local listings).

PBS serves up A Hot Dog Program with the works

Whether it's referred to as a "foot long," "red hot," "wiener," "frankfurter" or just plain "dog," the equation is primarily the same: one steaming hot dog in a toasty bun. After that, the similarities end.

A Hot Dog Program, airing Wednesday, June 30, on PBS (check local listings), is producer-writer-narrator Rick Sebak's look at the nation's unique love affair with those minisauages on a bun and the people who sell them.

From the history of the hot dog to its processing, Sebak offers a whirlwind tour of U.S. establishments specializing in selling franks.

"I love the fact that these are family-owned businesses that are passed on from one generation to the next," Sebak says. "I just want to celebrate them and let people know they're still there."

Whether they're boiled, broiled or fried, hot dog stands heap on everything from the standard ketchup and mustard to such eyebrow-raising choices as pimento cheese, coleslaw, jalapenos and sliced tomatoes. Of course, it depends where you order.

"Basically hot dogs are different in different parts of the country," Sebak says. "Some places hate relish. Some places hate ketchup. Even sauerkraut isn't a constant. I love the fact they're sort of quirky, fun and distinct."

Each stand has its own sales methods. One Alaskan vendor sells reindeer dogs at the start of the Iditarod, while a California business offers free legal advice in addition to what's on the menu. A mainstay of New York's Coney Island sponsors a hot dog-eating competition every Fourth of July, and a Las Vegas casino sells half-pound foot longs.

Sebak witnessed how seriously people take their hot dogs, especially when comparing them to a rival city's franks.

"Someone in New York is not going to admit that a Chicago dog has any positive qualities," he says. "(Regionalism) is a wonderful thing."

"If the show makes people any more appreciative of something as ordinary as a hot dog shop, I'll be happy," he says. "These places are great, and we have to cherish them."

TV PIPELINE

By Taylor Michaels
©TVData Features Syndicate

Q: What can you tell me about Sally Wheeler from Two of a Kind? I think she is very pretty and funny. Is she married? —Elizabeth Vanchina, Roseville, Mich.

A: Like her Kind co-star Christopher Sieber, Wheeler is a theater veteran making her TV series debut in the ABC kidcom, although the actress did have bit parts on such soaps as As the World Turns, Guiding Light and Another World. Her stage credits include As You Like It, Fiddler on the Roof and Detective Story. A native of Winter Haven, Fla., she also plays the violin and is involved in literacy programs for both children and adults. An ABC publicist says Wheeler is "single but engaged."

Incidentally, Two of a Kind isn't on the network's fall schedule.

Q: Whatever happened to actor Richard Jaeckel? —Diane Hall, Appomattox, Va.

A: Jaeckel, who was nominated for an Oscar for his work in 1971's Sometimes a Great Notion, died of cancer in June 1997. He was 70.

Q: How many of The Golden Girls won Emmys? —Barb Schubarth, Colorado Springs, Colo.

A: For their work on this hit sitcom, Beatrice Arthur, Rue McClanahan, Betty White and Estelle Getty all won Emmys.

Q: What is Charlie Sheen doing now? —L.J., Sheboygan, Wis.

A: Sheen — who now is going by "Charles," if you please — stars with Joe Pantoliano (EZ Streets) in the ABC sitcom Sugar Hill, a planned midseason replacement.

Q: Regarding an earlier answer you gave about William R. Moses: Didn't he also co-star on the newer Perry Mason series replacing Paul Drake, and isn't Paul Drake Moses' father in real life? —Catherine Griebel, Sioux Falls, S.D.

Sally Wheeler

A: You're close, Catherine. Yes, Moses co-starred in the recurring role of Ken Malansky in several Perry Mason TV movies, but it is William Katt, who played Paul Drake Jr. in some of the TV movies as well, who has family ties to a Perry Mason original cast member. Katt's mother is Barbara Hale (faithful secretary Della Street).

Q: Didn't the man who always hides behind the fence on Home Improvement once play on Ryan's Hope? —Carol Boldin, Sanger, Texas.

A: Yes, Earl Hindman of Home Improvement created the role of Bob Reid on that ABC soap opera.

Q: Please settle a bet. I say that Orson Bean is married to his Dr. Quinn, Medicine Woman castmate Alley Mills, who used to be on The Wonder Years. My mother insists that I am wrong. Who wins? —Melissa Miller, Sterling Heights, Mich.

