President says to stand up against militia groups

The president used his first TV town hall in more than a year to exhort them to fight back, suggesting: "You ought to stand up and double your fist and stick it in the sky and shout 'em down."

Clinton's hour-long conversation Thursday night with the people of Billings produced little in the way of confrontation and plenty of opportunities for him to hone a message that Americans need to learn to disagree in less hostile terms.

Price, who was not injured, was cited for changing lane when unsafe. Mrs. Maldonado and a passenger in the car, Steven Maldonado, 5, were transported by EMS to Hereford Regional Medical Center. At a news conference Thursday in Washington, Deputy Attorney General Jamie Gorelick raised the possibility that the subject of a nationwide manhunt may not have actively participated in the April 19 bombing that killed 168 people. At the end of the investigation, she said, "we will know who John Doe No. 2 is (and) whether he was a participant in this event."

It was the first official statement estioning the involvement of the ark, muscular-looking man pictured in three different FBI sketches.

Privately, senior federal officials have expressed doubts about John Doe No. 2's role. Some even hold the theory that Doe could be 12-year-old Josh Nichols, the son of suspect Terry Nichols. McVeigh and Nichols are the only two people charged so far in the case, and the links between the mystery man and McVeigh are critical.

The federal official pointed to

"At this point we think it was discussions with Michael Fortier, an Arizona man who reportedly helped McVeigh case the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. Sources have told The Associated Press that Fortier has been slow to provide information that could get him a plea bargain.

"The government would call off the manhunt, close the telephone line, if we could clear the Doe 2 mystery up," the official said. "And we'd like to do that early so Doe 2 isn't an issue of doubt by the time the trial starts."

Thousands of miles from home, Hereford Mayor Bob Josserand and his wife, Nancy, looked toward the sky and saw a very familiar sight -- the Lone Star flag of Texas.

The flag sighting came during a recent trip the Josserands took to England and Scotland, during which they stopped in Hereford, England, to visit the mayor's British counterpart.

During the four-hour stop in Hereford, the Josserands toured the Town Hall, had lunch with the mayor and his wife, and marveled at the history of the city.

On Sunday, come along and share the Josserands' experiences in the city which bears the same name as their West Texas hometown.

Business payrolls record sharp drop

Widespread construction, manufacturing layoffs blamed

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Widespread layoffs in manufacturing and construction triggered the sharpest drop in business payrolls in four years while the government's chief forecasting gauge flashed signals of a possible recession.

The Labor Department reported today that the unemployment rate showed a slight dip to 5.7 percent even though a separate survey that measures business payrolls plunged by 101,000, the biggest setback since April of 1991 at the end of the country's last recession.

"These numbers are not good," said Robert Dederick, an economist at Northern Trust Co. in Chicago. "The real question now is whether this correction is going to be short and just a hiccup or will it develop self-enforcing weakness."

Financial markets rallied strongly on the weaker-than-expected unemployment report. Bond prices surged, with demand so strong for Treasury's benchmark 30-year bond that its yield fell to 6.46 percent, down from 6.60 percent late Thursday.

Wall Street has continued to soar

Federal Reserve has achieved its hoped-for "soft landing," in which growth slows enough to keep inflation under control but not so much that a new recession is triggered. All of these reports are pretty negative. It certainly raises the specter of a recession," said Cynthia Latta, an economist at DRI-McGraw Hill Inc. of Lexington, Mass.

The May unemployment report showed widespread weakness in manufacturing and construction. Factory employment fell by 56,000 jobs, the biggest setback since January 1992, with the job losses showing up in a number of industries.

Construction employment was down by 57,000, although analysts blamed some of this decline on weather factors. Heavy rains and flooding, especially in the South, contributed to construction layoffs last month, the government said.

The 5.7 percent overall unemployment rate reflected a tiny improvement from a 5.8 percent rate in April when the jobless rate had shot up by 0.3 percentage point.

Katharine G. Abraham, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said there was no denying that there has been a definite softening in labor markets. "Our data indicate a marked slowdown in the labor market in recent months," she said in a statement. "Employment in manufacturing and construction has fallen, and even the services industry has had anemic job growth."

The report on the leading index showed widespread weakness in the economy, with eight of the 11 forwardlooking components posting declines. The 0.6 percent drop in April was the biggest setback in two years and it followed declines of 0.5 percent in March and 0.2 percent in February.

Analysts said that today's reports were certain to increase the belief that the Federal Reserve will not boost interest rates again and some analysts are even beginning to forecast that the next Fed move will be to cut rates in an effort to stave off a recession.

The central bank from February 1994 to February 1995 increased rates seven times in an effort to slow a fast-growing economy down to a more sustainable pace that would keep inflation from getting out of hand.

The Fed has won considerable praise for its efforts, with many economists insisting that the recent weakness will be only temporary with growth rebounding in the second half of the

if necessary.

By JANINE ZUNIGA Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) - U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison says the nation's leaders must not allow American round troops to become involved in U.N. peacekeeping efforts in the former Yugoslavia.

"I just cannot believe that we can sit back and let innocent troops be brought into what is essentially a civil war," the Dallas Republican said.

Mrs. Hutchison, a member of the Armed Services and Intelligence committees, expressed the view to reporters Thursday after returning from a trip this week to the Balkans.

Pentagon officials said Thursday that Defense Secretary William Perry will meet with European allies Saturday and offer American military support - but no U.S. troops - for a proposed strengthening of U.N. peacekeepers.

That came after President Clinton declared Wednesday he is ready to permit the temporary use of American ground forces in Bosnia to help U.N. peacekeepers move to safer positions

In a letter sent Thursday, Mrs. Hutchison warned Clinton that such a step would be fraught with peril.

"I strongly urge you to consult with Congress before taking such action, so that the limited scope and duration of U.S. military operations would be clearly understood in advance by both Congress and the American people," she wrote. During the Thursday news conference, she was even plainer.

