Forbidden
 Hereford Fire Marshal Jay Spain displays a portion of the fireworks which have been confiscated by local officials since the new fire code was put into effect last July. Spain reminds residents that fireworks are now forbidden within the city limits.

Crackdown is planned on city fireworks

By KAY PECK
 Staff Writer
 Fireworks can and do cause fires. The proven hazards of fireworks motivated Hereford officials to forbid the ignition or even the possession of fireworks within the city limits.
 The new fire code, effective since last July 16, says:
 "... it shall be unlawful for any person to possess, store, to offer for sale, sell at retail, or use or explode any fireworks."
 The code does provide for the issuance of permits by fire officials to allow approved public or private displays. Despite this provision, in practice, the new fire code means that fireworks are now forbidden anywhere within the city limits.
 "I'll be writing tickets to anyone found in possession of fireworks inside the city limits," said Fire Marshall Jay Spain.
 City policemen will also be issuing citations and confiscating fireworks. Fireworks violators can be subject to a fine of up to $200.
 If Hereford residents wish to use fireworks during this Fourth of July, those fireworks should be purchased and exploded outside the city limits.
 Many years ago, a public fireworks display was held on the Fourth of July at Veteran's Park. A major reason that the display was discontinued was the general public's practice of exploding personal fireworks at the park.
 "We had several fires started down there," Spain said.
 As a man responsible for fire safety in Hereford and the surrounding area, Spain describes fireworks as a "public nuisance."
 In 1988 city police made 99 calls resulting from complaints about fireworks being set off inside the city. These calls were made during the two week period from June 24, when fireworks first went on sale, through July 4.
 During that same period, the Hereford Volunteer Fire Department responded to better than 20 fires which were started by fireworks. Many of those calls were structure fires including at least one house fire.
 "Are they (fireworks) really worth the chance of injury or destruction that they can possibly cause?" Spain asked.

Kings of the road
 Construction workers are craftsmen

By KAY PECK
 Staff Writer
 If roads are the veins and arteries of a nation, then Randy Criswell, Dylrel Wells and Dale Frerichs are three in an army of white blood cells.
 It's men like Criswell, Wells and Frerichs who keep the nation mobile. They are the ones who build and repair our roads.
 These three men are a part of the crew which is currently constructing 16 miles of road on the Harrison Highway west of Hereford. The project is a major rehabilitation of a stretch of road which was originally built in 1949.
 "Before we started, it rode like a (corn) cob," Criswell said.
 Criswell is an engineer technician for the Texas Department of Highways.
 Although the old materials have been incorporated in the caliche base, once the reconstruction is completed, the 16 mile stretch will be, essentially, a new road. The project began in September 1988 with completion predicted for this July.
 "I'm responsible for making sure the taxpayers get their money's worth," Criswell said.
 Considering the estimated cost of the Harrison Highway project is $2.8 million, Criswell is responsible for a good chunk of taxpayer dollars.
 Although a contractor -- in this case Amarillo Road -- does the actual construction, a state official must stay in contact with the project. The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation provides specifications for construction, and the project is inspected continually to insure that it meets required standards.
 It is not Criswell's job to do so much as it is to know. He has to know everything from the physical properties of the very molecules which make up construction materials to details concerning length, Dale Frerichs is a road grader extraordinaire on the road construction crew currently working west of Hereford on the Harrison Highway.

 width, depth and angle of the road being built.
 If Criswell is part of the project's brains, Dylrel Wells is a vertebra in the basic backbone. Wells is part of the work force that actually builds the road.
 "Utility man... that's what my job's called, but I don't know why," Wells said.
 Basically, Wells does whatever needs to be done.
 "I've walked the whole 16 miles three or four times," he said.
 On Monday, Wells was in the process of walking the length of the project a fifth time. He'd walk a few feet, pull a tab out of a reflector, walk a few more feet, move a vertical panel and then start the whole process over again. And again. And again.

 Wells didn't seem to mind his tedious task.
 "It (the job) is interesting. There are lots of different things to do, and I get my exercise," Wells said.
 The days can be long, and they are frequently hot, but, all in all, the construction crew seems to be a happy lot. Part of what makes it worth coming to work each morning is the comradery which is apparent after only a few minutes with crew members.
 During a brief pause in their labor, a handful of crewmen started an interesting discussion. They were attempting to decide who was the ugliest.
 "Oh, yeah, we do it all the time," Wells said about the crew's teasing.
 Wells indicated that overall job satisfaction is excellent among his co-workers.
 "Everybody out here likes this kind of work," he said.
 The work may be enjoyable, but it is also dangerous. One of the most frequent hazards is flying debris kicked up by passing automobiles or equipment.
 "One old boy got popped with some of that caliche rock. He sure was sore for a few days," Wells said.

POW chapel will be dedicated

By JOHN BROOKS
 Managing Editor
 A living legacy of peace will be dedicated on June 18 when a group of former Italian prisoners of war return to Hereford for dedication of the almost completely restored chapel at the old POW camp site south of Hereford.
 Some of the men who will be at the dedication were in the group that visited on April 30, 1988.
 The formal dedication of the chapel will take place at 3 p.m. Final details of the program have not yet been worked out, according to Grant Hanna. Hanna was a mess sergeant at the camp, and is one of the most-noted local historians on the camp.

 Restoration work began in 1987 when the Castro County Historical Commission obtained an easement from Charles Schlabs, the current owner of the land, for the land surrounding the chapel.
 The chapel and a small cemetery were constructed by POWs in memory of five of their fellow prisoners who died while imprisoned here.

Some of the restoration work was completed in 1987 and early 1988 before the April visit by the former POWs, including dirt work and foundation work around the chapel to prevent further erosion of the chapel's foundation.
 Restoration work resumed last August. Schlabs and some of his employees laid a walk way, installed posts and used barbed wire originally used at the POW camp for a fence around the chapel.
 Lon Woodburn, a member of the Castro County Historical Commission, and Eddie Guffee, director of the Llano Estacado Museum in Plainview, measured the windows and doors of the chapel. The chapel now has plexiglass windows and wooden doors in place.

 The entire roof of the chapel was restored to prevent leakage, with as many of the original asbestos-slate shingles used as possible.
 Much of the refinishing of the chapel, which is stucco but has a plaster-like finish, was done by Wally Castillo, whose grandfather had taught him plastering and stucco work.
 According to Teeny Bowden of the Castro County group, Wally's name was among those that had been carved into the chapel's walls. Bowden said Castillo carved his name there when he was a boy and didn't realize he was vandalizing a sacred place.
 Since, Castillo has been able to patch over the carved names and bullet holes that have marred the chapel over the last 40 years, and has built back chipped-off places on the window sills and the altar.
 The altar and pieta area have also been replaced, with Candace Keller, head of the art department at Wayland Baptist University, able to restore the work originally done by Rinaldi Rimini, who achieved national acclaim in Italy before his death.
 The chapel will also include a replica of the original wooden cross above the altar and a larger cross outside the chapel.
 Schlabs and others are also installing an underground sprinkler system, and the area surrounding the chapel will be sod.
 Workers are also planting two laurel trees, one on each side of the walk at the entrance to the chapel area.

Chapel to be dedicated
 A group of former Italian prisoners of war, during an April 1988 visit, stand in front of the chapel built by prisoners at the POW camp south of Hereford. A group of former POWs and others will visit here June 18 for dedication ceremonies for the chapel, which has been almost completely restored.

6 Long Days In China

EDITOR'S NOTE - Here is an account by two AP reporters who were on the scene in Beijing for pro-democracy demonstrations that began peacefully and ended in gunfire. This is their report.

By JOHN POMFRET and DAN BIEERS
Associated Press Writers

BEIJING (AP) - It began with the slap of jogging feet on pavement. It was early Saturday, June 3, and thousands of young, unarmed soldiers moved into the city.

An impenetrable wall of citizens stopped them as they marched from the east and north toward Tiananmen Square, where students were holding a huge sit-in for freedom and clean government.

"Please go back. We don't need you here," a high school teacher said.

The soldiers, some beginning to cry, broke ranks and retreated in small, ragtag groups. Citizens escorted them out of Beijing, feeling they had scored an important victory over rulers who had declared martial law but had been hesitant to apply it.

On the other side of the capital, thousands more residents savored another apparent victory. Two buses of soldiers and weapons were captured in the first military foray toward Tiananmen.

Students entered the supply bus and triumphantly waved assault rifles out the windows. Others made impassioned speeches against the government to a wildly approving crowd.

"We are peaceful students who love our country," said a young man with a white headband. "Why must the people's army threaten the people with guns?"

Jubilation reigned, however briefly. Within hours, hundreds would lie dead on the streets of Beijing, people of China killed by the People's Liberation Army. A movement for a freer nation would be in shambles.

Saturday, June 3
2:00 p.m. - An army broadcast warns students to return the weapons from the supply bus captured at the Liubu intersection, about a mile west of the 100-acre Tiananmen Square. They ignore the warning.

2:10 p.m. - Riot police burst out from Zhongnanhai, headquarters of the Communist Party. Tear gas is used in Beijing for the first time in Communist China's 40-year history.

Security forces beat dozens of people mercilessly at the Liubu intersection. A woman falls down and policemen kick her. They grab her hair and beat her face with truncheons.

The weapons are recovered. Demonstrators, their faces and chests bloodied, walk away in shock.

After seven weeks of peaceful protest, the government had lost its patience.

A mile away, also at 2:10 p.m., about 5,000 unarmed soldiers marched out of the Great Hall of the People but were blocked from Tiananmen by throngs of students and a city bus. It was the closest soldiers had been to the square since martial law was declared May 20.

"If you want to shoot, shoot me!" screamed a 73-year-old woman in pajamas. "Just don't shoot the students."

The mood moved like the sea of people. At one stage, the soldiers sang military songs and the students applauded.

But the hot day wore on and tempers flared. A few soldiers lashed out with their belts. Rocks, tree branches and beer bottles flew between the two sides, and several people were bloodied.

Fighting abated and the standoff continued until 8 p.m., when the soldiers returned to the Great Hall. Students shook their hands and patted them on the back.

Half an hour later, thousands of people gathered on the bridge at Muxudi, the western gateway to the inner city. Crowds moved buses to block passage to the bridge by massing troops.

The first wave of troops from the 27th Army charged toward the bridge at 10 p.m., firing tear gas and swinging clubs.

Burning rugs from a nearby apartment were thrown onto the bus barricades. A gas tank exploded, then another. The sky flickered orange and black. Bullets whistled and ricocheted. Tear gas canisters boomed. It was 11 o'clock. The soldiers opened fire, aiming low.

"Live fire! Live fire!" a student shouted, moments after a bullet hit his leg.

Blood pooled on the pavement, splattered the bridge at Muxudi.

Gasoline bombs flew from the crowd at a tank. People surged around the tank, pulled two crewmen out and beat them senseless.

Midnight comes, and with it the first breakthrough. Armored personnel carriers smash through the blockade and head east toward the square.

"Clear the street! Clear the way!" a medic yells.

Bloodied residents, sprawled on three-wheeled pedicabs and howling with pain, are pushed up side streets. Ill-equipped doctors pound on chests and apply makeshift bandages. Their lips are red with blood from mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

Sunday, June 4
12:30 a.m. - More soldiers approach early Sunday from the south, firing as they come. Thousands of people mass at the Tianqiao intersection, blocking it with carts, cars and furniture. Automatic weapons fire crackles in the darkness.

An 8-year-old boy is killed as he sleeps in his parent's restaurant on the corner and his parents, sobbing with sorrow and anger, hang his bloody blanket outside.

1 a.m. - Four buses blaze at the Xidan intersection as a throng of thousands prepares for troops from the west.

"Make them pay for this invasion!" a student yells. "Defend the capital against these running dogs!"

History may not be Wright

EDITOR'S NOTE - Two engineers, convinced that a Connecticut inventor beat the Wright brothers into the air by more than two years, have drawn up blueprints for an engine they believe is almost identical to the ones that powered that first flight. The next step, they hope, is to build working replicas of the engines in an attempt to prove that Gustave Whitehead may have been cheated out of his proper place in history.

By DEAN GOLEMESKI
Associated Press Writer
CROMWELL, Conn. (AP) -

Speaking with the passion of a television preacher, Wes Gordeuk got down on his knees and carefully unrolled a sheaf of documents containing the long-lost secrets of an early American inventor.

When he had finished, Gordeuk leaned back and smiled.

Spread across the carpet on his living room floor were the blueprints for an engine that Gordeuk believes was used to power the first airplane flight in the United States.

"There's a hell of a lot of detail here," he says.

Gordeuk, an engineer and jet engine instructor at Pratt & Whitney, and Don Richardson, a former electrical engineering professor from Stratford, spent more than two years investigating the engine and drafting the blueprint. They are now putting the finishing touches on the blueprint and some day hope to build engines based on the plans.

The two are part of a team attempting to prove that Gustave Whitehead made the first powered airplane flight in history on Aug. 14, 1901, more than two years before the Wright brothers flew in North Carolina. Whitehead allegedly soared 50 feet above the ground for a distance of about a half-mile at Bridgeport.

Whitehead apparently did nothing to record his flight for future historians. There was mention of the flight in a local Bridgeport newspaper a few days after it reportedly occurred, and the flight also was mentioned in Scientific American magazine. But there were no photographs, workbooks, or other ironclad documentation.

Gustave Whitehead is the father of Connecticut aviation. He may well be the father of all aviation.

Even the airplane and engines allegedly used didn't survive. Whitehead enthusiasts say that is because, as a tinkerer, Whitehead constantly disassembled his inventions and re-used parts for other work.

