City's building permits rebound in 1994

Construction on upswing

Building permits in Hereford climbed to more than $3.4 million during 1994. Top left is a view of the new home of Hicks Well Service, adjacent to Crofford Automotive on N. 25 Mile Avenue, where an addition is being constructed. The building permit for Hicks was $24,000, while the permit value for the Crofford addition was $30,000. The new year got a kick start when H&R Manufacturing (right) took out the first permit of 1995. Construction is underway on the $64,500 addition to the company's business at 210 Ross.

New construction totals $3.4 million

By GEORGIA TYLER

Staff Writer

Spurred by a $1.2 million city project and an industrial expansion of $746,064, the total amount of building for Hereford in 1994 climbed higher than $3 million, for the first time since 1988.

City of Hereford building permit records list 124 projects worth $3,411,020 for the year. In 1988, permits worth $3,419,810 were issued but a slide downward began after '88 to a low point of $838,614 in 1991.

Permits with substantial value were taken out in 1994 by the city for the new aquatic center, $1.2 million, in August; new bins at Moorman Manufacturing, $746,064, in August; three new homes, totaling $203,000, and two new businesses, $259,000, August and December.

By comparison, the 1993 building permit total was $1,767,390, on 101 permits.

During 1994, permits were issued for two new business buildings, Auto Zone, $235,000, and Hicks Pump Service, $24,000.

Permits for remodeling several businesses also were issued; including remodeling Taylor and Sons building for Subway Sandwiches, $41,000, January; an addition to Stevens Chevrolet-Olds, $113,101, April; remodeling of building for Godfather's Pizza, $100,000, June; construction at Goodin Fuels, $50,000, August, and an addition to Crofford Automotive, $30,000, November.

In the first six months of 1994, permits totaled $717,436, a slow first half.

Business picked up in the second half, though, when permits worth a total of $2,693,584 were issued.

Number of permits and value, by month, are:

- January, five, $189,000
- February, seven, $36,100.
- March, seven, $25,600.
- April, 13, $213,106.
- May, 12, $55,030.
- June, 12, $198,600.
- July, 12, $827,414.
- August, 16, $1,528,070.
- September, 11, $56,450.
- October, 13, $127,300.
- November, 10, $95,850.
- December, six, $58,500.

The City of Hereford collected $4,534.50 in fees for the building permits issued.

The value of permits in 1994 represents a significant recovery in the building industry in Hereford.

A high-water mark in construction in Hereford was reached in 1985 when 168 permits were issued with a total worth of $11,840,861.

Value of building permits tailed off in 1986 with only $2,017,775 recorded. A spurt in 1987 resulted in permits totaling $6,117,955, building dropped in 1988 to $3,419,810; in 1989 to $2,208,730, and in 1990 to $2,553,356.

In 1991, the value of permits plunged to $838,614, the lowest since 1958 when the total was $831,450.

Construction showed signs of a rebound in 1992 with $1,463,868 in permits and continued in 1993 with $1,767,390.

With the announcement near the end of 1994 that Premium Standard Farms planned to build a pork processing plant in Deaf Smith County, observers expect the city's construction recovery to continue through 1995.

The year got off to a good start on Jan. 3, when H&R Manufacturing took out the first building permit of the year, for $64,500, for expansion of the company's business at 210 Ross.

Snow, freezing rain in forecast

By The Associated Press

Old Man Winter is expected to return to Texas this weekend, with sleet possible in parts of North Texas tonight and a chance of snow and freezing rain in the Panhandle and South Plains.

A chance of rain changing to snow was expected over the northern Panhandle Saturday night with a chance of freezing rain over the southern Panhandle and northern sections of the South Plains. A slight chance of rain over the central and southern South Plains and Concho Valley was possible Saturday night.

But Sunday's forecast calls for accumulations of 1 to 3 inches of snow for northern sections of the Panhandle and less than 2 inches in southern sections. Elsewhere, a chance of rain is forecast east of the mountains, while some clouds are expected in the north and south through Sunday.

Cloudy skies dominated West Texas early Saturday, where morning temperatures were mostly in the 30s and 40s.

Booklet describes Battle of Bulge, 50 years ago

Hereford's Langley kept diary on WWII events

BY SPEEDY NIEMAN

Editor-Publisher

The Battle of the Bulge, a major World War II engagement, has been in the news recently as writers recall and recount the events of 50 years ago. But one of the best accounts of the action may be found right here in Hereford.

The late Ernest Langley, prominent attorney and longtime civic leader, wrote a booklet, "One Soldier's War", before his death and the typed manuscript makes for a very readable and interesting story about a battle that was unparalleled in American history.

Langley was an ordinance officer in Gen. George Patton's Third Army when it made its historic run north during the Battle of the Bulge.

"What a fantastic event--my mind boggles all over again as I recall it and check out those details from the history books," Langley wrote. "And what an experience to have been a part of it!"

The strategy allowing the thin U.S. lines in the Ardennes Forest in Belgium during December 1944 was that the Allies' mobilized armies could move quickly to stop any German threat.

But the planning never imagined that the German army would be able to mass more than 20 divisions to attack four U.S. infantry divisions without the Allied commanders knowing about it. This lack of information could have been a disaster if not for a brazen general named Patton.

Langley wrote how the Third Army was massed on the front lines for an offensive aimed at the Rhine River when word came of the German attack. On the lines, wrote Langley, were the 80th, 87th, 35th, 95th, 5th and 90th infantry divisions, the 4th and 6th armored divisions and tow armored task forces.

"Just the division troops surely would have made up well over 100,000 men, and the support troops surely would have been that many more. All are in battle array, engaged with the enemy, and with plans and procedures in effect for the advance northward," he recalled.

When the threat at the "Bulge" was perceived, Allied leaders were asked what kind of troops they could get to the Ardennes and how fast. Patton's response to Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower on the morning of Dec. 19,

He noted that he wrote his memories 46 years after the fact and "some things had faded, but others are as fresh and vivid as if just a few days ago." An apparently accurate account of what happened at the "Bulge" is shown in the movie, "Patton", wrote Langley.

Incidentally, Langley also wrote about being present for Patton's famous profanity-laced speech, which was used to begin the movie. "I have a transcribed copy of it, but it's a little 'salty' for general audiences." Patton delivered the famed speech in late June of 1944.

Langley uses maps and dates to show how fast the time the Third Army moved. His ordinance company landed at the beaches at France on July 15. "We spent some time at 45 locations on the continent," wrote Langley. "Some were memorable and some remain only a name on a map."

After the breakout at St. Lo by the First Army about July 25th, wrote Langley, "here came the Third Army in a leap-frogging and passing-through type of maneuvers."

His booklet describes experiences along the way, as well as events and important engagements by American troops. One such event was called the "Falaise Gap" blunder. "American troops were mad as we could be that Patton was ordered to stop his advance northward from Argentan to Falaise, and wait on Gen. Montgomery, so as not to embarrass him. Montgomery did not get to where he was supposed to be and the German army escaped from the trap."

Langley later writes that the Allies had conquered France in less than six weeks, then a "sit down" was imposed on Patton. It lasted from Sept. 25 to Nov. 8. It was reported that Montgomery persuaded Eisenhower to concentrate the fuel and ammunition up north with him and to stop the Patton advance where it was.

During that period, Langley's outfit was staying around Nancy, France. The group took off again Nov. 8, following Patton to provide supplies.

Then Langley's company was at Sarre Union when "the Bulge" came. The Germans mounted a huge offensive, hitting the First Army lines around Trier.

The initial blows were devastating and highly successful, and a huge "bulge" was forced into Allied lines. The move threatened to cut the Allied forces into two segments and perhaps even reach the sea in Belgium.

Patton reported he could come to the rescue. I forgot the number of hours he said it would take, but disbelief from the other commanders was apparent," wrote Langley. And the Germans could not have anticipated the ability to move that many troops so fast, within five days--Dec. 18-23, added Langley.

Langley's group headed for the new area on the night of Dec. 23 and moved into Petange to use a school building as headquarters on Christmas Eve. "The school had a hot water system in operation, and we had showers and sanitary facilities in the same building in which we slept--we thought it was sheer luxury!" wrote Langley.

Christmas Day was the company's first day in these facilities and many men found services to attend in the local churches. Langley remembers, with fondness, the welcoming given by local people--many of whom invited soldiers to have Christmas dinner with them.

For a number of years after the war, Langley corresponded with the family who treated him to fried rabbit for dinner. "It was excellent and was certainly indicative of real hospitality

Bush calls tort reform question an 'emergency issue' for Texas

AUSTIN (AP)--Gov. George W. Bush on Friday designated as an "emergency issue" the question of reforming Texas' civil justice laws.

Bush said his declaration, which gives the Legislature immediate authority to consider such legislation, is needed to help improve the state's business climate.

"We must put a stop to the frivolous and junk lawsuits which clog our courts and threaten the survival of many small businesses," Bush said.

But consumer advocates said Texans should urge lawmakers to go slowly and study whether many of the proposed changes are really necessary.

"This (declaration) means that citizens are going to have to call their legislators and tell them to slow down this runaway train. This bill, if passed, will be extremely dangerous for consumers," said Tom Smith of the group Public Citizen.

Those who support what's known as "tort reform" contend that the number of lawsuits and amount of damages being awarded in civil litigation in Texas needs to be controlled.

Ending lawsuit abuse will encourage new jobs and ensure that the truly injured get prompt access to the courts," Bush said.

Opponents say that while abuses of the system should be stopped, going too far in the name of reform would leave consumers without sufficient legal protection.

"There is no reliable evidence that an explosion in liability lawsuits exists in Texas. We would like to see public debate on the issue be dominated by facts, not fear," said John Hildreth, director of the Southwest regional office of Consumers Union.

Among tort reform ideas being offered are placing limits on punitive damages, which are meant to be financial punishment for serious wrongdoing and are awarded in addition to damages for actual losses.

Other proposals call for restricting "forum shopping" for jurisdictions where juries are known to be generous, limiting a defendant's liability to his or her percentage of fault, and reforming the state's Deceptive Trade Practices Act.

During his election campaign, Bush proposed to cap punitive damages at $200,000 or three times the actual economic damages, whichever is greater. He also said he wanted the Legislature to toughen the standard of evidence required when punitive damages are sought.

Bush said Friday that overhauling the current system would help those with legitimate complaints.

Judge slams 2 doors, opens one in O.J. case

LOS ANGELES (AP)--Judge Lance Ito slammed two doors but left a third open for O.J. Simpson's lawyers as they try to argue that the detective who found a bloody glove at Simpson's estate is racist.

Ito barred Simpson's lawyers from bringing up two alleged incidents of bigotry by Detective Mark Fuhrman.

But the judge gave them until Monday—the scheduled start of opening statements—to back up their request to tell the jury about allegations that Fuhrman used the word "niggers" a decade ago.

"If the challenged racial epithet was used in a relevant incident, it will be heard in court," Ito wrote Friday in a five-page ruling.

Simpson is charged with murdering his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman on June 12.

At a preliminary hearing last year, Fuhrman testified that he found a bloody glove on Simpson's property that matched one found near the bodies of the murder victims.

Defense lawyers accuse Fuhrman of being a racist and contend he could have planted the glove to frame Simpson.

They want to introduce testimony from Kathleen Bell, who in a sworn affidavit said Fuhrman told her in 1985 or 1986: "If I had my way, they would take all the niggers, put them together in a big group and burn them."

Bell also said Fuhrman told of pulling over interracial couples to harass them. Ms. Simpson was white. Fuhrman has denied ever meeting Bell.

Ito ruled that the testimony is relevant if the defense can bolster its contention that the glove found on Simpson's property was moved from the murder scene by someone other than Simpson.

He gave the defense until 9 a.m. Monday to submit written arguments.

Ito barred the defense from introducing other evidence of alleged racism, including records of Fuhrman's 1981 disability hearing and a 1988 shooting.

The records of Fuhrman's disability litigation, in which he is quoted as disparaging Mexicans and blacks, aren't admissible because the litigation took place too long ago, the judge said.

"The court does not find there to be a direct link between comments made in approximately 1980 and credibility in 1994," said Ito.

In the 1988 shooting incident, Fuhrman was accused of making racial slurs and planting a knife at the foot of a suspect. But the judge called the allegations "highly speculative" at the very best."

On another matter, Ito barred witnesses from following news coverage in the media when the coverage pertains to the subject of their testimony.

Earlier Friday, prosecutors were penalized for failing to turn over their witness list to the defense soon enough.

Ito said the witnesses could not be mentioned in opening statements, and couldn't testify until either the end of the prosecution case or until the defense has enough time to investigate them.

Ito also barred prosecutors from mentioning some domestic-violence witnesses during opening statements on Monday. He said the same restrictions on calling them at the end of the case would apply.

By the end of January, the Bulge was virtually eliminated and the company was ready to move into Germany. The next quarters were set up in Bodange, a small village just south of the famous battle site of Bastogne, where the Bulge was finally broken.

"The battle of Bastogne is one of the great epics of the war," wrote Langley. It had a critical importance as it controlled a vital road intersection and the snow and bad weather made roads even more important than usual.

Gen. Anthony McAuliffe was in command of some units of the 101st Airborne Division holding Bastogne. The Germans sent a surrender ultimatum, and the reply from McAuliffe was to go down in history: "Nuts!!" He made it stand up and held out until Patton's armor relieved him.

Langley wrote that many times and places are dimly recalled, "as we

Former National Democratic chairman

John C. White dies Friday

WASHINGTON (AP)--Texan John C. White, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee and deputy agriculture secretary in the Carter administration, died Friday after a lengthy illness. He was 70.

White, who served as Texas agriculture commissioner for 26 years, died at Georgetown University Hospital, where he had been receiving treatment for pneumonia since Dec. 30, his family said.

"Hillary and I were deeply saddened to learn of the death," said President Clinton, who worked with White on George McGovern's 1972 presidential campaign.

Former Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, a fellow Texas Democrat, said: "I am saddened at the loss of a dear friend and trusted adviser. John White made an enormous contribution to his state and the nation."

A confidant of leaders of both parties, White was remembered as a leader who reached out to Republicans and Democrats alike. He led the DNC during a turbulent period when Carter's presidency was challenged from within the party by Massachusetts Sen. Edward Kennedy.

"John White served his state and he served his country with great dignity and integrity," said Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock. "He was a champion of the little people in this country. John White remained an advocate for what was right throughout his life."

White was elected Texas agriculture commissioner in 1950 at age 25, where he reorganized the agriculture department and created a consumer protection division.

White's dissatisfaction with enforcement of state seed laws prompted him to run for agriculture commissioner, where he topped a five-candidate field that included the 20-year incumbent. He won re-election to 12 more terms before leaving as 1977 opened.

That same year, President Carter appointed him deputy U.S. agriculture secretary, the selected him later that year to head the DNC, in an appeal to party conservatives.

After leaving the DNC in 1981,

White established a political consulting firm with a roster of clients that included the Chicago Board of Trade and the New York investment firm of Goldman Sachs.

The Texan had impeccable Democratic Party credentials.

White was born in Newport, Texas, on Nov. 26, 1924, the son of a tenant farmer. He attended rural schools and graduated from Iowa Park High in 1942, then worked his way through Texas Tech in Lubbock.

After entering college on a $100 scholarship, he worked his way through school as a janitor, bellhop, auto parts salesman, dishwasher and football banner salesman.

Graduating in 1946 with a bachelor's degree in agriculture, White worked with a West Texas farm equipment company and coordinated a network of vocational agriculture schools for Midwestern State University in Wichita Falls in 1947.

White was survived by wife Nellie; sons, John Richard White and Edward Prince White, both of Austin; and three stepchildren, Russell W. Coffee Jr., Craig Allen Coffee and Kay Lynn Andrews, all of Austin.

Funeral arrangements were pending Friday, but White was expected to be buried in the state cemetery in Austin.

Pacemaker cables pose threat for some people

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

More than 42,000 people have pacemakers with cables that could snap and puncture their hearts, but doctors warn that taking the wires out may be more dangerous than leaving them in.

Two women already have died to death when their cables broke, and the overwhelming concern is that more people will suddenly die.

"The problem is that we don't know in whom this will happen, we don't know when, and we don't even know the best way to take them out," said Dr. Bernard Goldman of Sunnybrook Health Science Center in Toronto.

At issue is the Accufix atrial "J" pacemaker lead, models 701 and 801, made by Electronics Pacing Systems Inc. of Englewood, Colo. The lead is the electrical cable that delivers impulses to the heart to keep it beating regularly.

Electronics' variety has been among the most popular since its introduction in 1987.

The J-shaped end attaches to the heart like a fish hook. Inside its polyurethane insulation is a coiled electrical wire, plus a 3½-inch flat wire that helps the lead keep its shape.

When this piece of flat wire is bent back and forth, as may happen when people move about, it can break. Then the jagged end may work its way through the plastic. At the worst, it may then poke through the heart and jab the aorta, the main blood vessel, causing catastrophic bleeding.

So far, Electronics knows of four instances in which people's aortas were punctured this way. Two died, while the other two survived after surgery. All four were women.

Electronics asks that patients contact their personal physicians for more information. The company has set up a toll-free number for doctors: 800-349-9446.