"This is not our war," she said.

She said her visits to Macedonia and Croatia, two other former Yugoslav republics, made it plain to her that U.N. peacekeeping efforts in Bosnia have failed utterly.

"I think it's a very difficult issue because there will be bloodshed, but there already has been bloodshed," Mrs. Hutchison said. "I don't see that our presence and U.N. presence has done anything to curb that."

To Your Good Health

DEARDR. DONOHUE: I am writing concerning stomach cramps and diarrhea and all the symptoms of flu setting in. But it is not the flu. What are some of the other causes of such symptoms? Is there a 24-hour condition like the flu? How is it treated? -

ANSWER: You wisely resisted the temptation to use the "stomach flu" label, a misnomer. Flu strikes the respiratory tract, not the stomach. Viruses cause the flu.

Crampy abdominal illnesses and diarrhea arise from any of a variety of germs — viral, bacterial, even parasitic. Many episodes arise from food tainted with those organisms.

The most important facet of treatment is to stay hydrated. Dehydration is a common trap for any patient who might feel too ill to eat. And that brings me around to an apparently helpful recipe to tide one over during such a period. Lots of readers who tried it have written. It's for adults. For infants and youngsters, check with the doctor.

Into a quart of water add three-fourths of a teaspoon of salt, a half-teaspoon of baking soda, a cup of orange juice and 3 to 4 teaspoons of table sugar. Cool the mixture in the refrigerator to make it more palatable. Drink three to four glasses every four hours, during which time you should drink three or four glasses of plain water.

Meanwhile, stay away from caffeinated beverages and milk. You can add salted crackers and boiled starches such as potatoes to the diet. Try it for a day or two as needed.

Medicines such as bismuth subsalicylate (Pepto-Bismol) or loperamide (Imodium) can help alleviate any diarrhea you experience during such an intestinal episode.

As a general thing, you would want to report a temperature greater than 102, as well as any diarrhea lasting more than a couple of days.

Laughing is the sensation of celing good all over, and show-ng it principally in one spot.

Rockets, Olajuwon run over Robinson

By BOB BAUM

AP Sports Writer HOUSTON (AP) - The I-10 series between Houston and San Antonio is over, and the Spurs are road kill.

Perhaps no team has had a more precarious or improbable route to the NBA Finals than the Rockets.

They were defending champions. But after a sixth-place finish in the estern Conference, nobody gave the Rockets much of a chance for a repeat

Now, after coming back from the brink of elimination against Utah and Phoenix, Houston has disposed of San Antonio, the team with the league's best record, and is headed back to the Finals.

"Once again, we proved all the doubters wrong," Houston's Sam Cassell said. "This ball club is a playoff team. When the playoffs come, we know what to do."

The Rockets finished off the Spurs 100-95 Thursday night, putting to rest the homecourt demons that haunted this series. It took six tries, but finally the home team won a game, and Houston won the best-of-7 series 4-2.

"I'm probably the proudest man in the world," Houston coach Rudy Tomjanovich said. "I don't want to take anything away from last year. It was special. I don't want to tarnish that, but right now this was better."

As usual, Hakeem Olajuwon was magnificent. He had 39 points, 17 rebounds and five blocked shots. In six games against the league's MVP, David Robinson, Olajuwon averaged 35.3 points and 12.5 rebounds.

The showdown between these two Texas towers was no contest. Olajuwon's play made his fifth-place finish in this year's MVP voting seem

"I've never seen anyone on this planet play like this guy," Houston's Clyde Drexler said. "He is phenomenal, night in and night out. He does it so easily people come to expect it. That's the ultimate."

Drexler, the Rocket without a championship ring, had a rough start. Thursday night, but he made big plays down the stretch and finished with 16 points and 10 rebounds. Olajuwon's biggest help, though, came from Robert Horry. Shifted to power forward much of the time as coach Rudy Tomjanovich went with a smaller lineup, Horry made six of 11 3-pointers and scored 22 points.

His last 3-pointer, with 1:58 to play, put Houston ahead 97-93, then he clinched the victory by making two free throws 13 seconds from the

"I was feeling it the whole game," Horry said. "When it's a hot gym, I get into the flow of things."

Robinson scored 19 for San Antonio, but missed two free throws and committed a fatal turnover in the final 1:06.

Avery Johnson had 19 points and 10 assists, Sean Elliott scored 18 points and Dennis Rodman had 14 points and 17 rebounds for the Spurs.

Someone asked the Rockets' Kenny Smith if, with all the dramatic comebacks, this was a team of

"I wouldn't say destiny," he said. "I can't predict the future. But when we put our game together, no one can beat us."

The clincher didn't come easily. After Drexler stole Robinson's pass and found Elie for a layup with 5:56 to play, Houston led 92-83.

But San Antonio's Doc Rivers scored seven during a 10-0 run. Robinson capped the rally with a free throw, putting the Spurs ahead 93-92 with 2:42 remaining.

Robinson drew his fifth foul with 9:48 left and went to the bench, but came back for what probably were the most miserable 6 minutes, 15 seconds of his career.

