Their chief dilemma is deciding what to leave out among the provisions in the House's $350 billion 'Contract With America" package.

Finance Chairman William Roth, R-Del., presented a proposal to make the per-child credit retroactive to Jan. 1 but end it after 1999. Single parents earning up to $75,000 and couples making up to $110,000 would be eligible.

But Republican senators are contemplating a provision that would subject capital gains to the alternative minimum tax, effectively resulting in a rate for the wealthiest investors of 21 percent, said a GOP source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

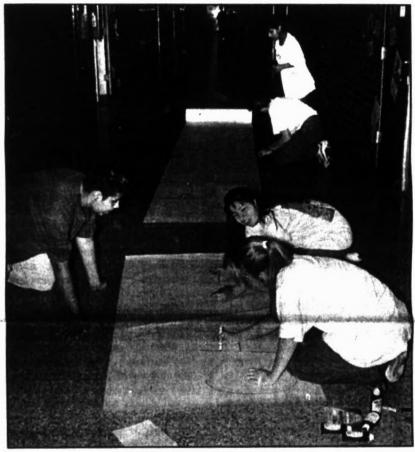

Senate Republicans also are looking at making deductions for Individual Retirement Accounts more widely available.

The Senate plan also seeks to phase out some corporate tax breaks, such as the credit for manufacturers in Puerto Rico and other U.S. territories. It would extend other tax breaks, such as credits for research and development and the creation of drugs to treat rare diseases.

Gingrich, they said, made the calls because a combination of recent developments left him uneasy about the status of the GOP race.

Economy shows small Sept. jump

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Consumer 2.6 percent boost in Social Security benefits come January, the government reported today.

The increase in benefits for the 47 million Americans receiving Social Security and Supplemental Security Income benefits is down slightly from the 2.8 percent increase they got this year. It will be the second smallest advance in the 21 years the government has been providing annual cost of living adjustments.

The small gains the past two years reflect the fact that inflation has today's combination of reports with remained well under control despite the fact that the economy is in the fifth year of an expansion.

For the year so far, inflation at the consumer level has been rising at an annual rate of 2.8 percent. The adjustment for Social Security is based on a slightly different measurement that tracks inflation from the third quarter of last year.

In another report, the Commerce Department said retail sales rose 0.3 percent in September. It was the second straight gain and the fourth advance in the last five months.

Analysts said the CPI and retail sales reports depicted an economy that had achieved the Federal Reserve's hoped-for "soft landing," in which growth slowed to a sustainable level that would keep prices under control.

'This is the Federal Reserve's prices rose a tiny 0.1 percent in finest hour. It managed to slow the September as a big drop in energy expansion before inflation emerged, prices kept inflation well under but not slow it so much that a control. The modest increase in prices recession emerged," said Robert so far this year will translate into a Dederick, economic consultant at Northern Trust Co. in Chicago. "The Fed has the economy on a Financial markets applauded strong demand for Treasury's benchmark 30-year bond pushing the yield down to 6.37 percent, the lowest level since February 1994.

The 2.6 percent cost of living increase will mean that the average monthly Social Security check of $702 will increase to $720 next year.

Some powerful members of Congress, trying to meet the goal of a balanced budget by the year 2002, have suggested that the cost of living adjustment be shaved by 1 percentage point. That would reduce next year's average increase by $7 per month.

Excluding the volatile food and energy sectors, prices in the so-called 'core rate" of inflation were up just 0.2 percent, the fifth straight month at this moderate pace.

AUSTIN (AP) - Seventy-six percent of Texas students would fail an Algebra I end-of-course test under a 70 percent passing standard being considered by the State Board of Education.

Board Chairman Jack Christie of Houston said Thursday he expects the panel to phase-in the passing standard in order to give students and teachers a chance to polish their skills. The board is expected to vote on the matter Friday.

'We knew these scores were going to be in this realm, but our job is two years down the road, how many of these children will be at the 70 percent standard because we're holding to a high standard and not watering that down," he said.

The predicted 24 percent passing rate on the exam, given a 70 percent passing standard, comes from a benchmark administration of the test given to 226,372 students in grades, -12 in May.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: For the past couple of weeks I have had pain in my heel. I was told this is a calcium spur. I would like to know what that really is, how a person gets a calcium spur and what cure is available. Is surgery the only answer? - L.C.

ANSWER: You rarely need surgery to get rid of a spur, which is nothing more than a protective calcium thickening at a point of inflammation.

In your case, the inflammation apparently has occurred in the heel portion of the plantar fascia. That is a tough sheet of thick tissue undergirding the foot, from the heel to the toe supports. The heel is a common point of fascia inflammation, given the constant buffeting it absorbs.

The body lays down extra calcium over the inflamed point to guard it from further aggravation. The pain, in fact, originates in the tissue, and not in the spur.

Most often, relief lies in removing the fascia inflammation, first with anti-inflammation drugs such as aspirin, ibuprofen or indomethacin.

Then you attack the real problem: the irritant. Often the simplest heel insert is enough to make a heel spur a thing of the past.

Some patients require a shot of cortisone to get rid of a spur. Eventually, even with such conservative treatment, the spur and its cause usually can be subdued.

Couple disregard rude comments

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My husband and I are both in our 30s, and we have decided not to have children.

This was not an impetuous decision. We gave it a great deal of consideration. Although most people would regard this as a very private matter, you would not believe the number of people who have the nerve to ask, "When are you going to start a family?" When we tell them we aren't planning to start a family, we receive unbelievably rude comments.

