Texas Lawmakers Have Little to Brag About After First Week

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) - Texas legislators had little to brag about after the first week of the special session that was called to ease the pains of inflation-weary taxpayers.

It's true the Senate and House quickly agreed on two issues - repeal of the state utilities sales tax and increasing inheritance exemptions.

But there was a hitch.

Each house approved its own version and the final relief measure must be re-written by a 10-member conference committee that will be influenced by all the controversies still ahead in the passage of the two relief measures would be all that the special session accomplishes.

Some senators predicted openly that

"No, I wouldn't be surprised," Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said when asked if he would be upset if that was all this session

One veteran senator has a final adjournment resolution ready at all times, just waiting for Hobby's nod to send it up for action.

However, on the other side of the pink granite Capitol the feeling is that the session is far from finished - maybe extending into a second 30-day period.

There were repeated rumors at the end of the week that Gov. Dolph Briscoe would open the session to still other subjects in hopes of getting more support for some of his recommendations. particularly his plan that all taxes must be approved by two-thirds of the legislature. Briscoe's office was silent on the subject Friday

On Monday, Rep. Wayne Peveto, D-orange, will introduce his new-look property tax reform bill that he hopes will attract Briscoe's support. Peveto already has gained at least limited support of the real estate lobby by adding a provision that local property taxes cannot be increased more than 5 percent without voter review and approval. He claims support of the Texas Farm Bureau by adding a second provision that farm land must be assessed on its productivity, not by market value.

Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, a supporter of Attorney General John Hill. the Democratic gubernatorial nominee. said Friday night that if Briscoe does not submit property tax reform, "there's a substantial possibility that all other tax relief proposals will be defeated."

Bryant led a group of about 50 House members, including several Hill campaign leaders, that blocked immediate House hearings on several Briscoe recommendations last week.

The committee hearings start Monday, but there is only a chance any of the measures will reach the debate stage during the week.

Before the special session started, Hill told a joint legislative committee, headed by Peveto, that Texas taxpayers would get cheated if they get tax limitation without changes in the property tax law.

Hill has said over and over that he thinks any action on limiting state and local taxes or putting a cap on state spending should wait until the 1979 Legislature.

Hill said he saw no reason by tax relief measures such as the utilities tax sales tax repeal and increasing inheritance tax exemptions should not be passed by the special session.

Peveto told a news conference Thursday that he did not think "we can pass any constitutional amendments on tax limitation without passing theproperty tax reform bill.

You've got to have both. It's impossible to administer property tax relief measures without a uniform system of appraisal. I think more than 50 members of the House feel that way."

Constitutional amendments must pass the legislature by two-thirds vote and 51 members in the House and 11 members of the Senate can block any such

'Berlin Will Stay Free' Declares Pres. Carter

That feller on Tierra Blanca Creek says not to worry about avoiding temptation-as you grow older, it starts to avoid you. 000

Famous last words: "Let Daddy show you how it works."

Some office holders seem to forget that the public business of this country is the private business of every citizen.

THE TEXAS LEGISLATURE is in session, but there is a lot more calm over the state than usually exists when those 183 representatives of the people assemble

Gov. Dolph Briscoe called this meeting for the sole purpose of giving tax relief to Texas taxpavers and there is little opposition to that-the only disagreement comes from how to do it. Texas has $876 million in surplus funds as the session opens, something rare for states. But it had almost $2 billion at the last regular session, in 1977, and the legislature spent

One item receiving much consideration, and which draws a lot of interest in this area, is a proposal to tax farm and ranch land on its productive capacity rather than its market value. This change has long been sought by many rural land owners but has generated some opposition lately, notably from our own state senator. Bob Price

The new senator says landowners must he very careful about accepting this change. Price points out that taxing land on productive value is a complicated and. of course, inexact method. He claims it could penalize the efficient farm operator and reward the lazy or inept ones.

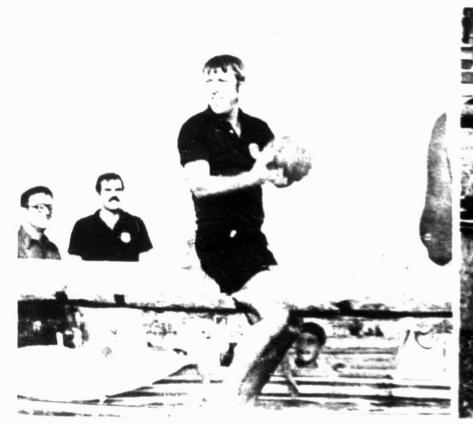

The thing that sounds good about the California plan was that it places a limit of one percent of market value on all property. There should be a limit as to what property can be taxed, and the limit ought to be set by the people, not those who appraise the property, collect the taxes and spend the money.

A LARGE NUMBER of citizens in this country think it is time Congress got its head out of the sand and did something about the Social Security fiasco. As always, when a program is failing, the congressional reaction is to give us more

Even though millions of wage earners are now paying more into Social Security than the government sticks them for income taxes, experts say the disability insurance trust fund will be gone by 1979 and the old-age benefits fund by 1983.

Had the Social Security Administration taken what is collected from taxpayers and lent it to the federal government even at the prime rate, the SS fund would be in fine shape. Instead, what is collected goes into the Treasury where it is used to finance good, bad or indifferent programs.

If an insurance company, or a private company's pension fund, had run Social Security the way the federal government does, it would have long since gone bankrupt. The president of Prudential Insurance recently said that Social Security is an "intergenerational transfer" scheme. That's a nice way of saying it is a systematized way of robbing Peter to pay Paul. And, that guarantees the bankruptcy of the Social Security

Texas Homeowners Escape Increase in Insurance

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) For the third straight year. Texas households will escape an overall increase in homeowners insurance rates.

But the State Insurance Board's 3.0 vote Friday against a statewide homeowners incrase made other changes that will raise rates on homes unsured for $15,000 to $42,000

Highest increase would be 6.7 percent on homes insured for $27,000 to $29,000 The board decided to redistribute premium income to fit the actual loss experience of houses in different value

Owners of houses outside the $15,000-$42,000 range will enjoy rate reducions, including a 5.7 percent cut on homes insured for $60,000 and 15 percent on $100,000 residences.

"There is no average rate increase. This simply moves the money where it ought to be. If some were getting insurance too cheap it was at somebody else's expense said board chairman Hugh Yantis, who used the meeting to campaign for Senate confirmation

Tom Lee spokesmar for the insurance companies, said if they had to choose they would prefer recestration of premiums over the 14.1 percent homeowners rate increase they had

We believe the longer these remain inequitable the bigger the gar s going to get." said Lee spokesman for the Texas Insurance Advisors Association

After making its decresion on homeowners rates, the board woed these average statewide increases in other forms of property insurance

Fire 9.4 percent Extended coverage against sumistor ms, hail, explosions, and other non-fire disasters, 6 6 percent

Overall, insurance companies will gain a 42 percent increase in Texas premiums, or $34 million over the coming year. The companies said they would ask for a rate increase in 1979.

The board's public meeting was marked by an acceleration of Yantis' campaign for Senate confirmation of his 19 appointment

Yantis said he has received expressions of support from associations of insurance agents and labor union locals around the

He said if his hometown senator, Lloyd Dogget of Austin, insists on invoking senatorial courtesy to "bust" his appointment, that would "defeat the wishes of people all over the state."

If people would write letters to the local media, perhaps the heat will be felt." Yantis told the small gathering of insurance organization representatives. reporters and staff members.

Later he told reporters. "The only thing that will help me in the Senate would be for enough people who support me to make enough noise to move Doggett off his present postion."

"It needs to be known he'll be busting one of the people who has brought good insurance to Texas, one of the best chairmen this board has ever had." Yantis said.

He said publicly he wants the Senate to take up his confirmation during the present special session, not wait until the regular session convenes in January.

Yantis said if the Senate delays action until January, and Doggett won't budge, he will resign in November or December so Gov. Dolph Briscoe - not his successor can appoint a new chairman.

Yantis and Democratic gubernatorial nominee John Hill, whom Doggett supported over Briscoe, fueded repeatedly while Yantis was executive director of the Texas Water Quality Board.

The board has not changed property rates since July 1976. New rates for fire and coverages other than homeowners probably will take effect in about three months, but the board did not officially set an effective date

Fire reates are as statewide, while those for other coverages differ according to rating territories.