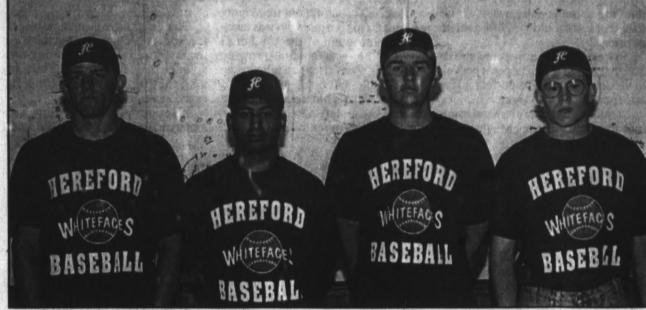

Drexler, who came to his hometown of Houston in a Valentine's Day trade, made two free throws to put the Rockets ahead for good, 94-93 with 2 minutes to play. "We were in position to take it,"

Spurs coach Bob Hill said. "We just couldn't finish it." Robinson, just 6-for-17 from the field for the game was 0-for-3 in the final quarter. After he missed inside, Horry made his final 3-pointer. Robinson also missed two free throws with 1:06 remaining. After Cassell made one of two free throws, Rodman's rebound basket with 28 seconds to go kept San Antonio's fading hopes alive. But Horry was fouled by Rodman and made both free throws San Antonio had won four straight sending the series back to the Alamodome for a deciding Game 7, especially since Houston was playing its 16th game in 30 days.

Pacers' Millers worries about Shaq, 3-pointers

By HANK LOWENKRON

AP Sports Writer INDIANAPOLIS (AP) - Reggie Miller says it's the twin threat of Shaquille O'Neal and 3-point shooting that has the Orlando Magic in position to clinch the Eastern Conference championship tonight.

"The Magic are a very dangerous basketball team with their 3-point threat, as well as Shaquille O'Neal down low," said Miller, who hopes to spark the Indiana Pacers to a victory that would even the series at 3-3 and send it to Orlando for the championship game.
"This is the time I love the best,"

said Miller, who led Indiana in scoring for the sixth consecutive year and has averaged 26.6 points in the first five games of the series

"Our backs are to the wall. Every shot counts from here on out for us. Miller said. "It's definitely a time to take a step forward, especially the game on Friday. It will really show lot of character for this team."

Tonight will be the second time this season Indiana goes into a game knowing its season will end with a the last time, the Pacers extended their season with a 97-95 road victory over New York as Miller scored 37 points in Game 7 of their

"You actually have to go through a Game 6, and a Game 7, to understand that every possession counts, rotations, everybody has to be on the same page. Communication is big," Miller said of a possible advantage his team might have over Orlando.

Miller said the Magic gained maturity while eliminating Chicago in six games and winning the final game in Chiago.

'Chicago, to me, that's when they really grew up. They were going against an experienced and veteran ball club," Miller said. "Horace Grant has helped too. He's been through the wars and I'm sure he's related that to him."

The Pacers also have a player who has been through the wars in Byron Scott, who has been in more playoff games (173) than all but five NBA players in history. He predicts the series is headed back to Orlando.

"I still feel this team is destined to win," he said.

Switzer lays down law for Cowboys

IRVING, Texas (AP) - Dallas Cowboys coach Barry Switzer, in sharp contrast to his laid-back approach last season, delivered a 13-minute, profanity-laced speech to his players Thursday at the start of a minimum.

"Barry told us things will be different from now on and, based on his pre-practice speech to us, they will be different," quarterback Troy Aikman said.

Switzer refused to disclose the content and tenor of his remarks, but players said he reprimanded absent top draft pick Sherman Williams, criticized offensive lineman Nate Newton for being tardy, and declared he would not appoint an assistant head coach.

Rogers' scoreless streak halted; Rangers still win

By JAIME ARON AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) - It doesn't mean much to Kenny Rogers that he pitched the longest stretch of scoreless innings since Orel Hershiser set the major league record with 59 straight in 1988.

In the only other AL game Thursday night, Cleveland beat Chicago 7-4.

Rogers (6-2) moved the ball effectively and kept the Twins off-balance with a good breaking ball. Although he didn't think he had his best stuff, he looked as good as he had since his perfect game for the first six innings.

In that span, Minnesota had only two baserunners, and neither got past first base. Texas hitters, meanwhile, staked Rogers to a 6-0 lead.

Rogers showed he was weakening when he walked Pedro Munoz with one out in the seventh. Jerald Clark singled Munoz to third, then Marty Cordova hit a long sacrifice fly that ended the scoreless streak.

It was the first run off Rogers since Oakland's Mark McGwire hit a leadoff home run in the third inning

Overall, Rogers was tagged with two earned runs in seven innings. He gave up five hits, walked only Munoz and struck out five.

"The streak was in the back of mind, but foremost was to get a good start and win the game," said Rogers, who in the fourth inning broke Charlie Hough's team record of 36

The Los Angeles Dodgers' onenight stand in Atlanta seemed to alter Tommy Lasorda's sense of direction.

"At least we didn't have to go much out of our way, since we were going from Philadelphia back to Los Angeles. (Atlanta) was right on the way, and I'm glad we stopped off," the Dodgers manager said after his team beat the Braves 6-3 Thursday night in a rare one-game series.

In a scheduling quirk brought about by the baseball strike and the 144-game schedule, three clubs hosted one-night series.

The Phillies had the Cubs in town for a few hours and beat the NL Central co-leaders 5-3. The Cardinals, on their way to Cincinnati for a three-game set, took a detour to Montreal and lost 6-2. Pittsburgh finished its three-game series with Cincinnati and won 5-3, ending the Reds' nine-game winning streak.

Los Angeles finished up an East Coast trip that took it to New York, Montreal, Philadelphia and Atlanta.

At Pittsburgh, left-hander Denny Neagle (5-1) extended the longest winning streak of his career to five games, striking out five and scattering five hits in six innings.

World War II POW had continuing struggle to stay alive

From Bataan Death March to prison camps in Japan, Taylor man battled for life

By DON MCALISTER Taylor Daily Press

TAYLOR, Texas - For Hollis Scruggs the fighting of World War II lasted just a few weeks. The next four years became a battle for survival - a battle many of his comrades did not win.

From the brutal Bataan Death March to the frozen mountains of Japan, Scruggs' war was a constant scramble to last one more day in captivity. Until American forces landed on the islands of the defeated Japanese, the future for Scruggs and other American prisoners-of-war remained uncertain.