A: You do. Bean, 70, and Mills, 48, have been married since 1992.

SOAP TALK

AW alum Dano cleans up with ABC soaps

By Candace Havens
©TVData Features Syndicate

It didn't take popular daytime diva Linda Dano (Felicia, Another World) long to find a new job. The actress returns to One Life to Live on Monday, June 28, as Rae Cummings and will eventually appear on all four ABC soaps.

Rae, who is now a relationship expert, returns to Llanview to attend to a mysterious piece of unfinished business.

"Viewers are sure to connect with the wildly unpredictable Rae," says ABC Daytime's president, Angela Shapiro.

Dano, who was heartbroken over the demise of AW, says, "I had to move on. I have my mother to look after, and I need to work."

The actress is also honing her talk show skills and will become a more frequent contributor on ABC's The View.

In another surprising move, Procter & Gamble ended executive producer Felicia Minei Behr's reign on As the World Turns. She was replaced by Christopher Goutman, who maintained the same position with Another World.

"I've enjoyed the challenges of turning this show around," Minei Behr says. "When I came aboard three years ago, the show was usually ranked sixth or lower in the daytime lineup."

"I'm proud of my many accomplishments, including bringing the show's household ranking up to three, as well as the refined storytelling, creative casting choices and the improved production values that I've made."

"I would like to extend my heartfelt appreciation to Felicia for the considerable job she has done in steering ATWT back on track and leaving it in a stronger position," says Mary Alice Dwyer-Dobbin, executive in charge of production for Procter & Gamble.

There's no word yet on what Minei Behr, who took the job shortly after being removed from the same position on All My Children, expects to do next.

SENIOR SCENE

Supplement to the Hereford Brand

Margie's Notes

By Margie Daniels, HSCA Executive Director

As all of you know we are in a time of change! Some is for the good and some not, but of course most of us don't like change! As we get older it is hard to cope with and of course it causes confusion. Most of you can tell by now that I'm going to tell you about another change coming soon.

In fact, this is the last time you will receive the Senior Scene as such. The Hereford Brand has been very good to us printing our paper since 1990 and we really appreciate them. Due to rising costs and declining revenues, it has become necessary to change our format for the monthly Scene. We are going to work on a full size sheet in the Brand on the fourth Sunday of the month. The items always printed will be in it - the menu and activity sheets, memorials, visitors and my notes. Be sure and watch for it. We will not be getting the extra copies as before, so you will want to be a subscriber to the Brand or buy the Sunday copy.

Another change, and I hope for the good, is refurbishing our facility. We want to keep it in good shape both in looks and repair, so that means new paint and carpet. I know it will be an inconvenience for you but hope you can have a good time watching the transformation. This is your Senior Center and I know you don't want it to get run down. We have to have all areas painted by August 6, so Jim Rich at Webster Carpets can start installing the tile and carpet. In the meantime, we need to get the walls ready for painting. Volunteers Lester Wagner and Hubert Saur removed a lot of wall paper, base cover, trim and light covers. More volunteers are needed. Virgil Maxwell is floating areas for painting. Daniel Construction will be donating all labor for the painting with HSCA furnishing the paint. We are looking forward to the finished project.

We had a wonderful time at our monthly dance and game night this month. We had to cancel for seven months because of the damage to the floor and we really enjoyed the new floor. It is beautiful. Come July 3 for the next night of good music and games.

REMEMBER Saturday, July 17 is the City Wide Garage Sale! Our Thrift Store will be open. The store is an important part of our funding sources. It helps with the operation of the Senior Center. We -- this includes all members, board of directors and staff -- appreciate all donations made to the store. We could not have the Thrift Store without all the donations and the work put into it. Thanks to all of you!