Impact of stock show is reported

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP)--Imagine the local economic boost that would result from an event that attracts more than 750,000 visitors from across the country and around the world. Then, imagine that it is held every year.

The 99th annual version Southwest Exposition and Livestock Show will be such an event, its promoters say.

The nation's oldest, continually held annual livestock exhibit will have a $100 million economic impact on Tarrant County, according to the study sponsored by the Stock Show.

About $50 million in "new money" changes hands during the event, scheduled to run through Feb. 5 at the Will Rogers Memorial Center, said Delbert Bailey, Stock Show publicity manager.

The study shows that every dollar spent by the Stock Show crowd changes hands locally at least once more, having an economic effect of $100 million.

That includes money spent on entertainment, meals, lodging, personal shopping and miscellaneous expenses for visitors, exhibitors and rodeo contestants, Bailey said.

More than $8 million changes hands in retail sales at hundreds of commercial booths, and livestock sales on show grounds tally more than $5 million.

Livestock show officials are expecting the same this year at Tarrant County's largest event.

The fair will feature a 6-acre midway and carnival, including a petting zoo, a milking parlor, and what fair officials call the world's tallest traveling Ferris wheel.

In the Armon G. Carter Jr. Exhibits Hall, more than 225 commercial exhibitors will sell goods ranging from cookbooks to saddles.

Naval aviators say they live in two worlds

Fliers literally live on fast track while in performing their duties

By VIVIENNE HEINES
Corpus Christi Caller-Times

KINGSVILLE, Texas - Naval aviators say they live in two worlds: the rarefied skies where time, distance and gravity have new meanings, and their earthly existence.

Their in-air life is the stuff of which newspaper headlines and slick cinematic images are made, pumped by adrenalin and daydreams of glory, distorted by the invisible walls that have historically surrounded the aviation fraternity. But if you ask and watch and listen, you may glimpse the real aviator world, where ambitious young men temper their daredevil instincts with military discipline - and for the chance to fly jets faster than the speed of sound.

It's a world of contradictions, where you control a multimillion-dollar, high-powered aircraft at "military speed" - full throttle - with a touch so light it requires only two fingers.

It's where the worst transgression is giving less than your all - which officials say never happens - and where every day brings a new test and contest, often with your closest friend. It's where 12- and 16-hour days are part of the contract, and flying high-tech fighter planes in defense of the country you love means separation from the family you love.

As is the case in many complicated and taxing professions, naval aviators work hard to make their dangerous jobs seem effortless. They've been so successful that a reputation for cockiness often overshadows an impressive level of competence - an image fostered by movies like 1986's "Top Gun," which starred Tom Cruise as an arrogant aviator.

What doesn't make it to the silver screen are the long hours of study, practice and stress that are part of an aviator's life - daily briefings, planning and training repetitions at Naval Air Station Kingsville, where the nation's best aspiring pilots compete to fly the military's most powerful combat aircraft.

"These guys are not just a bunch of carefree flyboys, out wasting the taxpayers' money doing something they really enjoy," said Cmdr. Richard A. Palmer, commanding officer of Training Squadron VT-21 at NAS Kingsville.

"Yes, they enjoy it. But they're hard-working, professional, motivated, and they're willing to go out to sea and endure a lot of hardships and eventually put themselves in harm's way. There's a lot of hard work there that doesn't make for movie material, but that's mostly what these guys do."

NAS Kingsville is where the nation's top pilots learn to fly jets, drop bombs, engage in air combat, land and take off from the Navy's principal warships, aircraft carriers. Palmer's squadron is the only one in the nation currently using the T-45

Goshawk jet trainer and accompanying computer system to train naval aviators. The new jets and computer simulators are the Navy's most technologically advanced and cost-efficient system for training strike pilots.

"Live to fly, fly to live" is the message on the back of the VT-21 Fighting Redhawks' black-and-red T-shirts. The message is apt - naval aviation is a lifestyle as well as a profession, officials say.

"You live in two different worlds," said student Lt.j.g. Ray Drake, 24, of Fishkill, N.Y. "For a student, it's really kind of overwhelming. Because there's really no place else you can fly jets."

The typical naval aviator is a white, non-Hispanic male in his mid-20s. About 7 percent - 1,151 - are minorities, and slightly more than 2 percent - or 393 - of the nation's 16,747 naval aviators are female, according to military officials.

Naval aviation is literally a fast track - it takes five minutes to travel the 45 miles from Kingsville to Corpus Christi, 30 minutes to San Antonio and three hours to California. It's also a fast track of professional rivalry, beginning when candidates' college grades and coursework - science and engineering are good choices - are compared by military recruiters. Although you can apply for a slot if you have a 2.0 college grade point average, officials say it takes a 3.0 or better to be competitive.

Male candidates must be between 5 feet tall and 6-foot-8, while women must be at least 4-foot-8. Candidates must have good vision - no worse than 20-30 correctable to 20-20. Once accepted, students go through primary training at NAS Corpus Christi or NAS Whiting Field in Florida. There, students are scored on their performance during training on turbo propeller aircraft.

The best trainees - the top 10 percent - have a shot at intermediate and advanced strike pilot training in Kingsville or NAS Meridian, Miss. Of the 1,082 students trained as pilots in 1994, fewer than a third - 321 - were selected for jets, said Cmdr. Jim Russel, operations officer at Chief of Naval Air Training in Corpus Christi.

"Most of the guys come in and, from Day One, they want jets," Russel said. "The No. 1 guy always gets his choice of what he wants. So there's a real incentive for these guys to go in there and do real well."

At NAS Kingsville, students train 10 months, at a cost of $980,000 per pilot, in air combat maneuvers, or dogfights; weapons delivery, or bombing; and - most critical - landing a jet on an aircraft carrier. About 95 percent of students complete the course and become naval aviators.

Training continues after students graduate - new aviators are deployed to fleet replacement squadrons on the East or West Coast, where they learn to fly fleet aircraft and to handle night carrier landings, inertial navigation and computer weapons systems. Afterward, they might spend six months in the Persian Gulf or Indian Ocean, then return to their home base for more training and flying before being deployed again, Palmer said.

"Everything you do throughout your whole career in the Navy is jumping through some certain wicket to make you continually strive to be your best," said Lt. Russell Wolfard, a VT-21 instructor pilot with 2,200 hours of flight time.

For their labors, starting aviators earn about $20,000 a year, plus flight pay - a sort of hazardous duty bonus - that ranges from $125 a month for less than two years of flying experience up to $650 a month for six years or more of flying time. More-experienced aviators can make as much as $50,000 annually.

Some studies indicate a majority of aviators are first-borns - a birth-order position that psychologists say produces a highly competitive and self-motivated individual. "Most of them are Type A personalities - aggressive, motivated, take initiative, like to be in control. They're leaders as opposed to followers," Palmer said.

"They've had to compete since Day One - to get in the program, to get selected for jets when they came out of primary (training). And they compete for aircraft spots when they come out here. The better ones get their choices. Most of them want to fly faster, sleeker jets, the F-14s and F-18s."

The T-45, with a maximum level speed of 620 mph, is the fastest thing the students fly in training - but it's almost sluggish compared with the more sophisticated, front-line aircraft in the carrier fleet. Maximum level speed of the F-14 Tomcat, a multi-role fighter jet, is more than twice the speed of sound - Mach 2.34, or 1,554 mph.

Other high-tech strike jets are the A-6E Intruder, a low-level bomber equipped to deliver nuclear or conventional weapons to targets completely obscured by weather or darkness, and the FA-18 Hornet, an attack fighter with nine external weapon stations and a maximum level speed of Mach 1.8.

Six days a week - the airfield closes Saturday - you can see the red-nosed T-45s soaring through the skies near Kingsville. Student aviators fly no more than two hops a day, between dawn and midnight Monday through Thursday, and until after dark on Fridays. On Sundays, aviators often return from extended-leg instrument training trips, or cross-country flights.

Student aviator Drake, who first flew the T-45 in March, says he felt eight years behind the high-powered jet. In aviation lingo, that means the aircraft was in charge instead of him - which only made him more eager to continue training. "It would be like getting into a dragster for the first time. It takes you for a ride instead of you taking it for a ride," said Drake, a Marine. "You're not limited by the aircraft. You're limited by the pilot."

Drake first became enamored with aviation when he was a youngster attending air shows. "I just couldn't see myself doing anything else," he said. "I couldn't picture myself going to an office from 8 to 5, when I could be out flying jets off a carrier."

Drake, who is scheduled to receive his wings Feb. 16, is one of 120 to 130 naval aviators who will be winged at NAS Kingsville this year. Two-thirds are Navy pilots, and the others are Marine Corps. By graduation time - when naval aviators get their coveted "wings of gold" - students will have completed 80 hours of academics, 115 hours learning about flight procedures, 97 hours in the simulator and 175 hours in the air.

What all the aviators, from students and instructors to commanders, share is a love of flying. They compare it to roller-coaster rides and driving race cars, resorting to metaphors to describe the inexplicable sensation of flying a jet.

"It's a thrilling job. It's fun. The machines that you get to fly are the best in the world," said Russel, a 17-year veteran naval aviator. "You get a lot of job satisfaction from flying - from mastering the machine, from flying air combat maneuvers, from dropping bombs, from flying in formation ... It's always a challenge. You're always learning something."

Although students are judged against one another, they quickly learn to work together - flying in formation with another jet a few feet away requires trust and cooperation. "Performance counts for everything," Palmer said. "But it's not at all a back-stabbing kind of environment. They all help each other, too, especially classmates."

last August's midair collision that left one student dead.

Nationwide, 146 Navy pilots have died in non-combat aviation accidents since 1990. "They used to have more crashes here than you could count," Wolfard said. "A skipper of mine told me that at every carrier qualification, you were lucky to lose two guys. You always lost one."

Before each flight, aviators participate in a briefing - a pre-flight rundown that details everything from takeoff and landing times to the flight plan, weather conditions and emergency procedures. As part of their training, students learn how to exit rapidly from the aircraft, how to eject in the case of an emergency, and how to deal with crises such as engine failure, low oil pressure, loss of hydraulics and stalls.

"If you plan for bad things to happen prior to them happening, it's not so overwhelming," Wolfard said. "You've got to have 15,000 to 20,000 things go right every time you launch -

As a man who has married for more than 40 years, I think it would qualify as a public service for me to pass along a little-known tip to young men just beginning wedded bliss. Since this could be the first in a series, I will entitle this one: "Beware of $9.95 Earrings."

This seemingly innocent incident began when one of my wife's friends spotted some gaudy earrings that she thought Lavor just had to have. It was a nice gesture of friendship and even I admitted they were "cute."

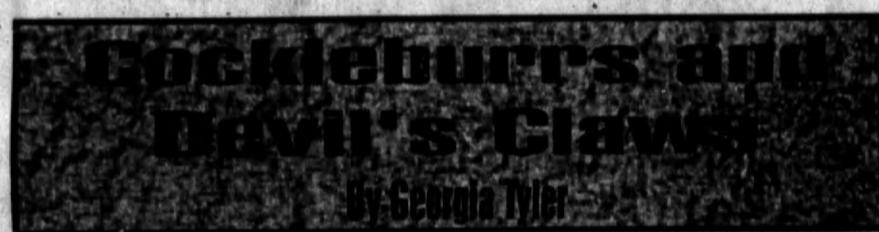

However, as a guy who's been to more than one rodeo, I must caution the inexperienced hobbies that dynamite does, indeed, come in small packages. I am not alone in this knowledge, but not everyone will warn you of the consequences.

The problem, guys, is that my wife didn't have a thing in the closet that would "go" with those earrings! And, naturally, she had to wear the earrings to show her friend how much she liked them.

These cute little accessories needed a matching dress, of course, and a new pair of shoes—with just the right color to match the unique hue in the earrings.

By now, guys, you may see where we're going with this story. Those $9.95 earrings came as a gift, but they wound up costing $209.95!

(Note to Lavor: Don't take this personal. I think the new outfit looks great!)

Driving through that vast expanse of real estate known as West Texas is not an eye-feast, as most people know. But, there are few places in this world that have nothing at all to recommend them.

That part of West Texas known as the Permian Basin, at first glance, would seem to contradict that statement. On the surface, a hard, rocky landscape dotted with scrub mesquite and other desert-type flora hardly qualifies as a beauty spot.

But, after years of ranching—and there were some sizeable ranching fortunes made—as the only viable economic factor, a miracle occurred.

For the good Lord doesn't take everything and leave nothing. In this case, petroleum was pooled in some quantity under the surface. Another, a giant ocean of oil was just waiting for some enterprising soul to tap.

Just like the gold rush to California, the oil rush to West Texas attracted the good and the bad, the quick buck artists and the stay for the run guys. Some made lots of money. Some lost their shirts and took the shirts off their friends' backs.

By the time, I moved to Midland, the big boom had settled into a fairly solid business. At least, that's what everyone thought.

In the '50s and '60s, the skyscrapers of Midland gave the city a real metropolitan air and were the basis for the town's sobriquet, "The Tall City."

Through those years, the oil business fluctuated like a bouncing ball and the economy of Midland moved in concert. A little boom brought out developers and before you knew it, there was a glut of houses on the market.

About the time the glut would abate, another little boom came along and the cycle began again.

Midland offered, despite the population in those days of only about 70,000, a microcosm of life in a big city. There was a community theatre that had played in Europe. There was a symphony orchestra jointly sponsored by Midland and Odessa.

There was a young, well-educated population, with an above average income in the state and nation. And, we lived in what amounted to a cocoon.

But the hackles of the population were brought to an upright position in 1960 when a young presidential candidate from Boston made noises about reducing the depletion allowance given oil producers. How dare he threaten the lifeblood of the Permian Basin.

The depletion allowance was criticized by those who had no oil as a sop to the rich, who already had too much.

To counter the bad publicity surrounding JFK's stand on the depletion allowance, the candidate's running mate, LBJ, who supported the oil business, sent his wife and some of the Kennedy family women on airplane whistle-stop tours in West Texas.

At a press conference in Midland, a member of the Fourth Estate tried to pin down the Kennedy clan about JFK's plan for the depletion allowance.

That wily Lady Bird didn't give the Kennedy women time to reply. She stepped quickly to the microphone and insisted that "My husband and Mr. Sam have always taken care of the oil business."

Unconvinced, the oilmen looked further for assurances that their domain was not going to be wrecked.

Just days before the election, the Democrats sent a really big gun to Midland. Although recovering from the birth of my second child a week earlier, I accepted an assignment from the Fort Worth Star-Telegram to cover the visit of Sam Rayburn, speaker of the House, to Midland.

Talking to organizers of the event, I learned that Mr. Sam would address a big Democratic audience at a banquet and he would be feted at a reception, prior to the banquet, at the Petroleum Club.

This was my introduction to what

I consider bi-partisan politics. "Who's giving the reception," I asked the Democratic chairman.

"Please don't embarrass him by printing it, but I'll tell you," he replied quietly.

"Some Republican oilmen are picking up the tab."

Gingrich 'reading list' is well known in D.C.

By NITA LEVYELD

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Maybe it's the hard-to-shed habit of a former history professor. Maybe it's just enthusiasm. Or maybe Newt Gingrich thinks if he can get people to read all the books he reads, he can get them to think like him, too.

Whatever the reason, every time the new House Speaker gives a speech these days, he suggests books for his listeners to read. Day by day, the Gingrich reading list is growing, and becoming more eclectic.

For the lover of history, there's James Flexner's biography of George Washington, "Washington: The Indispensable Man."

Worried about welfare reform? Try Marvin Olasky's "The Tragedy of American Compassion."

For those who want to follow the new speaker into the future he talks about with such relish, there's the quick-read version of futurist Alvin Toffler's "The Third Wave." Called "Creating A New Civilization: The Politics of the Third Wave," it's written by Toffler and his wife Heidi, with an introduction by Gingrich.

Gingrich often peppers rambling speeches about political life and the cyberspace future with the titles of books he's reading or has read. He has plugged Olasky repeatedly, for instance - most notably on the House floor, in his acceptance speech after being elected speaker.

Sometimes, Gingrich makes it clear he is virtually assigning the books to lawmakers and those on congressional staffs who wish to succeed under his rule.

That's what happened three days after the election, when he gave his first speech as speaker-to-be before the Washington Research Group.

Describing himself as a "conservative futurist," he mentioned two books by Toffler - "The Third Wave" and "Future Shock."

In just about the next breath, he referred to the "Federalist" papers as "I believe the most powerful single doctrine for the leadership of human beings and for their opportunity to pursue happiness." He also threw in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

And then he began listing a host of other books that he would "recommend to all the congressional staffs" - including management guru Peter Drucker's "The Effective Executive," the thinking of quality-control expert W. Edwards Deming and the abbreviated Toffler book.

The reading list is so well known in Washington that Troyer bookstore, a few blocks from the Capitol, has a "Newt's Reading List" sign on the counter, with piles of the books he keeps mentioning behind it.

Lobbyists and congressional staffers have been steadily buying the titles, workers say.

New House rules a start in direction term limits seeks

By WALTER R. MEARS

AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) - Whatever happens in the campaign to limit congressional terms, its advocates already have gained one victory: the six-year rule Republicans set for their new House committee chairman.

