Sweetwater tornado kills 1, injures 65

SWEETWATER, Texas (AP) — A tornado spawned by a fast-moving line of thunderstorms hit the southern edge of a West Texas city early Saturday, causing at least one death, 65 injuries and an undetermined amount of damage, authorities said.

The Texas Department of Public Safety said at least one person died when a twister struck homes on the outskirts of Sweetwater about 7:30 a.m. and cut power and some communications in the city. The injured were taken to Rolling Plains Hospital in Sweetwater and a hospital in Abilene, 47 miles to the east, said DPS spokesman

Authorities are "beginning a house-to-house search for possible trapped victims," said Rehm, adding he did not know how many

Five of the injured were taken shortly after 9 a.m. to Hendrick Medical Center, where a sixth was expected to arrive, said spokeswoman Jo Thompson. She said they suffered head lacerations, fractures and other injuries.

The hospital sent a medical team to Sweetwater, where officials from Rolling Plains hospital also set up two areas to treat victims, said Kloyece Irvin, nursing administrator at Humana Hospital in

"There've been business structures; there've been single-family dwellings; there've been multi-family dwellings," Nolan County sheriff Jim Blackley said. "At this time, some of the apartment complexes that were built on the east side of town have been completely destroyed."

A Nolan County sheriff's officer in Sweetwater said emergency crews were hampered by disrupted power and communications.

"... It was a total surprise. I believe as it was going down, we received a call from the national weather bureau in abilene, telling us that there was a tornado over Sweetwater," Blackley said. "But it was already in progress and tearing things up at that time.

"There's debris everywhere. The windows are out, buildings are torn down, houses have some of the roofs off them, there's debris in

An undetermined number of homes were without power in a 12-block area of the city and water service was cut, officials said.

"We have announced for people not to drink the water," said Blackley. "At this time, the electricity is down, the filtration plant is ed the people not to drink the water without boiling it at this time."

The area of damage included a mobile home park, a senior citizens' housing project and a subdivision. Lumber companies opened their yards to help residents board up their windows, of-ficials said.

The National Weather Service reported another possible tornado in Throckmorton, to the northeast, but a sighting had not been confirmed, authorities said.

"Our electricity is off and communications are locked down," said Marvin Cole, Nolan County deputy sheriff. "When it hit, it caused quite a bit of damage and numerous injuries.

"We are working but we are in the dark," he said. "All our phone lines are tied up." He said two inches of rain preceded the tornado.

Barbara Russell, a Jones County sheriff's dispatcher, said the storm caused damage to a mobile home park in the southwest part of

She said reports of a possible funnel cloud near the community of Truby had not been confirmed.

The National Weather Service said the storm at the Fisher-Nolan county line was moving east-northeast at 30 mph, about 7 miles northeast of Sweetwater. The path of the storm was across the southeast corner of Fisher county into southwest Jones County.

Radar indicated a possible tornado in southern Throckmorton County moving northeast at 40 mph, the weather service said. But Debbie Weaver, a Throckmorton County sheriff's dispatcher, said no funnels had been spotted.

Air raid aftershocks continue with hostage killed in retaliation

WASHINGTON (AP) - Aftershocks from the U.S. bombing attack against Moammar Khadafy's strongholds continue, with the discovery of a slain American hostage in Lebanon and suspicion he was killed in retaliation for the raid.

The remains of Peter Kilburn, 62, a librarian at the American University in Beirut, who disappeared Nov. 30, 1984, were identified Friday by friends as one of the three bodies found in the Lebanese hills earlier this week.

Kilburn had apparently been misidentified the day before as a British journalist missing for a year.

The Reagan administration, which for months has been warning the kidnappers of Kilburn and five other Americans in Lebanon against harming the captives, reacted cautiously to the discovery.

State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said that pending a forensic examination, the United States could not confirm Kilburn's death. The body was being flown to a U.S. facility in West Germany - officials would not specify which one - for further tests. Nor would Kalb comment on a statement by British Foreign Minister Geoffrey Howe that his country had "firm evidence" of Libyan involvement in the kidnapping of two British victims whose bodies were discovered with Kilburn's. When all three men were found, anonymous callers said they were killed in retaliation for the U.S. attack on Tripoli and Benghazi Mon-

Reagan administration officials said they wanted to examine that evidence before contemplating any further moves. Nevertheless, they reaffirmed the principle of responding to terrorist acts.

"We have made it clear repeatedly that those who hold our hostages are responsible for the safety and lives of the hostages," Kalb said.

Attorney General Edwin Meese said the United States "will look at the evidence" behind the killings in Lebanon. "But I think we won't announce in advance what we're going to do."

Pentagon officials, speaking on condition they not be identified, said the U.S. 6th Fleet remained "at a high state of readiness," steaming in the central Mediterranen north of the Libyan coast. But the sources added that the fleet, led by two aircraft carriers, had not received any orders to prepare for combat. Relatives of the hostages were critical of the administration's

After being notified by the State Department, Kilburn's nephew, Tim, said in Aptos, Calif., "We're on our way to war, as far as I can see. The United States government's answer to problems is to drop bombs."

Peggy Say, sister of Associated Press reporter Terry Anderson, one of the hostages, told CBS she did not believe Reagan had sufficiently considered the fate of the Americans held in Lebanon when he ordered the raid on Libya.

There was other fallout from the assault on Libya.

About 175 U.S. diplomats and dependents began leaving Khartourn, Sudan, in response to terrorist threats from Libya and an anti-American atmosphere in the city.

A chartered jet took most of the evacuees to Nairobi, Kenya.

Reserve cuts rate to 6.5 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Federal Reserve Board, emphasizing international considerations, has for the second time this year reduced a key lending rate.

It announced Friday that it was cutting its discount rate, the interest it charges to make loans to private banks, from 7 percent to 6.5 percent, its lowest level in eight years. The move was expected to add further momentum to a dramatic plunge in other interest rates.

In Tokyo, the Bank of Japan announced today it will cut the official discount rate by 0.5 percent, setting it at 3.5 percent effective Monday. The action was an attempt to slow the Japanese yen's rapid appreciation against the U.S. dollar.

Finance Minister Noburo Takeshita told reporters that with the United States and Japan cutting their interest rates, other nations may now follow. Lower rates, he added, will help ease payments for debtor nations.

The new rate for Japan matches its record low between March 1978 and April 1979.

to consider a cut in its discount rate. Those three countries reduced their discount rates in a coordinated effort in March and private analysts said the Fed's action Friday provided more evidence that such coordination was becoming commonplace.

West Germany also was expected

"This cut is part of a major new trend toward more cooperation among the major countries in engineering changes in interest rates and the exchange rate to sustain growth throughout the world," said Allen Sinai, chief economist for Shearson Lehman Brothers.

Sinai said that major banks in the United States will quickly move next week to cut their prime business lending rate by one-half percentage point as well, pushing it down to 8.5 percent. The last round of cuts in the prime rate occurred immediately after the last discount rate cut on March 7.

Tom Megan, an economist with Evans Economics, a Washington consulting firm, said he expected various consumer rates such as car loans to fall in the wake of the Fed

But Sinai and Megan said they did not think the declines in interest rates in coming weeks will be anywhere near as dramatic as what has already occurred.

A wide variety of rates, including mortgage rates, now stand at their lowest point in eight years.

Airline crews disdain security training

DALLAS (AP) — A captain for a major airline said valid information at a recent mandatory anti-terrorist training session was "so few and far between" that few of the pilots and flight attendants paid attention, the Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

His instructor for the eight-hour course entered the room only to change videotapes, the News quoted the captain as saying. "People were talking, they were doing other things ... including reading the paper," said the captain, who was not identified. "I'd leave for 20 minutes at a time and take care of business. I'd come back into a bull session, with tapes running."

The training is required by the Federal Aviation Administration this month, for the first time, "to protect U.S. civil aviation against international terrorism." The new training requirement was ordered last July after the June 14 hijacking of TWA Flight 847 in Athens.

The newspaper said it interviewed a number of pilots and flight attendants who said they doubt they are now better prepared to handle such a crisis. They described the training as boring and unhelpful, the newspaper

Of his recent training session, Braniff pilot Bill Burke said, "It was just kind of an insult when you've been flying for 28 years and somebody says, 'If you see someone with a gun coming down the ramp, don't let them on the plane.' Well, there's not a great deal you can do to stop the dang thing. You say, 'My gosh, what am I doing, sitting here and getting this kind of nonsense."

Frontier Airlines captain Roger Brooks said captains are supposed to be the in-flight security coordinator and give a briefing to flight attendants. However, "I don't even know what to tell them," Brooks said. "It's

At her anti-terrorist training course, a senior flight attendant remembers, colleagues did needle-point as some videotapes on ter-rorists from the early 1970s rolled.

"It was kind of like sitting in your living room watching your favorite TV show. You could be doing your nails, you could be doing your needle-point, or you could be reading a book. It's kind of sad, isn't it?" she said.

One flight attendant for a major airline said her anti-terrorist training session "was without a doubt the worst class in any area in any subject I have ever had. I am a college graduate and that was the worst thing," she said.

The News said airline officials say most major airlines show crew members slightly more than five hours of videotapes and two hours of written material, combined with discussion time and an open-book

PREVENTION

Although video segments on bomb identification and terrorist profiles are engaging, much of the informa-tion is dated, too long, and uninteresting, pilots and flight attendants said in interviews.

Classes often lack live instruction or discussion, and test-taking can become a group effort with answers shared, they said.

The Air Transport Association, the airlines' major lobbying group, recommends that the requirement be withdrawn and revised, the News

It was the Air Transport Association that put the FAA-approved security package together and made it available to airlines for about $450, the News added.

Tom Tripp, spokesman for the Airline Transport Association, said his group collected videotapes from a wide range of sources simply to meet the eight-hour requirement established by the FAA, which has not offered guidance on what is need-

"We've had absolutely no specifications or instructions or input" from the FAA, Tripp said. "The truth of the matter is we still don't understand what is deficient in current flight crew member training." FAA spokesman Fred Farrar said the quality of the new program has been "very high," the News reported. Farrar added, "We have no reason to think that it wasn't effective."

The FAA denies it has failed to help, but would not elaborate, the News said.

Jim Federer, training coordinator for Southwest Airlines, said some of the good in the security training package provided by Airline Transpor Association "was probably lost because there was so much garbage" in the information.

"Some of them (videotapes) are horrible, and others are excellent," Federer said. Southwest Airlines and other carriers use the association package because the costs of developing a new program and then seeking FAA approval make alternatives impractical.

Fred Stauffer, a captain who serves as director of training for Braniff, said the success of antiterrorist training depends "on getting them pumped up to see it."

Shortly after Braniff started its security effort last November, one pilot "was so bored he laid down on the floor and slept," Stauffer said. Stauffer said he met with the pilot and sent him through the course

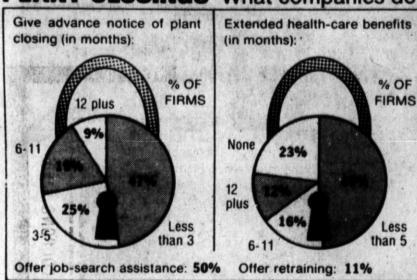

"We wouldn't put up with any foolishness because it's too serious to take lightly," Stauffer said.

Starting this month, all pilots and flight attendants serving on international flights are required to have received eight hours of initial antiterrorist training. Crew members on domestic flights must receive the training by Sept. 1.

Four reported hurt in blast at hotel

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) - A bomb exploded in a bathroom at a crowded Indian Ocean resort hotel, wounding three white guests and a black employee, the South African Press Association

The other two victims reportedly suffered minor injuries.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the explosion, and details remained sketchy. The South African Press Association said Chiranda refused to identify his hotel by name, but said it was nearly 90 percent full.

Black anti-apartheid guerrilla groups, including the African National Congress, say they avoid sabotage attacks in which civilians are likely to be wounded, although security police have blamed a number of such attacks on the ANC.

Van der Walt was commissioned by the white-led government to investigate anti-apartheid riots in September 1984 in black townships of the Vaal region south of Johannesburg.

Police confirmed more than 30 deaths over three days, but residents said more than 60 people were killed.

"It should never have happened," van der Walt said in his report. "Alarm signals were disregarded; legitimate grievances fell upon deaf ears; mistrust and suspicion mounted visibly, and sooner or later the situation simply had to explode."

More than 1,400 people have been killed, nearly all of them black, in violence since the Vaal riots.

Most have been slain by government forces, but others have died in tribal in-fighting, feuding between rival anti-apartheid groups or because other blacks believed they were government collaborators.

In other developments Friday: -Many apartheid critics applauded the government's decision to stop enforcing pass laws, which have kept blacks out of white areas, but said they feared President P.W. Botha might produce an alternative form of control.

-Police headquarters in Pretoria said that in violence through Friday morning, a black mob in Soweto killed a black policeman, and that two other blacks were killed near the northeastern town of Lydenburg, one by young blacks stoning buses and the other by a policeman.

Libya asserts

U.S. wanted k Khadafy dead

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) - A top official accused the United States of bombing Libya because alleged U.S.-sponsored attempts to kill Col. Moammar Khadafy with poison had failed, and implied Khadafy had been a primary target for the raiding

"We warn and hold the U.S. administration responsible for the gravity of this action," Staff Maj. Abdel-Salam Jalloud told an hourlong news conference at the Foreign Ministry on Friday.

Jalloud, the No. 2 man in the Libyan leadership behind Khadafy, said 37 people, including one soldier, were killed and 93 wounded in the Tuesday air raids by U.S. warplanes in and around Tripoli and Benghazi.

Western diplomats, however, have estin ted that at least 100 people died. Libyan officials told reporters earlier Friday that at least two soldiers were among the 19 victims of the raid buried that day in Tripoli.

In the Libyan capital, tensions eased Friday and traffic returned to normal for the first time since the air strike. Resumption of normal flights at Tripoli airport had resumed the day before.

The official Libyan news agency JANA said the Binina International Airport, near Benghazi, had also resumed normal operations Friday after the "savage and failed aggres-vocates strict adherence to Islamic law. It is outlawed in Syria and Khadafy has tried to wipe it out in Libya.

Jalloud indirectly accused the United States of targeting Khadafy in the air strikes.

"His tent and his house were attacked in a concentrated operation. This is an uncivilized action. This operation has finished Reagan morally and the American people should be ashamed of that," he said.

The Washington Post reported Friday that National Security Council officials had drafted a statement that would have described Khadafy's death as "fortuitous," but withheld it after learning that Khadafy survived the raid.

As he left the White House Friday, President Reagan said, "We weren't out to kill anybody."

Reagan has said the raids were launched because of evidence that Libya was involved in the West Berlin discotheque bombing that killed an American soldier and a Turkish woman on April 5.

But Jalloud claimed the U.S. air raid had been planned "months and years before."

