In a copyright story, the newspaper reported that although the Northeast Texas poultry executive had supported Mattox in past political races, his contributions have been substantially larger since the settlement of the case in October 1986.

Complaints by residents who lived near a poultry rendering plant operated by Pilgrim in Mount Pleasant triggered the action that led to the filing of the suit.

The News said Pilgrim donated $5,0000 to Mattox after the suit was filed and has given Mattox a series of four $10,000 checks about every six months, starting in July 1987.

Nothing's certain but death and taxes tuxes

WASHINGTON (AP) Benjamin Franklin said nothing is certain but death and taxes. To the Treasury Department nothing is as certain either as the death of tuxes.

The Department's Depreciation Analysis Division has issued what is probably the first federal tuxedo study.

It is contained in 54 pages, complete with tables, three appendices, graphs and a bibliography.

"There are two major types of tuxedos: basic black tuxedos and fashion tuxedos," the analysts inform us.

"Basic black tuxedos generally do not change in style, while fashion tuxedos generally change in style from year to year," says the Depreciation Analysis Division, a newcomer on the governmental scene.

"The basic black tuxedo ceases to rent either because it is worn out as a result of the multiple process of wearing and cleaning. ... Fashion tuxedos are also susceptible to sudden unrepairable damage, but usually go out of style or become obsolete before they physically wear

The study was done to help determine the rate, at which rental establishments should depreciate their tuxedos for tax purposes. To the tax man, depreciation is the process in which the owner of property is allowed to deduct the yearly decrease in the value of that property.

According to the report, no matter how long a tuxedo may hang on a rack in the back room, its economic life is only as long as customers want to rent it.

"The principal findings of this study are that the equivalent economic life of tuxedos held for rental is 1.9 years, while their useful life, which measures the period of which they provide service, is 3.7 years," the report says. "If Congress were to establish a separate asset class for tuxedos, Treasury would suggest that a 2.0 year life be assigned to such class.'

The department chose August for its report, perhaps to prove that some government is around - what with the president in Maine, Congress scattered to the four winds and bureaucrats at the Mauri Montgomery, our advertising manager, his daughter, Kerris, and I went traipsing out east of Hereford Wednesday night to try to get some clear pictures of the lunar eclipse.

On its face, it sounds like an easy enough task: find a clear place away from the city lights and try to get some pictures of a shrinking

We went out on Austin Road about three or four miles east of town, out where there were few lights and nothing in our way from here to the ocean, probably.

Mauri spotted this good-sized pasture just off the highway, and decided that would be the place for our lunar stakeout.

We couldn't find a gate or anything, so we just decided to climb

Problem No. 1: How do you climb a barbed wire fence?

You don't. If your the athletic type, I suppose you could hurdle it, but the most exercise I get is when I do those hand-to-mouth curls. Sometimes I do have about 12 ounces of weight (not counting the can or bottle or mug) in my hand, and I have better sense than to try to hurdle a four-strand barbed-wire fence.

Problem No. 2: There is a hot wire fence running alongside the

No problem, I thought. The hot wire fence is down there pretty low. All you have to do is push down on the top of the barbed wire, step over it, and be sure and clear the hot wire.

I cleared the barbed wire with no problem. I soldered my ankle on the hot wire.

I figure there was, oh, 250 million kilovolts of power in the hot wire. It knocked me on over. It was powerful enough to make my leg shake for a few seconds, and i fell on over the fence.

Well, we got on out there in the pasture and got our lunar eclipse pictures. You saw one of them in Thursday's Brand: I got an interesting strip of negatives from when the moon rose, about two-thirds full, until it was barely a sliver. Believe me, it's interesting.

Anyway, Kerris was getting cold and the moon was just sitting there doing nothing, so we decided to leave.

Problem No. 3: Clearing the barbed wire and the hot wire in the free, then we could weld the wiring back in place. Instead, with Mauri pressing down on the wire as much as he could, I again tried to clear all of the wires.

The last thing Mauri told me was "Don't hop, just step."