Now retired in Taylor from his years in wholesale grocery sales, Scruggs talked about Bataan and its aftermath, a time many young Americans know about only dimly.

Hollis Scruggs had a low draft number so he went ahead and joined the Army. After reporting at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, and stopping off at Camp Wallace, he was transferred to El Paso. Scruggs volunteered for a one-year tour in the Philippines because it offered a promotion and advancement in his field.

He had been with the 200th Coastal Artillery just a few months when the war began. The unit assigned to Fort Stasenburg, also known as Clark Field, then Clark Air Base to a generation of Americans who fought in Vietnam. The Americans knew hostilities had started because news of the attack on Pearl Harbor had been received earlier that day.

American units in the Philippines knew the Japanese were already in the area. The Clark Field planes would make regular runs across the Japanese ships approaching the islands, but were not allowed to attack them first.

"We were bombed the same day Pearl Harbor was," Scruggs said. "They got it in the morning. We were eating lunch, and we looked over and thought we saw our planes. We said, Boy, the Navy sure is out today." Shortly after, the bombs started falling - on Dec. 7, 1941. "They were strafing at treetop level," he said. .

The Japanese caught American planes at the perfect time, Scruggs said. They had been out for their morning flights and had landed so the pilots could have lunch. A little while later and the Air Corps units would have all been back in the air. Instead, almost the entire force of B-17s and support aircraft were destroyed on the ground by the Japanese attack.

It was Christmas Eve when the remaining American forces at Clark Field were ordered to move out away from the advancing Japanese armies. The first few hours were disorganized, but by Christmas Day, some order began to emerge in the move, he said.

They made a series of moves from one barrio to another until they arrived on the Bataan Peninsula southwest of Manila.

"As they crowded us, we moved back, trying to destroy the bridges and such behind us."

The embattled troops still hoped that American forces would arrive to relieve them.

"We were told that. We didn't really know. I don't know if we believed it or not. I don't think we did really.

"When we moved into Bataan, I and three other boys went back behind the lines and stole some gasoline. We got a radio receiver out of a B-17 that had been bombed. We were getting stateside stations. We knew at that time what was going on."

The American forces were moved steadily down the Bataan Peninsula in a three-month battle that took its toll of the defenders in illness and battle deaths and injuries. Finally, Scruggs said, they were backed into an air field just across a stretch of Manila Bay from the island of Corregidor, where Gen. Douglas Mac Arthur had kept his headquarters until ordered to slip out of the Philippines by President Franklin Roosevelt.

As they reached the tip of Bataan with the Japanese approaching from the mainland side, the U.S. forces on Corregidor began firing artillery over the trapped Americans' heads and the Japanese returned the fire.

"We were assembled there and told to disable our weapons, take the firing pins out, shoot'em into the mud so the Japs couldn't use them. The back unit was told to take a machine gun to our

They surrendered April 9, 1942, and the Bataan Death March started. Thousands of Americans were brutally force-marched back down the peninsula without rest, food or water. Nearly 10,000 American and Filipino troops died just during the march. "Right at first it wasn't too bad," Scruggs said. "But by the second day it started getting rough. They wouldn't give us any water; wouldn't give us anything to eat."

Anyone who became ill or too weak to keep up was killed. Scruggs said trying to get a drink could be fatal.

"They had little artesian free-flowing wells alongside the road," he said. "If you tried to stop and get a drink, you were history. If you were ill and couldn't keep up, they'd bayonet you or behead you or shoot you or whatever."

There were very few short rests, occasionally at night. And little or nothing in the way of food or water.

"It was four days, I believe, before we finally got to stop in a mule barn or something and rest. And they did give us some rice balls then.

Scruggs started off with some comrades from his unit, but along the road most were separated.

How did he survive when so many

"That's a good question," he laughed. "It would take you two days to try to figure that out. Just trying to do what they said and scavenge whatever food you could find. Get any water you could to drink. We didn't have any water to bathe for at least

Scruggs' group was sent to Camp Cabanatuan, then in June were moved to Camp O'Donnell in Manila. For the next year, they were imprisoned there under terrible conditions. Occasionally e taken out for w building airfields or revetments for

Then in September of 1943, Scruggs got beri beri. The disease is caused by an absence of thiamine, found in meat and the coating of grains and was brought on by the inadequate diet of the prisoners. It is often fatal if not treated. Scruggs was moved, he said, to the last row of the "Zero Ward," the place they sent the hopeless cases in their poorly equipped hospital.

But he got lucky.

"He was a Navy doctor. I wish I knew his name. Of course, he didn't have any medicine, but he was a Navy doctor. He came in and said he had one bottle of vitamin pills. He came and sat on the end of my bunk and said, 'You've been here a long time. If you don't mind, since this isn't enough to go around, I'll just try them all on you.' I said, 'You bet!'' The vitamins saved Scruggs' life and got him back on his feet. He had been in the hospital from September to July. People were dying in his prison camp at the rate of about 100

In March of 1944, while working on Lipa Airfield, the prisoners were bombed by American airplanes, the first time they had seen U.S. forces since the surrender nearly two years

Five U.S. planes attacked the field. "Boy, they came in there and they tore that thing up. They strafed the planes then left. Someone said, 'Just watch, they'll be back at 2 o'clock this afternoon.' And they did."

On Saturday, Reeve fell headfirst off his horse when it stopped abruptle in front of a jump during an equestre comptition. He was wearing small riding helmet and a padde prisoners were held in while the prisoners huddled in trenches between them.

"They got all five of those barracks, but didn't hit a man.

One of the planes was flying so low, it collided with a Japanese plane and crashed, Scruggs said, but the POWs weren't allowed to go get the dead pilot's body.

That was the first warning the Americans were coming back.

