Rumors surrounding PSF work countered

BY SPEEDY NIEMAN
Publisher-Editor
 "The rumor mill is running rampant" about Premium Standard Farms "but we are not insolvent, haven't sold to another company, and are not abandoning our Texas operations," Charlie Arnot, the company's director of communications, said Tuesday in an interview with The Hereford Brand.

PSF announced May 3 a delay in its expansion around Dalhart and in construction of a processing plant near Hereford. At that time, PSF President Dennis Harms said the "aggressive construction schedule is being delayed in order to review its plans in light of continued low cash hog prices."

The rumors have been circulating ever since that report, and last Friday's announcement of a reduction in the company's work force near Dalhart fueled the fire.

Arnot declined to estimate a new date on the continued expansion near Dalhart or the start of construction of a processing plant near Hereford. "We don't want to get another black eye by announcing a new timetable, then not hitting it."

"The hog market is in a very volatile situation at present. We are looking 20 years down the road and believe it's a good business decision to slow down growth right now. Industry officials think cash hog prices might stay low through 1996." He added that it would be a wait-and-see proposition.

PSF is reducing its work force at Dalhart from 240 to 170. The company offered the 70 employees a choice of being transferred to Missouri or accepting two weeks' severance pay. "As we made plans to delay growth, we had to look at staffing to see what was the appropriate size," said Arnot.

When Premium Standard Farms purchased National Hog Farms at Dalhart, it had about 100 employees and 17,000 sows. PSF increased to 240 employees and 20,000 sows before announcing the cutback.

The company had begun hiring new employees in anticipation of rapid growth this summer. Most of those being offered a transfer were hired in the last six to eight months, said Arnot. "There is plenty of room in the company for all these folks."

One factor in cash hog prices, said Arnot, is that a number of independent are liquidating their herds and causing a glut on the market. "Even the large producers are seeing who can hold their breath the longest, and the survivors will carry the industry into its next surge."

Arnot said the export market was still strong, as are high-level sales to hotels, restaurants and resorts. These customers are more interested in quality and consistency than in price. "With corn prices already locked in for 1995, the feed is not a primary problem."

Asked about rumors of financing problems, Arnot responded that his company has a fine track record and financing is available. "The company simply made a business decision to slow down expansion during the downturn in cash hog prices."

Asked about a report that a contractor complained about not being paid for work at Dalhart, Arnot said PSF has put more than $400 million in construction in place over the past five years and has never failed to pay anybody. He said a subcontractor, apparently a little nervous about rumors, contacted him about a $2,500 bill and he was referred back to his contractor.

"The company regrets any problems caused for employees and contractors. We have a 20-to-30-year plan for growth in the Panhandle, and we are not going to do anything in the next six to 12 months that would jeopardize our future here," said Arnot.

British scientists trying to develop anti-fat injection

LONDON (AP) - British scientists say a fat-dissolving shot may one day put an end to humans' need to diet.

According to a report Tuesday in The Times, the scientists aim to develop an injection to treat obesity through use of antibodies that will attack fat cells much the way these immune substances fight germs.

At least one physician wondered how the antibodies would distinguish between unwanted fat, such as extra girth in the belly, and necessary fat that cushions bones in the face.

The report in The Times said a decade of research into antibodies that destroy fat cells in pigs and sheep "shows that the same techniques can be developed for humans."

The newspaper included photographs of two pork chops, the leaner one treated with the fat-busting shot.

"The new technique is essentially biological liposuction," Dr. Chris Henshaw, one of the investigators and director of the Medical Research Council's collaborative research center in north London, is quoted as saying in The Times.

Fat cells do not replicate in adulthood, "so if you get rid of them you get rid of your capability to store fat," said Henshaw, who along with Dr. David Flint is licensed by the patent owner to develop the injection.

Dr. Shern Chew of St. Bartholomew's Hospital in London told The Associated Press today that "it sounds like a shotgun approach."

Chew questioned how the antibodies would distinguish between fat most don't want, such as in the buttocks, and fat the body uses to cushion muscles and bones.

Some fat is essential, he said. The Times said researchers would need to modify human antibodies so that they look normal to the body's disease-fighting system, but are programmed to attack fat cells.

One method involves injecting human fat cells into a mouse, which recognizes them as foreign, triggering an immune response generating anti-fat antibodies. These can be collected and cultured, the newspaper said.

Flint, of Scotland's Hannah Research Institute, was quoted as saying: "If you put these back into a human, his or her body would see these as from a mouse, so you have to humanize them. It is quite a straightforward process these days."

The Times said another technique involves identifying "sleepy" antibodies in human fat tissue that have the potential to attack fat cells. Genetic engineering is used to "reawaken" them, it said.

The Times quoted Henshaw as saying patients may need several low-level injections over a period of months or years.

Dr. Sheila Flynn of the British Technology Group, which owns the patent for the technique, told the newspaper that field trials to produce lean meat in animals will start soon in the United States on pigs.

Testing on humans is hoped to begin in two to three years, The Times said.

Food stamps to be replaced with electronic card system

BY SPEEDY NIEMAN
Publisher-Editor

Food stamp coupons and paper checks for clients of the Texas Department of Human Services will soon be replaced by a plastic debit card, called the Lone Star card.

The Texas Electronic Benefit Transfer (EBT) system is the most ambitious program of its type in the United States, and TDHS officials say it will be simple, safe and smart.

"Everyone involved likes the card system, except crooks," said Kayla Adams, EBT coordinator from Lubbock, as she outlined the program at an information meeting here Tuesday at the TDHS offices on N. 25 Mile Avenue.

More than 1 million households and 17 million Texans will benefit from the implementation of EBT. TDHS statistics for 1994 show Deaf Smith County had 4,238 food stamp participants with benefits totaling $3,202,916. AFDC recipients numbered 1,057 with benefits at $762,783. Some recipients are included in both programs.