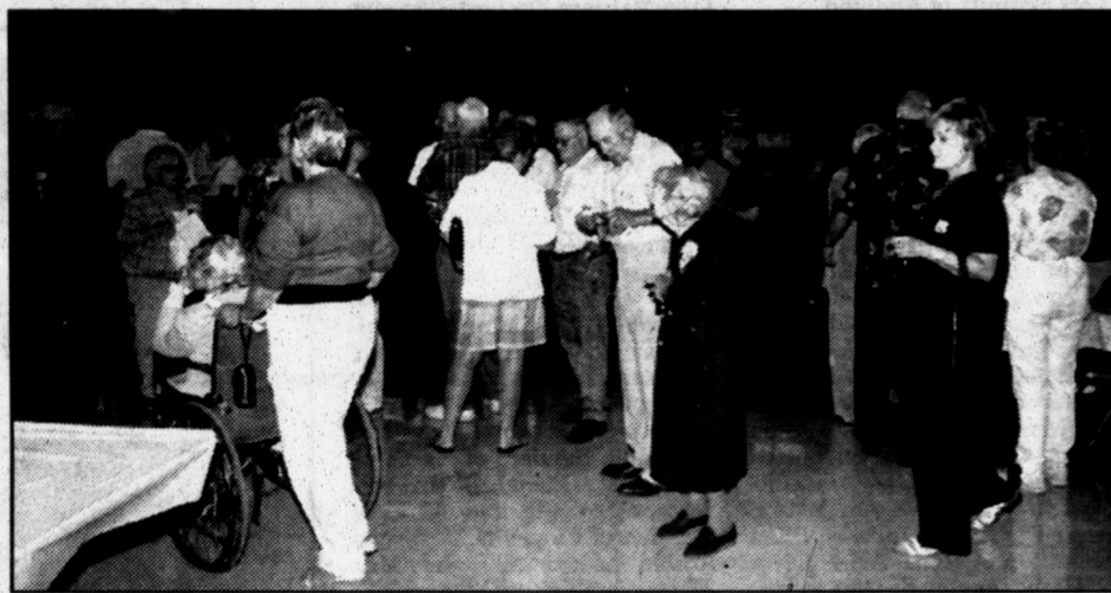

DUES ARE DUE! You can mail them in to P.O. Box 270 or come by the office to pay.

We will sponsor the Quilt Show during the Town and Country Jubilee. Please, if you have a quilt you would let us display so everyone can enjoy it, let us know. Our show will be back at our old familiar place at the Hereford Community Center. Our "Sugar Ants" quilting group has a beautiful quilt to give away. You will want to get your tickets. The more you buy the better your chances are of winning!

Faith is daring the soul to go beyond what the eyes can see...For we walk by faith, not by sight. II Corinthians 5:7. See you at the Center!

Reunion time

Pioneer Reunion—Many members of Hereford Senior Citizens Association participated in the Mid Plains Pioneer Reunion celebration held May 29 at the Deaf Smith County Bull Barn. On Friday, May 28 a Pancake Supper was served at the Senior Center and members of the Hereford High School class of 1939 met at the Center to eat pancakes and visit prior to the Pioneer Reunion on Saturday.

Thrifty is key word for store

The Thrift Store at 1306 E. Park continues to thrive and bring in needed revenue for Hereford Senior Citizens Association.

The store is open three days a week, Wednesday through Friday, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and is manned by volunteers from the senior citizens association.

Items arrive almost daily and more volunteers see that the merchandise is sorted, priced and placed in stock.

Displays through the store are updated regularly and items that were on the shelves last week may be replaced by new items the following week.

Prices are thrifty and set so that the cost of the merchandise is affordable for most any shopper.

The Thrift Store will be open during the City Wide Garage Sale on July 17. If you haven't been in to shop recently, now is the time for a return trip.

President's Corner

By Truman Thurston, HSCA President

I missed the column last month. Norma and I have been working in Amarillo the last few months and I just overlooked the column. Too tired or too confused to remember until too late.

This last month we had Memorial Day and this month we will celebrate July 4. Both of these days reflect upon the participation of our citizens in the survival of our country. Reflecting upon things that surround us now, I find that it is necessary to have a fishing license to kill a fish but there are those who promote the killing of unborn children -- all in the name of constitutional rights.

Our government sues the tobacco industry for harm to our citizens from the use of tobacco, but still subsidizes the growing of tobacco.

It is not proper to punish our children by the old method of the paddle thereby promoting a lack of discipline in some of our children, but let one of them create havoc and the parents are then found responsible.

Our courts determined that it is unconstitutional to have prayers in public schools, however we find the words "In God We Trust" on our coinage and the Congress opens their daily deliberations with a prayer and are too lazy or too afraid to pass laws that would allow prayer in our schools.