I cannot count the number of times I have been told, "Oh, you will change your mind." Or worse yet, "Your life won't be complete," and "You'll regret it later on." Some family members have called me selfish and said I would pay a price for it when I'm older.

Has a law been passed that requires all married women to have children? We have discussed this with other couples who have chosen to remain childless, and they have experienced the same insulting treatment.

My husband and I have a very happy marriage and are confident that we have made the decision that is right for us. I can't understand why so many people are interested in our personal choices and why they think they should offer an opinion. We have tried to be polite, but it's gotten to the point that I'm ready to yell, "Mind your own business!" at the next person who asks that question.

Any better suggestions? --Childless By Choice

DEAR C.B.C.: The best way to respond to totally tasteless questions is to look the clod in the eye and say, "Why would you ask about something that is so intensely personal?" Don't wait for an answer. Just move on.

The next letter is about another question that seemed totally appropriate:

DEAR ANN LANDERS: When was going through a divorce a couple of years ago, all the papers were prepared ahead of time by the lawyers. I asked for a no-fault divorce with no settlement of any kind.

My ex-husband and I were called before the judge who asked us a few routine questions, which he read from a piece of paper. I was stopped cold when the judge asked, "Are you pregnant at this time?" The clerk looked startled, and I was stunned. I was 80 years old, and my ex-husband was 90.

Herd freshmen rush past Dumas

Hereford's freshman football team got three touchdowns from tailback Mark Rodriguez and spanked the Dumas freshmen 34-18 Thursday in Hereford.

In other games played Thursday, the Herd sophomores lost 33-12 to Amarillo High in Whiteface Stadium, and the Herd junior varsity lost 20-6 in Dumas. Coaches reported no details on the JV game.

In the freshman game, Rodriguez started the scoring with an 11-yard run, then added a 57-yard scoring run.
Both tries for extra points failed, but Hereford led 12-0 at the end of the touchdowns in the fourth quarter.

Dumas pulled within 12-6 before Hereford's Thomas Suarez caught an 18-yard TD pass from Chris Torres. Torres' pass for two points was tipped, but Herd offensive lineman Jerry Garcia alertly grabbed the ball and scored for a 20-6 lead.

Hereford stretched the lead to 34-6 in the third quarter on Rodriguez' four-yard run, a two-point pass from Torres to Brent Bullard and a one-yard TD run by Leo Balderez.

The Herd sophomores fought the bigger Amarillo High team to a standstill until the closing minutes of the first half, when the sophomore Sandies scored on a 50-yard pass play to turn a 13-12 lead into a 19-12 lead. AHS added two unanswered TDs in the second half.

Amarillo High led 13-0 at the end of the first quarter, but Hereford came back on two touchdowns by Henry Hernandez. He ran four yards for one score, then recovered a fumble to set up the second TD run: a 17-yarder on fourth-down-and-one.

Dallas police force prepares for rowdy UT, Oklahoma fans

By MARK BABINECK Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) - Rivalry without so much revelry is the goal of Dallas police as the Texas-Oklahoma football weekend kicks off the teams' 90th contest.

Traditionally, yelling and cheering hordes would have thronged Commerce Street in downtown Dallas Friday night. But this year will be the third straight in which the mob is a thing of the past.

City officials say they want Longhorns and Sooners alike to feel welcome, but realize there are limits to the fun.

"We've tried to change the direction into a festive kind of rally instead a drunken brawl kind of rally," said Sgt. Jim Chandler, Dallas police spokesman. "Anytime you get 40,000 or 50,000 people in an area, you're never going to eliminate the campuses.

Dallas police reported 35 arrests downtown on last year's Texas-OU Friday night, 28 of which were for public intoxication or drunken driving. It marked the fewest game-related arrests made on the pregame Friday, but rainy weather had cut into the crowds.

Chandler said police average about six arrests downtown on a normal Friday night.

Police report the high-water arrest mark occurred in 1968, when 563 partyers landed in jail.

The hoopla surrounding the game Saturday between No. 13 Oklahoma and No. 18 Texas stems from what might be college football's most celebrated rivalry. They've played every year since 1929 in Dallas, which is roughly equidistant between the Austin and Norman, Okla.,

Former Michigan coach Bo Schembechler once called it the "most intense" rivalry he's ever seen. Ex-Sports Illustrated writer Dan Jenkins has proclaimed it "college football's ... most frenzied pageant.

The Longhorns lead the series 52-33-4, but this year marks just the 13th time since 1945 that at least one of the entrants isn't undefeated before visiting Daflas on October's second Saturday.

The teams first played to a 28-2 Texas victory at Austin in 1900, and first met in Dallas in 1912. They played in Houston in 1913 before resuming a trip to Dallas for the next five years.

UT Athletic Director L. Theo Bellmont invited Oklahoma for the State Fair clash in 1929. It's been there ever since.

That's what he says. And the Dallas Cowboys owner says he's not going to let the league harass his

Jones, the Cowboys' rebellious owner, was furious Thursday over the league's ruling that he restructure Deion Sanders' $35 million contract. |

"This is not about Deion, what this is about is sticking it to the Cowboys," Jones said. "They're trying to intimidate the Cowboys, they're trying to be a bully. It's so transparent that the NFL is being selective."

Last month, Jones vowed to fight a $300 million lawsuit filed by the NFL in an effort to stop him from signing any more licensing deals without league approval. Jones defied the league by agreeing to separate deals with Nike, Inc., Pepsi and American Express.