"EBT will lower paperwork/processing costs for retailers, service providers, and the state; reduce waste and fraud; ensure that food stamps funds are spent only on food; and allow participation by both large and small retailers," Adams said.

The EBT program began in the fall of 1994 in Harris and Chambers counties, using the highly populated areas to evaluate the system. The program is scheduled to start in this region Aug. 1 and be statewide by November of 1995. The process of explaining the program to clients has already been underway here.

Clients will use the Lone Star card much the same way a bank debit card is used. This will reduce the risk of their benefits being lost or stolen, and they will no longer be forced to carry large amounts of coupons or cash.

Here's how it works:

Step 1--It's simple. Clients eligible for food stamps and/or AFDC (Aid to Families With Dependent Children) receive training on how to use the EBT system. Each client is issued a Lone Star card and a secret code or PIN number which can be used to access both AFDC and food stamp accounts.

Step 2--It's safe. On the same day each month, funds are transferred electronically to each client's account. Clients no longer have to wait for the mailman to deliver their food stamps or AFDC checks. They simply access their benefits as needed. Funds cannot be used without the client's PIN. Retailers no longer have to handle large amounts of coupons or keep canceled AFDC checks on hand.

Step 3--It's smart. Food stamp clients visit any Food and Nutrition Service (FNS) certified retailer and purchase groceries using the Lone Star card. All transactions are processed through a point-of-sale (POS) terminal. The card is scanned on the POS machine and the client enters his or her secret code.

The machine verifies that benefits are available and approves the transaction. The exact amount of the transaction is deducted from the client's account, eliminating the need for cash back on food purchases. The machine approves only food purchases for food stamp clients.

Clients can access cash benefits from AFDC checks as needed, or all at once. For either type of transaction, clients are issued a receipt that shows their beginning balance, their purchase amount, and their remaining balance, allowing them to keep better track of their monthly spending.

"The EBT system will benefit everyone," Adams said here Tuesday. For retailers, EBT:

- uses the same process and card for all benefit transactions;
- eliminates the need for temporary staff to process paper benefits warrants;
- processes an exact transaction amount every time the card is used;
- deposits food stamp and AFDC funds electronically;
- eliminates the costs associated with handling, storing, reconciling,

Vouchers removed from education overhaul plan

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) - A proposal to allow some students to use public money to attend private school has been negotiated out of legislation to overhaul Texas education.

Sen. Bill Ratliff, co-chairman of the House-Senate education conference committee, offered to take the Senate-backed voucher pilot proposal out of the bill in return for an agreement to ease class-size restrictions for proposed home-rule school districts.

His "double-barreled" compromise - approved 9-1 Tuesday by the committee - would enforce class-size limits only on home-rule campuses with unacceptable academic performance. The 22:1 student-teacher ratio applies in kindergarten through fourth grade.

Home-rule districts, created with local voter approval, also would be free from many other state requirements. The House had wanted class size limits to apply to all home-rule campuses, and it had rejected a voucher program.

Ratliff's compromise was greeted with dismay by Sen. Jane Nelson, R-Flower Mound, a voucher supporter who wanted home-rule districts to be entirely free of class-size restrictions.

"I feel like I've been just shot with a double-barreled shotgun," she told Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant.

The only member of the conference committee to vote against the compromise proposal, Mrs. Nelson noted that the voucher plan would target disadvantaged students. The voucher pilot program is among ideas supported by Republican Gov. George W. Bush, who campaigned on shifting more control of education to the local level.

Supporters say the idea would improve public schools through competition and give a way out to students stuck in poor-quality schools.

But opponents say it's wrong to funnel money that's needed in the public school system to private entities - even if they agree to abide by some state requirements, as would have been required under the voucher proposal.

Bush wouldn't say Tuesday whether he would veto the bill if specific items, such as vouchers, aren't included.

"This bill must empower local people, must encourage innovation, must have strict accountability, must have a concept of zero tolerance (for school violence). I believe it will," Bush said.

"I may not have 100 percent of what I campaigned on in the bill ... but if it adheres to those principles, then I look upon it favorably. If not, we will have to deal with that at the appropriate time," he said.

The compromise education legislation, which is aimed at giving local communities and schools more control over how students are educated, is expected to get a final committee vote next week.

The measure then will go to the House and Senate. Both chambers' approval will send the measure to the governor for consideration.

The legislation contains provisions that Bush supports, such as the home-rule school districts and a provision to move disruptive students to alternative programs.

"The most important thing (in the legislation) is all of the minutiae that's not in there which the state's been meddling in," said Ratliff. "We have reduced the control on all school districts so much the incentive to move to home rule is not as great."

Lone Star card coming

The plastic card shown above will soon replace food stamp coupons and AFDC checks used by clients of the Texas Department of Human Services. Known as the Texas Electronic Benefit Transfer, a pilot program began in Harris and Chambers counties in the fall of 1994, and the program starts in this region on Aug. 1.

House proposal saves on Medicaid

By DEAN STEPHENS
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) - The state's Medicaid system would be restructured to maximize federal dollars under a bill tentatively approved Tuesday by the Texas House.

The bill by Rep. Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, is similar to a Senate bill passed in March. The bill requires a final vote in the House before being sent to the Senate.

Under the measure, the state's Medicaid system would move toward managed health care. State and local health care providers, who now separately offer services to Medicaid patients, could join together as a nonprofit corporation and operate a health care system for a geographical area.

The system would allow state and local health care providers to pool their resources and pull down more federal matching dollars, Berlanga said.

"We want to be able to give the state of Texas and the governor in particular all the options available to him to be able to adjust based on what Washington does with Medicaid," Berlanga said.

If the federal government decides to end the disproportionate share program, which gives more federal money to health care providers who serve a large number of Medicare patients, the state could lose as much as $900 million, lawmakers say.

According to House research, the managed health care system is expected to protect that funding as well as save the state $12 million in general revenue in the next biennium and $82 million in the 1998-99 biennium.

