Weinberger indictment fleshes out who told who when; Bush was at meeting

WASHINGTON (AP) - Special Iran-Contra prosecutors have concluded that President Reagan knew about the plan to swap arms for hostages from the beginning and was warned repeatedly that it was illegal.

That conclusion is in the indictment returned this week against former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. The indictment says prosecutors drew the picture of Reagan's role from Weinberger's extensive notes from the period.

The indictment obtained by independent counsel Lawrence Walsh charges Weinberger with five felony counts of lying and covering up the Iran-Contra affair. One count accuses him of concealing the existence of 1,700 pages of his personal notes from 1985 and 1986. The notes were found in the Library of Congress.

Weinberger, the highest-ranking Reagan administration official charged in the case, vigorously denied the allegations. The Washington Post reported today that prosecutors hope to use Weinberger's notes and other evidence to show that in three White House meetings in November 1986, Reagan and other top administration officials agreed on a story line that hid the president's role in the arms shipments. The newspaper quoted unnamed sources familiar with both sides of the case.

Reagan's own statements on Iran-Contra have varied widely. In March 1987, he acknowledged during a nationally televised speech that the scheme was an arms-for-hostages swap. Later, he denied it.

In many cases, he simply pleaded an inability to recall. "One thing still upsetting me, however, is that no one kept proper records of meetings or decisions," Reagan said in the March 1987 speech.

The former president's Washington attorney, Theodore Olson, declined comment Wednesday on the indictment's allegations on Reagan's role in Iran-Contra.

The indictment's central allegation about Reagan - that he knew of the Iran initiative by November 1985 - is not new. Congressional committees reached the same conclusion in their 1987 report on the Iran-Contra scandal.

"Yes, we knew different pieces of this," but the Weinberger indictment fleshes it out, said Tom Blanton, executive director of the National Security Archives. The non-profit organization collects documents on foreign policy and national security issues.

According to the indictment, National security adviser Robert McFarlane told Reagan, Weinberger and Secretary of State George Shultz in August 1985 about an Israeli proposal to sell arms to Iran to gain the release of American hostages.

Weinberger told McFarlane on Nov. 20, 1985, he objected to the shipment of Hawk missiles to Iran in exchange for hostages, but McFarlane replied Reagan had decided to do so through Israel.

Weinberger warned Reagan a few days after the Nov. 24, 1985, shipment of 18 Hawk missiles to Iran that such shipments were illegal.

McFarlane outlined a plan for additional arms sales to Iran at a Dec. 7, 1985, White House meeting, but Weinberger again argued the sales were illegal. "President Reagan responded that he could answer charges of illegality but that he could not answer the charge that he had passed up a chance to free the hostages," the indictment said.

Three days later, McFarlane told Reagan and others he opposed additional arms sales but that the United States needed to replace TOW missiles that Israel had shipped to Iran in August 1985.

At a Jan. 7, 1986, White House meeting, "the president favored the plan to sell missiles to Iran, through Israel, in exchange for the release of American hostages," the indictment said. Then-Vice President George Bush attended this meeting, the indictment said.

Reagan signed a document authorizing the arms sale plan 10 days later.

Hereford residents models for kids' book

By GEORGIA TYLER
Staff Writer

Illustrating a children's book turned out to be an undertaking the likes of which Jena Rawley-Whitaker had never imagined.

In her first go at book illustrating, the Hereford artist never met the author until the book was a finished fact. Her watercolor paintings were done from the text for each page.

The best things she had going for her may have been the approach she took for the characters in the book, Fairy Tea. Real life people were models for the book people.

Adventures of two little girls in a garden are told in the book. The artist's daughter, Elizabeth Secrest, 13, and Kali Hall, eight, daughter of Lori and Scott Hall, are the girls.

Grandpa Green and Nana Green will be recognized by friends and family as John Thames and Mary Fraser. Auntie Yellow and Auntie Blue are Ruth McBride and Kathryn Chapman, respectively.

Fairy fancies in the book bear the likenesses of a number of children in the Church of the Nazarene Sunday school. Larger fancies painted in the book resemble the artist's son, Jensen, as well as Seth and Brian Laing.

Since the artist specializes in portraiture, she worked on the paintings from a portfolio of photographs she took of her subjects.

In scenes on a page, she arranged the subjects in the manner in which she wanted to paint them.

Illustrator and book

Jena Rawley-Whitaker illustrated a children's book, Fairy Tea, using Hereford residents as models for the characters in the book.

the moods she desired, Rawley-Whitaker estimates she snapped more than 500 photographs of them.

She was engaged for the project by a publisher then operating in New Mexico, but now moved to Maine.

"The publisher saw an ad in an art magazine about my father's gallery in Ruidoso, N.M.," explained Rawley-Whitaker. The ad featured a painting she did.

"She filed it away and when this book came up, she remembered it and got in touch," said the artist.

From the time Rawley-Whitaker started the project with photographs until she finished, seven months elapsed.

"When I started painting, I had to finish one about every two days," she said. She did 47 paintings, each 15 by 20, for the book.

Besides the paintings of the young persons and adults, the book is lavishly illustrated with flower gardens and an individual flower on each page.

The author of Fairy Tea, Annie Ullrich, is English and based her book on her experiences as a child with her grandparents.

The artist will introduce her book to Hereford Saturday at an autograph party, from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. at the E.B. Black House. Interested persons are invited to attend.

House votes down supercollider funds

WASHINGTON (AP) - Backers of the super collider walked around the House floor shellshocked after lawmakers voted to eliminate funding for the giant atom smasher.

"I'm stunned," said Randi Thompson, the collider's chief lobbyist in Capitol Hill, moments after the House voted late Wednesday to kill federal funding for the $8.25 billion particle accelerator.

By a 232-181 vote, the House shocked supporters of the high-energy physics project being built near Waxahachie - and foes as well.

"This was the bottom of the ninth, my last at-bat," said Rep. Dennis Eckart, D-Ohio, who introduced the amendment to slash funding. Eckart is retiring at the end of the year.

Last year, 165 House members supported a similar measure.

Wednesday's vote amended a $21.8 billion energy and water development bill, the first 1993 appropriations measure, and provided only $34 million to phase out ongoing activities at the collider.

President Bush had asked for $650 million for the collider. The House Appropriations Committee had approved $483.7 million for the new fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1.

Eckart, who has sought for years to halt the collider, said he took no joy in a victory even he had not anticipated.

"It did of self-inflicted wounds," he said.

While the vote in the full House does not kill the project, it is a devastating setback and now forces supporters to direct their attention to the Senate, which has yet to vote on 1993 appropriations.

Backers said the collider was hurt by the House's rejection last week of a balanced-budget constitutional amendment.

"I didn't have, even in my worst-case scenario, this bad a vote. But, the mood of the Congress, or of the House at least, was to take a scalp and take it home," said Rep. Joe Barton, R-Texas, in whose district the collider site is located.

Opponents repeatedly had argued that a nation with a debt approaching $4 trillion and an annual deficit expected to hit $400 billion this year could not afford the project.

To date, nearly $1 billion in federal funds and $200 million in Texas money has been spent on the project, which would be the world's largest scientific experiment.

"I guess the balanced-budget amendment (debate) has really forced us to have some reality," Eckart said. "Members found themselves within a few days of voting for a balanced-budget amendment now trying to justify a project that, as I said, was mismanaged and of little benefit to them in their districts."

Ms. Thompson, the lobbyist, said she had not foreseen defeat. But in hindsight, she said, "It was too close to the balanced-budget amendment. Any project having to face a vote this week would have a very tough time passing."

Also playing into the mix was the House Bank check-writing scandal, some anti-Texas sentiment and the fact this is an election year, said Barton and others.

"Texas, Texas, Texas. Is this bash Texas tonight?" asked Rep. Robert A. Roe, D-N.J.

Secondhand smoke is child threat

EPA report warns about severe risks to health

WASHINGTON (AP) - An Environmental Protection Agency report concludes that secondhand tobacco smoke poses severe health risks to children, causing thousands of respiratory illnesses annually, sources familiar with the study say.

The draft EPA report, being presented to the agency's science advisory panel today, also raises concerns that tobacco smoke may be linked to mysterious sudden infant death syndrome, or SIDS.

The cause of SIDS is not known, but the EPA study suggests there may be relationship with infants' exposure to secondhand tobacco smoke either before or after birth. It offered no conclusive proof.

The report, which is based on an examination of dozens of scientific studies and aims to assess the health risks from tobacco smoke to nonsmokers, has been under review at the EPA for more than a year.

Agency spokesmen said they could provide no details about the draft study until it was presented to the advisory board, which reviewed a preliminary draft previously and asked that the section on impact to children be expanded.