Jones plans to fight the NFL's objection to Sanders' contract as soon as he finds out from the league what's specifically wrong with it.

"The NFL has chosen to change the salary cap rules in mid-stream," Jones said. "The first time we step out and use the system for a highprofile free agent, the NFL objects to it. It's blatant subjectivity.

The league has conditionally approved Sanders' seven-year deal but said it violates the spirit of the $37.1 million-per-team cap, according to Harold Henderson, the NFL's director of labor relations.

Jones disagrees. "I've lost a lot of faith in the NFL because of this," Jones said. "We will fight it. This gives me a lot of resolve. This is very disturbing." Technically, Sanders will make the NFL base salary of $178,000 for the first three years, but his pay will average $5.5 million per year including his nearly $13 million signing bonus. 'Sanders' contract is structured to avoid counting under the salary cap a very large portion of the compensation which Deion is to receive for his services during the early years of his contract," Henderson said.

"In this respect, Deion's contract stands apart from every other in the league. In our view, the contract as currently structured involves salary cap circumvention.'

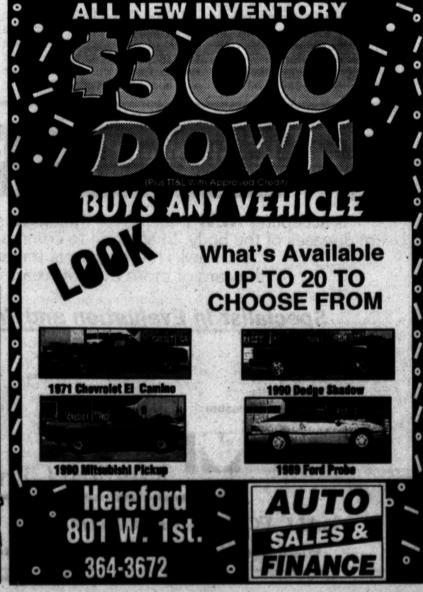

The decision was opposed by the NFL Players Association, which said the league has "no basis for challenging the contract in any way," according to Dick Berthelsen, the union's general counsel.

"The league has already approved contracts for other players who have used the same techniques, including Andre Rison and Eric Allen," he added. "I don't know if this will be settled before the season is over. This one is a real mystery."

Although the NFL is willing to let Sanders play, his left ankle will keep him out of action Sunday against San Diego. Sanders said the NFL "should leave Jerry Jones alone. This better Wendell Shelton, supervisor of officials for the SWC, did not immediately return calls to his office Thursday by The Associated Press.

The most egregious call to Aggie fans came in the fourth quarter. Tech's backup quarterback, Sone Cavazos, appeared to fumble the ball, which was scooped up by Reggie Brown and run in for a score. The play was called back when officials ruled the ball dead. TV replays showed the ball pop loose before Cavazos was down.

Power meets power in ALCS Cincy prepares

By CHUCK MELVIN

AP Sports Writer CLEVELAND (AP) - It may or may not be humanly possible to hit a ball off the huge left-field scoreboard at Jacobs Field. No one has come close yet.

What it will probably take is somebody with a monster fastball (Randy Johnson?) making a mistake against a monster hitter (Albert Belle?) in a monster game (tonight?).

"Albert Belle is a power hitter, and I'm a power pitcher. I've always challenged everybody with my fastball," said Johnson, the Seattle ace who finally gets to pitch against the Cleveland Indians in tonight's Game 3 of the AL championship series.

The 6-foot-10 left-hander was forced to sit out the first two games because he was weary from working overtime. He beat California with a three-hitter in the one-game playoff that clinched the AL West championship on Oct. 2, then beat the Yankees four days later to start the Mariners' comeback from an 0-2 deficit.

He also won the decisive fifth game against New York in relief,

Because the Indians managed a split of their two games in Seattle by winning 5-2 Wednesday, Johnson on Friday will be making his fourth pressure-packed appearance in 12 days. If he loses, the Mariners are in deep trouble, because they could be eliminated from the best-of-7 series before his turn comes up again; if he wins, they're in great shape.

Johnson welcomes the opportunity, because it comes with the respect he has earned as the game's most intimidating pitcher.

"It doesn't bother me," he said. "I think that is a responsibility I took on when I became the pitcher that I was - the same responsibility that I think a Greg Maddux, a Dave Stewart, Orel Hershiser or Roger Clemens has. Those guys are leaders on their pitching staffs, and that's a responsibility you have as a pitcher."

Always the owner of a scary fastball, Johnson has taken his game to a new level by sharpening his control of a slider that left-handed batters would like to see outlawed.

He is so effective against lefties, allowing one run in three innings last Cleveland manager Mike Hargrove will bench first baseman Paul Sorrento and third baseman Jim Thome, who combined for 50 home runs and 152 RBIs this year.

They'll be replaced by a rookie, Herbert Perry, at first base, and a career .255 hitter, Alvaro Espinoza,

"The reason you put the righthanders in there is that left-handers all year hit about a buck-twenty (.120) off of him," Hargrove said Thursday night during a workout at Jacobs Field. "You've got to give yourself every chance in the world, and even though we do have good left-handed hitters in Sorrento and Thome, I think right-handers have a better chance against him. That's proven out by the statistics."

Espinoza has a .304 career average against Johnson (7-for-23), while Perry went 2-for-4 in their only meeting this season.