The bill would not require all health care providers to join the nonprofit health care organizations, but it would leave the door open to providers who wanted to join later.

Rep. Jack Harris, R-Pearland, tried to amend the bill to eliminate what he called the "cumbersome government structure" that would result from several health corporations that the state Health and Human Services Commission would have to oversee and review.

He and his supporters were concerned about estimates that the commission would have to add more than 350 new employees next year as a result of the bill.

His amendment, which would have divided the state into 11 managed health care regions, was defeated.

One difference between Berlanga's bill and the Senate version concerns who could be included in the Medicaid managed health organiza-

Berlanga's bill allows all health care providers - dentists, orthodontists, podiatrists and others specialists - access to the new managed care groups for at least three years. The Senate version allows access to primary care physicians only.

The driving forces behind the managed care system are cost containment and prevention, Berlanga said. A primary physician would be assigned to a patient, and that doctor would decide when a patient needed to see a specialist.

The idea is to cut down on expensive emergency room visits by Medicaid patients who now either have no where else to go for routine medical care or wait to seek help until a medical problem has become severe.

The restructuring is expected to expand services to 500,000 Texans, for a total eligible of 2.8 million.

Blood of both victims discovered on glove found at Simpson home

By MICHAEL FLEEMAN
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Before being tested for DNA, the infamous bloody glove found on O.J. Simpson's estate was turned inside out. Now, the same might be said of the defense's case, according to legal analysts.

DNA tests showed that Ronald Goldman's blood was found on the lining of the leather glove discovered the morning after the killings, a scientist testified Tuesday.

The genetic tests also suggested that another stain on the glove was a mixture of blood from Goldman and Nicole Brown Simpson, said California Department of Justice scientist Gary Sims.

Sims was the first witness to place both victims' DNA in blood evidence collected at Simpson's multimillion-dollar estate. He was to return to the stand today for a second day of testimony.

The state crime lab's analysis of blood on socks lying at the foot of Simpson's bed also confirmed a private lab's conclusion that the blood came from Ms. Simpson.

Legal analysts said Sims' testimony was an effective complement to last week's presentation by Robin Cotton, director of the Cellmark Diagnostics lab, who presented test results showing Simpson's blood in drops at the crime scene and Ms. Simpson's blood on the socks.

"The mountain of damning blood evidence linking Simpson to these crimes is getting higher every day," said UCLA law professor Peter Arenella.

Defense lawyers say Simpson was home alone when his ex-wife and her friend were knifed to death June 12 outside Ms. Simpson's condominium.

They have suggested that police framed Simpson by planting his blood at the crime scene or on the socks in the lab.

In testimony designed to cast doubt on the claim that blood was planted, Sims noted that many of the drops on the socks were microscopic. He also said he saw no evidence of blood passing through one side of the sock to the other, as it might if blood were placed on it while the sock was lying flat.

Legal analysts said the back-to-back testimony by the DNA scientists has made the conspiracy theory less credible.

"When a conspiracy takes on so many facets, then it becomes less plausible," said Southwestern University law professor Robert Pugsley. "There are just too many people, too many complications, too many variations, too many opportunities for things to go wrong, too many people to keep their mouths shut."

A blown-up photo of the black glove was shown to jurors on a large video screen as Sims testified that it arrived at his laboratory packaged inside-out, exposing a fabric lining stained red with blood that proved to match Goldman's.

At one spot inside the glove's index finger, he said, the blood of Goldman and Ms. Simpson appeared to be mixed.

"Those two combined stains could produce the stain, G-1," Sims said in the same flat, clinical tone in which he delivered all of his conclusions. He said another spot, on the interior ring finger, matched Goldman's blood.

Sims didn't say what percentage of the population shared the same genetic makeup of Goldman's blood or of the mixture. However, with the type of sophisticated testing that was used - called RFLP - odds are high against anyone else having the same genetic makeup.

Simpson was excluded as a possible source of blood on the glove or on the sock. However, jurors have heard that his blood type was matched to blood drops in his foyer and driveway.

Persistence pays off big for Texas Lotto player

AUSTIN (AP) - Persistence apparently does pay.

For nearly 10 years, Fern Martin of Waco played the same numbers in lotto games in New York, Florida and Texas.

On Tuesday, Ms. Martin finally cashed in, claiming half of a $9.7 million Lotto Texas jackpot drawn last Wednesday. Her winning numbers were 13, 14, 15, 24, 25 and 31.

Ms. Martin collected a check for $242,637.22, the first of 20 installments. The remaining payments will total $243,500 and be paid every May 15 for the next 19 years.

"I've played this same set of numbers for nine years," Ms. Martin said. "But until now, I've never won a thing."

Texas Lottery Commission Executive Director Nora Linares said, "Without a doubt, Fern Martin's unshakable belief for nearly a decade is proof that good things really do happen for people who wait."

After winning, Ms. Martin, a 66-year-old restaurant manager, promptly made herself president of her own investment firm.

"I've always wanted to be a president of something," she said. "Now I am."

As president of M.M.P., Investments, Ltd., Martin said the jackpot winnings will be spent wisely to "make sure the entire family is secure in our old age."

Big Diamond in Waco sold the winning ticket and will receive a 1 percent bonus totalling $48,691.37.

A second winning ticket for the drawing was claimed by Howard Behrens Jr. of Houston last Friday.

Junior Historians of Texas host reception honoring all veterans

Junior Historians of Texas, Hereford Junior High Chapter 755, hosted a reception for veterans on May 13.

This second annual event, held at the HISD Administration Building banquet room, honored over fifty veterans, active Marines and their families.

As guests arrived, they were invited to view three walls of posters and memorabilia depicting World War II, Korea, Vietnam and present-day military branches of service.

World War II background music was played during this time and after the program.

The program began with the presentation of the flags by American Legion members Grant Hanna and Robert Lohr. After the pledge to the flag, led by Jenny Artho, and prayer, Chapter president Carey Lyles welcomed the guests and, assisted by Hanna and Lohr, introduced each branch of the service.

