RESPONDING TO THE CALL

City to replace 2 aging HVFD vehicles

By Donald M. Cooper

Hereford Brand Managing Editor

It didn't take the Hereford city commissioners long to take care of business Monday night, but that was fine with the fire department.

The commissioners, responding to an emergency request from the Hereford Volunteer Fire Department, approved the purchase of two replacement vehicles.

In a letter to the commission, City Manager Chester Nolen noted the fire department submitted a request for the replacement vehicles last year. However, the commissioners decided to defer all major purchases, except in cases of emergency.

Nolen said the two vehicles the fire department wanted to replace are in such poor condition that they are hazardous to the firefighters who must use them.

"One of the vehicles ... was a 1987 Chevrolet Suburban. ... Recently, the steering gear mechanism went out and it cost close to $1,000 to replace. It is still not functional for the fire department's needs," Nolen wrote.

Nolen said the fire department officials said the pickup would be more functional than a Suburban.

The second vehicle, a 1/2-ton pickup, is used to transport firefighters to the scene of fires. Nolen said the pickup's engine is so worn that it overheated on a recent run and firefighters had to hose down the engine before it would be cool enough to return to the station.

Nolen presented quotes from the Chevrolet and Ford dealerships in Hereford. The commissioners accepted the bids from Stevens 5-Star Car & Truck Center.

The Chevrolet dealership submitted quotes of $29,887 for a 3/4-ton crew cab pickup and $21,577 for a 1/2-ton pickup.

Western Ford's were $31,225 for a V10 gas engine, 3/4-ton crew cab pickup; $34,679 for a V8 Powerstroke diesel 3/4-ton crew cab; and $23,189 for a 1/2-ton pickup.

In his memo to the commission,

Nolen recommended the higher Western Ford bids, saying their proposals "more nearly fit our use." However, the commissioners accepted the lower bids for the Chevrolet vehicles.

In other business, Mayor Bob Josserand congratulated Nolen for his participation in the negotiations with Energas on the natural gas distributor's rate increase.

Nolen was among a panel of city managers representing the municipalities served by Energas who negotiated the agreement with the company, which had initially proposed a 10.8 percent rate increase.

Following the negotiations, the company agreed to a 2.7 percent increase.

Productivity slows over first quarter

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' productivity, a key to future prosperity, slowed to an annual growth rate of 2.4 percent in the first three months of the year, the government reported today.

The January-to-March gain in productivity followed a much sharper 6.9 percent increase in the final three months of last year, the Labor Department said. That increase had been the best quarterly performance in seven years.

Economists had been expecting productivity growth to slow in the first quarter. The 2.4 percent rate was the same as the government first estimated one month ago and it was right on target.