Well, I tried not to hop. When the hot wire first hit my leg, I hopped. Then I found a reason not to hop. The hot wire found its way to the top of that 31-inch

If I had been wearing socks, maybe it wouldn't have soldered my ankle the first time. The only reason I can think of that I didn't get anything soldered the second time is because my mother taught me at a very early age to always wear underwear.

investigation of the United Airlines DC-10 crash in Sioux City, Iowa, is looking into whether the engine breakup may have been triggered by cracks in its fan assembly, officials

However, no direct evidence of cracking has been found, officials said Thursday.

The National Transportation Safety Board disclosed that a routine inspection of a General Electric CF6-6 engine on another McDonnell Douglas DC-10 at United's maintenance facility in San Francisco recently uncovered a number of small cracks on a flange component of the fan assembly.

The safety board cited the discovery in a letter to the Federal Aviation Administration in which it urged the FAA to begin a special investigation to determine how much stress the GE engine can withstand before such components

WASHINGTON (AP) - The show signs of a problem, including assembly where the cracking was cracking.

The board, however, made no recommendations that would immediately affect the operation of any of the DC-10s being flown with the CF6-6 engines. There are 124 DC-10s with that engine being flown by U.S. airlines, most belonging to United and American Airlines, the FAA said.

United Flight 232 crashed July 19 as it tried to make an emergency landing at the Sioux City, Iowa, airport, killing 111 of the 296 people on board.

The plane's No. 2 engine, located at the center tail section, broke apart during flight. The breakup, in which much of the fan

Nevertheless, the board said it was concerned that cracks similar to those found in San Francisco may have developed in other CF6-6 engines. If such cracks were allowed to progress to the point that the fan flange were to fail, the agency said it could "cause catastrophic release of the (engine) fan section" such as apparently occurred aboard Flight 232.

Anthony Broderick, acting FAA executive director, said in a telerotor assembly separated, destroyed phone interview that the FAA is the jetliner's hydraulic control aware of the cracks found in the United engine in San Francisco.

Groups file Exxon suit

WASHINGTON (AP) - Exxon Corp. is being sued by two environmental groups that say the company should pay the full cost of repairing environmental damage caused by the Valdez oil spill in Alaska's Prince William Sound.

The suit, filed Thursday in state Superior Court in Anchorage, charges that Exxon was negligent in failing to prevent the March 24

It also contends that Exxon and its six partners in the Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., which runs the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, fraudulently misrepresented their ability to prevent or control a major spill.

This lawsuit simply seeks to force those who caused the unprecedented assault on the environment to pay to restore one of the world's last reservoirs of natural beauty to its original, unspoiled state," said the complaint by the National Wildlife Federation and the Natural Resources Defense Council.

Sharon Newsome, the wildlife federation's vice president for resources conservation, told a news conference the suit "complements and reinforces" one filed Tuesday by Alaska seeking to recover unspecified damages for losses from the spill.

The suit by the environmental groups says Exxon should be forced to finance a court-controlled fund to cover the cost of assessing and repairing environmental damage in areas affected by the spill. The money, which Ms. Newsome said would amount to "billions," also would be used to buy natural resources such as fish and wildlife to compensate for ecological damage that cannot be repaired.

It's easiest, and sometimes less expensive, says the institute, to get such coverage when the same company insures both your home and your automobile.

> One way to obtain more coverage without increasing the premium is to increase the deductible, the amount the insured must pay toward repairs before the insurer kicks in.

"The standard used to be $100 but it was changed a few years ago to $250," says Seymour. He says the deductible, in effect, is supposed to equal a week's wages, so keep that in mind in deciding what you can afford.

"You want your insurance company to handle the big risks," says Seymour, "and handle the big risks well. If you increase the deductible and take care of the small risks, then you're freeing money to beef up coverage.'