More than a year ago, the advisory panel generally endorsed the study's findings that secondhand tobacco smoke should be classified as a carcinogen and a known cause of lung cancer. The preliminary study estimated that tobacco smoke in the air may account for as many as 3,800 cancer deaths, but sources said that figure was being revised in the latest draft.

They said the new study concludes that secondhand tobacco smoke is believed to account for more than 200,000 serious respiratory ailments in children annually, including bronchitis and pneumonia.

The report also suggests a direct link between secondhand tobacco smoke and asthma, an affliction that affects tens of thousands of children. It says children are twice as likely to develop asthma if they live in homes where at least 10 cigarettes are smoked daily.

John Banzhaf, executive director of the anti-smoking group Action on Smoking and Health, called such findings a major step toward getting legislation passed on the federal and state levels to ban smoking in the work environment and in public places and may be used in custody cases.

"It will provide strong additional support for legislative efforts to ban smoking in public places," he said.

Previous studies have suggested that passive smoke may pose serious health problems for children.

A study last year by the government's National Center for Health Statistics found that children in non-smoking households were likely to be healthier than children who live with smokers.

That study found 4.1 percent of young children in households with current smokers were in fair to poor health, compared with 2.4 percent of children who were never exposed to tobacco smoke.

The Tobacco Institute, an industry group, dismissed the study at the time as inconclusive. The industry group also criticized the EPA's preliminary findings in April 1991 when its early draft report on secondhand tobacco smoke was submitted to the science advisory panel.

Bush to speak to Republicans in state convention in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) - President Bush is hoping the third time is a charm as he returns to Dallas for the Republican convention that starts today.

The president is scheduled for a Saturday speech that could serve as a dress rehearsal for his renomination at the party's national convention in Houston this summer.

Bush's speech to the closing session of the three-day convention will be his third appearance in Dallas, Ross Perot's hometown, in the last few weeks.

Perot is mulling an independent run for president, an unusual challenge to Bush in his adopted home state.

Although GOP officials voice optimism about Bush's prospects against Democrat Bill Clinton and billionaire Perot in Texas this November, the president apparently isn't taking anything for granted.

He was in Dallas on May 16 to speak at Southern Methodist University, and on May 30 attended a $2 million fundraiser in the city. He also spent two days in his own hometown of Houston in mid-May.

Bush swept the Republican primary in March, winning all 111 Texas delegates to the GOP National Convention.

No Democrat has been elected president without carrying Texas, so Clinton's interest in the state is obvious, and he appeared at the state Democratic convention earlier this month.

But recent opinion polls have shown Perot attracting strong support among Texans. The tycoon's upstart challenge has seen voter petitions place his name on the presidential ballot in several states, including Texas, where 228,000 signatures were submitted.

Also during the convention, abortion opponents say they are prepared to fight, if necessary, any effort to change the party's stance against most abortions.

"Pro-lifers are gearing up for an all-out showdown with pro-abortion Republicans in a fight over the retention of the pro-life plank in the party platform," said Bill Price, president of Texans United for Life.

Perot testing appeal in California

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) - Ross Perot is leaving the television studio for three days of campaigning, testing his appeal in person and starting big - in California.

The billionaire Texas businessman planned two rallies today in California, where his supporters chalked up another success toward getting the likely independent candidate on November general-election ballots.

"This is a chance for us to congratulate each other more than it is a chance to see Mr. Perot," said Joey Belleau, a Perot volunteer from Santa Rosa. "It's great that he'll be here, but in some ways it's secondary."

California is the 16th state in which the Perot campaign apparently has met ballot requirements.

Perot has said he will finance his likely independent presidential campaign, but will accept $5 donations. However, organizers of his California effort said at a briefing Wednesday they were accepting donations up to $1,000 - the maximum allowed by law.

Perot was visiting Sacramento and the Orange County Republican stronghold of Irvine before heading to Denver on Friday and to Boston on Saturday for a parade and rally.

Along the way, Perot can assess support for his effort in three distinct political environments, yet all areas where polls show Perot leading President Bush and Democrat Bill Clinton.

The trip also will highlight one of the remarkable dynamics of the Perot candidacy: he saps strength from Bush in areas like California and throughout the Republican-leaning West, but more from Clinton in traditionally Democratic regions like the Northeast.

The California stops are part of a busy political week in the state, whose 54 electoral votes represent 20 percent of the 270 needed to win the White House. Clinton campaigned in California this week and Bush was flying there today for two days of political events.

Perot has vaulted to the top of national polls with a campaign anchored largely on television interviews. He first publicly mentioned the idea of running last week on CNN's "Larry King Live" program, for example, and, like Clinton, spent two hours last week fielding questions from "Today" show viewers.

But for the next few days, he's acting more like a traditional candidate, providing a peek at the style he'll bring to the fall campaign.

"Isn't he getting special coverage because he acts differently from other politicians?" said Duke University professor James David Barber, who studies the presidency. "The argument can be made that the more he looks the same the more it hurts him. But I'm not sure."

Campaign strategists say it's unclear whether conventional campaigning will affect Perot's unconventional image, but say he has little choice.

Problems of county told HBR

County Judge Tom Simons gave a "state of the county" message when he appeared as guest speaker for the monthly luncheon meeting of the Hereford Board of Realtors Tuesday at the Senior Citizen Center.

Simons said county government is faced with the same situation as local business and industry... "the cost of business keeps going up and our tax base is not increasing."

The judge recalled that when he moved to Hereford some 20 years ago, "business was flourishing and, while it probably was not as good as we thought it was, the economy now is definitely not as bad as some seem to think it is." He pointed to some of the leading industries located here which help keep the economy stable.

Simons added that area towns, like Dalhart and Plainview, which have had some success lately with industrial development "are not overnight success stories. They have been working for years, just as we have here."

The judge said a group was currently working on an industrial prospect which could be of great benefit. "If we don't get this one, I am convinced that we will hit a home run and that, in turn, will lead to other successes."

From his position as county judge, Simons said he felt one of the real negatives for the community in recent years was voting to make the sale of alcoholic beverages legal. "I am not taking a holier than thou attitude, it's just that I can see the negative results of that decision."

Glenda Keenan, Realtor board president, also introduced Margie Daniels, Hereford Senior Citizens Association executive director, to review the progress of the Senior Center here.

A.O. Thompson Abstract and Hagar & Associates hosted the monthly meeting. About 25 Realtors associates and guests attended the meeting.

One-third of all glass containers being recycled

Americans are recycling nearly one third of all glass containers they buy, according to the Glass Packaging Institute (GPI). That means that 31 percent of glass containers are being collected and recycled into new bottles or other valuable products such as glassphalt (a substitute for asphalt).

Glass containers are an integral part of the 3,500 curbside recycling programs nationwide and the glass container industry is working hard to create more opportunities for consumers to recycle. In the last six years, GPI has spent more than 60 percent of its budget to assist in the development and implementation of local recycling programs.

And it's working. Despite a decrease in the number of glass container plants in the U.S. (there are currently 76 plants), the purchase of cullet (used or broken glass) has increased by 82 percent in the past five years.

Consumers can help recycling efforts by doing three very simple but important things:

- Lightly rinse containers after use;
- Sort bottles by color whenever possible;
- Remove metal lids from bottles before placing them in the recycling bin; and

-Don't mix ceramic mugs or stemware with containers.

Most importantly, consumers can help glass recycling, and the environment, by buying products packaged in 100 percent recyclable glass rather than difficult-to-recycle packaging. When stores don't carry favorite brands in glass, consumers should ask the store manager to start.

TO find out more about local glass recycling programs, consumers should contact the local city or county department of recycling or solid waste.

Working together, consumers and the glass industry can continue to increase the number of glass containers recycled and help save the environment.

American inventor James Rumsey is not popularly credited with inventing the steamboat. But he designed a water-tube boiler in the 18th century that eventually became the world standard for all steam engines, from power plants to ocean liners.

Early symptoms of Alzheimer's Disease

At some point, you've probably forgotten something as basic as an important phone number, the name of a favorite restaurant or where the extra house keys are hidden. Although temporary memory loss can be annoying, it doesn't affect your ability to lead a normal life. However, memory loss among the senior population, when associated with Alzheimer's disease, can be a serious condition as it begins to interfere with the routine activities of daily life.

One of the most prevalent forms of dementia among the growing senior population, Alzheimer's disease affects approximately 4 million Americans, according to the Alzheimer's Association. It is characterized by severe memory loss and intellectual impairment and can also lead to confusion, language problems, disorientation and personality changes. How quickly these symptoms appear in an Alzheimer's patient varies.