He also said the bombs missed their targets, and denied British charges that Libya played a role in the kidnapping of two Britons in Lebanon who were found slain along with an American, Peter Kilburn, 62,

History is a reliable teacher in all aspects of life, and crime is no exception. History teaches us that crime prevention measures DO reduce crime. Around the home there are numerous measures a concerned homeowner can take to insure that his or her chances of becoming a victim are lessened. For example:

-A garage door left open is very often a burglars dream. Often valuable items are stored in ones garage, and leaving it open adver-tises "free for the taking". And too, once a burglar is inside your garage, he is often hidden from view of your neighbors or any passing motorists, and can take all the time he needs to then break into the living area of your home. Often the door from the garage to the rest of the home is left ked, or is secured with a weak or ineffective lock. Dead bolt locks

Texas' freedom changed America's face

AUSTIN (AP) - Texans needed only 18 minutes to wrest their in-dependence from Mexico on the San Jacinto battlefield, but 150 years later, they're spending an entire year celebrating the event that historians say changed the face of America.

The state inaugurated its jampacked, high-style bash when the Texas Longhorn football team kicked off Dec. 31 in the Bluebonnet Bowl at Houston. And it will continue throughout the year with pomp, parties and parades.

"What people should understand is this is not a celebration of Texas beating Mexico - it is a celebration of the last 150 years," said Patrick Terry, executive director of the Texas Sesquicentennial Commission. "It is for everybody."

Everybody, it seems, indeed has been asked the join in.

"We've invited everyone," Terry said. "Invitations went out to all the heads of state. Prince Charles coming here (in February) was no coincidence. He knew of the Sesquicentennial."

President Reagan, too, has been among those sending their best wishes.

"The special pride of Texans is certainly understandable when we reflect on the size, beauty, tremendous natural resources and the rich cultural heritage of your state," Reagan said.

And then there's Gov. Mark White. "Texas independence is a state of mind and a code of conduct," he said. "And Texas' maverick 'tryanything' spirit has opened the door to new business and industrial innovation and has encouraged thousands of people from around the globe to visit the Lone Star State."

"No other state won its independence from a foreign power. We are unique in that sense," said historian Joe Frantz. Nor was any other a republic before attaining statehood.

At a time when declining oil prices have undercut the Texas economy. tourists curious about the "uniqueness" of Texas may take up some of the economic slack during the Sesquicentennial.

The Texas Tourist Development Agency set a goal of 40 million out-ofstate visitors for 1986, which would make tourism a $16 billion business.

began in 1979, focusing on community activities rather than statewide observances. Parks were created, train stations restored, monuments erected and third-generation descendants of early settlers relearned crafts and trades that once kept families fed, clothed and entertain-

A wagon train is rolling across the state - "a 3,000-mile parade," declared one driver - and cowboys on horseback drove a herd of cattle for weeks alongside modern highways as part of the celebration.

Author James Michener's novel "Texas" was published; the signing of the Texas Declaration of Independence was condensed into a 30-minute film; an eight-part documentary, "Lone Star," was made for the Public Broadcasting System; and a series of 52 oneminute episodes on "The Texas Experience" are being shown on statewide television.

More than 4,000 local Sesquicentennial celebrations were sanctioned in keeping with the "grass roots" theme of the event. For example, a ballet, "Of Texas and Texans," with an oil-wells dance and a live horse, premiered in Austin in March.

"I decided to do it as Texans do be unorthodox, do it big and do it my way," said director Eugene Slavin of Buenos Aires.

Merchants are selling almost 800 products - everything from Winchester rifles to watches - bearing the Sesquicentennial logotype, with royalties averaging 10 percent going to the Tourist Development Agency and Texas Commission on the Arts.

The biggest seller has been a "Texadillo," a two-legged armadillo dressed as a cowboy, but the Gallery of the Republic in Austin is having no trouble selling unframed copies of revolutionary flags at $650 each.

A 20-ton bronze monument of two cowboys and six longhorns crossing a railroad track will be placed on the state Capitol grounds.

The sense of history is so great that historian Frantz said he feels like a "rock star" because of personal appearance demands.

'We're like Catholic theologians during a Vatican council," said another historian, T.R. Fehrenbach, author of "Lone Star."

Here, in brief, is the story they have to tell.

In 1836, Texas was part of the Mexican state of Coahuila y Texas, which included sizable parts of what are now New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, Kansas and Oklahoma.

A convention of Texans had asked for separate statehood, but the Mexican Congress refused, and in Planning for the Sesquicentennial February 1836 a large military force from Mexico crossed the Rio Grande. It was commanded by Gen. Don Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna y Perez de Lebron, president of Mexico and self-styled "Napolean of the

The formal break with Mexico was made in a convention on March 2, 1836, at Washington-on-the-Brazos, when Texas colonists adopted a declaration of independence.

Texas had 30,000 colonists and shared its land with 20,000 Indians, at least half of which were unfriendly, according to the late historian Frank Tolbert. Mexico was a nation of 8 million under a military dictator-

On March 6, after a 13-day siege, 2,500 of Santa Anna's troops overran the Mission San Antonio de Valero known worldwide as the Alamo - at San Antonio and killed its 188 defenders. The dead included Davy Crockett, Jim Bowie and William Travis, names familiar to television watchers nationwide.

"Texans still hold up the Alamo as a symbol of courage, a place where fighting men won honor, where we honor them perpetually for placing the defense of liberty above life itself." Fehrenbach said.

Santa Anna himself was on a honeymoon of sorts after a "mock marriage" to a 17-year-old San Antonio girl, according to Tolbert's book, "The Day of San Jacinto."

On Palm Sunday, March 27, another Mexican force executed some 350 Texas prisoners who surrendered after a battle at Goliad.

The Battle of San Jacinto was fought April 21 near the present-day city of Houston. Maj. Gen. Sam Houston, former governor of Tennessee, was commander-in-chief of the Texas Army, which included Hispanic soldiers who spoke no English.

The cries of "Remember the Alamo!" and "Remember Goliad!" were joined by shouts of "Recuerden el Alamo!"

The army also included men from eight states, as well as a soldier of fortune who had been the British poet Lord Byron's close friend; the editor of a Texas newspaper that had just published an account of the fall of the Alamo; and Maj. Lorenzo de Zavala Jr., who, according to Tolbert, was accompanied by a Parisian valet.

Zavala was the son of a Mexican who had signed the Texas Declaration of Independence and had been named by fellow delegates as vice president of the republic.

Tolbert, writing of the Texas troops as they prepared for attack, said, "Cities, counties, towns, streams, mountains, hospitals, libraries, all kinds of ships, all kinds of schools, highways, aircraft and a national forest were to be named for these fighting men. Yet between 3 and 4 p.m. on that Thursday, they were just a line of dirty, unshaven, confused human beings, bedeviled by everything from doubt to lice."

Historians disagree on the number of troops on each side, according to the Texas Almanac, which says Gen. Houston probably had about 900, San-

"Measured by its results, San Jacinto was one of the decisive battles of the world. The freedom of Texas from Mexico won here led to annexation and to the Mexican War (of 1846), resulting in the acquisition by the United States of the states of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, California, Utah, and parts of Colorado, Wyoming, Kansas and Oklahoma. Almost one-third of the present area of the American nation, nearly a million square miles of territory, changed sovereignty."

When traveling abroad, the X-Ray Damage Awareness Committee advises, take extra precautions in taking film through airport screening

In the United States, federal regulations entitle passengers to visual hand inspection of film. But, that is not always the case at some airports in Europe, according to the committee, which is comprised of photo professionals, authors, educators and scientists.

X-rays used for airport security are potentially harmful to film, especially high-speed film which, ac-cording to tests by Eastman Kodak and Fuji Photo Film USA, are 31/2 times more sensitive to X-ray damage than regular film.

"Most film can go through most scanners a few times and nothing will happen," says Don Brown, chairman of the X-Ray Damage Awareness Committee and publisher of Darkroom Photography magazine. "However, something can happen even the first time, depending on how long the film remains under the X-ray and what exposure it

"In addition, the effects of airport X-ray screening on film are cumulative, and if the film goes through often enough during the course of a trip, the results can be disastrous," says Brown.

Brown suggests the best way to protect film is to make it easily available to hand inspection by airport security personnel. This means keeping camera and film separate from other carry-on luggage, with the film in a clear plastic bag or by using lead-lined protective bags.

Welfare recipients need standards

There is a movement spreading across the country to require welfare recipients to work for the support they get. Workfare, it is called, may initially cost more than traditional welfare programs, but in the long run it could be worth the money.

Lawrence M. Mead, author and professor at New York University, says "there is much to be said for the arguments about incentives, but they alone do not tell us how to reform the welfare system. Far more important, in my view, is the need to set standards for the behavior of those poor people who receive help."

Many conservative social thinkers have for some time complained that traditional welfare programs encourage the poor to remain dependent. Until recently, most recipients lost benefits if they decided to work. According to the government, 38 percent of adult AFDC recipients are employable, but until recently only 19 percent had to work, or even look for work, to be eligible for aid.

Mead says the only practical way to improve behavior at the bottom of society is to set clearer standards for able-bodied welfare recipients. No one should be denied assistance, but no aid should be given without conditions. "We should require that adult recipients work, that they avoid crime and drugs and that their children stay in school in return for support."

We think the idea is a commonsense approach to a tremendous problem. People on welfare must begin to live by the same rules-giving something in order to get something-that other, nondependent Americans live by. Welfare must begin to mean obligations as well as rights. Only then will recipients be accepted as equals by other Americans.

Little sympathy for low oil prices

George Bush, the Texan who is vice president of the U.S. and hopes mightily to become the next presidential nominee of the Republican party, is being roasted unmercifully in the press these days.

His offense? He had the audacity to talk to the leaders in Saudi Arabia about the possibility of restoring the price of oil.

He did so because he says the national security of this country is in danger if oil prices continue so low as to kill off the domestic oil industry and make the U.S. more dependent upon an unstable supply of oil from foreign countries.

But that argument is met with howls of derision in at least 46 of these United States. Outside of the oil producing states which depend upon oil for jobs and spending money and most of their taxes, cheap oil is something to cheer about instead of deplore.

In the past week or so all the newsmagazines have had cover stories on the oil prices collapse, and it is easy to see a certain amount of glee on the part of our northern brothers over the fact that oil rich Texans are hurting.

To the rest of the country, a drop in the price of oil means less inflation, more economic growth, consumer benefits, lower air fares, more trucking profits, lower heating costs, lower electricity costs, not to mention many side benefits.

So the plea of Texans and Oklahomans and Louisianans fall upon deaf ears. We are all interested in what affects us personally and lower oil prices may mean loss of jobs and loss of tax money to us but it doesn't mean that to just about everybody else.

It doesn't even mean that to everybody in Texas. Lower oil prices does not translate to loss of jobs in Deaf Smith County, for example, because there is not a single producing well in the county. Dallam County is not as upset about it as their neighbors in Moore or Hutchinson counties, either.

George BUsh knows by now, if he did not know before, that it is impossible to generate much sympathy for the oil industry. By now the picture of fat cats with easy money and free spending ways had been established as the way most outsiders view the oil people.

Just a short time ago in our own community, when oil money was flowing like water, people were being paid wages in the oil patch far beyond what other employers, say in the retail stores, could pay. Now the oil patch is laying off highly paid people while clerks in the stores are working at a lesser wage.

The drop in oil prices translates to a terrific problem for all of Texas. But we are going to have to tough it out without much help from Congress and no sympathy from the rest of the nation, either.

CELEBRITIES

The first real celebrity I ever saw was Jack Dempsey. He was in my home town for a few days participating in an oil deal. I was in awe of him and yet he seemed to be human. He just sort of hung around like normal folks. I heard him burp after lunch and somehow felt better.

We did not have celebrities then like we do now. There were a few movie stars we knew about because we saw them every Saturday at th Ritz Theater. The rest of the heroes were almost unknown to us. Since there was no TV to show us all of the beautiful people we did not know of their existence. We heard about some football heroes but no one had ever seen them. Now they are up close and personal. There is even a TV show about the lifestyles of the rich and famous. We watch and drool over their houses, their hideaways, even their bathrooms.

I wonder if these people are for real. Do they burp after lunch? Do their stomachs ever hurt? Are they ever lonely? Does becoming rich and famous somehow put them above all of the mortal stuff we go

Is there such a thing as super people? I doubt that such an animal exists. There are some people who cannot walk down the street without being bothered. There are some people who are stared at until they want to scream. There are some people who have had their freedom jerked from their lives, but they are just people after all.

I went to a golf match featuring Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus. Now, they are both rich and famous. I wondered how they felt and what they thought. I was on one side of the tee box. Oral Roberts was on the other side. Arnold Palmer turned to Jack Nicklaus and whispered, "Don't look now but Oral Roberts is right behind us." Jack fiddled with his club and as unobtrusively as possible looked at Oral Roberts.

Somehow I felt better knowing that no matter how rich and famous someone may be they still burp lunch and stare at other people just like folks do.

According to law, if you want to be avoting delegate or alternate to your county or state party conventions (to be held May 17 and June 27-28, respectively) or if you want to present any resolutions to influence the final platform of your party's campaign, you must participate in your precinct's convention (sometimes called precinct caucuses) immediately after the polls close of primary election day.

complement and a language of constant and the constant of the Senior citizens serious about legislative lobby-

By CINDY SMITH Staff Writer

Running for area representatives of Silver Haired Legislature, Hereford candidate C.P. Worthan and Tulia candidate Poppy Hulsey held an informal political conference with members of Senior Citizens Center Wednesday to discuss issues concerning senior adults.

"We're not running against each other," stated Hulsey. "We're just wanting to represent this area."

Representatives and alternates from the 25-county Panhandle area will be needed for Silver Haired Legislature, an advisory organization that will have a voice in Texas government.

The election will be held May 30 at Hereford Senior Citizens and various appointed other places from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Absentee voting can be made May 4 through May 23.

"People are getting the idea they have to belong to the Senior Citizens Center to vote but they don't- we need people from all over," said

Local candidate Worthan noted that any person over 60 years of age that is a registered voter Texas is eligible to vote.

Panhandle Area Agency on Aging is sponsoring the Silver Haired Legisalture and the bill was signed into law in May of 1985. "But they forgot to fund it," chuckled Hulsey.

Texas being the 23rd state to establish SHL, is not responsible for funding as all other states are for their SHLs.

"There's no pay for this job at all," said Worthan. "It's strictly service. Travel, lodging and campaign ex-penses are not paid for." Worthan stressed further that he's running because he cares about the welfare of older people.

The area from which candidates are running includes the northern. southern, and central counties of the Panhandle. Since the voting population of senior citizens of the central area, Potter, Randall, Armstrong, and Carson Counties, is so high, two reprensentatives will be elected from there.

"The senior citizens in our area (including Deaf Smith and Swisher) PSA 3-5 total 18,807 voters which is approximately 18.2 percent of the voting population in the 25-county area," explained Hulsey.

"Hereford holds 11.6 percent of the average voting population of senior citizens in Deaf Smith County," said Worthan. "This equals 2,457 voters and we're the second largest county of senior citizens in this area."

Both candidates hope to get at least 75 percent of the elgible voting population of senior citizens in our

Tulia's population is holding at 1,664 of eligible senior citizens and Hulsey said this is 17.1 percent of the area population. The national average of voting senior citizens is 18.3 percent of the United States senior citizen population.

"If they all get out and vote they can control any legislation." said

"If they all get out and vote they can control any legislation."

Hulsey. The SHL is a non-partisan organization serving senior citizens in the Panhandle area. One-hundred sixteen representatives will be elected from the state of Texas.

"People are taking this a little lightly but it's really going to be important that we have a voice in government concerning the welfare of senior citizens and future generations," said Worthan.