The state of Connecticut in 1964 recognized Whitehead as the "Father of Connecticut Aviation." But claims that Whitehead was the first in the nation to fly have been rejected by many, including experts at the Smithsonian Institution.

The Connecticut Legislature adopted a bill in 1986 asking the Smithsonian to review the matter, but to no avail.

Undaunted by the skeptics, the Whitehead Research Society has been working to quiet the opposition. It is building a flying replica of the plane Whitehead is believed to have flown 88 years ago. The plane is known as No. 21, an odd-looking, single-wing machine modeled after a flying fish.

Three years ago, the group unveiled a full-scale model of No. 21 that was made of the same materials used by Whitehead - silk, (See WRIGHT, Page 5A)

Wells himself sports an injured ear marred when he was struck by a piece of gravel. The gravel was sent flying by a speeding car.

"People don't read the (speed limit) signs. They think they can go as fast as they want out here," Wells said.

Criswell provided an example of the brains of road construction, and Wells demonstrated the backbone.

Dale Frerichs is the hands, the craftsman.

In the past 18 years Frerichs has become a master on the road grader. He is working on the Harrison Highway as a finish blademane.

"He's the best at what he does," Criswell said of the finish blademane in general and of Frerichs specifically.

Master craftsman or not, the life of a highway construction worker can be something of a gypsy lifestyle.

"You'll be filthy rich in the summer and on welfare in the winter," Frerichs said laughingly. He was quoting his father-in-law, a blademane for over 25 years.

When winter weather stops construction, it can also stop a paycheck.

For many years, Frerichs plied his trade in his home state of Illinois. He moved to Tulsa a few years ago as a part of his migration looking for work. Frerichs wife and children still live in Tulsa while he commutes back and forth to the job in Hereford.

Some jobs are what Frerichs referred to as "stay outs." Occasionally, projects are too far from home for him to commute.

"That's the only thing I hate about the job. I'd like to be home every night with the family," he said.

Despite the problems, Frerichs is happy with his profession.

"It's been worth the hassle," he said.

Like Wells, the blademane also enjoys the company of his co-workers.

"You'll hardly ever meet a stranger... except the newspaper people," Frerichs said, proving that constructionmen's teasing is not limited to crew members.

Students express their views on education

Is education meeting the needs of students? This is a question Marian Goodin posed for her students at Hereford Junior High recently.

Mrs. Goodin asked several other questions and asked students to express their opinions in letters to the editor of the newspaper. Other suggested questions for the students were: Are you receiving the kind of education you expect? How do you think education needs to improve? What are the positive things received from education? What are your responsibilities as a student for receiving a good education?

Here is a sample of some of the letters, arbitrarily selected by the editor to present a good cross-section of opinion from the seventh and eighth grade students:

Dear Editor:

I believe education is taken for granted. Students used to be able to be happy about getting to go to school, but there are some students now that would rather play video games, watch TV or listen to the radio. Some students don't understand the reason for education.

Education is giving students what they need for future success. It's there if they would have enough responsibility to grab on and "fly to the sky" in any field possible.

School buildings don't make the school; it's the teachers, students, and how much they help each other out. Teachers, or teacher aides, or there to help each individual student. Students are there to get the teachers help if at all needed. . . there are students that are afraid of ridicule if they ask any question at all, making teachers think they understand when they don't, which could lead to further problems.

Educational leaders need to stress the need for education greater than ever because we as a nation are in the "computer age." . . Your career field broadens in junior high and more in high school to give you ideas about what fields you will pursue in college.

Jay Long

Dear Editor:

I do not believe the education in our society is meeting the needs of the students today. Sure, they teach us the essential elements--math, English, science and history, but what about real life situations? I think the school needs to inform students about drugs, sex, pregnancy, AIDS, and so on.

. . . Many people think that sex education would encourage sex, but I think it would help prevent it. There are many positive things learned in school too. We learn how to speak, read, write and do calculations.

In my opinion, students have many responsibilities that they have to take care of in order to receive a good education. They include: attending school, having respect for teachers and principles, turn in assignments, and obey all rules.

Misty Nicholson

Dear Editor:

This letter that I am writing to you is just to tell everyone who reads this letter about our education here at our Hereford Junior High. As for me I think that the teachers and principles have really done a pretty good job with all of the students here.

We have had a pretty cool year this year and everything has just gone by smoothly. I think that a lot of us have really had a really good chance of learning everything now that we will need in the future. Such as it was required for us 8th graders to take a half of a semester on learning about computers and also learning how to work computers.

I think that some of our responsibilities as a student are for us to try our best on everything we do now in these years so that soon we can all graduate as a class and go on to college and get all of our education and go in in life.

Valerie Dominguez

Dear Editor:

Today education is not meeting the needs of a student. I say this for I've seen people go all the way through school and not get a good job that can support a family of four to five with the money it pays.

Teachers need to be able to teach more in one day than just three to seven classes. They should be able to have more time to one one class than just 45 minutes. I myself am not receiving the education I was expecting. I thought it would be a lot harder than it really is. The classes these days need harder subjects.

Like in the seventh grade, they teach you stuff you have already been taught in the earlier grades. I don't know if the teachers or the state want it that way but it just won't work out in the later years of some people's lives.

. . . You have responsibilities as a student to receive a good education. You need to study for all tests including finals and protests. You need to keep up with your work in all classes and you need to do your homework. Even if you don't have any, you need to take your books home and read at least a few pages out of them each day and if you do all this you might get a good job that will help support you and your family.

Donald Gooch

Dear Editor:

The education that today's students are getting, in my opinion, meets the needs of a 20th century student. School is just what I expected it to be. I guess the reason I am so happy with it is because I like school . . . it's a fun place to be and also a great place to learn.

Another reason is because the teachers I have had have taught me to the best of their ability and have taught me quite a bit. The third reason I like school is because I love to learn new things. . .

I don't think the education of today is doing too bad. There could be a few adjustments though. One of the major adjustments is all of the drug and alcohol problems. I know they are trying as hard as they can but it's still not enough. Do you know how hard it is on some of us who have to deal with these kinds of people every day for nine months in the halls and in the classrooms?

Another problem is all the gangs and fights. Someone is always fighting. Again, I know they are trying very hard, but it's not doing much good. Even though there are a few negative things about education, there are lots of positive things.

They are doing a very good job teaching us to be better people. They are also doing a wonderful job teaching us in the field we want to work in the future. Students have responsibilities as much as the people who teach them. First of all, we have to be willing to learn. Secondly, we have to appreciate the people who teach us. Third of all, we have to work hard to accomplish our dreams.

I just want to say "Thanks" to all of the teachers and the school board for doing the great job you are doing.

Michelle Emerson

Dear Editor:

I think that the education of today is meeting the demands of the students because there is a wide variety of classes a student could take. The student would choose a class that he is interested in or good at. The classes that he takes will help his ability and talent.

Also a student could choose a level in the class. The levels are resource, regular, advanced and honors. A student would choose one of these levels that will meet the student's needs. The importance of levels are that they put the students with about the same abilities together.

"Sometimes a teacher just goes on to another lesson and doesn't care whether the student learned anything or not."

"Some teachers are very helpful and are meeting the needs of students. They teach us how to cope with life."

"I think that schools need to offer special classes for people who are setting goals and want to achieve those goals."

"I think today's education is lacking to keep up with technology. More homework is not the problem, but the level of work given should be increased."

"Some teachers just give us assignments and that's it. I think those teachers need a lesson on how to teach. Others are really cool and teach you what you really need to learn. If you don't understand, they will help you."

Editorials from around Texas

By The Associated Press

Here is a sampling of editorial opinion from around Texas:

Pass Drug Law

We recommend (the Houston) City Council approve the proposed ordinance which would make it a misdemeanor punishable by up to a $2,000 fine to attempt to buy illegal drugs.

It seems to us that if it is a crime to solicit prostitution - which it is - it can and should also be a crime to solicit drugs.

The very same reservations being expressed in opposition to the drug-solicitation law proposed by the police chief and the mayor could be applied to the prostitution-solicitation law: possible harassment, free-speech concerns, swearing matches between police and citizens.

Yet, we are not aware of any such significant abuse of the prostitution-solicitation law. Any law can be abused; that does not argue against passing laws, but rather seeing to it that there is no abuse.

The drug problem is so bad that society needs every possible weapon to curb it. This ordinance is one more weapon.

Farewell to Cisneros

After eight years of service, Henry Cisneros gives up the mayoral post in San Antonio this week, handing the reins to former Mayor Lila Cockrell. Thousands of San Antonio residents who have come to love the hard-working, well-respected mayor thanked him for his years of service at a big party Monday in his honor. And we would like to offer our thanks as well.

Cisneros led the Alamo City through tough economic times and managed to lure thousands of new jobs and new development - to both San Antonio and Texas. Most San Antonio residents are able to say they are better off today than they were before he took office.

Marital problems and the critical illness of his son forced Cisneros to step out off the political limelight. But we hope he'll be back, as a candidate for governor or perhaps something greater still.

Don't bet that we've heard the last of Henry.

Drunken Driving

Legislators have passed up an opportunity to make Texas highways safer by watering down a bill that would have made it illegal for drivers to have open containers of alcoholic beverages in their vehicles.

In its place, lawmakers approved legislation - sponsored by Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo - that would fine people previously convicted of DWI $200 if they are caught with open containers in their cars or trucks.

While Sen. Zaffirini's measure is a step forward in trying to restrict drinking while driving, it's disturbing that the Legislature didn't go all the way with an open container law. The inevitable consequence of the Legislature's failure to take stronger action will be more highway deaths.

Don't Ease Up Yet

The Immigration and Naturalization Service says its get-tough policy toward asylum-seekers in the Brownsville sector is succeeding. Since detention and deportation have replaced bus rides to Miami, what had been a flood of border crossings has slowed to a trickle. So the INS is talking of reducing its manpower in the area. It shouldn't be hasty. Instead, a way to expand manpower all along the border should be sought. Illegal immigration can't be halted any other way.

Communist Revolution II

The images from the communist world have been stunning. Poland has just held elections, Hungary and Czechoslovakia are discussing democratization, and popular nationalist movements have arisen in the western region of the Soviet Union.

China has been all but paralyzed as its citizens demand democratization under the gaze of a statue of Liberty erected opposite the stern gaze of Chairman Mao.

In the Soviet Union, more than 200 million people have watched telecasts of elected delegates to the Congress of People's Deputies denouncing the party, the president, Stalin and the KGB.

Throughout the Third World, young nations that had embraced the egalitarian nature of communist doctrine have reversed themselves, and appealed to the International Monetary Fund for economic guidance.

... The West has no active roll to play in the drama engulfing these nations. But Ronald Reagan in his second term and President Bush of late have correctly noted that an economic hand extended during periods of liberalization in communist countries pays dividends to all. In the future, economic relations with the communist bloc should be geared to the degree of which these nations reform themselves and encourage private-market initiatives.

That won't prompt the East to embrace capitalism. But it will stimulate the transition from a political system economically bankrupt at its inception to a new economic and political order befitting a world about to move into the 21st century.

Report Card: Here's How the 71st Legislature Rated

The just-completed session of the Texas Legislature was notable mainly for the number of state leaders and lawmakers who were trying to position themselves to run for more power in the next session. Other than that, there were the usual high jinks, low humor, hardball politics, the armadillo crusade, the plaid-coat brigade...

Too much of importance was put off to the closing days, where too many fast and loose compromises occur, and where too many odd things go unnoticed. Worse, the overriding issues of school finance equalization, judicial reform, campaign finance reform and worker compensation reform were not addressed at all. Still the House did a better job in moving on these issues, and in taking the initiative on lesser issues.

Water Resources Limited

This year's drought conditions have made it virtually impossible to ignore the importance of water to our economy and lifestyles.

Already, predictions of continued water shortages this summer have been issued for many states.

As a result of summer watering bans and other use restrictions in some states each year, consumers have learned the hard way how water shortages can disrupt their everyday lives.

... "The fact is that most of the water Americans use is simply wasted," says Sen. Wyche Fowler, D-Ga., chairman of an agriculture subcommittee on conservation and forestry.

... Fowler ... has introduced legislation to set water efficiency standards for new water-saving products, such as toilets, shower heads, faucets and washing machines.

... Based on already existing needs, municipalities nationwide face an estimated $83.5 billion in sewage treatment construction costs, in addition to billions more for water supply expansions and water treatment upgrades.

Fowler's proposal will not erase the need for all of these expenditures ... But it has the potential of saving taxpayers billions of dollars over the next few decades...

Although legislation such as this is by no means a cure-all, it does represent a first step toward wiser use of our limited water resources. Toward that end, it merits serious consideration.

Letters to Editor

Dear Editor:

In regard to the recent reunion of the Class of 1939 of Hereford High School, we want to express our appreciation of and thanks to the ones in our "hometown" that made our homecoming such a success.

The Senior Citizens Center is one of the best we have seen. The program and dinner at the Bull Barn was of that excellence we have come to expect of Hereford citizens. Thanks to the individuals that opened the Black House and to the volunteers of the museum; also the "young man" who walked us through our beloved high school (Stanton Junior High). Our thanks, too, to the restaurants, motels and hospitality of families and individuals.

Almost half of the graduating class of 50 years ago was present. Helping welcome, register and pin classmates at the Senior Citizen Center Friday were Virginia Newell Winget (Richard), Helen Jones Brown (Wesley), Dorothy Adams Avery (Harold) of San Antonio, Marvin Kearns (wife LaVerne), Ben Conklin, Roy Landers; Elizabeth Bezner White (John) of Dumas, and Betty cockrell Oldham (Carl) of Woodward, Ok.