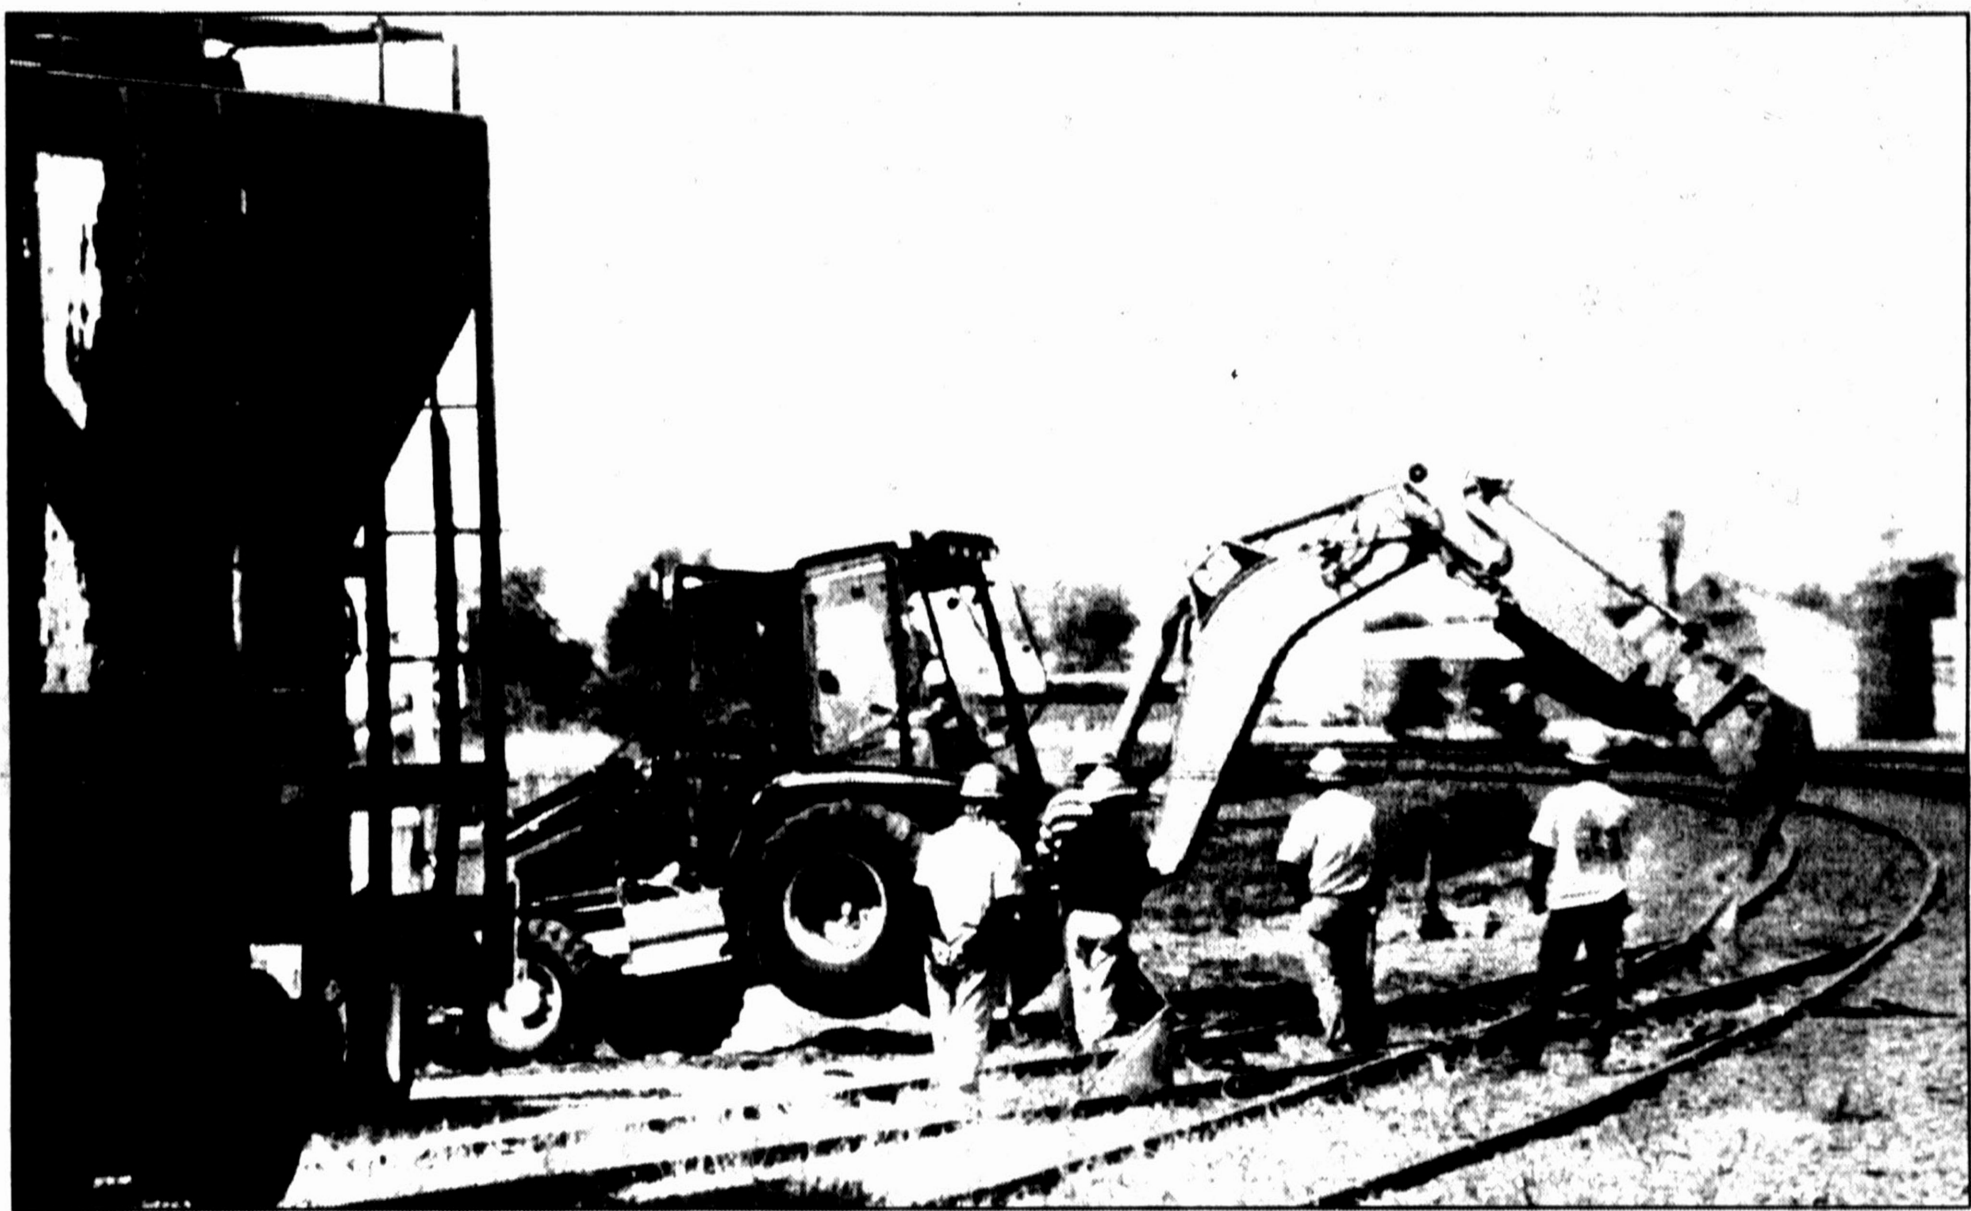

The first-quarter gain was the slowest quarterly performance since the second quarter of 1999.

Viewed over a longer period, workers are continuing to produce healthy productivity gains. Compared to the same quarter a year ago, productivity has increased at a solid 3.7 percent rate.

Productivity growth has doubled in the past four years compared to the previous two decades, a gain most economists attributed to heavy investment by businesses in computers and other productivity-enhancing equipment.

Productivity is the key factor that determines how fast Americans' living standards can rise. It's calculated by measuring the increase in economic output during a given quarter and subtracting the increase in hours worked to get a measurement of output per hour of work.

Economists consider healthy productivity gains the key to economic vitality and rising living standards. A sizable gain means a company can pay employees more, hold the line on prices and still deliver increased profits to shareholders.

TROUBLED KIDS: Study finds number of U.S. youth with emotional, behavioral problems soars

CHICAGO (AP) — The number of U.S. youngsters with emotional and behavioral problems has soared in the past two decades in part because of more poor and single-parent households, a new study suggests.

The researchers found that problems such as attention deficit/hyperactivity disorder, depression and learning disabilities more than doubled from 1979 to 1996. Such conditions were identified in 6.8 percent of all doctor visits in 1979 and in 18.7 percent of visits in 1996.