Johnson beat the Indians 5-3 on July 7 on an eight-hitter. He struck out 13 and walked none, numbers that reflected the vast improvement he's made in his control over the years; his ERA has come down steadily, to a league-leading 2.48 this year, and his walks have plummeted from a league- off-speed stuff."

worst 144 in 1992 to 65 this year.

"I'd kind of like to start being known as a pitcher," he said. "Over the last couple of games, I have had to pitch. I haven't had the overpowering fastball to my standards.

"I think the nicest comment came from Greg Maddux when he said that I've turned into more of a pitcher. I take a lot of pride in getting batters out now by thinking as a pitcher and not a guy who just goes out there and throws 97 mph and tries to overpower everybody."

So Belle, whose bat is quick enough to catch up to almost any fastball, will have to do more than simply wait for a fat one he can drive off the scoreboard, which is 430 feet from home and about 60 feet above field level at its closest point. Belle has homered off Johnson three times in 36 career at-bats, but Johnson has struck him out 13 times.

"I realize that batters time your fastball, and I will pitch him accordingly," Johnson said. "I don't anticipate staying with a steady diet of fastballs. I'll have to throw some

to face Maddux

By JOE KAY AP Sports Writer ATLANTA (AP) - Thousands of arms will chop in unison as Greg Maddux takes his bat-boy looks and Cy Young arm to the mound at Atlanta-Fulton County

Over in the visitors' dugout, the Cincinnati Reds will be practicing their new mantra: Don't worry, be scrappy.

The atmosphere will be a whole lot different - and the stakes a whole lot higher - when the NL playoffs resume tonight on a field where they conceivably could end.

The Atlanta Braves will be playing in front of a chanting crowd instead of empty seats and they'll have the league's best pitcher on the mound as they try for a 3-0 lead in the best-of-7 NL championship series.

Two extra-inning wins in disinterested Cincinnati had the Braves dancing long before they got back to town. Now comes the opportunity to celebrate another NL pennant at home.

'Hopefully we'll have about 50,000 fans with the Tomahawk Chop going nine innings," first baseman Fred McGriff said. "When I used to be with San Diego and we would come into Atlanta, it was very tough. From the first inning on, people were chopping and everything.

"In the last few years, it seemed people mellowed out a little bit. They're used to winning now. I hope they're fired up."

That would make it tougher yet for the Reds, a team already facing the longest odds possible. No team has ever lost the first two NL championship games on its home field and come back to win the series · And they've fallen to 0-2 without facing the Braves' and the league's best pitcher. If they want to retain any hope of winning the series, they've got to beat Maddux.

"It's not a pleasant thought," Reds manager Davey Johnson

But it's not an impossible thought, and that's the main thing keeping the Reds' hopes alive. They spent Thursday comforting themselves with two salient facts: Maddux becomes merely good instead of great in the playoffs, and the Reds have beaten him more times than he's beaten them.

The three-time Cy Young winner turns into just another good pitcher in the postseason. Heading into this year's playoffs, Maddux was 1-2 with an 8.10 ERA in two games for the Chicago Cubs in 1989 and two for Atlanta in 1993.

Maddux made two starts against Colorado in the playoffs' first round. He gave up three earned runs in seven innings for a no-decision in Game 1, and four earned runs and 10 hits while winning the clinching fourth game.

"We're so spoiled, me included, by what he does that we don't expect him to give up anything. Really though, he's pitched pretty good," manager Bobby Cox said.

Hico thriving with thinner playbook

AP Sports Writer
DALLAS (AP) - Hico coach Kevin Hall really enjoyed seeing his players line up in all sorts of goofy forma-tions, trying every imaginable gadget play and still gobbling up yards and How kooky were the Tigers? They had 80 formations in their playbook and used as many as 40 in one game. Everybody had fun with it, especially because Hico usually won.

But this past offseason Hall realized a change was needed. His roster had thinned, the stars who fueled that high-powered offense were gone and to remain successful the new emphasis would have to be on defense.

So far, it's worked. Hico is 4-0-1, ranked No. 10 in Class 1A and has the stingiest defense among the lowest three classes in the area, according to the latest statistics compiled by the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Hall, however, isn't convinced his overhaul is a total success.

"I won't know until about 10 o'clock Friday night," he said.
The barometer Hall is waiting for is four quarters against Crawford, ranked No. 7 and Hico's top rival for the District 16-A title.

Their showdown is one of many this weekend that could go a long way across the state head into their first full weekend of district play.

Crawford (4-1) has won the last three games against Hico. Those also are the only three meetings between the schools, which were thrown into the same district in 1992.

Getting past Hico helped Crawford take the district title and run with it the last few years. The Pirates reached the quarterfinals in 1992, the semifinals in 1993 and the finals last Crawford began this season ranked 10th and moved as high as No. 5 before losing 14-7 to 2A Valley Mills in the third week. The Pirates have bounced back by beating Waco Reicher 26-6 and last weekend taking out Abbott 46-0.

'We've got a real young team," said Crawford coach Robert Murphy, who is using 10 sophomores and one freshman to replace the 11 seniors from last year's team. "Every time we just about think we've found our team, we've had to readjust. I don't think we're as good as we're going to be later in the year.'

Writer got eyes opened with journey to Ecuador

By MARY CAMPBELL AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Bill Mosher was a free-lance writer in 1988 when a magazine assigned him to write about some Boston surgeons and nurses who used their vacations to perform free facial surgery on children in Ecuador.

The charity of those doctors and nurses changed the lives of children whose families thought cleft lips meant "child of the devil."