If you have noticed a family member or friend who has exhibited memory loss along with other symptoms mentioned, this may signal the beginning of Alzheimer's disease. How can you tell if memory loss is more serious than age-related memory impairment? Review the following points, provided as a public service by Hoechst-Roussel Pharmaceutical Inc., to determine if your loved one exhibits signs of Alzheimer's disease.

The primary symptoms of Alzheimer's disease are gradual loss of memory and intellectual ability severe enough to interfere with daily living. Some symptoms that become progressively more disruptive include:

- *Getting lost in familiar surroundings, forgetting how to get a familiar destination, wandering.
- *Forgetting names of familiar people and appointments, location of once-familiar objects and belongings.

*Inability to handle money, keep a checkbook, read or write.

*Inability to find the right words, repeatedly asking the day, time, and when something will take place.

Early in the course of the disease, sufferers may become unable to perform routine activities, or learn new tasks. Impaired judgement and problems with abstract thinking become evident, as well as disorientation in time or place. As the disease progresses, personality, behavior and mood changes occur.

There are over 50 disorders that have symptoms similar to Alzheimer's disease and the symptoms vary greatly from person to person. "If you suspect a loved one has a dementing disease, immediately consult with your family physician, geriatrician or internist," recommends JoAnn Friedman, author of Home Health Care - A Complete Guide for Patients and Their Families. "Under your physician's direction, a complete, professional evaluation should be conducted to determine the underlying cause, so that treatment can begin as early as possible."

Although there is no cure for Alzheimer's disease, many corporations are dedicated to the research, discovery and development of new compounds to treat sufferers. These companies include Hoechst-Roussel Pharmaceutical, Warner-Lambert, Forest Laboratories, DuPont Merck and Miles Laboratories. Hoechst-Roussel has several compounds, in development in the laboratory and in clinical trials, for the treatment of Alzheimer's disease. The company has adopted a three-tiered approach to Alzheimer's disease research and development: First, develop drugs to treat the disease's early symptoms; second, develop compounds to treat advanced symptoms and third, develop compounds to arrest or reverse the disease itself.

Take these safety tips

Driving an RV is only different, not difficult. By paying special attention to differences in RV vehicle size, height and weight, first-time RV drivers can learn to maneuver an RV efficiently and safely. Here are some suggestions from the Recreation Vehicle Industry Association (RVIA) that will help you.

Vehicle Size. Because RVs are larger, drivers should practice handling the vehicle on a residential street or empty parking lot. After getting a better feel for RV size, drivers can avoid making too-tight turns, crowding other traffic and side-swiping stationary objects. For maximum visibility, adjust and use all rear view mirrors.

Vehicle height. RV drivers must always check signs indicating road clearances under service station canopies and bridges. It's a good idea to measure the total RV height and clearly mark the information on the dashboard of the motor home and tow vehicle.

Vehicle weight. The heavier weight of an RV requires more time and braking distance to come to a safe stop. To prevent brake overheating while traveling downhill, use lower gears to slow the RV so only occasional braking is necessary.

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I would like to address a recent column about military women. It contained this statement: "After two months at sea, there is no such thing as a homely woman."

This statement is typical of our patriarchal society. It implies several fallacies produced by our male-dominated culture. The list is as follows:

1. Servicewomen are homely.
2. Servicewomen are desperate for male company.
3. Women join the service in search of sex.
4. Servicemen are considered desirable by all women.
5. Servicemen are constantly on the prowl for women.
6. Women were put on earth solely to satisfy man's sexual appetite.
7. Men are unable to control their sexual urges and therefore must be catered to or "forgiven."

How sad that society accepts these insidious sexist stereotypes. Once exposed, the tyrannical ways in which females are oppressed will lose their power over our lives. Society can then stand up and reject these ridiculous sexist attitudes. Sincerely--Moorhead, Minn.

DEAR M.M.: Your observations have merit, but I don't think the public perceives servicewomen as homely, sex-crazed or desperate for male companionship. Thanks for an interesting point of view.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: In the past few months, it has come to my attention that more and more people, mostly children, have been attacked by dogs, particularly Rottweilers, pit bulls and other highly aggressive breeds. As an owner of a Rottweiler, I find this disturbing. Most of these accidents could have been avoided with a little common sense.

If someone intends to own a powerful dog with a strong will and a highly aggressive nature, all family members should be considered. A small child playing with a dog can be a nice shot for the photo album, but it can also lead to tragedy. Repeated hitting and teasing is bound to make any dog aggressive. Parents can avoid disaster with constant surveillance and by educating their children on the proper way to handle a dog.

The choice of breed should always be taken into consideration. If you decide that one of these high-performance dogs is for you, buy a puppy. A dog raised in a family with a small child learns proper behavior around children.

Finally, to owners and breeders: We are all aware that certain breeds have a reputation for viciousness. If you own such a dog, you should make it your business to see that these accidents do not occur.

Keeping dogs on a leash would cut down on a good number of terrible attacks. If you choose to breed your dog, make sure that his or her temperament is balanced. As in humans, temperament and qualities related to the nervous system can be passed down through generations. Make thoughtful and prudent breeding choices.--Jeff in Lexington, Ky.

DEAR JEFF: Thank you for some words of wisdom on a subject that will be of interest to many.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: The following "ad" ran in our local paper: "Mr. and Mrs. 'John Doe' would like to thank our family and friends for the lovely gifts and loving gestures that helped make our wedding day beautiful.--'Jane' and 'John'"

Talk about tacky and lazy newlyweds! What do you think?--St. Croix, V.I.

DEAR ST. CROIX: I think your adjectives describe the couple accurately.

New genetic links found

Doctors may be better able to predict who is likely to get Parkinson's disease (PD)--and future treatments may be more effective against this serious neurological disorder--thanks to some surprising new research findings.

At the Tenth International Symposium on Parkinson's disease held recently in Tokyo, many papers were devoted to genetic aspects of the disease. It was once believed that there was no genetic involvement, but most scientists now believe that genetics play a role.

A ten-year study of 43 pairs of identical twins found only two pairs in which both had PD. A re-examination of these twins recently revealed that in 34 of these 43 pairs both twins now have PD. In one instance, the second twin developed PD 26 years after the first.

For free brochures that can tell you more about PD and how to cope with it, write: Parkinson's Disease Foundation at Columbia-presbyterian Medical Center, 650 West 168th St., New York, NY 10032 or call 1-800-457-6676. In New York, call (212) 923-4700.

How to survive tough times

A shock wave has shaken many Americans' financial stability in the past year. After fifteen years of consumer gluttony, we're having to adjust to a more limited budget.

More Americans are out of work now with layoff and consolidation plans being announced daily. And individuals and families are feeling the squeeze of the money belt. Here are some tips for coping:

1) Cutting Expenses

Robert Ortalda, CPA and author of How to Live Within Your Means and Still Finance Your Dreams, suggests that you look carefully and eliminate "miscellaneous expenses such as going out for lunches and dinners, buying new clothes and household gadgets. You might need to sell a car to reduce insurance, gas and garaging costs. You might want to take on a roommate or share housing to reduce rent or mortgage costs.

2) Earning More In The 90's

Many Americans are investigating ways to supplement their income and they are finding solutions in a business they can start at home - over 23 million Americans now work from home. One home-based business which requires relatively little money to initiate is found in the direct selling industry. In this system, companies manufacture products, provide a sales plan and support materials to independent distributors who then market products to consumers.

Facts about pain

Here are a few facts on pain that may ease your mind. Whether you suffer mild headaches, backaches or muscle aches and pains, you're not alone.

Forty-three percent of women respondents to this survey said their number one complain was mild headaches. Thirty-two percent of the men reported muscle ache as their main complaint. It was also discovered that both sexes listed backache as their second worst pain problem.

Headache pain is most commonly noticed in the morning and can last for approximately half the workday if not treated with an over-the-counter product or pain reliever.

Barkley traded for 3 Suns

PHOENIX (AP) - Phoenix jeopardized its nice-guy image and gave up three starters to acquire outspoken Charles Barkley from Philadelphia.

"I quit too early," said former Suns coach Cotton Fitzsimmons on Wednesday at a news conference to announce the trade of Jeff Hornacek, Tim Perry and Andrew Lang to the 76ers for Barkley.

"Charles is just an exceptional player, and he's a fun guy," added Fitzsimmons, who quit coaching April 23 to join the front office. "He says his piece and then goes on with his life. He is a take-charge kind of guy."

Phoenix won over 50 games in each of Fitzsimmons' last four seasons but was eliminated in the Western Conference playoff finals in 1989 and 1990, in the first round in 1991 and in the second round this year.

The knock each time was that the Suns weren't tough enough for the playoffs. Bring on Barkley.