The findings, which appear in the June issue of the journal Pediatrics and echo those in other recent studies, are based on surveys of pediatricians on more than 21,000 patients.

Differences in doctor training in identifying such problems did not account for the increases, said Dr. Kelly Kelleher of the University of Pittsburgh and Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh, the study's lead author.

In fact, the highest identification rates were for doctors who trained in the 1970s and before.

The findings suggest instead that most of the change was due to "an increase in problems and the kinds of patients they're seeing," said Kelleher.

The changes were associated with increases in the proportions of single-parent families and Medicaid enrollment from 1979 to 1996, the researchers said. Fifteen percent of patients in the 1979 study lived in single-parent homes, compared with 22 percent in the 1996 study. Just 6 percent of the earlier patients were on Medicaid, compared with 18 percent of the 1996 patients.

However, pediatricians are geared primarily to deal with "acute" problems in which "children come in, the doctor gives them medicine, the children go away," Kelleher said. Doctors will be ineffective unless the system is restructured to allow pediatricians to act more like mental-health professionals and spend more time with chronic ailments, he said.

The authors examined data from a 1979 survey of 30 Rochester, N.Y.-area pediatricians, and compared the results with 1996 data from a government-funded study of 395 pediatricians nationwide. A total of 21,065 patients ages 4 to 15 were involved.

The largest changes were in attention deficit/hyperactivity, which increased from 1.4 percent to 9.2 percent, and emotional problems such as anxiety and depression, which increased from a negligible amount to 3.6 percent.

Secret money invades system

By Laura Meckler

Associated Press Writer

At crucial moments in the presidential campaign, George W. Bush has benefited from millions of dollars in advertising paid for by mysterious groups and secret donors.

Similar ads have also boosted Vice President Al Gore, but they generally were done by well-established organizations with a clear agenda. Still, their donors remained secret, too.

It's a new form of political warfare that's quickly becoming the tool of choice for people looking to influence Election 2000, made possible by a once-obscure provision in the tax code that lets anyone form a group and spend money on campaign-style ads without saying who's paying for them.

"I think it's the most dangerous loophole that's ever come along, period," said Larry Makinson of the Center for Responsive Politics, which advocates tighter campaign finance laws. "It offers the ability, for the first time, for groups to have complete anonymity."

Until this year, advocates like Makinson were mostly disturbed by "soft money," the unlimited, unregulated donations to political parties, the details of which are publicly available.

Other nonprofits face restrictions on their political activities; these new groups do not.

The Federal Election Commission is considering a proposal to require the new groups, known as 527s, to disclose their contributors. Democrats on the panel welcomed the potential change, while their Republican counterparts ranged from skeptical to outright opposed.

The groups were named after section 527 of the tax code, created in 1974 for political groups to enjoy certain tax advantages without publicly disclosing anything about themselves. These groups fall outside the purview of the FEC by declaring that they engage in issues, not politics.

To operate legally, they cannot coordinate their activities with candidates who benefit from their ads, and all sides insist there is no communication between them.

"There is no connection between us and the Bush campaign — none, zero, nada," said Diana Banister, a spokeswoman for the Coalition to Protect Americans Now, which is funded by a wealthy conservative activist, Helen Kriebel.

Banister said it was a coincidence that a day before Bush gave a major speech promoting a missile defense system her group began running

'527s' at a glance

The Associated Press

Some details of the law governing political groups known as "527s":

- Allows them to avoid paying taxes on contributions from donors.
- Allows donors to avoid the gift tax that applies to some large contributions.
- Allows them to keep all paperwork confidential. By contrast, other nonprofit groups that may participate in political activity must make their tax forms available to the public.
- Historically covers political organizations including the Democratic and Republican national committees and political action committees. Now appears to cover any group that opts to express views on political issues and candidates through TV ads or other means.
- Does not allow contributors to deduct their donations.