It also changed the life of Bill

"It opened up for me a whole new world where just regular folks were having incredible experiences through helping other people," Mosher says. "It seemed dramatic and powerful. It didn't seem corny. I became fascinated with why they did it."

That fascination inspired him to produce "The Visionaries," a 13-part TV series airing on PBS stations starting in September and October.

The series is about people who devote themselves to service instead of aiming for money, power or celebrity. It's about people like:

-Thelma King Thiel, who lost her son Dean to liver disease 23 years ago and then founded the first liver research foundation. Now with the Hepatitis Foundation International, she lectures about prevention of liver disease and comforts and assists

-Judy Mayotte, a former nun, an unpaid advocate for displaced people who works with Refugees International. Mosher and a cameraman were with her in the Sudan, filming, when a plane dropped bags of food - off target. Mayotte was hit; a leg was later amputated. The cameraman ran to help her and Mosher picked up the a children's hospital in Haiti, a self-sufficiency program for Lakota Sioux in South Dakota and an orphanage farm in Kenya.

The idea of the series, Mosher says by telephone from his home in Cape Cod, Mass., is "to show these can be powerful, dramatic stories and connect with viewers without making them feel pity. None of these shows deal with pity at all."

Mosher thinks a narrator pointing out suffering people and relating facts and figures about them conjures up pity. So he uses no narrator. However, actor Sam Waterston introduces each episode. Waterston would accept no fee and paid his own travel costs.

The series doesn't deal with politics but does include people whose motivation is religious.

One show focuses on the Rev. Xavier Di Nicolo, a Catholic priest who befriends children abandoned by their families in Bogota, Colombia. 'He started with drop-in centers where street kids could get a shower and hot meal," Mosher says. "If they seemed to want to get off drugs, he started a program.

"Father Xavier got the government of Colombia to give him a quarter-million acres of land where he's building an agriculture school, farms and a city of children."

Mosher didn't go directly from his epiphany in Ecuador to TV. First, he stopped seeking assignments from corporate magazines and began pitching ideas to nonprofit organizations' newsletters. Eventually, he produced his first TV series, for PBS, traveling all over the world for the Stobart Foundation and its project to encourage young artists to paint from nature.

But Mosher wanted to return to the uplifting feeling he'd had in Ecuador two philanthropy magazines. One printed two lines. As a result, Mosher got applications from 700 organizations. He and his wife winnowed them down to 30, then to 13. They didn't encounter any phonies, he says. "Maybe we were lucky."

This time, nobody was bankrolling Mosher. He got grants from small foundations interested in individual show topics, used frequent-flyer miles, savings and credit cards. Production people from his previous TV series volunteered editing equipment and used their influence to get him discounts on camera rentals.

"From the beginning, we really were able to accept the idea we didn't know how it was going to happen and just involved ourselves in the daily act of producing the show," Mosher says.
"We didn't have a business plan. If we worked and kept producing shows, it would happen. And it did."

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP)--Dr. Joyce Brothers has a lot to show for her maternal instincts: a broken nose, chipped teeth, a busted lip, a concussion--and an unharmed granddaughter.

The 66-year-old psychologist took a spill during a sled-dog ride in the Eagle River-Chugiak area, forcing her to cancel a lecture Tuesday at the Alaska Center for the Performing

A dogfight broke out Saturday when a man walking an Alaskan malamute approached their all-terrain vehicle, which was being pulled by a team of sled dogs. It tipped over and Ms. Brothers and her 9-year-old granddaughter were dumped on the

"I was protecting my granddaughter. When you're a mother or a grandmother, you do these things automatically," Ms. Brothers said in a telephone interview from her office in Fort Lee, NJ. "My granddaughter had not a scratch.

The 48-year-old Southern Baptist preacher suffers from a degenerative at a moment's notice, so they'll call at age 15. The disease may have stolen most of his eyesight, but not his sense of humor.

"Most of the people could take a nap while I'm preaching and I'd never know if they were awake or asleep," he says with a grin.

Since 1984, Keel has served as pastor of Prosperity Baptist Church, a stately white temple on a hill whose soaring steeple has been a beacon for folks living near this Ozarks burg since 1843.

Despite limited vision, Keel performs weddings, funerals, baptisms and all the other functions of a typical minister.

"I try to memorize as much as I can, especially with weddings," he says. "At funerals, when at all possible I'll have someone else read the obituary because they are lengthy." Using magnified glasses, Keel can read large print held close to his face.

A device that enlarges print on a computer-like screen allows him to study religious materials. For sermons, he writes notes in large letters on index cards, but says he rarely uses them. "I have a supergiant-print Bible,"

Award of Nobel Peace Prize called message from committee in protest of nuclear testing

By DOUG MELLGREN Associated Press Writer

OSLO, Norway (AP) - Sending a message of protest against nuclear tests, a Nobel committee awarded its 1995 peace prize today to British physicist Joseph Rotblat and the group he helped found to rid the world of atomic arms.

The committee cited Rotblat, 86, and the Pugwash Conferences on Science and World Affairs for their efforts to "diminish the part played by nuclear arms in international politics and in the longer run to climinate such arms."

They have worked to get scientists to "take responsibility for their inventions," out of a "desire to see all nuclear arms destroyed and, ultimately, in a vision of other solutions to international disputes than war," the Nobel citation read.

"I'm delighted," the Polish-born Rotblat told BBC TV. "I still haven't overcome the shock. ... But I really feel it is good for the scientific community to have a scientist who has been honored for peace work."