"We were surprised. We didn't know they were our planes until we got to see the insignias on them.

"Those Japs scattered like a covey quail! Everybody was hollering! They were trying to quiet us down. The Jap guards weren't there for a while. They were running like everything.

With the allies threatening to recapture the Philippines, the prisoners were moved to Bilabid prison in Manila, then placed on ships.

"It was a cargo ship. It had holds, and this one was full of coal. They put us in on top of that coal, then lashed the hatches down. There was just one small hole you could get

They were kept in the hold for days until the ship arrived at Formosa, now known as Taiwan. They stayed there for a short time in a school building.

'We could hear American planes flying overhead just about anytime we wanted to listen.

The convoys carrying prisoners and other cargo were repeatedly attacked during the trip to Hong Kong and on to Japan.

"I think we lost about five ships in that deal. I was up on deck one time, I had volunteered to throw the dead overboard. The Americans were torpedoing the ships. They had no way to know we were on board. At one time I saw a torpedo go in front of our ship."

One of their guards had been educated in a California university and had an idea what was going on with the war. He called the group of prisoners out, dismissed the interpreter and told them in English that they should stay out of trouble and behave.

"Do what I tell you. I've got to do what I've got to do.' And he said, 'The war is closer to being over with than you realize. If you all do right, you'll be able to go home to your families."

He told the prisoners he had to make them work, but he would treat them as well as he could.

They were unloaded in bitter cold in Japan and placed in unheated goat sheds. They each had one blanket.

"To keep warm in those goat sheds, five of us would get together.

We'd pool our blankets, and we'd sleep on two and cover with three. That way, we'd stay halfway warm. There were no fires.

They were placed on a train in Tokyo heading for an iron mine in the

"I took pneumonia in Tokyo. They wanted to leave me there, but I didn't want to stay, so I offered this old boy that was with me - the best you could get of anything was something to eat-I offered him my ration of rice, because I couldn't eat it, if he would just cover for me and get me up to this camp where we were going. I got there and they put me in the hospital."

That was at Cindow, Japan. Scruggs survived again.

The men would work in four feet of snow each day in open pit mines pushing rail cars of iron oar to a conveyer belt.

"We would work two weeks, then we'd get off one day to wash our one outfit of clothes and take a bath. They did have baths there."

There was no heat in the barracks. "If you put your shoes down there when you came in from work, they were frozen to the floor by morning.

Then the Americans came again. First they could hear the planes and one Australian officer who had some money bribed a guard to get a paper that gave them some information about what was happening outside the camp.

"We would work every day. This one day, they called us out and one Jap got up on his soap box and said 'No work today.' Then he'd come out the next day and say, 'Well, we going to take another day off."

By then the two atomic bombs had been dropped on Japan. The prisoners were not told, of course, that their captors had surrendered.

Americans and Japanese have made an agreement. We will fight no more! You will be turned loose to go

At that time, Scruggs said, the guards who had been inside the compound were moved to the outside, and the prisoners were "free to do what we wanted to."

With the surrender, roof markings were placed to show that the buildings were a POW camp. Soon supplies rained from the sky as American B-17 bombers flew overhead and parachuted boxes containing food and clothing.

"Everybody got sick that day from eating too much," Scruggs said. The POWs were put on a train by their Japanese guards, who then disappeared. At the station they were moved to U.S. Navy landing craft and onto hospital ships in Tokyo harbor. After receiving medical care, they were sent back to the Philippines.

"The mess hall on the ship was open 24 hours a day," he said.
The first time his parents knew he was alive, Scruggs said, was from a buy Japanese cars. And we don't buy telegram saying he was a liberated prisoner of war.

From there, they returned to the

"One day this fellow got up - one United States, Scruggs said he had that had some sense - and said, 'The about six months leave accumulated, so he was actually allowed to go home to Temple long before his official discharge from the Army.

He went to work in the wholesale grocery business, eventually retiring from Brenham Wholesale Grocery Co.

His wife, Helen Scruggs, said they met when they double dated with some other friends Christmas of 1945. They married in December of 1946. They have three married sons, six grandchildren and one great-grandchild and "a brand new great, grandson-in-law.'

Scruggs has stayed in touch with many of the men he met during the ordeal a half century ago, traveling to reunions around the country. But he has never returned to the Philippines or Japan.

Is he bitter toward the Japanese? "Oh, not really. There were some good ones and some bad ones. The young rascals were really rough on us, but the older guys, the veterans, were pretty good."

"But," Helen noted, "we don't anything that says 'Made in Japan.'

Veteran returns to Germany, recalls time as war prisoner

By MAGGIE SIEGER

The Galveston Co. Daily News GALVESTON, Texas - County Commissioner Ed Stuart thought he heard an angel singing 51 years ago as he plummeted toward a hostile German countryside from 17,000 feet dead." in the sky.

"It was a bright, sunshiny Sunday morning," Stuart recalled, standing next to a restored B-17 bomber at the Lone Star Flight Museum in Galveston. "I looked down and all I could see were clouds and earth," Stuart, 74, said. "I thought I heard somebody singing and wondered if it was an angel."

Stuart is attending a reunion in Germany this week with about 20 other former POWs to celebrate the 50th anniversary of his liberation from a prisoner-of-war camp.

On July 16, 1944, Stuart was a
23-year-old navigator in the U.S. Army Air Corps. On just his eighth mission, two German fighters attacked his B-17. The Americans had been on their way to bomb an aircraft base near Munich. They never made

The plane developed engine trouble, fell back from the group and was easy pickings for two Focke-Wulf 190 fighters. The plane was shot down near Nuremberg.

Stuart said he'll never forget the pilot's call to bail out, or the bombardier behind him, urging Stuart to hurry up and jump.