Internet employment up 62 percent

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - The number of people employed in Internet-related jobs doubled last year to 2.5 million as the industry enjoyed a 62 percent jump in annual revenues, according to a new university study that highlights the increasing importance of the digital economy.

The study, being released today, found that the entire industry generated nearly $524 billion in revenue in 1999, up from a readjusted $322 billion a year earlier. Researchers examined 3,000 U.S. companies that generate all or part of their revenues from selling goods, creating hardware or software or acting as support or intermediaries for Internet transactions.

The fastest-growing category was e-commerce, which saw a 72 percent increase in revenue to $171.4 billion from $99.8 billion a year earlier as traditional brick-and-mortar retailers such as Sears, Roebuck embraced Internet sales and companies increasingly began buying their own goods online.

"This economy is not only growing rapidly, it is becoming more and more productive," said Anitesh Barua, who conducted the study for the Center for Research on Electronic Commerce at the University of Texas-Austin.

Researchers estimated that more than 50,000 companies generate some or all of their revenues from Internet-related activities.

The research, which was funded by Internet equipment provider Cisco Systems Inc. of San Jose, Calif., is in line with other government and industry surveys that show the Internet has boosted productivity and been one of the key factors in sustaining growth.

Texans swelter in record heat

Record high temps reported January through May

HOUSTON (AP) - Texans already sweating their way through an unusually warm winter and spring had better get ready - the hottest days of summer haven't even begun.

Record highs hit many areas of the state from January through May, with some areas reporting hotter winter and spring temperatures than anytime since the 1880s, when records were first kept.

Blame the unusually hot weather on La Nina, a cooling weather pattern over Pacific Ocean waters near the equator, said meteorologist Tim Speece with the National Weather Service in Brownsville.

La Nina has also kept rainfalls low, worsening droughts in southern and western Texas and the Hill Country.

In Fort Worth, May temperatures were the highest ever recorded with a monthly average of about 77, well above the historical average of 73. March temperatures were higher than they have been since 1907, with a monthly average of 61. March's normal average is around 47 degrees.

San Angelo had a record-high February with an average of 58 degrees, a full 9 degrees above normal. May also was a record-breaking 7 degrees above average at 84 degrees, largely because of several days at or above 100 degrees, National Weather Service meteorologist Amy McCullough said. The mercury peaked at 107 on May 24.

The Lubbock area was hotter in February than it has been since 1915, with temperatures reaching from 5 to 9 degrees above normal from January to May.

Heat combined with low rainfall to create dusty conditions in already-parched sections of the state.

The nearly 2 inches of rain that fell over the weekend near Brady, on the western edge of the Hill Country, did little to dampen a persistent drought.

With rainfall 30 percent below normal this year, 257 livestock tanks in the area have gone dry, and many ranchers have had to sell their livestock, said Bobby Schmidt, who heads the Farm Service Agency in Brady.

"People are really suffering, from here to San Angelo," he said. "This is some of the worst looking country you have ever seen. There is no grass and almost no water."

Only 6,000 acres of wheat in the Brady area are being harvested this year, compared to 40,000 acres in a normal year, Schmidt said.

In the Rio Grande Valley, growers are in a precarious position because the heat and lack of rainfall has left reservoirs like Falcon Lake low, making irrigation of fruit and vegetable crops difficult.

"The weather has made it hard for people in the Valley," said Tobin Armstrong, owner of the 50,000-acre Armstrong Ranch in Kenedy County, about 30 miles north of Harlingen. "But it is better farther north."

Armstrong said that ranchers in the Coastal Bend have been in good shape since Hurricane Bret dumped 12 inches of rain on the area last summer.

John Zeitler, a meteorologist at the National Weather Service in Houston, where temperatures have been about 6 degrees above average, said that weekend rains throughout the state may signal the waning of the La Nina pattern.

"La Nina is not as strong as it was, and we expect it to dissipate throughout the summer," Zeitler said. "That will make it a typical hot, humid Houston summer."