Both candidates agreed they did not know who will decide the issues and debates of what they will consider while in legislature. Committees will be appointed by the Silver Haired Legislature of Texas and they will be working closely with the official Legislature.

"If there's a big voter turnout Congress will listen," said Hulsey. Recommendations will be made by the representatives who will serve two years on the legislature.

Issues that are to be considered include social security, older workers, displaced people, retirement and insurance benefits, low income, housing for the elderly, and home care versus nursing homes.

"I see this as an overall picture for senior citizens and the elderly people. We have some people here in Hereford that are financially well off but we also have some people that are indigent and cannot afford to pay their bills," said Worthan.

"People on fixed incomes can be devastated by one hospital stay..." said Worthan.

Worthan believes "older people are just 'big kids', so to speak." He said he doesn't think people are entitled to everything they think they should get.

"They just get the impression that the public owes them a living. I don't expect my children to support me. I educated them. I gave them the desire. And basically, I don't feel like I owe them anything and they don't feel like I owe them anything," said Worthan.

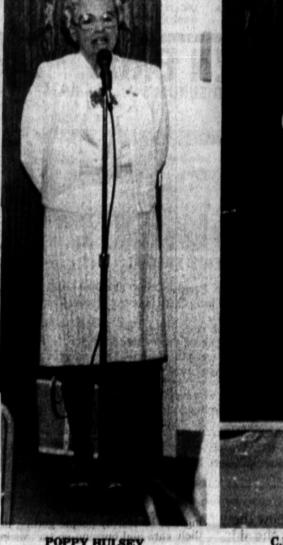

He worried that this statement might cost him votes, but still believes that one should not expect anything other than what he has earned himself.

"I want to represent them for what they deserve," said Worthan, "and to see that things are not taken away from us. But I don't believe they owe us a bunch of things, we just want to protect our rights."

Worthan has served as platoon commander in the United States Navy during World War II. He is a past master of the Hereford Masonic Lodge and past president of Oasis Shrine Club.

He served on committees for the Crippled Children's Clinic sponsored by the Oasis Shrine and is a retired farmer and businessman.

Worthan has lived in Hereford for 39 years and is a member of First Christian Church. "I'm not a follower," said Worthan. "I'm a leader. It's always been that way- I grew up in a family of 10 children," he chuckled.

from water skiing district attorney and retired in 1976.

MONROE, La. (AP) - Gilbert Brown was legally blind when he left his job as a bartender to become Louisiana's longest-tenured prosecutor. He's now 69 and completely blind in one eye, but still practices law and goes waterskiing on all but the coldest weekends.

Always legally blind, Brown could see well enough to get around, but people discouraged his early ambitions to be a lawyer and more than a few lifted eyebrows when he took up skiing.

"I was told by almost everybody I couldn't be an attorney and I almost gave it up but not because my sight wasn't good. The problem was that I was making so much money as a bartender going through school that I almost decided to stay in the bar

Brown reminisced in an interview in his posh law office about those days during World War II when he was working his way through Louisiana State University Law Center at Baton Rouge.

"I could see well enough to mix drinks and I was making $12.50 a week and room and board at Beechum's, a place that used to be just off the campus. That was good money then and I had a decision to make."

He decided on law and got a fellow law students to read for him.

"The first reader failed and I passed, and decided to move here to practice," said Brown.

"I graduated in 1942 and opened an office. In 1948, I went to work for the

Brown then stepped into private law and is an active member of a civil law firm

As a prosecutor, he worked on murder cases and said he decided that capital punishment isn't an

"The death penalty probably always will be in litigation," he said. "I don't believe it prevents homicides. Homicide is the result of passion and anger, and to that extent, man doesn't reason or plan it in most cases. It happens. As for those who plan it in cold blood, if they get a good attorney, they can get off. I also have religious reasons for my opposition to it, but I understand that you have to render to Caesar what is Caesar's."

Brown asserts that despite his han dicap, he has led a normal life. He took up waterskiing in the early 1950s as a way to enjoy recreation with his young children.

"I was attracted to it and my two kids weren't. I stuck to it. Until a year ago, I skied every month in the year. Now, I'm slowing down. I'll skip December and February."

Naturally, as a veteran, Brown uses only one ski. "I slalom. I managed it the first time I tried. The kids were 11 and 12 at the time and they couldn't. They dropped out over the years but my wife and I still go. She runs the boat.

"I have retired from driving the boat. I quit after someone remarked that I nearly hit two swimmers. I said, 'What swimmers?' When they pointed them out to me, I quit that part of it."

He said it's a little more difficult these days because he's completely lost sight in one eye.

He has no plans to give up his law practice, however. "As long as I can match the firm's quality, I'll stay," he said. "I don't plan to retire. But the practice has changed much. "Lawyers prepare themselves better now. The technique is different. The chief tool now is discovery. You can get so much information from the other side. For years we didn't have that. You took your witnesses and went with it. The results were not as good then. But, you didn't have much malpractice then. "These days, the trend is to sue somebody. You used to settle arguments with a fistfight and that was that. Now, they fight but they sue. There's been a change in people. They want money in great quantity as quick as they can get it.

Keith Anderson pitched and hit the Hereford Whiteface varsity baseball team to victory Friday, pitching a three-hitter and batting eight runs in a 12-1 win over Lubbock High Friday in Lubbock.

The win gave Hereford a 4-5 record going into a scheduled Saturday afternoon game against Amarillo High. The Whitefaces play at home Tuesday against Caprock at 4:30 p.m., and play at Plainview Friday at 4:30 p.m.

Anderson did not walk any batters and recorded three strikeouts in Friday's game, which ended after five innings because of the 10-run rule.

Hereford gained a 3-0 lead in the second inning. Doug Watts and Rodney Torres both singled, and Keith Herrera then singled to drive home Watts.

Anderson then drove in the first two of his eight runs batted in with a single to score Torres and Herrera.

The Whitefaces loaded the bases in the third inning when Watts singled and Torres and Herrera both walked.

Anderson slammed the ball over the leftfield fence for a grand slam home run. Hereford added one more run in the third inning when Curtis Cotten singled and scored on Robby Collier's single.

But the 30-year-old New Zealander still thinks there is room for much improvement.

ort has come of a many areas," conceded Moller, the first women's finisher in 12 marathons, winner of numerous other road races since 1979, and one of the top contenders in Monday's Boston Marathon. "I think that's great.

"But the money still is not ideal. And the sport (track and field) won't be ideal until we have open competition in all events, like the Olympics. "What needs to be done is obliterate amateur rules. They're a farce."

In 1980, the bold Moller took what was considered a drastic step toward eliminating amateurism in the sport by running in the Cascade Runoff at Portland, Ore., a 10-kilometer (6.2-mile) race that was offering prize money.

She finished third among the women, behind New Zealanders Anne Audain and Allison Roe, and earned $2,000.

Moller paid the price for being paid, a practice forbidden at that time. Along with Audain and Roe, she was suspended from competi-

"I was labeled a professional," she said.

With the advent of the trust-fund system for athletes, in which competitors could earn money and put it into a supervised trust fund for use only for training purposes and other areas in the sport, Moller - and Auabout a six-month ban.

"I almost ruined my whole career for $2,000," she said.

However, reflecting on that amount and the $15,000 being paid for the third-place women's finisher in the Boston Marathon - a distance four times that of the Cascade Runoff

- Moller said the increase "was not that significant, considering the number of years that have elapsed."

This is the first time in the 90-year history of the Boston Marathon that the race is paying money to the top finishers, and like virtually all the

She has run Boston once, placing first among the women in 1984, when the race was the final qualifier for the New Zealand Olympic team.

Afterward, Moller told the race organizers that she "wanted to come back, but I couldn't afford it."

BOSTON (AP) - Although Rob de Castella has not won a marathon since 1983 and admits that his "performances have stagnated a little," he is the favorite for Monday's Boston Marathon.

De Castella's choice as the No. 1 finisher does not indicate that the field is weak. To the contrary, it shows the respect the other runners have for the 29-year-old Australian.

Even though he is winless in 2½ years, de Castella's credentials are first-rate.

He has won six of 12 career marathons, including the 1983 World Championships, the 1982 British Commonwealth Games, the 1981 Fukuoka (Japan) International Marathon and the 1983 Rotterdam Marathon.

He also has one second-place finish, two thirds and never has placed worse than 10th. He is the only runner in the field with three clockings under 2 hours, 9 minutes, with a best of 2:08:18 at Fukuoka five years

Since the Los Angeles Games, de Castella has run only two marathons, finishing third in both the 1984 and 1985 America's Marathon-Chicago, with excellent times of 2:09:09 and 2:08:48. He also has run some outstanding times in shorter races on the roads and on the track.

Still, de Castella, a perfectionist, is not quite satisfied.

He constantly thinks he should be doing better, and professes a fear of the Boston course and his opponents.

"I'm in fairly good shape," he conceded. "But any marathon scares me a little.

"I respect the Boston course more than any 26 miles. I don't think any marathon organizer would lay out a course like this now."

As for the opposition, he said he expected strong competition from firsttime marathoner Arturo Barrios of Mexico, an impressive winner in three road races in the United States this year, and two-time New York City Marathon champion Orlando Pizzolato of Italy.

Donaldson is important to Mavericks

An AP Sports Analysis

By DENNE H. FREEMAN AP

Sports Writer
DALLAS (AP) — Didn't the Dallas Mavericks just finish the regular NBA season with the same record they had last year?

What a strange 44-38 ledger it was, and thank James Donaldson, if you're a May fan, for it being over

It was a fair year but if you want to put things into perspective, the Mavs were 18 games behind the world champion Los Angeles Lakers in the Western Conference.

They beat the Lakers 127-104 to end the regular season but it was against a club without Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Magic Johnson.

Going into the playoffs against Utah, you have to wonder where the Mavericks would have been without the seven-foot, two-inch Donaldson.

Donaldson spent the first two weeks of the season with the Los Angeles Clippers before the Mavericks traded for him.

He played in 83 games and averaged 9.6 rebounds, best in club history. Forget he only averaged eight points per game. Remember his 129 blocked shots.

Donaldson, the Without Mavericks, who were booed early in the season, would have been the NBA's biggest disappointment in

"He consistently got us 10 rebounds a game and we never had that before," said Mavericks' Coach Dick Motta. "We didn't lose games because we gave up continued second, third, and fourth shots. We have someone at the end of the game that is still big and strong." The Mavs have always needed a space heater at center, somebody who could push and shove in the lane and cut back the easy baskets opponents always seemed to make against Dallas.

Donaldson's pure bulk also has helped the forward-oriented Maverick offense.

"He sets great screens," said Mot-

The Mavs were the second highest scoring team in the NBA with Donaldson's hulk, averaging 115 points per game to 117 for the leading Fans - who averaged an NBAbest of 16,904 per game — quit booing the minute Donaldson arrived in Reunion Arena.

"It's been a great atmosphere for me, a good move for me," said

A stumbling 2-6 start was corrected because the Mavs got Donaldson. The season could have been out-of-hand quickly the way it

Donaldson isn't a big offensive threat and that's why Dallas still isn't in the class of the Los Angeles Lakers.

Still, Motta calls this his best team in the six-year history of the Mavs because of better rebounding and an improved fast-breaking ability.

At times The Mavs weren't consis-

High-scoring forward Mark Aguirre and Motta had a spat in which Aguirre was suspended. That didn't exactly help team unity.

Motta says Aguirre is the key to the Maverick playoff chances. "If Mark comes to play then we could be tough," says Motta. Last year the Mavs, who opened the playoffs this weekend against Utah in Reunion Arena, were knocked out in the first round by Portland.

Some of the other players have to join Donaldson in playing tough efense if the Mavs are to do better

364-1281

Dallas had the third worst defense in the NBA, yielding 113 points per game. The Mavs only beat the Los Angeles Clippers and Golden State Warriors in playing team defense.

If the Mavs get past the Jazz, they'll play the winner of the San Antonio-Laker series. Don't make any May playoff plans to see the Mavericks. Maybe they'll luck out and win the top spot in the May 11 lottery with the Cleveland Cavaliers' pick. Still, there's no Patrick Ewing or Akeem Olajuwon or Ralph Sampson available this year. No big help

And there's still something missig with this team it could take some off-season trades to cure.

Texas historians bask in glow of sesquicentennial enthusiasm

AUSTIN (AP) — Joe B. Frantz says he feels like a rock star.

T.R. Fehrenbach likens himself and his colleagues to Catholic theologians.

Archie McDonald says he is only halfway kidding when he tells his colleagues to make hay while the sun shines.

If those names don't at least ring a distant bell, you haven't been paying attention, class. Frantz, Fehrenbach and McDonald are leading Texas historians and have been in high demand on the guest speaker circuit this Sesquicentennial year.

Fehrenbach said historians can usually count on a few invitations to speak here and there, but "nothing like this."

"We're like Catholic theologians during a Vatican council," said Fehrenbach. "As soon as the Sesquicentennial is over, we probably won't be consulted for another 50 years."

Said Frantz: "I feel like a rock star," because of the personal appearance demands, which he figures have "at least trebled" during Texas' 150th anniversary of independence from Mexico.

Fehrenbach was consulting historian of public television's eightpart series "Lone Star," which was based on his book of the same name. In addition, Fehrenbach, of San Antonio, has been popping up all over the state in person and all over the world in printed interviews.

McDonald, a history professor at Stephen F. Austin University at Nacogdoches in East Texas, has spoken at civic clubs and gatherings all over the state. "I even preached in a church," he said. "I have remarked — somewhat facetiously—that we had better make hay while the sun shines," he said of Texas historians. "By summer everybody will be sick" of the Sesquicentennial.

McDonald and colleague Francis Abernathy are leaving Texas this spring for Australia, which is celebrating the 150th anniversary of its founding as a colony. Meanwhile, the cards and letters just keep on coming, McDonald said. "I got three invitations in one day" recently.

Historians said the Sesquicentennial is giving them an opportunity to reach audiences other than regular subscribers to the "Southwestern Historical Quarterly."

"I'm excited about the reaction," said Sandra Myres, a historian at the University of Texas at Arlington. She was referring to what she calls "an increased awareness of the elements and ways of looking at history."

Previous views have been that "nothing happened in Texas after the Civil War or before 1821," when the Anglos started arriving. That view is changing, she said. Texans are hearing a history that acknowledges the contributions of Indians, blacks, Mexican Americans and women.

"I think people have been more concerned with the substance than the trivia. There is a focus of looking underneath the surface," she said.

Arnoldo DeLeon, who is doing research for a book on the Mexican-American community in Houston, said the Sesquicentennial is a good time for Texas history to undergo some "constructive revisionism"—a time to move away from the myths. It is a disservice to history, said DeLeon, if the "myths are perpetuated and not dispelled."

Frantz, who left the University of Texas this year for Corpus Christi State University, said he is using his public appearances to draw attention to the state's rich Hispanic heritage. Frantz said the Sesquicentennial should not celebrate "the victory of one culture over another." He said he speaks on topics other than the Anglo victory. To do otherwise would be "committing some sort of ethnic bad manners."

However their views contrast, those scholars interviewed agreed that as nice as all the attention is, it is cutting into research time.

Fehrenbach said he has given up one project altogether until the hoopla is over. DeLeon said it is fortunate that his work at the University of Houston is full-time research with no classroom work. Otherwise he would have to chose between the appearances and teaching, he said.