Extended coverage rates will rise an average of 6.8 percent in the Seacoast Territory, which includes the first two teirs of counties back from the Gulf of Mexico. They will increase 10.6 percent in the Central Territory, which takes in the bulk of the state from Texarkana to El Paso, and will drop 1.5 percent in the North-Northwest Territory, which includes Deaf Smith County.

Farm and ranch rates will rise 7.4 percent in the Seacoast Territory, 8.9 percent in the Central Territory and 4 percent in the North-Northwest

BERLIN (AP) - President Carter visited the Berlin Wall, freshly painted by East Berlin workers to cover anti-communist graffiti, and told a West Berlin audience Saturday the communist government cannot paint over "the wasteland of human spirit" across the divider.

"This demonstrates beyond the power of words the difference between those who believe in individual human rights and those who do not," the president told about 1,000 handpicked Berlin residents at a "town meeting."

The president's 60-minute appearance in the futuristic Congress Hall followed his dramatic declaration, in German, at a memorial to the Berlin Airlift: "No matter what happens, Berlin will stay

The president was hardpressed to create a more memorable appearance in Berlin than John F. Kennedy, who electrified his audience here 15 years ago when he shouted "Ich bin ein Berliner - I am a Berliner."

The town meeting format, which Carter has used successfully in the United States to establish a rapport with his audience, was the first such session he has held

Most of the Berliners' questions dealt with what the United States could to do to help extend freedom across the borders

He stood for 10 minutes 15 feet from the wall, 200-yards of which were painted a bright white Friday night to cover slogans scrawled on the western front. The East German border extends about four feet beyond the wall and the workers could reach the western side without entering West Berlin.

The president later said of the painting: "They tried to color the ugly spectacle again. But I don't think anything can hide the deprivation of human rights exemplified by that wall."

Carter looked intently through binoculars at the tank traps and drab and partially abandoned buildings across the wall. He stood on a temporary platform for a better view, peering for a long time at armed East German soldiers manning a watchtower who stared back at him through their binoculars.

Riding around the city in an American made limousine, the president and Mrs. Carter and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt stood through an open roof section to watch the crowds.

Although the crowds were friendly. police said they arrested 76 persons, most of them communist demonstrators, before Carter drove down the famous Kurfuersendamm.

PLAINVIEW, Texas (AP) - The deaths of several Mexican Americans and Mexican nationals at the hands of Texas authorities appear to have spawned seeds of unity among the more militant and peaceful Hispanic groups.

Saturday, a demonstration in this Panhandle city included representatives of the League of United Latin American Citizens LULAC and their more-vocal brethern, the Brown Berets.

An estimated 500 people drove from nearby Hale Center to a Catholic church on the outskirts of Plainview, then walked the remaining 21/2 miles to the courthouse square to hear several speakers. The marchers, carrying placards and chanting, were led by Gilbert Herrera, leader of the Lubbock Brown Beret

"A lot of things have held us back,"

LULAC State Director Ruben Bomilla said earlier. His 35,000-member group is known for its anti-violence approach.

"We're just beginning to flex our muscles, to realize that with aimity comes Bonilla said unity among Hispanic groups has been a slow process. He added, however, that the bullets of Texas policemen have done more to bring about more changes in the last two years than Mexican-American leaders have managed to accomplish in the past 20 years.

The Berets refer to the names. Joe Campos Torres, Larry Lozano, Santos Rodriguez. Richard Morales and Tim Rosales in hushed but bitter tones.

Prosecution Denied

Against Police Officer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Justice Department has decided against federal prosecution of a former Dallas police officer in the shooting death of a 12-year-old Mexican-American youth.

Santos Rodriguez of Dallas was shot once in the head at close range with a .357-magnum pistol at close range while sitting handcuffed in a patrol car on July 24, 1973, according to police records. Rodriguez was being questioned concerning an $8 service station robbery.

Former officer Darrell Cain was convicted in state court of the highest degree of murder and a jury sentenced him to a five-year prison sentence, which he is still serving.

Justice Department spokesman Terrence Adamson called the decision against federal civil rights prosecution of Cain "one of the toughest announcements I've ever had to make." He said the decision was made after an "exhaustive re-examination" of the case.

Adamson said Attorney General Griffin Bell agreed with the recommendation after a personal review of the case.

Presidential press secretary Jody Powell was advised of the decision Friday afternoon in Bonn, West Germany, where President Carter was attending an economic summit.

The president had asked Bell to advise him on the status of the case after Carter had met with Mexican-American leaders in Houston last month.

Only one inhabitant of the tiny community survived the Friday night attack and was hospitalized in critical condition, a military spokesman said.

It was the third mass killing of civilians blamed on guerrillas in the past three weeks.

Further details on the attack, including how other victims were slain, were not immediately reported.

The village is in the Zwimba tribal reservation, the home area of jeremiah Chirau, one of three moderate blacknationalist leaders now joined with white Prime Minister Ian Smith in the biracial transition government.

Chirau's large family, including his three wives, live in the Zwimba reservation in a fortified brick compound defended by black militiamen.

Two black Rhodesian guerrilla armies are fighting a 6-year-old war to unseat the government, which comprises black & 344 white leaders who reached a constitutional settlement four months ago promising majority rule by the beginning of next year. The guerrilla leaders, Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, were excluded from the agreement and have peldged to step up the war.

Senate Delays Action On Carter Energy Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate's decision to delay action on one of President Carter's energy bills until after the Bonn economic summit is "an obvious embarrassment to the president," says the chairman of the Senate Energy Committee.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., said there are still enough votes to pass the bill on Tuesday but that by then the gesture will have lost some of its symbolic importance

Democratic leaders had tried to give Carter a long-denied victory on his energy program while he was still in West Germany conferring with U.S. trading partners, a conference that will be over by the time Senate now gets around to voting of New Mexico, denied he intentionally tried to embarrass Carter. "I think the president does that very well by himself," the former geologist and astronaut told reporters.

Schmitt started to filibuster the bill-the first portion of Carter's five-part energy bill to reach either chamber for a final vote - on Friday. Fearing such a tactic could tie up Senate action for days, Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia reluctantly agreed to a compromise that delayed the vote until 2 p.m. Tuesday - well after this weekend's summit in Bonn.

U.S. Seeks Reduction

Of Sentence

BONN, West Germany (AP) - The United States will seek a reduction in the 13-year sentence given to Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky, reporters covering President Carter's trip were told Saturday.

There also was speculation that Washington might seek to exchange Shcharansky and fellow dissident Alexander Ginzburg for two Soviet citizens arrested in New Jersey on spying charges.

ABC News reported from Washington that Carter apparently has accepted a Soviet proposal to swap the two Soviet citizens for Shcharansky.

No other details of a possible exchange were available

However, reporters in Bonn learned that the Carter administration was working on having Shcharansky's "actual time served reduced.'

White House press secretary Jody Powell said he knew nothing about such efforts but that he thought it was premature to be negotiating on Shcharansky's behalf.

Shcharansky was sentenced Friday on charges of espionage and anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda. Ginzburg was sentenced Thursday to eight years at hard labor for anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda.

Fight Ends With Four Arrests

A fight involving three persons and witnessed by a large crowd erupted early Saturday morning and ended with four arrests, including one for the attempted murder of a Hereford policeman.

Juan Jose Diaz, 23, of 404 Brevard, was charged with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and attempted murder of a police officer during the fight, which attracted a large crowd of spectators in the 400 block of Brevard.

Steve Hendrix was the first police officer to arrive at the scene and was followed by O.K. Neal and Ruben McGilvary.

According to police reports, the fight began when brothers Epy and Terry Ruiz, ages 17 and 18 and also of 404 Brevard, allegedly attacked Diaz with a crowbar and their hands and feet

When the officers arrived at the scene, Diaz reportedly walked towards McGilvary with a butcher knife, which police said was raised in an apparent attempt to stab the policeman. The other officers reportedly ordered Diaz to drop the knife, but instead he allegedly swung it at

The three officers reportedly wrestled Diaz to the ground to apprehend him. A 14-year-old juvenile was arrested and charged with interference of a police officer during the scuffle.

Epy and Terry Ruiz were arrested and charged with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon for their alleged attack of Bond on the three men was set at $10,000 each. The juvenile also was detained at Deaf Smith County Jail. At presstime Saturday, Diaz was the only one to have posted bond.