Ann Landers have to do is talk to a parent who has lost a child because of a defective product. It is especially heartbreaking when the death involves a product we have previously recalled.

A year ago, an 8-month-old girl in Texas strangled in a swing that had been recalled in 1997. Two years ago, a 17-month-old boy in Illinois was entrapped and suffocated in a portable crib that had been recalled in 1993. In each instance, the parent or caregiver was unaware the product had been recalled. Despite notices and public warnings, many products with the potential to seriously injure or kill are still being used by consumers. We can get the products off store shelves, but we cannot always get them out of people's homes.

Bride, groom-to-be are honored

A bridal shower honoring prospective bride and groom, Rachel Chamberlain and Heath Kirkeby, was held recently at Community Church.

Joining the honorees in greeting guests were Rita Chamberlain, mother of the bride-elect; Denise Kirkeby, mother of the future groom; and Mrs. Lloyd Kirkeby, his grandmother.

Guests were served refreshments of fresh fruit, cake, cookies and pink lemonade fruit punch from a table covered with a white cloth, decorated with a centerpiece of white lilies and ivy and accented with crystal appointments.

A vacuum cleaner was the gift from hostesses Tracy Duncan, Laura Schlabs, Jan Wilks, Sandy Brookhart, Dodi Brookhart, Virginia Vallejo, Joan Culp, Joyce Landers, Velta King, Mary Dziuk, Sidney Kerr, Hope Bustamante, Christi Phommyvong, Doris Huckert and Gail Blain.

argue with him every day. This child's parents are very accepting of his behavior, and don't seem to think there is anything wrong with it. In my opinion, they need to have their heads examined.

Ann, do you think this is OK, or will it hurt the boy in the long run? Shouldn't those parents be dressing him in gender-appropriate clothing? I'd appreciate your thoughts on this. — No Name, No City

BRAND/Jeff Blackmon

Snakes have game— The Herford Diamondbacks hosted Clarendon on Sunday at Whiteface Field for their home opener of the summer league. The league is composed of teams from around the Panhandle. Herford High School Junior hurler Michael Rhyne (left) throws a pitch in the first game of a double header on Sunday. Rhyne pitched strong in the game for Herford keeping Clarendon down 10-2 at the end of six innings. Diamondback second baseman Andrew Villarreal (top) steps up to the plate in the fifth inning of the first game against Clarendon. The Herford team is made up mostly of members of the HHS junior varsity and varsity baseball teams. The varsity team ended their 2000 campaign with a playoff berth but lost in the first round to Frenship in Plainview.

Young to Denver?

■ 'Niners not willing to chance serious injury

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — Steve Young's career in San Francisco appears over, but his playing days may not be.

The 49ers granted the two-time league MVP permission to negotiate with the Denver Broncos even while holding out hope he still decides to retire because of his history of concussions.

"He's had a brilliant career," 49ers general manager Bill Walsh said Monday. "He's become one of the most famous men in sports. He's been a world champion. I feel his best option is retirement but that's not his opinion. He has a choice to continue to play."

Whether Young exercises that choice, it is clear he is exploring it.

Young, who remains under contract with the 49ers, sought and received permission to negotiate with the Broncos after San Francisco all but ruled out his return, citing health concerns. Left unspoken were the 49ers' crushing salary cap problems which in and of themselves likely precluded Young's continued play in San Francisco.

The highest-rated passer in league history, Young led San Francisco to a Super Bowl title in 1994, but he hasn't played since a head blow Sept. 27 against Arizona left him with his fourth concussion in three years.

"He has not been cleared to play with the San Francisco 49ers and we weren't headed in a direction where he may have been cleared," Walsh said. "Steve Young asked for an opportunity to negotiate with the Denver Broncos. He was given that opportunity."

Walsh said Young's disposition with the 49ers — either retirement or release to go to Denver or even another team — would be resolved by Friday. Young is due a $1 million bonus if he's still on San Francisco's active roster on Saturday.