By GOP account, that limit is already changing ways and attitudes at the Capitol. There's less point in battling for turf, staffers and offices when being a chairman can't be a career.

Instead, one Republican said, the new crop of chairmen should be focused on policies and legislation they can reasonably expect to accomplish within a span of three Congresses. Then, under these rules, they're out.

But it will take time and experience to tell whether those attitudes hold.

There's no such ceiling in the Senate; there, seniority rules.

The House rule is a start in the direction that term-limits campaigners have been seeking. Their movement was boosted by the voter appetite for change in an institution that gets low rankings in every poll on job performance and confidence.

Every state that has voted on term limits has adopted them - 22 since 1992 and another likely to join this year.

The Supreme Court is to rule, probably by June, on whether states have the authority to set tenure as a condition for service in Congress.

One argument for the limits is that the lure of long-term power is a chronic problem in Congress.

As the House limit on committee chairmen was being adopted, Rep. John Lindner, a second-term Republican from Georgia, said without it, power had become too concentrated and entrenched - a handful of Democratic leaders dictating the agenda and striving "to protect committee turf or consolidate power."

The broader campaign is for limits on everybody in Congress, not only on chairmanships. The constitutional amendment would take two-thirds votes, 290 in the House, and that will be hard to get, since there are Republicans who will oppose the measure. Sponsors would need substantial support among Democrats, more than it now appears they can get.

And it would take 67 votes to win in the Senate and send the amendment to the states.

According to the Term Limits Legal Institute, leaders of Congress and its committees have served an average of 28 years, compared with 10 for rank and file members of the House. What they want is not only turnover - there's been plenty in the last two elections - but a change in outlook about serving in Congress.

"Instead of changing our procedures, term limits will change the way we think," said Sen. Hank Brown, R-Colo., introducing a constitutional amendment on Tuesday to set 12-year ceilings for both senators and House members. "... Politicians would no longer view Congress as a lifetime career."

Despite the upheaval that put Republicans in control of Congress, the re-election rate for incumbents on Nov. 8 was over 91 percent, in line with the average of the past decade. Brown, incidentally, is limiting his own terms. After 10 years in the House and one term in the Senate, he does not intend to seek re-election in 1996.

A term limit amendment is part of the House Republican Contract with America, promising action by mid-April. They will offer two versions, one that would set a 12-year ceiling for all of Congress, another that would hold House members to three terms, or six years.

Speaker Newt Gingrich favors the higher limit, which leaders of the movement who want six years to be tops in the House. That is the limit set by 15 of the states that have adopted them. Gingrich is in his 17th year in the House, but has said the issue shouldn't be judged on the basis of individual tenure while no such ceilings have been in place.

He is subject to an eight-year limit as speaker, but that may prove to be largely symbolic. Only four speakers ever have held the post that long or longer in consecutive Congresses.

Flat tax being talked

One of the major changes scheduled for discussion in the new Congress is the flat income tax. Sponsored by Rep. Dick Armey, the reporting requirements would be greatly reduced and all itemized deductions, tax credits, exemptions and other tax breaks eliminated on individual returns.

On this simplified return, there would be only three categories of personal allowances: A deduction of $26,200 for married couples filing jointly; $13,100 for single taxpayers; and $17,200 for single head of household. Each dependent would qualify for a $5,300 deduction from income.

After those exemptions are deducted from income from wages, salaries and pensions, the remaining income would be taxed at a proposed flat rate of 17 percent. That rate would apply no matter the amount of income.

As a test, the proposed income tax form is reprinted below. Time yourself and see if it takes less than one minute to complete. Then compare the amount of income tax you paid last year with the new system. In most cases, it should be about the same, or less.

San Antonio's River Walk is star attraction

Tourists come to city to see Alamo, leave talking about Paseo del Rio

By KELLEY SHANNON
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO (AP) - It rivals the Alamo as San Antonio's trademark.

The River Walk, or Paseo del Rio, with its cozy cafes beside a tree-lined, slow-moving stream, have charmed millions who enjoy indulging in Mexican food, drink and music while surrounded by history.

It only figured the River Walk would get discovered.

Really discovered, that is.

Several new big-name and international establishments highlighted by the world famous Hard Rock Cafe - are opening along a popular downtown stretch of the San Antonio River.

Business leaders praise the development. Some downtown residents say they're also caught up in the excitement but worry about what may become of the River Walk.

"To me it's looking more and more and sounding more and more like Bourbon Street in New Orleans," said Jim Mathis, who lives in Riverside Apartments across from the new Hard Rock Cafe complex.

The River Walk is visited by virtually all the city's estimated 12 million annual visitors, said Sharon Eason, visitor marketing director for the San Antonio Convention and Visitors Bureau.

"People come here to visit the Alamo, but they leave remembering the River Walk," Ms. Eason said. "It really is sort of the pulse or the heartbeat of the city."

The River Walk got its start in the late 1920s, when Robert H.H. Hugman came up with a fanciful plan for making the river a park-like spot amid downtown's hubbub.

Today, a historic commission oversees River Walk construction in an effort to maintain the traditional mood of the place.

Hotels, apartment buildings and shops line the river. So do trendy bars and eateries, and that's where the new businesses come in.

The Hard Rock Cafe, with its rock'n'roll memorabilia and occasional live music, anchors the new 50,000-square-foot South Bank development.

Also at South Bank will be the County Line barbecue restaurant; Paesano's Italian restaurant; Fat Tuesday's daiquiri bar; Texas Tamale, a Mexican deli; Howl at the Moon piano bar; and Starbucks Coffee Co.

Hard Rock already is open and plans a grand opening Jan. 25. This is the 29th Hard Rock worldwide, and the ninth in the United States.

"We look for markets where there are exciting and interesting things happening - culturally unique," said Art Levitt III, president and chief executive officer of Hard Rock Cafe International Inc.

The local Hard Rock has a red brick and limestone exterior, Mexican tile floors and a patio overlooking the river. Its big globe and part of a 1959 Cadillac jut out toward the street, not the river.

"I think it's important to be sensitive to the community and be sensitive to what the River Walk is all about," Levitt said. "We want to give a little bit of a flavor for the place that we're in. Otherwise, we might as well be anywhere."

Just around a river bend is Presidio Plaza, a development that will include Planet Hollywood when it opens in 1996.

At another spot, at the base of the Hyatt Regency Hotel, is a new venture by Mad Dog's of Hong Kong.

With its British food, drink, live music and decor, the English-style pub opening this week will bring to the River Walk something it hasn't had before, its managers promise.

"Because we are Brits, it's an authentic British pub," said general manager Graham McIntosh.

Managing director Laura McAllister was persuaded by local businessman B.K. Johnson to make San Antonio her first United States location. The chain was looking to expand beyond Hong Kong because of uncertainty in the business community over the Chinese takeover of the colony in 1997.

crowded. He advocates "intelligently managed growth."

The Paseo del Rio Association, for example, took an early stand against casino gambling on the river, should it be legalized in Texas.

But some shades of New Orleans may already be here.

Late-night noise from river establishments and new construction can be annoying, said Mathis. But he said San Antonio has a fairly good noise ordinance and acknowledged noise is part of inner-city life.

"We love to see the crowds," Mathis said. "That's part of the downtown scene."

Mathis wants the Downtown Residents Association to work with River Walk managers to balance business interests with residential interests.

"I think that we can coexist," he said.

Retired Lt. Cmdr. Robert Fischer, a former aviator who teaches students on the computer simulator, said the public doesn't realize the labor involved in becoming a naval aviator. "They should try to fathom the amount of effort that each individual pilot has expended in the acquisition of getting his designation as a naval aviator," Fischer said. "It is a lot of work."

The cardinal sin for an aspiring aviator - other than violating military policy against drug abuse and sexual harassment - is "giving less than 100 percent of his effort," Palmer said. "And we've never seen that," he added. "They're all so motivated by the time they get this far."

Wolfard said the most gratifying part of being an instructor pilot is seeing his hard-working students receive their wings. "It's like a weight off their backs. They're just exhilarated that they have made it through the program. And it's not an easy program. We're not there to make it an easy program," Wolfard said. "The bottom line is, our job is to train warriors. And as pretty as we try to make it, that's what it is."

Pampa, the perennial champion of District 1-4A, defended its home turf and its reputation with an 82-57 win over Hereford Friday night in Pampa.

Scoring runs by the lightning-quick Harvesters and 39 points from guard Rayford Young proved too much for the Herd, which came in with a 4-0 district record.

The Harvesters moved a half-game ahead of Hereford in the standings at 5-1 (19-6 overall). The Herd fell to 4-1 and 15-7 overall.

"Obviously we're disappointed. We put a lot of effort into it," Hereford coach Randy Dean said. "But I'm proud of our players for the way they approached the game and the effort they put into it. I think we ought to know now that we can play at this level because of the way the first half went. The bottom line is all of it is we're still tied for first place."

Pampa, with its open date coming up Tuesday, is technically a half-game ahead of Hereford. Dean doesn't count that, though.

"You don't play half-games in basketball," he said.

Hereford won the first game of Friday's varsity doubleheader, as the Lady Whitefaces claimed a 63-45 win over Pampa.

In the boys' game, Hereford stayed with Pampa through the first quarter, but the Harvesters used their suffocating press to roll off 13 straight points in the second quarter, taking a 27-13 lead. Young scored the final seven points of that run, capping it with a three-pointer.

Hereford answered with a 6-0 run of its own and fought back to within 34-27 at the end of the first half. Pampa opened the second half with a 7-0 run, capped by three free throws by Young.

Hereford never put together another run, as Pampa scored efficiently from a spread offense. Pampa players spread the floor, dribbling quietly outside for several seconds, then one would knife down the lane and pass to a cutting player for a layup.

"We got into the kind of game you can't play against them, and that's having the floor spread and having to chase them around," Dean said.

Alumni baseball game planned

Hereford baseball coach Pete Rodriguez wants to organize an alumni game pitting past players against this year's Herd team.

The game will be played Feb. 11, a Saturday, at 2 p.m.

Rodriguez wants interested graduated lettermen to call the field house at 363-7626, or call him at 364-4427.

Slugger Eddie Mathews played for the Braves in Boston, Milwaukee and Atlanta.

The Chicago Bears won nine straight opening season games until losing to the Giants, 26-20, in 1993.

Van Exel's buzzer-beater lifts Lakers over Celtics

By The Associated Press

They played so many great games at the old building, it was only fitting that the final meeting between the Los Angeles Lakers and Celtics at Boston Garden was decided at the buzzer.

Nick Van Exel was the hero Friday night, making a desperation 3-pointer that lifted Los Angeles over Boston, 120-118.

"L.A., Boston, last game at the Garden," Van Exel said. "It wasn't for a championship. But having the last game come down to the last second will make fans remember this game for a long, long time."

The Celtics finished with a 94-45 edge over the Los Angeles and Minneapolis Lakers at Boston Garden, which will be closed at the end of the season. Next season, they will play at the new Shawmut Center.

"I love it here. It's dirty, and crusty, but it's basketball," Lakers coach Del Harris said.

Dino Radja had 21 points and 12 rebounds for Boston. His basket with 2.4 seconds left gave the Celtics a 118-117 lead, and revived the "Beat L.A." chants that rattled through the Garden during the glory days of the Boston-Lakers rivalry.

Rockets 106, Pistons 96
Hakeem Olajuwon had 34 points and 12 rebounds as Houston ended its season-high three-game losing streak with a victory at Detroit.

Sam Cassell added 22 points for the Rockets. Terry Mills had 33 points as Detroit lost for the 12th time in 14 games.

Spurs 115, Heat 114

David Robinson made two free throws with 5.5 seconds left in overtime and blocked a shot just before the final buzzer at Miami.

Robinson finished with 26 points, 11 rebounds and nine assists for San Antonio. He also blocked six shots, including a 15-foot jumper by Khalid Reeves as time ran down.

Knicks 106, Mavericks 93

Patrick Ewing scored a season-high 36 points and had 12 rebounds as New York won its sixth

"They held the ball with a lot of patience, but it wasn't really a delay. They spread us out and gave themselves driving lanes."

Hereford did cut the Pampa lead to 67-51 on a Michael Brown three-pointer with just more than three minutes left, but Pampa reeled off 10 straight points to bump the lead to its highest point at 77-51.

Hereford ended the first quarter trailing only 14-11 despite an 8-0 run by Pampa. The Herd handled Pampa's press well in the first quarter, and for most of the game.

"We came out and did a lot of the things we talked about," Dean said. "In the first quarter, we played good defense and we contained them pretty well. We attacked the press well and got good looks at the basket early. You really couldn't ask for more than what we had at the end of the first quarter—or at the end of the half."

Hereford is tied with Randall (4-1, 15-10 overall), which comes to Hereford Tuesday to close the first half of District 1-4A double round-robin play.

"We really appreciate the crowd that followed us over here (Pampa)," Dean said. "They gave the players a big lift, and we need them again Tuesday night."

The Hereford girls pulled away from a 13-13 tie after one quarter, and Pampa never really threatened. Hereford built a 29-20 lead in the second quarter, but Pampa closed the half with a 6-0 run.

Hereford took control in the third quarter, scoring the first eight points and outscoring Pampa 18-5 in the period for a 47-29 lead.

"In the second quarter, we switched to a zone/half-court trap with a lot of pressure out front," Hereford coach Eddie Fortenberry said. "That kept us from fouling, and we got a little more flow to the game."

"The third quarter was our best quarter by far. We outscored them 18-5. Our execution in the third quarter was great. We moved the basketball well and we got some pretty easy shots. We got a lot of confidence at the half. We got a little flow going, and it carried over."

The slow start in the first quarter was partially attributable to the loss of freshman starter Julie Rampley, who tore ligaments in her right ankle in practice Thursday. Despite how severe that sounds, Fortenberry said she may "possibly" play Tuesday against Randall.

Chargers' TE Pupunu puts Tonga on map

By BERNIE WILSON

AP Sports Writer

SAN DIEGO (AP) - If Alfred Pupunu of the San Diego Chargers catches a touchdown pass against the San Francisco 49ers in the Super Bowl, he'll bring a taste of Tonga to the NFL's big game.

Pupunu is one of San Diego's young, unsung heroes who have brought the Chargers to their first Super Bowl. Normally he can be found blocking in San Diego's power running game. But he's got a nice touch as a receiver, too, and occasionally gets to display his unique end-zone celebration.

Pittsburgh Steelers fans might still be wondering what Pupunu was pretending to do after catching a 43-yard touchdown pass from Stan Humphries that began the Chargers' comeback for a 17-13 win in Sunday's AFC championship game.

It's simple. Pupunu, who was born in Tonga in the South Pacific, twists at the top of the football and acts like he's taking a swig. Since it was a big game, he added a little jig he calls the Bolt Dance.

If he were in Tonga, he'd actually be opening a coconut shell and taking a drink of kava juice (Bolt Dance not included).

"All South Pacific Islanders do it. It's like a ritual type deal," Pupunu said. "It's something special. It's a culture thing, know what I'm saying?"

As an NFL thing, it means that Pupunu has scored.

Pupunu's first professional end-zone celebration was in the season opener at Denver, after catching a 22-yard TD pass from Humphries that started a rally from a 17-0 deficit.

"I didn't know what the heck he was doing, opening a can of beer, or whatever," said offensive coordinator Ralph Friedgen. "I really don't care as long as he gets in the end zone. He's really a good guy, who's just coming into his own."

At Pittsburgh, Pupunu got wide open when the Steelers' secondary bit hard on play-action.

"We call that the Tonga pass," Friedgen said.

Pupunu, a third-year pro who is 6-foot-2, 265 pounds, said he will be the first Tongan to play in the Super Bowl.

"My uncle did some research. There's not very many of us in the league, you know. Vai Sikahema just retired."

His relatives back home might get to see the Super Bowl two weeks later, once someone in the States sends them a videotape.

"I don't know if they have power out there yet, to tell you the truth," he said. "I know they have a VCR. No, they don't have live TV."

Although he was born in Tonga, he and his family moved to the United States when he was only 2 months old.

He grew up in Utah, and first did his end zone ritual at Dixie Junior College in Utah. As a senior at Weber State, he was a Division 1-AA All-American after setting school and Big Sky records with 93 catches for 1,204 yards and 12 touchdowns.

He signed as a rookie free agent by Kansas City in 1992, but was waived at the end of training camp and picked up by the Chargers.

The highlight of his rookie season was when Junior Seau, a Samoan, picked him up at the airport. He then plunged into the anonymity that usually comes with being a Chargers tight end or H-back (a hybrid tight end/fullback).

He didn't catch a pass his rookie season. He did, however, throw the "wham" block that sprang Marion Butts on a 54-yard TD run in a 17-0 playoff win over the Chiefs.

A "wham" block is against a down lineman, usually from motion.

"Those 300-pounders, they don't like to be whammed, and are really in a bad mood when you get there," Friedgen said.

"He does all those dirty jobs nobody wants to do. People might not realize how important they are, but we as coaches know," Friedgen said.

Pupunu missed three games with foot and knee injuries and saw limited duty in others, a factor in San Diego's midseason slump.

He wasn't at full strength when the 49ers routed the Chargers 38-15 in San Diego on Dec. 11.