Chapter members presented readings which included: "In Flanders Field" by Krista Warren; "What Is A Veteran" by Josh Rowe and Roger Villarreal; "What Does it Mean To Be American" by Laurie Gilbert; "I Am The Flag" by Tan Nguyen and Matthew Lusk; and "America's Answer" by Emily Curtis. The program concluded with "God Bless America" led by Emily Curtis, accompanied by Laurie Gilbert, pianist.

Refreshments were served to 125 guests and members.

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I just read your response to "Mom in Matthews, N.C." she said her 18-year-old son, "Billy," pays rent, but she wants to put a midnight curfew on his girlfriend's visits. I couldn't believe it when you sided with her.

First, if Billy is still in school, what in the world is she doing charging him rent? Second, if Billy is 18, he is legally an adult, no longer a "schoolboy."

If Mom feels she needs to exact rent from her son, what he buys with his money is the right to conduct his life in HIS home as he sees fit. He is entitled to have guests, set his own hours and do anything else he chooses -- the same as anyone else who pays rent.

Mom is playing a control game here. She wants her son to be an adult when it suits her (in this case by charging him rent), but she treats him as if he were a child when THAT suits her. The woman needs to learn that she can't have it both ways.

Billy is a man now. Children do not pay rent. You goofed. Big time. -- Disappointed in N.Y.

DEAR N.Y.: Sorry, I don't agree. Many 18-year-olds have part-time jobs these days. In my opinion, they should contribute to the family income -- especially if Mom is doing his laundry, preparing his meals and cleaning his room.

Just because Billy pays rent does not mean his mother should abdicate her responsibility as a parent. He still lives under her roof, and as with any rental arrangement, the owner sets the rules. If Billy thinks he can get a better deal somewhere else, he should try to find one.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I have been married for 11 years to a total control freak. From Day One, I have let him have his way about everything. What a mistake! Now I am miserable.

We work in the same building and live an hour's drive from the office because he likes to be "away from the city." I drive the old family wagon while he drives the Porsche. I am up at 5 a.m. so he and the children can sleep until 6, have their breakfast and be out of the house by 7. Needless to say, I am exhausted all the time.

I am held accountable for every minute of my day and cannot have a phone conversation without my husband monitoring it and verbally editing my responses. Our sex life was always lousy because sex was low on his list of priorities -- but not low enough, apparently. I discovered

I have been neglected, emotionally abused and virtually imprisoned for the last three years. Two weeks ago, I decided I had had enough and told him to get out. Now he says he loves me and wants me to take him back.

The big problem is my family. They think I am not being fair to our children and that I should give him another chance. I tried counseling, which is how I became strong enough to walk away. What do you think? -- Trouble in Timbuku

DEAR TIM: I think you should go back to the counselor -- this time with your husband. The counselor would then be able to hear both sides of the story.

The "playing around" bit is an added dimension. You should not put up with that garbage -- kids or no kids. It appears that for the first time, you are in the driver's seat. Don't blow the chance to get things the way you want them. It's about time.

Brown, Hodges are Athletes of Year

By JAY PEDEN
Sports Editor

Michael Brown and Heather Hodges were named as Hereford High School's Athletes of the Year at the annual All-Sports Banquet, held Tuesday in the Bull Barn.

The Fighting Heart Award was given to Erin Dunn and Terance High, while Jana Baird, Brooke Bryant and Marc Haney were honored with the Casey Smith Memorial Award. All five are seniors.

Brown, a senior, lettered in football, basketball and track during his last year. In football, he was a two-year starter, playing safety and flanker as a junior and moving to quarterback as a senior. A double threat, he provided more than 2,000 yards of total offense, throwing for 1,200 yards and leading the team in rushing with 835 yards on 158 carries.

In basketball, Brown's outside shooting (12 points per game) and pressure defense helped the Herd to its first playoff appearance since 1977. In track, he scored points in the triple jump, long jump and sprint relay, and he helped the relay to a third place finish at the District 1-4A meet.

Hodges, a junior, was the only non-senior among the major award winners. She has already earned all-district recognition twice in volleyball, while helping the Lady Whitefaces to the regional finals of the playoffs the last two years. She led the team in kills per match during the district season with 7.67, and she also boasted a high hitting percentage of .842.

In basketball, Hodges scored seven points a game and grabbed three rebounds per contest. She hit 40 percent of her field goal attempts, which was third on the team.

The Fighting Heart Award goes to the overachiever--the athlete who gets more out of his athletic ability than most people do. In the words of basketball coach Randy Dean, who presented the boys' award to High, it's the athlete who believes "that even though the cards are stacked against them, they (believe they) hold the trump."

High embodies the spirit of the award, Dean said, since he contributed in two sports despite not having the size typical for the positions he played: he was a 190-pound tackle in football and a 5-foot-10 post in basketball.

Dunn "felt her opportunities in athletics were not a right but a privilege," said assistant track coach Jill Harrison. Dunn ran the second-fastest 100-meter hurdles in school history and finished third at the district meet. She also played volleyball.

The Casey Smith Memorial Award goes to the Herd athlete who works the hardest to improve and shows a love of the game.

Baird, a golfer, improved her scoring average through every portion of the golf schedule, said coach Stacey Bixler, who presented her. She helped the girls' golf team to another regional tournament this season.

Bryant, was a two-year letter winner for the volleyball team, serving wherever she was needed--at backup setter or hitter. "When a teammate scored as a result of her efforts, she was as happy as if she'd scored the kill herself," volleyball coach Brenda Reeh said.

Haney, a two-year letter winner in football, "use what talent he had to the best of his ability," football assistant Joe Cabezuca said. He started during his senior year at wide receiver.