Memorabilia collected and displayed by various ones covered two large tables. E.B. and Beth Posey of Canyon presented a book of autobiographies to each present. The Saturday evening dinner at Caison's was presided over by Grant (wife Mary) Fuller of Houston. He was assisted by Betty Cockrell and Virginia East Nollner (Derwood) of Abilene, Floyd Ross of Lubbock and Adelia Benson (Bernie) Lannon of Fort Davis.

Others attending the reunion included Edith Jackson Hicks of Austin, Clinton and Betty Massie of Amarillo, Col. Bill Montgomery and Ruth of Flagstaff, Az., Andrew Schumacher and Oleta of Dimmitt, George Springer and wife of Seminole, Ok., Ottilie (Tyson) and Clyde Oldham or Reedsport, Or., C.A. (Bud) Wilkins of Houston, Neal Young of Levelland, Helen Ruth (Barber) Jones and Pat of Little Rock, Ar., Barbara Brotherton Fortenberry of Amarillo, Mary Louise Dean Miller and husband Mickey of Albuquerque, Caroline Frye Higgins of Sherman, Erwin Herr of Chapel Hill, N.C., and E.C. and L.C. Hewitt of Amarillo.

Those deceased from the Class of 39 are Anderson Axe, Hertha Baer Alexander, Paul Foster, Jim Fullwood, Betty Sue Henslee Fox, Jerry Jewell, Kenneth Potter, Minnie Dewa Smith Turner, Roy Wederbrook and Noel Washam.

Report by Caroline Frye Higgins

Dear Editor:

We can get rid of the drug problem and the method is so simple it is astonishing that our great men have overlooked it so long.

We spend great sums of money tracking down, catching and convicting drug peddlers. We put them in jail and give some long prison sentences to some who have never lived in an air conditioned home with a carpet and hot and cold running water, and three meals brought to them every day.

Boy, they feel that they have never had it so good! When they have served a few months and are paroled, they long for the comforts of jail and can think of only one way to reach that goal, so they commit another crime to reach that promised land.

Our law demands the death sentence for murder but not for the crime that is worse in its effect than murder. Shooting a child or any person is not as bad for them as getting them started on drugs, in most cases.

If we had no drug peddlers we would have not addicts. We should make the sale of illegal drugs a capital offense. We would not have to enforce that law many times until we would have the narcotics battle won.

When I was young, I had a man try to get me to taste just one little taste of the thrill of a drug which he had with him. His appeal was strong and I would have tasted it, but for the background of a Christian home that gave me strength to say no.

ROAD WORK

I have been amazed at the road work being done on Park Avenue. The company doing the work must be brand new. They have not been in business long enough to learn the rules of road work.

They have barriers up just a few blocks from where the work is being done. Real road crews put up barriers at least 10 miles on either side of a position on which they are just thinking about working. I went through 20 miles of road under construction barriers in Pennsylvania the other day. After 10 miles of crawling along I came upon the three feet they were working on.

There must be some formula: three feet of work equals 10 miles of barriers on either side. With this formula the workers on Park should have barriers set at I-40 and the Canyon E-way.

The other startling thing about the crew on Park is they can actually be found working. I know they think I am strange but I sit in my car and watch them by the hour. I have never seen anyone actually working on a highway. I have spent my life looking for the road work ahead. The signs always say it is up there. I ran out of gas three times looking for the flag-man the sign told me to watch for. It is no wonder drivers pay no attention to road work signs, most of us have never seen one come true.

I am afraid the Park Avenue crew will finish me off by taking down the road work signs when they finish. I know I could not stand the shock of that. I have seen road under construction signs the highway department have declared as national treasures. Some of them were on the original Santa Fe Trail. They are still up, and we are still supposed to slow down.

The Park Avenue crew may be kicked out of the national road crew association. They are actually trying to accommodate the folks along the road. They try to leave a way to turn into the streets. We should be sworn to silence about this, but they are trying to keep the driveways to the homes and business along the route as clear as possible.

These people can't be road workers. They must be nuns who are moonlighting to raise money to feed the poor. I hope they don't get caught.

An AP news analysis

Graceful political exits are rare

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent
WASHINGTON (AP) - Graceful

exits are rare among players who reach the national political stage and have to leave before they're ready. Politicians tend to hang on past the applause, especially when they get into trouble.

They linger, seeking vindication from colleagues or one more term from the voters - sometimes both.

Rep. Tony Coelho of California, the Democratic whip, is an exception. Former Speaker of the House Jim Wright took the more traveled course.

Wright resigned as speaker on Tuesday. He left with no apologies, in the manner of President Richard M. Nixon 15 years ago.

Wright said he'd made mistakes - "Oh boy, how many?" - but he did not seem to count among them the ethics charges that brought him down.

Like other politicians who have been forced from power, Wright said he could have won, but resigned to avoid a long and damaging battle on the House floor. But by the time he announced he would quit, on May 31, it was evident that he was going to lose.

"All things considered, it became obvious that short of an all-out harsh and bitter fight on the House floor, it would be unrealistic to expect a complete exoneration, which is the only thing I was interested in," Wright said.

Coelho is resigning one week from today, his 47th birthday, rather than face an ethics investigation of his own. But for that cloud and the startling way he chose to dispel it, he would have become majority leader and, in all probability, a future speaker.

Coelho's problem stemmed from a junk bond investment, made with borrowed money and aided by a California savings and loan executive. It gained him all of $6,882.

He said he regretted the deal, but that it was now fully disclosed and that he had violated no rules. Coelho said he could have proved all that, but at a greater cost to him, his party and his causes than he was willing to pay.

"Some say this is not the type of mistake to do what you are doing," he said in Modesto, Calif., after announcing his resignation. "I made a mistake. I'm willing to live with it and it's time to move on."

He hasn't said what he is going to do next. His resignation ends any prospect of a House inquiry into the 1986 junk bond deal, although the government still could investigate his conduct.

That could work to his ultimate advantage if his conduct is cleared. His quick, clean break left political bridges intact, preserving the chance of a return to Democratic influence and, perhaps, public office.

Few do. Until now, Republicans held the franchise for the most striking political departures of the era, the two-one resignations of Vice President Spiro T. Agnew and President Nixon.

Agnew quit under criminal charges on Oct. 10, 1973. He pleaded no contest to income tax evasion and resigned as part of a plea bargain in which other charges were dropped and the government asked for leniency, not prison.

Even so, he left with a familiar claim, saying he was sparing the country a distraction that could have dragged on for two or three years.

Barely 10 months later, Nixon faced three impeachment charges before becoming the first president to resign. He had been forced by the Supreme Court to release a tape transcript that proved his involvement in the Watergate cover-up, despite two years of denials.

So, he faced the television cameras and uttered "the most difficult sentence I shall ever have to speak" - his resignation.

In congressional ethics cases, the member in the dock often leaves with a warning to colleagues that they might be next. Wright didn't make that explicit, although he called his fate "mindless cannibalism" and then said nobody should try to get even.

When Sen. Thomas J. Dodd of Connecticut was censured by the Senate in 1967 for using political money to pay personal bills - a practice since legalized in some cases - he called it a grave mistake and injustice, and said such things could happen to others. He lost the next election, running as an independent because the Democrats didn't want him. His son, Christopher, is a Connecticut senator now.

That was also the year the House refused to seat Rep. Adam Clayton Powell Jr. of New York on grounds he had misused $40,000 in congressional funds. He ran again, won again and got his seat back in 1969, even before the Supreme Court overruled his exclusion.

Outright expulsions from Congress are rare. A member facing that ultimate sanction usually resigns when the outcome becomes inevitable.

One who did not was Rep. Michael Myers of Philadelphia, kicked out in 1980 for accepting a bribe in the FBI's Abscam operation.

One who did was Sen. Harrison A. Williams Jr. of New Jersey in 1982.

Williams, convicted of bribery and conspiracy in Abscam, quit after five days of Senate debate that made clear he couldn't win.

He said he'd been the victim of an FBI setup that had put every senator at risk - "it is all of us, the entire Senate."

It wasn't Senate or House, then or now.

6 Long Days In China

Some armored cars break through the roadblock.

An officer emerges from the jeep and fires into the crowd, killing four people. Others seize him, beat him to death, strip and disembowel him, then burn his body and hang it on a blazing bus.

Troops take up position on the southwest corner of the square. Angry crowds surround them.

A column of several thousand soldiers enters from the southeast, jogging to positions along the eastern side next to the history museum. Students spot the approaching soldiers and race forward to do battle with sticks and bars.

After brief skirmishes, the soldiers fall back across the street.

Most of the several thousand remaining students huddle near the Monument of Revolutionary Martyrs, but some move to the northern square to confront other troops. Soldiers open fire and many students are hit in the back as they flee.

Guns chatter. Buses and military vehicles blaze. Tracers flash above the mausoleum of Mao Tse-tung, the father of Chinese communism.

Students insist they are not afraid. "I'm very calm; I'm not afraid," says a 19-year-old from Beijing Medical University. "If the troops come, there's nothing I can do."

2:45 a.m. - A tank appears near the Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant in the southwest corner and clears debris from the western edge of the square of debris so military vehicles can pass.

4:00 a.m. - The lamp posts that dot the square go dark.

4:35 a.m. - The lights go back on and the students vote by voice to leave. It is a close and heartbreaking decision.

And so, near dawn on Sunday, it was over.

Thousands of students filed out under the banners of their schools, which had fluttered above the square during the 22-day sit-in for a freer China.

Tanks rumbled into the square. One crushed the Goddess of Democracy, the students' 33-foot styrofoam figure that looked something like the Statue of Liberty.

Tiananmen, the heart of China, was under military control.

As they marched away at 6 a.m., students chanted "Down with fascists! Down with violence."

An armored personnel carrier followed on Changan Avenue, Beijing's main boulevard. It sped into the rear ranks as if to make the students move faster.

Seven were crushed to death and four seriously injured.

At 7:30 a.m., convoys of soldiers move up and down Changan Avenue, firing randomly, killing or wounding several people.

A doctor and two nurses said at least 500 people had been killed and estimates rose to 3,600 within days. The government said 300 were killed, most of them soldiers.

A street barricade of buses stopped a military convoy of 70 trucks, vans and armored personnel at Muxudi at about 10 a.m. Sunday. People set the vehicles afire and the soldiers retreated.

Blue and white helicopters flew to and from the square, picking up white bags. Rumors spread that they were taking corpses to a crematorium to hide evidence of a massacre.

At 2 p.m., the bodies of nearly two dozen people shot down by advancing troops at Muxudi lay haphazardly on the floor of Fuxing Hospital to be identified by relatives and friends.

Barricades were back up all over the city by 8 p.m.

Monday, June 5
On Monday morning, soldiers guarding the northern half of Tiananmen Square were firing indiscriminately. Soldiers sprayed a crowd of nearly 3,000 people with bullets near the main street northeast of the square.

Machine gun bullets stitched one man from his chin to his stomach. Three others were shot down when 17 truckloads of troops attacked a crowd at a major intersection west of Tiananmen Square.

The city was a mess. Long lines formed for such staples as soy sauce and cooking fuel. Prices for fruits, vegetables and meat skyrocketed.

Gunfire could be heard all night.

Tuesday, June 6
On Tuesday afternoon, rumors spread that other units were preparing to fight the hated 27th Army. A few hundred soldiers claiming to be from the 38th Army appeared near the Muxudi bridge to the applause of neighborhood residents.

"Exterminate the 27th Army! Avenge blood with blood!" the crowd chanted, handing eggs and cigarettes to the soldiers.

Wednesday, June 7
At 10 a.m. Wednesday, thousands of soldiers left the city in a convoy, chanting "Down with corruption. We love the people." As they passed a residential compound for diplomats and other foreign residents, the soldiers opened a withering fire.

Bullets pierced windows in the compound but no injuries were reported. Soldiers sealed off the area - looking for a sniper, they said - and took a Chinese man away.

Foreigners began to flee Beijing.

Thursday, June 8
On Thursday evening, Premier Li Peng appeared on national television and the government urged citizens to inform on those who resisted the military takeover. Radio and television provided telephone numbers to call.

WRIGHT

bamboo and pine. The replica underwent successful tow tests and tethered lift tests.

Gordeuk prepared for the tedious work of reconstructing blueprints for the engines by making two propellers. The 64-year-old Cromwell resident followed Whitehead's notes and studied photographs of No. 21, then spent 13 months carving the two 6-foot spruce propellers that were finished in 1985.

To draft the engine blueprints, Gordeuk and Robinson studied photographs of the engines and reviewed descriptions by Whitehead's former co-workers. In addition, they studied engineering handbooks and hardware catalogs from the turn of the century to help with their detective work.

"Knowing engines, you don't even have to see the whole picture, because even just a part of a picture to an engineer will give the whole thing away," he says.

"We found that the hardware available and used by Gustave Whitehead in 1901 was exactly the same as it is today. The standards have not changed."

Gordeuk had to go to such extremes because Whitehead left behind no notes on his work. Some believe that his family discarded the material many years ago. The scant documentation is one reason Whitehead's accomplishments have been ignored by history.

"We've duplicated, we think, within 99 percent of the actual engines," Gordeuk says. "By no means was it easy."

The two engineers discovered that Whitehead built an external combustion engine that was modeled after a steam engine. It was fueled by acetylene gas, which at the turn of the century was readily available and was considered as the fuel of the future. Gasoline, at that time, was considered too dangerous a fuel to be used in engines, Gordeuk says.