The Norwegian Nobel committee noted that it awarded the $1 million prize to Rotblat and his group 50 years after the United States dropped two atomic bombs on Japan.

The Nobel Prize committee chairman condemned France and China for continuing to test nuclear the world's nuclear powers," he said. "Of course it's more current this year, among things, because of the new nuclear tests in the Pacific."

French President Jacques Chirac resumed nuclear tests in the South Pacific last month despite international condemnation. Beijing continues to test nuclear weapons in western China, ignoring Western protests.

Jacques Rummelhardt, a spokesman for the French foreign ministry, congratulated the Nobel winners but defended France's tests.

"France is very much in favor of disarmament and the elimination of all weapons, including nuclear weapons," Rummelhardt told Associated Press Television. "But this is possible only when security is assured. Therefore, the French policy has only one aim - the establishment of a security climate in France and in all of the world."

Greenpeace in France praised the award as a "fantastic decision" that sends a strong message to the French and Chinese governments.

The peace prize was the second Nobel this year to send a direct political statement. On Wednesday, two Americans and a Dutchman won the chemistry prize for alerting the world about ozone depletion.

Rotblat, a nuclear physicist and professor emeritus of physics at the University of London, is president of the Pugwash Movement and the most is a sort of protest against testing of important figure in the conferences'

He was the only scientist to resign from the Manhattan Project before it "This is also a message to all of developed the first atomic bomb when it became clear Germany was not developing a nuclear weapon.

"Nowadays science plays a very important role in the world, it can almost decide the destiny of mankind," Rotblat told BBC radio

"And therefore it is particularly important for scientists to realize what is the impact of their work, and to do something if they feel that this impact could be detrimental to the community. And this is what we have been doing from the beginning when we started the Pugwash movement."

"Our aim is now for the complete elimination of these (nuclear) weapons," he said.

The main problem now, Rotblat said, is not proliferation, but the threat of terrorists acquiring nuclear weapons, "then trying to blackmail the rest of the world."

Forty years ago in London, Rotblat and 10 other scientists issued a manifesto declaring that researchers must take responsibility for their creations, such as the atomic bomb.

"The manifesto laid the foundation for the Pugwash Conferences,' the citation said.

"The Conferences ... have underlined the catastrophic consequences of the use of the new weapons," the citation said. "They have brought together scientists and decision-makers to collaborate across political divides on constructive proposals for reducing the nuclear

The anti-nuclear group, based in London, was founded in 1957 in Pugwash, Nova Scotia. Pugwash takes its name from the Indian word "pagwechk," which means "shallow water" or "shoal."

Others seen as top contenders for this year's prize were the men behind the Northern Ireland peace process, and former President Jimmy Carter for his globe-trotting mediation.

"I'm sure the Nobel committee had all the facts and made the right decision," Carter said after he returned from an early-morning jog in Atlanta.

The committee has long been concerned about nuclear weapons. In 1985, it gave the prize to the International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War and in 1962 honored American Linus Pauling for his anti-nuclear efforts.

Last year's laureates were PLO leader Yasser Arafat, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres of Israel for promoting Mideast peace.

The peace prize caps a week of Nobel announcements.

Last week, Irish poet Seamus Heaney won the literature prize. American researchers Edward B. Lewis and Eric F. Wieschaus, and German Christiane Nuesslein-Volhard won the medicine prize. American Robert E. Lucas Jr got the economics award, and Americans Martin L. Perl and Frederick Reines won in physics.

On Wednesday, Dutchman Paul Crutzen and Americans Mario Molina and Sherwood Rowland won the chemistry prize for their work on ozone.

The prizes will be awarded Dec. 10, the anniversary of the death of Alfred Nobel, who used his fortune from inventing dynamite to create the ignited into a huge blaze late Thursday.

Authorities had evacuated residents six to eight blocks to the north and west of the blaze at Master Made Feeds near downtown because of concerns about smoke and sparks. The fire started about 10:30 p.m.

"Now, they're just putting out the last of the fire, the hot spots," Rose Orta, a dispatcher with the Grapevine police and fire department, said at about 4 a.m. today.

The blaze was being fought by numerous North Texas fire departments, but all fire units loaned by nearby cities had gone and evacuated residents were back in their homes. Ms. Orta said.

No one was injured and there was no immediate concern about nearby Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, Ms. Orta said.

Mitch Waters, owner of Master Made Feeds, said the fire began in the feed mill and burned the operation's warehouse. He said a nearby 13-story steel and concrete grain elevator didn't catch fire.

Waters said the flames could be seen from "probably a block away." He said that the warehouse is a wooden structure, with a flat tar roof, which is "probably the reason it's burned so quickly.

Waters, who owns a feed store on the property and leases the warehouse and mill, said Master Made has been operating in Grapevine for 25 years,

Waters said a police officer notified him that TU Electric intended to cut off electricity to some

Hints from Heloise

Dear Heloise: I accidentally spilled some bleach and it splashed on my new bathmat.

So, I took a couple of strands of the pile, went to the crafts store and matched it to some fabric paint.

I used a very stiff brush (like a toothbrush) and painted all the bleached areas, blending well. I let the mat sit for two days to set the cold water. It worked! I did have to retouch two small areas where I

You can't tell there were any bleach spots at all. What a savings! I wish I had thought of it before. I know everyone has had this happen at least once.