"I was kneeling at the door and just dove, like I was going into a the prisoners were given to eat, along swimming pool," Stuart said. "There with goodies like American eigarettes was no sensation of falling, just floating on my back. I stuck my arms and legs out to keep from spinning, cigarettes were like gold," Stuart counted to 15 and pulled my cord. Thankfully, it opened.

Two members of the nine-man crew died that day. The radio operator never made it out of the plane. Stuart and the pilot recovered the co-pilot's body from a field after they were lists of the best restaurants all over "The last contact we had from (the radio operator) was that he was bleeding all over the place," Stuart said. "Then the intercom went

Stuart landed, uninjured, near a forest, which hid him from about a dozen armed farmers. But he was captured by German police as he followed a creek in the opposite direction.

He was turned over to the German air force about 20 minutes later, and reunited with his pilot and bombardier. Stuart said he was lucky to have been handed over to the military so quickly. While in prison camp, he learned other American fliers had been hanged by civilians.

The three men spent a day at an "interrogation center" in Frankfurt, then about a week in a temporary camp until they were shipped by train to Stalag Luft 1, on the Baltic Sea outside Barth, Germany.

Across the bay was Peenemunde, the German rocket factory run by Werner Von Braun. At night, Allied prisoners could see bombs being dropped on the compound. At times they'd see experimental jets fly overhead, Stuart said.

Times got really tough in the POW camp after the Battle of the Bulge, when Red Cross packages were held up for months, Stuart said. The packages contained most of the food and chocolate.

"I didn't smoke, and American said. "So I'd trade them for chocolate. When it got really bad, I still had a little reserve. And it was nourishment, too. At least more than the cigarettes."

The 20 men Stuart lived with made the world and talked incessantly about what they wanted to eat, Stuart said, flipping through the diary he kept while in camp.

In one section, each page is headed with the name of a state or country. Neatly printed below the names are lists of restaurants, addresses and special dishes.

"You might think a group of boys that age talked about girls," Stuart laughed. "But all we wanted was food."

The 8,000 prisoners were liberated May 1, 1945, by the Russian Army, which arrived in camp "riding in surreys, wagons, every old thing," Stuart said.

The Russians wanted to send the group to Odessa, Russia, but the ranking American refused. So the former prisoners were left to their own devices, Stuart said.

It wasn't until May 13 that the men finally got out of the camp. The prisoners walked to a nearby airfield and were taken to France by American

Moment of adventure found in ride on river ferry

EDITOR'S NOTE - There are still really in charge.

ew of the river ferries left, purring "He loves to ride with me, but a few of the river ferries left, purring their way from shore to shore, carrying motorists and their cars on a brief adventure, a few minutes of the life that used to be. Mark Twain would have liked that.

By CARL MANNING Associated Press Writer

FREDERICKSBURG, Mo. (AP) -Down the winding rural road, past the green meadows of feeding cattle, Spud, the dog, eagerly waits with wagging tail for the next car to be ferried across the Gasconade River.

When the ferry finishes its brief journey to the opposite shore, the black shepherd-lab mix leaps to land for a watchful farewell to those either going to, or coming from, Hermann, Mo., with its wineries, antique shops, and bed-and-breakfast inns.

It's a scene repeated maybe several times a day, or maybe not more than once or twice. It all depends on the traffic through this tiny riverside settlement that traces its beginnings an initial river. The duler live ton ferries are on the Mississippi River.

Jack Hynes, waterways administo the 1840s.

But it's a scene growing more rare with each passing generation. A century or so ago, hundreds of ferries spanned waterways linking farmers to markets, friends and families before bridges provided that needed

Fast-forward to present day, and there are only six ferries operating in Missouri, including Spud's boat, the Roy J.

Actually, the ferry is captained by Albert Deppe Jr., who hasn't quite reasons gotten around to telling Spud who's traffic.

when it gets hot he likes to get off quickly. Sometimes he'll just jump in for a swim," said the 58-year-old Deppe, who's operated the Roy J. since 1988.

As Deppe guides the ferry with its electric motor along its steel cable spanning the river, he leaves little doubt he's doing what he wants to do.

"It's a nice job. You are meeting different people all the time and some of them are interesting. All walks of life come through here," said Deppe, who grew up in the area and owns a farm a few miles away.

Yet, he realizes his is a vanishing

"Years ago, we had ferries every six or seven miles along the river and this is the only one left," Deppe said of his ferry, one of two operating on an inland river. The other five toll

Jack Hynes, waterways adminis-trator for the Missouri Highway and Transportation Department, said two ferries - at Canton and Dorena receive federal funds. The rest survive on the tolls they collect. The Dorena ferry closed three years ago but is in the process of re-establishing service in the next few months, Hynes said.

Ferries have their limitations. They often can't run during winter months because of river ice, and many choose not to operate at night for safety reasons and because of a lack of

The Roy J. is the third ferry to operate in this spot since 1886, when a wooden ferry hauled wagons and horses across the river.

The system is simple: Drive until the gravel road meets the water, honk the car horn and wait. If Deppe and Spud are on the other side, it only takes a couple of minutes to return and touch the shore with a gentle "And believe me if they don't see you in 10 seconds, they are honking. They want to get across quick,"

Deppe said.
The ferry, with its Coast Guard approval prominently posted, can carry two cars - three if they are small - along what Deppe calls "the scenic shortcut to Hermann."

With white hair and matching mustache, Deppe says most passen-gers are people "just moving through and want to take a different route."

He charges $2 for a one-way crossing or $3 for a round trip. For frequent travelers, he sells a $15 card good for 15 one-way trips.

During the busy months of April through October, Deppe's ferry may carry 200 people across the river in a weekend. He often spends six hours at a stretch making the back-and-forth run without a break.

The quickness of the trip leaves little time for chatter between passengers and Deppe, but there's always time for a few questions.

"You get a lot of questions about how the ferry operates and about the fishing in the area," Deppe said.