The President swore to uphold the Constitution and then deemed it his privilege to deny his actions before a Grand Jury. The Congress authorized funds to investigate and charge him for this, but then the Senate found him not guilty.

The year 2000 will bring either change or more of the same in our lives, so it is time to get involved and satisfy ourselves as to whom to support.

What form or direction our government takes in the year 2000 will affect our Center, so let's all get involved.

More Americans living past 100, Census says

WASHINGTON (AP) — At age 98, Ella May Stumpe really didn't want a computer.

Arthritis had prevented her from recording a century of memoirs with her typewriter, and her friends were pushing her to buy a PC so she could keep writing.

"I didn't want to buy it. I really bought it to get them to not bother me anymore," Mrs. Stumpe said. She looked at the computer sitting in her room and saw a "white elephant," she said.

Five years later, Mrs. Stumpe, now 103, has mastered word processing and has written two books, including one titled, "My Life at 100."

For Mrs. Stumpe, like for more and more Americans, reaching the century mark doesn't necessarily mean slowing down.

A Census Bureau report released Wednesday finds the nation's centenarian population overwhelmingly female and doubling this decade. Women living in the Midwest have the best chance of living to 100, the report suggests.

"More than anything else, the reason I have survived to this age is a moderate way of life," said Mrs. Stumpe, who grew up in North Dakota, which had the 11th highest percentage of centenarians among its population in 1990. She now lives in Frederick, Md.

Mrs. Stumpe, who changed her diet to nonacidic foods after suffering an ulcer at age 30, offers advice for those yearning to live long:

"I do not go for the modern teen-age diet of hamburgers and pizza and stuff like that."

The Census Bureau reported that its analysis of 1990 data found that four out of five U.S. centenarians are women. Iowa had the highest percentage of residents in their 100s, a tiny .0261 percent of the total population, closely followed by South Dakota at .0256 percent. Three other Midwest states — Nebraska, Kansas and Minnesota also finished in the top 10. The others in the top 10 were Connecticut, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Montana and the District of Columbia.

The 1990 Census counted 37,306 people aged 100 or over, but bureau analysts believe that inaccurate birth and death records inflated that number and that the figure was actually closer to 28,000, the report said.

"A lot of people don't know how old they are and if you don't have a record and you're old you may want to be one hundred plus. It's kind of a magical age," said Victoria Velkoff, co-author of the report.

Nonetheless, the bureau estimates there are now nearly 70,000 people age 100 or older, almost double the 1990 total.

California, New York and Florida had the most residents past the century mark. But when measured as a percentage of population, these big states trailed those in the Midwest.

Dr. Tom Perls, a principal investigator for the New England Centenarian Study that researches aging, said genetics probably is the primary reason for the regional cluster of centenarians frequently referred to as the "longevity belt." It stretches from Minnesota to Nova Scotia, he said.

"There were genes passed down through the generations that have inhabited these regions that are probably excellent for getting to extreme old age. That's what we call a founder effect," Perls said.

Florida, with the largest senior population, ranked just 23rd in the percentage of centenarians in its population. The Census Bureau suggests that's because the healthier "young old" may be flocking to Florida, while the "older old" return to their home states for family care, the report said.

Alaska ranked last for centenarians both as a percentage and for total numbers.

The report also echoes findings that women outnumber men among the very old.

Women age more slowly than men, Perls said, and among women, the onset of cancer, stroke and Alzheimer's may be delayed by 10 years. Elderly women also survive illness and chronic conditions like heart disease more often than men, he added.

Anna Groupe, 104, of Sherburn, Minn., spends her days reading the local papers and her copy of "Portals of Prayer." Born in 1895 when Grover Cleveland was president, Mrs. Groupe doesn't know why she has lived so long. But she remembers an active youth of horseback riding and farm work with her German immigrant parents.

"I drove a horse and buggy four miles to high school to get a high school education. I was never late because my dad always had the horse hitched," Mrs. Groupe said.

Her husband, Arthur, died at age 87 in 1982. She now lives with her 78-year-old daughter, Mildred Johnson, on the same farm where she grew up. "I take care of her and she takes care of me," Mrs. Johnson said.

Nutrition Update

By Charlotte R. Clark
MS RD/LD

Your Heart Healthy Nutrition and Becoming More Active

Heart disease is the number one killer of both men and women in America today. Some simple nutritional practices can significantly help lower your risk.