Using acetylene, mixed with air, Whitehead developed a unique, lightweight engine with tremendous power, Gordeuk says. The double-acting, four-cylinder engines could produce about 10 horsepower a cylinder. Whitehead used one engine per propeller, giving him more horsepower than the Wrights had on their first airplane, Gordeuk says.

"He was able to take off after a run of 20 to 25 yards," Gordeuk says. "Why was he able to do this? Simply because he had a third engine driving the front wheels of the airplane."

"The first airplane built that could fly and did fly was able to take off in any wind conditions or still air in the shortest run that hasn't been duplicated until recent years. Whitehead was a genius. He was not a liar."

Having developed blueprints for the engines, the Whitehead group has now reached its next obstacle. Gordeuk said the group is in need of a machine shop to manufacture the engine parts so that replica engines can be built. The group has not yet found a machine shop to help. "We are at somewhat of a dead end now," Gordeuk says.

But he is far from disheartened and he is certain that his engine and No. 21 will fly some day.

"We're good engineers," he says. "We know it's going to fly."

The Smithsonian ignored the Connecticut Legislature's request and has no plans to conduct hearings into the matter, says Peter Jakob, the museum's curator of early aviation.

"The governor signed a piece of legislation asking us to convene a public hearing," he says. "It's just not appropriate for us to participate in that way. We're not an arbitral body."

The curator says the Wrights fully documented their flight and research, while the case for Whitehead is based on speculation. As a result, the development of the blueprints for the engines is interesting, but not historically significant, he said.

"While they claim to have developed the engines," he says, "it's impossible to tell."

teachers can tell them how I'm doing."

"Teachers need to talk more about how bad fighting really is. If you are always mad at someone, how can your mind be ready to learn anything?"

"I think teachers can try to make the classes a little more fun because there is no way they are going to be able to keep a teenager's attention if it is so boring that the students fall asleep."

"The school itself should be cleaned up. School buildings are dirty. Gym floors should be swept and cleaned more often; desks and lab tables need to be strictly taken care of. Grass should be grown all around the campus."

"Some teachers don't even lecture and give assignments. Some teachers try their hardest but students don't even care—they just mess around and end up messing up their own lives."

"In conclusion, I believe that if both teachers and students contributed more effort to class, education would be greatly improved."

Rangers, Athletics put on fireworks display in 11-8 Texas win

ARLINGTON (AP) - The Texas Rangers are suddenly acting like the Oakland A's.

The Rangers have produced 22 runs and 30 hits in their last two games.

Texas pounded five Oakland pitchers for 16 hits on Friday night in an 11-8 victory over the A's. In the first meeting of the year between the two American League West contenders, the Rangers chased the A's ace, Dave Stewart.

Oakland also sent Texas starter Charlie Hough to an early shower. Cecilio Guante (4-3) got the victory in relief while Jeff Russell earned his 14th save. Gene Nelson (1-2) was the loser.

Texas moved to within four and one-half games behind Oakland. The runs and hits were the most allowed by the A's this season.

Ruben Sierra had four hits and Julio Franco knocked in four runs for the Rangers. It was Sierra's second consecutive four-hit night.

Texas went into the game as the third best hitting team in the AL. Oakland was first.

Oakland jumped to a 4-0 lead on Mark McGwire's grand slam homer in the first inning but couldn't keep pace with the Rangers' offensive assault that included a homer by Franco.

"We know we have to score a lot of runs when we play the A's," Franco said. "I've always hit good against Stewart. He's a helluva pitcher but I have good luck against him. I feel like the pressure is on the other team when I come up with men on base."

Franco said: "I'm glad we got into their bullpen early in the series. They have a good staff but tonight they made some errors and we took advantage. That's the kind of baseball we have to play."

He said the Rangers could be back in the race with a sweep.

"If we win four or five games, then we'll be right there," Franco said.

Pete Incaviglia's two-run double in a three-run sixth inning was the game-winner.

"Everybody was swinging the ball well in the lineup," Incaviglia said. "We could be a tough club to beat if we keep going like this. We were down four in the first and came back."

Oakland manager Tony LaRussa said: "We had a rough day pitching out there. They hit a lot of good pitches. Their three, four and five hitters are all good hitters and we have to deal with that."

"They jumped on Stewart hard and that happens sometimes."

Sierra took over the AL lead in hits with 77, two more than teammate Rafael Palmeiro.

Astros come from behind again

HOUSTON (AP) - The Houston Astros were in the position they've learned to love - losing, late in the game.

The Astros rallied again, winning for the 14th time in 15 games when Billy Hatcher's single capped a four-run sixth inning Friday night for a 6-5 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

The Astros won their fourth straight game. They have come from behind in their last six victories.

"It wasn't a pretty game but somebody had to win it," Astros manager Art Howe said.

Trailing 5-2, the Astros rallied in the sixth as third baseman Ron Gant made two errors.

"This was a gimme game, I just didn't know who was going to give it to who," Atlanta manager Russ Nixon said. "They gave it to us and we ended up giving it back."

Gant's first error and a single by Ken Caminiti finished Derek Lilliquist in the sixth. Rafael Ramirez singled and Terry Puhl drew a bases-loaded walk from Jose Alvarez, 3-2, making it 5-3.

Craig Biggio followed with a grounder to Gant, who tagged third base but threw wildly to first, allowing two runs to score. Hatcher, who had three hits, singled to right field.

Hatcher began the game with six hits in his last 28 at-bats. He hit a leadoff double in the first inning, singled home a run in the second and got his RBI single in the sixth.

"I'm starting to come around," Hatcher said. "I've been swinging the bat well the last week."

"I'm more aggressive batting leadoff. There's not as much pressure. My job is easy. All I've got to do is get on base and let the other guys drive in the runs." Juan Agosto, 2-1, got the victory. Danny Darwin escaped a first-and-third jam in the ninth, striking out Jeff Blauser and Jody Davis for his first save.

"I was going for the punch-out on Blauser and after I got it, I wanted to make Jody hit my pitch," Darwin said. "I got the ball where I wanted it."

Atlanta scored three times in the third against Bob Forsch on a sacrifice fly by Dion James and a two-run single by Andres Thomas.

Bruce Benedict hit his first home run of the season and Tommy Gregg had an RBI grounder in the sixth for a 5-2 lead.

Houston scored in the second on singles by Biggio, Forsch and Hatcher. The Astros closed to 3-2 in the fourth on a double by Caminiti and a single by Ramirez.

Lakers left hamstrung by injuries

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) - The Detroit Pistons, victims of playoff injuries the past two years, finally are benefitting from their opponent's physical problems.

They would have no qualms about accepting the first title in club history even if it is tarnished by injuries to both starting guards for the Los Angeles Lakers.

"It's all part of the business," Detroit coach Chuck Daly said Friday. "Injuries are all part of it."

After winning the first two games at home, the Pistons traveled west Friday to prepare for Sunday's third game of the best-of-7 NBA Finals. Only two teams in NBA history have won the title series after falling behind 2-0.

It will be much tougher for the Lakers to overcome that without Magic Johnson and Byron Scott, who both have hamstring injuries. Scott said he will miss his third straight game Sunday. Johnson, who left the game with 4:39 left in Thursday night's 108-105 loss, hasn't been ruled out of Game 3.

The Pistons are 40-5 in their last 45 games. They must go 1-4 the rest of the season if Los Angeles is to win its third consecutive championship. And Detroit is relatively healthy for a change.

In the final game of the 1987 Eastern Conference finals, Pistons Adrian Dantley and Vinnie Johnson were injured in a collision. Boston won 117-114.

With 4:21 left in the third quarter of the sixth game of last year's Finals, Isiah Thomas severely sprained his ankle. The Lakers won 103-102. With Thomas playing with a limp, they also won the seventh game 108-105. Forward Rick Mahorn was bothered during the series by a bad back.

How much would a Detroit title this year be cheapened by the Lakers' injuries?

"Probably the same as theirs was last year," Daly said. "No one's put up any asterisks last year when Isiah went down in the sixth game, nor the year before when we lost two players and Boston wins the conference finals."

"Last year Rick was hurt with his back and Isiah had his leg messed up," Detroit forward John Salley said. "I do not feel sorry for" the Lakers.

The Pistons said they have several minor injuries that are not expected to sideline players. Dennis Rodman has a pulled back muscle, Thomas has a pulled right hamstring and Bill Laimbeer has a pinched nerve and weakness in his right arm. All three practiced Friday.

Johnson and Scott received treatment Friday and were to be re-examined Sunday.

"It's still sore. We'll wait and see what happens," Johnson said on the team's flight from Detroit. "There is always hope and I have to believe in that. If I can be out there, I'll be out there. But if I can't help the team I won't be out there."

"You are talking about the best player in basketball," Thomas said. "One half of him is a regular one of us."

Michael Cooper, a substitute most of his career, and Tony Campbell, who had played just 23 minutes in the Lakers' first 11 playoff games, probably will start if Scott and Johnson can't. Both backups played better in the second game of the Finals than the first.

"I have to provide leadership until Magic comes back," Cooper said.

"If he (Johnson) is not here, we'll have to tough it out," Campbell said. "We're going home now and we'll be enthusiastic."

Prevention and Control of NEEDLECAST

WHAT IS NEEDLECAST?

Needlecast is a serious FUNGUS DISEASE which attacks members of the conifer family, particularly pine, spruce, and fir. The fungus disease is caused by PROLONGED WATER CONTACT on the foliage and spreads rapidly during periods of high humidity and high temperatures.

The disease begins as a small dark dot on the needle, usually towards the middle portion but can appear anywhere up and down the needle. As the disease spreads, the dot becomes larger and eventually completely envelops the needle and "cuts off" the food supply to the needle by this "girdling action."

Without treatment, the condition worsens...the dots enlarge and lighten in color, the needles turn light green, then yellow, then brown, and eventually fall completely off.

HOW NEEDLE CAST STARTS:

Conifers are most susceptible to needlecast in the fall of the year in September or October during prolonged periods of wet, rainy weather when temperatures are still fairly high and night temperatures are cool.

NIGHT WATERING or watering in the late afternoon "anytime" during the spring or summer can also lead to needlecast problems. Early morning watering practices are best because it gives the needles ALL DAY LONG to "dry off" and disease problems are averted.

Wind spreads the fungus spores from diseased needles to healthy needles in moist periods. The fungus spores "overwinter" in infected conifer needles and a conscientious effort should be made to clean up any spent needles that collect inside the conifer in crotches or against the main trunk and those that fall and accumulate on the ground. Many of these old needles harbor the disease.

HOW TO CONTROL:

We recommend KOCIDE 101, a copper-based fungicide, using ONE TABLESPOON per gallon. Spray the entire plant until the needles on the tree are completely saturated to the "dripping point".

Whenever you begin spraying your plants for needlecast, spray the plant 3 consecutive times in a row, spacing the sprayings 5 to 7 days apart. Continue spraying at least once a month from May through September for preventative measures in the future.

It is very IMPORTANT to spray the new "candles" (new pine shoots) in the spring as they begin to open. Continue spraying every 5 to 7 days until the new shoots are fully open. We are depending on these new needles to hide the damage from the fallen infected needles.

To help your conifer recuperate faster and regain a deep green color, we recommend you mix in ferti-lose LIQUID IRON with the KOCIDE 101 (both at one tablespoon per gallon). The two sprays are very compatible.

REMEMBER that it takes a pine tree THREE YEARS to put on a complete set of needles from top to bottom. Pines shed approximately 1/3 of their needles in the fall and add 1/3 new needles in the spring. It is natural for a pine to shed its oldest needles in the fall months of Sept./Oct., but unusually large amounts of shedding may indicate needlecast problems, especially if there is a lot of extra shedding of needles in the terminal branches of the tree.

Summer time and the dreamin' is easy

By JOHN BROOKS
Managing Editor

Have you seen Field of Dreams? It's a great movie, great even if you're not a baseball fan.

I figure if a man can plow up an Iowa cornfield and build a baseball diamond so Shoeless Joe Jackson, his fellow Black Sox, and other baseball players can come back and play, why, Hereford can play in the state baseball tournament.

This is the Herd's Field of Dreams. It's not real, but we can dream. Think not of what might have been, but fantasize enough to make it reality for a few minutes.

Let's dream together.

When the State Class 4A baseball finals began on Friday afternoon at Disch-Falk Field in Austin, there were two undefeated pitchers in the state.

Now there is just one, and his name is Clint Cotten.

Cotten, and his Hereford teammates, came from behind to beat Brenham 2-1 and win Hereford's first-ever state championship.

When Cotten threw a knuckleball past a bewildered Brenham batter for the game's last out, he jumped off the mound. Catcher Kyle Andrews was there almost before Cotten could reach the ground. Then, the two were smothered by their teammates.

Cotten had mixed in a few fastballs and slow curves during the game, but he took advantage of the Austin air, more humid and heavy than he's used to pitching in, to keep the Brenham batters off-stride.

"I guess the humidity helped it, but the knuckler was really moving today," Cotten said. "I didn't do anything different, I just threw it like I have all year. It just did more today."

Cotten gave up three first-inning singles as Brenham took a 1-0 lead, but settled down to give up just four hits the rest of the way.

"He's been that way all year long," said Hereford coach T.R. Sartor. "You might get to him early, but he's been invincible in the last four innings of every game he's pitched this year. 'Course, our defense came through for us. They made some great plays behind him."