Even tile cleaners have bleach in them. — Betsy B., Lancaster, Calif. How smart and crafty you are! Someone else may now be able to repair a kitchen or bath mat instead of replacing it! Thanks for your great money-saving hint. — Heloise

Dear Heloise: When putting small brackets on backs of pictures to hang on the wall, use a little tacky glue to stick the brackets in place. Then the little nails stick to them and also make it real easy to tack or hammer the nails in. — Carol Feldhaus, Howard, S.D.

RINSING SHOWER TILES Dear Heloise: The cleaning of shower tile is one of my least favorite

After scrubbing the tile surfaces, I found rinsing was a breeze by using a gallon-size garden watering can. By directing the spout across the top, it's easy to guide the water where you need it. — Yvonne Lynch, Phoenix, Ariz.

Dear Heloise: Your column is read and enjoyed by many Americans every day. We are hopeful that some of your articles can be beneficial to

As you know, most women love to shop, my wife included. I have placed a sturdy pasteboard box with a lid in the trunk of her car. When she shops, especially at the grocery store and farmers' markets, the box and lid are filled. Those items that may turn over, spill or roll are contained. The trunk will remain clean.

It is hoped that this suggestion will be helpful to others in your vast audience. —J.F. Johnson, Florence,

Your hint is definitely a winner in y book! Thank you fer writing and hope you do so again. Hugs, —

Book reflects memories of living in home with manic-depressive mom

By MARTHA WAGGONER

Associated Press Writer RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) - Read Kaye Gibbons' latest book, and it's easy to imagine her home with that standard of Southern architecture - a back door that welcomes the world and a front door used only by strangers, usually bearing bad news.

"Everybody came and went through the back door, which opened onto a wide porch with Florida windows. Three metal gliders with green cotton pillows lined the porch at our house," Gibbons writes in "Sights Unseen."

But at Gibbons' own two-story, painted brick house in one of the statelier sections of Raleigh, the front door really is the main entrance, opening into a formal room where Gibbons sometimes writes. She bought the house because of that

LOS ANGELES (AP)--Be warned, Tony Danza has some hidden talent --as a kick boxer.

The star of the ABC TV series "Hudson Street" had a confrontation with two men who videotaped him with his children on a Malibu beach, but prosecutors said Tuesday that there wasn't enough evidence to charge him.

Conflicting statements from nearly everyone involved in the Aug. 6 confrontation also contributed to the decision not to file charges, the Los Angeles County District Attorney's office said.

Chris Williams, 25, and Alan Zasi Sr., 34, told deputies that Danza followed them from the beach in his car and demanded the video camera. Then, the police report said, the former boxer-turned-actor kicked and broke the passenger-side window of the men's car before snatching the camera and walking off.

There was no comment from Danza or his publicist.

NEW YORK (AP)--Christie Brinkley is asking a judge to give her sole custody of her 4-month-old son, saying her estranged husband has barely ever seen the baby.

Dick Guttman, a spokesman for Richard Taubman, said the real estate developer had tried to see his son in New York.

room and likes it best when it's occupied.

The door is just one of the surprises from a writer from whom few surprises are expected. After all, what can a writer reveal about herself when she's already told the world that she was diagnosed as a manicdepressive 15 years ago? And that she was orphaned when her mother, also a manic-depressive, killed herself and her father, an alcoholic, died?

In the case of Gibbons, the best-selling author of five novels, there's plenty more to know, much of it more telling. For example:

She will stand next to the party mix at gatherings, 'stealing the cashews.

She has memorized "Andy Griffith" episodes - her favorites involve Ernest T. Bass.

- She once went to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and came home with four dogs, including a 7-year-old poodle mix named Precious whose previous owner couldn't take her to a nursing

But since "Sights Unseen" is an adult daughter's recollection of a childhood spent with a manicdepressive mother, questions inevitably head in that direction.

"I never had any of the same experiences that the manic-depressive woman had in the book," says Gibbons, who says she controls her illness with medicine and lifestyle.

"But because I have had the ecstatic highs of mania and experienced the dejection of the depression, I was able to write about it with some authori-

As she wrote in Hattie's voice, Gibbons says she tried to imagine what her oldest daughter, who is 10, would feel like in 20 years if Gibbons' illness had taken her over. "I have not been sick in so long that I was able to, as Wordsworth said,

'recollect it in tranquility,' she says. 'The book was difficult to write because I wasn't working with history, which is what I usually do and I like to do best. So everyday when I went to work, I was faced with this dysfunctional family and their problems. At the end of two years, I felt absolutely spent.'

She has been well for two years and is proud that her youngest child, a 6-year-old, seems to have no memory of her mother's illness. She credits her husband, Frank Ward, with noticing minute changes that signal a problem.

"He's a nice combination of Pearl and Frederick," she says, referring to the housekeeper and the husband in "Sights Unseen" who care for the sick mother, Maggie.

Gibbons and Ward, her second husband, are celebrating their second anniversary. She says he's perfect (really) and that she waits for him 'like a border collie at the end of the

Her big sister Sylvia taught the older grades, doubling as principal and bus driver. At sunrise, Sylvia would drive a yellow-painted station wagon into cotton farms and ranches to pick up the children of laborers.

We had a job to do and we just did it," Edna said, remembering her first teaching job at the Hardin Ranch School more than 30 years ago, "It did more for me than all my education courses at the university, because it was common-sense teaching and it came from trial and

Seven years ago, after years of teaching, Mrs. Tamayo became the head of parental involvement and dropout prevention for the Harlingen school district.