"When we're all healthy, it's unbelievable," Pupunu said. "This team can do a lot. We don't get any credit because we're a lot of no-name guys but we go out there and do our jobs."

Pupunu caught 21 passes for 214 yards and two touchdowns in the regular season. Against Pittsburgh, he had four catches for 76 yards.

Pupunu would love to stage his end-zone celebration against the 49ers.

"It's a possibility," he said. "But I don't think they'll leave me wide open as Pittsburgh did."

49ers' Harris returns after 2 years

By DENNIS GEORGATOS

AP Sports Writer

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) - Tim Harris has cooked up quite a comeback story.

It goes something like this: Pass rush specialist turned seaside restaurant co-owner takes daily beach runs on the off chance a team decides he can still play. After missing most of two seasons, he gets called by the San Francisco 49ers, plays in the last five games, helps team get to the Super Bowl.

"I guess it's pretty much unbelievable," said Harris, a ninth-year pro who has strengthened the 49ers' outside pass rush.

He has four sacks in two playoff games, two of Troy Aikman during the fourth quarter of San Francisco's 38-28 victory over Dallas in last Sunday's NFC championship. The 49ers head to Miami for a Jan. 29 meeting with the San Diego Chargers in the Super Bowl.

"Tim played with us before and one year (1992) had 17 sacks," said San Francisco coach George Seifert, who convinced 49ers management to sign Harris in November for the regular-season stretch run.

"When he was on the field, he was very productive and hard working," Seifert said. "He came back to us handling himself the same way."

Harris first came to San Francisco in a 1991 trade with Green Bay, which dealt him to resolve a contract dispute. The next year, he re-established himself as a pass-rushing force with 17 sacks, two shy of the league lead.

But the 49ers, unhappy with a drunken driving arrest and wary of substance abuse problems despite his stay in a rehab center, allowed Harris to leave as a free agent. He signed with Philadelphia but played only four games in 1993 because of an infected elbow that required three operations.

Released before the start of this season, Harris returned home to Fremont, Calif., and waited for a call from another team. None came, so he increased his workload at Larry's Surf and Turf restaurant. During the days, he'd run on the beach and at night he'd help run the restaurant, which he operates with partner Larry Silva in the beach town of Capitola.

"I was just there," said Harris, who continues his restaurant chores when not readying for his first Super Bowl. "I go back and forth a lot. I was giving Larry some more ideas for appetizers to make."

Harris prepares some of the specialty offerings on the menu.

"I make sauce for the buffalo wings," he said. "It's real hot. You've got to try some. I make the sauce for the barbecue ribs, too. I learned to cook from my mom. They're my mom's recipes."

While the restaurant was going well, Harris' hopes of resuming his playing career began fading. With little more than a month left in the regular season, he still hadn't found a football job.

"After week No. 12 and no one had called, I pretty much said goodbye to football," Harris said. "My agent had called both the expansion teams and they weren't interested. So, I thought, 'Wow, if I can't even get on one of the new teams, that's really bad.'

That was just about the time Seifert went to club president Carmen Policy and broached the idea of re-signing Harris. The 49ers were getting good push up the middle from defensive tackles Dana Stubblefield and Bryant Young but their outside pass rush had been ineffective since the injury-caused loss of Richard Dent in the second week of the season.

"George came into my office, asked me to close the door and he says, 'All right. Don't start laughing out loud. Don't call Eddie (DeBartolo) right away. What about Tim Harris?'" Policy said. "He never gave up on the guy."

Harris was signed Nov. 22 to a contract paying him $10,000 a game and $5,000 for each regular season sack. On his first play of the year, Harris unleashed a dynamic rush, forcing an incompleteness when he struck Jim Everett's arm during a 35-14 win at New Orleans on Nov. 28. On his third play, Harris sacked Everett and celebrated by unholstering imaginary six-shooters.

Now Harris is not only thinking about getting a Super Bowl ring but of delaying full-time restaurant duties for another season of football. He said he would like to return to San Francisco.

"But hopefully, they'll pay me more," he said.

Farm and Ranch

Laney to address corn producers

Survival in 1990s is theme of annual meeting

"Can Corn Farmers Survive in the '90s?" That's the theme of the 22nd Annual Meeting of the Texas Corn Growers Association, Jan. 27, in Dimmitt. It will be held in the Castro County Expo Building, 403 S.E. 4th. Registration starts at 8 a.m., with the program scheduled to begin at 9 a.m.

The keynote speaker will be Texas House Speaker Pete Laney of Hale Center. Other speakers will include Harold Bob Bennett, executive director of the state ASCS; Ray Joe Riley, state ASCS board chairman; George Ellis, state Farmers Home Administration; and Carl King, TCGA president.

The meeting is geared to address many issues which will impact Texas corn farmers. The USDA's reorganization, new catastrophic crop insurance and the 1995 Farm Bill will be discussed along with various projects funded by the statewide corn checkoff program.

State issues such as water, environmental regulations, private property rights and the Homestead Act are likely to be discussed by Laney. He will be on the program following a two panel discussion on national farm issues.

Following a free lunch, the meeting will shift to reports on corn production and insect control.

The afternoon speaker will be Dr. Brent Bean, area agronomist for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Amarillo. He will examine "short season corn" production.

Dr. Tom Archer, entomologist for the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station in Lubbock, will discuss pest management strategies for white and corn earworm infestations.

Worker Protection Standards issued by the Environmental Protection Agency will be discussed by James Esty of the Texas Department of Agriculture in Austin.

WPS training will be administered to growers and their employees, both in English and Spanish.

AFB policy adopted by narrow margin

ST. LOUIS - American Farm Bureau Federation delegates narrowly adopted a farm program policy Jan. 11, calling for a 1995 Farm Bill that will continue to move the U.S. toward a market oriented, export competitive agriculture.

Texas Farm Bureau President Bob Stallman's comments regarding the new Republican controlled Congress helped defeat an amendment that would have prohibited farmers from receiving deficiency payments on non-program crops grown on flexible base acres.

The amendment was proposed by the South Carolina Farm Bureau, and would not have been much different from existing policy.

U.S. House Agriculture chairman, Pat Roberts of Kansas spoke at the Farm bureau convention on Tuesday and was quoted by Stallman as having said that the status quo does not live in Washington any more.

In adopting the farm program

Eric Brast joins staff of TFCA

Eric Brast has joined the Texas Cattle Feeders Association in Amarillo as a market analyst, according to Richard McDonald, TCFA executive vice president.

Brast comes to TCFA from Koch Industries in Wichita, Kan., where he worked as a market analyst in the company's cattle and grain trading division. At TCFA, he will be responsible for helping cattle feeders stay up to date on the fed cattle market in Cattle Feeding Country of Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico.

Brast was graduated from the University of Texas with a bachelor's degree in business management and from Texas A&M University with master's of agriculture degree in feedlot management.

resolution, delegates stated:

American farmers need target price protection to offset limited access to world markets because of existing trade barriers and internal farm policies in foreign countries.

There should be no modifications in the farm program that would interfere with the market oriented goals of competitive loan rates, voluntary stock reduction programs and income supplement as farmers move toward a market oriented agriculture.

Farm program payment eligibility should not be tied to a means test.

The Commodity Credit Corporation should not be allowed to exempt itself from the federal rule making and public comment procedures.

Tenants or land owners are entitled to benefits of federal legislation on any farm that is in compliance with the provisions of the farm program, regardless of the status of their other farms.

Participation in any federal or state water projects shall not adversely affect a grower's participation in any USDA farm program.

There should be no environmental mandates for participation in the federal farm program.

The current system of commodity specific crop acreage bases should remain intact. Base acreage should be determined on a five-year moving average of planted or considered planted acres. There should be a conversion to a "whole farm" base or similar system which consolidates all program and allowed non-program crops. These crops would include oilseeds (soybeans, sunflower, safflower, canola, sesame, castor beans and guar). Some experimental and industrial crops would be allowed under the Farm Bureau plan.

Producers should be allowed to plant any combination of program and permitted non-program crops on whole farm bases.

AFBF delegates said they want proven yields used in calculating deficiency payments and target prices maintained at the current levels.

Agriculture Briefs

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Agriculture Department, based on a sampling in Iowa, projects no widespread mycotoxin contamination of the nation's 1994 corn crop.

Mycotoxins, produced by molds or fungi, can sicken animals that eat feed from contaminated crops.

USDA conducted a pilot study of last year's corn crop in Iowa, the nation's largest corn producer. Mycotoxin results in Iowa would serve as an indicator for the rest of the Midwestern grain crop.

"Our Iowa study shows that its corn crop is free from widespread mycotoxin contamination that can cause potential animal health problems," said Lonnie King, acting administrator for USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

"The success of this study opens opportunities for mycotoxin surveillance of feed grains on a larger scale," King said.

The sampling found "an extremely low incidence of significant levels of mycotoxins," the USDA said.

It detected a mycotoxin called fumonisin in one sample at levels high enough to damage the liver and brain of horses. Vomitoxin, which can decrease feed intake in swine, was detected at high levels in two samples, USDA said.

WASHINGTON (AP) - A milk promotion group has launched a star-studded campaign to put to rest some popular misconceptions about milk.

In the advertisements that are to debut next month in national magazines, Christie Brinkley, Lauren Bacall and Joan Rivers, among other stars, sport milk mustaches and offer testimonials about milk's taste and nutritional value.

The National Fluid Milk Processor Promotion Board developed the campaign to curtail a 30-year decline in milk consumption - at least part of which may be due to misconceptions about the product.

Among them, the board says, are that Americans think that milk loses its nutrients when fat is removed, that milk is just for kids and that supplements are the best source of calcium.

That's right, if you are planting white food corn, it's time to take notice on what AgriPro AP 728W can do for you.

Environment aide has ag experience

Agriculture secured another key post in Gov. George W. Bush's administration with the naming of Andy Barrett to head his environmental policy area, it was reported this week by the Texas Agricultural Cooperative Council in Austin.

Barrett, a partner in the McGinnis, Lockridge and Kilgore law firm in Austin, is the nephew of Frank Barrett and Scat Russell of Hereford. Rusty, Andy's brother, operates a Gaines County farm operation.

Rusty is associated with his uncles, Stan and Frank, and his cousin, Bruce, who farm potatoes and raise cattle in the Hereford, Springlake, Earth and Muleshoe areas.

Andy's mother, the former Mary Ruth Russell, and his late father, Fred, owned and operated a potato farm in Gaines County near Seminole since the mid-1950s. Barrett graduated from SMU and earned his law degree at the University of Texas in 1985.

Barrett served as a staff attorney for the Texas Water Commission for three years, 1986-89. He also spent a year in environmental enforcement with the U.S. Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., before joining the MLK law firm.

"Having grown up on a farm, I am very aware of the importance of agriculture in this state," said Barrett. "Governor Bush and I are very sensitive to the impact environmental regulations have had on the agriculture community. Working with Ag Commissioner Rick Perry, we will do what we can to further agribusiness in this state."

GRAPEVINE, Texas (AP) - Fans trying to talk with Garth Brooks overloaded telephone lines in two Dallas-Fort Worth suburbs for two hours.

Callers in Grapevine and part of Irving weren't able to get a dial tone Wednesday during a call-in promotion for Brooks' TV special later that night.

"It's pretty darn irresponsible to take a system and allow it to be abused like that when somebody's life could be in danger," City Manager Trent Petty said.

Grapevine's top cop took it in stride.

Meetings to provide Arkansas Shiner forum

There will be two opportunities to discuss the proposed listing of the Arkansas River Shiner as an endangered species.

Area residents will have an opportunity to voice their opinion during a public meeting from 7 to 10 p.m., Wednesday, at the Texas A&M Regional Research and Extension Center Auditorium located at 6500 Amarillo Boulevard West in Amarillo.

Prior to the public meeting, a news conference by 87th district State Representative David Swinford of Dumas, is scheduled for 1 p.m., in the North Meeting Hall at the Amarillo Civic Center.

The proposed listing of the Arkansas River Shiner as an endangered species could have a tremendous impact upon the use of surface and ground water in the High Plains region. Representative Swinford and other Panhandle legislators are expected to voice their opposition to the listing during this news conference.

After the news conference, a hearing will be held to allow the legislators in attendance to hear comments regarding the proposed listing from interested parties in the

Bumper crop lowers prices

COLLEGE STATION--Consumers will be able to warm up to January food prices during cold winter weather. Ideal growing conditions in 1994 have led to bumper crops.

"An abundant supply of feed grains, fruits and vegetables has led to a slow growth in food prices--about 3 percent," said Dr. Richard Edwards, a food marketing specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

A primary factor that has kept average food prices down during the past years is the low price of red meat and poultry, he said. Despite high feed prices due to the floods in the Midwest during 1993, prices begin declining last spring as producers of beef and pork continued to expand herds in excess of the demand for their product.

Additional pressure is being put on red meat prices through a large expansion of "corporate hog farms," he said. Several large corporations began expansion of their hog production operations this past year when outlook for profits seemed favorable. This additional production capacity will force beef prices to remain competitive during the first quarter. So, consumers can expect meat prices to remain low throughout the year because of the record harvest of feed grains and the jump in production of pork.

Agriculture Briefs

The Texas Department of Agriculture recently outlined requirements for applicators using restricted and limited pesticides.

Applicators need to be aware that: The temporary certified applicators' category has been eliminated. To keep buying and using restricted and limited pesticides, you must now obtain a private applicator license.

Commercial and noncommercial licenses will expire Feb. 28. Renewal requires five hours of continuing education units (CEUs) each calendar year. Commercial applicators must have a current insurance certificate. If you want to add a new application category to your license, contact the Texas Agricultural Extension Service's Agricultural Chemicals Office, 409/845-3849.

Licensed private applicators must obtain 15 hours of CEUs within five years of the date a license was issued. Requirements can be met within a year after expiration, but a late fee will be assessed.

The National Safety Council reminds parents on farms and ranches that chemicals and kids can be a deadly combination.

Keep pesticides and other toxins away from youngsters. Remind them that chemical storage areas are "OFF LIMITS" as playgrounds. And, after using toxic chemicals, immediately clean and dispose of the containers. Remember that a poisoning can happen in the time it takes to turn your back.

region.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service proposes to list the Arkansas River Basin population of the Arkansas River Shiner as an endangered species due to "habitat loss and modification from stream depletion due to diversion of surface water and excessive ground water pumping," even though the minnow remains abundant in the South Canadian River in Texas and the Pecos River in New Mexico.

Many water leaders are extremely concerned about the possible consequences of such a listing on area water resources.

A. Wayne Wyatt, manager of the High Plains Underground Water Conservation District No. 1 in Lubbock, remarked, "The USFWS claims that reservoirs constructed within the Arkansas River Basin (including Lake Meredith at Amarillo) have altered a considerable section of river once inhabited by Arkansas River Shiners. Listing the minnow as an endangered species could have profound effects upon the towns and cities in the Texas High Plains (including Amarillo and Lubbock) which rely on Lake Meredith for their primary drinking water supply."

He adds that operation of Lake Meredith would be affected if the USFWS requires releases of water from the reservoir to enhance the downstream habitat in the Canadian River for the fish. Such an action would reduce the amount of water available to the 11 cities served by the Canadian River Authority.

The desalination work now in progress, a project to improve the quality of water in Lake Meredith, would require consultation with the USFWS to determine the impact upon the minnow and could possibly be stopped.

Ground water use would also be affected by the proposed listing.

Given the unpredictability of precipitation across the region, a major reduction in ground water pumping for crop production would have a severe impact upon all sectors of the region's agribusiness economy.

State Senator Teel Bivins of Amarillo and Representative Warren

Chisum of Pampa, John Smithee of Amarillo, and David Swinford have expressed concern about the impact the proposed listing would have on this region's prosperous agricultural economy.

Area residents are encouraged to attend the hearing and, even more important, to write letters opposing the listing. Letters should be addressed to: State Supervisor, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, 222 South Houston, Suite A, Tulsa, Oklahoma 74127. The comment period ends February 3.

Switzer draws criticism for Cowboys' loss

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

AP Sports Writer

DALLAS (AP) - There's the old bromide in baseball that the ball will always find a bad fielder. It also works the same way in the NFL where critical decisions will always find a rookie coach in the playoffs.

Barry Switzer is being blamed by many for the NFC championship loss to the San Francisco 49ers. Critics cite bad offensive and defensive calls he should have shortcircuited and certainly for the hip check of an official that drew a critical unsportsmanlike conduct penalty.

It will not be a peaceful off-season at Valley Ranch for the Dallas Cowboys coach nor owner Jerry Jones, who has been catching heck and damnation for not making peace with Jimmy Johnson for at least one more year.

It all started at a cocktail party in Florida last March where Jerry had decided he had enough of Jimmy and certainly the feeling was mutual.

Yes, Jones could have bitten his tongue and had Johnson for the try-at-a-record third consecutive Super Bowl. Instead, Jones wrote a check, kicked Jimmy out, and hired Switzer, who hadn't coached in five years and never had a day of experience in the professional ranks.

Jones also should have clenched his teeth around his tongue instead of saying he could find one of 500 coaches who could take the team to the Super Bowl. What does that make Barry now?