The Herd could have suffered more in the first inning, but left fielder Glenn Parker made a diving catch of a sinking liner to end the first inning. The Herd's middle infielders, second baseman Jared Victor and shortstop Russell Backus, each started double plays to get the last outs in the fourth and fifth innings, and first baseman Roger McCracken made a diving stop on a drive down the line for the third out in the sixth.

The Herd went down in order through the first three innings, but scraped together seven hits in the fourth, fifth and sixth innings, including doubles by Andrews and third baseman Stuart Mitts, for all the runs they would need.

In the fourth, center fielder Jason Scott, who had pitched the Herd to a 7-2 win on Thursday, opened with a single, then stole second. Parker's bunt single moved Scott to third, and right fielder Keith Brown singled to left to score Scott.

The Herd had two two-out singles in the fifth, but couldn't score. In the sixth, Backus singled, then moved to third on a double to center by Mitts. Victor then singled through a drawn-in infield for the winning run.

After the game, the Herd was presented with gold medals by Bill Farney, athletic director of the University Interscholastic League.

An hour later, sitting at a table at The Magic Time Machine, Fidel Ceballos was still fondling his medal.

"It's great, just getting to feel this thing," Ceballos said. "I'll never, ever forget it."

All-Star balloting a popularity contest?

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

What a great player that Jose Canseco is.

Without benefit of a single stolen base, a single home run, not even so much as a single at-bat because of his wounded wrist, the first 40-homer, 40-steal man remains an All-Star with his fans.

Remarkable sport, this baseball.

Canseco's disabled list status apparently does not disturb nearly 62,000 fans whose support has last year's MVP among the outfield leaders in the American League's All-Star voting. Is this the Highway Patrol speaking out for its Man of the Year? Perhaps the handgun lobby?

This outpouring of Canseco support must surely thrill Texas outfielder Ruben Sierra, who is among the league leaders in seven offensive categories but had so few All-Star votes that he did not make it to this week's tally of the top 16.

This is an eloquent statement for the one man, one vote system. Baseball's easy All-Star ballot access is based on the old machine politics: Vote early and vote often. Fans grab handfuls of computer cards and madly punch holes, sometimes producing mad results.

Sierra's not the only one with a complaint.

The AL's top two hitters are Oakland third baseman Carney Lansford and Texas first baseman Rafael Palmeiro. But both are running well back in the balloting. Lansford fifth and Palmeiro sixth. Among those Palmeiro must overtake is George Brett, who is second with nearly 57,000 votes. Those are probably from the Canseco fans, since Brett has been on Kansas City's disabled list since April 30.

The force of habit ballot obviously carries a lot of weight in this election.

Baltimore's Mickey Tettleton, the Fruit Loops slugger with 14 home runs, is a no-show in the catcher balloting where perennial Carlton Fisk of Chicago is fourth with 31,850, despite nearly two months on the DL.

No-hit spoiler Nelson Liriano of Toronto, among the league's leading hitters, doesn't rate with the second base voters - he'd require a write-in because his name is not on the ballot - but almost 40,000 votes were cast for Kansas City's Frank White and his .235 batting average.

This twisted reasoning on the part of the people is by no means limited to the American League. The National League has its share.

San Francisco's Kevin Mitchell, who is ahead of the Babe Ruth-Roger Maris record home run pace, scares the daylight out of pitchers. He barely makes a dent with the voters, though, running fifth among NL outfielders. There are guys who haven't played for weeks, some who won't ever play again, doing better than that.

Mike Schmidt is second among third basemen even though his diminished production caused him to retire last week. Veteran New York Mets Gary Carter and Keith Hernandez, both out of action since the middle of May, are third among catchers and first basemen.

Ring rematches really rake it in

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Boxing's Senior Tour of golden oldies continues Monday night when Sugar Ray Leonard fights Thomas Hearns - again. The winner earns an almost certain date with Roberto Duran - again. Are these guys getting better with age, or do the fans really just like to see a good fight - again?

"It's the best game in town," veteran trainer Angelo Dundee said. "That's why it sells out."

Dundee was in Leonard's corner Sept. 16, 1981, when Sugar Ray, squinting through a badly swollen left eye, stopped Hearns in the 14th round. "A great fight," the trainer said. "Just great."

And now, for the not-so instant replay. Can they do it again after waiting this long for the encore? Dundee thinks so.

"Think about it," he said. "Sugar Ray Leonard and Thomas Hearns, eight years later. It creates excitement. This is gonna be good because of the styles and the individuals involved. Thomas Hearns is on a vendetta, and, well, you know, Ray is Ray."

But Angelo, Leonard is 33 now. Hearns is 30, pushing 31. The Seniors Tour works in golf. But boxing? C'mon, Angelo.

"The first time was a great fight. It'll be the same thing eight years later," Dundee said. "We'll find out how much they have left."

How much, or how little? "People want to know that," Dundee said. "That makes it intriguing. I'll tell you this. Sugar Ray has a shot at being knocked out if he's the Ray who fought (Donny) Lalonde. People say Tommy Hearns' legs are gone, but he never had good legs, even as an amateur. They're both eight years older. That's the intangible. The interest is there. The public won't be disappointed. I like this rematch."

Intrigue. Intangibles. Those are the keys to the Seniors Tour in boxing and rematches like Leonard-Hearns II. There is less a sense of boxing excellence than a question of which fighter is more used up.

Both boxers are guaranteed a fat payday - Leonard gets $13 million and Hearns $11 million - and the winner gets the opportunity for another big money rematch, this one against Duran, who has the revenge motive working for him against both fighters.

Duran beat Leonard for the welterweight title June 20, 1980, then returned the crown to Sugar Ray five months later in the famous "No Mas" bout. Four years after that, he was knocked out by Hearns in two rounds in what seemed certain to be the final fight for the man they once called Hands of Stone.

But, like Leonard, Duran kept coming back for more and when he outpointed Iran Barkley for the WBC middleweight title in February, it put him in position for a promoter's dream, a grudge rematch with Monday night's winner.

The cash register jingles at the prospect and promoters understand that sound. Bob Arum, who is talking about an $80 million gross Monday night, is happy to have seniors. One report had Arum even discussing a comeback for Marvellous Marvin Hagler, idle since losing to Leonard in April, 1987.

The fact that Duran will celebrate his 38th birthday four days after the Leonard-Hearns match seems of little consequence in this rush of boxing nostalgia. After all, ex-heavyweight champion George Foreman is 40-plus and came back after a 10-year sabbatical. His announced target is to meet Mike Tyson, who is young enough to be his son, for the crown.

Is all this good for the game? Dundee thinks so, if they are the right rematches.

"We had Muhammad Ali and Joe Frazier three times and the third one was the best one," he said. "You know what? Some day, we might have a Hearns-Leonard III."

Bob Goodman, vice president and matchmaker for Madison Square Garden Boxing, also endorses the Seniors Tour.

"I think a lot depends on how they've taken care of themselves, how many tough fights or bad beatings they've had," said Goodman, who frequently uses 42-year-old Saoul Mamby for his shows. "Mamby amazes the doctors. They say his brain and heart are like those of a 20-year-old."

"A lot of those guys haven't had bad beatings. With Leonard, I think that's the case. He hasn't abused himself and he's always maintained his condition. He's picked his spots pretty well. Hearns has maybe deteriorated a little bit, but he's been more active than Ray."

"Those guys and Duran, they're the superstars of boxing and they've gotten back to world championship condition. They're instant box office and anything that fills arenas with fans for boxing, that can't be bad as long as it's competitive. I think Leonard-Hearns will be competitive."

When we read and hear about the dangers of air pollution, we are likely to think of automobiles and industrial plants.

But the U.S. Department of Energy says home heating and cooling equipment sends as much as 11 percent of total carbide dioxide emissions into the atmosphere.

The potential consequences of unchecked increases in carbon dioxide levels are many. In an October 1988 report, the Environmental Protection Agency said: "Global climate change will have significant implications for natural ecosystems; for where, when and how we farm; for the availability of water to drink and to run factories; for how we live in our cities; for the wetlands that spawn our fish; for the beaches we use for recreation; and for all levels of government and industry."

One way carbide dioxide emissions from a home can be reduced is through the use of sufficient insulation. A study of this subject has been produced by Dr. Arthur Rosenfeld, director of the Center for Building Services of the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratories in California.

As a result of adding 10 inches of fiberglass or rock wool insulation to an uninsulated attic of a 1,500 square-foot, gas-heated house in Albany, N.Y., he said, heat loss out of the attic was reduced by 88 percent. He added that if the gas furnace is typically 75 percent efficient, 1.3 million fewer tons of carbon dioxide are released into the atmosphere each year with the addition of insulation. Since the Department of Energy estimates that more than 25 million homes are not insulated to recommended levels, this means air pollution could be reduced by 32.5 million tons of carbon dioxide in one year.

"Fortunately," says Tim Grether, president of the Mineral Insulation Manufacturers Association, "the same insulation that makes a home more energy efficient not only reduces emissions of carbon dioxide, it enables consumers to save money and enjoy more comfortable homes."

While insulation has proven effective in the reduction of carbon dioxide levels, it is often overlooked as part of the solution to air pollution. All of the organizations mentioned above recommend government policies be designed to lower carbon dioxide emissions.

One of the best places to add insulation to a home is an attic floor because it usually is accessible. If your attic floor is not insulated at all, add R-30 mineral fiber, with

R-38 recommended for colder climates. The R rating means resistance to heat flow. The higher the R-value number, the greater the insulating power. The R number must be clearly marked on all packages of all types of insulation.

If your attic floor already has a little insulation (six inches or less), add R-19 or R-11 mineral fiber blankets and cover the insulation with an interior finish material. Such material can be added on top of any type of existing insulation. Amounts greater than R-19 are often justifiable because your climate is colder or warmer than average. Also, a high amount of attic floor insulation will partially compensate for poorly insulated walls. When you put batts or blankets between joists, they do not need to be stapled. But the vapor barrier must be face down. If some insulation already exists, add a layer of batts or blankets, but use the kind that do not have a vapor barrier. Should the kind you have include a vapor barrier, remove it before the insulation. The top layer may be laid crosswise to the joists or run parallel with them. Just be sure the pieces of insulation butt snugly against each other.

Here's the answer

Q. - When paneling an extra room with plywood, I can save a lot of time by nailing the plywood directly to the studs. But I read somewhere it is much better to nail the panels to furring strips which have been attached to the studs. This seems like extra work. Is it necessary or can I go ahead and nail to the studs?

A. - You can nail the plywood right to the studs but then you risk the studs warping or shrinking later on, and causing the wall to be uneven. The furring strips minimize the possibility of this taking place. In still another method, you put up a drywall and then attach the plywood to it. In any case, no matter which method of installation you use, buy the plywood ahead of time so it can be kept in the room several days before application. This will give it time to acclimate.

Q. - I have cut a lot of wood but I have never used a hacksaw. This time I have to cut some metal. Is there any trick to it or do I just saw the same way as with a crosscut saw?

A. - Forget about the way you cut wood. With a hacksaw, you do not apply pressure on the backstroke. The hacksaw must be held as flat as possible for an even cut. Put the pressure on the forward stroke, release the pressure on the back stroke. When possible, keep both hands on the hacksaw frame. Start the cut with several short forward strokes. When putting the blade in the frame, the teeth should slant forward.

Q. - To cover the edges of plywood, I plan on attaching molding to them. Should I use glue or nails or what?

A. - Use glue and then a couple of well-placed nails. Depending on the kind of project you are working on, the finishing nails can be driven a bit below the surface and the indentations filled with wood putty or other filler.

SHALAH PERKINS

Perkins is CHOF feature artist

The feature artist for June at the National Cowgirl Hall of Fame and Western Heritage Center is Shalah Perkins of Campo, Colo.

Perkins is a native of southeast Colorado and has an inborn love for her western heritage. Through her art, she relays her love and happiness in that heritage. To her, art is a medium of expression for her feelings and ideas. "All my life I have dabbled in drawing, painting and sculptures as a means of expressing my fascination with the character of the people and animals around me. It is my goal not just to duplicate the looks of my subjects, but what is in my heart about them and their way of life."

Having been a working part of a southeastern Colorado ranch, Perkins has spent many hours studying and visually absorbing the great plains. She has had a lifetime of "on the job experience," with horses, cattle and the people who are a living part of the contemporary west.

With most of her exceptional sculptures, Perkins writes accompanying poems. She feels that they are an integral part of the sculpture itself and has the poem engraved on a drawerlike plate in the base of each piece. She says that the poems come to her sometimes before the motion and shape of the sculpture, sometimes after. Her goal is to express her ideas and feelings of life in such a way that even small children can understand.

The public is invited to view the 20 outstanding sculptures at the Hall of Fame which is open Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. It is located at 515 Ave. B.

Reception to honor resident

Bernice Witherspoon will be honored on her 80th birthday with a reception planned from 3-5 p.m. Wednesday, June 14, at the Hereford Senior Citizens Center, 426 Ranger Drive.

All friends and relatives are invited to attend.

Hosting the event will be the honoree's daughter, Mrs. Jim Coffman, and her four grandchildren, Don Marshall, Todd Marshall, Mrs. Greg Cox and Mrs. David Tullos.

CARING FOR YOUR PARENTS
NEW YORK (AP) - What do you do when your parents no longer can care for themselves?

Here are some housing alternatives for the elderly from Family Circle magazine. For specific referral assistance, call the agency for aging in your area and ask about the following programs:

- Shared Housing and Matching Programs: Here, two or more unrelated people share a house. Usually, the living, kitchen and bathroom areas are communal but each person has a bedroom or other private space.

- Accessory Apartments: These are in underoccupied single-family houses that are large enough to accommodate a separate apartment with its own entrance.