Not only do Texans want to hear from the scholars, they are flocking to repositories of history like the Eugene C. Barker History Center at the University of Texas.

Katherine Adams, center assistant director, said business is really booming.

"Our reference desk is really feeling the increase in numbers," she said. The staff has noted a surge in requests for assistance and personal appearances, she said. Don Carleton, the director, was out of town on speaking engagements last week.

She, like the others, said the interest in history sparked by the Sesquicentennial is good. "People's awareness has been raised, and institutions like ours have been getting donations." The donations are not necessarily cash, but sometimes are family documents and other items Texans feel might be of historical interest.

There is, of course, an end in sight to all the traveling.

Next year I'll be wondering why the phone doesn't ring," Fehrenbach said.

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — To make it in the business world, women should not try to emulate men but should consider that being a woman is an advantage, says a senior personnel assistant here.

"If we try to be men," she says, "we can only be assured of being secondclass men. We need to be ourselves to prove our worth."

Compelling story lives on in Texas

Associated Press Writer

DEL RIO, Texas (AP) - The Devils River is the stuff of legends, of wild animals and phantoms and ghost ladies, but none is as compelling as the story of the naked wolf girl who roamed its banks 150 years ago.

According to legend, the girl's mother died in childbirth and her father, John Dent, was killed in a thunderstorm while riding for help.

"The child was never found, and the presumption was that she had been eaten by wolves near the Dents' isolated cabin," recalls author Barry Lopez in his book, "Of Wolves and

Lopez said a boy living at San Felipe Springs in 1845 reported seeing several wolves and "a creature, with long hair covering its features, that looked like a naked girl," attacking a herd of goats.

Lopez said others made similar reports the next year and that Apaches told several times of finding a child's footprints among those of "Lack of recreation produces its own fatigue, which can hamper an individual's performance," says Joe Sullivan, vice president marketing and advertising for the car rental division of National Car Rental.

National gets 70 percent of its car rental revenues from the business traveler. But, Sullivan says, there is a difference in how people perceive business trips and vacation.

"Business travel is fairly well ordered by the dictatest of a particular job goal. A vacation, on the other hand, is unstructured and without goals, and that can produce anxiety in many professionals," l

Sullivan suggests using experiences from business travel to help take the stress out of planning a personal vacation, such as having ecretaries or travel agents guarantee hotel reservations with a major credit card in the event of an

The first glimpse of the dark green river off 163 occurs there in a tiny grove of oak, cottonwood and juniper near abandoned Camp Hudson, which owce protected the trail from San Antonio to El Paso against hostile Indians.

In a prize-winning article entitled "Forgotten Places," Griffin Smith Jr. provides a lyrical account of the wild and remote Devils River and its bleached limestone cliffs.

"The springs pour out of the anclent rock, lingering in pools circled by moss, maidenhair, and watercress, emptying into the river," he rhapsodized.

"A super abundance of water: dizzying, vivid, pure; ageless water knifing clear deep channels defiant of geometry, crossing and diverging and crossing again; water spun in flumes as exuberant and vital as the festive dances on a Minoan urn; a processional without music."

Now, in early spring and subdued by a long dry spell, the river surfaces above Bakers Crossing and runs along 163 for perhaps six miles util it bends southeasterly and flows beneath the highway and deep into the rugged ranchlands toward Dolan Springs and Dolan Falls.

"The Devils is a Hill Country river in a Trans-Pecos setting, serene in its accustomed moods but merciless when the floods come," said Smith.

'We've got some wild boars and rattlesnakes, some wild turkey and deer, and we had coyotes and moun-tain lions back then, but I don't remember any wolves."

She said Indians still lived here when her grandfather arrived and that years ago Juno was a prosperous little village.

Now everything's gone," she sighed. "The old people and everything."

Down from Juno, where the spring waters gurgle beneath the bone dry river bed, there is a place called Mayfielv's Country Store that sells anything from gas to groceries and wine to worms.

Signs urge you to stop in for a notary, a cabinette, fishing and hun-ting supplies, a coin laundry, a hot shower, a boat stall, half-price sun shades, ice, milk, meats, hot and cold sandwiches and a game of pool. The complex includes the Devils River Liquor Store, a deer storage facility and a cabin with a sign proclaiming its occupant to be the "Law East of the Devils River."

Another sign promises "unsurpassed hospitality" but store manager John Vaughan looks aything but hospitable when asked about the wolf girl of yesteryear.

"They don't have many wolves out here," he said, a bit patronizing. "But there is a mountain lion or two."

Once assured he's was being queried about a legend and not a live wolf child, Vaughan spoke freely if not altogether fondly of the Devils "It goes underground because there's not enough water for it to run on top," he said. "That's why they call it Devils River. About the time you need a drink, it's gone."

Still, he said, one finds bass, catfish, perkh, sunfish and several other varieties in its waters and both the river and the countryside are "even prettier" when it rains.

"This country comes to life with a little water, but there's not been much water lately," he said.

In Del Rio, magazine editorpublisher Dan Bus and rancherhistorian-teacher Michael Baker say they have heard the legend of the wolf girl, but neither could pinpoint where or when.

"I think it's too far in the past to be a topic of daily conversation," chuckled Bus, "but I do recall reading about it."

Baker, a fifth-generation descendent of the Bakers Crossing clan, could shed no additional light on the wolf girl but did produce an ancient story entitled "The Phantom of Devils River."

The story was authored by one Marian Moore "expressly for the Camp Hudson Times" and concerns two hunters out on "one of those cold tempestuous nights, so well known in the mountainous regions near Camp

Would-be seafarers who think cruises are affordable only for the Dynasty set are mistaken, according to a Philadelphia travel consultant who says prices have become competitive and packages flexible.

"It used to be that only older people took cruises, because they were the only ones who could afford the prices and the amount of time away from home," notes Dulcie Pomerantz, cruise department manager for the Rosenbluth Travel Agency.

"Cruises never really were the most expensive way to travel. When you consider that everything is included in the price, except for tipping and bar, even the regular prices are very reasonable.

"Your cruise includes six meals a day, transportation, room, entertainment and leisure activities. On a per diem basis, cruises cost the same as a land-based vacation, with just as much variety of destinations."

A recent industry survey estimated that 2.6 million Americans will head for the high seas this year — but thousands of new berths have come on line in recent years, creating keen price competition and a variety of discounts and special offers.

"Because of the tremendous number of beds there are to sell, and the fact that the ships aren't full 100 percent of the time, cruise prices have become very competitive," says Pomerantz, who adds that another misconception about cruises is that the voyager needs to invest in a new wardrobe before weighing anchor.

"You don't need ball gowns to go on a cruise," she explains. "Dress is a lot more casual, especially on the seven-day cruises. Basically, you can wear what you have in your closet."

Typical among the bargains being offered seagoers are those posted by the Caribbean Cruise Line, which has frozen its rates at 1985 prices for 131 of its 173 scheduled Caribbean cruise departures, increased the number of "fly free" cities and boosted travel allowances for those who sail cruise-only out of Miami and New York.

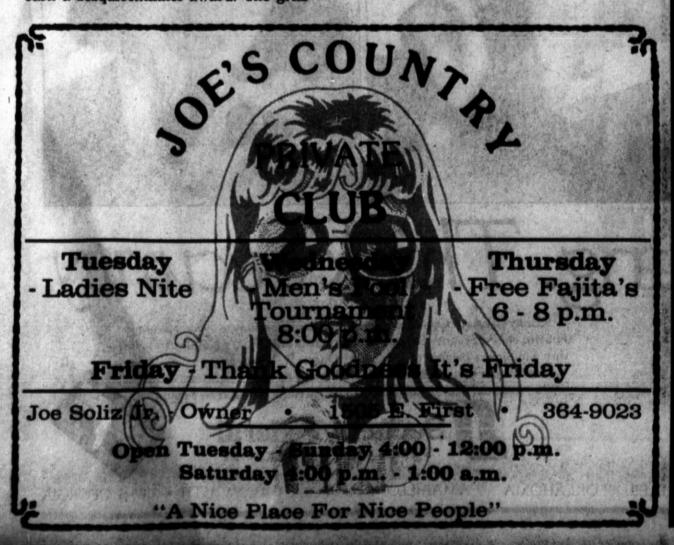

For the affluent set, there is still luxury at sea offered by such cruise operators as Cunard Lines, with a blend of classic service, contemporary amenities and exotic itineraries.

Gourmet dining includes such delicacies as smoked reindeer meat, Norwegian smoked salmon and Maine lobster. Spacious luxury suites have private balconies.

Hobby holding most powerful position for 13 years

AUSTIN (AP) — A perfume salesman, a man who founded his own church and a challenger never seen by his opponents are among the candidates for the lieutenant governor's job now held by a colossus in Texas politics — William P. "Bill" Hobby.

Hobby, 54, has held what some consider the most powerful position in state politics for over 13 years — a record — and rates as an odds-on favorite to win re-election in November.

His apparent popularity chased off all possible Democratic challengers except David Young, a 41-year-old Austin salesman who is making his third statewide race in six years but remains relatively unknown.

Young said he could capsule his campaign with one theme: "We don't have government of the people, by the people, for the people. Texas government is too much government by the lobbies, of the Hobbys and for the snobbies."

Hobby's campaign manager, Barbara Stanley, said Hobby's supporters are only semi-serious about the May 3 Democratic primary campaign because Young "hasn't exactly caught on fire."

Republican candidates include David Davidson, founder of the non-denominational Emmanuel Fellowship Church at Gonzales, where he was pastor for 11 years; State District Judge Virgil Mulanax of Gilmer; Glenn Jackson of San Antonio, a self-employed instructor of applicants for real estate and insurance licensing exams; and Aaron Bullock of Kingwood, who appears to be a mystery candidate.

All except Bullock, who did not comment, agree that taking on Hobby is a formidable task. Hobby is seeking a fifth term, which would extend to January 1991.

Young lost Democratic primary races for governor in 1982 and the U.S. Senate in 1984, collecting 1.9 percent and 3.2 percent of the total vote.

"Hobby's not so popular but he is powerful," said Young, "and I feel whether he's beatable or not, it's healthy for Democrats to have a meaningful choice."

Mulanax, 48, also has statewide political experience, losing a close race two years ago to incumbent Sam Houston Clinton for the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

He said Hobby is vulnerable because of his leading role in passage of controversial public education reform legislation. He also said the indigent health package, which Hobby supported, did not take into consideration how local governments might be affected.

Jackson, 47, said he last ran for office in 1972, when he was elected the first Republican mayor of Missouri City in Fort Bend County. He also has served briefly as city councilman.

Jackson said he has only $62 in his campaign fund after spending $4,200, including the $3,000 filing fee, but added, "It's very easy to get along without money."

Bullock could get some votes merely because his last name is the same as well-known State Comptroller Bob Bullock, but none of the other three GOP candidates ever has seen Aaron Bullock campaigning.

Contacted by telephone and asked for information about himself, Bullock said he was in a meeting and would mail biographical details. He also said he would call back when the meeting ended, but never did.

Candidate profiles put out by the Texas Legislative Service list only Bullock's name, address, and political affiliation.

Davidson, 47, said he had been approached many times to run for lieutenant governor.

"I finally got to the place where I at least consented to pray about it, and after I prayed about it for awhile, one day I just got the faith to do it," he said.

Davidson said he has appeared as a concerned citizen before legislators on "private and parochial education and on pro-family and prolife issues" but was never able to get an audience with Hobby.

"Hobby's not a fiscal conservative although he has created that illusion, and over 14 years he has become insensitive to the people," Davidson said. "He doesn't realize that people want some of their freedom back. Big government doesn't deliver services in the same proportion to its size."

Before, during, after

One must cope with trauma of cancer

By SANDY PANKEY Lifestyles Editor

CANCER.

No one likes to hear that word yet millions do each year. I was one of those people.

"Sandy, the biopsy was positive. The tissue that was examined was malignant," Dr. Clyde Rush explained to me. "I don't know if the cancer has spread to the surrounding lymph nodes or not, but I have made an appointment for you with a specialist in Dallas. He will be performing your surgery."

As soon as I heard the word CANCER, my mind shut-off. I was trying to hear what my physician was saying to me but it was like watching his lips move in slow motion during a silent movie.

I felt dirty.

How could I have cancer? Was I facing a death sentence at the age of 30? Surely, this was all just a bad dream and I would awaken soon. I received the diagnosis of thyroid cancer on May 17, 1980. I can vividly remember looking at the doctor's desk clock and noting that the time was 3:45 p.m. My life was about to drastically change.

Unfortunately, this wasn't a nightmare, this was reality. I recall getting up from the examining table and walking to the office window. I could see people walking down the street, smiling on this beautiful spring day. How could my world be so upside-down when everyone else's appeared to be so normal?

I was literally panic-stricken and could say nothing. Dr. Rush came over and put his arms around my shoulders and told me that I would need to leave for Dallas the next morning.

There was so much inner turmoil that I couldn't even think of any questions to ask. When I finally managed to look up, I had to fight back the tears-for this was one of the most important battles I would ever have to fight. So, I smiled and politely thanked him. Why I thanked him I'll never know, it just seemed like the thing to do at the

I managed to walk into the waiting room as though nothing was wrong and made it to the car on very wobbly legs. I sat down and stared at the floorboard of the car for several minutes completely oblivious to everything around me. In a few minutes, there was a knock on my window. Dr. Rush motioned me to roll down the car window. I'll always remember his kind words and the quiver in his voice, "We will be praying for you and as soon as you get back, call or come by the office."

I'm one of these people who when faced with adversity can appear to be strong-willed until someone shows genuine concern, then I fall apart. Silly thoughts kept entering my mind. I wondered, 'how can this man be so sweet to me?' All I could remember were the teenage slumber parties in his house when his daughter and I were growing up. He would tell us to get quiet and we didn't.

When I hear people say that they have found a lump or that they have been coughing for several months and are wondering if it's something serious, I want to scream. If there is a change in your body, don't hesitate to see a physician. Most likely, it's nothing serious, but...

I knew what the seven cancer warning signals were and I was experiencing one of those symtoms.

Approximately 15 months before I was diagnosed as having cancer, I was in the final stages of pregnancy. A friend had noticed that my thyroid gland seemed to be enlarged, so during a routine maternity visit, I mentioned this to Dr. Howard Johnson.

He immediately took me to see Dr. Trow Mims who placed me on medication to shrink the thyroid gland. However, even after I took the medication, my gland remained enlarged.

Within several months following the birth of my daughter, Dr. Mims removed most of the thyroid gland and we thought that would be the end of the problem. It wasn't until a year-and-a-half later that I noticed two small lumps on my neck in the vicinity of where my gland had been remov-

I was putting on my make-up and felt the knots. It didn't alarm me but I knew that I should examine them closely for several days. They didn't go away so I again went back to the doctor.

When I tried to make an appointment with Dr. Mims I learned that he was undergoing cancer surgery and was hospitalized. I was referred to Dr. Rush. He made an appointment for me to have a body scan done in an Amarillo hospital. The tests results were negative. There was no indication of a malignancy but I still felt uneasy and requested that a biopsy be performed for my own peace of mind. Dr. Rush agreed. The simple procedure was done at Deaf Smith General Hospital on an out-patient basis. I returned home from the surgery within a couple of hours. Three days later I was on my way to Dallas for additional surgery. I refer to this as D-Day.