Police Saturday also investigated a broken window at First Presbyterian Church, 7th and Lee. A rock apparently was used to break the $30 window

Average Home Price Jumps To $63,000 From Year Earlier

NEW YORK (AP) - The average price of a new home last month reached nearly $63,000, a rise of $9,800 from a year earlier, and a level that would seem to throw cold water on many middle-income families pursuing the "American

At the same time, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board reported this past week, the effective rate on conventional new home mortgages reached 9.46 percent, the highest since the government began collecting data in 1963.

Resale prices on existing homes did not offer much for those in the housing market to cheer about either. The agency's survey of average prices showed existing homes averaged $53,700 and the average mortgage rate was slightly higher than for a new home, 9.47 percent.

While skyrocketing housing costs, which have risen at an annual rate of 12 percent in the past dozen years, have squeezed lower and middle-income families particularly hard, a recent industry study indicates that where you live may be as important as what you

Based on the estimated median price of housing in 1977, which represents the midway point where half buyers paid more and half less, the United States League of Savings Associations found that those in the biggest metropolitan urban centers paid 19 percent more than the national median of $44,000 for both new and resold homes. By contrast, in cities of less than 250,000 population, median costs were 15 percent less.

Specifically, median prices for those in urban centers of more than 3.5 million population came to about $52,000 and about one in four homes was more than

At the same time the survey of 8,500 mortgages found that about a quarter of the homes purchased in the smaller cities cost less than $30,000.

Only 5 percent cost $70,000 and the median price was $37,000 in cities of 50,000 to 250,000 population

While those prices are still high, compared to a few years ago, economists at the industry association point to their study as one reason that nationwide averages on housing costs may be misleading

'People don't realize that about one-third of the population lives outside the homes purchased in the smaller cities the urban areas where costs are highest." says Dennis Jacobe, an association economist, who argues that middle income families haven't been squeezed out of the housing market.

Based on its study, Jacobe says the median income for all home buyers last year was $22,500 and about 60 percent of all buyers had incomes of less than

But those figures also showed a wide spread in the types of housing bought. For instance, as one might expect, the more expensive homes were purchased by people who already owned a home and were trading up.

But a surprising 20 percent of buyers bought homes built before 1945, compared to the 25 percent who could afford new homes

-United Airlines placed the biggest order in commercial aviation history. giving the U.S. aircraft industry a shot in the arm by purchasing 30 Boeing wide-bodied jets for $1.2 billion.

United, the nation's largest domestic airline, decided against a rival fleet of European airbuses and asked Boeing to build a new type of jet aircraft, the Boeing 767, which will represent the first manufacture of a new aircraft in America in a decade.

-Ford Motor Co. President Lee A. lacocca, who once was considered a likely successor to 61-year-old company chairman Henry Ford II, was fired on Ford's recommendation by a unanimous vote of the board of directors.

His dismissal, after a 32-year career with Ford and seven years as president, followed a series of corporate moves which indicated he had fallen out of favor with the corporate chairman. While the company offered few details about the decision, industry sources said lacocca has become too visable and agressive to suit Ford's tastes.

The Carter Administration began signaling an apparent willingness to accept some reduction in the tax on capital gains in an effort to compromise with Congress. While President Carter once flatly rejected lowering the tax rate because it would provide "windfalls for millionaires," there were reports that he would accept some reduction in the top tax rate of 49 percent in order to salvage his own $15 billion tax cut program.

Output by the nation's industries increased by 0.3 percent in June, the smallest rise in four months, the Federal Reserve Board reported. The report signaled that the economy was growing at a slower pace after a rapid expansion in the spring. The index, which measures industrial production of mines, factories and utilities, rose 0.6 percent in May and 1.5 percent in April. The index now stands at 144.3 percent of the 1967 base

Dear Editor:

I have just learned that our local school, through the efforts of our "do good" people in government will now feed a free breakfast to certain children in the school.

Isn't that just de-lovely? Already they have been feeding these children a free lunch, and I believe that if we really got with this thing we could get them to feed a free supper and possibly tuck them in at night,

Apparently, they have so much of our tax money on hand that they just can't find enough ways to spend it. I believe that the people who are paying for this should join in and get our portion of the things we are paying for. If we are paying, we ought to get our breakfast, too. I like Carol Ellis' idea of

All that the residents of this new state and country would have to do would be to just dash about thither and yon, singing 'tra-la-la-la-la.'

Our government knows best, as it goes about giving away canals, busing children to schools outside their neighborhoods, Daylight Savings Time, etc. We can keep all of these wonderful things in mind as we pay our taxes -- so that the poor will not have to work, or worry about a damned thing.

Really, we should put our minds to these situations and vote the people out of office who advocate that government should do all things for all people--just think about all the tax reductions we would have.

People might be willing to work again, when government no longer sees to their every

The Hereford City Commission will meet at 7:30 a.m. Monday in City Hall to discuss additional windows for the Community Center and authorize bids for park improvements.

Representatives from the Senior Citizens Association will meet with the commission concerning use of the present city hall building, which will be razed to provide parking space for a new facility.

Other items on the agenda include creation of a policy regarding use of the Community Center banquet room and discussion of the upcoming Texas Municipal League meeting in Amarillo.

Women, who now comprise about 40 percent of the total labor force, have made some gains in getting higher-paid, higher-status jobs. But as a group they have lost ground when their earnings are compared with median earnings of men.

A recent study by the Conference Board, a business research group, shows that the proportion of women managers in the United States rose from 13 percent of all managers in 1970 to 19 percent in 1975.

Another survey shows that women college graduates, who traditionally received lower starting pay, are now starting at about the same salaries as their male counterparts.

But the twin trends of more women seeking advancement and more women entering the labor force have helped create an apparent paradox in overall pay differences.

The apparent paradox is due in part to the large numbers of

Soviet Man To Be Shot For Spying

MOSCOW (AP)-A Soviet court Friday sentenced Anatoly Filatov, a Soviet administrative worker, to death by firing squad for spying, the soviet news agency Tass said.

The death verdict against Filatov, whom Tass called "an agent of a foreign intelligence service," came at the end of the week of well-publicized trials during which dissidents Anatoly Shcharansky and Alexander Ginsburg received labor camp sentences of 13 and eight years respectively.

Filatov is unknown to dissidents here and Western diplomats also claimed they do not know him.

EDINBURG, Texas (AP)-The McAllen Independent School District has been sued by the survivors of a student who was slain on a school bus in May.

The 16-year-old student was stabbed to death with a butcher knife during a fight on the bus May 17. A youth charged in the slaying was not a student in the district, police said.

inexperienced women in the workforce, who lower the pay

In 1955, for instance, the Department of Labor says a comparison of median earnings showed that a woman made about 64 cents for every dollar earned by a man. By 1974 the pay gap had widened to 57 cents for each dollar paid to men.

"In fact, men's median weekly earnings exceeded women's by about $97 and women had to work nearly nine days to gross the same earnings grossed by men in five days," according to the study by the Labor Department's Women's

'Despite the fact that increasing numbers of women are securing higher-level and better-paying positions, there is still a predominance of women in lower-status occupations...," the report notes.

Since War II, the number of women who work has grown from one in three to nearly one in two women, with the most dramatic increase among younger women.

The trend of advancement among experienced women workers is less clear, partly because the biggest push for better-paying and better-status jobs has come only in the past five years or so.

"Women's earnings, like those of men, are positively related to educational attainment, but highly educated women do not benefit nearly as much from rising earnings with advancing age as men," said Margaret S. Gordon of the Carnegie Council on Policy Studies in Higher Education.

Part of that, she says, may be because large numbers of working professional women still are concentrated in such fields as nursing and teaching, where pay does not rise as sharply as in other professions.

But a study of starting salaries in 1976-1977 by the College Placement Council found a significant change from only a few years ago when female college graduates traditionally received lower starting parts.

The last few meetings of the Deaf Smith County Hospital District have been dismal affairs at best, but they have accomplished one important fact-the production of some mighty important figures.

Those figures indicate that either Hereford Q. Public must stand behind the hospital or watch it succumb to the draw of larger facilities in Amarillo and Lubbock.

Patient days in April, May and June were all down from last year's figures during those same three months. For this fiscal year, patient days totaled 6,930 through May 31, down 326 from the 1976-77 hospital year.

The May and year's operating statements for the hospital reflect the decrease in patients. Total patient revenues for May were $132,093, more than $40,000-24 percent-down from the budgeted figure. The year's revenues through May 31 totaled $1.26 million, down 10 percent from the forecasted figure. The hospital lost approximately $26,000 in May from operations.