- Elderly Cottage Housing Opportunity: These self-contained units are built for an elderly parent on your own house lot. Many of these dwellings are prefabricated.

- Retirement and "Life-Care" Communities: These range from places for those in good health to those who need 24-hour nursing care. Some have rental apartments, co-ops, condos, one-family cottages and services that keep pace with the changing needs of the residents.

The Creature Feature Summer Reading Club is underway with over 600 children of all ages having enrolled. If you haven't enrolled, there is still time, so come on in!

Remember the library's summer hours have gone into effect, so we do not open until 10 a.m. The evening hours will remain the same.

On the new book list this week there is Peace, Love and Healing by Bernie S. Siegel M.D., the author of Love, Medicine and Miracles. The emphasis in the new book is on self-healing, that ability given to us by our creator and neglected by medicine. Modern medicine and self-healing should be complimentary and not mutually exclusive. This book challenges us to recognize how our mind influences our body and how to use this knowledge to our advantage. Dr. Siegel shows the reader how to be receptive to the messages your mind gives your body, how to use your dreams and view illness as a message or "reset button." He also tells one how to give yourself healing messages through techniques of meditation, visualization, relaxation and peace of mind. The help that modern medicine can provide should not be ignored or denied, but we ourselves can play a critical role in communicating to our mind, body and healing systems.

Tony Hillerman, the author of A Thief In Time, has a new book entitled Talking God. When Catherine Morris Perry returns from a long week's trip, she finds a large microwave oven box on top of her stylish desk. She can tell by the way it has been taped and retaped that it probably does not carry the original content. Mrs. Perry had just been through a controversial argument last week with a Henry Highhawk, of the Bitter Water People, who wanted the Smithsonian to return the Indian bones they have on display for proper Indian burial. Stating museum policy, Mrs. Perry told Highhawk, "If an Indian tribe wanted ancestral bones returned, it has only to ask for them and provide some acceptable proof that the bones in question had indeed been taken from a burial ground of the tribe. The museum is a research institution as well as a gallery for public display and the museum's collection of ancient human bones is a potentially important source of anthropological information because research needs and because the public has a right to expect authenticity. Reproductions are not a practical solution."

As Mrs. Perry opens the box, she finds a copy of the Washington Post folded to expose the story that had quoted her. "The right to expect authenticity" was underlined and Mrs. Perry felt herself consumed with apprehension. There was also an envelope with her name written on it. The letter inside said, "You won't bury the bones of our ancestors because you say the public has the right to expect authenticity. Therefore, I am sending you a couple of authentic skeletons of ancestors...of authentic white Anglo types." Whose skeletons are these? Does Mrs. Perry know them?

Capital Crimes by Lawrence Sanders, features Brother Kristos, a bearded bear of a man whose eyes can pierce the soul. His present mission is to take upon himself the transgressions of the wives of Washington, absolving them of guilt. To those who have been purged by the message of unending love and the death of sin, Kristos is a messiah. To the President of the United States, Kristos is a miracle worker who can heal his son when the latest medicines cannot. To John Tollinger, executive assistant to the White House Chief of Staff, Kristos is a lecherous womanizer whose political influence over the emotionally unstable president is becoming dangerously strong. In Tollinger's struggle to get the inside information on Kristos, he begins to see a horrifying bond emerging between them.

Frye, Weise exchange vows Saturday

Wedding vows were exchanged by Shelly Denise Frye and Dale Wade Weise, both of College Station, early Saturday evening in First Baptist Church of Dimmitt. Officiating was Tommy Tallas of Brethren Church in Wall, Texas.

The bride is the daughter of Kenneth and Linda Frye of Route 2, Hereford, and the bridegroom is the son of Dewayan and Nancy Weise of San Angelo.

The church was centered with a multi-arch candelabrum flanked by arch candelabra and spiral candelabra adorned with commador greenery, bakers fern and baby's breath. The altar was decorated by a large bouquet of white gladioli, star gazier lilies, baby's breath and matching greenery and was highlighted by the white unity candle.

The registry table was adorned by a free form arrangement of star gazier lilies and spring of rye greenery in an Edwardian crystal vase. Pews were marked with primrose satin bows.

Carla Frye of Dallas served her sister as maid of honor and the groom's brother, Ricky Weise of San Angelo, was best man.

Bridesmaids included Cathy Roobart of San Antonio, Suzan Collins of Dallas and Mrs. Andy Fleming of Lubbock.

Serving as groomsmen were the groom's cousin, Scott Phillips of Grand Forks, N.D., Mark Olsen of Temple and the bride's brother, Reagan Frye of Hereford.

Guests were escorted by John David King of Lubbock, Randy Kovlosky and Warren Abrameit, both of College Station, and Glenn Fotjasek of Houston.

The bride's cousin, Kayla Smiley, daughter of Mitchell and Kim Smiley of Friona, was flower girl. The groom's cousin, Bradley Taylor, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Taylor III of Georgetown, Texas, was ring bearer.

Candles were lit by John David King and Randy Kovlosky.

Geary Brogden of Friona vocalized "God, A Man and A Woman" and "The Wedding Prayer." He also sang a duet, "Together", with Linda Griffin, also of Friona. Avie Lewis served as organist and Mrs. Walter Maynard played the piano.

Presented in marriage by her father, the bride was attired in a floor-length gown of white peau de soie satin which was fitted from the open neckline to the waist. The gored skirt was softly gathered and swept into a cathedral-length train. French re-embroidered alencon lace sleeves formed a ruffle to frame bare shoulders meeting the lace scallops of the sweetheart neckline.

The fitted bodice of re-embroidered alencon lace over satin was lightly beaded with pearls at the neckline. The skirt and train were trimmed in a matching alencon lace border with motifs scattered from the back waist and sweeping out onto the train.

The fingertip-length veil of bridal illusion featured rolled hemmed edging. The pouf headpiece consisted of silk flowers enhanced with pearls and was designed and created by the bride and the bridegroom's mother.

She carried a flowing crescent of gardenias, white foses, white freesia, white miniature carnations, sprays of white pearls, and California English ivy, accented with white satin picot ribbon. She also carried bridal pink roses which she gave to each mother.

The bride wore pearl earrings and a pearl necklace given to her by the groom.

The maid of honor and bridesmaids wore princess-style tea-length dresses of soft dusty rose moire taffeta. Matching Venice lace and a bow accented the scooped neckline. Bows also highlighted the elbow-length, puffed sleeves. To complete their ensembles, honor attendants wore pearl earrings given to them from the bride. Each carried stems of pink star gazier lilies and greenery of spring of rye, tied with pink picot ribbon.

The flower girl's dress was similar to the bridal attendants' gowns. She carried a white lace basket with pink miniature carnation petals and bows of pink satin picot ribbon. In her hair, she wore a barrett embellished with pink satin picot ribbon and baby's breath.

The ring bearer carried a white satin pillow trimmed with lace and ribbon made by the mother of the groom.

The mothers' corsages consisted of bridal pink roses, austomeria lilies and pink miniature carnations with fresh California Enligh ivy as the trim.

Janet Supak of College Station invited guests to register at the reception held in the church fellowship hall.

Serving the bride's cake were the bride's cousins, Kim Smiley and Annette Frye, both of Friona. The groom's cousins, Kim Holik and Kelly McDaris, both of San Angelo, served the groom's cake and poured coffee. Punch was ladled by Stephanie Ryan of Lubbock.

The bride's oval table was lavishly covered in formal-length bridal white cloth with an overlay of Battenburg lace and centered by the bride's cake made by the bride's aunt, Mrs. Bob Crawford of Childress. Topping the three-tiered cascading waterfall was a multi-tiered white confection. Dual ascending lattice stairways interspersed with fresh baby's breath, bakers fern and miniature pink carnations joined multiple satellite cakes, all of which were topped with fresh flowers of rubrum lilies and miniature pink carnations, baby's breath and bakers fern. A silver punch bowl and silver appointments further adorned the table.

The hors d'oeuvre table, entwined with English ivy, featured ham, turkey, cheese, crackers, fruit, vegetables and dip. A silver candelabrum accented with fresh flowers of rubrum lilies and greenery adorned the center of the table which was covered with a formal-length bridal white cloth and an overlay of Battenburg lace.

The groom's cake, made by his mother, was placed on a round skirted table covered with a formal-length white cloth. The two-tiered chocolate cake featured a rectangle base iced in chocolate and scrolls on the sides while the top oval tier was iced in white with a maroon ATM symbol in the center. Fresh grape clusters draped off two corners of the cake.

The groom's table was centered with a crystal vase containing free form boka and star gazier lilies and spring of rye. Glazed pecans were also served from the table as was coffee poured from a silver coffee service.

Leaving for a wedding trip to San Francisco and Carmel, Calif., the bride wore a casual two-piece skirt and blouse ensemble of teal blue and white stripe cotton accented with a red sash at the waist. She also wore red accessories.

The couple will make their home in College Station.

The bride is a 1983 graduate of Dimmitt High School and a 1987 graduate of Texas A&M where she received her bachelor of arts degree in biology. She is currently a graduate student in sports medicine and exercise physiology at Texas A&M University.

The groom, a 1983 graduate of Wall High School, graduated in 1988 from Texas A&M where he received a B.S. degree in biomedical science. He is a graduate student in veterinary pharmacology and physiology.

Out of town guests represented San Angelo, Georgetown, Taylor, Ballinger, Paint Rock, Lubbock, Dallas, Abilene, Houston, Post, Childress, Slaton, Midland, Davenport, Iowa and Edridge, Iowa.

The rehearsal dinner was hosted by the groom's parents at K-Bob's Steak House in Hereford.

A bridal luncheon was held on the day of the wedding in the home of Mrs. George Frye, the bride's aunt. Assisting with the luncheon were the bride's cousins, Mrs. Mitchell Smiley and Mrs. Kirk Frye.

Pre-nuptial courtesies included three miscellaneous showers. One was held in the home of Mrs. Gene King of Dimmitt, another in San Angelo and one in College Station.

Gala celebrations scheduled

"TEXAS" opens its 24th season with gala celebrations honoring the members of its producing non-profit organization, The Texas Panhandle Heritage Foundation on Wednesday, June 14th.

A "Member Roundup" where members can meet other members begins the evening with a reception at 6 p.m. in the Interpretive Center in Palo Duro Canyon State Park near Amarillo and the city of Canyon.

Wagons will take guests from the scenic overlook to the Interpretive Center. The old stone building has just recently opened again to visitors on a regular schedule and offers spectators one of the finest views of the canyon including the famous Lighthouse Rock.

At the Pioneer Amphitheatre, introductions of dignitaries at 8:20 p.m. will include special recognition of Pete and Wanda Gilvin for a new "TEXAS" stage and the Area Foundation with funds from its supporting organization, the Don & Sybil Harrington Foundation, represented by Jim Allison, Executive Director of both and President of the Don & Sybil Harrington Foundation, for a grant to begin improvement and renovations of the electrical support systems of the theatre.

The gala first performance of the season starts at 8:30 p.m. featuring Sherman Bass as Calvin, Lauren Ward as Elsie, Gene Murray as Uncle Henry, Lois Hull as Aunt Anna, Jerry Williams as Tucker Yeldell, Bryan Barron as Dave, Kymberli Ricks as Kate and Kimbriy Birkes as Parmalee.

During late June "TEXAS" will lavishly entertain its two millionth visitor.

Last year "TEXAS" welcomed 95,203 persons from every state and 113 different foreign countries. Audiences filled the 1,742 seat theatre with an average of 1,600 persons per night.

Surveys showed that 80% of the spectators traveled over 100 miles to see the show with 34% from over 500 miles.

Written by Pulitzer Prize Winning author Paul Green and directed by Neil Hess, "TEXAS" is a historical romance with the sophistication of Broadway.

Fresh touches will delight audiences this year as Hess adds a few surprises using his new cast of 80 who come from 12 states and two foreign countries that include Thailand and Japan with one lead returning after a year of study in England.

The story highlights the early struggles between the cowboys and the ranchers as they fight each other and nature's elements, eventually combining efforts to bring great personality and prosperity to the area.

Audiences have been known to raise umbrellas as the latest in sound and light technology bring a storm to life. Thunder shatters the silence and a lightning bolt sizzles 600 feet down the canyon wall, exploding a tree.

During the evening, cowboys battle ballet dancing "flames" as a smoky prairie fire threatens, Indians interrupt a party scene, a new town is built and an authentic train whistles across the plains.

Reservations are encouraged and obtained by writing "TEXAS," Box 268, Canyon, Texas 79105 or by calling 806-655-2181. Tickets are $10, $8 and $6 for adults and $10, $4 and $3 for children.

An optional chuckwagon barbecue dinner is served prior to each performance from 6:30 to 8 p.m. by Sutphen's of Amarillo in the patio area of the theatre for $5 per person.

While in the area see the largest and oldest state museum in Texas, the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum in Canyon, savor sourdough biscuits on the canyon rim during an authentic cowboy morning breakfast at the Figure 3 Ranch or catch robotic dinosaurs at the Don Harrington Discovery Center in Amarillo.

The earliest recorded astronomical observations were made in China around 3000 B.C.

New Arrivals

Gary and Theresa Fangman of Rt. 4, Hereford, are the parents of a baby girl, Madeline Marie, born June 5 at High Plains Baptist Hospital in Amarillo.