Is your breakfast a healthy habit or a health hazard? How much do you know about eating to reduce your risk for this serious problem? Answer true or false to the following six questions.

1. The most important dietary step you can take to reduce for heart disease is to limit high-cholesterol foods.

2. Low-fat eating is the only way you can reduce blood cholesterol levels through diet.

3. Complex carbohydrates, such as whole grain breads and cereals, are an important part of a heart-healthy diet.

4. Many breakfast cereals are naturally rich in soluble fiber from whole grain oats, which can help reduce blood cholesterol levels.

5. A heart-healthy diet is your best defense against heart disease.

6. Make only a few changes at a time to be most successful in adopting a new diet and physical activity habits.

Answers:
1. False. Limiting the amount of saturated fat and total fat you eat are the most important steps. Saturated fats raises blood cholesterol levels more than dietary cholesterol. Saturated fats are found mainly in animal products such as meats, cheese and butter. Dietary cholesterol is found only in animal foods.

2. False. Eating a low-fat diet controls how much saturated fat and cholesterol you eat to help reduce blood cholesterol levels. But there are other dietary steps that can also help. Trim calories to lose excess pounds if you are overweight. And eat more soluble fiber from whole grain cereals.

3. True. When you cut fat in the diet, you may need to add calories from other sources. Complex carbohydrates are the best choice. Whole grain breads and cereals are rich in complex carbohydrates and supply other important nutrients. For example, whole grain cereals contain soluble fiber, which studies show can reduce blood cholesterol levels when eaten as part of a diet low in saturated fat and cholesterol.

4. False. Only a few breakfast cereals fit that description. Only one or two cereals in the leading ready-to-eat cereals that are naturally rich in soluble fiber from the whole grain product and clinically proven to reduce blood cholesterol levels when eaten as part of a diet low in saturated fat and cholesterol.

5. False. It's true that a heart-healthy diet plays a big part in fighting heart disease, but overall, the best defense is a heart-healthy lifestyle. Along with the diet, controlling high blood pressure, not smoking, maintaining a healthy weight and getting plenty of physical activity complete the prescription for a heart healthy lifestyle.

6. True. Trying to change too much at one time can be overwhelming and lead to failure. Start with small steps to slowly, but surely, transform your habits.

Becoming more active is essential to heart-healthy routine, remember to play it safe and always check with your personal physician before taking a fitness test or starting any new fitness program such as the one-mile walk test.

Before you start:

*Wear comfortable walking shoes and loose clothing suitable for brisk walking at a temperature at which you'll be taking the test. Also, wear a digital watch or a watch with a sweep second hand.

*Use your car odometer to measure out a mile on a surface with no hills, traffic lights or other impediments. Or find an outdoor track at a local school; you'll need to walk around the inner lane four times for the best test.

Taking the test:

*Warm up and stretch for four or five minutes. Particularly stretch the major muscles of your legs. Walk slowly for several minutes; build up speed until you are moving briskly but not out of breath or uncomfortable.

*Now you're ready to take the One-Mile Walk Test. Note your start time in minutes as briskly as possible, maintaining a steady pace.

*At the end of the mile, subtract your start time from the finish time.

*Estimate your relative cardiovascular fitness by comparing your results to the data in the following table. Be sure after the test to walk slowly for a few minutes to cool down. Again stretch the major muscles of your legs.

Fitness standards track elderly aging process

Just because you're 75, you shouldn't have trouble lifting a bag of groceries or getting up from a chair. But for millions of older Americans, those simple activities are a daily struggle.

Disabling frailty doesn't have to be part of aging. In fact, studies have found that even 90-year-olds can rebuild lost muscle with some careful exercise.

It would be better to never become so frail in the first place, and researchers have come up with a way to help: Fitness performance standards to let anyone 60 and older assess quickly if they're in good physical condition for their age, or if they're at risk of a downhill slide that could lead to a nursing home.

"Our main interest is in keeping people mobile and staying physically independent as long as possible," said Roberta Rikli, a professor at California State University, Fullerton. She led a study of 7,000 Americans ages 60 to 94 that established the standards.

If the tests signal you're at risk of becoming too frail, "we can do something to try to prevent that," she said.

The exercise tests are simple enough that many people could try them at home, and senior centers around the country are starting to use them.