Those are May's figures. June's figures will be released Tuesday morning when the board of directors next meets. There won't be much, if any, improvement.

The fact is, the hospital can't survive at its current page. In May, the total expense per patient day was $205.30, compared to $143.53 in the same month of 1977. Inflation doesn't mix with anything, but when you combine it with a dwindling hospital patient load, you're in deadly trouble.

It seems like everyone we talked to when HEW boss Joe Califano tried to kill rural hospitals was appalled at the idea, yet a lot of the same folks would rather use an Amarillo facility.

Obviously, those people think that better care is provided in bigger hospitals.

Public relations-selling the hospital's strengths to Hereford citizens--must be improved if the patient load is to stay at a level needed to maintain a break-even status. It can't be done through newspaper articles reporting on the dismal facts and figures contained in monthly operating statements. And doctors alone can't do it, either, even though the board said earlier this month that much of the problem-solving would lie in patient referrals.

The thing is, Deaf Smith General is as good as any other Panhandle hospital in providing patient care, although there are a few specialized services not available here that should be obtained in Amarillo with the blessings of local physicians.

Another thing is, doctors here are as good, or better, than any other Panhandle doctors. Hereford doctors have at least the same education and practicing experience as those in Amarillo, plus they are able to provide more personal care than doctors who live 50 miles away.

One special meeting of the hospital board, like the one held on July 6 when it agreed to borrow as much as $100,000 from the bank to compensate for its smaller-than-forecasted patient load, isn't enough to rectify the situation.

It's up to the board to work closer than ever with the medical community, trim excess and find short-term answers, like borrowing from the bank.

And it's up to the public to realize that when hospital care is necessitated, the most logical place is the local facility. It's cheaper, it provides more personal care and its services are the best quality.

Unless a transfer to an Amarillo hospital is called for because of a serious situation, there is no good excuse for going anywhere else.

Travel may be one of the most overrated things in all of the

It can become a mad fush through the earth looking for things to take pictures of. It is hard to tell which is most important: seeing some "wonder" or having a picture of it to show off.

* There should be a law that no one on vacation can have a camera with them. When a camera is around the neck, nothing is ever actually seen. Folks jump out of vehicles, snap a picture, buy a postcard and jump back in to rush to the next wonder.

The problem is there aren't that many real wonders in our world. There are a few like the Grand Canyon, Carlsbad Caverns, Disneyland and Las Vegas, but beyond these they go downhill pretty fast.

Since our trips are to see wonders, instead of commune with nature and each other, we have had to create wonders to see. Since folks are so desperate to see something, they will stop and look at anything. A rattlesnake in a cage will stop half the tourists on any road. A cave with some smoke stains on the wall can become the ancient home of all the Indian chiefs who ever lived.

There seems to be patterns to "wonder" creations. Go west and it is Indian lore. I-40 is solid Indian jewelry from Albuquerque to Flagstaff, Ariz.

If all of the jewelry advertised as made by Indians really is made by Indians, then there are enough Indians left to start a war. They also must have Indians in Hong Kong.

Go east and History is the big deal. Every event that has ever happened is marked and pushed somewhere. If George Washington slept everywhere it is claimed he slept, he must have lived 150 years and spent his life in bed.

We traveled along the Blue Ridge drive in Virginia. It may have been beautiful but it was cloudy and we could see nothing. We knew we were supposed to see great wonders and we had no pictures, so we were about to panic.

Suddenly there it was. A glorious sign declaring the presence of a Civil War gun emplacement. We pulled in, got out in the rain and ran through the trees to see the wonder. It was a small clearing in the trees with a little mound of dirt which looked like it may have been left by a colony of ants who moved to better quarters. There we stood, soaked to the skin trying to get the camera set for the poor light so we could get a picture of a hump of dirt. The picture was no good but at least we had seen our

The Rest of the Story . . .

WE MUTUALLY PLEDGE

You remember the cherry tree story a long time after you forget the more earthshaking, history-making episodes in the life of George Washington.

You've misplaced in your memory the details of Ben Franklin's statesmanship, but you remember his flying a kite. Joyce Kilmer was a great military hero, but the only thing you personally recall about him is his poetic tribute to trees.

Maybe of this current century, what will be best remembered will not be its wars and its jet planes or its giants who lived and died. Maybe all that will survive to linger in the day-by-day vocabulary of gensong about a Tennessee frontiersman or the incident one night when a speck of dust blew in the window and penicillin was discovered. But for any Fourth of July, I, Paul Harvey, do bequeath unto you "something to remember."

You may not be able to quote one line from the Declaration of Independence at this moment; henceforth, you will always be able to quote at least one line.

lt's in the last paragraph where you will recall, when I remind you, it says, "We mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes, and our

Sacred Honor. You recognize those impres-

In the Pennsylvania State House, what's now called Independence Hall in Philadelphia, the best men from each of the colonies sat down together. It was a fortunate hour in our nation's history, one of those rare occasions in the lives of men when we had greatness to

These were men of means. well-educated. Twenty-four were lawyers and jurists: Eleven were merchants. Nine were farmers and owners of large plantations.

One June 11 a committee sat down to draw up a declaration of independence. We were going to tell our British fatherland, no more rule by redcoats! Below the dam of ruthless foreign rule, the stream of freedom was running shallow and muddy. We were lighting the fuse to dynamite that dam.

This pact, as Edmund Burke later put it, "was a partnership between the living and the dead and the yet unborn." There was no bigotry, no demagoguery in hardships.

Jefferson finished a draft of the document in 17 days. Congress adopted it in July. All that is familiar history.

King George III had denounced all rebels in America as traitors. Punishment for treason was hanging.

Fifth-six men placed their names beneath that pledge. Fifty-six men knew when they signed that they were risking everything.

They knew if they won this fight the best they could expect would be years of hardship in a struggling nation. If they lost, they'd face a hangman's rope.

But they signed the pledge.

And they did, indeed, pay the price. That is THE REST OF THE STORY.

Here is the documented fate of those gallant 56.

Carter Braxton of Virginia, wealthy planter and trader, saw his ships swept from the seas. To pay his debts he lost his home and all his properties and died in rage.

Thomas Lynch Jr., who signed that pledge, was a third-generation rice grower. An aristocrat. A large plantation owner. After he signed, his health failed. With his wife he set out for France to regain his health. Their ship never got to France--was never heard from Virginia, raised two million dollars on his own signature to provision our allies, the French fleet. After the war he personally paid back the loans, wiping out his entire estate. He was never reimbursed by his

In the final battle for Yorktown, Nelson urged General Washington to fire on Nelson's own home, which was occupied by Cornwallis.

Francis Lewis had his home and belongings destroyed, his wife imprisoned. She died within a few months.

Bootleg Philosopher:

The Regulators

Philosopher on his Deaf Smith County grass farm takes up for government regulators this reek, we think.

People complain about all the regulations coming out of Washington but they never stop to think what a job the regulators have figuring out their regulations.

For example, the Federal Trade Commission is now working on a new set of labeling rules for makers of home appliances. Before too long, manufacturers will have to put a label on a refrigerator telling a buyer how much it will cost to operate it. One refrigerator might cost less than another as it sits idle in the store, but if it uses more electricity throughout its lifetime when you get it home, it might not be such a

Here's where the trouble comes in. The Federal Trade Commission, it occurs to me, will have to figure out not only how much electricity the refrigerator uses for a family of two, but also for a family with five or six kids plus all their friends opening and shutting the thing fifty times a day on a hot summer day hunting for ice cubes, soft drinks, fruit juice,

I counted one refrigerator that was opened 28 times in an hour

Editor's note: The Bootleg and fifteen minutes, which may not necessarily be a record. And whatever you do, buy a refrigerator whose door closes automatically. Otherwise you'll throw the nation's energy consumption and hence its balance of trade off by 15 or 20

> Another regulation going into effect requires a restaurant menu to be accurate. It can't call a potato an Idaho potato unless it came from Idaho. Otherwise it's an unfair trade practice, like putting a Chevrolet engine in an Oldsmobile, or an incompetent into Congress.

Since the ordinary diner in a restaurant can't tell by tasting whether a potato came from Idaho or the Virgin Islands, the government clearly, in order to enforce this regulation, is going to have to hire guards to follow a sack of potatoes from the time the tubers are dug out of the ground in Idaho till they get to a table in a cafe in Hereford.