The most difficult part of the entire ordeal was having to tell my parents. They were going to have to help take care of the children while I was gone and probably for several weeks after I returned.

I knew that if I appeared terrified, they would be twice as worried. So, I told them as calmly as I could what was going to happen and that I was taking care of all necessary arrangements.

Funny what the mind does when one is in a state of severe stress. I thought I had everything in complete control, at least, on the outside. I went home and looked over the insurance papers, wrote a list of things that needed to be done for my friends who would be helping mother with the children and started packing.

It took me hours to decide which nightgowns to pack for this "little adventure." Should I wear short gowns or the long ones? Did all my robes match and would one pair of house shoes be enough? Maybe I should pack the hot rollers. (Who was I kidding, did I really have dillusions of walking down the hospital corridors with my hair in place and wearing coordinating nightwear? Was I going to bump into Ben Casey or Dr. Kildair?)

But, I did forget to contact my employer to say that I would be out of commission for a while. Thank goodness, that was done by a conscientious friend.

So, at 9 a.m. that fateful Saturday morning I waved goodbye to my parents choking back tears. They had my children in their arms and I was thinking "Will I be alive to watch them grow up? There was so much I wanted to do for them. Will I have a second chance?"

The eight-hour drive to Dallas seemed only to take a few minutes. The closer I got to my destination the more afraid I felt. I prayed for a flat tire or anything to delay the inevitable.

I checked in and following consultations with several doctors, waited for surgery which was scheduled that Monday morning. I went in to the operating room and after five hours I was admitted to ICU. I woke up the next morning at 3:30 a.m.

It is an eery feeling to wake up in the dark when your mind tells you that only a few minutes have elapsed. Had I missed lunch and dinner? I laid there for sometime and then began counting all the tubes in me. Finally, I got brave. It was time to see if they had left me with a neck. When I felt the bandages, I thought, "This isn't too great. There seems to be a large hollow space there and I can't feel anything on that side."

I finally summoned a nurse and asked her "did they get all of the cancer?" I was fortunate. Thirty lymph nodes were removed with only three being malignant.

I was a patient for nine days. After several days of being pampered and waited on hand and foot, I began roaming the hospital corridors. I met some wonderful people, all of whom were cancer pahurt when I burn myself with the curling iron; when I have a toothache, it never throbs; and when my earring is too tight, it

The only real annoying aspect of the numbness is that when someone whispers sweet nothings in my ear and nibbles on the ear lobe, I only hear the sweet nothings. I miss those nibbles. Thank goodness I have one good lobe left.

I have been placed on thyroid medication and must remain on it the rest of my life. There are times when I purposely forget to take them; because often I resent that I have to depend on these pills to be healthy and feel normal. But, this is just one more small hurdle that I must deal with each day. It's nothing but stupidity to seek medical help and then not follow instructions.

I definitely have a different perspective on life. For instance, when I hear that someone who is suffering from cancer, has tried unorthodoxed treatment, I become incensed. I have known several who have tried laetril treatments. I am fully aware, that when one is faced with having cancer, they naturally want to try most anything for a cure. However, unless the treatment has been approved by the American Cancer Society, one is subjecting themselves to quackery.

You don't fool around with cancer. If there are symptoms present, seek medical help. If detected early, there is a good chance it can be cured. Time is critical.

I'm just one of thousands of former cancer patients who has been cured. Yes, I have a scar, but I can now think of it as a battle scar. I not only fought the battles, I ultimately won the war.

I removed the guaze pads and looked...I literally sank to the bathroom floor and cried tients, most terminal. It broke my heart to see these young children that had been having chemotherapy treatments. They looked so frail and most had lost their hair. One man had no nose and had radiation burns on his face. I counted my blessings because I had been told that I would need no further treatment after surgery.

On my return home, I had to have someone change dressings for me twice a day. By then I had not examined my neck. So one morning with very shaky fingers I removed the gauze pads and looked. I literally sank to the bathroom floor and cried. What I saw was a black and blue face and an angry looking red and purple scar with many, many stitches. I looked like Frankenstein's bride.

Seeing myself so disfigured was very tramautic. Yes, the surgeons got the cancer, but what was left were deep emotional scars that I would soon have to deal with. Looking back, it's rather comical.

It was now several weeks since I had returned home and I gradually began getting out of the house, but always wearing a turtleneck or scarf. Have you ever worn a turtleneck sweater in the middle of June in 100 degree heat? (it looks so tacky with a swimming suit.)

People looked at my neck instead of looking in my eyes when they conversed. Children would ask if I had been in a car accident. One little boy was inventive with his question, he simply inquired if I had been in a fight (probably figured I had lost).

I finally made an appointment with a plastic surgeon but cancelled after I found out what the surgery would entail. I had had enough of hospital rooms.

A much more serious problem that developed was my use of pain pills. Actually, I never experienced any pain either prior to or following surgery but apparently, the specialist in Dallas thought I might need them, so I took them anyway. My justification was, I might feel pain so why not take them BEFORE I do. How foolish!

I used the pills to dull my mind. They provided me with an escape from the past few weeks. I continued to take them for several months until I realized it was time to face reality instead of running from it. Those little yellow tablets made the world bearable, but actually they only delayed the inevitable-dealing with the trauma.

I constantly thought about cancer and cancer related deaths. 'If this occurs again, will I be so lucky next time around?

I couldn't read enough about the disease. I was obsessed with it. I would go to the library and check out everything I could get my hands on. This wasn't good because I began thinking I was going to have every cancer known to man, it was just a matter of time.

This was getting me nowhere fast. I finally sought professional counseling from two local physicians about these fears I knew that I

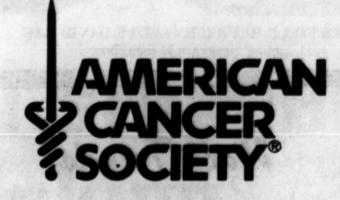

More than anything I just needed assurance and for someone to tell me I wasn't going completely nuts, that these fears, real or imagined, were normal. Slowly, I began coping and I'm still coping.

Recently, I began thinking about some of the good things that came out of this experience. Since I have no feeling on the right side of my neck or my face due to nerves that were severed, it doesn't

In conjunction with this year's theme, the co-chairman explained, "Looking at all aspects of your life and changing the negative things is what the theme is all about. In other words, the American Cancer Society is stressing self-evaluation."

She explained that the committee plans and organizes various activities for the AMC. She also works directly with David Rau, district field representative with the ACS.

The Texas Hazard Comm requires some 75,000 businesses industries to tell their 3.2 million loyees about the hazard of nicals they use. Also called the ht-to-know" law, this act reires many employers to inform the ste, local fire departments, and rrounding communities about lential dangers posed by vential dangers posed by hazar-us chemicals.

According to William R. Elliott, Ph.D., industrial hygienist at the Texas Department of Health, the act is meant to create a safer work environment for many people who until now have not been guaranteed proection. "Workers, the communities where chemical accidents could occur, and emergency personnel who might have to respond to accidents need to know what chemicals are resent and how to manage them,"

The law is also meant to benefit the whole state by reducing the number of workers' compensation claims, thereby lowering employers' insurance rates.

The act supplements Federal Oc-cupational Safety and Health Ad-ministration (OSHA) regulations, which apply only to manufacturers. It extends reporting responsibilities beyond manufacturing to pipelines, transportation and communications industries, chemical wholesalers. auto and miscellaneous repair shops, medical and educational facilities, museums and galleries, state and local government agencies, volunteer emergency services and

"To do that efficiently, we asked for funding of $400,000 for staff and equipment," Elliott said. As it stands now, we don't have the money to pay for informing the employers about the law, although ignorance is no excuse for non-compliance.

"With a few exemptions, such as the construction industry, nearly all businesses and industries handling any hazardous chemical must comply with the law. Judging by the number of calls I get every day from private companies, many employers know the law exists, but need details on how to comply," he said. "To help them understand the law, we have produced an hour-long videotape, entiled 'Texas Hazard Communication Act,' which is available from the TDH film library."

Elliott added that until more resources are available, TDH will have to rely on the media and local health departments to help spread the word about the law's provisions.

Opening night scary, thrilling for Gililland

By CINDY SMITH Staff Writer

Making her debut opening night as Dr. Chumley's wife in the classical comedy "Harvey", Hereford's own —Amy Gililland— was excited, scared and thrilled all in the same breath.

In her first appearance on Country Squire's stage, Gililland can't believe how much she is learning about the theater world.

"Mostly the things I've learned are the things you need to be a director," said Gililland. "With one week's rehearsal, that's tough rehearsing that many people that fast."

Gililland said the cast was required to start reading and start

Gililland said the cast was required to start reading and start blocking (moving in stage directions) right from the beginning.

"Most college theaters you do for a class, you read and you study. Most that I've done - you learn the part, pack it up after three weeks

"That's why I'm looking so forward to this play. Once I learn I can keep on improving because the show will be running for six weeks, said Gililland. She said she's not one to just read off the lines once

Gililland said her director, Joe Barone, told her to disregard what the script character looks like and to put herself into it. She laughed at this because Dr. Chumley's wife is described as being late fiftyish, bustling, and somewhat rather dingy and unconcerned with real happenings.

"This particular character is fairly easy for me because I'm able to play quite a lot already like I am. I'm..." and here Gililland giggl-

"She's a little more one-dimensional than I hope I am," she laughed. "Because she enters the scene to get her husband to go to a social party and that's the big deal to her. She has no real interest in the Gililland said it's fun to try to develop characters that are different from yourself "but all characters have some of your own personality because your own personality is what and who you are.

The actor stressed that one major change in the play "Harvey" as it was first written was that the play was written long before the advent of television. "You had to paint pictures with words back then. In some ways it's frustrating to think about the picture your painting, your one set, and your only two props," said Gililland. But, she said, it does pose a challenge to the actor.

"The fact that acting professionally is something that I've always wanted to do since I got hooked on the theater in high school makes it well worth it," she says.

"Like I said before, all the shows I've ever been associated with we rehearsed about a month and then performed only three times," said Gililland. "With this show running six weeks, I'll find out if I really have the ability and the stamina it takes to do it well and make it fresh every night.'

To Gililland, the main idea of being in the play is that everyone should get back to the live theater "because as a whole, as part of society, and especially in our children, we've gotten so hooked on TV and on movies, we don't appreciate the theater as much as we

"To me," said Gililland, "live theater is more of a participating sport rather than a spectator sport." Furthermore, most actors feel that the characters they play thrive on the feedback of the audience in live theater.

On Sept. 13, 1984, after his 20th conviction, Alexander was sentenced to four years in the Texas Department of Corrections. He was released from prison last Jan. 2.

On Feb. 23, less than eight weeks after Alexander's release, a Department of Public Safety trooper was patrolling Martin Luther King Boulevard east of Austin when he was nearly hit by a car driven by Alexander. The trooper, Dana Moore, pulled Alexander over.

You see a man making room for him on the couch. You hear a man talking to him. You hear the man's sister complain of him and then you see a hat with two holes in the top. Who could it be?

I don't know why-tears got n my eyes and I started to cry right there on the stage like I really knew Harvey," Lithgow said about a scene when Dr. Chumley asks about the maginary rabbit's name. "Harvey" also is Lithgow's middle name, his father's name, and just a favorite ti-

Lithgow said he had left in January after working with Larry Linville in a play in Amarillo and went back to Los Angeles, Calif., his home. "After two days I couldn't stand it and wanted to go back to Amarillo. Everybody won't run you over. It's not like driving here to Hereford, it only takes you an hour, when in L.A. it would take three hours because of the traffic," said Lithgow.

"I always meet new people here ... When I go to the mall (Westgate) I go around saying 'Hi' to everyone. I feel that I'm very much like 'Elwood'." Lithgow said he's always wanted to act and that this is his major accomplishment, doing what he wants to do. He said he especially enjoys hearing the audience clap and to respond to the action on stage.

"Everyone is so nice here, it's so peaceful here. I like people and acting on the stage is fun because of reactions out in the audience."

The Los Angeles native has never married -which befits his current role— and spends most of his time traveling doing plays.

Lithgow toured for several years with the highly acclaimed movie star

Pat O'Brien.

Lithgow admitted he felt "almost like their theater son" and felt very close to the O Brien family as if it were his own.

"When he passed away, three years ago, I felt so honored to be ask-ed as pallbearer...

Bee Vary, who plays lead, Veta Simmons- Elwood's sister in the play, hit a sentimental note too. She said acting in the round (center stage with no backdrop, just props) at Country Squire was very intimate, very personal with the audience.

you have the audience on all four sides of you," she commented. Vary has said she had acted for 20 years before going professional. "But some excellent work is done in community

Label pills for POLLY'S easier sorting POINTERS

By Polly Fisher

DEAR POLLY - I get so upset when pharmacists do not put the name of the medicine and what it is for on the label of prescription drugs. My sister, who is 82 years old, cannot remember which pills to take. She has a bagful of small bottles and I cannot help her with these, since I'm not fahelp her with these, since I'm not familiar with the names of these pills. Let me know who I should write to for this. I always tell the pharmacist to put what the pills are for on the labels of my bottles. — LUCY

DEAR LUCY — I think the thing for you to do is to visit your sister's doctor with her and her bag of pills. He can identify them and tell her which she should be taking for what conditions.

There may be some that should be discarded. The doctor should also be asked to write out for your sister the name of each medicine he prescribes in the future, when and how to take it, and whether to keep or discard any leftover pills or medicine. He probably just isn't aware that your sister may need this extra care and she may forget to ask for such information.

Then, why not visit her pharmacist and request that he clearly label all your sister's prescriptions with the necessary information?

Finally, you might monitor your sis-Finally, you might monitor your sister's medicine cabinet to be sure she discards old medicines that should no longer be taken and that she takes the full course of medications that are prescribed. While this may seem like a lot of trouble, it's very dangerous to take any drugs incorrectly, when unneeded or for the wrong conditions. Any help you can provide your sister will be well worthwhile. — POLLY

DEAR POLLY — I collect large seashells. I have cleaned the insides out by boiling the meat out of them. I would like to know if there is something that you can put on them to help keep them clean? — MRS. J.V. DEAR MRS. J.V. — The only thing I can think of would be to spray the shells inside and out with a clear poly-urethane varnish. Put on only a very light coating. However, once the shells have been cleaned as you describe, they really shouldn't need any coating at all. Frequent dusting and an occa-sional rinse, if they get dirty, should keep them clean and bright.

But then, we don't get many sea-shells here in inland New York! If any of our shell-collecting friends have better ideas or more experience on this subject, please pass your Pointers along. — POLLY

DEAR POLLY — My 86-year-old mother is a diabetic and is also on a low-sodium, low-fat and bland diet. I spend one day cooking a three-month supply of food for her, taking care to adhere to all her diet specifications. I measure and weigh her portions, wrapping each meal allotment individually and freezing. For her meals, she can choose from a varied assort-ment of foods. I also freeze fat-free gravy in ice-cube trays and wrap each cube separately so she can use these on her meat and vegetables. I also make soups, skim off the fat and freeze in her allowed amounts. All she has to do is thaw and reheat her food.