The Hereford Brand and KPAN Radio honored athletes in each varsity sport with Media Awards. Recipients included: Michael Brown, football; Danielle Cornelius, volleyball; Nora Herrera and Tommy Mather, cross country; Benton Buckley, boys' basketball; Mindi Davis, girls' basketball; Karen Manchee and Scott Burkhalter, golf; Marquise Brown and Marie Crox, track; and Michael Marquez, baseball.

In tennis, four athletes received media awards: the state tournament qualifying doubles teams of Natalie McWhorter and Paige Robbins and Pete Vargas and B.J. Lockmiller.

Herrera, Buckley, Manchee, Burkhalter, Marquez and Michael Brown are seniors. Davis, Brown, Crox and the four tennis players are juniors. Cornelius and Mather are sophomores.

Rockets down Suns

By MEL REISNER
AP Sports Writer

PHOENIX (AP) - The Houston Rockets have played in so many elimination games, they seem immune to the pressure.

"We're still alive, and there's got to be some things going on in their minds now," coach Rudy Tomjanovich said Tuesday night after the Rockets defeated the Phoenix Suns 103-97 in overtime of Game 5 to stay alive in the Western Conference semifinals. "We're coming after them."

The Rockets ran their record to 6-0 the last two years in playoff games in which a loss meant elimination, but the Suns still lead the best-of-7 series 3-2, with Game 6 in Houston on Thursday night.

Hakeem Olajuwon, who had 31 points and 16 rebounds, believes the Rockets can come all the way back in the series, the way they did after Utah took a 2-1 lead in the first round.

"The ball is back in our court. We have new life and new energy," Olajuwon said.

"It's a tough loss for us. They did what they had to do to find a way to win," Phoenix coach Paul Westphal said.

Olajuwon scored the final basket of regulation, a turnaround jumper from the lane, to tie it 92-92.

He scored again 23 seconds into overtime, but Charles Barkley tied it 94-94 for Phoenix with 3:43 to play. Robert Horry's 3-pointer gave the Rockets the lead for good with 3:12 to go, and Horry got a rebound basket with 2:01 left, putting Houston ahead 99-96.

The batter's box in baseball is 4 feet wide and 6 feet long.

Hugh McElhenny, a member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame, ran 40 yards for a touchdown on his first professional carry.

Senior golfer star Chi Chi Rodriguez won eight tournaments on the regular PGA Tour and was 3-1 in playoffs.

"You've got to go out and play," said Horry, who had 11 points and 11 rebounds and did a good job covering Barkley, sometimes with help from Chucky Brown. "There's no time to sit back and relax like it's the regular season."

Kevin Johnson scored 28 points and Barkley had 17 points and 20 rebounds, but missed 11 straight shots in one stretch, including all seven in the second half and one of two in overtime.

"I think we took some shots we shouldn't have, and tried to make some passes we shouldn't have," Johnson said.

Kenny Smith scored 21 points for the Rockets.

A.C. Green had a playoff career-high 20 rebounds to go with 11 points, and the Suns had a huge rebounding edge (68-49), but couldn't offset their 17 turnovers, which resulted in 19 points for the Rockets.

Both teams shot 38 percent, but the Rockets, with Smith hitting 5-of-11, had the edge with 10 3-pointers, double the Suns' total.

It was the Rockets' first playoff win in three games at the America West Arena, where they won both games during the season.

The Suns missed 13 of their first 17 shots in the fourth quarter and finished with 13 points in the period. But Dan Majerle hit a go-ahead 3-pointer with 2:42 left, giving the Suns a 91-90 lead.

Houston was in the throes of a seven-minute scoreless spell, but the Suns weren't able to capitalize because of Barkley's second terrible game in the last three.

Barkley was scoreless in the second half before making a free throw that gave the Suns a 92-90 lead with 17 seconds left. Olajuwon tied it with eight seconds left.

Van Exel's miracle shot burns Spurs

By JAIME ARON
AP Sports Writer
SAN ANTONIO (AP) - The Los Angeles Lakers are still alive in the NBA playoffs because Nick Van Exel found a way to revive them.

The San Antonio Spurs are still a game away from their first appearance in the Western Conference finals in 12 years because they've suddenly developed an aggressiveness problem. With Dennis Rodman on the team, imagine that.

San Antonio's agony became Van Exel's glory Tuesday night as he tied Game 5 of their conference semifinal with 10 seconds left in the fourth quarter, then sank a 3-pointer with 0.5 seconds left in overtime for a 98-96 victory.

The Spurs still lead 3-2, but Los Angeles takes the momentum home for Game 6 on Thursday.

"We still need to understand that we need another win to stay alive," Lakers forward Cedric Ceballos said. "But we did enough things well tonight to stay alive."

The most important thing they did was prey on San Antonio's newfound passiveness.

The Spurs lacked a killer instinct, and even though they recovered enough to lead by four with 1:25 left in the fourth quarter and by six with 2:33 left in overtime, they couldn't put the game away.

"This whole series, we haven't played Spurs basketball," San Antonio guard Avery Johnson said. "We've had an awful lot of breakdowns."

"We lost a game we should've won," said Spurs guard Doc Rivers, who missed a 3-pointer with 18 seconds left in regulation that he probably shouldn't have taken. "We didn't win the game because we weren't aggressive down the stretch."

Los Angeles didn't exactly have a hungry look to it, either. The Lakers led by nine early in the fourth, then went nearly seven minutes without scoring and more than nine without a field goal.

Down the stretch, Van Exel was their only hope. He scored seven of their last nine points and two of their three fourth-quarter field goals, including a long 3-pointer with 10 seconds left that tied it 88-88.

The Spurs seemed more determined to wrap up the series once overtime began. In less than 2 minutes, they had a 96-90 lead.

Then they got soft again and appeared to be playing not to lose. They tried running down the clock, but didn't take good shots.

Los Angeles then began hitting its shots, closing to 96-95 with 1:15 to play. On one of San Antonio's last possessions, David Robinson faced up Vlade Divac for several seconds to burn the clock, then missed a 14-footer.