Frailty is a huge risk of aging. By age 70, most people have at least 20 percent less muscle than they did at age 30.

About 70 percent of elderly women are too frail to lift just 10 pounds, and 60 percent cannot perform such household work as vacuuming. About 35 percent of men are equally frail.

Some of the muscle deterioration may be inevitable.

But Rikli says at least half is due to people becoming more sedentary with age, meaning that keeping active is important if you want healthy retirement years.

Rikli and colleague C. Jessie Jones studied some 7,000 Americans over 60 who live independently. They performed such simple tests as:

—How many times in 30 seconds they could rise from a straight-backed chair without using their arms to push themselves up. That measures lower body strength.

—How many times in 30 seconds they could lift a weight — 5 pounds for women, 8 pounds for men — in a "bicep curl" that measures upper body strength.

—How many yards they could walk in six minutes, to measure aerobic fitness.

—How long it took them to rise from a chair, walk 8 feet and return to a seated position, to measure mobility.

The study, funded by a Medicare HMO provider, set standards for fitness levels that are normal, below average, or so low that people are at risk of needing a nursing home.

Say an 80-year-old woman could stand up from a chair without pushing off 10 times in 30 seconds. That's normal for that age.

But doing only 10 of these "chair stands" at age 60 is below average — and while people at that level may function OK right now, they're at big risk of losing mobility by age 75.

Rikli found that fitness declined with age on average 1 percent a year. She advised people to track whether they're declining faster than normal, or if exercise is paying off and they're improving.

Regardless of age, people who got moderate physical activity at least three times a week were the most fit.

Some doctors already use similar but experimental tests to assess elderly patients' limitations. "They're very powerful predictors" of who will wind up disabled, said Dr. Jack Guralnik of the National Institute on Aging, a pioneer of the studies.

Rikli wants such assessments to reach more older Americans. She hopes to have easy-to-read consumer brochures available by fall to illustrate the tests and show how to measure anyone's fitness level against the national standards.

"That's an excellent idea," said Guralnik. "The more people are aware of their level of functioning, the more they can tune into the fact that they need to exercise."

Already, some of the 267 senior centers that participated in Rikli's study are using the fitness assessments. She will advertise the consumer brochures in publications targeted to older Americans once they're complete. But instead of waiting, senior centers or doctors could simply check April's edition of the Journal of Aging and Physical Activity for the study results.

Dr. Donohue

To Your Good Health

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I have been diagnosed with spinal stenosis. I have been told that there is no treatment unless I cannot walk. I do not like the prognosis. Do you have any other information concerning spinal stenosis? What are the treatments? What causes it? What can be done to prevent pain or progression? — L.T.

ANSWER: The spinal cord is a delicate structure, only as thick as your little finger. Nature protects it by enclosing it within a spinal tunnel that runs through the vertebrae (backbones) from neck to lower back.

The spinal cord is a complex of nerves and nerve cables bringing information to the brain and conveying signals from the brain to muscles, directing them on how to accomplish the simplest and most complicated maneuvers of daily life.

Spinal stenosis is a narrowing of the tunnel, the spinal canal. Narrowing can result from bony spurs, arthritic changes or bulging back discs. The narrowed canal pinches the cord, and that, in turn, makes the back hurt. The pain worsens when standing or walking but diminishes when sitting. Lying face down on a bed intensifies the pain.

The legs can become numb and weak.

A person doesn't have to delay treatment until walking is impossible. A physical therapy program, with exercises designed specifically for the individual patient, can often relieve pressure on the spinal cord. A back brace, worn intermittently, might free the cord from the vise-like grip of the spinal canal. A brace should not be worn constantly because back muscles will weaken, and that aggravates matters.

Decompression surgery is often the ultimate answer for spinal stenosis. As its name implies, compression on the spinal cord is relieved by enlarging the spinal canal. The success rate for this surgery is quite good.

Readers who would like more information on back pain can obtain the report on backache and spinal problems by writing: Dr. Donohue — No. 3, Box 5539, Riverton, NJ 08077-5539. Enclose a self-addressed, stamped (55 cents), No. 10 envelope and $3. Please allow 6-12 weeks for delivery.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I am a 70-year-old female in good health. My last Pap smear came back abnormal. The physician assistant recommended I take hormones because my Pap smear results said "atrophic." What is atrophic, and how often should I have a Pap smear? — M.J.