The contest was held in coopera-tion with the Hereford schools and was sanctioned by the Deaf Smith County Sesquicentennial committee. Topic for the essay was "What Being a Texan Means to Me", and students were to write an essay of 200 words

A total of 200 entries were received in four entry levels. Melisa Ortiz was first in the eighth grade, and Carrie Skelton, also of Stanton, was the runnerup. Berlinda Alejandre took top honors in the seventh grade, and Rebecca Hashke, Stanton, was run-

Darla Hubbard won the fifth-sixth grade division, followed by Kirk Self of West Central. Chuck Lindernan won the third-fourth grade division, followed by Lexi Sciumbato of St. Anthony's.

The first-place winners receive Sesquicentennial tee shirts, and the runnerups receive Sesquicentennial "boot" cups. All entrants will receive certificates.

Following are the winning essays:

I have always been proud to say that Texas is my home and I always will be. Living here means having freedom for who I am and for what I believe in. No matter who or what you are whether you are a boy or a girl, black or white, rich or poor, the people here will still like you. It also means being with my family, friends, and relatives who I love and who love me just the same.

The people who live here have hearts and minds as big as Texas itself. They all care about each other and the land they live on. We take pride in our work, education, agriculture, customs, and especially our heritage. Everybody in Texas is looking for improvements in whatever can be improved or chang-

I'm glad that I live in a state where I can be proud of the people and everything in it. I hope that most of us in Texas feel just about the same way in heart and mind about being a Texan.

By DARLA HUBBARD

To me being a Texan means being proud. I'm proud to live in such a big state like Texas. It is the second largest state and the third most populated state. It also makes me proud that we have so many different races of people that live together peacefully.

I'm glad that so many people choose Texas as the place where they have their vacations. We have different scenery like coastal plains, mountains, rivers and lakes, and even beaches.

They can also see museums, Six Flags, Big Bend National Park, and Palo Duro Canyon. Another thing that is very interesting is the Alamo in San Antonio. It reminds me of the men who believed in and fought for our independence one hundred-fifty years ago. That makes me very pro-

I give all my thanks to all the heroes who fought at the Alamo. Who fought at St. Jacinto, and who fought at the Battle of Guadalupe. They gave everything for the state of Texas.

Being a Texan means that I am representing these people. Texas has done much for me and my family.

Texas has a lot of beautiful places to go to, and Texas has welcomed people from all kinds of foreign countries. I have found freedom, love, and friends here in Texas, and I plan to stay here because I am proud of being a Texan.

Texans are a very proud group of people. They have every right to be and here are a few reasons what be-

Texas is the only state who fought for its freedom to become a part of the U.S.A. Most of the other states were either bought or trading was done for that privilege. None had to shed blood for their freedom like we did, Texas was a Republic; it had its own president and was a country.

Ann Landers

Ann does it

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Although my envelope will show that I live in New Haven, this is not a put-on by a Yale student. I need help.

I'm a 32-year-old mother of four teenagers. They are just like your average American teen. They walk around with music plugged into their heads or the stereo is blasting away. They talk on the phone endlessly, lend their clothes to friends, stay up until all hours and have to be pulled out of bed in the morning to get to school on time.

My problem: Lately I have been talking to myself a lot. I mean talking OUT LOUD. I tell myself to calm down, take it easy and trust the Lord. I also tell myself things I must remember to do, like go to the cleaners, get more milk, replace the broken faucet handle.

Yesterday my 13-year-old heard me say, "And don't forget to put gas in the station wagon and we need grapefruit." He asked who I was talking to. I sheepishly replied, "Myself." He looked concerned and said, "Ma, you are losing your mind. That's the first sign."

Please, Ann, tell me if this is true.—WORRIED IN NEW HAVEN

DEAR NEW HAVEN: I hope not. I do it all the time. And so do a lot of other people. Talking aloud to one's self helps a person remember things and it releases tension as well. I recommend it.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: A letter in your column moved me to write and get this off my chest. "Lee" wrote about a woman at work who said "Hello" to him many times during the day. I, too, was irritated by a man who did the same thing. His name was Joe and it seemed to me that he did very little all day but walk around and say hello to people. No matter how many times he saw you during the day, Joe would say "Hello" as if it were the first time. He was a harmless, quiet little man but he could really get on a person's

One day a co-worker called me to come back to the lab because Joe was sick. (I was a paramedic for a time.) Joe had a history of coronary roblems and I could tell he was I serious trouble. I learned at the funeral that he and his wife had escaped from a Nazi prison camp during the war. Too late, sometimes we find reasons to be generous. I'm a lot less impatient and critical than I used to be. Joe has made me a kinder person. Thanks for printing that letter, Ann. It certainly brought me face to face with myself and I am grateful.-CONSTANT READER IN QUINCY, ILL.

DEAR QUINCY: So many of us are quick to judge before we know the facts. It is obvious now that Joe was so thrilled to be part of a free society that his enthusiasm was ex-pressed in repeated greetings. Lear-ning about Joe taught you to be less judgmental and more insightful Your admission is evidence that you have grown. Thanks for sharing.

Major gift announced

McMurry College President Thomas Kim announced a new $100,000 trust which will ultimately become an endowment for the school's Department of Religion and Philosophy.

The trust was given by Adella Drew, and her cousin, Eloise McDougal, both of Hereford.

Mrs. McDougal, widow of the late Claude McDougal, still operates the family farming interests west of Hereford and is a former teacher. Mrs. Drew worked for many years in banking and financial institutions.

"We are especially pleased over the creation of the Drew-McDougal trust," Dr. Kim said. "We are anxious to build an endowment for our religion and philosophy area, and this is a good beginning."

Late in 1985, Mrs. Drew donated $10,000 to McMurry to create a scholarship fund. It was given in memory of the late Mrs. May Isaacs, a pioneer resident of Canadian. Mrs. Isaacs was a friend of Mrs. Drew during the early years of Mrs. Drew's marriage.

DEAR READER - I think you fould be seen by a neurologist. Brain amage does not necessarily produce demory loss, so you will want to nake sure that some other treatable problem is not the cause of your prob-em. Fish is not brain food and exercises will not aid your failing your head good for your brain?

DEAR READER — Nope. In fact, there's some evidence that standing on your head will increase pressure in the brain's smaller blood vessels, thereby resulting in added risk of stroke (bleeding into the brain). Standng on one's head is acceptable behavor for youngsters and athletes who are involved in gymnastics, but for lder patients, it is an activity best

DEAR DR. GOTT - I've been on high blood pressure medicine for four years (I'm 47 and weigh 110). It ranges between 97-120/67-86. My pulse is 102 to 105. I'm tired all the time, no sex drive and my heart beats weird at times. Can you offer any suggestions?

DEAR READER — Your range of blood pressure is entirely normal. If your doctor agrees, I think it would be appropriate for you to reduce or omit your medicine for a trial period, during which your blood pressure is closely monitored. Many blood-pres-sure medicines cause fatigue and loss of sex drive; your symptoms may be due to a treatment that you could modify or discontinue.

DEAR DR. GOTT - What causes alpitations and what can be done to ontrol this problem?

DEAR READER — Palpitations are irregularities in the heart's electrical activity. They can be seen as extra beats or cyclic runs of rapid pulse. Some palpitations are universal in healthy people and do not indicate disease. On the other hand, palpitations are universal in healthy people and do not indicate disease. tations can be caused by a panoply of ailments, including hyperthyroidism and heart disease. Nicotine, caffeine, stress and tension can produce palpitations. To determine the cause of heart irregularity, people need thor-ough medical evaluations, including examinations, blood tests and cardiograms. I advise patients to see a doctor if they have more than an occa-sional bout of palpitations for which no obvious source is evident.

DEAR DR. GOTT - Every time I get water on my legs or arms, I get terribly itchy. I've been told it's an al-lergy, but no one can tell me to what.

DEAR READER — An allergy to water would be a truly unusual ailment. I'd be more tempted to blame your itchiness on sudden temperature changes that can cause the release of histamine in your system. Check with an allergist to clarify the issue.

Great Texas Trash Off set

If 23 million Americans can stop smoking for one day, surely Texans can stop trashing out our roadways

The Canadian government sur-rendered Confederate raider Bennett Burley to the United States government

At least that's the theory behind "The Great Texas Trash Off" planned for Saturday, April 20. During that day, Texans are being encouraged to keep the trash off the side of the road and put it where it

"Littering is a habit, we're sure of that," said Don Clark, spokesman with the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation, sponsor of "The Great Texas Trash Off."

"If we get Texans to break the habit for one day, we'll be able to demonstrate how easy it is to put that trash where it belongs.

In the very least, we'll have cleaner, safer roads. That alone will save the taxpayers a bundle of money," Clark said.

Texas taxpayers spent a record $24 million last year keeping the state's highways clean.

Keep America Beautiful Week is April 20-26, and communities across Texas will be organizing local beautification and cleanup activities.

"Lone Stars: A Legacy of Texas Quilts, 1836-1936," an exhibition of 39 historic Texas quilts, will open on Sunday, April 27, at 3 p.m. in the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum's Galleries of Art.

Selected from over 3,500 quilts discovered in a two-year, 27-city search across the state, the historic textiles will be on display through June 8, according to Curator of Textiles JoAnne Arasim and Curator of Art Bruce Hartman.

In conjunction with the show's opening, at 3 p.m. Suzanne Yabsley, author of "Texas Quilts, Texas Women," will lecture on quilting in Texas. Yabsley, originally from Anton, is a quilter and writer. She has published widely on quilting as well as on a variety of topics. The lecture will be held in the second-floor AudioVisual Gallery. Also at 3 p.m., a preview reception begins in the Galleries of Art.

The Museum's premier opening culminates the week-long celebration of Texas Quilt Appreciation Week in commemoration of the Texas Sesquicentennial. on March 13, Governor Mark White officially proclaimed April 18-27 as a time for the state's citizens to "honor quilt makers of Texas' past, her present, and her future."

Architects pursue church market in Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Churches need architects to design buildings that meet the diverse needs of their congregations, say a group of Houston-area architects.

Architects can mean the difference between hodgepodge development that soon will be inadequate and custom plans that produce facilities that will last longer, said Houston ar-chitects Bill Merriman and Gerald Moorhead.

The two are leading the effort of the Houston chapter of the American Institute of Architects to educate churchgoers about the building pro-

Many churches build with little or no input from architects, said Merriman, a partner with Ray Bailey Architects Inc. in Houston.

Those churches may reason: "We don't care about our physical facility. We want to put all our money into outreach. We don't want to put our money into a building," Merriman said.

But hiring an architect won't necessarily increase a church's construction costs, Merriman said. An architect actually might save a congregation enough money to pay his or her own costs, he said.

Some Houston area churches have opted to erect inexpensive metal buildings for their houses of worship, said Merriman. He criticizes these groups - not because they chose to use inexpensive materials, but because, he says, they didn't attempt to create a building with an image that says, "This is where you wor-ship God."

"A skillful architect can work with any building budget," he said.

Moorhead, who has his own architectural office in Houston, said there isn't a trend toward low-budget churches, despite Houston's falterNor is the sluggish economy, and its negative effect on building in general, the reason these architects are focusing on churches, he said.

Merriman and Moorhead said they and other members of the Liturgical Architecture Committee want to educate the public. The group of nine architects from the AIA formed the committee two years ago to discuss church architecture and is planning an all-day seminar on liturgical architecture May 2 at St. John the Divine Episcopal Church. The seminar, featuring architects, pastors and builders, will focus on the various steps in building.

Merriman and Moorhead, who said a major part of their work involves church architecture, are cochairmen of the committee.

Moorhead said many members of church building committees have little or no experience with construction. They don't realize that an architect can design a building to meet the particular needs of a congregation and create options for longrange planning, he said. Instead, many of these commettees turn to a contractor who employs an architect or designer. Through this "designbuild" arrangement, church members are more likely to get a standardized plan that isn't especially designed for their congregation's long-term needs, Moorhead said.

Moorhead and Merriman cite some of their own buildings as examples of what happens when a church hires its own architect.

Moorhead was project architect with Charles Tapley Associates of Houston when that firm designed the new sanctuary at Christ the King Lutheran Church, a Lutheran Church in America congregation.

He calls the stylish sanctuary an example of postmodern architecture and notes that the design accomodates the other buildings of the church and its surroundings. The sanctuary, completed at a cost of $600,000 in 1982, was designed so the altar is the center of the sanctuary. Moorhead said that arrangment, with only four rows of pews, permits more people to be close to the altar and lends a feeling of intimacy to a family-oriented congregation.

"They really like the sense of family and togetherness they can get when they're all in here together,' Moorhead said. The wood roof deck was given extra heavy insulation to provide a four-second reverberation, accoustically ideal for a congregation with an active choir and instrumental music program,

Moorhead said. Although more modern in style, the new 300-seat sanctuary resembles the appearance of the church's previous 200-seat sanctuary, now used for education

When Merriman and the others at Ray Bailey Architects began designing a new parish hall for St. John the Divine Episcopal Church, they were confronted with a problem: the church's gym. A flat-roofed structure didn't fit the design of the church's sanctuary, chapel and education building. In this way, the parish hall, constructed in 1980 at a cost of $1.4 million, provided a link between the other buildings at St. John the Divine and created a "unified design," Merriman said.

The architects also added a covered drop-off that made it more convenient for churchgoers to walk from their cars to the sanctuary's less prominent entrance, or "back door." At St. John the Divine, as with most churches, more people go in the "back door" than through the more recognizable front doors, Merriman

The front doors give the church a symbolic presence in the community. But the architects worked to make the "back door" more prac-

"There's still a gracious way to enter the church for people using the church on a day-to-day basis from the parking lot."

Author says writing career began late

AUSTIN (AP) - Jean Auel, who became a best-selling author after rearing five children and giving up a business career, says she never thought about creative writing until

"I was never one of those people who said, 'Someday I'm going to write a book,'" she said Thursday.

Her first two novels, set in the Ice Age, have been top sellers. Ms. Auel was the featured speaker at a seminar entitled "Literature: From Unlikely Place and Unlikely People." She spoke to an overflow crowd at the Lyndon B. Johnson Auditorium at the University of

Her first two books - "The Clan of the Cave Bear" and "The Valley of the Horses" - have sold seven million copies.

The books are part of her series "Earth's Children." The idea, she said, came in 1977 after she had quit her job in credit management for an Oregon electronics firm.

Ms. Auel recalled that she married shortly after high school and had five children before she was 24. She later returned to school and earned a graduate business degree in Portland. She joined her husband in working at the electronics firm.

"I was 40 before I knew what I wanted to do when I grow up. What I want to do is tell stories. I didn't know that until I started writing,"

She said her success has "overwhelmed" her.

"I'm still not convinced that storytelling is what grown-ups do for a living," Ms. Auel said.

Cutback seen for TAES programs

COLLEGE STATION - The Texas Agricultural Extension Service, supported by federal, state, and local funds, will receive a severe blow to its educational programs if federal dollars are cut back as proposed by the Reagan Administration.

"We are currently looking at about a 59 percent reduction in federal funding, which would reduce our budget for the coming fiscal year by about $10 million," points out Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, Extension Service direc-

Federal support for the nationwide system of the Cooperative Extension Service, which was established in 1914, totaled $343,727,000 for the past fiscal year.

"The proposed budget reduction would mean a cutback in certain programming efforts at a time when our farmers and ranchers are suffering through the worst economist times since the days of the Great Depression," says Carpenter.