When asked if Young's return to San Francisco was likely, Walsh replied, "It doesn't appear that way."

Young, 38, met with Broncos coach Mike Shanahan at a hotel near the Denver airport earlier Monday, according to KOA radio in Denver. Shanahan was the 49ers' offensive coordinator during their last Super Bowl run and had a close relationship with Young.

Apparently, Young approached 49ers officials earlier this week, indicated a desire to play and asked if he could talk to the Broncos. San Francisco reluctantly agreed.

"I think he can play football, certainly," Walsh said. "We have not cleared him for obvious reasons. It's just like a heavyweight fighter would go into a bout with a history of being knocked out. But obviously, Denver believes he's physically fit to play."

Young, who has passed a battery of neurological tests and shows no signs of permanent brain damage, still has not made a formal announcement on whether to keep playing or retire. He missed the last 13 games of the season.

His agent, Leigh Steinberg, did not immediately return a phone call seeking comment. A spokesman for the Broncos declined to comment.

Before word of Young's visit to Denver, San Francisco coach Steve Mariucci also said he would rather see Young retire than play for another team.

Writing Want Ads that really sell!
Unsure how to write a Classified Ad that will get results? Follow these pointers and you'll soon have an empty space in your storage room and cash in your pocket. For starters, look at ads which offer the same item/products. Get a sense of going rates and ideas for how to make your ad stand out. Once you're ready to write, begin with exactly what you're selling: "Dining room set, maple, six chairs." Then remember these hints:
• Give the price. A newspaper consultant says 70 percent of
• Use key words to describe what you're selling. The key words for a car are make, model, year, body style, color, mileage and price. If it's a house, key words are location, type of construction, number of bedrooms and baths, and condition.
• Don't use abbreviations. It's tempting to abbreviate and save money if ads are billed by the line. Brand ads are billed by the words, so spell them out so readers won't be confused trying to figure out abbreviations.
• Don't be misleading. Think accurate and factual when you write. Be sure to include a phone number and the best times to reach $200,000 worth of ads with the same message and criticizing Gore for not supporting the program.

Democrats don't buy the denials. "Clearly there's been such advertising on the other side," Gore said Monday when asked about sniping over which party was taking advantage of ad loopholes, such as 527a. "That's a loophole that they've been exploiting that we have not." Bush's campaign says plenty of left-leaning groups — led by the AFL-CIO — help Democrats. "In the free market of ideas, both sides are well represented," said spokesman Ari Fleischer. So far for Gore, the Sierra Club, an environmental group and one of the first to create a 527 spin-off, is in the midst of an $8 million ad campaign aiding Democrats running for Congress and attacking Bush on the environment. The National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League, another well-established group, also has run anti-Bush ads and plans more. For Bush, the missile defense ads weren't the only ones to come at a convenient time. Early in the Republican primary contest, Bush backers braced for a barrage of negative ads from Steve Forbes, who had used his personal fortune in a similar fashion against Bob Dole in 1996.

In a pre-emptive attack, the moderate Republican Leadership Council aired $100,000 of ads warning Forbes not to go negative and followed with another $100,000 buy later on. Forbes noted that the RLC included many Bush supporters and donors, and he complained to the FEC that it must have been a coordinated effort. The RLC maintains it was not. Fast forward to March 7 and the Super Tuesday contests that would probably settle what had become a fierce fight between Bush and Arizona Sen. John McCain. That's when Republicans for Clean Air surfaced with $2.5 million in ads in New York, Ohio and California supporting Bush and bashing McCain on the environment. The group, which had not previously existed, was funded by Texas entrepreneurs Sam and Charles Wily — brothers who had donated more than $200,000 to Bush and helped him raise even more. Both sides said there was no coordination with Bush's campaign, but McCain complained to the FEC. He stands by the complaint, despite his recent endorsement of Bush. "They should be ashamed," McCain said last week. Asked if he was sure the Bush camp had coordinated with these other groups, he said: "I'm positive of it." McCain said he has not discussed the issue with Bush; they disagree on campaign finance reform. The FEC is still investigating the McCain and Forbes complaints. Bush's outside support has continued beyond the primaries as well. Soon after wrapping up the GOP nomination, a group of California Republicans calling themselves Shape the Debate began running TV ads accusing Gore of being a hypocrite. Led by former Gov. Pete Wilson, the group includes several Bush supporters. McCain predicted that lesser-known groups also will begin popping up to support Gore. "You're going to see a dramatic increase on both sides," he said. "There will always be smart, unscrupulous people who will find ways around campaign finance laws."