She has two older brothers, Jacob, 4, and Aron, 2. Her grandparents include Gene and Juanita Koetting of Adrian, Gus and Geraldine Mueller of Amarillo, and Dennis Noggler of Big Spring. Great-grandparents include Mrs. John Noggler of Hereford, Mr. and Mrs. Jim Alford of Amarillo, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Paschel of Arkansas, and Sybilla Koetting of Groom.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) - Screenwriter Tom Schulman, who wrote the script for the "Dead Poets Society" starring Robin Williams, says the motion picture is not drawn from his own experiences as a private school student.

Schulman attended Nashville's Montgomery Bell Academy and then Vanderbilt University here.

The movie, which opens today across the country, is about a fictitious boys' prep school in Vermont, called Welton Academy. The harmony of the strait-laced, conformist school is disturbed when Williams arrives to teach English.

"Since I did go to a 'good' private prep school, I guess it would be natural to assume that much of the story is based on my experience there," Schulman said. "That just isn't true."

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Prepare to call in extra help to handle the mail. You are sure to receive a whale of a response to that letter from the nurse who was "Tired and Disgusted." She complained about patient overload, understaffing and mistakes made in the lab and x-ray departments by exhausted people. Well, I am a nurse in Texas and we have the same mess here. I love my work and consider it a ministry, but I, too, am fed up, mad as hell and I'm not going to take it anymore.--Color Me Gone

DEAR GONE: You are right. The mail has been horrendous. I'm getting the same complaints from all over the country. Read on.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I work in a hospital that is very much like the one that nurse described. I resigned rather than be a part of it. The corporate greed that has permeated our society has ruined our health-care system.--A Voice in the Midwest

FROM H.K.J. in Illinois: Our hospitals care more about the landscaping than patients. Complaining to the newspaper wouldn't mean a thing. The hospitals are major employers and they control a lot of advertising. Money talks louder than nurses.

NEW YORK: If the administrators could walk in the nurses' shoes I'll bet things would change. The people who sit in the offices have no idea of how hard we work and what we have had to put up with. I pray that no member of my family will have to get to a hospital. I know too well what goes on there, and it scares the daylight out of me.

VIRGINIA: I, too, got fed up and decided to take my nursing skills elsewhere. I am now a nurse-consultant to a large corporation. My sister, also an R.N., is teaching. My daughter takes private-duty cases and would leave the profession rather than go back to a hospital.

CALIFORNIA: I am an R.N. who is now in law school. I have yet to take a course in law that is as difficult as the courses I took when I studied nursing. It seems the hospitals will do anything but pay nurses what they are worth. They tried importing foreign nurses until the doctors complained. They couldn't read or write well enough to be safe employees. What a disaster!

FROM OREGON: We are so short of nurses here that I have had to work many double shifts (16 hours at a stretch) and was scared to death that I would fall asleep if I closed my eyes for two minutes. They fired security guards here to save money and the vandalism went wild. Meanwhile, they put in a new computer system and commissioned an artist to paint murals on the walls.

CALIFORNIA: The hospital I work for recently spent $300,000 to decorate the lobby, but the nurses are keeling over from exhaustion at slave wages. The only reason they stay is because they love the work and want to be of service to humanity. It is disgustingly unfair.

FROM NEW JERSEY: The nurse shortage in our hospital is outrageous. I hear such things as "Uncle Joe hasn't been shaved in three days" and "Where were the nurses when my 80-year-old mother got out of bed and fell?" Every time I leave the hospital at night I feel guilty because there is so much left undone.

MONTANA: Complain to the newspaper? Fat chance. The publisher sits on the board of our hospital. Get real, will you please?

So, dear readers, you've read what the nurses from all over the country have to say. Nursing is a profession in trouble. Nurses need better wages and more respect. And they need it NOW.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: You have printed several letters over the years from women who have been abandoned by their husbands and left with small children. Here is one for you that has a little different twist.

My son, a fine young man, married at the age of 39. "Victor's" wife was 33. They agreed not to have a family and to live for each other. Everything was wonderful until four years later when "Velma" began to hear her biological clock ticking louder and louder and decided that they should have a child.

Several months later, Velma's doctor told her that she was going to have twins. On Victor's birthday she presented him with a set of triplets. The babies were adorable, but they were a tremendous amount of work. I tried to help out, but I am 77 years old and didn't have the stamina to do much.

When the triplets were five months old Velma complained of "not feeling right." We all thought it was exhaustion. Well, it was a little more than that. She was pregnant again. Seven months later she had twins.

So here is my son, Ann, in his middle 40s with five babies. And that's not the half of it. Velma took off three weeks ago with a man she used to work with. She left a note saying, "I have to get away. I hope you will understand that this is best for everybody. Please raise the kids Catholic."

We found a wonderful housekeeper and I am there full time, but these children need their mother. Is it possible to have the police track down Velma and make her come home and take care of her family? I am a nervous wreck over all this. Victor says, "Mind your own business, Ma." Please give me some advice.--Sad Granny in N.J.

DEAR GRANNY: My heart goes out to Victor and those babies, but the law cannot force a woman to take care of her children if she doesn't want to.

Let's hope and pray that Velma comes back of her own accord and that Victor is able to forgive her.

LONDON (AP) - The barriers, bouncers and security men were worthy of a gathering of the Rolling Stones. And so it was after bass man Bill Wyman took his bride to the altar.

Wyman, 52, and Mandy Smith, 19, had a formal wedding at St. John's Church Park on Monday, four days after they were legally married in a registrar's office.

None of the other Stones was in church, but Mick Jagger, Keith Richards, Charlie Watts and Ron Wood showed up later for the reception, along with guitarist Eric Clapton, Boy George, film director Michael Winner, comedian Spike Milligan and pop star Kim Wilde.

"Given the crowd outside and the interest of the media, I don't suppose there is much point in pretending this is an ordinary marriage blessing in a village church in some remote corner of the countryside," the Rev. Thaddeus Birchard said at the wedding.

Safer vegetables produced

Picture a baby getting its first taste of carrots with the aid of the proud parents. With the baby's health foremost in their minds, those parents want the safest, most wholesome carrots available.

Recent work by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and Texas Agricultural Experiment Station is providing assurance that high quality carrots and other vegetables will continue to move to market and into baby foods.

Results of an integrated pest management (IPM) program by the extension service in the Rio Grande Valley the past year have shown that certain vegetables can be produced with less pesticides, resulting in greater profits for farmers and a more wholesome product for consumers. IPM involves an interdisciplinary team approach to deal with pest problems.

The program involved carrots and cabbage in Hidalgo County, one of the state's premier vegetable growing areas, and was under the direction of Dr. Patrick Lummus, county extension entomologist, and Dr. Jonathan Edelson, research entomologist with the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station at Weslaco.

"Carrots were the primary entry in the pest management program," Lummus said. "This included 720 acres of processing carrots, most of which were contracted by Campbell's Foods Inc. and Gerber's Inc. Many of these carrots go into baby foods that have tight tolerances (allowable levels) for insect damage and insecticide residue."

According to Lummus, the carrot weevil is the key pest in carrot production, and grower contracts with food companies have specified six predetermined insecticide applications. Under the IPM program, contracts were amended to allow "as needed" insecticide applications based on field scouting and treatment threshold determinations (factors indicating the economic feasibility of whether or not to treat).

"Results of this change were dramatic," Lummus said. "Under the IPM program, we averaged only two insecticide applications during the growing season. This was a 66 percent reduction in insecticide use on this important food crop and saved farmers $21,600. Furthermore, no carrots were condemned for processing due to weevil infestations. So, overall, the carrots moving into food processing were definitely more wholesome."

A similar success story was recorded with the IPM program in cabbage production in Hidalgo County, Lummus said. The major cabbage pest is the diamondback moth, and farmers traditionally have to conduct an intensive insecticide application program to control the pest. However, through field scouting and use of treatment threshold determinations, farmers reduced insecticide applications on cabbage in the IPM program by 43 percent.

"This program clearly demonstrates that an integrated approach to pest management can boost farm profits while at the same time provide more wholesome food products to consumers. It's a situation in which everybody wins," Lummus said.

A sure winner is that baby is enjoying those juicy carrots.

Abundant Life

By Bob Wear

Some things are worthy of being regarded with profound respect and honor, and, for our well being, personally and collectively, must be so regarded. This is, generally, what we call 'reverence'. There are indicators that irreverence is much too widespread, and somehow reverence doesn't belong in the general sophistication that seems predominant in human thought and behavior. We don't know just how widespread this condition may be, but it is general enough to be identified as one of our greatest sources of human loss.

When we think of reverence, we usually do so in relationship to God and the things which pertain to him. Of course, this reverence is highly intensified in contrast to the reverence we may feel and express toward our fellowmen and our human institutions; and this is as it should be. There are many things in the human realm that deserve our profound respect and honor, but we don't elevate these above God of whom it is said, "Holy and reverend is thy name."

It is not the purpose of this writing to tell anyone what to revere, but to emphasize the fact that there are things worthy of reverence. "Reverence is an ennobling sentiment; it is felt to be degrading only by the vulgar mind which would escape the sense of its own littleness by elevating itself into an antagonist of what is above it. He who has no pleasure in looking up is not fit so much as to look down." - W. Allston

All of us have the capacity for reverence, for holding in high esteem the time-tested and time-honored values, for respecting and honoring the people who hold to these values, in other words, for helping to preserve the good life.

"Reverence is a sign of strength; irreverence a sign of weakness. The fine loyalties of life must be revered or they will be forewarned in the day of trial." - Anon.

Reverence, directed toward worthy objects and genuinely expressed, is one of the greatest attributes of humankind.

"Farm Ugly" is the latest phrase in United States agriculture. The term refers to no-till planting. Farmers let weeds grow among harvested corn stubble, then spray herbicide on it in the spring, before planting new crops. The new crop that grows is as good looking as conventionally planted crops, says Richard Foell, head of ICI's Ag Products Farm Ugly campaign.

Social Security

QUESTION: I am a 20-year-old SSI recipient who is legally blind. My State has provided me with employment counseling and work skills training, but, as I look at my total situation, I see the cost of working as prohibitive, since I would be receiving only a modest entry level wage. My only income is my SSI check with which I must pay for rent, food and other expenses, such as the transportation I would need to and from work if I were to obtain employment. Is there any help available.

ANSWER: The earnings you use to pay for transportation to and from work do not count as income for supplemental security income purposes. You may also be interested to know that the money used or set aside for additional job training or to purchase things you need to do your job also does not count either has income in the SSI program. Contact any Social Security office for more information.

QUESTION: My 77-year-old aunt is currently receiving SSI checks. She has not been managing her money very well recently, and often her money runs out before the middle of the month has passed. I'm worried about her and wonder what you would suggest I do in her case.

ANSWER: If a person is unable to manage their funds, a representative payee can be appointed. This person can be a relative, friend or even a member of a community group or organization. This person must complete a form saying that the SSI benefits they receive on behalf of the recipient will be used for the recipient's needs and in his or her best interest. Contact any Social Security office to find out about the procedure.

QUESTION: I have been receiving Social Security disability benefits for about 2 1/2 years. My goal is to return to the work force and support my family once again. When I do return, I may only be able to work part-time for awhile and I know this would not provide the money necessary for our living expenses. How can I be sure that if I return to work that our needs will be met?

ANSWER: Most disability beneficiaries are entitled to a 9-month (not necessarily consecutive) trial work period without affecting their disability status. At the completion of the trial work period, the extended period of eligibility begins. The extended period of eligibility provides for the reinstatement of disability benefits for any month an individual remains medically disabled and does not perform substantial gainful activity (SGA) within the 36 consecutive month period immediately following the completion of the 9-month trial work period. At the end of this 36-month extended period of eligibility benefit reinstatement rights end and no further disability cash benefits are payable. In addition, Medicare coverage can continue for up to 39 months after payments stop at the end of the 9-month trial work period.

QUESTION: I am a senior citizen who lives in government sponsored housing. My only income is my SSI check, along with the food stamps I receive every month. I would like to work at a part-time job to add to my income, but a friend told me that I could lose my SSI check and my apartment. Is that true?

ANSWER: Your eligibility for SSI will continue as long as your countable monthly income is less than $368. Countable income greater than that amount will result in loss of eligibility.

ANNALISA VALLEJO, DAVID GARCIA

Engagement announced

Annalisa Vallejo and David Garcia, both of Hereford, plan to exchange nuptials Aug. 19.

The bride-elect is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Vallejo Sr. of 433 Star St. and the prospective bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. Lupe Garcia of 906 S. Lee.

Miss Vallejo graduated from Hereford High School in 1988 and is currently studying through Amarillo College.

Garcia, a 1987 HHS graduate, is presently employed by Arrowhead Mills.

Hearing impaired to learn Lamaze training from film

WICHITA FALLS (AP) - The sound of her baby's first cry will never reach Susan Deaver. But the most current information on delivering a baby will.

Susan and her husband, Barry, are deaf and are expecting their first baby in August. That child may be among the several Wichitans to star in a nationally distributed eight-part film series for the hearing impaired.

The films will help the hearing impaired through the child-bearing process, including everything from Lamaze training to dealing with problem births.

The idea for the videos was born at a Lamaze training course at Midwestern State University four years ago. Mark Lukert, a former teacher of the hearing impaired, and MSU Associate Professor Betty Bowles met at a break in the Lamaze training and decided a video could help millions of deaf parents if it could be distributed nationwide.

Lukert was communicating with a deaf couple taking the Lamaze class when Bowles first met him. (Lamaze is a natural method of childbirth that used breathing and relaxation techniques to control pain.)

"I was so fascinated with what Mark was doing that I didn't pay that much attention to the rest of the class," Bowles said. To take the class now, a couple must have an interpreter.

The videos would eliminate that need.