"Some of them are coming from the wineries and they are pretty well tanked up. You have to watch them real close," he said.

It's more than tourists who keep the ferry running. There are a few regulars who would rather go the 14 miles to Hermann by ferry than add another 10 miles to make the trip by Deppe points to one car leaving, noting the driver is a regular, an elderly man who drives every morning to Hermann for breakfast and church services.

Deppe also rents camping space in the area, 34 canoes and five jonboats for those who want to cruise the river or find a good place to fish, And he sells fishing supplies, bait, staples such as insect spray and cigarettes from his concrete block basement office.

"Sometimes they catch something and sometimes they don't." He doesn't provide guarantees.

Names in the news

LONDON (AP) - Rod Stewart is not a follower. And that's a bad thing.

Despite doctors' warnings and steadily diminishing drinking buddies among fellow rockers, Stewart won't give up alcohol.

"So many people don't do anything now," he told the British trade paper New Musical Express recently. "They've all dried out, it's all carrot juice. I can't have that."

Stewart, 50, says he needs alcohol to carry him through a show.

"I started to cut down 10 years ago - getting off the port and brandies because I had a vocal coach who said, You're just ruining your voice,'

"I've found a drink now - rum and coke," he said. "If I have a rum and coke before I go on and a couple halfway through the show, it doesn't have any effect at all."