The Lakers went for two with 5.6 seconds left in overtime when Elden Campbell drove for a layup. His miss was swatted around, with Robinson tipping it away from Rodman and Johnson trying to grab it.

Instead, Vlade Divac got the ball and passed to Van Exel, who put up a high-arching shot over a charging Robinson.

"I wanted it," said Van Exel, who led Los Angeles with 22 points. "There was no way I was going to pass it off. I guess God was on my side."

Justice's 4 hits spark Braves

By The Associated Press
Next time David Justice tells Bobby Cox he's ready to play, the manager won't hesitate to write his name on the lineup card.

After missing eight games with a bruised nerve in his right shoulder, Justice took batting practice before Tuesday night's Atlanta-Colorado game and then convinced Cox he was ready to play.

"I told him no at first," Cox said of Justice's pregame request. "He said whatever he could do tomorrow night he could do tonight. Whatever he did today, he may as well do tomorrow."

That would mean quite a season: Justice had four hits and as many RBIs in the Braves' 15-3 victory that gave them a 23-2 record against Colorado, 11-1 at home.

"I think I did pretty good," Justice understated after hitting a two-run homer and combining with Fred McGriff for eight of Atlanta's 20 hits. "I'd just take this three times a week for the whole season."

It was the sixth career four-hit game for Justice.

"All I was thinking about all night was keeping both hands on the bat because my shoulder still hurts," Justice said. "I've got to play with the pain that I have if I want to play."

In other NL games Tuesday it was Chicago 2, San Francisco 0; Philadelphia 9, Florida 7 in 10 innings; Montreal 7, Cincinnati 3; New York 1, Houston 0; Pittsburgh

2, Los Angeles 0; and San Diego 1, St. Louis 0.

The Braves also got home runs from Jeff Blauser and rookies Jose Oliva and Chipper Jones, helping John Smoltz (2-2) improve his lifetime record against the Rockies to 5-0.

Mets 1, Astros 0

Bobby Jones and Doug Henry combined on a three-hitter as the Astros dropped their fourth straight, all at home, where they are 1-6 this season.

It was the third straight victory for Jones (3-1), who didn't allow a hit after the third and has given up two earned runs in his last 30 innings. Henry pitched two hitless innings for his first save.

Vaughn leads Sox past Brewers

By The Associated Press
Mo Vaughn is in a groove. He leads the American League in home runs with 10, and he's carrying the Red Sox.

"He's swinging good, his average is coming up. He's hit a lot of balls right on the screws, even for outs," Boston manager Kevin Kennedy said after a 5-0 victory over Milwaukee on Tuesday night. "He's locked in and he's just getting better and better. He's got some kind of talent with that bat."

Vaughn's solo homer off Bob Scanlan (1-1) in the second inning traveled 430 feet and gave Boston a 2-0 lead. Vaughn led off the eighth with a 415-foot homer off Scanlan, making it 5-0.

Vaughn has six homers in his last six games and 10 of his last 15 hits are homers. He was happiest with a sacrifice fly that put Boston ahead 3-0.

"Hitting home runs is one thing," Vaughn said. "But hitting in situations is totally different. That was a better piece of hitting."

In other games, Cleveland beat New York 10-5, Texas beat Toronto 6-1, Detroit beat Baltimore 9-8, Oakland beat Chicago 7-1 in five innings, California beat Minnesota 9-6 and Kansas City beat Seattle 4-2 in 4 1/2 innings.

At Milwaukee, Erik Hanson (3-0) pitched a four-hitter, struck out 10, walked none and handed the Brewers their third shutout in their last five games. He lowered his league-leading ERA to 0.71, allowing just one hit after the third inning.

"I'm getting tired of saying 'These guys are pitching good baseball,' but the guy did pitch a pretty good game tonight," Milwaukee manager Phil Garner said.

Milwaukee has been shut down by David Cone, Pat Hentgen and Hanson in the Brewers last three games.

"We've run into some tough pitchers, but we have an anemic offense right now," Brewers manager Phil Garner said. "We can't do anything."

Rangers 6, Blue Jays 1
Kenny Rogers (3-2) won his third straight start, but left with a strained hamstring. Rogers, whose right leg began bothering him during the third inning, allowed two hits in five shutout innings, struck out seven and walked two at Arlington.

Al Leiter (1-2) was tagged for six runs and 10 hits in six innings with six strikeouts and five walks.

Tigers 9, Orioles 8

Travis Fryman hit a two-run double off Doug Jones (0-2) in the ninth at Camden Yards as Detroit overcame a pair of two-run homers by Rafael Palmeiro.

Magic lead Bulls, 3-2

By WENDY E. LANE
AP Basketball Writer
ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) - For the Orlando Magic to close out their series with the Bulls in Chicago, they will need all the poise they can muster. If anyone can give it to them, Horace Grant can.

The veteran's leadership is a principal reason Orlando has a 3-2 lead in the Eastern Conference semifinals and is in a position to win it Thursday.

Grant scored 24 points and had 11 rebounds Tuesday night in Orlando's 103-95 win and is averaging 20.4 points and 12 rebounds in the series. Again and again, he has picked up his young teammates when they were on the verge of falling apart.

"I think he has been their MVP," Michael Jordan said of his former teammate. "He gives them consistent play every game."

When the Magic got off to a dreadful start Tuesday night, Grant was the one hitting his shots, because Chicago's double teams on Shaquille O'Neal left him open.

And his maturity helped Orlando come back strong in the second half. The Magic controlled the tempo, beat the Bulls to loose balls and dominated the boards.

Grant was one of four Orlando starters to hit for 19 or more. O'Neal scored 15 of his 23 points in the second half and had 22 rebounds and five blocks. Dennis Scott scored 22 points and Anfernee Hardaway 19.

"It was a whole team effort," Grant said. "It's what we need to win a championship."