She recruited former gang members, for example, to warn children about gangs and lecture teachers about youth problems.

She set up full-time havens for arents on school campuses, and family learning centers" in the housing projects to give children a place to study with older students after school.

She tapped into a generous resource at Texas State Technical College by recruiting mentors there for struggling teen-agers.

And almost two years ago, she took her program out of its conventional setting to aid a distressed community. Families in the Las Palmas colonia had beseeched her for help in controlling violent gangs of children. Some were too afraid to talk to her in public.

"We didn't tell them we had an answer on a silver platter," Mrs. Tamayo said. "We just went on this assumption: Positive activity will make negative activity decline.'

She and her staff worked with the families to give the children activities and older role models in their neighborhood. She insisted on police patrols and helped neighbors clean up

"She's a great lady," said Amos Gonzalez, a Harlingen attendance officer who took on the Las Palmas project. "She knows what she's doing and she has a big heart for the

"The key here is to listen to the people that you're serving," she said. 'If you're working with parents, listen to them. They know what they need. If you're working with students, listen to them. ... The mistake we make is that we think we know what people need because we think we're smart."

Years before Mrs. Tamayo took charge of the parental involvement effort, the ideas were already churning in her head. They were inspired first by her family.

Edna Garza Gonzales grew up in the 1940s on a ranch east of Rio Hondo. She was the youngest of seven, and her late parents, Manuel F. Gonzales and Lucila Garza Gonzales, taught anyway."

It's also too easy to assume that parents aren't getting involved because they don't care, Mrs. Tamayo

When she started the program, she found that many parents felt intimidated by schools. They remembered failing as children, or being punished for speaking Spanish, so they shied away from school events as parents. "What if they ask me to do something I don't know how to do?" Mrs. Tamayo remembered them telling her.

With persistent prodding, parents change and their children follow, she Parental involvement was taken for granted. The whole family got can visit from time to time or involved, especially with 4-H activities. And Edna watched and learned from her big sister Marcela, a young teacher near Los Indios.

Marcela would bring some of her students to the farm to stay with us on weekends," she said, "and look what I've done. I bring students that I work with here to my home. I lived it. ... A lot of what I've done - it's because I saw it."

After two years at Texas Southmost College, Mrs. Tamayo got an emergency certificate to teach at the Hardin Ranch School, part of the old Cameron County school system.

She and her sister Sylvia often visited their pupils' families at home after school. "We didn't realize we were doing parental involvement, but that's what we were doing," she said.

The crux of Mrs. Tamayo's program was the parent center - a safe haven on each campus where parents volunteer for a day. They evolved into places of learning, where parents can practice English or prepare for the General Equivalency Degree test.

In the process, parents and school administrators learn to understand each other better, she said.

Smith asked Mrs. Tamayo to duplicate her program in Houston but decided not to ask for her full-time service. "I just think too much of Harlingen to try to steal her away," he said.

"If you have parents come to the parent center, do you think children are going to be home?" Mrs. Tamayo asked. "They're going to be in school."

Last year, shortly after superintendent James Smith left for the Alief school district in Houston, Mrs. Tamayo submitted her resignation.

Retirement turned out to be not quite her style. She wound up contracting for Smith in Alief and returning part-time to her office in Harlingen. She also continues her role as an appointed member of the Texas Youth Commission.

They've always been there. You just haven't seen them," her housekeeper told her when she marveled at the flying creatures.

"I think that's such a beautiful quote," Mrs. Tamayo said. "So I intend to see the birds."

"I think Edna (Tamayo) was 99 percent responsible in providing leadership to reduce the dropout rate."

The district's implementation of her ideas - favoring human contact over written manuals and pulling parents into schools - is credited for cutting the dropout rate from 15 percent in 1989 to 2.6 percent in

Besides keeping hundreds of more students in school, the achievement earned the district national recognition among educators.

"I think Edna was 99 percent responsible in providing the leadership to reduce the dropout rate," said James Smith, the former Harlingen superintendent who put Mrs. Tamayo in charge of the programs.

Smith came to the Harlingen school district in 1987. "One of the really glaring problems that was so obvious was the dropout rate. I mean, it was just terrible," he said. When he asked Mrs. Tamayo to lead the fight against it, "she just took that and ran with it."

Mrs. Tamayo, 57, doesn't like to see the program through numbers - "I don't deal in statistics" - but the impact that a good parental involve-ment had in Harlingen should sound a wake-up call, she said. Many schools follow the same philosophy, but few have been as persistent and innovative as her program.

community, especially the Hispanic community.'

Mrs. Tamayo gives credit to the staff, who come up with many of the dropout program's innovative ideas. "It takes special people to implement a program," she said. "This isn't a program that can be implemented from a handbook.'

Gonzalez, for example, suggested teaming up the Las Palmas children with the Rio Grande Valley WhiteWings. Before home games, the kids help prepare the stadium and hang out with the players. Delinquency, meanwhile, has all but vanished in the colonia, he said.

Mrs. Tamayo also credits her husband, banker Ed Tamayo, who taught her about management and frequently volunteered. And the program would have caved without the backing of the school board and the Harlingen Area Education Foundation, she said.

But it was Mrs. Tamayo's ambition that brought the programs to life.

Her guidelines weren't very academic: Get the parents to school. Go to their homes to make them come. Go back if they stop coming and find out why. When they come, help them improve their lives. And when their children stop coming to class, use the same persistence to find out why.