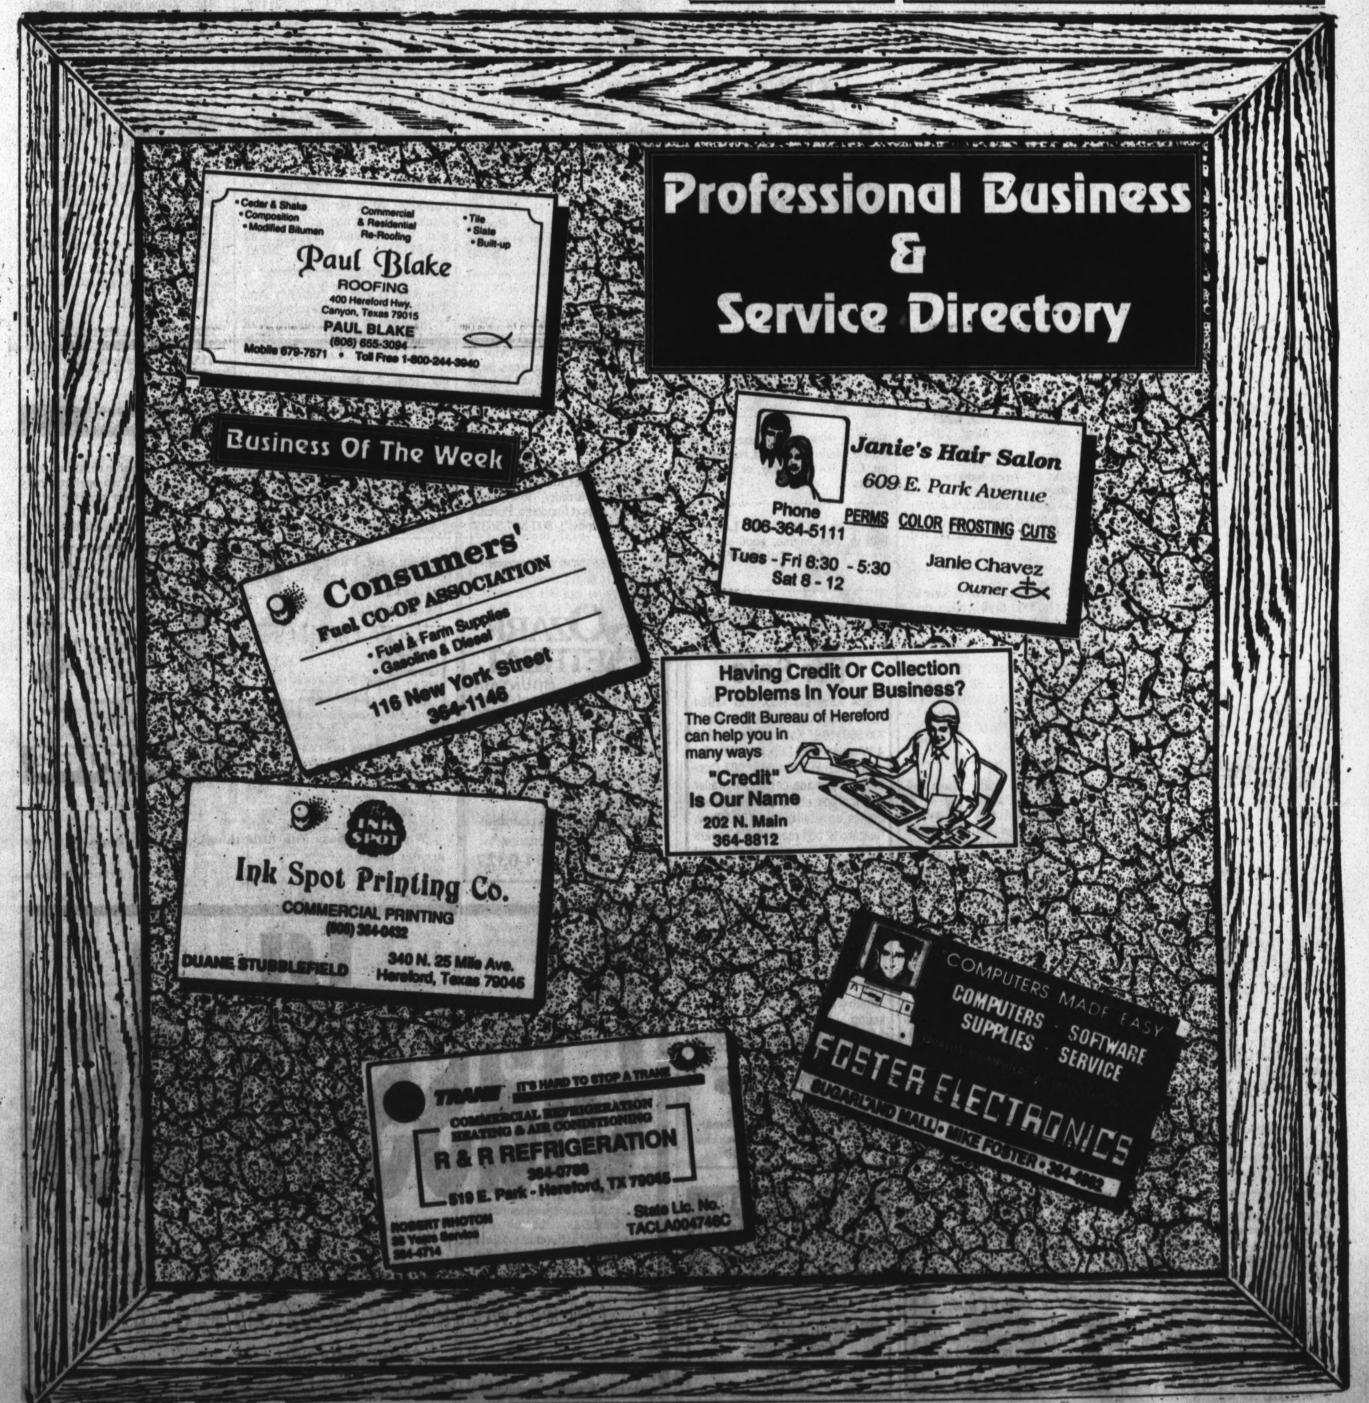

EDINBURG, Pa. (AP) - If Rodney King is running from the cameras, western Pennsylvania isn't the place

King, 30, says he was looking at farmhouses around New Castle, where his wife has several relatives, when he was arrested May 21 and charged with drunken driving. And a trip to buy men's clothes 10 days. ago made the front page of the New Castle News.

King, whose videotaped beating by police led to the 1992 Los Angeles riots, was ordered Tuesday to stand trial on the drunken-driving charge. He could be jailed for a month and banned from driving in Pennsylvania for a year if convicted.

Pittsburgh physicians use prayer as part of treatment for patients

By JEFFREY BAIR Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) - A trip to the doctor typically ends with a prescription, a pat on the back and a bill. Three idealists in one of the city's poorest neighborhoods have added God to the mix.

The doctors at the new North Side Christian Health Center ask patients to pray with them at the end of each appointment.

"I've not had anyone refuse," said Dr. Daniel Holt, who abandoned dreams of being a pastor to treat the poor. "One woman reached out gave me a hug when we were done."

The doctors, who do not discriminate by religion, say an experimental arrangement with a hospital lets them minister as they heal. Since the clinic opened in January, Drs. Holt, Todd Wahrenberger and Mark Guy have spent a day or two a week there.

The rest of the week, they treat residents of the middle-class suburb of West View.

In effect, the doctors have surrendered one-third of their earning

The North Side clinic does not make money. One-third of the 54,000 people in the neighborhood are poor under the federal government's definition. Half of the patients seen in the clinic's first three months had no health insurance. People pay only what they can afford.

"So maybe we don't drive Mercedeses. I mean, Dan might have trouble starting his Volkswagen every once in awhile, but we're not hurting that much," Wahrenberger said. Similar clinics operate in Baltimore and Boston, part of an effort to accommodate doctors to help ease a nationwide shortage of general practitioners in U.S. cities.

At the last stage of medical school, the doctors approached Mercy Hospital, located in another part of the city, with their idea for a clinic. They agreed to work for a salary at the hospital's office in West View in exchange for a $125,000 grant to finance the nonprofit clinic on the North Side.

Until the clinic opened, many of the area residents relied on emergency rooms for their health care or were forced to travel to see a physician.

"I was going some distance to see octor, and I didn't like him," said

Daniel Miller, a 70-year-old retired hotel worker with high blood pressure. "And it's a pain in the rear to have to go over to Allegheny General, so this is really ideal for us. ... I really like Dr. Wahrenberger, even if he is on a no-smoking kick like most doctors.' The doctors said their religions have taught them to serve God in whatever career they choose. They first discussed founding a Christian clinic while they were undergraduate students at Gannon University in Erie. The idea gained favor as they built houses during a missionary visit to Kentucky.

Guy, 31, was most reluctant of the three, wanting to treat farmers and retirees. Later, he experienced an epiphany about the clinic on a Saturday morning and called his college buddies right away.

Holt, 30, joined after considering a seminary and having doubts about becoming a gynecologist. Wahrenberger, 30, was the driving force. He volunteered at another city clinic and wanted to apply its ideas on the North Side, where he lives and attends church.

The doctors advocate "wholeperson care." The most frequent diagnoses in the early going have been high-blood pressure and depression. General practice doctors are allowed to practice psychiatry, allowing the clinic's physicians to address the ills of the mind as well as the body.

Anything complicated might be referred to another doctor, and the physicians are not above begging. Wahrenberger wanted to send one man with a broken foot to a bone specialist recently.

"It took five or six calls before I was able to find someone to see him. In 1995, it is hard to find a doctor who will treat anyone with his type of insurance, which is basically no insurance," he said.

The doctors hope to hire a social worker to help patients obtain government services and a fourth doctor to be at the clinic full time.

"Maybe they're doing OK medically, but they can't get to sleep at night because they've got an apartment with bullet holes in the walls," Holt said of his patients. "We need someone to get them to the right housing office and get them another

Historians believe the practice of singing hymns in church was popularized by Saint Ambrose In the fourth century.