ANSWER: The literal translation of atrophic, from Greek, is "not nourished." Once estrogen production fades, the cells of the genital tract lose their nourishment and become atrophic. It's a change expected in someone of 70 years. Atrophic is not a sign of cancer.

Experts argue about how long a woman should continue having Pap smears. Some advise that Pap smears be taken every year for life since the chances of cervical cancer increase with age.

Others feel that the frequency of Pap smears can be lengthened to every three years if smears come back normal in three consecutive years.

If, in the past, smears have been taken on schedule and have been normal, the United States Preventive Services Task Force says they can be discontinued after age 65.

Want my opinion? I'd go along with the every-three-year recommendation.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: A family member has ulcerative colitis. He takes Asacol. He enjoys good health and jogs several times a week. His life insurance premiums are higher because of his illness, but I'm not sure why. Before having another colonoscopy, is there anything he should do? — B.C.

ANSWER: Your relative doesn't have to do anything other than follow his doctor's instructions in preparation for the colonoscopic exam. It's the exam where the entire colon is examined with a scope. It's not a traumatic experience.

Insurance companies charge higher premiums for people with ulcerative colitis because those people have a greater risk for developing colon cancer. Your relative's ulcerative colitis is under good control, and he has regular colonoscopic exams. The threat of cancer for him is not great.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him at P.O. Box 5539, Riverton, NJ 08077-5539.

Senior model: Ben Fine looks the part

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — You might swear you've seen him before. An ailing patient in a hospital? A kindly grandfather sure to offer a Hershey bar? Or that upper middle-class New Yorker?

Ben Fine has been all of these, sort of. For almost three decades, Fine has been a model for magazine ads — even if he isn't ailing, doesn't really like chocolate and never lived in New York.

"They might want a disheveled old man. They might want a successful CEO," he says. "There's a picture for everyone."

Fine, 79, darts around his apartment, tossing aside papers, digging through drawers, searching for some particular shots he posed for years ago.

It's not just his All-American looks, though one friend describes him as "one of those guys who looks like everyone's grandfather." His energy and versatility have landed him in about 75 ads placed in major publications across the country.

"You can't sit around and just watch television all day," Fine says. "Once people hit their 50s and 60s they often lose their ambition, and they're fearful and afraid of dying. But as you get older, life is not over."

As a child Fine loved to dance, but his mother steered him away from the arts. He ultimately became a wholesaler of costume jewelry.

When he hit 50, he decided to chase his childhood dream. He concentrated on acting, then modeling.

He moved from home in the suburbs to downtown, where he shares bachelor quarters with his cats, Boo-Boo and Little One. Even triple-bypass surgery didn't stop him.

His acting career took him to regional theater with small roles in shows such as "The Fantastiks" and "Fiddler on the Roof." He was a TV extra on soaps such as "All My Children" and "One Life to Live." Recently, he had a bit part as a doctor taking a pulse in "Law & Order."

Modeling delights him, whether he's portraying someone down on his luck or a successful CEO. Then there's Fine as ship captain, gardener with a wrenched back, orchestra conductor, waiter in a European cafe.

When the phone rings, Fine jumps. "I don't know whether I'll be doctor, a patient or someone's grandfather," he says, before answering. "I'll have to ask my agent what clothes to bring."

His wardrobe includes 150 neckties, 20 suits and 60 shirts — plus a couple of detachable mustaches. Unlike high-profile models who display the clothes that designers provide, print models pull from their personal wardrobes for everyday looks.

Why does this work for Fine? He credits his innate ability to act. "See, look at that face of anguish," he says, recreating that gardener with a strained back. "To be a good print model you have to know how to act."

"Here in this ad, I'm smoking, and I don't smoke. It took four hours to get that shot. I thought I was going to die."

As a carpenter: "I can't even saw a piece of wood."

As the pope: "And I'm so Jewish."

He also is full of optimism, something you can't sell in an ad.

"You can't get into a fit of depression," he says. "Depression is the worst thing you can have. It makes you get sick and it ages you. ... If the phone doesn't ring, you can't let it bother you."

"What I tell people is that all they need is courage," he says. "... Anyone can do it. All you need is an 8x10 glossy and a good attitude."