The 38-28 victory by the 49ers, with Johnson his own watching from the Fox Television booth, unfolded as a worse case scenario for Switzer and Jones. In fact, if Johnson had written the script himself he couldn't have sketched a more diabolical debacle.

Jones overreacted before the game started by childishly demanding that Johnson not be allowed anywhere near the field - like Johnson was going to cast some voodoo over it or something.

Then there's Switzer's gameday performance. He had existed during the regular season by staying out of the way. He was content to stand there with his headset on listening to the airwave traffic between his coordinators.

That won't cut it in the playoffs. That's when the head coach has to make certain the right calls are being made.

This was this corner's contention back in August. The game speeds up in the playoffs. Switzer hadn't experienced playoff pressure NFL style. It was where Johnson was at his best. That's why the prediction here was the Cowboys would lose to the 49ers in the championship game.

But back to the calls. There was a lead draw call to Emmitt Smith on third-and-10 from the 49ers' 12-yard line in the second quarter. The lead draw is a good play. But not in the mud, not with a hurt running back and not with the defense all gang up at the end of the field. Wrong Barry. You've got to depend on Troy Aikman here. Remember Troy?

"When you call them and they work, it's beautiful," Switzer said. "And when you call them and they don't..."

With the Cowboys trailing 24-14 with 62 seconds remaining before halftime, Dallas passes incomplete three consecutive times from its own 16. Maybe, Barry, try it once, maybe twice, but call that lead draw on at least third down to burn the clock.

"We were trying to get the ball downfield, we were way behind," Switzer said. "We just fired blanks and got off a 23-yard punt."

Then the 49ers score on a 28-yard touchdown pass from Steve Young to Jerry Rice with eight seconds left. Barry. Why were the Cowboys in one-on-one coverage? Wouldn't a double on Rice have been the prudent play with such little time left?

"I told our staff that we need some help (for cornerback) Larry Brown in that situation," Switzer said. "Very smart."

These are the kind of things a head coach has to notice in the playoffs. Johnson always did. Barry didn't.

Of course, the hip check of official Sid Seamin as the Cowboys were driving to pull within 38-35 was unforgivable. Sure it was Deion Sanders interference on Michael Irvin. Barry, they won't even let you touch the officials in college ball? Remember Lou Holtz? It's a penalty everytime.

"I didn't think I'd get the penalty," Switzer said. "I was just dancing with him, doing the twist."

Wasn't it only a week earlier when Jones was down on the sidelines hollering at the officials? The zebras were just watching and waiting, Barry.

And, no, coach, you don't complain about the field after the game. The Cowboys could have taken care of that little matter back in November. Instead, they lost 21-14 to the 49ers. That game meant instead of fast track shoes they were doomed to play with 1/2-inch cleats.

Switzer probably had the toughest job of any rookie coach in NFL history. Nothing less than a Super Bowl victory would do.

Fair or not Switzer will be blamed for what happened in the game. And Jones will be blamed for having him on the sidelines.

And for his penance, Switzer will have to coach in the Pro Bowl on Feb. 5.

"Damn, I did not want to go to Honolulu," said Switzer, who must fulfill the obligation of a losing coach in the NFC championship game. "I've already been to Hawaii 16 times."

New Rangers' manager plans to use Gonzalez in right--if strike is settled

By T.R. SULLIVAN

Fort Worth Star-Telegram
ARLINGTON, Texas - Rangers manager Johnny Oates is contemplating some audacious moves for his team if the strike is settled.

Among the possible moves are switching from a five-man to a four-man pitching rotation, moving Juan Gonzalez from left field to right and promoting Benji Gil to starting shortstop.

"Let's not put anything in concrete," Oates said. "But we're going to do everything we can to make this a better ballclub."

On the possibility of a four-man rotation, Oates said, "Who is to say we couldn't do it?"

He envisions Kenny Rogers, Kevin Gross, John Burkett and Roger Pavlik being willing and able to work in a four-man rotation.

"Rogers has done it before, Gross I know would kick up his heels at the chance, Pavlik could do it although he's had some arm troubles and Burkett, from the statistics I've seen, is much better on four days."

Moving Gonzalez to right, Oates said, would put a faster player in the more spacious left field at the Ballpark at Arlington and take advantage of Gonzalez's strong arm in right.

"I don't think it's likely, but it's not impossible," Oates said. "I haven't talked to Juan yet about anything. We'd have to decide if, in our ballpark, we'd be better with Juan in right and Rusty Greer or Mark McLemore or David Hulse in left. No. 1, we want Juan to be as comfortable as possible. When the times comes, we'll sit down and talk about it and decide how to put from Benji, he could handle the job defensively. He has the arm and the range."

Oates said he's encouraged with the personnel moves that have added

Burkett and Gross to the starting rotation, Otis Nixon to play center field and bat lead off and the addition of third baseman Luis Ortiz, infielder McLemore and catcher Dave Valle.

The moves improve the Rangers' pitching, defense and versatility, Oates said, leaving the bullpen as the No. 1 remaining area that needs to be addressed this off-season.

Improving pitching was the team's No. 1 off-season priority, and Oates said he believes general manager Doug Melvin has accomplished that. Oates said the Rangers' rotation, if Rogers is signed, is among the best in baseball.

"I'll match those four against anybody, except maybe Atlanta and the Chicago White Sox," Oates said. "And if the White Sox lose (Jack) McDowell and (Alex) Fernandez, then I'd stack them up against them. You'd like to sign the five best out there, but I'm excited at the four we have a chance of getting."

Oates includes Pavlik in that group even though his shoulder injuries last year limited him to 11 starts, a 2-5 record and a 7.69 earned-run average.

"I have not talked to him, but I heard he's at the ballpark very regularly, working out and throwing the ball well," Oates said. "If he's healthy, what did he win, 12 games a couple of years ago? You got to give a guy like that a chance to pitch in your rotation."

The most talked about move made in the off-season was trading club MVP Jose Canseco to the Red Sox for Nixon and Ortiz. Melvin drew the brunt of criticism from fans and the media because the team failed to get pitching in the trade, but Oates said he had "a lot of input" into the trade and strongly defends it.

"We have two guys we're looking at in Benji and (Esteban) Beltran," Oates said. "There might be a couple of others out there we might be interested in, but from what I saw together the best lineup."

Shortstop remains the biggest unknown, but Oates is even more committed to giving Gil the first shot after a recent trip to Mexico to watch him play. It wasn't so much as what he saw as what he heard from respected baseball people. Long-time scout and coach Ozzie Virgil, who has been around baseball for four decades, told Oates that Gil is the best shortstop in the Mexican League.

"No. 1, you never want to trade a player of that caliber," Oates said. "But No. 2, we wanted to make this a better club. They were 10 games under .500 last year with that lineup; it wasn't getting the job done. You don't win by scoring seven runs a game. That type of ballclub will sell tickets, but you win ballgames with pitching and defense, and winning ballgames will put fans in the seats before long."

"The Texas Rangers have been known as a powerful offensive ballclub, but they weren't a great offensive club," Oates said. "They hit the ball in the seats and they could intimidate you, but they did not move runners over and they did not steal a lot of bases. Now we have more speed, better defense, more pitching and a better balance in financial dollars between the offense and the defense."

Nixon is only one of three players Oates has locked into a position. First baseman Will Clark and catcher Ivan Rodriguez are the others.

Oates has yet to talk to Gonzalez but plans a meeting soon in Puerto Rico. There are other issues to discuss.

"My goal is to get inside Juan's head and make him realize that it's a whole lot easier to play if people are for you than against you," Oates said.

"I want Juan to play with the attitude, effort and determination to get people off his back."

Labor negotiations will determine if Oates can implement his moves. In the meantime, Oates is preparing himself in case there is no agreement and he's forced to manage a squad of replacement players.

Wait. Check that. The new Rangers manager loathes the term replacement players and refuses to enter it into his vocabulary.

"The Texas Rangers are not going to have replacement players," Oates said. "But No. 2, we wanted to make this a better club. They were 10 games under .500 last year with that lineup; it wasn't getting the job done. You don't win by scoring seven runs a game. That type of ballclub will sell tickets, but you win ballgames with pitching and defense, and winning ballgames will put fans in the seats before long."

— YOUR EYES —

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

A lot of questions about eye health and vision come our way. Here are the answers:

• If eyes don't hurt, why have them examined?

Because most eye diseases start slowly, and your optometrist can spot trouble before you feel pain or notice symptoms.

Vision changes may be subtle, too.

• Will wearing glasses weaken your eyes? No, but vision may deteriorate anyway. What will happen is that your eyes, more comfortable with glasses, will become accustomed to them. They won't work as hard to focus without glasses as they used to.

• If I need glasses now, will I need them forever? Maybe not, especially if lenses were prescribed to correct an astigmatism. The cornea matures by about age 25, and the condition may correct itself.

• Why does it hurt to read in dim light? It's not your eyes that hurt, but stiff muscles in your head, neck and face that tense when your eyes have to work extra-hard to focus.

MONTCLAIR, N.J. (AP) - The ear (ouch). The nose (Ouch). The cheek (Ouch!). The nipple (OUCH!!). The genitals (OOOOOOOUCH!!!!)

Body-piercing, once the domain of the spiked dog collar set, has relocated from the subculture to the suburbs. Manhattan and San Francisco aren't the only places to pierce anymore; from Wildwood, N.J., to Santa Monica, Calif., piercing shops are now staples.

There's even one here in downtown Montclair, town of choice for yuppies fleeing Manhattan's crowds and crime. On a tree-lined street of wood-frame homes, a hardware store and a beauty parlor, an average of 50 folks per week take a sharp needle through a body part at Ink-Credible Tattoo.

"Some people go every week for a manicure, a massage or a sauna," explains Christine Brief, co-owner of the husband-and-wife piercing place. "Other people come here."

Celebrity converts include navel-pierced supermodels Naomi Campbell and Christy Turlington. "The Crying Game" star Jaye Davidson prefers nipple jewelry. NBA star Dennis Rodman rebounds (when he's not suspended or AWOL) with pierced ears, a pierced nose and a pierced navel. Guns n' Roses guitarist Slash has a nose ring.

But the rich, famous and punctured are not alone. Ever imagine bank tellers with nose rings? Lawyers with nipple bars?

Motley Crue drummer Tommy Lee, reflecting on his pierced ears, nose and nipple, now sees himself as somewhat wimpy.

"Those piercings are considered worthless and weak in the '90s," says Lee, whose holes date back to the early 1980s. "Unless you have a bolt through your (OOOOOOUCH!!!!), you're not making it in the '90s."

Piercing tip No. 1, from Maria Tashjian of Venus Modern Body Art: When piercing the tongue, use extreme caution. "You can't just pierce randomly, because there are two major veins that go up its underside."

At Tashjian's East Village piercing boutique, tongue piercing ($35) is No. 2 on the most requested list, behind navels ($50) and ahead of nipples ($55). The friendly staff appears somewhat threatening, mostly because they sport enough facial jewelry to set off metal detectors.

"I never saw piercing as a fad," says Tashjian, who displays an assortment of ear piercings, two nose rings, a septum (the cartilage that separates the nostrils) piercing and a stud protruding from her lower lip. That look - including a one-inch hole in her right ear, the result of a process called stretching - is relatively tame. Employee John Dolce is fast closing in on two dozen piercings.

Body piercing has escaped the "drunken-sailor-on-shore-leave" stigma that goes ink-in-arm with tattooing. For one thing, piercings aren't permanent (Rosanne, Johnny Depp and Mark Gastineau are just three people embroidered with the name of an ex-loved one.)

Piercings are performed in boutiques. The level of hygiene is quite high - instruments cleaned in autoclaves, needles used just once, rubber gloves discarded after each customer.

The display case at Venus Modern Body Art is filled with jewelry ready-made for your eyebrow (rings, generally) or your cheeks (barbells - just what you think, only smaller).

"It's kind of addicting," says Tashjian. "Once you get a piercing done, you start thinking of the next one. At least for me, it was like, 'That's beautiful. What am I gonna get next?'" jewelry is painless. Making a hole for it is not.

Tony Paternoster, of Totowa, N.J., rates nipple piercing as No. 1 on the ouch-o-meter, although he says getting the back of his neck lanced was no picnic, either.

The back of his neck?

"You clamp the neck, as tight as you can with as much skin as you can pull, and then pierce right through it," he explains. A bent barbell is slipped through the hole, creating a look that recently cost him jobs as a lifeguard and flower delivery boy.

Montclair piercer Cary Brief has handled all of Paternoster's performances.

"This is not a fad like a hula hoop or a mood ring, where you can put it on, take it off, and forget about it," he says. "You've got to get your nerve up, sit in the chair, and get it done."

"It's kind of addicting," says Tashjian. "Once you get a piercing done, you start thinking of the next one. At least for me, it was like, 'That's beautiful. What am I gonna get next?'"

DEAR READERS: Today's column could be the most important column you will ever read. It could, in fact, save your life.

I am going to tell you about a book that had me glued for hours. Although it was written by a physician, Dr. Isadore Rosenfeld, there is no medical jargon.

Here's an excerpt: "What you eat has a great deal to do with whether or not you develop stomach cancer. Its relatively low incidence and continuing decline in this country may reflect the fact that we are eating more fresh fruit and vegetables than ever before. In Japan, stomach cancer causes more deaths than all other malignancies combined and is almost six times more common than it is in the United States, presumably because of all the pickled, salted, barbecued and smoked foods the Japanese eat. The best way to beat stomach cancer is to avoid or cut down on all of the above and eat lots of fresh fruits and vegetables that are rich in Vitamins C and A."

Another subject that might be of interest to millions of younger readers is Diet and Fertility. Here is what Dr.

Rosenfeld has to say:

"If you and your spouse are having trouble getting pregnant, what you eat can sometimes make a difference. Moreover, modifying your diet is a lot easier, and a whole lot cheaper, than getting involved with artificial insemination, in vitro fertilization and surrogate motherhood. I contacted several specialists in the field of fertility to ask what nutritional advice they were giving their infertile patients. Not a single specialist was giving them any advice. They are all knee-deep in hormonal manipulation and ovum implantation."

"Thin is beautiful in our society, but too thin is incompatible with motherhood. If you are five-and-a-half feet tall and have lost 20 pounds by dieting and exercise, you may have the figure of a model, but chances are, your periods have become sparse because your estrogen level has dropped. Putting some of that weight back on may be all you need to become pregnant. Constant strenuous exercise can also render you infertile."

"Infertility used to be blamed solely on women. History is full of accounts of monarchs who abandoned their wives because they failed to produce a son. What might a man be doing that would render his sperm unequal to the task? Smoking and subsisting on junk food might play a part."

"You know you can harm your baby by smoking and drinking once you are pregnant, but did you know that caffeine can reduce your chances of conception? In one recent study, three cups of coffee a day decreased the incidence of fertility by 27 percent. Also, stay away from tea, colas, chocolate and certain over-the-counter cold medicine."

Here are some chapter titles: Aging: No One Lives Forever, But It's Worth a Try. Alcohol: Pleasure, Poison and Empty Calories. Anxiety, Panic Attacks and Food. Asthma: Eat Right, Wheeze Less. Chronic Fatigue Syndrome: It's Not All in Your Head.

The name of this extraordinary book is "Doctor, What Should I Eat?" by Dr. Isadore Rosenfeld. The publisher is Random House. The price is $25 ($32.95 in Canada), and I'm giving it five stars.

Researchers are trying to detect who is at risk for the most common eating disorders such as anorexia nervosa and bulimia.

Anorexia nervosa, a syndrome of self-starvation found mostly in teenage and young adult women, is characterized mainly by peculiar attitudes toward body image and food, resulting in refusal to eat and profound weight loss. Bulimia—often referred to as bulimia nervosa—is a deviant eating pattern known as binge eating syndrome or the gorge-purge syndrome.

Bulimia differs from anorexia nervosa in that the bulimic actually loses all control of eating and gorges on huge quantities of food. These two disorders continue to be major health problems in the country today. Research funded by the national Institute of Child Health and Human Development and conducted at Stanford University lead by Dr. Joel D. Killen shows that girls as young as 11 or 12 years old engage in behavior that could lead to bulimia nervosa if steps are not taken to prevent the disorder.

Researchers interviewed and gave questionnaires to over 900 sixth and seventh grade girls in four northern California middle schools. They discovered that more than four percent of the girls reported symptoms of bulimia nervosa. As yet the girls had not been diagnosed as having the disease. Bulimia is characterized by recurrent binge eating episodes, using laxatives, diuretics, or vomiting to prevent weight gain. The bulimics feel a lack of control over eating during a binge.

In the California study, the girls with symptoms of bulimia nervosa differed from their non-bulimic peers in several ways. Those with these symptoms weighed more and had a higher proportion of their body weight from fat. They were more concerned about body image, preoccupied with their weight, had excessive concern with dieting, and reported feeling fat even though they were not fat by objective standards. Depression, common among adult bulimics, was detected by higher scores on the depression scale.

The main objective of the research was to discover what factors might lead to bulimia and the best way to prevent its occurrence. Dr. Killen's research findings reveal that the single greatest predictor in whether girls will develop bulimic symptoms is an overconcern with body weight and image. Young girls need to accept the fact that during puberty some weight gain is normal. They should develop healthful eating habits based on the USDA Food Guide Pyramid and engage in some form of daily exercise. Encouraging these lifestyle changes may prevent the occurrence of bulimia.