Often, says Seymour, insurance covers only the cash value of your losses. If a living room sofa were burned beyond repair, you would get only the amount of money a used sofa would sell for in a second-hand store. However, sometimes for as little as 10 percent

Homeowners should also make 'Jury verdict awards can kill sure that their homes are insured for at least 80 percent of their current value or risk losing money in any settlement under the co-insurance

> Under the clause, common in homeowner policies, if insurance meets the 80 percent rule, all claims will be met unless the loss is total. For example, if you lose two of your eight rooms to fire, the two rooms will be rebuilt. If, however, the house burns to the ground, the settlement is for only 80 percent of the value. Or if your co-insurance falls to 75 percent because of appreciation, the 5 percent under 80 percent - even for the cost of rebuilding the two rooms - would be deducted from any settlement.

> Generally, says Seymour, coinsurance works well. "But you must always make sure you're at least at the 80 percent minimum, so it's better not to try for 80, but to try for 85. You might even consider how much it would cost to go from 85 percent to 100.

The (Hereford I. S. Your individual taxes may increase at a greater or lesser rate, or even decrease, depending on the change in the taxable value of your property in relation to the change in taxable value of all other property. The public hearing will be held on (August 26, 1989 at 9:30 a.m.,) at the (Board Room of the Central Office Administration Building).

> FOR the proposal: John Fuston, Shirley Wilson, Kathy Moore, Sylvia Flores, Dennis Newton, and Raymond Schlabs.

AGAINST the proposal: None PRESENT and not voting: None ABSENT: Steve Coneway

The statement above shows the percentage increase the proposed rate represents over the (effective) tax rate that the unit published on (August 4. 1989). The following table compares taxes on an average home in this taxing unit last year to taxes proposed on the average home this year. Again, your individual taxes may be higher or lower, depending on the taxable value of your property.

Last Year This Year Average home value $50,000.00 $50,000.00 General exemptions available (amount available on the average home, not including senior citizen's or disabled person's exemptions) $ 5,000.00 $ 5,000.00 Average taxable value $45,000.00 $45,000.00 Tax rate .7850 (proposed) Tax 334.98 353.25 (proposed)

Under this proposal taxes on the average home would (increase) by ($18.27) or (5.18%) increase compared with last year's taxes.

Comparing tax rates without adjusting for changes in property value, the tax rate would (increase) by (.406 cents) per $100.00 of taxable value or (5.46%) compared to last year's tax rate. These tax rate figures are not adjusted for changes in the taxable value of property.

ALUMINUM PIE PAN

Dear Heloise: Our family loves camping and family cookouts. The younger children especially like to roast marshmallows and hot dogs.

Last summer while camping, we were sitting around the campfire and my son burned his hand while holding a stick roasting a marshmallow. His hand got a little too close to the fire.

The next time we cooked hot dogs over the fire, I stuck some sticks through aluminum pie pans. The pans acted as shields for our hands. They worked great! - MaryAnn Durbin, Roanoke. Va.

LEVEL BOTTLE

Dear Heloise: I was doing a project of hanging a small shelf needed a carpenter's level but didn't have one, so I made my own.

I found a tall straight-sided plastic bottle and filled it three-quarters full with water and tightly closed the lid. All I had to do was lay the bottle on the shelf, adjust the shelf until the water was level, then screw it to the wall.

I couldn't have done better if I had used an expensive level. - Adam Brodin, Seattle, Wash. Now that's what I call being level-headed! What a terrific idea and thanks for sharing it with us. - Heloise DEAR READERS: Marriage can cause a lot of changes in your life. One major change for women might be a new last name and the probability of a new residence. Change-of-address notification can be accomplished easily with forms from your local post office. In the case of a name change, you will need to apply for a new Social Security card. Employers report earnings by the name and the number on the card. If the name is not the same as the record shows, there is a chance that earnings will not be properly reported or credited to you. To apply for a new card, call or go to your local Social Security office. Don't forget credit-card accounts. If you choose to keep your separate accounts, but have them changed to your married name, remember to notify all credit bureaus that have any credit records on you so they will continue to give you credit for payments in your new name.

If you decide on joint accounts, make sure you are the principal card holder and not just an authorized user, since authorized users do not gain any credit history from the use of credit cards.

If you have any questions, contact your local credit bureau. Your good credit is a valuable possession, so don't take any chances. - Heloise