"He'll bring toughness and a higher level of competition to our team, things that we've kind of wished we had in the past," coach Paul Westphal said.

Owner Jerry Colangelo said the Suns have never had a player of Barkley's caliber, making the trade the biggest in the team's 24-season history.

At a news conference in Philadelphia, new 76ers general manager Jim Lynam said Hornacek, Perry and Lang will suit the no-nonsense style of coach Doug Moe.

"We are extremely happy to acquire these three players. We feel they will mesh tremendously in the Doug Moe system," Lynam said.

The Sixers reportedly planned to keep Barkley if they won one of this year's top three lottery picks. They finished ninth.

The trade came together Tuesday night, Colangelo said.

He said the Suns squeezed Barkley, who makes $3.2 million a year, under the $14 million salary cap by releasing guard Steve Burt and forward Ian Lockhart.

The announcement was made within hours of Barkley being acquitted of battery and disorderly conduct charges in Milwaukee stemming from a fight in December outside a bar.

The 6-foot-6, 252-pound power forward also won notoriety last year when he spit at a heckler and missed, hitting an 8-year-old girl. He was fined $10,000 and suspended for one game - one more incident in a career which has seen him accumulate nearly $100,000 in fines.

Nevertheless, Westphal didn't think Barkley would cost the Suns their image as solid citizens.

"I don't know what you mean by image," Westphal said. "I mean, I think basketball players like to have fun. If I was a player, I'd want to play with Charles. I don't think there's a hard-working player in the game, other than Dan Majerle. When a player gives everything he's got, what else can you ask?"

Barkley, 29, learned of the transaction at the Milwaukee airport.

"I'm a little nervous. I'm not sure, I've got to sit back and see how it goes," Barkley said. "In shock? I just don't know how I feel. I don't know if I'm happy or sad. I have to pick up my family and move them across the country."

Earlier this spring, Barkley said he wanted to play for a team with championship potential. He listed Phoenix among his top five choices.

Three teams Scramble for 30

Three teams scored a 30 in the Wednesday Scramble at Pitman Municipal Golf Course yesterday, resulting in a scorecard playoff to determine the places.

The team of Paul Hubbard, Tim Northcutt, Robert Kubacak and Doug Setliff took first place. The runnerup prizes went to the team of Steve Stevens, Speedy Nieman, Steve Sanders and Lois Jones.

Also scoring a 30 and winding up third was the team of Max Goforth, Larry Erackett, Gerald Gamboa and Cliff Jones.

The weekly scramble is open to all interested golfers. Players are placed on a team by handicaps, with the pro trying to put an A, B, C and D golfer on each team. Winners receive golf merchandise prizes.

Pro Dave Kaesheimer Wednesday reminded all golfers who have lockers that rent is now past due. Those who want to retain lockers should take care of payment this week.

Olds Scramble coming soon

The annual Oldsmobile Scramble has been set for June 28 at Pitman Municipal Golf Course, with tee times from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Golfers may form teams, using the Oldsmobile Scramble handicap system to determine the team handicap. No team may total less than plus 1 or no more than plus 8 under the system (which is posted at the pro shop). Deadline for entering is Friday, June 26.

Entry fee is $35 a player, plus green fee and cart. Each participant will receive one dozen Top Flite balls. Teams should call the pro shop for tee times. A new Oldsmobile will be offered for a hole-in-one on hole No. 3.

The local tournament will determine the team which qualifies for the sectional event, scheduled Aug. 31 and Sept. 1 at the Hyatt Bear Creek in Dallas and the Marriott Fossil Creek in Fort Worth. Hereford Pro Dave Kaesheimer will join the team at the sectional.

SWC All-Stars whipped by Aussies

ALTONA, Australia (AP) - A Southwest Conference all-star men's basketball team touring the land Down Under has found it tough going against the Australian Olympic team.

The SWC all-stars were defeated 94-83 Wednesday for the third time in as many games against Australia's Olympians. The SWC men, whose record is 2-3 on the tour, led by 10 points early but could not answer the shooting of former Stanford star Andrew Vlahov and former Iowa State standout LeRoy Loggins.

Vlahov had 26 points and Loggins added 25 to lead all scorers.

A team of SWC women all-stars (1-3) suffered a 93-74 defeat Wednesday night against the Dandenong Rangers, a pro women's basketball team in Australia.

The SWC women led 16-8 but succumbed to the shooting of Dandenong's Regina Daves, who finished with 27 points.

The men's team was led by Marvin Moore of Rice, who had 16 points against the Aussies.

Baylor's Willie Sublett and Texas Tech's Will Flemons added 14 and Southern Methodist's Mike Wilson had 13. Rice's Torrey Andrews chipped in 10 points.

Australia's Olympians overcame a 10-point SWC advantage early in the first half to push ahead 47-45 at intermission.

In the second half, Vlahov and Loggins took control. The Aussies inside attack was led by former New Mexico standout Luc Longley, who added 10 points.

The SWC women were rocked by a 20-2 run by the Rangers, who pushed on to a 44-32 halftime lead.

Texas' Fey Meeks overcame a bout of the flu to lead the SWC all-stars with 24 points.

Texas A&M's Beth Burkett had 18 points and point guard Krista Kirkland of Texas Tech added five points.

On Thursday the two SWC teams travel to Taralgon, south of Melbourne, for their last games of the tour. The men compete against the Victoria Independent Stars while the women tangle with Bulleen.

Couples: he won't win Open

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) - Two months after being touted as a lock to win the Masters, Fred Couples is almost an afterthought at the U.S. Open.

The winner of more money and more tournaments over the last calendar year is nowhere to be found on the lists of most-likely winners of this year's Open at Pebble Beach. Instead, guys like Nick Faldo, Raymond Floyd, Payne Stewart, Tom Watson, even Seve Ballesteros are put up over and over again.

"Couples makes it sound as if USGA officials need not bother with printing up his nameplate.

"At the Masters I was better than I ever have been, so it really didn't matter what everybody else thought," Couples said Wednesday. "Here, I think you'd be making a mistake if you put any money on me. ... As far as being someone to beat, I'm just like a qualifier, really."

Couples has dominated more than his share of leaderboards so far in this, his 12th season on the tour. He finished first or second in five of six tournaments this spring, capping the stretch with a two-stroke victory over Floyd in the Masters.

"From LA to the Masters, I was in the last group on Saturday and Sunday in almost every tournament," Couples said. "The wear and tear, it sounds pretty stupid, but it was pretty tough on me."

And so Couples has been on a downer ever since. In four tournaments since his Masters victory in April, Couples finished 22nd and 59th, missed two cuts and lost his patience.

With Pebble Beach offering rock-hard greens, fairways narrower than driveways, rough up to your ankles, winds in your face and scenic views that gobble up golf balls, the 1992 U.S. Open adds up to a test of golf too difficult for someone at a lowpoint - even one as good as Couples.

"It could come down to who doesn't snap," said Davis Love III, who along with Couples, is a three-time PGA Tour winner this year. "You can go crazy out there. If you hit two or three balls in the rough and start thinking you have to make some birdies, you can lose it.

Langston outshines Ryan in 2-0 Angels' win

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

A day after the California Angels inducted Nolan Ryan into their hall of fame, he showed why he will eventually be in baseball's Hall of Fame.

Trouble was, Mark Langston pitched even better and left Ryan winless in 11 starts this season.

Langston became the first California pitcher in 11 seasons to throw consecutive shutouts, outdueling Ryan with a two-hitter Wednesday night as the Angels beat the Texas Rangers 2-0.

Ryan (0-3) gave up two runs in the first inning, then retired 15 straight batters and went on to finish his first complete game since last June 11. He allowed seven hits, struck out eight and walked one.

Still, the loss left Ryan winless in 13 starts since last year, matching the longest drought of his career.

"Mark Langston pitched a real good game and basically I beat myself in the first inning," Ryan said.

"It was one of those games where you didn't have any room for error. We gave them two runs in the first and that was enough."

Langston (7-4) struck out seven and walked four.

On Tuesday night, Ryan was honored at Anaheim Stadium, where he pitched for the Angels from 1972-79. He received several big cheers throughout the game, including a standing ovation when he finished the eighth inning.

California's Von Hayes, meanwhile, was booed in the first inning when he singled, spoiling any hopes of another no-hitter by Ryan.

Hayes singled with two outs in the first and Junior Felix beat out an infield hit. A wild pitch scored one run and a single by Hubie Brooks scored another.

Blue Jays 6, Tigers 2

Jack Morris won his fourth straight decision with strong relief help from Duane Ward as Toronto beat Detroit at SkyDome.

Morris (8-3) gave up two runs on seven hits in 6 1-3 innings. Ward pitched 2-3 innings and struck out five.