Bowles and Lukert are applying for grants to help fund the project. They learned last week that an application through MSU to the federal Department of Education for $121,000 was narrowly disapproved on technical grounds. But they say they are not discouraged.

"We're still going to do it," said Bowles. "It's just going to take a little longer. I sent in four other applications for four other grants."

Bowles said they hope to hire Bobbie Beth Scoggins, a deaf actress who starred in the Broadway production of "Children of a Lesser God." Scoggins would guide deaf couples, using sign language, through the eight videos, each lasting about an hour.

KFDX Channel 3 has volunteered the use of its facilities to complete the production. Topics include pregnancy, labor, delivery, baby care, breast feeding, Lamaze, problems in giving birth and caring for the mother after birth.

Leslie Mayo Schaffner, Bethania General Hospital publicist, and Channel 3 Chief Photographer David Brot have shot portions of the videos and are continuing work while awaiting news on the grants.

Bowles has written the script, and Lukert is simplifying it for sign language.

Bowles said 5 million deaf adults of childbearing age could benefit directly from the videos. Without a series, couples will continue to rely on interpreters for information on birth and child-rearing.

Barry and Susan are lucky enough to have Lukert as an interpreter. Lukert, Kate Haynes Elementary School principal, is Barry's former teacher. With his help, the couple described with hand signals some of their feelings about having a baby.

"We're excited," Susan signed. "This is our first baby, so we don't know what to expect."

They are enrolled in the Lamaze class in July. They signed that they want to learn as much about the birthing process as they can.

The reason was simple enough. The more they learn, the less there is to fear.

Hints from Heloise

NO-STICK SPRAY
Dear Heloise: I recently bought a can of vegetable spray. I have found that it has many handy uses besides greasing pots and pans.

I use it on my cheese grater and it makes slicing cheese and clean-up a snap. I spray gelatin molds. It is so easy to get the gelatin out in one piece. I use it on the blades of my food processor and sticky foods don't cling.

These are just a few of the many uses I have found for this spray. It seems each day I find a new one. — Diane Perkins, Houston, Texas

SHelf STORAGE
Dear Heloise: I wish to pay my lifetime dues to you and your mother, your column and your readers. When my mother died she left a whole catalog (she had saved all the columns published in the local paper) of helpful hints. She had pasted them on the pages of an old green-stamp catalog — remember those?

Don't we all need more shelf space? For years I stood plates and serving pieces on their edges behind other things in the shelf and then I found I had been overlooking placing serving pieces on their sides at the ends of the shelf. I had room for a dozen more pieces this way and they were much more visible. — Ilyene F. Gibson, Sherwood, Ark.

ICE-POP FILLER
Dear Heloise: I bought my small child an ice-pop tray. Every time I filled it with the ice-pop mixture, I would dribble the mixture from the counter to the freezer. What a mess! So, now when I fill the tray I use my turkey baster. This makes the whole process so easy with no spills to mop up. — Mary Ann Smith, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Cliburn, fans ready for comeback

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) - On the stage of the Eighth Van Cliburn International Piano Competition, 12 pianists are trying to survive the last performances of the semifinals.

The players sweat and smile nervously between pieces.

The audience waits to see which six will make the final cut, and tension fills the auditorium at Texas Christian University.

But the question whispered seat-to-seat is, "Where is Van Cliburn?"

The 54-year-old pianist and namesake of his hometown's quadrennial piano competition has taken on the aura of mystery man in the world of classical music since, at the age of 23, he stunned the world by winning the prestigious International Tchaikovsky Competition.

His retirement from public performances in 1977 and his plans to return to the concert stage later this month have only increased curiosity about the tall Texan, who says he doesn't want the world of music to take him too far from the other things he holds dear.

"I want to have a balance, so that I can see my friends - the public - and also be able to have home life. I must say, I'm such a Texan, being able to have blackeyed peas and corn bread and turnip greens is just terribly wonderful."

It was 1958, the height of the Cold War, when his Tchaikovsky victory in Moscow catapulted Cliburn to international celebrity status.

His reception back home in the states was akin to that given Olympians: New York City gave him a ticker tape parade, the city's first for a musician, and his concert schedule ballooned to 100 dates a season.

Today, Cliburn is incredulous when he looks back on that time.

"Somebody would say, 'How many did you play?' and I'd say, 'Oh, sometimes I just, I don't want to count,'" he said during an interview backstage at this year's Cliburn competition, which culminates Sunday.

In 1977, Cliburn said "enough" and stopped accepting concert dates. While many thought his rest would be short, Cliburn's hiatus stretched to 10 years.

In 1987 he performed at the White House for Mikhail and Raisa Gorbachev, and he plans to return to the concert stage June 19 in a benefit performance of the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 1 and the Tchaikovsky

Piano Concerto No. 1 with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

In September, Cliburn is scheduled to play at the opening of the Morton H. Meyerson Symphony Center in Dallas.

Some of his recordings have been re-released on compact disc and new recordings are planned.

But Cliburn doesn't plan to let the second stage of his career grow as hectic as the first.

"I love people and I love to meet them and all that, but I love home life, and being able to be at home. That has been such a joy for me," he said.

Home, since 1987, has been a house overlooking Fort Worth where he lives with his mother and first piano teacher, 92-year-old Rildia Bee Cliburn.

Cliburn never did retire from the social scene, frequenting favorite operas, restaurants and New York social events even while his career was on hold.

The social whirl is never more frenzied than during the competition, founded in 1962 to bring an international piano contest to Texas and honor Cliburn in his home town.

Today the event has a budget of more than $2.5 million and draws competitors from around the world.

Cliburn sees its jury process, which winnows a field of 38 competitors down to six finalists, then a winner, as "a way of divining an opportunity cycle" for young artists.

The competitors' careers, he believes, will hinge on their ability to communicate music, what he calls "great pages of literature," to the audience and, during the competition, to the jurors.

"This is a performer's competition, and a performer is a servant. He serves the composer and he serves the audience," he said. "In my own case, I'm a very good audience - I always say that I am - because I go to hear someone because I enjoy being a member of an audience and I get very excited if someone speaks to me."

Cliburn said he makes no choices in his own mind as he listens to the performers, instead envisioning each in his or her career.

The audience is more partial. A crowd favorite entering the final round is 19-year-old Aleksei Sultanov of the Soviet Union, the youngest competitor this year, whose appeal appears to rest in his individualistic style and boyish charm.

During the semifinals, Sultanov brought more than half the audience to its feet with a rousing finale of Chopin's Sonata No. 3 in B minor.

Audience members were again standing late Tuesday night after the final recital of the semifinals by Benedetto Lupo of Italy, who concluded with Rachmaninoff's Sonata No. 2 in B-flat minor. Lupo, 25, also reached the finals.

Other finalists are Elisso Bolkvadze, 22, and Alexander Shtarkman, 22, both of the Soviet Union; Jose Carlos Cocarelli, 30, of Brazil; and Ying Tian, 20, of China.

Shtarkman's father, Naum, took third place to Cliburn's first in the 1958 Tchaikovsky.

Cliburn said that while he doesn't plan to repeat the whirlwind of performances that followed that Tchaikovsky, some aspects of a concert career never change.

One case in point: music critics. "I've lived through all of that before, so I mean, that will be not new," Cliburn said.

Nevertheless, he said, he is fearful as he plans his return to the concert schedule. It's the same emotion he recalls experiencing every time he went on stage.

"One of the things that you always feel as a performer - at least I always felt - I always wanted so to do my best. If I didn't do my best, I would be the person that would be hurt the most and disappointed the most," he said.

"So every time I go on stage, you just remember - I'll be certainly wanting to do my best."

'TEXAS' scheduled

Indians perch on rocks and cowboys ride the range beneath the towering cliffs of Palo Duro Canyon during the musical drama 'TEXAS' that will begin June 14 and continue nightly except Sundays at 8:30 p.m. near Amarillo. For reservations, call (806)655-2181.

YOUR EYES

GAS-PERMEABLE CONTACT LENSES

Many people with a high degree of astigmatism have not been able to achieve good vision with contact lenses, even with the toric type of soft lenses. But now there's an opportunity for both comfort and good fit with gas-permeable lenses, a more comfortable type of hard plastic lens that can provide clear vision to the moderate or highly astigmatic person who's had no luck with soft lenses.

The gas-permeable hard contact lenses have a firm surface that, together with the eye's own tears, corrects astigmatism as well as nearsightedness or farsightedness. The soft lenses can't do that because they just conform to the irregular shape of the astigmatic cornea.

Gas-permeable hard contact lenses are extremely durable and are least affected by air pollution. They are easy to clean and, because they allow oxygen to filter through the lens, they are much more comfortable to wear than ordinary hard contacts.

If you're an astigmatic who hasn't had success with contact lenses, you may wish to try again with gas-permeable variety.

Tips for selecting tomatoes

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

BRADENTON, Fla. (AP) - When you shop for tomatoes, you take what looks good and firm. You hope it will taste good. Tomato varieties are not labeled in the supermarket, but when you buy tomato plant seedlings, you have a wide selection.

A team of scientists at the Florida Agricultural Experiment Station at Bradenton, Fla., make 800 plant crosses annually in search of better tomatoes. They evaluate about 40,000 plants each year.

The plant breeder's goal is to increase disease and insect resistance, improve flavor, increase plant yield, and improve the size of the fruit and the form for shipping to market.

If you buy tomato seedlings, you'll notice the letters (at least some of them) V, F, N or T after the variety name. These refer to the seedlings' resistance to verticillium wilt, fusarium wilt, nematodes or tobacco mosaic plant diseases. Disease tolerance is very important, especially if you plant in the same place every year in a small garden plot.

It's also important to consider the variety's growth habit; whether it is determinate or indeterminate.

Determinate varieties are those that ripen pretty much at the same time - a boon, for instance, if you will be canning or making sauces or juices.

Indeterminate plants will continue growth and production during the season, providing fruit until frost. The precise number of days to maturity will vary with the weather.

Plant tomatoes 30 to 36 inches apart, using stocky, healthy plants in full sun, in moist, well-drained soil. Cage or stake tomato plants to speed ripening, save space, and to keep fruits from rotting on the ground. Plastic mulch will help keep moisture in the ground around the plants to hasten ripening and to discourage weeds.

Some tomatoes do better than others in patio containers.

Select the tomato you prefer according to size and taste. Some people prefer tart tomatoes, while others enjoy sweet ones.

For size, choose small cherry tomatoes for salads or dipping; pear or plum-shaped tomatoes for preserves; pasta types for sauce, ketchup and canning; beefsteak tomatoes for slicing.

The following tomato recipes were provided by Wayne Hawkins, executive vice president of the Florida Tomato Exchange:

BAKED TOMATOES AU GRATIN

2 pounds tomatoes
3/4 teaspoon salt
3/4 teaspoon oregano leaves, crushed
1-16th teaspoon ground black pepper
1/4 cup soft bread crumbs
2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese
1 tablespoon butter or margarine, melted

Use tomatoes held at room temperature until fully ripe. Preheat oven to 350 degrees F. Cut tomatoes to 1-inch cubes (makes about 4 cups); place in a medium bowl. Add salt, oregano and black pepper; mix well. Place in a greased, shallow 1-quart casserole. Cover and bake until tomatoes are almost softened, about 20 minutes.

Combine bread crumbs, Parmesan cheese and butter. Sprinkle over tomatoes. Bake, uncovered, until bread crumbs are browned, about 10 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

ORIENTAL FRESH TOMATO AND CUCUMBER SALAD

1 pound tomatoes (2 large)
1 medium cucumber
1-3rd cup sliced scallions (green onions)
1 tablespoon dark Oriental sesame oil

1 tablespoon soy sauce
1/4 teaspoon crushed red pepper
1/4 teaspoon sugar
1 tablespoon toasted sesame seeds

Use tomatoes held at room temperature until fully ripe. Core and dice tomatoes to make about 2 cups. Place in medium bowl. Peel and halve cucumber lengthwise; seed and slice (makes about 3/4 cup). Add cucumbers to tomatoes along with scallions.

Toss gently. In a small bowl combine sesame oil, soy sauce, red pepper and sugar. Pour over tomato mixture; toss gently. Sprinkle with sesame seeds. Yield: 3 cups.

To toast sesame seeds: Place seeds in small skillet, cook over moderate heat until golden.

HOUSTON (AP) - Romanian-born gymnastics guru Bela Karolyi can pack a U.S. passport on his next international coaching tour. He's now a citizen.

"It's a great moment and I'll never forget it," said Karolyi, 46, who guided Mary Lou Retton and other young Americans to Olympic fame after defecting eight years ago. "Now, I am an American."

Discussing convention

Jo Norton (at left), American Red Cross field service manager of Territory 3 which includes Deaf Smith County, visits with Lupe and Janie Chavez about the Red Cross National Convention held recently in Houston. The Chavezes were territorial representatives at the convention and also were voting chapter delegates. This year was the first time in 20 years that the DSC Chapter of the American Red Cross has had a representative attend the National Red Cross Convention.

Betty Crocker's Cooking Tips

Q. What can I do so that my pie crust is not so dry and hard? M.A., Doran, MN

A. Start by measuring flour and shortening carefully. For flour, use the dipping method: dip nested dry measuring cup into flour and level with a straight-edged knife. For shortening, pack into nested dry measuring cup and level with a straight-edged knife. Remove with a rubber spatula. Then, use the full amount of ice-cold water listed in recipe, adding it one tablespoon at a time to flour-shortening mixture. If dough is still dry, add more cold water, 1 teaspoon at a time, until dough holds together but isn't sticky.