"Our role over the years has been to serve as a transfer agent-to take new technology from agricultural research to the farm and ranch to help producers improve their wellbeing," Carpenter explains. "Most often this has been done through onfarm demonstrations.

"While producers have fallen on hard economic times, we are attempting to work with them in every way possible to improve production efficiency by cutting costs and improving management and to look at alternative sources for generating income. We also are putting increased emphasis on educational programs relating to the marketing of agricultural commodities so that farmers and ranchers can reap greater returns from the products of their labors.

"Through agricultural research and our efforts in technology transfer, we have helped farmers and ranchers produce a supply of high quality food and fiber that is second to none in this world," Carpenter emphasizes. "Americans spend less for high quality food than any other society in the world, and it's all due to our tremendous agricultural industry.

"While thousands of Texas ave gone out of business in the past few years, we are continuing WASHINGTON (AP) - Sheep producers will receive checks this spring totaling about $103 million for wool they sold in 1985, according to the Agriculture Department.

Milton Hertz, acting administrator of the department's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, said Wednesday that the 1985 wool support of $1.65 per pound was unchanged from 1984 but that the market price was lower.

The payments are computed to reflect changes in wool market prices. In 1984, when the wool market averaged 79.5 cents per pound for shorn wool, the payments totaled $90 million.

Last year, the market price dropped to 63.3 cents per pound, on a national average, meaning an increase in payments to $103 million.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Production of dairy products in February continued to climb above yearearlier levels, reflecting increases in the nation's milk production, figures by the Agriculture Department show.

Butter output was 119 million pounds, up 11 percent from February 1985, the department's Crop Repor-ting Board said Wednesday. Produc-tion of American-type cheese was 227 million pounds, up 13 percent, and non-fat dry milk rose 26 percent to 115 million pounds.

an all-out effort to provide farm management assistance, including computer-assisted financial analyses and other educational aids to help producers with decisionmaking. We also are focusing on educational programs to deal with family stress situations created by the financial plight of farmers and ranchers," Carpenter noted.

Some 2,700 Texas farmers were forced out of business last year alone, and net farm income declined some $600 million from the 1984 level, according to preliminary estimates by Extension Service economists. At the same time, gross farm and ranch receipts held steady.

"Through our county Extension offices, our agency has day-to-day contacts with farmers, ranchers and others in need of assistance-people needing a helping hand," he added. "That's why a cut in federal funding for Extension Service programs would be so devastating to rural America and the people that have made this nation what it is today."

Improper use, ignorance cause most hand-saw accidents

By The Associated Press

Improper handling, ignorance and lack of respect cause most of the injuries suffered by homeowners who use chain saws to cut firewood, repair storm damage or perform other tasks, according to industry experts.

But a newly-amended voluntary chain saw safety standard places several stringent requirements on manufacturers of chain saws and saw chain, and may help cut down on wide-angle injuries due to kickback by the potentially lethal tool.

Some 25 percent of all chain saw injuries are due to kickback reaction, according to estimates by the Consumer Products Safety Commission.

The new safety features were adopted by a committee of manufacturers, government agencies, consumers and other interested parties to make homeowners more knowledgeable about how to control a chain saw in those situations that could present the greatest hazards. Failure to give the tool the resp it demands and ignorance of its inherent hazards are traditionally among the main causes of injuries, consultants say.

A basic safety system developed by the Homelite Division of Textron

Safe-T-Tip anti-kickback device. "Although low-kickback chain helps reduce the incidence of wide-angle kickback, the device totally eliminates the kickback reaction. This device covers the nose of the guidebar and prevents it from striking a solid object, which could cause the saw to kick back at the user."

Low kickback saw chain. "Reduces kickback intensity by as much as 75 percent compared to conventional saw chains. The latest design prevents wide-angle kickback and should provide a significant reduction in head, neck or shoulder injuries."

Chain brake. "The theory and intended function of a chain brake is to stop the rotation of saw chain after kickback occurs. Used in conjunction with other features, the chain brake can provide an added margin of safety for other functions.

When operated manually, it allows the user to lock the chain for sharpening, and for carrying the saw while the engine is idling. However, in situations where the operator is positioned close to the chain saw, it may be impossible for the brake mechanism to stop the chain before it injures the operator."

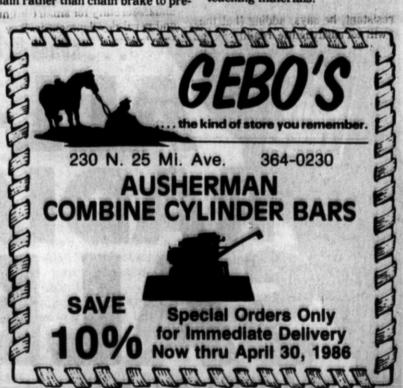

The manufacturer therefore advises the operator to rely on the antikickback device or low-kickback chain rather than chain brake to prevent wide-angle kickback.

- Vibration isolation, "Make sure the chain saw has an effective vibration isolation system - a series of isolators located in critical vibration areas on the chain saw that act as shock absorbers and significantly reduce vibration that can be transmitted to hands and arms."

- Front handguards. "The revised standard requires chain saws to feature a front handguard, which is designed to protect the user from injury if the grip of the left hand slips while using the saw."

County state," The use of all butyl ester formulations of 2,4-D and/or all high volatile formulations of 2,4-D is prohibited between the dates of April 15 until October 1 of each year."

Hormone-type herbicides that are regulated by the Texas Her-bicide Law include 2,4-D, MCPA, dicamba (Banvel) and derivatives or formulations containing these substances.

A permit must be obtained from the Texas Department of Agriculture prior to the application of any hormone-type herbicide in Deaf Smith County, beginning April 15. ### TAES using variety of weapons in war on pests

COLLEGE STATION - The Texas Agricultural Extension Service is using a variety of weapons—from the latest in computer technology to the old standby, the result demonstration—in its war on corn and sorghum pests.

"However, many of these educa-tional efforts will be affected by decreased resources should cuts proposed at the federal level take place," says Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, Extension Service director. "While the Extension Service will continue to focus its efforts on high quality educational programs aimed at meeting the needs of clientele, budget restraints will definitely limit the scope of these programs," Carpenter adds.

"This report of a successful educational effort clearly demonstrates that public funding for Extension is an investment which returns economic benefits in excess of funds committed to the Exetnsion System," says Carpenter.

Producers are selected each season to cooperate with their local county Extension agent to establish field plots to evaluate a variety of better management practices to combat damage from insect pests, notes the Extension Service director. Technical expertise for the demonstrations is provided by en-tomology specialists assigned to the various production regions. Texas farmers planted 1.5 million acres of corn and 4.3 million acres of sorghum in 1985,

Targets in these demonstration efforts are the southwestern corn borer, western corn rootworm, greenbugs (aphids) and a host of other pests that annually costs farmers millions of dollars in crop losses, points out Dr. Clifford E. Hoelscher, Extension entomologist.

The southwestern corn borer is a particularly devastating insect to the corn crop on the Texas High Plains, where losses can be as high as 30 per-cent, notes Hoelscher. Through a computer model, emergence of this sect pest can be predicted so that growers and private consultants can scout fields to determine when control measures should be taken.

"Use of these models reduces scouting time and makes control measures more effective," Hoelscher explains. "This reduces overall costs to the farmer and makes treatment more costeffective. Corn yields have been increased while the number of insecticide applications have been reduc-

Applying insecticides through center-pivot irrigation systems has also proven effective and economical in the battle against the southwestern corn borer, the entomologist pointsout. This method of insecticide application was used on 250,000 acres of corn last year in the High Plains at a savings to producers of $3 per acre—a total of $750,000. The High Plains sorghum growers also have benefitted from educatoinal programs by the Extension Service that have focused on pest control. Greenbugs (aphids) have been the target of these programs, with emphasis on timely use of economical foliar treatments as opposed to the more costly wholesale use of systemic insecticides at plan-ting. Extension insecticide suggestions are based on a field scouting system to monitor developing pest populations. It is wise to apply insecticides for greenbugs on an "as needed basis" as opposed to a preventive

"Through scouting and the application of foliar sprays when warranted to control greenbugs, sorghum growers can save some $1.5 million a year compared to using a systemic insecticide at planting on the same acreage," Hoelscher points

In the Coastal Bend area, the western corn rootworm has a big appetite and can inflict losses up to $60 per acre, according to the en-tomologist. That's why the specialists of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service have been promoting the use of a crop rotation system for corn farmers. Where farmers have not practiced crop rotation as a means to reduce rootworm damage, corn yields have been reduced as much as 25 bushels per acre. The proper use of soil insec-ticides also has helped reduce root-worm damage when economically damaging populations develop.

"Returns above all costs associated with crop rotations and insecticide treatments for the western corn rootworm have averaged $15 per acre on $80,000 acres of corn in the Coastal Bend area," Hoelscher notes. "This amounts to an estimated annual return of $1.2

By DON KENDALL AP Farm

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, is seeking to torpedo the appointment of Kathleen Lawrence, who is apparently in line to become the highest-ranking woman in the history of the Agriculture Depart-

Grassley contends that Mrs. Lawrence, 45, doesn't have the experience and political sensitivity to be undersecretary for small community and rural development. The present jobholder, Frank W. Naylor Jr., is awaiting background checks and confirmation as chairman of the new board of directors of the Farm Credit Administration.

Mrs. Lawrence has extensive Republican political credentials, but her experience with agriculture policy has been relatively recent. She worked in former President Richard Nixon's 1968 campaign and in President Reagan's unsuccessful 1976 bid, and has been a consultant in numerous other GOP state-level campaigns.

She was appointed deputy undersecretary for small community and rural development in May 1984. Previously, she was deputy director of USDA's Office of Rural Development Policy for two years.

As Naylor's top aide, Mrs. Lawrence said she has been a spokeswoman for many Reagan administration credit policies that have angered farm-state Republicans for what they view as their insensitivity. Members of the Iowa congressional delegation criticized her several Grassley is seeking signatures from senators for a letter asking Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng to appoint someone else.

"It is crucial that the person holding this position has a strong agriculture and farm finance background - a rural American who has experienced the challenges and problems of farming, who understands the dilemma facing today's credit-strapped farmers and who will inspire the necessary confidence among farmers that their concerns are being well represented at the department," the draft letter

A note appended to the letter says Lyng intends to nominate someone with little farm background to this sensitive post."

The farm financial situation is a hot political button in Grassley's state and across the Midwest, its urgency compounded by electionyear politics. Grassley is among those up for re-election this fall.

As undersecretary, Mrs. Lawrence would oversee the USDA's development and credit programs, including the Farmers Home Administration.

While several women have held assistant secretary posts, none has ever held the undersecretary's job in the male-dominated department.

Dorothy Jacobsen was the first woman assistant secretary, during the eight-year tenure of Agriculture Secretary Orville L. Freeman in the Kennedy and Johnson administra-

Dairy farmers don't have to brand cows

WASHINGTON (AP) - Dairy farmers will not be required to hot-brand cows' faces to participate in the federal whole-herd buyout program, but the Agriculture Department has left the door open if they vant to do it voluntarily.

A federal court in Rochester, N.Y., on Wednesday ruled that the depart-ment could not require such branding but did not forbid the voluntary use of hot irons by farmers to mark their animals.

Undersecretary Daniel G. Amstutz said Friday the program has been amended to allow dairy farmers to choose the alternative of freeze branding, which uses extreme cold to mark an animal's skin.

"However, if the hot-iron method is chosen, it is strongly recommended that an electrical thermostatically controlled branding iron be used," Amstutz said. "This will provide uniform heat and will result in a better brand with less chance of accidental injury to the dairy cattle."

Further, he said, since branding hot or cold - results in some pain to the animal, it is suggested that the area to be branded be desensitized in some manner, and that a veterinarian be consulted.

The dairy buyout program is aim-ed at reducing the nation's milk cow said.

Farmers whose bids were acted for the program must mark their animals permanently by bran-ding them on the cheeks. The animals must be sold for slaughter or export. Their owners must agree to remain out of the dairy business for

Other livestock producers have been concerned about the additional cow beef that will move into the market as a result of the slaughter. and Congress required USDA to buy 400 million pounds of red meat to help offset the cow beef.

Half of the purchases will be available for domestic feeding programs, half for export.

In a related development, Amstutz said the USDA will provide the Defense Department with up to 44 million pounds of meat between July 1, 1986, and Oct. 1, 1987. The meat will come from purchases made under the cow-buyout program, he

East Texas is winter home for northern beekeepers

GROVETON, Texas (AP) - In the old days, Texas was a place where cowboys herded thousands of longhorn cattle for long drives to the

Nowadays, Mark and Barbara Troje of Richville, Minn., drive their stock to Texas for the winter. In early May, they'll make the long drive back — with 50 million honey bees.

The Trojes will return to Minnesota with about 1,200 hives of bees, which are now scattered around farms near Groveton in Trinity

The Trojes are commercial honey producers. In an average year, their bees will make more than 100,000 pounds of honey, which the Trojes will sell to Sioux Honey Association, a large co-op in Sioux City, Iowa.

Troje said he and his wife have been wintering the bees in Texas for five years.

"It definitely makes a difference," he said. "We have a lot of 20-below (zero) weather in Minnesota. It's hard on the bees. East Texas is bee country. Almost every town in East Texas has an itinerant beekeeper from the north who winters here. I've heard that over three million hives of bees come out of Texas each year."

To escape the harsh winter, the Trojes select their best 300 hives. "We mark our best producers as we go along," Troje said. "We use them for breeding stock." The bees are packed in their hives, which are wrapped in straw and tar paper. Troje uses a fork lift to collect them and load them on a large truck. He then secures permits from both states and drives to Texas.

"It's a long trip: 1,500 miles," he said. "When you have car trouble and people see what you're carrying, they don't want to stop and help."

Troje arranges for the hives to be kept in bee lots on farms that are preferably two miles apart. Since the bees pollinate about 200 varieties of plants, farmers are usually glad to rent the space for payments of honey, Troje said.

In February, the Trojes begin working seven days a week. Arming themselves with helmets and protective clothing, they divide the bees into 1,200 hives.

"People stop all the time when we're working bees," Toje said. "You can hear them hit their brakes when we work next to a highway."

The Trojes are not fond of the heavy gloves worn by beekeepers, and both prefer to work with their sleeves rolled up.

"It only stings for a few seconds," Troje said, laughing. "You get used to it."

He said his daughters, Sadie, 5, and Carlye, 2, do not get excited about a bee sting, and only the family dog, Tucker, really dislikes being stung. "Old Tucker has learned to lay low," he said.

Working together, the Trojes select larvae and put them in cups, which are then inserted into the

"Because the larvae are in the cups, the other bees feed them extra royal jelly, which makes them into queens," Troje said, adding that the royal jelly is a high protein food made by the bees.

The hives of worker bees accept or reject the queens within 24 hours, and the Trojes check the hives continuously until each hive has a queen.

Troje feeds the bees corn syrup, which convinces the queen that a supply of nectar is forthcoming. "She thinks it's spring and gets excited," he said. ""She begins laying eggs, up to 1,000 a day."

By April, the hives are back to full strength: perhaps 50,000 bees to the Troje said the bees are more active than bees that wintered in Minnesota. "It's just like telling a person who has been sitting around for six months that he's got to go to work," Troje said. "It takes them a while to get started."