Kevin Ritz (1-2) allowed three runs on six hits in three innings. Kelly Gruber hit three singles and drove in two runs.

Twins 4, Royals 2

Kirby Puckett singled home the go-ahead run in the eighth inning and then made a running catch with the bases loaded to end the game at the Metrodome.

Puckett singled off Mike Boddicker for a 3-2 lead and Kent

Hrbek followed with a sacrifice fly. Kansas City loaded the bases with two outs in the ninth and Jim Eisenreich hit a liner to right-center that Puckett caught in the gap.

Minnesota relief ace Rick Aguilera (1-4), who blew his fourth save chance in 21 tries by giving up a run in the eighth, won for the first time since last Aug. 22. Tom Gordon (1-7) walked two batters in the eighth.

Mariners 2, White Sox 1

Edgar Martinez hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning, breaking up a duel between Erik Hanson and Charlie Hough at the Kingdome.

Hough (2-4) lost despite a four-hitter. Omar Vizquel led off the eighth with a single and Martinez hit his ninth home run.

Hanson (4-9) left in the ninth after giving up his fifth hit and Russ Swan and Mike Schooler finished, with Schooler getting his 13th save.

Red Sox 4, Yankees 3

Tom Brunansky hit three doubles and Ellis Burks had a two-run homer as Boston won at Fenway Park.

Trailing 3-2, the Red Sox scored twice in the sixth on a single by Burks, a double by Phil Plantier, a wild pitch and a double by Brunansky. Scott Kamieniecki (1-5) lost.

Frank Viola (7-4) pitched eight innings and retired his final 11 batters. Tony Fossas got the final out.

Indians 3, Orioles 2

Charles Nagy won his fifth straight decision and Cleveland made the most of its hits to beat visiting Baltimore.

Nagy (9-3) gave up 13 hits, but walked none and struck out seven.

Mike Mussina (8-2) gave up five hits in six-plus innings. The Indians scored three times in the sixth on RBI doubles by Thomas Howard and Carlos Baerga and a wild pitch.

Brewers 10, Athletics 0

Greg Vaughn and Dave Nilsson homered in a six-run first inning and Milwaukee again won big in Oakland. Paul Molitor hit an RBI double in the opening inning, later doubled and drove in three runs.

The Brewers tagged Mike Moore (7-5) for eight runs on nine hits in 2 1-3 innings. Jaime Navarro (7-5) allowed two runs on four hits in seven innings.

Braves, Reds win before showdown

By DICK BRINSTER
AP Sports Writer

No one could say the Atlanta Braves or the Cincinnati Reds were caught looking ahead to their four-game showdown series that begins tonight in the Heart of Dixie.

Both went about their business Wednesday, receiving the latest gifts from bumbling Los Angeles and stumbling San Francisco. The Braves beat the Dodgers 4-3 on Wednesday night to remain 3 1/2 games behind the Reds in the National League West. Earlier, Cincinnati took San Francisco 6-4.

"You find that you're looking for trouble if you look ahead," Braves manager Bobby Cox had advised when asked about the Cincinnati series.

"If we don't win the division, they'll be the team to beat," Cincinnati second baseman Bip Roberts said of the Braves.

Braves 4, Dodgers 3

Tom Glavine survived a shaky start to pitch a five-hitter and become baseball's first 10-game winner for surging Atlanta.

It was the Braves' season-high seventh straight victory and 16th in 18 games. The visiting Dodgers have lost seven in a row and 12 of 15.

Glavine (10-3) walked three and struck out two for his fifth complete game. The left-hander gave up three hits and two walks in the first two innings when the Dodgers scored their runs.

Trailing 3-0, the Braves got four runs in the fifth off Bob Ojeda (3-4). Brian Hunter opened the inning with his fifth home run, and Jeff Blauser, Terry Pendleton and Ron Gant added run-scoring singles.

Reds 6, Giants 4

Pitcher Chris Hammond hit his first major-league homer in Cincinnati's sixth straight victory. Hammond's two-run homer in the fourth off John Burkett (5-3) put the Reds up 4-3 and on track for their 18th victory in 22 games.

Visiting San Francisco has lost four straight and 11 of 15 to slip below .500 for the first time since April 25.

Hammond (5-3) scattered five hits over 6 2-3 innings, giving up all three runs in the second. Rob Dibble got his 11th save.

Padres 5, Astros 0

Andy Benes pitched a four-hitter and extended his scoreless streak against Houston to 18 innings as San Diego beat the error-plagued Astros.

The Padres scored five unearned runs on three Astros errors. Benes (6-5) struck out eight and walked two to beat Willie Blair (0-1).

The visiting Padres took a 2-0 lead in the second inning on a throwing error by shortstop Rafael Ramirez and a sacrifice fly by Benes.

Pirates 8, Phillies 2

Rampaging Pittsburgh hit three homers off former Pirate Don Robinson, and Randy Tomlin beat visiting Philadelphia for his career-high fifth straight decision.

Tomlin (9-3) allowed 11 hits in 7 1-3 innings, but worked out of a bases-loaded, none-out jam in the second and had a shutout until leaving in the midst of Philadelphia's two-run eighth.

Mike LaValliere had a two-run homer and drove in three runs and Gary Varsho and Jeff King led off each of the first two innings with homers.

Expos 5, Mets 2

Dennis Martinez pitched a strong game, and Moises Alou hit a two-run homer as Montreal defeated slumping New York for its fifth victory in six games at Shea Stadium this year.

Martinez (7-5), winning for the second time in three decisions against the Mets, allowed seven hits, struck out three and walked two in 7 1-3 innings. Mel Rojas came on to get the final four outs - three on strikeouts - for his second save, sending the Mets to their 10th loss in 13 games.

Former phenom satisfied to coach

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) - Former pitcher Jon Peters has a steady answer for those who try to put a tear in his eye.

Peters set a national high school record of 53 consecutive victories at Brenham High School and tried to continue his career at Texas A&M before four arm surgeries and the prospect of another forced him to end his pitching dreams.

But there's no need to zoom the camera in for an emotion-choked closeup of his farewell from the pitcher's mound.

"When I was 12 years old my first goal was to be a professional athlete," Peters said. "My second goal was to coach high school and college baseball. Pitching beyond high school just wasn't meant to be for me."

And that's it. Although life has thrown Peters a changeup, he's walking away with no remorse.

"I know it's hard for you all to think I don't feel sad or whatever," Peters said. "I don't. I'm just going to get my education out of the way and then have a great career in coaching. Down the road hopefully I can be a high school athletic director."

Peters got such pure pleasure from throwing a baseball from the time he was 3 years old that he can't be sad now that it's over.

"Every doctor I talked to said the reason I had these injuries is overuse, but in Little League when you're a kid you have fun throwing," Peters said. "I had fun throwing every day. I wouldn't say I regret that."

Peters moves on to the next phase of his life with the same poise he used to handle the pressure of the national media jamming into picturesque Fireman's Park in Brenham as his pitching victories mounted in 1989.

As a Little Leaguer, Peters threw a perfect game with 18 consecutive strikeouts and helped his team to a third place finish in the national playoffs.

Peters finished his high school career with a 54-1 record, 22 shutouts and five no-hitters. He struck out 612 batters in 370 innings and on April 28, 1989, he won his 51st straight game, breaking the record of 50 set by Timmy Moore of McColl, S.C. in 1977-80.

Peters broke the record in dramatic fashion by pitching his fifth no-hitter and driving in the final run of the game.

Doubts already were surfacing, however, about Peters' future. He had shoulder surgery after his sophomore year at Brenham High. That cost him some speed on his fastball but he continued to win with control.

"After surgery when I was a sophomore, I stayed confident through my junior and senior year that I'd gain strength and get some velocity back," Peters said. "It just never happened."

"After that surgery, I developed some bad mechanics that were hard to break. I think the first surgery had a lot to do with my other injuries because I developed bad habits."

Peters accepted a scholarship to Texas A&M but never pitched for the Aggies. He underwent elbow surgery in February 1990, and transferred to Blinn Junior College in January 1991.

He pitched two games for Blinn and finished his pitching career with a 1-1 college record. He had elbow surgery last March and had a second shoulder surgery in April.

And doctors wanted to do more. "I guess my final decision came when the surgeon over here said he'd like to go in and do a little arthroscopic surgery on my elbow," Peters said. "That's when I said it's not meant to be. Let's try to be a student assistant and go from there."

Peters has returned to A&M, where he is majoring in kinesiology, which includes the study of the mechanics of human movement. He's working as a student assistant to the baseball team and hopes to be graduated in 1993 and begin work on a masters degree in education administration.

Peters may be his own research project for his Analysis of Movement class coming up in the fall.