This will work with potatoes. if we can find the money for the guard, but I can foresee some trouble when it comes to Long Island duck. It can be done, but it's sure going to take a lot of airplanes with expert pilots to track any ducks that escape their cages and fly off to intermingle with ducks from Texas. Ducks are notorious for ignoring moral codes.

Yours faithfully.

A news item out of California is indicative of the way things are going these days and makes you wonder about the future.

A seventh grade class in a California school was involved in an experiment in "capitalist democracy." The pupils printed money and then counterfeited more. They bribed "officials" for favors and to escape punishment. The "country" went broke and wound up with a dictator.

This is a small incident, and of course it is one for concern. But it is not surprising because these seventh graders were no doubt imitating examples they have seen at home and in school and in politics.

Since World War II we have tolerated permissiveness based upon the notion that everybody ought to be allowed to "do his own thing" and now we are reaping the results.

There has been a decline in self reliance and obvious erosion of the work ethic that made America great.

There has been a great deterioration of discipline. among young and old, and especially in the schools. The Perryton schools still try to maintain discipline and succeed for the most part, but school administrators and teachers are almost sure that when they discipline a child, the reaction of parents will not be gratitude but resentment.

Americans have been encouraged to look for easy but not necessarily honest angles for getting by, and, to surrender freedom for a government dole.

Many youngsters get little in the way of moral instruction or training as responsible citizens.

It is no wonder that so many are addicted to idleness, to violent and sex centered movies, to vulgar lyrics in loud "music," to pornographic reading material, and to slovenly attire as a mark of their "independence" from established ways of life.

In a recent survey, youngsters were asked to name Americans who impress them most. All of the top choices were entertainers or sports figures with a few political names.

There were no authors, religious leaders, scientists, inventors, business men or educators on the list. These people don't impress teenagers these Inadequate schools, alcohol and drug abuse and addiction to television are among causes blamed for today's attitudes. But the primary molder of character and motivation of ambition is the home. Millions of young people in this country are not being taught the fundamentals of successful living in a free county. They are not taught the values of self

WASHINGTON - The Illinois Brick Bill has very little to do with Illinois or bricks, but a great deal to do with the successful enforcement of our antitrust laws.

The purpose of the bill, which is known as H.R. 11942 in the House and S. 1874 in the Senate, is to overturn a Supreme Court decision. In the Illinois Brick case (hence the name of the bill), the Court said that only the immediate purchaser can sue a seller for price-fixing. Thus, if a wholesaler is overcharged by a manufacturer, the wholesaler alone could collect the triple damages that the law provides as a penalty in such cases.

Worse yet, there's no guarantee the ultimate consumer would get anything at all even if the Brick Bill passes. To get around the impossible problem of taking testimony from 2,000,000 consumers (or whatever), the bill (House version) permits "experts" to estimate what the aggregate damages are. This estimate, then, becomes the amount to be extracted from the guilty party. If the case is won, the money might go into a pool for distribution to those deemed

There is, of course, no way to assure that every consumer concerned will be found and compensated. But one thing is certain: The lawyers who appoint themselves to "represent" all those consumers will get theirs off the top -- possibly one-third. Consequently, the Brick Bill is best understood as a clever attempt to industrialize ambulance-chasing.

Besides enriching ambitious lawyers, are there other disadvantages to permitting suits by everyone in the distribution chain? Yes.

First, the courts would become clogged with complicated cases, making enforcement less likely rather than more.

And second, the incentive to sue would be reduced for the immediate purchaser. The wholesaler, for example, might not care to risk a suit if he feared that it would be difficult to prove how much he was entitled to recover, because of the pass-along question.

Since the immediate purchaser is usually in the best position to sue, the threat of such action is a powerful deterrent to price-fixing. To reduce that threat would reduce the deterrent. That would not benefit the consumer.

In short, the Illinois Brick Bill is like a rotten onion: On the outside, it looks fine. Only after pealing away a few of the outer layers do you learn the extent of the trouble.

The state of Missouri takes its name from the indian word meaning "muddy water."

(AP) - Jack Nicklaus turned back the surprise bid of New Zealand's Simon Owen with a pressure birdie on the 16th hole and reaffirmed his position as the world's greatest golfer with a victory today in the 107th British Open.

The mighty Nicklaus toured the historic old course at St. Andrews, the birthplace of golf, with a 3-under-par 69 and claimed the 15th major professional title of his unmatched career with a 72-hole total of 281.

Nicklaus was a stroke behind the unheralded Owen going to the 16th. There he shot into the lead by sinking an eight-foot putt for a birdie 3 while Owen took a bogey on the hole.

It was Nicklaus' third British Open crown and his first major victory since the U.S. PGA in 1975. The longest he has ever gone without a major title was a three-year period that ended in 1970 with his second British Open crown, also at St. Andrews.

The victory goes with three U.S. Open championships, four PGA titles and five Masters green jackets. He is the only man to win all four of the major titles at least three times. Gary Player of South Africa, who won the Masters this year, Ben Hogan and Gene Sarazen are the only other men to win them

Owen, who had taken a 1-stroke lead at 7 under par with birdies on four of the first six holes on the back nine, faded badly at the end. He had bogeys on the 16th and 17th but parred No. 18 for a total of 283 and a share of second place, 2 strokes behind Nicklaus.

Also at 283 were Ray Floyd, Ben Crenshaw and Tom Kite. Peter Oosterhuis of England, the co-third round leader at 211 with Tom Watson, finished sixth at 284 after taking a bogey at

Jenkins Eyes 250 Triumphs

BOSTON (AP) - Texas Rangers veteran Ferguson Jenkins has his sights set on 250 major league victories and he intends to get them before

"He's a Hall of Fame pitcher," said Dwight Evans, an ex-teammate, after Jenkins stifled the Boston Red Sox 4-3 Friday night.

The victory for the 34-year-old native Canadian improved his career log to 222-164 in 14 seasons with four clubs in both the American and National

"I played hurt last year," Jenkins said. "It was sort of a recovery year. Late the year before I tore my Achilles tendon and it was tough coming back."

Jenkins now is 9-4 with Texas in his second stint with the AL West club after being shipped out of Boston for minor league pitcher John Poloni and some cash last December.

"My goal is to get 250 wins before I hang them up." the righthander said. "We have a good club and I think we'll show up a lot better than in the first half of the season."

Jenkins was 22-21 in two seasons with the Red Sox and says he'd like to forget his

Now, however, Jenkins has beaten Boston twice this season. He pitched eight innings Friday, allowing three solo home runs before another ex-Bostonian. Reggie Cleveland, got his ninth save by retiring the Red Sox in the ninth inning.

"I take each game one at a time," Jenkins said. "That's the way to win a lot of games. I get myself up for every game."

He won 20 games or more for six consecutive years with the Chicago Cubs and reached a career high with $5 for Texas in 1974. Jenkins is having his best season since then.

Boston's bright lights were Evans who had two of the homers off Jenkins - Nos. 17 and 18, a career high - and Fred Lynn, who hit his 15th. extending his batting streak to 15 games.

Boston's Mike Torrez, 11-5, was the loser.

No Excitement Seen In Cowboy Training

DALLAS (AP) - The way the Dallas Cowboys training camp appears to be shaping up, watching grass grow on the practice fields at Thousand Oaks, Calif. may stir more controversy this summer.

Granted, the veterans aren't in camp yet. And a lot can happen once they get there. However, things appear to be rounding out rather smoothly at this early stage for the World make the local tabloids. Champions.

Five Cowboy starters are still un-signed, but only kicker Efren Herrera has voiced any discontent with the fine print. All the draft choices are in the Poke stable, and the rookies are sweating off the baby fat in Speedster Tony Dorsett says that muscle bruise on his leg courtesy of the Denver Broncos in last year's Super Bowl - still hurts but shouldn't slow him down.

Dorsett is the acknowledged starter at running back now. Gone is the much-discussed rivalry between Dorsett and veteran back Preston Pearson. In fact, the subject has yet to

However, that pesky muscle bruise could change all that.

"It bothers me a little sometimes but no, I'm not worried about it," said Dorsett. "I feel this is something that will go away with a little more time. At least, I'm hoping. I really won't know until I get to training camp and move around in some drills. If it hurts then, I'll start worrying. At this stage, I'm not worried at all." Dorsett is not alone in the

'What, me worry?" department. Beside Herrera, defensive stalwarts Ed Jones and Randy White, linebacker Bob Breunig and offensive tackle Pat Donovan remain unsigned.

But it's hard to find a note of dissatisfaction - or even concern among the four.