Israelis hinting at land concessions

News digest

JERUSALEM — With Israel hinting of territorial concessions but complaining of delays by Yasser Arafat, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright is meeting with the Palestinian leader as she tries to move the Middle East peace process forward. "We are there, ready to roll up our sleeves," Albright told reporters at Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak's office on Monday. "There really is a historic opportunity, and we have to pursue it full speed."

Albright, on the second day of a three-day swing through the region, was traveling to Ramallah in the West Bank for a meeting today with Arafat. During a break in Monday's talks, Barak suggested he was ready to return more territory to Palestinian control than previously offered to conclude a final accord over such sensitive problems as Jerusalem's future and how much land Arafat would have for a Palestinian state. Concessions could involve about 93 percent of the West Bank, closer to Arafat's initial demand for Israel to cede 99 percent of the territory won from Jordan in the 1967 Six-Day War. Rescue efforts intensify in Indonesian quake BENGKULU, Indonesia — Frightened residents avoided their shattered homes and doctors performed emergency surgeries in the parking lot of a ruined hospital as the death toll rose to 103 today in Sumatra, an Indonesian island ravaged by a massive earthquake. The search for victims intensified today despite rumbling aftershocks from the Sunday night quake. Police feared the number of casualties could rise further once authorities reach remote areas, including a tiny island closest to the epicenter. Among the hardest-hit communities was Bengkulu town on Sumatra's southwest coast.

An emergency government task force said 64 bodies had been recovered from rubble there. Many were sleeping when their poorly built homes collapsed, crushing them. The quake cut off communications and electricity and closed the area's main airport. In Bengkulu, tens of thousands of the 250,000 residents spent Monday night outdoors, too afraid to return to damaged homes in case another big quake struck. More than 300 aftershocks have been recorded since the initial quake hit. Like much of the town, the hospital's badly cracked walls and caved-in roof were testament to the severity of the temblor, which was centered beneath the Indian Ocean, only 60 miles to the west. Tribes target young to save dying languages CEDAR CITY, Utah — Butterfly is only 3, but she speaks better Paiute than most of her elders. She can sing her ABC's in the tribe's dying language, hesitantly count to 10 and introduce herself with her Paiute nickname, Aesevetsai. She learned it all in the Paiute Preschool Language Immersion Program, which is trying to preserve the language common to a tribe whose members are scattered throughout the Southwest. Of the 744 members in Utah, fewer than 40 speak the language fluently. "The real sad thing is that all of these people are almost dead now," said Gloria Benson, who directs the preschool program for the Paiute Tribe of Utah. It's a dilemma facing American Indian tribes around the country. Of the 3,200 Utes in Utah and Colorado, only about 480 are fluent in their native tongue. There are fewer than 900 Comanche speakers left in Oklahoma or Apache speakers in New Mexico. The 1990 Census estimated that more than a third of American Indian and Alaska native languages have fewer than 100 speakers. "Out of 185 native languages still viable today, less than 20 will survive in the next 50 years," said Darryl Kipp of the Piegan Institute in Montana, which works for the preservation of native tongues.

Kids

at Children's Memorial Hospital in Chicago, said that despite the researchers' findings, some of the increase can probably be attributed to pediatricians getting better at recognizing the problems. The study "means that doctors before must have been underestimating the problem," Lavigne said. "Chances are they've increased their ability to recognize them."