"I could show the mechanics of the shoulder or the elbow or the whole arm," Peters said. "I'd think I'd stress the shoulder and show what bad mechanics can do to a pitcher's arm."

Tyson maintains innocence of rape

NEW YORK (AP) - His fellow inmates taunt him for being a convicted rapist, prison guards have "the dying thumb" on him, and Mike Tyson still maintains he's innocent.

In a rambling, sometimes confused interview with reporter Ed Bradley for CBS' "Street Stories," his first since going to jail, the former heavyweight champion claims he's just a normal guy who had sex with a woman who said it was OK.

"And that's why I'm in trouble, because I'm normal and slightly arrogant," he told Bradley. "A lot of people don't like themselves, and I happen to be totally in love with myself."

"And people take ... offense to that."

In transcripts of the interview, Tyson was quoted as saying other inmates have called him a "tree jumper." He didn't know what it meant at first but later found out it describes someone who jumps from behind trees and rapes people.

He also said he has had trouble with certain prison guards who want to "put their foot on somebody's neck" but aren't good enough to "clean my toilet."

"I know I'm not the most popular inmate in here because, you know, I mean, I stand up for what I believe in," he said.

Bradley interviewed Tyson on May 26 at the Indiana Youth Center in Plainfield, Ind., where he's serving a six-year term for rape. It will be shown on tonight's edition of Street Stories.

"His mood varied during the time we were there," Bradley said. "There were moments when he was very pensive, almost dark in his mood, but there were other times when he was what I would describe as effervescent. Sometimes he just bubbled over. I would ask a question and the answer just poured out of his mouth."

Sometimes they poured out almost incoherently.

"That's the way he talks," Bradley said. "Sometimes I'd ask questions, and he'd be dead on with the answer. Other times, it was like a three-banker. It'd hit off the ceiling, then the wall, then bounce off the floor before it got to me."

Tyson told Bradley, as he told the court last February, that he and Desiree Washington, an 18-year-old beauty pageant contestant, both had decided earlier in the day to have sex on the night of July 19, 1991, when she accused him of rape.

"Everything was arranged," he was quoted as saying in a transcript of the interview, adding later that "she was not raped." He said she may have become angry because he was too tired to walk her from his hotel room to the street, where his limousine was waiting for her.

In the interview, Tyson also said:

- Special prosecutor Greg Garrison was "a racist ... (a) publicity happy little weak man."

- He was bored with boxing and "might not even want to fight any more once I get out."

- He doesn't expect an appeal to be successful, but that "I'll prevail."

- Don King was "ornery and he's arrogant," but he's "my man."

Bradley said Street Stories got the interview through veteran reporter Harold Dow and producer John Hamlin. Bradley said Dow did the first network interview ever with Tyson as a young boxer, and Hamlin, a former CBS Sports reporter, "knew the right people to call." Among them were John Solberg, a public relations man for King.

China shouldn't be problem for Olympic basketball team

By JIM LITKE
AP Sports Writer

"If we can't beat China with me playing seven minutes, we're in trouble." - Michael Jordan, U.S. Olympic Dream Team member.

The Hon. Gong Luming
Head Coach
Olympic Basketball Team
People's Republic of China
Beijing, China

Dear Mr. Gong:

By the time you receive this, you will no doubt already have heard Mr. Jordan's remark and, being a keen student of motivation yourself, may even have taped it to a chalkboard in the gym where your guys are training for Barcelona.

I know, I know. You're wondering why Mr. Jordan singled out your team for what we in the States would call "trash-talking" or "in-your-face" behavior, and, frankly, who could blame you? Ever since this "Dream Team" thing was launched on a wave of hype last September, it's been one international insult after another hurled overboard by one U.S.

Olympian or the other. So maybe it was just your turn.

Need any more ammunition? Then check out what else Jordan said the same day as his "seven-minutes" remark.

That the most rewarding thing he expected to come out of the Olympics was the chance to do some serious "socializing" with the rest of the Dreamers. And that maybe the best thing about it, considering the cost of a vacation these days, is all that travel without giving up any of his own frequent-flier miles?

"It's a free trip to Europe," is what Jordan said, "a free trip to San Diego, a free trip to Monte Carlo. That's how I view it."

Actually, China isn't even in the back of U.S. Olympic coach Chuck Daly's mind right now.

"The thing I keep going back to," Daly said in a telephone interview Tuesday, "is 'The Miracle on Ice.' The U.S.S.R. had this unbeatable hockey team, or so everyone thought, and they got beat by a bunch of American college kids."

When training camp opens Saturday in San Diego, he'll have only two true point guards - Magic Johnson and Utah's John Stockton - and several very tired puppies on his hands. Jordan, Chicago teammate Scottie Pippen and Portland's Clyde Drexler are coming in with only a few days rest after a grueling NBA Finals series. Several other players will be recovering from injuries: Boston's Larry Bird (back) and San Antonio's David Robinson (torn ligaments in his shooting hand). And while he won't be tending to their physical ailments, Daly will have to massage some very big egos.

"The way I see it, bringing them together as a unit and figuring out substitution patterns is going to be the toughest part of the job," he said. "And we've only got six days to get it down."

By the same token, he'll need their attention part of that time to teach them the subtle differences in international play. Zone defenses are permitted. The shot clock runs six seconds longer, the 3-point arc is three feet closer and the free-throw lane is three feet wider. Most important, perhaps, there are two 20-minute halves instead of four 12-minute quarters.

"That's the thing we've got to impress on them right away," Daly said. "We better not be counting on late rallies too much. These games end in a hurry."

Even with all that, there is not a soul on the planet who, given the choice of shoes, would choose Mr. Gong's over Mr. Daly's.

The guys who are going to play for him could in fact go dancing all night and sleep all day, then post stick-'em notes with outrageous quotes from the door of the opposing locker room to the center of the court and still beat everybody by identical 120-40 scores. They are that good.

Which might be why the one thing that doesn't worry Chuck Daly is what they say about anybody they might have to play.

"These guys are grownups," he said. "They know if they're going to talk, they're going to have to back it up."

Fan violence cancels Little League season

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) - A Little League coach says fights and hostile behavior by adults caused the cancellation of the rest of the season for the Little League's Alameda League in Albuquerque.

"I'm not going to tolerate adults fighting at baseball parks," said Larry Heyeck, director of the Albuquerque-area Little League associations. "When you have instances of violence and there are substantial injuries, there is something wrong with that picture."

Bernalillo County sheriff's deputies were called to a ballgame Sunday after a group of parents, a coach, the coach's mother and a league director got into a post-game fistfight. Heyeck said one person involved in the fray was sent to a hospital after either being struck on the head or suffering a seizure.

Deputies were called to the same ballpark Saturday because a coach threw a tantrum after being taken out of the game for arguing a call, Heyeck said.

Sheriff's Sgt. Rob Stelzer, who responded to the Saturday incident, said he ordered everyone to leave the park because tempers had flared among players, parents and coaches.

"Nobody was hurt and I ordered them to clear the area," he said. "They were all hot. I scolded them all, the coaches, umpires, players and parents. I told them it was inexcusable for them to be acting like that." A former Alameda League director and current coach said about a dozen adults are causing most of the problems.

"It wasn't the kids that created the problem," Charley Lee said. "These parents aren't going to support the kids or support the league, they are out there to act like jerks."

Heyeck said the decision to end the season five days early was made Sunday at an emergency meeting of Little League and Alameda League officials.

"It was a well thought-out decision that was made to protect the children," he said.

The decision affects about 500 boys and girls, ages 6 to 15, in the 41-team Alameda League, but not programs at other leagues in Albuquerque.

Harry Fenton, a coach and league director, said the action should send a message that bad sportsmanship won't be tolerated.

"We're there to have fun, to help the kids have fun," Fenton said. "We are not out there to express our anger."

Shortstop Larry Bowe, rated a defensive star, averaged only one error every 49 chances for his full career.

Holyfield finds himself in another no-win situation

LAS VEGAS (AP) - The situation is a familiar one for Evander Holyfield.

The undisputed heavyweight champion, who has never lost, is in a no-win predicament.

"If he beats me they'll say he beat an old man," said 42-year-old Larry Holmes, who will challenge the 29-year-old Holyfield Friday night at Caesars Palace.

The bouquets tossed at Holyfield often have been full of thorns.

"Who did Evander Holyfield beat," said Holmes, echoing a question asked by many boxing fans.

"A fat guy in Buster Douglas, an old man in George Foreman, (Bert) Cooper, and now he's fighting an old man again," said Holmes, answering himself.

Holyfield wouldn't beat Tyson, shout his critics.