Both pageants are preliminaries to the Miss America pageant.

Cigarette filters found dangerous

WASHINGTON (AP) - A study suggests the filters lauded for reducing tar inhaled from cigarettes may themselves be dangerous when tiny fibers are inhaled and lodged in the lungs of smokers.

The study, published in Sunday's Journal of Cancer Research, doesn't prove a link between the tiny fibers and lung cancer. But some experts call the finding significant, and it promises to open new ground in the smoking wars.

"It itself is an interesting line of research, and it supplements other lines of evidence, that filters don't make cigarettes safe," said Dr. Michael Thun of the American Cancer Society.

The tobacco industry insisted the fibers were so large that they'd be caught in the lung's twisting airways and coughed up. "The data to me do not show he found a filter fiber," said Christopher Coggins, an R.J. Reynolds toxicologist.

Judson Kenoyer of the American Industrial Hygiene Association agreed "it would be very difficult" for the typical filter fiber, 20 microns in diameter, to lodge in the lung.

But Dr. John Pauly at New York's Roswell Park Cancer Institute reported tracing fibers from cigarette packages to people's tongues to pieces of human lung surgically removed from smokers.

He says the smallest lung airway is half a millimeter, large enough to handle a 20-micron filter fiber that's roughly four times the size of a red blood cell. A micron is one-thousandth of a millimeter.

"This finding raises questions concerning the health risk of filter fibers that may be inhaled or ingested by millions of people," Pauly concluded.

Filtered cigarettes were developed in the 1950s to reduce inhalation of carcinogenic tar. Today, they make up 95 percent of all cigarettes sold here. No one is suggesting people go back to unfiltered, Thun emphasized.

Pauly is an immunologist who stumbled into cigarette research while hunting an immune-based treatment for lung cancer. In 1992, he was collecting immune cells called macrophages from the fresh lung tissue of smokers undergoing cancer surgery.

He had to cull the macrophages before pathologists sliced up and added chemicals to the samples—and thus was looking at lung tissue in a state few scientists ever do when he noticed strange, glowing rods from two patients.

With help from an FBI-trained crime lab that specializes in unique fibers, he identified them as fibers from a cigarette filter, glowing from the carcinogenic chemicals contained in the tobacco tar still clinging to it.

Pauly could find no research on whether these fibers were a health risk, so he tested 12 popular cigarette brands. Between one and 32 fibers fell off each filter whenever the cigarette was tapped or dropped or when the cigarette tip was touched to the tongue of a volunteer.

He found identical fibers, with their distinct Y-shaped rods, in more human lung tissue and used smoking machines to show inhaling also released fibers.

"His data was pretty convincing that indeed the filters are going into the lung and residing there," said Dr. Bruce Johnson, head of lung biology for the National Cancer Institute.

Tobacco companies argued any fibers would be biodegradable because they're made of cellulose acetate, related to cotton. Hoechst Celanese Corp., one of two cellulose acetate makers, said Friday there are no known adverse reactions to the compound, which is also used to make blood filters.

Christian Coalition emphasizes family values

By JULIA PRODIS
Associated Press Writer

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) - Dick Weinhold stands like Patton beside a huge American flag made of construction paper as he dispatches Texas' newest Christian Coalition foot soldiers.

Switching on the overhead projector that illuminates the classroom's chalkboard, the coalition's Texas chairman outlines his strategy to take the town of Arlington:

Identify. Recruit. Train.

"Our struggle is not against flesh and blood," Weinhold tells his newest enlistees. "We're not going to take up arms. Most of what we have to do starts on our knees."

Nine conservative Christians sipping coffee and nibbling on cookies have been summoned to the Cathedral of Praise church in Arlington to help form the newest chapter of the Christian Coalition.

A chapter has been formed almost every week in Texas, on average, since 1991, when Weinhold opened the first state office. Texas has the largest membership of any state at 63,000, with California a close second.

Nationally, the organization led by religious broadcaster Pat Robertson has surged over the past four years from 57,000 to 450,000.

The Early Bird satellite was used in 1965 to transmit television pictures across the Atlantic.

The group takes partial credit for the Republican landslide in Congress. According to a Christian Coalition analysis, religious conservatives, most opposing abortion and favoring school prayer, accounted for 33 percent of the national vote in November and voted about 69 percent for Republicans.

In Texas over the past several years, the coalition and other religious right groups have scored numerous victories, including electing a Republican majority to the State Board of Education. The three GOP winners oppose teaching about homosexuality and state-approved health books they say are too graphic in discussing sex, birth control and sexually transmitted diseases.

Voters in Austin repealed a city ordinance that allowed health care benefits for homosexual partners, and several Texas school districts have passed "traditional values resolutions."

Texas is fertile ground for the coalition's message.

Not only does the state have a long history of conservative theology, but new migrations of conservatives to its big-city suburbs feed the philosophy, said Howard Miller, an associate history professor at the University of Texas at Austin.

In an attempt to counter the influence of the Texas coalition, People for the American Way - a civil liberties group that monitors the religious right - is reopening its state office, which relocated to California in 1989.

"In 1989, the Texas Christian Coalition was not even on the map," said Michael Hudson, the group's vice president. "We sort of follow the movement."

Hudson said that while the coalition's message can come across as wholesome and all-American, it has a more extreme side he considers dangerous, such as banning both textbooks and discussion of birth control in schools.

As with every coalition meeting, the formation of the Arlington chapter opens with a prayer.

Bowing their heads together, the nine Christians are a diverse group - a marketing executive in a tailored business suit, a single mother, an aging "biker for Christ" in a black leather jacket, an off-duty police officer and his wife, a real estate agent and her retired husband, an airline crew scheduler and a retired defense company worker.

As they thank the Lord for the bounty of America and pray for guidance, the flag that covered half the classroom wall crunches to the floor. They ignore it.

They are focused on their mission: to curb what they consider the moral decay of society. And according to a sign-up sheet at the meeting, that means opposition to abortion, pornography, homosexual rights and communism.

Christians have been frustrated for a very long time with the direction society is going and have been waiting for a vehicle to express their political views," said Al McCann, a retired real estate agent who wants to form a chapter in nearby Colleyville with his wife, Glenda. They have come for pointers.

"We had a better society before," Mrs. McCann said, shaking her head. "I don't know how we have gone so far from family values."

A short video called "America at the Crossroads" playing on the classroom TV echoes her sentiments.

"America is a troubled nation," the strong male voice intones.

Political corruption, government waste, unwed mothers, teens with sexually transmitted diseases, Sen. Ted Kennedy sponsoring the Gay and Lesbian Civil Rights Act of 1993.

"Has America lost its moral compass?" the narrator asks. "For the sake of America, people of faith must be silent no longer."

"That's right," Mr. McCann interjects.

Each of the nine fill out sign-up sheets, checking off areas of interest and talent - staffing a phone bank, recruiting candidates, writing articles for newsletters and organizing events.

From here, precinct coordinators will be appointed, conservative Christian voters will be identified and put on mailing lists, and activists will be recruited for school boards, city councils and even Congress.

James Mathews, who ministers to bikers at "secular rallies" from the back of his Harley Davidson, says he'll help staff phone banks for the cause.

"Of course, the abortion issue is on the forefront of it," he said. "I'm also concerned about the teaching of humanism in the education system."

Police officer Mark Stephens said he and his wife, Gina, want to "try to get America back to where it used to be."

"I hope to God, I pray that the government is going to get out of the peoples' lives," said Stephens, who has attended Christian Coalition conventions in Washington, D.C. "We really feel we're committed to a cause, and that's to uplift Christ and government as well."

Just as it began, the Arlington meeting ends in a prayer.

Weinhold urges the group to come back to the next meeting in January and bring a friend.

"Get involved and stay with it," said Weinhold, himself a volunteer.

After the meeting, Doris Redd, a retired productivity manager for a defense company, said it's about time churchgoing folks get involved in the political process.

"It's almost too late," she said.

HJH Roundup

By CAROLYN WATERS

These words by Elbert Hubbard about success should be instilled in every teenagers heart and mind. "He has achieved success who has worked well, laughed often and loved much." Too often grownups have not achieved success by this measure.

Students across the country take the opportunity to write to towns for information to use in their classes and it seems we always get our share at HJH. They are usually addressed, "To a Seventh Grader in Hereford." The following students have answered letters from students in Nederland, Commerce, Marlin, Anahuac and Booker, Texas; Rye, New York and Atchison, Kansas since the holidays: Marisol Trevizo, Yvette Nava, Erika DeLaCerda, Valerie Bossett, Amanda Frausto, Kerris Montgomery and Nathan Parson.

Gloria Cruz has joined our staff to work in the ISS room. We welcome her to the HJH campus.

The decision was made by the HJH staff not to proceed with plans for block scheduling as we feel we are making progress with the plan presently in place. We spent several hours planning for the 1995-96 school year and feel we will have an even more successful and exciting year with these plans. We were pleased with Jim Marsh of the HISD school board visited one of the Amarillo schools with us on Friday and then spent the day with us on Monday as we made our decisions. Board members Joe Flood and Steve Wright spent some time at our Monday session, also.

Conservation essay winners were announced Wednesday. Joshua Stubbs won first place, Amber Kerr, second and Carey Lyles, third. Congratulations to these fine students.

An Adult Woodworking Class will be offered at HJH beginning January 23rd, with registration from six to eight p.m. Classes and registration will be in the woodworking lab. For more information, call Terry Zimmerman at 363-7636 or Mr. Reyna at 364-0606.

The committee, or class, to work on the "Build the Capitol" project met Friday for an organizational meeting. We will be making work schedules and those students who are really interested will have a rich opportunity to compete in a contest that will result in an expense paid trip to Austin in April for the winners.

As we encourage our teens, remember that they, just as anyone else, often need a boost. For example, if you see a turtle on a fence post, you can be sure he had some help getting there!

Red Cross Update

Special thanks to Laura Carter, First Aid and CPR Instructor, for teaching First Aid and CPR to her students at Bluebonnet School. Congratulations to all of the students and especially to those students receiving a certificate for passing all sections of the test.

Donations are being accepted at our office for the California floods and for Japan earthquake relief. Checks should be marked for the relief assistance specially requested. Those funds will be forwarded to the correct disaster headquarters.

A CPR class will begin Tuesday at 7 p.m. at the Red Cross office. Register for the class by calling 364-3761 or coming by the office at 224 S. Main St.

We have videos on AIDS/HIV, home pool safety, infant safety seats and other subjects to loan to interested persons. Call or come by to check on our videos.

A Quinceañera honoring Laura Lou Zambrano-Medina was held Jan. 14 at San Jose Catholic Church with Deacon Jesse Guerrero officiating.

The Honoree is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert and Mary Lou Zambrano of Hereford.

Her chamberlain was Armando Zambrano, a second cousin, and son of Mr. and Mrs. Juan and Mary Lou Zambrano of Hereford.

The church decorations consisted of a bouquet of lilac carnations and two seven-arm brass candelabras with lilac candles. The pews were adorned with lilac and purple bows.

Miss Zambrano was presented by her parents and wore a two-piece dress of lilac ruffles adorned with sequins and beads, a gift from her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Ramon and Angie Medina.

She also wore a round crown with diamond studs and a crucifix necklace and ring in white gold. She carried a bouquet of lilac and purple flowers surrounding a rhinestone center, a Bible and rosary. The crown, bouquet and jewelry were gifts from aunts and uncles Mr. and Mrs. Ignacio & Olga Zambrano, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony and Lucy Flores.

Music was provided by the Youth Group with one of the special selections "Ya Eres Una Mujer" written and published by Raul Guerrero.

Her escort, as well as the other 14 chamberlains, wore black pants with a white shirt accented by a lilac & purple tie and cummerbund with black shoes. The 14 damas wore floor length purple satin dresses, white shoes, baby's breath in their hair and carried purple and lilac bouquets.

For the dinner at Taqueria Jalisco Restaurant, the honoree wore a lilac mini dress adorned with sequins and beads, another gift from her grandparents.

Decorations included white table linens with lilac candles, miniature lilac roses and purple lilac balloons and streamers. The cake was white with purple roses with a lighted lilac fountain and stairs with 28 purple and black figurines and one lilac figurine on top.

The champagne glasses used were a gift from a cousin, Alfonso Zambrano, as were the honoree's shoes.

Music was provided by Mariachi Alegría of Lubbock.

For the dance at the K.C. Hall from 8 to 12 pm, Miss Zambrano wore an evening gown, given by her grandparents, with a heart-shaped cut out in back and adorned with beads and rhinestones. She also wore a purple cape.

The tables featured white linens decorated with lilac, purple and silver streamers and balloons. Peanuts and pretzels were served.

Registry at the dance was by Tony Medina, cousin. Music was by Sangre Latina of Friona.

Photography was by Lynn Schroeter and video by Jorge Medina, an uncle from Dallas.

Miss Zambrano is a freshman at Hereford High School, a member of The Hereford High Band and a member of TYM at San Jose.

Out of town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Felix A. Medina and Mr. and Mrs. Jorge L. Medina, aunts and uncles from Dallas; Mr. and Mrs. Pete Martinez and Mr. and Mrs. Sergio Chavez, aunts and uncles from Amarillo; Naomi and Joey Martinez, cousins from Boy's Ranch; Mr. and Mrs. Eleuterio Gaona, friends from Earth; and Casey Gresham, a friend from Amarillo.

Music was provided by the Youth Group with one of the special selections "Ya Eres Una Mujer" written and published by Raul Guerrero.

Her escort, as well as the other 14 chamberlains, wore black pants with a white shirt accented by a lilac & purple tie and cummerbund with black shoes. The 14 damas wore floor length purple

Laura and her parents want to thank all their family and friends for making her day an unforgettable event. Thanks!!!

Parenting seminar

DR. & MRS. GUY GREENFIELD

The Family Growth Center of Hereford will be sponsoring a "Parenting Skills for Today" seminar Feb. 3-4 to be held in the banquet room of the HISD Administration Building. Fathers and mothers of children and youth of all ages are invited to participate.

Dr. and Mrs. Guy Greenfield, family life specialists, will lead the seminar. Dr. Greenfield is the director and counselor of the Family Growth Center, 805 N. Main. The Greenfields moved to Hereford this past October. Married in 1952, the Greenfields are parents of three grown children.

The seminar is scheduled for Feb. 3 from 7-9 p.m. and Feb. 4 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. with Saturday lunch provided. A $5.00 registration fee will be charged which includes lunch. Pre-registration is requested. A nursery will be provided for preschoolers who are pre-registered. For further details, call 364-7870 or 363-6226 or 364-5744.

Dr. Greenfield is the author of five books related to marriage and family life. Both he and Mrs. Greenfield have written numerous articles for a variety of publications dealing with family life issues and have led numerous family life seminars.

Playa lakes are topic of program

"Living our Legacy of Conservation" was the subject of Jim Steiert, local writer and lecturer, at the January meeting of the Pioneer Study Club of Hereford in King's Manor Conference Room.

Steiert presented a history of the playa lakes in our area relating how they were formed, their role in supporting wildlife and their significance to our aquifer.

Mary Jane Burrus, club president, introduced the speaker.

Roll call was answered by relating favorite conservation tricks.

Luncheon was served in the King's Manor dining room to Burrus, Nell Culpepper, Maria Escamilla, Oleta Hoffman, Mary Panciera, Rosemary Thomas and Willie Wimberley.

Retirement party will be Thursday

A retirement party is being held to honor Gracey Cornelius, a long time Hereford Independent School District employee.

The party is scheduled for Thursday from 3-5 p.m. in the banquet room of the HISD Administration Building. The public is invited to attend.

Since her employment in May of 1956, Cornelius has worked with the tax office, bookkeeping, insurance, teacher retirement and payroll.

Marine Master Sgt. Alberto Almanza, a 1974 graduate of Hereford High School, was recently promoted to his present rank while serving with Marine Air Wing Training Squadron One, 3rd Marine Aircraft Wing, Marine Corps Air Station, Yuma, Ariz.

He joined the Marine Corps in November 1974.

Did you know there was once a Hereford, Arizona? It was apparently mostly a stage stop just a few miles from Tombstone, and no trace remains now, but a sharp-eyed patron noticed it on a map in a book about the O.K. Corral. Hey, Mike Carr, do you think we could get some tourist attention if we put out the word that Bat Masterson, Wyatt Earp and Doc Holliday were once in Hereford? We don't have to tell the WHOLE truth—I was in advertising long enough to know that. (I wonder if they pronounced it the "real" way—HER-ford—as we do, or the British way—HEHR-ford?)

And speaking of gunslingers in Hereford, one of the Younger's (or was it a Dalton?) was here back in the early days (post "reformation", of course). I can't remember the details, but the museum has a picture of the event, which occurred in the earliest days of our town. I think he may have been here as a traveling speaker, (several of the old-time outlaws made more money that way than robbing trains and banks) and the photo shows him surrounded by what is probably the entire population of the town, less the photographer.

Just a couple of books to mention this week in my defense:

Self-defense is Jonathan Kellerman's novel of psychologist-detective Alex Delaware, and his patient who insists, on the basis of a recurring dream, that someone is out to kill her.