The Bulls, meanwhile, got 39 from Jordan and not much from anybody else. During the series, a good game for Jordan has usually meant a poor one for his teammates.

It was a big turnaround from the first half, when the Magic missed layups, putbacks and open jumpers. O'Neal even botched a dunk, bouncing the ball off the rim and sending it bounding past midcourt.

Project Noah's Ark seeks to help endangered animal species

By MIKE DRAGO
Associated Press Writer
COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — The Hunter's Hartebeest is lingering near the abyss of extinction.

The last one known to exist, a tawny, 5-year-old female that weighs 130 pounds and measures about six feet from hoof to gently curving horn, lives at the Gladys Porter Zoo in Brownsville. When she dies, an entire species of the antelope once abundant in eastern Africa will go with her.

Duane Kraemer probably can't stop that from happening, but his work at Texas A&M University could help put herds of Hunter's Hartebeest back on dusty African plains.

Kraemer is the modern-day Noah behind Project Noah's Ark, a fledgling effort to establish facilities around the world to gather and preserve the semen, eggs and embryos of endangered species.

Cryopreservation is a $10 word for the practice of freezing tissue at temperatures low enough to stop metabolism. Animal genomes are stored in thin plastic straws that usually are kept in liquid nitrogen at minus 196 degrees Celsius.

Kraemer and other researchers want to use cryopreservation to spur animal populations where current technology permits.

Where scientific methods don't yet exist, the goal is to preserve genetic material so extinct species can be re-established by implanting embryos in host animals.

Preserved sperm and eggs from the Hunter's Hartebeest, for example, could be implanted in another antelope species once researchers find one that is compatible.

While more conventional preservation methods, such as habitat protection and captive breeding, remain top priorities, Kraemer says a safety net is desperately needed. An estimated 2,000 animals species will vanish in the next century if current trends continue.

"In some cases, the endangered species is going to win. In other cases, the (human) development is going to win," said Kraemer, an associate dean at Texas A&M's College of Veterinary Medicine.

"We can't predict which. But we ought to be in there getting that genetic material preserved. ... If we don't do it, we're going to wish we had."

Researchers around the world have long used cryogenic methods to preserve genetic materials. The cattle industry uses an embryo transfer process in breeding, and zoos swap embryos to avoid inbreeding among their animal populations.

In the United States, the largest so-called frozen zoos are kept at the Cincinnati Zoo, the Henry Doorly Zoo in Omaha, Neb., the San Diego Zoo and the National Zoo in Washington, D.C.

In a nondescript, one-story building at Texas A&M, veterinary physiologist Mark Westhusin oversees a lab that keeps thousands of specimens in 10 liquid-nitrogen tanks about the size of a beer keg.

Westhusin and others at A&M are working to breed a hybrid of Armenian red sheep and desert big horn sheep that might carry embryos from the endangered Armenian to term.

In Cincinnati, in-vitro fertilization techniques have resulted in endangered Indian desert cats born to domestic cats, and the first test-tube tigers were born at the Omaha zoo.

What's lacking, according to Kraemer, is a coordinated network that helps frozen zoos work together to avoid overlapping efforts and an organization that sets out the species most in need of attention.

The various frozen zoos around the country collaborate from time to time, but cooperation is limited because of rivalries linked to their competition for funding.

Kraemer said existing facilities are focused primarily on "targets of opportunity" rather than a systematic search for animals in grave danger.

That's the dream for Project

Noah's Ark, which Kraemer hopes to kick off officially this year with a fundraising drive.

The project would be centered at Texas A&M, with three or four satellite facilities around the country and, ideally, mobile units traveling the world to collect genetic material.

It's a mammoth undertaking that Kraemer and one of his students, a woman who now works with the Omaha frozen zoo, first pitched in 1989 while applying for a $22 million National Science Foundation grant.

The request was rejected, but foundation officials acknowledged that Kraemer's idea should be pursued.

Kraemer, who almost resembles the biblical Noah if not for his white laboratory jacket and cowboy boots, decided to set up the non-profit Project Noah's Ark Foundation to solicit private donations.

The effort to obtain seed funding has been slow, but Kraemer said he decided he didn't want to rely on public funding in an era of slash-and-burn budget cutting.

"The main driving factor is long-term stability," he said. "If we put embryos, sperm, DNA into liquid nitrogen and someone says, 'We can't fund that anymore,' the effort will have been wasted."

"It doesn't cut out the possibility of us using public funds, but I clearly don't want to become dependent on it. That's the reason for this structure.

Whether it will fly is yet to be determined."

Kraemer estimates it will cost at least $7.2 million to collect, preserve and study genomes of 15 top-priority species he has identified, including the snow leopard, spectacled bear, Amazon parrot and the Atwater's prairie chicken.

Naida Loskutoff, the Omaha zoo researcher who studied under Kraemer and helped him develop the idea, said she supports her mentor's work.

"We can talk about conservation and all that, but we're losing it," said Loskutoff, who recently found out that sperm preserved from a gorilla in her zoo had impregnated a gorilla at the Cincinnati zoo.

To Your Good Health

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: I saw the letter and your answer to the woman who had trouble walking. You called her problem "claudication" and advised some walking as therapy. I also have calf pain. It makes it virtually impossible for me to stand, much less walk. Please tell me anything you can about the causes and other treatments for claudication. Walking is not appropriate for me in my condition. — K.T.

ANSWER: There might be a communication failure here.

Claudication is leg pain that comes on when you are walking around. It happens because clogged leg arteries cannot continue to support the leg-muscle activity. The blockage is preventing blood from getting to the muscles. The signal is pain, which stops once you stop walking.

Not all leg pain is claudication. Your pain apparently occurs even when you stand still. That is not typical of artery clogging. I would be more comfortable suggesting some form of nerve or muscle disorder.

You need to have the issue settled before you try any treatment. You don't want to leap to a lame diagnosis.