"I didn't pull out of the fight; my rib wasn't hurt," Holyfield said Wednesday, referring to the injury that forced Tyson to pull out of a bout scheduled for last Nov. 8.

Tyson now is serving a three to six-year prison sentence on a conviction for rape.

"I'll be around in 1996," Holyfield said.

Two Texans thrilled to be at Olympic Trials

By BETH FOLEY
Palestine Herald-Press

PALESTINE, Texas (AP) - James Shelton and Wendell Edwards have come a long way from the makeshift 4X100 relay squad that ran at a summer youth track meet some five years ago.

Shelton, a budding high jumper from Palestine High School, agreed to run a leg on the squad, along with Edwards, a sprinter from Cayuga High School.

Not really understanding what he was doing, Shelton jumped into the race without warming up properly and promptly badly injured a hip muscle, sidelining him for about five months.

"I didn't know if I'd come back off that," he recalled recently, relaxing in the shade at the Palestine High stadium bleachers.

But he did, enough so to win a trip to New Orleans for a shot at making the Olympic track team as a high jumper. Edwards will be there, too, competing in the men's 110-meter high hurdles.

Shelton and Edwards both begin their Road to Barcelona on June 26 with the first round of competition in their events. Finals for both will be held June 28.

Neither has any illusions about the daunting task ahead at the Olympic Trials.

"I've had dreams of going, but I never thought it would come to this," said Shelton, a Palestine High graduate who won the NCAA Div. II high jump title last month for Saint Augustine's College in North Carolina. "I'm nervous. But that helps. When I'm nervous, it tends to help my performance."

With American record-holders Hollis Conway and Charles Austin competing for a place on the Olympic team, Shelton knows he has to set a new personal record to have even a shot at the finals in New Orleans. His best jump wasn't the 7-foot, 1/2-inch effort that captured the NCAA outdoor title. It came at a meet hosted by Howard University in Washington, D.C., when he cleared 7-5 1/2 and qualified for the Trials.

But Conway and Austin share the American outdoor record of 7-10 1/2, a full inch better than the Olympic record set in 1988 by Soviet Guennadi Avdeenko.

Edwards' position isn't any more enviable. Top hurdlers Tony Dees, Greg Foster and Renaldo Nehemiah all will compete, led by Dees' 13.08-second qualifying time. U.S. Olympic record holder Roger Kingdom, who ran a 12.98 in the 1988 Summer Games in Seoul, has also been invited, but injuries have him listed as doubtful.

Edwards' best time this season came at the NCAA Div. II outdoor championships, when he finished second in the 110-meter high hurdles in 13.78 seconds. He qualified last season for the Trials with a 13.64.

Just as injuries slowed Shelton heading into his senior high school season, a strained hamstring set Edwards down for five weeks this spring. Only back for the past month, he's been steadily dropping his times and finding his stride. But he hasn't found last season's top form yet.

"I'm glad for the opportunity," Edwards said in a telephone interview from Abilene, where he's been training since graduating in May with his communications degree from Abilene Christian University. "Coming off the injury, I'm trying to think of positive aspects. I'm not burnt out. A lot of hurdlers have competed since January. I haven't run too many races, I haven't peaked yet."

Both Shelton and Edwards realize they're starting at long odds. To even reach the finals at the Olympic Trials, they'll almost certainly have to set new personal records. To qualify for the Olympic team, they'll have to do even more.

According to rankings by the Track and Field News, neither fall in the top 10 of the approximately 40 hurdlers and 30 high jumpers expected to qualify for the Trials.

Although both Edwards and Shelton have trained and competed for smaller college programs, that shouldn't influence their chances, according to Pete Cava, press information director for The Athletic Congress, track and field's ruling body.

"It's not so much the size of the school as the size of the talent," Cava said. "Who would have thought the Minnesota Twins and the Atlanta Braves would make the World Series last year? The way you perform on the day of the Olympic Trials will determine (whether you go)."

So looking at their qualifying times and heights, are Shelton and Edwards chasing unrealistic dreams?

Well, reaching for unthinkable goals has never been a hindrance for either.

After graduating from Class 2A Cayuga High School, Edwards earned a scholarship to Abilene Christian, where he became a two-time NCAA Div. II national indoor champion in the 55-meter hurdles and a two-time national runnerup in the outdoor 110-meter hurdles. He also graduated on schedule from Abilene with a 3.25 grade point average, earning him a spot on the GTE academic all-District VI team.

Basketball was Shelton's main love until he began high jumping after some hallway coaxing from Palestine coach Butch Bradley.

His first season was dismal, he said, but by the end of his junior year, Shelton was flirting with the seven-foot mark. He went on to win a state title as a senior, then won the outdoor title this year as a college junior.

Regardless of how they fare at the Olympic Trials, both say they plan to continue competing, Edwards as an unaffiliated amateur, and Shelton in his senior season at St. Augustine's. Neither is ready just yet to hang it up.

"My biggest fear would be to find out that it's time to stop hurdles and find another life," Edwards said. "It hasn't hit me yet that my college career is over."

Johnson will run 200 only

WACO (AP) - American sprinter Michael Johnson is standing by his decision to compete only in the 200 meters at the U.S. Olympic trials despite a change in the game's schedule that would have also allowed him to compete in the 400 meters.

"They are four or five days too late with their decision," Johnson said from his home on Wednesday. "Here we are a week before the trials. I couldn't put off my decision any longer."

It took world track officials seven months to change the Olympic schedule. They agreed Wednesday to the last-minute change.

But Johnson said he will compete only in the 200 meters at the U.S. Olympic trials that begin this weekend in New Orleans.

The International Amateur Athletic

Federation, which had sought the change since last November, was stunned by Johnson's decision.

"We're a bit surprised and also disappointed, because we have fought for months with the organizing committee to make this change. This makes us look pretty foolish," said an IAAF spokesman who requested that his name not be used.

Perot faces gender gap

WASHINGTON (AP) - Many women are sitting out the national infatuation with Ross Perot, whose take-charge, no-nonsense image has propelled him to the top of the presidential polls.

From economics to health care, an Associated Press poll shows women are less likely than men to rate Perot their best White House hope, sometimes by a 14-point margin.

A Times Mirror poll this week showed a 6-point gender gap in overall support for the unannounced independent candidate.

Analysts say the polls show women seem to be averse to the unknown and the confrontational.

"Ross Perot is a definitive person who has a very pronounced style. He has an authoritative, get it done, crash through the barricades approach," said Republican Pollster Bill McInturff.

That appeals to older men, McInturff said, but women generally "are much more conciliatory and concerned about everybody getting along and working together and moving forward as a team."

Women also tend to be poorer than men and more dependent on government programs such as food stamps, prenatal nutrition, welfare, Social Security and Medicare, said Democratic consultant Nikki Heidepriem.

"They just don't know where this guy's coming from and they are not in a position to take big risks," she said of women and Perot. "They have a lot less running room in terms of taking a risk that might not work out."

Economic revival is the centerpiece of the billionaire businessman's campaign, and nearly 42 percent of those questioned in the AP poll said he'd handle the economy better than Republican George Bush or Democrat Bill Clinton.

But that 42 percent included substantially more men than women - a 14-point difference. The gender gap was nearly that large among those who said Perot could best control rising health care costs, reduce crime and reduce drug abuse.

Some resistance to Perot can be traced to his generation. He came of age in pre-feminist times, as some of his remarks about women have made clear. And he apparently didn't consult his wife, Margot, about running for president; she says she found out he was thinking about it when he mentioned it on national television.

"People look at how a candidate relates to his wife because it says something about him," said Houston pollster David Hill, a Republican.

Perot's image as "a business icon" may also contribute to his problems with women, said Hill.

"Women intuitively have less trust in the business class because they are more often than not discriminated against by the business class," he said. "They may be more suspicious of a big-business tycoon."

Simple uneasiness with Perot is only part of the equation, say pollsters of both parties. Also at work is the Democrats' human-services agenda, which women have always found appealing.

"They see Bill Clinton as sensitive or caring in his style," said Hill. The flip side, he said, is "that empathetic style doesn't have a whole lot of promise with your typical Anglo-Saxon white male."

Perot in some ways recalls Ronald Reagan, who also had a gender-gap problem.

In focus groups about Reagan, said McInturff, "men would say he was a strong leader, he was decisive. The women would say he's a bully, he doesn't listen to other people, he's too stubborn. And it was clear they were describing the same set of behaviors."

Reagan's gender gap eventually narrowed and it is possible Perot's gap could too as he becomes more familiar to the public.

"There is time for women to learn more about Perot," said Heidepriem, a Clinton adviser. "The question is what will they learn and will it be credible, since he doesn't have a history (of public service). It could happen that they learn more and are satisfied."

So why all the 'legaldegook'?