Defense of a Legend examines the last stand of Davy Crockett. Jose Enrique de la Pena was an officer in the Mexican army and allegedly participated in the campaign against Texas, particularly the Battle of the Alamo. The officer contends in his diary that Crockett was captured and brutally executed, but author Bill Groneman reexamines the evidence and allows readers to come to their own conclusions.

Hope you have a good week, and to Pat M.—Thanks, again!

Thank You

The Daughters & Son of Tifilo Estrada would like to express their deepest thanks to all the people in Hereford for all their help in their time of need. May God richly bless each of you and His grace be upon you.

COUNTRY STYLE HOME WITH RESTRAINED ELEGANCE

Master Bed Room On The First Floor

FEATURE HOMES

© BY W.D. FARMER, F.A.I.B.D.

This 2,805 square foot, three bed room home creates a higher standard of country living. An extremely long covered front porch with boxed wood columns and wood rail provides a distinctive first impression of the home. The foyer is recessed and open to the second floor, which includes a balcony overlook to the activity room with sloped ceiling below.

An open rail stair up divides the foyer from the activity room. The basement stair is strategically placed below the stair up for better space utilization. A half bath and walk in coat closet are also designated in the foyer area.

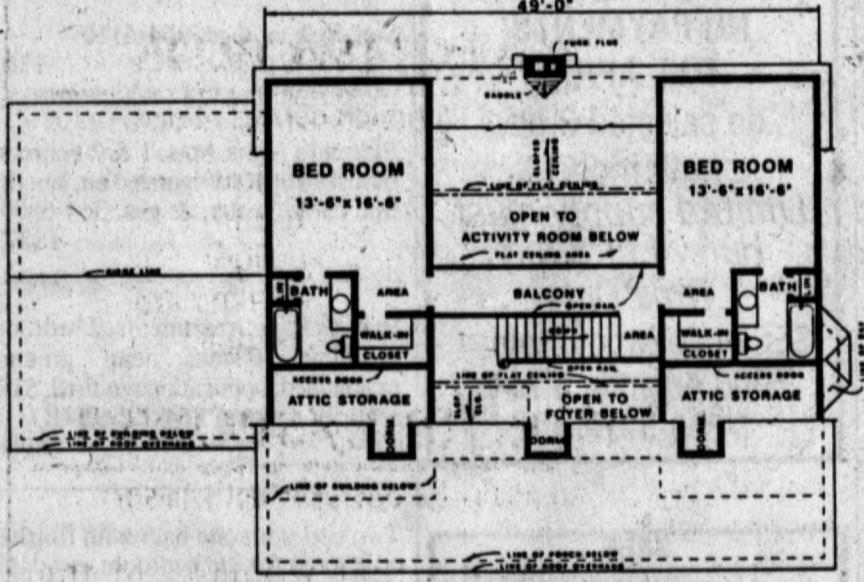

The dining room is on the front of the home and is a full 13'6" square room. The kitchen is placed between the breakfast room and dining room for greater ease in food service. It includes a pantry and desk, as well as built in appliances and a snack bar. The breakfast room leads to another pantry, double garage entry, and the oversized laundry room with rear sun deck access.

The master suite is private and isolated at one end. It includes a large garden bath with double vanity and a sensational walk in closet.

There are two bed rooms on the second floor and they are connected by the open rail balcony. Each bedroom includes a private bath and walk in closet.

Question/Answer

Q: Recently, an electrical wall outlet in our home shorted out and threw sparks around violently. To my amazement, the circuit breaker failed to trip. An electrician examined our service panel and told us it was made by Federal Pacific Co., about 35 or 40 years ago. According to him, the split bus panel is illegal by today's standards and he recommends replacing the entire panel box with a new one that would cost between $600 and $700. Is there a better or more reasonable solution? We are concerned for our safety and are looking for help.

A: There may be a more reasonable solution than replacing the entire electrical panel box. Your split bus panel is not causing your circuit breaker problem even though it is not in compliance with the latest Electrical Code.

In 1981, the National electrical Code was modified to disallow the future installation of a split bus in residential construction. Electrical Code modifications are not retroactive, and do not affect existing installations. The purpose of the code change was to ensure that the panel electrical box would have a master disconnect.

After 35 years, if a circuit breaker never tripped, it is possible that corrosion deposits have formed around the tripping mechanism which would cause the breaker to malfunction. As a precautionary measure, a homeowner should once a year trip the breaker (move it to the off position) and reset it for each circuit including the master disconnect, if there is one.

Since one of your Federal Pacific breakers malfunctioned, it would be prudent to replace all the circuit breakers. This would be less costly than replacing the entire panel box. For your protection, the new circuit breakers should be approved by Underwriter's Laboratories (U.L. Listed) or other independent testing laboratory.

However, if present-day circuit breakers will not fit your panel box, you will have to replace the entire box.

AMBLER, Pa. (AP) - Country music legend Chet Atkins has gotten hip to jazz.

"You've got to face the fact that country jocks don't play my records anymore," he said in the April issue of Country Beat magazine. "So I have to make my records for other stations that will play them, such as jazz and so on."

The 70-year-old guitarist and 10-time Grammy winner said what he plays is not really jazz, though.

Question/Answer

Q: I have a problem with my well water. It smells like rotten hard-boiled eggs. The water is soft, and I have no rust problem. I like the water except for its smell. What causes this smell, and what can I do to eliminate it?

A: The rotten-egg odor is caused by the hydrogen sulfide gas in the water. Hydrogen sulfide is commonly found in well water and is changed into hydrogen sulfide gas by the activity of non-harmful water-borne bacteria. You can stop the biochemical reaction that forms the gas by killing the bacteria with chlorine. Check with your local health department to determine how much chlorine to add to your well. You also could kill the bacteria by dynamiting your well. Be careful, however, too much dynamite and you might get worse problems than rotten-egg odors.

Hydrogen sulfate may also be turned into sulfide gas in the water heater (you won't smell the rotten-egg odor at your cold-water tap). In this case, the bacteria react with a magnesium anode in the water heater, and this forms sulfide gas. The anodes are called sacrificial. They corrode instead of the metal heater tank, thus preventing the tank from rusting. You can stop the formation of hydrogen sulfide gas by removing the anode, though this causes the tank to rust out more quickly than it would otherwise. Or, again, you can chlorinate the well.

Dunaway is a troubled mom in NBC's A Family Divided

Faye Dunaway stars as Karen Billingsly and Cameron Bancroft plays her son, Chad, in the movie A Family Divided, premiering Sunday on NBC. Karen, her lawyer-husband and Chad confront their relationships with each other after Chad is involved in the gang rape of a high-school girl.

BY JOHN CROOK

Faye Dunaway plays a wife and mother whose placid world is shattered by shocking revelations about her son in A Family Divided, premiering Sunday, Jan. 22, on NBC.

It's a role the Oscar-winning actress hopes will help audiences distinguish between Dunaway the actress and the larger-than-life characters she has portrayed, which include Joan Crawford, Bonnie Parker and Eva Peron.

"That's exactly why I couldn't even consider not doing it, you know?" she explains. "It's the kind of woman I'm looking for. I want to be 'accessible.' I am, in my life, far more accessible than people think of me as being, and I'm looking for opportunities just to get that out there."

As Karen Billingsly, Dunaway gets an opportunity to use softer colors in her portrait of an upper-class woman who is shaken to discover that her golden-boy son, Chad (Cameron Bancroft of To Walk Again: The Eddie Keating Story), is involved with some fraternity brothers in the gang rape of a drunken teen-age girl.

Her husband, Roger (Stephen Collins, Scarlett), falls back on his instincts as a lawyer, advising Chad and his friends to keep quiet, while shielding his wife from the harsh situation. Karen learns the truth only after she confronts Roger directly.

Angry at what she considers her husband's betrayal, Karen also is appalled that Roger is determined to bail Chad out instead of demanding that the young man take responsibility for his actions. Gradually, however, she realizes she is guilty of the same thing: hiding behind her husband and letting him "take care" of life for her.

"There are two sides of protection," she says when Roger tries to defend his secrecy. "One person is protected.

But the other person has the power."

A Family Divided originally was called Mother Love, a title that more accurately captures the mood of the TV movie. It is Karen who must find the strength to act as a moral compass for the troubled Chad, and it is she who undergoes a more dramatic transformation than does Roger during the course of the drama. For a time, she even moves out of her home and resists her husband's pleas to return.

"She's trying to find out who she is, and if she goes back into that world, she won't know who she is," Dunaway says. "She'll go right back into 'Oh, you solve it, darling, and I'll just sit here and when it's over, tell me, and I'll come out and we'll all have a cup of tea and everything will be fine.'

The climax of the movie arrives in a tense scene between Karen and Chad, who has just received the devastating news that another guilt-stricken fraternity brother has killed himself. Karen realizes her son is at a crossroads but forces herself to let him confront the truth on his own terms.

"Where this movie goes the second mile for me is she's not just on a soapbox saying 'Look, you have to be accountable for your life,'" Dunaway says of that scene, one of her favorites. "But she knows that her son is decent, that it will kill him, that it won't work — you know, basically, I think she could say, 'Hey, if it would work to cover this up, fine, let's cover it up.'

"But she knows it's not going to work, that he is going to self-destruct. He will not be able to live with it and he will be destroyed by it. She knows this, and that's her real obligation: to ask, 'How do I save my son that I love?' That's what I loved, the nuance, that it was not just preaching."

PBS show 'Austin City Limits' an improbable success

By PAULINE ARRILLAGA

Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) - Improbable, it was - much like the name of the book that sparked its birth.

It was 1974, and public television program manager Bill Arhos was trying to come up with a new show. After reading "The Improbable Rise of Redneck Rock," his idea formulated: a music series spotlighting the growing country music genre.

Country music on PBS? Improbable, yes. Impossible, no.

Twenty seasons later, "Austin City Limits" has become the longest-running popular music series on television.

"I didn't just wake up one day and say I think we ought to do a country music program, although I am from East Texas and grew up on country music in Bryan, Texas," said Arhos, executive producer of the show. "The timing was right and the topic was right."

At the time there were 65 bands in Austin playing progressive country, or redneck rock. Arhos decided to capitalize on that sound.

He taped the pilot show using one of the biggest names in the business - B.W. Stevenson. There was just one problem, the big name failed to draw a big audience.

"The night B.W. was here, not enough people came. It looked like we had a big party and nobody came," Arhos said. "There were big gaps in the audience, so we felt like we couldn't use that."

Arhos turned to a lesser-known singer for his pilot - Willie Nelson. The program aired on 55 stations nationwide. A show was born.

The first series was produced in 1975 and hit the airwaves in January 1976, featuring the original sounds of Asleep at the Wheel, Townes Van Zandt, Stevenson, the Charlie Daniels Band, Marcia Ball, Jerry Jeff Walker and more.

"Pretty soon we were on the road to doing bigger and bigger acts and gained more national prominence," Arhos said.

By its third season, "Austin City Limits" had found a niche in the country music industry. Chet Atkins became the first of many major Nashville artists to perform on the show.

"It was a different kind of country music from the traditional country that was there at the time," Arhos said. "You had this amalgamated, wonderful sound that eventually spilled over into the Nashville traditional sound and I think forever has changed the sound of country music."

What made the show different and popular, Arhos believes, was the live audience and concert atmosphere.

"Very few people had live audiences," Arhos said. "Suddenly we had 600 or 700 people who were shoutin' and hootin' and stomping their feet, and it really was a happening."

"It was more of an event than just a television music concert."

The live audience also caused its share of problems.

"The first year, the audience just came in off of the streets," Arhos said. "In those days there were some pretty scruffy folks out there."

Arhos recalled the time a man with a Rip Van Winkle-like beard sat in the middle of the audience floor, spraying silver paint up his nose.

"It wasn't so much that anybody cared about him, but he was getting it all over everybody else. So, we had to throw him out."

Then there was the night another man, who'd had a few beers, started heckling Larry Gatlin, and Gatlin started heckling him back.

"Larry got red as a beet, and we knew we had to do something about it," Arhos said. "One of the associate producers, who has since become an Austin police officer, picked this guy up, put him in the back of the room, gave him another beer and told him to sit there and be real quiet."

Today "Austin City Limits," produced by Austin public television station KLRU, is viewed in more than 300 markets around the country and world. While born as a showcase for country music, the show spotlights other genres, including blues, folk, Tejano, rock and jazz.

The 20th season kicks off Jan. 14 with a show starring two-time Country Music Association entertainer of the year Vince Gill and guitarist Junior Brown.

Brown, who lives in Austin, said "Austin City Limits" has become tradition for the city that calls itself "the live music capital of the world."

"It caters to the uniqueness of individual styles of music, and that's indicative of Austin. It has a loose, laid-back atmosphere, but yet it's very organized at the same time," Brown said.

Also appearing during the year will be Alan Jackson, Tammy Wynette, Shawn Colvin, Robert Earl Keen and The Neville Brothers. The season includes a bluegrass special featuring Ricky Skaggs, Larry Sparks and Ralph Stanley, and a Tejano music special.

Willie Nelson and Asleep at the Wheel will headline a Feb. 7 concert celebrating the show's 20 years on the air.

So at a time when proposed cuts to public television funding abound, how has "Austin City Limits" managed to stay afloat?

"A lot of luck, a lot of hard work. The increase in popularity of the genre that we're in," Arhos said.

IN FOCUS

Historian and author John Romer is the host of Seven Wonders of the World, a four-part series premiering Sunday, Jan. 22, on The Learning Channel.

These monuments, such as the Colossus of Rhodes, continue to influence architecture today.

In the series, Romer tours the sites of the Seven Wonders, focusing on both the archaeological and the historical aspects of these sensations.

Of the Seven Wonders, only the pyramids of Egypt still stand.

Blown Away can't keep up with Speed; The Shadow offers stylish fun

BY STEVEN ALAN MCGAW

In a summer without Speed, Stephen Hopkins' Blown Away might have been a genuine action hit. There are moments of real tension, eye-popping pyrotechnics and a terrific, flashy performance from Tommy Lee Jones.

But Speed was out there, setting the standard, at least this summer, for what a fast-paced, don't-think-too-much-about-plot actioner ought to be. Director Jan De Bont took his cue from the film's title, moving his unlikely story line even faster than the booby-trapped bus at its center. Edgy, intense performances from stars Keanu Reeves, Sandra Bullock and Dennis Hopper contribute to the manic pace.

Hopkins, on the other hand, unwisely allows Blown Away to slow down. And Jeff Bridges, while fine and intense in some scenes, brings a listlessness to the movie's quieter moments. These pauses give viewers time to ponder the film's almost ludicrous, contrived plot. Bridges also deserves sharp criticism for his ever-changing vocal characterization: Sometimes it's a thick Irish brogue, sometimes an arch-Boston accent, and often just plain Jeff. It's an amateurish and needless mistake. Bridges' lackluster turn is particularly embarrassing in comparison to his father Lloyd's small but memorable part as an Emerald Isle expatriate who knows a bit too much.

For viewers in search of sheer fun, The Shadow is just the ticket. Alec Baldwin plays Lamont Cranston, the playboy who hits bottom in a Tibetan opium den. Under the menacing tutelage of a magical master, Cranston reforms and returns to New York City determined to combat the evil that lurks in the hearts of men. Using a battery of skills, including the power to "cloud men's minds," Cranston, as The Shadow, wages war on the city's endless supply of miscreants. But he may well meet his match when a crazed descendant of Genghis Khan (John Lone) arrives in the Big Apple with meanness to spare and a three-day plan to take over the world.

Show culmination of intensive work

Young men and women parading patient steers through the show ring, herding hogs or displaying lambs are the culmination of a considerable amount of work required to put the annual Hereford Young Farmers Junior Livestock Show together.

This year's show will take place Jan. 24-28 in the Bull Barn.

Each year's show takes the efforts of several committees of Young Farmers members who organize each show, set up the auction and obtain judges.

This year, heading up the effort is Greg Urbanczyk, president of the organization.

Other general superintendents for the show are Kevin Urbanczyk, Tom Schlabs and Jeff Mercer.

Bookkeeper for the annual event is Charla Schlabs.

The first event on tap is the Steer Show. Weigh-in for the steers will be on Tuesday, Jan. 24, with the show set for Wednesday, Jan. 25.

Judging the steers this year will be David Lust, who returns to Hereford for a second year to judge the show.

Chairman of the Steer Show is Chris Urbanczyk, joined by M.D. Franks, Fay Schlabs and Jeffery Carlson.

There will be two divisions in the steer show -- English and Exotic.

Animals will be classified according to height, with the top two winners in each class to compete for Champion and Reserve Champion of division title.

The second night of the stock show will be devoted to hogs.

Weigh-in for those animals will be on Wednesday, with the hog show itself on Thursday.

Judging the hogs this year will be Jerry McLemore, who also judged last year.

Chairman of the hog show is Raymond Martinez. Joining him are Don Metcalf, Martin Carnahan, Brian Urbanczyk, Kenneth Schlabs and Wade Boren.

For the hog show, there will be eight classes -- Berkshire, Chester Whites, Durocs, Hampshires, Poland Chinas, Spots, Yorkshire and Crosses and Other Pure Breeds.