By contrast, the bees raised in Texas are frantically gathering nectar to feed the young.

"All they do is work," Troje said. "That is all a bee ever thinks about."

The honey season is short in Minnesota, Troje said, and the active bees from Texas pay off. He has attached scales to some of his hives and found that a hive of active bees may produce 15 pounds of honey a While it pays to come to Texas, it also pays to leave, Troje says. Honey produced in East Texas is dark, Troje said, while the honey produced in Minnesota is clear and light. "The price on the lighter honey is better,"

he said. "It sells itself."

At the end of the summer, the Tro-jes will load honey into 55-gallon drums for shipment to the market, and draw their yearly paycheck. "We're different from a lot of other farmers," Mrs. Troje said. "We've got all our eggs in one basket."

Troje nodded. "It's up to mother nature and the bees," he said. "There's not much we can do about

Asked about the attraction of the business, Troje described how the bees dance at the door of the hive to give directions to the nearest source of food. He told how the bees keep the hives at 92 degrees to incubate eggs, beating their wings to create heat and draw it into the area where the eggs are kept.

"You can walk out to a hive and just hear it roar," he said. ""They're fascinating."

Mrs. Troje agreed: "It's fascinating. That's what keeps you in the business."

Independence seemed remote

Perhaps the most turbulent years of Texas history came in the decade of the Republic, 1836-1846. Independence was declared at Washington-on-the-Brazos on March 2, 1836, but four days later, the Alamo fell to Mexican forces. Prospects for independence seemed even more remote after the Golia massacre, but the decisive victory San Jacinto finally assured Texas

Independence presented a series of challenges for the young republic-debts from the revolution plagued the government, tense and often violent relations persisted with Indians, and the wrangling over boundary lines brought Texans to battle with Mexicans. Still, the decade began with Texans expressing great confidence. The voters chose General Sam Houston, fresh from his victory at San Jacinto, to be the first president. Houston served two terms, from 1836 to 1838 and then gain from 1841 to 1844. Mirabeau Buonaparte Lamar presided over the nation from 1838 to 1841 and Anson Jones followed Houston's second term, becoming the last president of Texas.

Of the many problems that beset the new nation, historian Stanley Siegel suggests that Indian relations were most significant. In the Cherokee Treaty negotiated in 1836, Siegel says, the Cherokees pledged to remain neutral in the war against Mexico. In return, Texan represen-tatives promised that the Cherokees would have autonomy in their tribal lands between the Neches and Sabine Rivers and would be exempt from taxation. The Cherokees honored their commitment, but the Republic's Senate refused to ratify the treaty. In 1839, upon the capture of documents revealing a Cherokee-Mexican alliance, President Lamar launched the Cherokee War to drive that Indian nation from Texas.

Attempting to thwart Anglo-Texan settlement in their hunting territory, the Comanches continually raided isolated frontier communities, as well as San Antonio and Victoria. In 1842, units of mounted Texas Rangers defeated the Comanches at the Battle of Plum Creek near Segin. Although it had been temporarily subdued, the campaign for U.S. annexation of Texas resumed, offering an attractive means of insuring federal military protection against Indian raids.

In 1841, after several unsuccessful attempts to negotiate with Mexico, Lamar launched the Santa Fe expedition. His intention was to substantiate the Republic's claim to the upper Rio Grande before the U.S. annexation of Texas. Many in the Texan army never reached Santa Fe, as they either fell victim to Indian attacks or starvation along the way or encountered Mexican soldiers who easily captured and imprisoned them.

Determined to renew the war against Texas, Mexican troops frequently crossed the Rio Grande and campaigned as far as the Nueces River, which they considered to be the border with Texas. In March and September of 1842, Siegel recounts, Mexican regulars entered San Antonio and menaced the capitol at Austin. President Houston bowed to political pressure and approved a retaliatory strike across the Rio Grande. After briefly capturing the town of Mier, on Christmas Day, 1842, the invading Republic force was overwhelmed by two thousand Mexican soldiers. A number of those taken prisoner later tried to escape, but upon their capture were compelled to draw a black or white bean for their lives. Seventeen Texans drew the fateful black beans and were executed at Saltillo.

The military disasters at Santa Fe and Mier enhanced the appeal of U.S. annexation, Siegel says. Only as a state in the Union would Texas be able to secure its boundaries.

President Anson Jones would serve until February, 1846, when Texas formally joined the Union. He marked the end of the Republic by noting, "The final act of this great drama is now performed. The Republic of Texas is no more."

Louis Braille (1809-1852), a professor at the Institute for the Blind, saw the need for a writing system for his students. With the help of Valentine Hauy, Braille developed a system in relief which he adapted from Morse code. After 10 years of research, he invented the alphabet known as

Judge Roy Bean murderer, thief

EDITOR'S NOTE - "Roy Bean might have been a murderer and a robber and a thief, but he was a good man in his way." - Mrs. Beulah Birdwell Farley, a native of Langtry. - By MIKE COCHRAN

Associated Press Writer LANGTRY, Texas (AP) - He was tough and crude, a gambler and a con man, a boozer and a bigot and an opportunist who played fast and loose with the law of the land.

He was mean and uncouth and possessed the table manners of a barbarian.

He probably would have been a womanizer except that he was fat and hairy, seldom bathed and suffered a schoolboy crush on a British actress he never met.

A woman who grew up in Langtry once allowed as how he "might have been a murderer and a robber and a thief, but he was a good man in his way.'

Come along then to the rocky, rugged hills above the Rio Grande River and meet the most colorful and enduring of Texas legends, Judge Roy Bean of Langtry, "The Law West of the Pecos."

His rustic courtroom-saloon stands here today as a monument to America's last frontier and to the man who ruled it with a bizarre brand of justice.

The restored wood structure is the focal point of the Judge Roy Bean Visitor Center, itself a symbol of one of the most exciting eras in the 150 years of Texas independence.

Author C.L. Sonnichsen says his biography on the judge was written "without any illusions but with the realization that Bean was something more than an amusing old scoundrel.'

Said Sonnichsen:

"He had in him the stuff of an American folk hero of the sort which this country will never again produce."

On Aug. 2, 1882, Pecos County commissioners gathered at Fort Stockton to appoint a justice of the peace to help restore law and order at the railroad camps in the Pecos River area of Southwest Texas.

They did so at the request of the railroad and a Texas Ranger named Oglesby, who described the 3,000 rail workers and their followers as the "worst lot of roughs, gamblers, robbers and pickpockets...I ever saw."

The commissioners' choice was Roy Bean, portrayed as a man with a "great appetite for publicity and a great knack for achieving it.'

Untold numbers of books and magazine articles and a movie starring Paul Newman have recounted the escapades of the crusty old judge and the whiskey-flavored justice dispensed from the porch of his saloon, the Jersey Lilly.

Still, a new book is being written by historian Jack Skiles, 54, who as a child used the saloon as a playhouse and who today serves as supervisor of the Judge Roy Bean Visitor

We used to build fires inside the old saloon," he says. "It's a wonder we didn't burn the place down."

Oldtimers insist the judge erected his "Law West of the Pecos" sign and began holding court even before his judicial appointment was official. Armed with a six-shooter and a rarely-consulted copy of the 1879 Revised Statutes of Texas, Bean set about shaping a bit of Texas history in his own trascible image.

Langtry had no jail, so he deemed all crimes punishable by fines, with most if not all of such monies trickling into his own pockets.

The judge was particularly fond of interrupting his bluff and bluster justice for beer breaks in the saloon and often included a round of drinks for the jury as part of the fines.

His pet bear Bruno likewise drank free and often as part of the judge's rulings, and the tipsy beast surely intimidated those drunken defendants who found themselves chained to nearby mesquite trees while sobering up for trial.

An Irish railroad worker once shot and killed a Chinese laborer, and for a moment or two this posed a dilemma for Bean, whose clientele was decidedly more Irish than Oriental.

As Jack Skiles said: "Roy Bean truly loved the 'sons of St. Patrick' who liberally patronized his saloon, but he had little use for the thrifty Chinese who brought their opium from China and had no need to do business with him."

With the accused gunman standing before him, the judge flipped through his Revised Statutes of Texas and announced that he found nothing to suggest that killing a Chinaman was a criminal offense.

After dismissing the case, Judge Bean herded spectators into the Jersey Lilly and permitted the freespending Irishman to demonstrate his gratitude.

Bean built his saloon in the shadow of the train depot to exploit thirsty passengers and named his booze and billiard emporium after English Actress Lily Langtry, who was born on the Isle of Jersey.

Lily came to Langtry but not before the judge had died. "I only wish now I could have come sooner," she was quoted as saying during a brief appearance at the depot in front of the saloon and a adjacent "opera house" that bore her

Bean swore he named the town itself after the actress, for whom he carried a torch until he died in his billiard room in March 1903. Some argue today that the town's name sprang from a less romantic source a construction engineer named George Langtry.

Nevertheless, it was near Langtry, at Dead Man's Gulch, that a silver spike joined the transcontinental tracks of the Sunset Route, now the Southern Pacific, on Jan. 12, 1883.

The tracks stretched from New Orleans to San Francisco, cutting through limestone cliffs and rocky hills, and spanned the treacherous waters of the Pecos River.

An historical marker at a scenic point near Langtry notes that the railroad crossed the Pecos in 1891 and at the time was the world's longest such bridge at 2,180 feet and its highest at 321 feet.

On a recent sunsplashed morning, from the hill overlooking the modern U.S. 90 bridge, a dozen hawks could be seen riding an early spring breeze along the steep, jagged cliffs that contain the khaki green Pecos. Just south of that point, and clearly visible against the hills of Old Mexico, the Pecos converges with the Rio Grande and the two historic rivers blend into the back waters of the International Amistad Reservoir. It is a breathtaking view

In 1896, Judge Bean used the serpentine flow of the Rio Grande to defy the American and Mexican governments, along with the Texas Rangers, by staging an outlawed world championship boxing match on the river bank.

Although the story surely has been embellished, it is historic fact that Bean lured the Bob Fitzsimmons-Peter Maher world heavyweight bout to Langtry after the fight was banned at several proposed sites.

At the time, boxing was outlawed in most of the United States, so the fight was booked into Juarez, Mexico. Fight fans, writers and hangerson had gathered across the river in El Paso when word arrived that the ed a telegram from Roy Bean inviting them to Langtry.

And so it was that on the morning of Feb. 22 a special train packed with boxing fans arrived in Langtry about the same time as 18 Texas Rangers who had been sent in to stop the fight.

Unruffled, the wily old judge announced that the fight would be staged across the river in Mexico, and out of the Rangers' jurisdiction.

"When the extra supply of beer that Bean had ordered from San Antonio had been considerably diminished, the sports followed Roy Bean down the main street of Langtry to the Rio Grande," says Jack Skiles.

"They crossed the river on a footbridge built especially for the event, and watched Bob Fitzsimmons knock out Peter Maher in the first round."

Skiles said both Fitzsimmons and Roy Bean pocketed some easy money that day and the Eastern writers made the judge famous with their stories about the Law West of

One such story concerned a hobo who toppled off the bridge spanning Eagle Nest Canyon and was found dead the next day by a section crew.

Judge Bean's inquest failed to identity the man but did turn up $40 and a pistol. Bean fined the corpse $40 for carrying a concealed weapon and confiscated the pistol.

Irate victims, the corpse excluded, sometimes protested Jersey Lilly justice to federal authorities, but never to much avail. His superiors knew the territory.

In January, the family found a newspaper from the National Socialist White America Party on the front porch. An article in the paper said "all non-whites have to be deported to reservations or Third World countries."

The harassment stepped up, including handwritten messages, eggs thrown at their house and car and letters in the mail.

"I am writing you to inform you that the community you presently live in has contacted us in complaint of the situation," said a typed note mailed in February. "Why not be wise and move out? You would be better with your own kind. And you thought the days of the KKK were

The Dufaus' elder son feels threatened and has told his parents he wants a "white mommy" so the trouble will end, Mrs. Dufau said.

The Dufaus say they have some supportive neighbors, including a Hispanic man and a Filipino couple. A neighborhood friendship party is planned Sunday, said Blanche Rosloff, executive director of the Westside Fair Housing Council.

Woman who tossed children into bayou troubled

HOUSTON (AP) - A woman who threw six of her seven children into a bayou, killing one and critically injuring another, also planned to kill herself, but passersby intervened and helped rescue the youngsters, authorities say.

"She said she didn't want her babies to live in this bad world anymore and that she was going to jump in after them and kill herself, too," said Capt. M.C. Simmons.

"She wanted to throw us in because she didn't want my father to keep hitting us," the woman's 9-year-old daughter said as she sat shivering near the bayou. "She wanted to kill all of us because she didn't want us to live anymore. She said my daddy didn't want us

A 4-year-old girl and a 7-year-old boy were pulled by police divers from the Buffalo Bayou on Friday after being under water for 30 to 40 minutes, said Lt. R.H. Bielstein. The girl died hours later and the boy was in intensive care at St. Joseph Hospital, said spokeswoman Debbie Purrazzella.

No charges were immediately filed against the 29-year-old Hispanic woman and the case was still under investigation, said homicide Sgt. A.T. Herman. Investigators were searching for the father, he said.

Jackson criticizes Libya air raid at gathering

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Rev. Jesse Jackson is staking his claim for the support of the left in American politics with an attack on the U.S. bombing of Libya and an appeal to the economically distressed to unite under the banner of his Rainbow Coalition.

In a speech to the coalition convention Friday night, Jackson denounced the attack on Libya and said, "We are going to war with the world and bombing ourselves into a corner."

He noted that of the NATO countries, only Great Britain supported the bombing raid.

'We are further isolated in world pinion," he said.

The Rambow Coalition was winding up its three-day convention to-

Also addressing last night's session was Amy Carter, daughter of former President Carter and now a student at Brown University, where she has been active in protests against investment in South Africa.

Miss Carter drew loud applause when she told the delegates that "14" students, including myself, were arrested" at an anti-apartheid protest:

The students were arrested during a sit-in at an IBM office. Trespassing charges later were dropped.

Jackson said the Reagan administration was pursuing "a failed foreign policy. ... We are at war with Libya, Angola and with Central America. We are putting no pressure on the state terrorism of South

He said that as a result of the bombing of Libya, "the world is less secure and more dangerous today than it was yesterday; terrorism and counter-terrorism are more likely; and we have entered into a period of unconventional warfare whose end we cannot control or predict."

Jackson added that if the United States had irrefutable evidence of Libyan terrorism "then it should be brought before the United Nations, the Congress and the American people so the whole world can be convinced our actions are justified."

On domestic issues, Jackson called for a moratorium on farm foreclosures and a commitment of emergency funds for spring planting.

"One beautiful dimension of this convention," he added "is to watch the black and white farmers coalesce around the common elements of their predicament."

Jackson said the Rainbow Coalition was organizing in states and con-gressional districts and "through this vehicle we will project candidates, support candidates, monitor candidates, and increase voter registration and participation."

"With this vehicle we will challenge the course of Reagan's foreign and domestic policies," he

Some 1,500 people registered for the gathering.

Jackson, who finished third in the 1984 race for the Democrats' presidential nomination, has refused to say whether his coalition might be a base for another try in 1968. He has said the group is geared toward in-fluencing the 1966 elections and keep-ing the Democrats from drifting toward the right.