"I don't know what my contract situation is because I haven't talked with my attorney in quite a while," said Jones. "I'm going to camp regardless. Even if they don't make an offer we feel is good, I'm going in. Football's all I'm thinking about anyway. That's why I left it up to an attorney." Ditto, says

"Even if I didn't sign, I won't sit back and let it affect the way I play in training camp or during the season," he added. "When the season's over we can start worrying about it then."

Donavan described his lone discussion with Cowboy vice president Gil Bant as a "good one" and said it's just a matter of working out details.

Bruenig rounded out the happy foursome, saying, "I'm a company man. I plan to be in camp on time."

Sutton 'Guilty' during Dodger Win

By FRANK BROWN AP Sports Writer

It takes 75 words in the rule book to explain why Don Sutton faces a 10-day suspension from pitching for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The 33-year-old right-hander was accused and convicted of throwing a defaced baseball to the Cardinals' Mike Tyson in the seventh inning of a 4-1 St. Louis victory Friday night. That decision, by umpiring crew chief Doug Harvey, left Sutton insisting he'd go to court to defend himself as an innocent victim of rule 3.02.

"I'm not saying anything. I'm going to file suit," said Sutton after being ejected from the contest. He maintained that Harvey was "depriving me of my rights to earn a living as a pitcher."

Harvey claimed Sutton's rights had little to do with the matter. Rules are rules, and 3.02 says - in Harvey's words -"The pitcher shall not pitch an emoryball, a spitball or an otherwise defaced baseball. If he does throw one, he must be ejected from the game and the pitch called a ball."

'At no time did I ever infer that Sutton had marked the ball," said Harvey. But someone had, and the rule states that if the actual culprit cannot be determined, "and if the pitcher delivers such discolored or damaged ball to the batter, the pitcher shall be removed from the game at once and shall be suspended automatically for 10 days."

Early in the game, first base umpire Jerry Crawford got a ball and conferred with his crew

"Doug, this ball's been scuffed," said Crawford to Harvey. "Hang onto it and we'll look at it later," said Harvey to Crawford.

They looked again at the end of the sixth, when Los Angeles center fielder Bill North caught the final out and rolled it to Harvey.

"I noticed it was marked the same way as the first one. That's when I went to Dodger Manager Tom Lasorda and told him, 'Tom, somebody's doing something to the baseball.' Tom said that Sutton wasn't doing it. I said, 'Hey. Somebody is.'"

So, after Sutton got Tyson on a fly ball for the apparent final out of the Cardinals' seventh, Harvey went into action.

Sutton was ejected, the Dodgers were sent back onto the field, Tyson was recalled to the plate, a ball was added to the count and left-hander Lance Rautzhan retired Tyson official-

Lasorda, equally upset and amazed, said: "I've never seen that in my life. I just can't see how the man (Harvey) takes it upon himself to be the judge and juror in taking my man out of the game. There's no difference between that ball and any other ball."

That will be decided by National League officials. The ball sat in a plastic bag on Harvey's desk in the umpire's room at Busch Memorial Stadium, and that ball, Harvey said, bore "A small scuff mark. There was no doubt in my mind it had been messed with."

Eisewhere, Cincinnati beat New York 6-3, Houston swept Montreal 4-3 in 13 innings and 5-4 in 10, Atlanta downed Philadelphia 7-2, Pittsburgh beat San Francisco 5-2 and San Diego downed Chicago 9-5. Reds 6, Mets 3

Pete Rose extended his hitting streak to a club record-tying 27 games and Dan * Driessen cracked a game-winning triple in the seventh inning to carry Cincinnati past News York in another game which saw friction with the arbiters.

Reds Manager Sparky Anderson was ejected for arguing with first base umpire Dutch Rennert after Doug Collins was called out on a close play. The discussion lasted too long to suit Mets Manager Joe Torre, who pulled his players off the field and then was thrown out by home plate umpire Harry

"I thought Sparky had walked all over Rennert and he was given too much time on the field, so I pulled my boys off," said Torre. "I knew what Sparky was doing, trying to pump something up. There's just so much a manager can do - he can't hit or field the ball - so sometimes you get thrown out."

Astros 4-5, Expos 3-4 Houston reliever Ken Forsch was credited with the victory in both ends of the twinbill. He pitched out of a none-out bases-loaded jam in the 12th inning of the first game and won it the next inning on an RBI single by Jose Cruz.

The teams swapped steals of home plate in the opener. Montreal's Ellis Valentine did it in the first inning and Enos Cabell retaliated in the fourth for Houston.

The Astros won the nightcap when pinch-hitter Jesus Alou drew a bases-loaded walk.

District Judge Requires Abilene Vote Re-Canvassing

West Texas inbibers, Friday's court ruling fell like gentle rain on a thirsty sponge, but nobody's breaking out the martini shakers just yet.

District Judge Don Lane ordered Taylor County Commissioners to re-canvass "all" the ballots in Abilene's June 17 wet-dry election. Unofficial returns showed the Wets with a narrow 11,591-11,460 victory.

Last Monday, however, the commissioners involved themselves in a voting precinct dispute and tossed out more than 800 yotes. The court also declared Abilene still dry to the astonishment of a packed Abilene. Based on the courtroom.

However, Buck Wood, attorney for Citizens for a Better Community the Drys, said he will appeal Lane's ruling. Since Wood is allowed 10 days to file his motion, no court-ordered canvass is expected before the end of the month.

Boy, 7, Needs Vest To Live

TEXARKANA, Ark. (AP)-Jason White stood impatiently at the entrance of his Locust Street home and bellowed, "Do ya'll notice anything different?"

His arms were crossed on his chest and his face was immobilized in a firm, wide grin. The grin didn't fade until its purpose was fulfilled-to show off the blank space left by the removal of his two front teeth.

But, Jason's missing teeth were overshadowed by a vest hanging limply on the top of his lifeline-a post holding two bags of fluid, fluid that has kept him alive for more than five years.

The vest, fashioned from material developed for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, makes 7-yearold Jason completely ambulatory for the first time since doctors discovered hyperalimentation could sustain his life.

Jason, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed White of Texarkana, has been unable since infancy to digest food taken orally. He has been fed intravenously with the fluid since he was two.

Although he experienced some freedom from his limited surroundings last year, Jason's world was confined primarily to his bedroom where the steel pole was plugged into an electrical outlet.

Mrs. White said the "big hangup" with that system was that an outlet was a necessity, Jason received some freedom when doctors decided he could be "unplugged" from the tubes for about four hours daily. During that short period, he attended kindergarten.

The vest, invented by Dr. Stanley Dudrick of Houston, has opened the door of hope for the Whites. Coincidentally, Dudrick invented Jason's life sustaining fluid.

"We have hope for the first time in five years," Mrs. White said as she sat in her living room, listening to her son play in the front yard.

She is hoping that her son may be able to receive an artificial stomach. His stomach was removed in 1974 in an attempt to eliminate the destructive hyperacidity which has kept him from eating normally.

Jason and his mother are in Texarkana for a short visit before he must return to Hermann Hospital in Houston, where he is being treated.

Dudrick, who took Jason to a medical banquet in Houston recently and promised him a dollar if he would sit still during the session, also has given Mrs. White hope that a diagnosis of what causes Jason's illness can be made within a few weeks.

The trip to Houston began on an almost tragic note May 31. Mrs. White was alone at home at 7 p.m. when Jason went into a coma. Her husband was still at work in Hope.

Dudrick told Mrs. White to rush Jason to Houston and a private plane was used to fly the couple and the child to Houston.

Mrs. White pulled out a postcard of a hospital helicopter and credited the aircraft with saving Jason's life. Three minutes after the plane landed in Houston, Jason was at the hospital.

Jason is one of six people in the United States equipped with the lifesaving vest and is the youngest of the group.

The vest contains a pouch for an ambulatory pump that can operate for 24 hours on one battery. While the pump is operating, a battery for the next 24 hours is recharging.

Protective flaps are attached to the front of the vest-shaped like a hunter's vest-to cover the two containers of liquid on which Jason survives.

The bags must be changed every six hours, Mrs. White explained.

Jason was accepted as a patient by Dudrick after the Whites found a magazine article this spring. He was scheduled to become a patient June 25, but the May 31 spell prompted a schedule change.

Mrs. White says the doctors have given her hope that her son's problems are caused by a hypersecretion of glands and that surgery may be the answer. Mrs. White and her son live in a Houston motel and Jason visits the hospital daily. White still works in Hope, but visits his family every weedend.