Now, people with the claudication pattern I described can help themselves. First of all, they need to get on a low-fat, low-cholesterol diet, and to control blood pressure. And those are not gratuitous hints. They hold the prospect of real and timely help.

Yes, I advised walking. The idea is to encourage blood flow. When pain occurs, the patient stops and waits for it to end — which should not take long — then continues walking. Walk, stop, walk, etc.

Certain drugs can help a patient with diagnosed claudication. One is pentoxifylline — Trental. It makes blood less viscous, more able to squeeze past narrowings of vessels.

If advised, leg arteries can be opened much as are clogged heart vessels, through balloon angioplasty, for example.

First things first, K.T. Find out what's wrong before you try to fix it.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: One question on magnetic X-rays. My friend says they do not use radioactivity. True? If they do, how much? — N.T.

ANSWER: Ionizing radiation plays no role whatever in magnetic resonance imaging. I am sure your question refers to that.

As the name implies, the MRI process employs magnetic wave variables to produce the pictures. They are not like X-rays.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: With spring, there is the usual rush of kids to their bicycles and dangers in the streets. Please, Doctor, with your wide audience, you could provide a real service. Please urge parents to get their kids helmets to protect their heads. So many tragedies occur each year among youngsters riding bareheaded. — W.I.

ANSWER: Sometimes, the most obvious of preventive steps gets lost in the bustle of changing seasons. As it happens, I have at hand an interesting study on just this subject.

The research was done in Canada among young cyclists. It involved a study of fatalities occurring from cycling accidents involving children younger than 15. In one five-year period in Ontario, 81 such deaths occurred. None of the 81 children was wearing a helmet.

Dr. Donohue regrets that he is unable to answer individual letters, but he will incorporate them in his column whenever possible. Readers may write him at P.O. Box 5539, Riverton, NJ 08077-5539.

Hints from Heloise

Dear Heloise: I have discovered a method of storing bananas in the refrigerator for a week or longer, depending upon ripeness at the time of purchase. I have been doing this for more than 12 years.

Buy bananas not too ripe (if you eat them every day and can't get out very often), put them in a doubled paper bag and fold over the top and wrap the bag around the bananas. Then, put in a plastic grocery bag that fruit comes in and wrap around the bananas and close with a rubber band. Make sure all the air is out. Put in the refrigerator.

Take out bananas a day or so before you'll eat them to give them time to ripen.

I would surely like to help others, especially the aged and weak who can't get out often or the homebound or disabled, learn how to keep bananas, a very good source of potassium. — Connie Price, Cartwright, Okla.

Thanks for your words of wisdom! For others who try this, you may get a surprise when you remove the banana and the skin has darkened. Don't panic. Looks can be deceiving because even though the banana skin is dark, the inner pulp will still be good.

For quick ripening, place the bananas in a brown paper (not plastic) bag overnight with an apple or tomato. The next day, you'll be able to eat and enjoy. These tasty banana hints brought to you courtesy of the International Banana Association.

— Heloise
COUPON SYSTEM
 Dear Heloise: I changed my coupon system at the beginning of the year and am seeing greater savings and better use of my coupons.

Previously, I had organized them by product groups — dairy, baking, cleaning, etc. It required a lot of searching. Now my coupons are filed by the month they expire, one month early. Those expiring May 28, for example, are filed in April. Those with no expiration are filed in a separate category.

After making my grocery list of essentials, I look at the coupons that are soon to expire and pull out any for items already on my list and those extras I know from experience I'll be wanting on hand.

Combined with store specials, I find I'm saving more than ever on my grocery bill. — Lynn B., Rochester, N.Y.

New 'contract' cites needs of family

By JOHN KING
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Setting the stage for a crucial test of its clout with Congress, the Christian Coalition is calling for new restrictions on abortion and measures allowing prayer at schools and other public places.

In a "Contract With the American Family" being released today, the organization also called for several changes in tax policy it said would help families, from a $500 per child tax credit to Individual Retirement Accounts for homemakers, with the same tax benefits as IRAs for those who work outside the home.

The 10-point agenda also advocates abolishing the Education Department and enacting legislation that would pick 20 areas to test school choice programs. It calls for ending government funding for the National Endowments for the Arts and the Humanities, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting and the Legal Services Corp.

The Christian Coalition, the most politically powerful organization in the religious conservative movement, was founded as an offshoot of religious broadcaster Pat Robertson's 1988 presidential campaign.

The organization and its allies were critical to Republicans' success in last year's elections. After holding back in the early months of the new Congress, or supporting the Republican focus on the House GOP's "Contract With America," these groups are now demanding that Congress heed some of their concerns.

The effort has led Democrats and some GOP moderates to predict a Republican civil war over divisive social legislation.

Eager to avoid a divisive fight and to chalk up some successes, the coalition researched items supported by its members and included in the contract only those with at least 60 percent public support in a poll it commissioned.

"We are not going to do to the Republican Congress what the feminists and gays did to the Clinton administration when they pushed for an extremist agenda that got Bill Clinton off to a poor start that he never recovered," Ralph Reed, executive director of the Christian Coalition, said in a telephone interview Tuesday.

Early indications are that the coalition will have influential support, and Reed said the organization planned to spend more than $1 million on ads, mailings and other efforts to drum up support for the measures.

Scheduled to join Reed and state Christian Coalition leaders at today's announcement were House Speaker Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., Senate Majority Whip Trent Lott, R-Miss., and Texas GOP Sen. Phil Gramm, a presidential aspirant. Immediately afterward, coalition leaders were meeting with Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, the GOP presidential front-runner.

Ironically, one of the first to criticize the Christian Coalition effort was a third GOP presidential candidate, Pat Buchanan, who has long promoted the social conservative agenda and who called for a constitutional amendment outlawing abortion.

The Christian Coalition called for banning Medicaid funding of abortions, cutting off funding to Planned Parenthood and other groups that provide abortion counseling and restricting late-term abortions.