They will be classified according (See SHOW, Page 4C)

Dutton prepares for show as part of busy life

Honor student busy with school, 4-H, sports, work with show hogs

BY SHELLY SCHILLING
Staff Writer

Honor classes, football, baseball, and 4-H county council aren't enough to keep Rusty Dutton busy -- he also spends his time raising and grooming hogs for show.

Rusty will show three hogs this year. A Hampshire, a Cross, and a Duroc.

Dutton, the 15-year-old son of Bill and Teresa Dutton, spends his time these days preparing his show animals for this year's Hereford Young Farmers Stock show which starts next week.

A typical day for Dutton starts at 6 a.m. when he gets up to tend his animals and then leaves for school by 7 a.m.

After school more attention has to be paid to his animals. He feeds them, exercises them, and gives them a good brushing. After he finishes his chores, he then does his homework.

The more he "works" with his show animals the more relaxed the animal will look in the ring. Exercise is vital in making the animal look fit and toned. It also keeps them from becoming stiff. Dutton exercises his animals by walking them every day.

Dutton also has to pay close attention to their feed. Weighing the animals and watching their overall confirmation is a key in knowing if he needs to pull back on feed or really shovel it to them. When one is on the fat side, he has to hand feed the animal rather than let it self feed.

He also must watch for any illness that may infect one of the animals. He then must decide if the sick animal warrants medical attention.

Grooming is also an necessary part of the showing process. Daily brushing keeps the hogs' coats glossy and clean. This is an eye-catching strategy used by showmen.

Taking care of these hogs is much like taking care of a baby for this young man.

This isn't a recent endeavor. He has been nurturing these animals since the middle of October. That was when he purchased the animals for the sole purpose of showing them.

Dutton, who also participates in livestock judging, picks his own pigs. "I usually pick my own pigs," stated the soft spoken young man. "I've gotten pretty good at picking some hogs that place fairly well."

He is no novice to the hog business. "We used to raise our own hogs until about four years ago. So I've been around them for a long time."

When asked how he decided to participate in 4-H and show hogs, he said, "My sister Jill was in the club, and after watching her I thought it would be something I would enjoy.

In addition to the Hereford stock show, Dutton has gone to numerous jackpots (small shows with a cash reward) to show his animals. He has participated in a jackpot every weekend for about the last six weeks.

"I've done average at the jackpots, but they are good practice for the hogs and for me," he stated.

Dutton has been active in 4-H for about seven years. He started in the third grade and has continued to be active in the organization.

He started with halter calves in pre-4-H and has also shown sheep. His favorite animals to show, he admits, are hogs.

His first year in the club, he received the Rookie of the Year award. This award goes to a beginning 4-H member who shows leadership ability, participates in community work, and keeps good records for all of his projects.

"You have to keep up with what you spend on your animals, how much you feed them, and anything else you do to them," he said. In keeping these records a member must be accurate, neat, and detailed.

These records are not only kept on animal projects, but also on any other projects a member may be involved.

Along with animal projects, Dutton participates in method demonstrations, livestock judging and represents Hereford on the county council. He does community work through 4-H which includes helping (See DUTTON, Page 8C)

Getting ready for the show

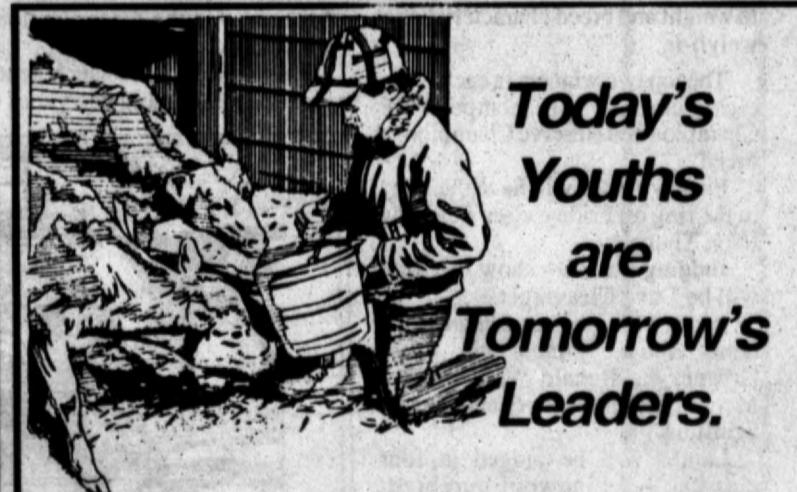

Rusty Dutton, a member of Deaf Smith 4-H, works with his pigs during an afternoon session recently. Dutton is among hundreds of area youth who have been working long hours the past several months to get their hogs, lambs and steers ready for the annual Hereford Young Farmers Junior Livestock Show, which will be held this week.

The top two winners in each of the eight classes will compete for Champion and Reserve Champion of breed.

Finally, lambs will have their day in the ring on Friday, after weighing in on Thursday.

Judging the lamb show this year will be Dave Cleavenger.

Nicky Morgan is chairman of the lamb show, joined by Mark Urbanczyk, Ronald Vasek, Mike Meiws, Donny Meiws and Dennis Schilling.

Lambs will be judged in four classes -- Finewool-purebred; Finewool-crossbred, 50 percent or more finewool; Mediumwools and all predominant crosses not in other classes; and Southdown-purebred.

Each class will have its own Champion and Reserve Champion.

In all three shows, an overall five-county grand champion and five-county reserve grand champion will be chosen.

The Grand Champion and Reserve Grand Champion entrants will be the Champion and Reserve Champion winners in each breed in the individual shows.

In case the five-county grand and/or reserve grand champion is not shown by a Deaf Smith County resident, a county champion and reserve champion will be selected.

Among the duties of the organizers of the show is the determination of rules and regulations.

These rules include such general guidelines, including entry fees ($8 per sheep and hog and $12 per steer) floor prices (set on all animals before the sale) and controls on the number, age and size of animals being entered.

the county agents with clinics, meals, and other activities the club sponsors.

The county council delegates go on several educational trips. One he remembers and enjoyed was a trip to Canyon to visit a new feed yard operation.

With all this young man has to do, he hasn't let anything get in the way of his school work.

Along with his 4-H endeavors, Rusty is very active in his school. He is enrolled in the PACE program at Hereford High School. "PACE is considered honors classes" he said. "All my classes are advanced."

He is also active in athletics. "I play strong safety in football and either catcher or second base in baseball," the 15 year old said. "I really enjoy sports."

When asked about the future, Rusty said he will probably attend San Angelo State University and major in architecture or accounting.

When asked if he ever had any real trouble with an animal, he stated, "I've only had one to die."

Last year at the Hereford Livestock Show he received Breed Champion and about four years ago one of his Hampshire hogs placed fourth at the San Antonio show.

This year he hopes his hard work pays off. He is excited and ready for the local show, but the Hereford stock show is not the end of the line for Rusty and his animals.

He has visions of San Antonio and Houston dancing in his head!

"I usually pick my own pigs. ... I've gotten pretty good at picking some hogs that place fairly well."

'94 Steer honors went to Randall County youth

By GARRY WESNER

Managing Editor

Top honors in the 1994 Hereford Young Farmers Junior Livestock Show steer competition went to Randall and Castro Counties, as 4-H members from clubs there claimed five-county Grand Champion and Reserve Champion honors.

Kyle Haymes, a member of Randall 4-H, snared top honors with his entry. He brought the 1,310-pound calf through the medium frame division, then held off the rest of the field to take the top prize.

Tye Baca, a member of Castro 4-H, was named five-county Reserve Champion. He, too, was entered in the medium frame division.

Colby Christie, who had won five-county and county Grand Champion steer honors in 1993 and 1992, topped the Deaf Smith County entries, capturing the County Grand Championship as a member of Hereford FFA.

Christie exhibited in both the small- and medium-frame divisions, capturing five-county and county champion honors in the small frame division and winning county champion honors in the medium frame division.

Rounding out the top performers in the steer show was Michael Carlson of Hereford FFA, who was named County Reserve Champion.

Judge David Lust, before naming the grand champion winner, praised all 64 entries in the steer show, saying there were quality steers throughout the divisions and classes.

He said in judging a competition, he looks first for muscle, then in finish, trying to find a good combination between the two.

The third criteria he uses for judging, Lust said, is the animal's structural correctness, which includes the angle of joints, feet, legs and how it moves around the ring.

This, he added, does not necessarily mean the same as eye appeal, which is used as a minor judging criteria.

In the showmanship competition, Carlson captured the Champion Senior Showman belt buckle, while Reserve Champion honors in the senior division went to Jeremy Blair of Hereford FFA.

Brent Carlson of Deaf Smith 4-H won Junior Showman Champion honors, while Justin Sutton of Castro 4-H won Junior Showman Reserve Champion.

Zachary Vasek of Hereford FFA was presented with the Hereford Cattle Women's First Year Steer Showmanship award.

The First Year showmanship award is presented annually by the Hereford Cattle Women to a youth

Wilson won top honors in 1994 hog competition

By GARRY WESNER
Managing Editor

It took about six hours and eight breed contests, but when the dust had settled, it was Stephanie Wilson who walked away with top honors in the 1994 Hereford Young Farmers Hog Show.

Wilson, a member of Hereford FFA, claimed five-county and county Grand Champion honors with her Hampshire hog. She showed in both the lightweight and heavyweight Hampshire divisions, claiming first place honors in both divisions.

Camille Vasek -- who showed champion entries in both the Yorkshire and Cross divisions -- fought off a case of the flu to capture five-county and county Reserve Grand Champion honors with her Cross entry.

She showed as a member of Deaf Smith 4-H.

For judge Jerry Maclemore, the proceedings began just after 4 p.m. It ended six hours and 258 hogs later with the selection of the champions and the senior and junior showmanship winners.

Cody Marsh of Hereford FFA captured first place in the junior showmanship contest, while second (See 94 HOGS, Page 12C) place went to Ryan Mercer of Randall 4-H.

In the senior showmanship competition, Miss Wilson placed first, with Colby Christie in second place.

Before announcing the Grand Champion winner, Maclemore expressed appreciation to the Hereford Young Farmers for their work in putting together the show and to the men who worked the ring, assisting the exhibitors with their animals.

He also praised the exhibitors for their hard work, dedication and neat appearance.

Maclemore said he looks for a hog to be as lean and heavy-boned as possible, adding that the middle ground between the feed buyers and packers must be reached with a hog.

The following are the placings for the 1994 hog show. Where two numbers are listed for a competitor, the first is the five-county ranking and the second is the placement among Deaf Smith County exhibitors.

Congratulations Livestock Show Participants.

Best Wishes On Your Future Successes!

Hereford State Bank has always taken great pride in recognizing outstanding achievements made by our youth. The Hereford Young Farmers Livestock Show, which gets underway this week, is certainly a fine example of accomplishment. Many hours of dedication, effort and expense will culminate as participants present their entries for judging.

We extend our congratulations to each participant and offer our best wishes for your continued involvement, and the success which is sure to follow.

Brothers took top county honors in '94 lamb show

By GARRY WESNER
Managing Editor

When the dust settled in the 1994 Hereford Young Farmers Livestock Show lamb competition, Jessica Smith of Friona FFA had walked away with her second consecutive five-county Grand Champion award.

Following Smith as five-county Reserve Champion and County Grand Champion was Colby Christie, a member of Hereford FFA.

His younger brother, Chad, brought home the County Reserve Champion buckle.

Smith won for the second time with a medium wool entry, driving her 144-pound entry through the Class 5 competition, then beating out the other class winners for the five-county breed title.

She then topped all other breed winners to claim the Grand Championship.

In addition to following her in the overall winnings, Colby Christie claimed five-county reserve champion and county champion honors in the medium wool division.

The two then capped off their Siamese twin-like evening by finishing one-two in the Senior Showmanship competition as well.

There, however, their roles were reversed, as Colby Christie was crowned first place Senior Showman, with Smith coming in second. They topped a field of 20 entrants in the showmanship competition.

In the Junior Showmanship competition, Ashley Bartlett of Randall 4-H topped a field of 26 competitors in the open event.

Second place went to Wesley Wright of Castro 4-H.

The showmanship competitions were open to anyone who wanted to participate at the request of judge Storm Gerhardt.

Gerhardt was judging the sheep competition for the second year in a row.

In selecting Smith's lamb as five-county Grand Champion, Gerhardt said it was "big and heavy and heavy-muscled," which was what he wanted in a lamb.

The two youths' performance in the senior showmanship round was praised by Gerhardt, who said, "these two kids get really everything out of their lambs nearly all the time."

Of Christie, he said, "this young man does as good a job of that (keeping his lamb's ears up) as I've seen," which gives the judge a good look at the lamb's neck.

The following are the final placings in the 1994 HYF lamb show. Where two numbers appear together, the first is the five-county ranking and the second is the competitor's finish among Deaf Smith County competitors.

National Geographic marks three decades of TV filmmaking

BY SUZANNE GILL

Since the broadcast of Americans on Everest in 1965, the National Geographic Society's TV specials have been the viewers' guide to breathtaking adventures worldwide. No other series has so successfully portrayed the excitement of the human encounter with nature, or communicated the passion of scientists for their work.

National Geographic Specials have aired in uninterrupted succession on two commercial networks and PBS over three decades. NBC's acquisition last summer of broadcast rights to the series was considered a coup and a sign of the network's own viability.

Geographic's NBC years begin Wednesday, Jan. 25, with an anniversary retrospective. 30 Years of National Geographic Specials recalls both the spectacular vistas from the world's highest peak and the diminutive but deadly encounter between a spider and a scorpion. It revisits the discoveries of anthropologist Louis Leakey and his most famous protege, Jane Goodall.

Goodall arrived at Tanzania's Gombe Stream Chimpanzee Reserve in other - only on sets.

"We have the same kind of nature, and we like the same kind of things. We agree on the judgment of other people, and our background is the same: he comes from the south, and I come from the south. We speak the same language."

Born Sofia Scicolone, Loren grew up fatherless in the slums of Naples, suffering the hardships of war and the deprivations of postwar.

A skinny little girl, she was nicknamed "Stechetto" (the Stick). By age 14, she was competing in beauty contests with her striking, brown-eyed looks. Her ambitious mother hustled her up to Rome, where both worked as extras in "Quo Vadis" and other movies.

"I was 16 when I met Carlo," she recalled. "I grew up under the lights."

Under Ponti's tutelage, she transformed from the raw beauty into an actress of great style and emotional depth.

Theirs was a long romance, troubled because he could not be divorced from his wife in Italy. Finally he divorced her in Mexico, and he and Loren were married in 1957. Because he was considered a bigamist in Italy, they eventually renounced their citizenship and became French citizens. After an annulment, they remarried legally in 1966.

There's a running gag in "Ready to Wear" in which Loren keeps fudging on her age. Loren herself is an unabashed 60.

"Everybody knows how old I am," she shrugged. "Why should I try to hide it?"

She is a shining example for sixtysomethings.

How does she stay that way?

"No secrets," she replied. "I don't do anything in particular. I exercise a little bit. I am a little bit careful about food, like everybody else. You let yourself go, it's bad."

"Still, I love pasta, I love bread,

I love to eat. It makes me feel very good when I do."

Over the years she has acquired a remarkable serenity, about her life, her family, her career, her fame. She responds graciously to questions she has heard hundreds of times. She also has come to terms with her celebrity.

"People recognize you, and they want to talk to you and ask for photographs, and I think it's something very nice," she reasoned. "I'm never bothered by these kinds of things."

"When you start in this business, you want to make it. You need people who like you. Once you've made it, if people bother you when they ask for autographs, I think it's very unfair for them, and for yourself, too. After all, you fight to be popular. Then if you don't like being popular, I think it's nonsense."

SOAP TALK

ATWT's Reed forms New Image Committee

BY CANDACE HAVENS

There are some people who talk about making changes in the way daytime television is presented to the public, and then there are others like Margaret Reed who are doing something about it.

Reed, who plays Shannon on As the World Turns, began her campaign when she was asked to announce a special segment during the 1994 daytime Emmy Awards.

"I was very flattered when they asked Michael Swan (Duncan, ATWT), Tamara Tunie (Jessica, ATWT) and myself to be on the awards show," Reed says. "I got the script on a Friday, and it said, 'Thank you so much for doing this. We will be taking a lighthearted look at the Lorena Bobbitt and Menendez brothers trials.'

"I could barely read on from there because I was just livid. It had nothing to do with soap operas. Their point was that the 6 o'clock news is stranger than anything that happens on the soaps."

Reed objected to the fact that the network wanted to glorify the violence of the crimes. "The whole thing was really tasteless, and it was also demeaning."

"We want to get rid of that old stereotype that soaps are sex. Granted there are still some networks that sell the shows that way, but most of us are trying to move away from that kind of thinking."

Reed called her producers and told them that she could not do the awards show, and they were supportive of her actions.

Soon after the awards, Reed began her campaign to change the image of daytime television. She and some of her daytime friends formed the New Image Committee. "The daytime Emmys does not have to be a show that mocks the industry 't is meant to honor," she says firmly.

Reed says that the New Image Committee has representatives from every show. The group is also working closely with Dick Clark Productions, which will produce the show this year.