Jason's visits probably will be cut to three times a week, but he must undergo about two more months of testing before treatment begins.

If he does undergo diagnosis and treatment, Jason could be in Houston a year or so.

While Mrs. White talked, a "free" brown-haired bundle of energy romped. Jason scrambled down the steps of the front porch to play with a dog that wandered into his yard. He wheeled his "police" motorcycle down the sidewalk. Jason went back into the house where he played with his guest, filled his trick camera with water to amuse the guests, and set up his teepee on the living room floor. "His world had been as far as his tubes could reach," Mrs. White said. For Jason, the vest has opened a number of doors. But, he doesn't seem to care. "Who cares about it when you can get off 'hyper'?" Jason said, with a toothless grin.

SWIMMING INSTRUCTOR DORIS ROJEK ... to be teaching the blind at Austin

Teacher Faces New Challenge

Doris Rojek, who is visually handicapped and whose mother is legally blind, has been accepted as a teacher of swimming classes by the School for the Blind at Austin.

For three weeks, the Hereford woman will be teaching basic swimming skills to college-age blind persons. She was notified Wednesday that she had been accepted, on a volunteer basis, to teach the classes.

Mrs. Rojek, who is a teacher of special education classes at Aikman Elementary School, has been active in the local Red Cross swimming program for 14 years. She at one time held her Water Safety Instructors certification and swims 1/4 mile

Mrs. Rojek will be traveling to the state school as a representative of the local Red Cross chapter. "Finally, I will get the opportunity to pay back my debt to the Red Cross by teaching these classes," she said.

She stresses that the Red Cross has been a major factor in her volunteering for the blind classes. The Red Cross swimming program here has prepared me for this next step of teaching the blind to swim. Because of the Red Cross's instruction and support, I'm able to look forward to teaching these special classes.'

Mrs. Rojek has learned that blind swimmers utilize a sixth sense in the water, being able to feel the water's depth without touching any surface:

Mrs. Rojek has been told by rehabilitation teacher Ronald R. Kordas that her swimming classes will be "very small' and that she will be teaching mainly on a one-to-one basis. "From what I understand, the blind do not have the same fear of water that people with good vision do," she explained. "Although the fact that my blind students will be of college-age and just nowlearning to swim might possibly

Although she admits that she is "a little nervous," Mrs. Rojek is looking forward to the experience. "I'm very excited about the classes. It will be a new experience for me, one that I expect to enjoy," she commented.

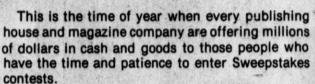

Despite the fact that Mrs. Rojek has been teaching in the classroom for almost 20 years, she has never instructed the blind--in public school or in the water. She has had some experience with blindness though because of her mother's limited sight. "Mother received her master's degree from West Texas State University when she was 65 and legally blind," she related with pride. "She's 72 now and still going strong."

(Mrs. Rojek is the daughter of Marcia Caldwell of Canyon) Mrs. Rojek holds her masters in education degree from West Texas State University. Raised in Channing, she taught in Amarillo schools before moving to Hereford. She has two daughters, Lyndi and Tracy, both of whom are employed in

Scribbles

By KERRIE STEIERT Women's Editor

I, and every other greedy American who wants pure, unadulterated wealth, love to enter these contests. But, it's not as easy as it used to be to get your name in the pot--they make the contest forms so complicated now that you earn your prize money just by filling one out. Some of these entry blanks must have been contrived by a Philadelphia lawyer.

And you have to watch the fine print. In one contest, the magazine firm sends along a 10 cent check written in your name. Most people are not overwhelmed by that sum, but after all, a dime's a dime. However, if you read the agate message at the bottom of the check, you'll discover that upon cashing this little bonus, you've agreed to buy their $9.95 book "How to Get Elected to Office in Ten Easy Steps" by Grover Cleveland.

There's also the matter of wading through nine pounds of prize propaganda, letters from the publisher and magazine sales pitches in order to get the actual entry form. Once you put your grubby little hands upon it, don't celebrate too soon. You're not off the freeway yet, dear.

Entry forms are so official-looking these days that I get clammy all over when they have my name embossed in black, bold letters. It's almost like that good-grief-what-if-I'm-making-a-terriblemistake feeling that you get when you sign a marriage license, 30-year mortgage or job application form. Nothing so frivolous should look so important.

Sweepstakes forms have hidden messages too. Check Box No. 1 if you want to enter the contest and buy a two-year subscription to the magazine. Check Box No. 2 if you want to charge it to a credit card. Check Box No. 3 if you want to pay the total or low-budget monthly installments. Check Box No. 4 if your address is incorrectly printed. Check Box No. 5 if you're a lousy cheapskate who won't buy anything but wants to enter the contest

They always have you indicate on the outside of the envelope whether or not you've decided to accept their magazine offer. This fact is bothersome, because I suspect that if you've checked the "NO" box on the envelope flap, your Sweepstakes entry goes right in el trasho. Whenever, I don't order the magazine, I write a little pathetic message on the outside of the Sweepstakes envelope in an effort to get sympathy from the contest sponsors. For instance, last week, I subscribed the following missive: "Forgive me for not buying a subscription to your wonderful little magazine, but the dog got hit by a car on Tuesday and had to have $300 in surgery, but what else could we do? He's just like one of the family."

I entered almost ten Sweepstakes contests this past week and I'll have to win at least one in order to get the money back that I spent in

DEAR ANN LANDERS: After reading that letter from the guy who signed himself Sitka Sentinel (he said 50 percent of the female bed partners in this world could be declared legally. dead) I'd like to say a few words to Sitka.

I have read too many articles entitled, "How to Keep Your Man Interested in Sex," "How To Satisfy Your Husband," etc. I'm sick of corny suggestions like "change your hairdo," "take a bubblebath," "buy a new nightgown," "invest in some fancy perfume," and "stay off subjects that irritate him. reaction of millions of women who could be delcared "legally dead." My comment: Amen, Sister.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I was pleased to read your answer to the young girl who felt obligated to marry the guy because he had told her, "If you don't marry me I will quit college and become a bun." You replied, "Don't let him blackmail you, honey. He could graduate from college and become a bum anyway."

Twenty-two years ago I was sent on a similar guilt trip. His words were stronger: "If you break up with me I will kill myself." Like a fool I married him. We now have two unstable children. I've been getting therapy which, had I had it earlier, might have saved me from this terrible marriage.

Every human being is responsible for himself. When for writing. someone says, "If I don't get what I want I'll jump in the lake or shoot myself," the answer should be "Sorry. I must live my life for ME. You can do whatever you want with yours."

A lot of mothers this summer are hiring their own children to do jobs around the house, and it's a revelation to find out what kind of a price is being put on things women have always

The teenage daughter of a friend of mine actually put out a price list for chores that reads something like this. Bedmaking: Against the wall, 35 cents; normal, 30 cents; biters, 60 cents; climbers and travelers, 85 cents. Diaper Changing: Liquids, 50 cents; solids, $1.50.

Cooking: Junk food, 35 cents a serving; opening cans and turning on stove, 50 cents.

Laundry: Machine, 50 cents. No hand washables.

Naps: With story, 25 cents; with threats, 40 cents. Entertaining: My friends, 40 cents an hour; children's Vacuuming and dusting: Minimum wage scale. Taking phone messages: (see me).

When my friend approached her about taking phone messages she said, "That's out of the question." "What do you mean, 'Out of the question'?" asked hermother.

"I mean, I cannot be expected to take care of the house, babysit, cook, change the hose, provide entertainment, make decisions, bind up wounds, close the windows when it rains, pick up and be a secretary at those prices."

The mother related the story to her husband that night and said, "Frankly, if you'd pay me that much I'd get my old job family tradition, Miss Rachel Renee McGilvary wore an heirloom bracelet as part of her bridal costume Saturday afternoon during her marriage to John Randall "Randy" Williams. Sunlight filtered through the stained glass windows of the sanctuary of First United Methodist Church, where the ceremony was solemnized by the Rev. William C. McReynolds, minister.

Banked clusters of graceful ferns in the chancel were sprinkled with colorful fresh flowers in the bride's chosen tones of pink, yellow and mint green. A floral medley of the same blossoms provided a unified altar setting.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reuben C. McGilvary Jr., 225 Beach. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Williams, 511 Schley St.

Mrs. Micki Ward was the matron of honor in her sister's wedding ceremony. Roger Bradley of Fort Devens, Mass. was the best man.