Laws that govern our lives should be easy to read and understand

By EVAN RAMSTAD
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) - Let's be clear. The laws that govern our lives should be easy to understand.

So why does a judge write "ab initio" instead of "from the beginning"? And why would an attorney, in a filing, begin a sentence "Accordingly, in the interest of brevity," and then continue for 76 words?

Part of the answer is legal heritage, said Bryan Garner, a Dallas attorney and author who believes just plain writing can be just as right.

"Traditionally, lawyers have set themselves apart too much from the rest of the world by using pompous, archaic language that has long since disappeared from ordinary English discourse," Garner said.

"I don't think there's any problem with difficult language as long as there's a reason for it. But too much of our difficult language is entirely needless."

For the second straight year, Garner is leading a State Bar of Texas committee's contest of poor legal writing called "legaldegook."

Examples are easy to find and are submitted by the hundreds.

Last year, the winners included sections of the Code of Federal Regulations, Internal Revenue Code and Pension Reform Act.

The Serpentine Sentence Award winner had 174 words and came from a brief filed with the Texas Supreme Court.

And then there was the winning entry by an Illinois judge who ruled: "Parens patriae cannot be ad fundandam jurisdictionem. The zoning question is res inter alios acta."

He meant he didn't have jurisdiction.

"The distinguishing characteristic of the greatest lawyers, whether judges or practicing lawyers, is that they present complex legal ideas in simple, straightforward language so that almost anyone can understand," Garner said.

At seminars for lawyers and a course at Southern Methodist University's law school, Garner teaches that writing "can be the difference between winning and losing."

With the number of cases exploding, fees increasing and court technology speeding up legal processes, good writing can also affect a lawyer's productivity and profitability.

But it's not easy to teach. Law professors can hammer the Federal Rules of Evidence to an auditorium full of students, but writing must be taught on a much more personal scale, Garner said.

In addition, good writing doesn't necessarily spring from the logical thought processes hammered into students from the beginning of law school.

"You have to be more than logical and reasonable. You have to be interesting," Garner said. "Lawyers are frequently writing about inherently interesting subjects. And yet lawyers can make the most exciting subjects dull."

The chief problems are verbosity and reliance on legalese, the jargon of the profession.

"A lot of the shoddily drafted contracts that I see are full of legalese," Garner said. "Legalese obscures ambiguities. It's much easier to see substantive problems and drafting problems that are plainly written."

Legalese tends to add to the length of a legal document. Garner said some lawyers don't have the time to carefully edit their work.

Others fear it will be harder to justify fees for a well-written 20-page document than one that is poorly done and consumes 45 pages.

"But more and more clients these days are sophisticated about these matters and understand the care that must go into a well-crafted brief or any kind of document," Garner said.

In addition to his law practice and teaching, Garner, 33, runs LawProse Inc. to consult with attorneys about writing. Consultants include professors at the University of Texas and a Houston judge.

His books include a dictionary of legal usage and "The Elements of Legal Writing," similar in name to the Strunk and White classic.

And he edits the "Scribes Journal of Legal Writing." The just-published second volume has essays about when to use that and which, the writing style of Supreme Court Justice Robert Jackson, who served from 1941-54, and whether "sincerely" is an appropriate close to a letter.

"Too many lawyers don't see ourselves as anything but fairly low workers in words," Garner said. "We don't view our writing with any real ambition, about what we ought to be able to achieve with it."

He said he believes his career will continue to revolve around the words of law.

"I'd like to have, in my own small way, some influence on the quality of legal writing in this country."

Asked if that will mean an effect on the quality of legal system in general, Garner replied: "I think it does."

Here are examples of winning entries in the 1991 "Legaldegook" contest of the Plain Language Committee of the State Bar of Texas. Entries are being taken for this year's contest, to be judged in June.

The "What Language is This Award?" for legal drafting:

No savings and loan holding company, directly or indirectly, or through one or more transactions, shall ... Acquire control of an uninsured institution or retain, for more than one year after other than an insured institution or holding company thereof, the day any insured institution subsidiary becomes uninsured, control of such institution. - Code of Federal Regulations, vol. 12, section 584.4(b)

The Not Unnegative Award Disaward for most negatives confusingly placed:

A plan shall not be treated as not satisfying the requirements of this section solely because the spouse of the participant is not entitled to receive a survivor annuity (whether or not an election has been made...) unless the participant and his spouse have been married throughout the 1-year period ending on the date of such participant's death. - Pension Reform Act of 1974, section 205.

The Typographic Award for funniest typographical error:

In the index to this brief, the Court will find an extensive copulation of authorities on the subject. - filed to the U.S. Court of Appeals, 5th Circuit

The Serpentine Sentence Award:

So the general rule may be safely stated to be that where there is a general plan or scheme adopted by an owner of a tract, for the development and improvement of the property by which it is divided into streets and lots, and which contemplated restriction as to the uses to which lots may be put, or the character and location of improvements thereon, to be secured by a covenant embodying the restriction to be inserted in the deeds to purchasers, and it appears from the language of the deed itself, construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances, that such covenants are intended for the benefit of all the lands, and that each benefit thereof, and such covenants are inserted in all the deeds for lots sold in pursuance of the plan, a purchaser or his assigns may enforce the covenant against any purchaser and his assigns if he has bought with actual or constructive knowledge of the scheme and the covenant was part of the subject matter of his purchase. - filed in a brief to the Texas Supreme Court

The Woolliness Award:

For purposes of paragraph (3), an organization described in paragraph (2) shall be deemed to include an organization described in section 501(c)(4), (5), or (6) which would be described in paragraph (2) if it were an organization described in section 501(c)(3). - Internal Revenue Code, section 509(a).

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) - Gov. Guy Hunt wants record stores to stop selling rapper Ice-T's album containing the song "Cop Killer." "It calls for coldblooded, premeditated murder" of police, Hunt said Tuesday. "It's embracing the same theory that Hitler carried out against the Jewish people during World War II."

The song, which includes the lyrics "Die pig, die," is on the "Body Count" album by Ice-T and the group BodyCount.

Once-homeless alcoholic murdered after windfall

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) - Bruce Bryan was an alcoholic living at a garbage dump when he inherited nearly $1 million in January.

The 49-year-old got his teeth fixed, made some investments and moved with a friend to a secluded home in the Ozarks, flashing $100 bills and telling others about his fortune.

On June 2, Bryan was found shot to death in his locked home. Authorities have ruled out only suicide in trying to unravel the tragic end to his rags-to-riches tale.

"The money became a monster. All he did was worry about it," said Craig Henry Rogers, Bryan's former housemate and an early suspect in his death. "The more he tried to deal with it, the more he drank."

Bryan was killed with his own shotgun three or four days before his body was found, investigators said. Nothing was missing from the house, and $400 was in his wallet, police said.

People who knew him in California said Bryan had spent the last few years drinking heavily around Mammoth Lakes, a Sierra Nevada ski town 250 miles north of Los Angeles. He slept under culverts until a friend gave him a trailer to park at the Mono County dump, where he collected scrap metal for money.

In January, Bryan was awarded about $900,000 from a lawsuit his parents had filed against a company that mined their property near Bishop, Calif. His parents died in 1986 and 1987, before the award was collected.

Bryan and Rogers, friends for about five years, traveled across the country and in March settled in Missouri. Bryan reportedly paid $90,000 in cash for a remote Ozark County farmhouse near Isabella, 57 miles southeast of Springfield.

Word of his fortune spread quickly. "He would tell you he had all this money. When he went to his pockets to pay for anything he'd roll out $100 bills," Ozark County Sheriff Max Vaughan said.

Bryan and Rogers fought often and Bryan asked the sheriff's department for protection and inquired about hiring his own bodyguard, Vaughan said.

But Rogers said it was Bryan who became violent - when he drank. "The more I tried to reach him, the more he backed away and resented it," Rogers said, adding, "He was one of the kindest-hearted people I know until he drank."

In April, Bryan destroyed a will naming Rogers the main beneficiary and executor of his estate and asked him to move out, but he also gave Rogers $100,000, Rogers and Vaughan said.

Rogers, who left on May 2, was an initial suspect, but Missouri State Highway Patrol investigators determined that he was on the West Coast when Bryan was killed, Vaughan said.

"We don't have a good suspect," Sgt. Carl Watson said.

Rogers is in jail in California, awaiting transfer to Missouri on a charge of being a felon in possession of a firearm; he was convicted of drug possession last year. He said that he learned of Bryan's death from police and that he is not sure why Bryan cut him out of the will.

Watson said Bryan apparently died without a will, which means his money - much of it invested in certificates of deposit and annuities - would go to two aunts in Colorado. They are not suspects, he said.