Bridesmaids appearing in the processional were Miss Elaine Birkenfeld and Miss Rebecca McGilvary, sister of the bride. Attending the bridegroom, in addition to the best man, were Gary Bolinger of Oswega, Kans. and Ray Shannon.

Guests were escorted to their seats in the sanctuary by Richard Fluhman, cousin of the bridegroom, Reuben McGilvary III, brother of the bride and Micki Ward, brother-in-law of the bride.

Prior to the ceremony, Mrs. Jere Collier of Fort Worth, aunt of the bride, and Mrs. Randy Vaughn, cousin of the bride, performed an organ and piano duet of Bach selections, including "Sheep May Safely Graze" and "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring."

"Because" by D'Hardelot and "The Lord Whom We Love" by Kaiser were rendered by the solo vocalist, Kyle Collier of Abilene, cousin of the bride. The songs were of special significance to the bride's parents, because they were sung at their own wedding.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a formal gown with a detachable cape of silk chiffon designed by Mr. Walter of Chicago. The high scalloped matching necklines were bordered with Alencon lace. A re-embroidered design of Alencon lace was patterned on the high rise bodice and lower skirt. The long sheer fitted sleeves of lace tapered to a point over her hands. Matching lace also enhanced the outline of the Chapel train on the cape.

Completing the bride's ensemble was a petite Juliet cap of white silk carnations dotted with seed pearls and touches of white silk sweetheart rosebuds atop a plume loop satin ribbon. The silk coif was designed especially for the bride.

She carried a cascade of white silk roses, daisies and babybreath, accented by touches of greenery and white satin streamers with babybreath and

Afterwards, guests were invited to a reception in the church Fellowship Hall, where refreshments were served by Mrs. Mike Schumacher and Mrs. Danny Kirkwood of Amarillo. Fresh flowers formed the top nosegay of the three-tiered, all-white wedding cake with more flowers cascading from the center, where a miniature bride and groom nestled, down the side to form a garland at the base.A centerpiece of pink, green and yellow blooms complimented the decor. Steaming Vegetables Preserves Vitamins

At this time of the summer (about 4 cups) the garden is probably producing more vegetables than one has ways of preparing them.

Below are several recipes using zucchini or summer squash, green peppers, onions, tomatoes, peas and cauliflower. These foods are valuable sources of vitamins A and C. The United States Department of Agriculture has established that four servings from the vegetables and fruits group will meet the recommended dietary allowances for these two valuable vitamins. Children, teenagers and adults often have problems meeting their minimum number of servings for this food group. Dairy Council, Inc. nutritionists suggest that one prepare vegetables using the steaming process to tempt their appetites.

One can steam young, tender vegetables using one-half to one cup of water in a heavy saucepan with a tightly fitting lid. Bring the water to a boil and add the vegetables. When the water returns to a boil, reduce the heat, cover and simmer gently. Don't remove the lid

Vegetables Required ForDiet

Fresh vegetables are a summer treat whether they are homegrown or store bought.

Nutritionists with Dairy Council, Inc. say vegetables are an important part of the diet providing vitamins A and C. They classify all vegetables into the vegetables and fruits group, one of the four food groups established by the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA). The USDA uses this system to help consumers meet their recommended dietary alowances established by the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Academy of Sciences. The other food groups are milk, meat and breads and cereals.

Credit Buying Still Booming

NEW YORK (AP) - Will the reat American buy-on-credit oom continue, and what will a continued boom mean for the

Those are questions economists at Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. are posing as consu installment credit keeps on surging.

According to the Federal Reserve, consumer debt - loans for cars, appliances and other items, and charges on creditcard accounts - rose to $227.6 billion in May. That's 18 percent ahead of last year's level and a whopping 2,745 percent above the total consumer credit outstanding at the end of 1948.

Why the increase? According to George Cruikshank, an nist at the New York bank, Americans after World War II "plunged into debt to satisfy pent-up demands for consumer goods." By the 1950s, buying leveled off, but "the first half of the 1960s saw a renewed upswing in installment debt. spurred by increasing acceptake of the use of credit for a variety of purposes."

Cruikshank, in a new report, change in attitudes "as the older generation, sorely tested by the Great Depression and somewhat cautious about debt, gave way to a generation more

Much of the debt increase has come through new-car loans. Automakers are reporting robust sales this summer, and many of the cars are bought on credit. While a two-year car loan was the norm 25 years ago, auto loans now last for up to four years. This means consumers can spread out purchases of ngly expensive cars over longer periods, but it also means increased loan costs.

Quite a few economists including the pollsters at the University of Michigan's Survey Research Center - believe the current retail sales growth is being fueled in part by consumers buying now to beat the almost inevitable price increases later.

This means added debts, and Cruikshank notes "a nagging question is being heard. Are mers over their heads?"

The Morgan Guaranty economist says, "over the years American consumers have demonstrated a remarkable ability to control their appetite for on-the-cuff purchases. When families have found their paychecks pinched by payments for past purchases they have eased up on acquiring added installment debt burdens."

Craikshank believes we may have reached that point. Traditional measures of installment debt indicate "unless things fly in the face of everything consumers have done in the past, the time is approaching...when consumers will moderate spending and

Based on past indicators, the downturn should be moderate rather than severe, Cruikshank says. One possible reason for this is the historical relationship of consumers' liquid assets cash and bank accounts - to total liabilities, which has changed little since 1961 despi downs. This indicates that savings and debts have increased side by side at about the same rate over nearly two

Yogurt: The Miracle Food

One of the virtues of yogurt is that it is a "live" food. The bacteria in yogurt are alive when you eat it, and remain alive on their way through your system to do their healthful handiwork in your large intestine.

According to various theorists, yogurt has been used successfully in connection with the following diseases and allments: ar thritis, hepatitis, migraine headaches, consti arrhea, dysentery, kidney maladies, cholera, colitis, gall stones, bad breath, skin diseases, arterioscierosis, sunburn, allergies, varying types of infection, infantile gastroenteritis, and stomach ulcers, to mention a few.

The ways in which yogurt has been used medically are vast and varied and yogurt, may not work exactly the, same on every person, buty there is no doubt that yogurt can be very beneficial to the health of almost every one. Yogurt has been shown, according to medical research to combat positively, the adverse effects of antibiotics, simply by restor-ing the friendly flora that antibiotics have destroyed. An eight-ounce container of yogurt can successfully counteract the harmful effect of fourteen units of penicil-

The intestinal flora are considered by many doctors and health wise laymen to be the key to good health, and good health arises when there is a predominance of friendly or beneficial bacteria over harmful bacteria.

Yantis Says He May Quit

AUSTIN (AP)-State Insurance Board Chairman Hugh Yantis said Friday he might resign before January if the senate fails to act on his confirmation in the special legislative session.

He said he would quit in November or December if it becomes obvious that he has no chance of confirmation by the 1979 Senate.

His reason, he said, would be to let Gov. Dolph Briscoe, not his successor, appoint a new chairman.

Yantis said, however, he wants the Senate to act on his appointment during the present special session.

The next regular session convenes in January, and Briscoe's replacement will be inaugurated shortly afterwards.

The Democratic nominee for governor is Attorney General John Hill with whom Yantis had a number of disputes while he was executive director of the Texas Water Quality Board.

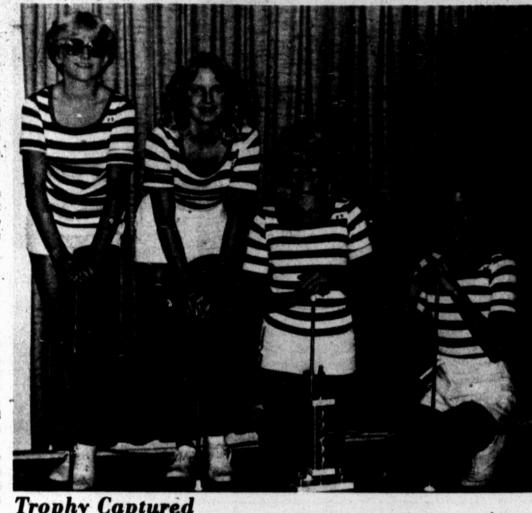

Yantis made his remarks at the beginning of an insurance board meeting to decide on new rates for property insurance, including homeowners policies.

He said his home town senator, Lloyd Doggett of Austin, in opposing confirmation was working against "the wishes of people all over the state.'

He said he had received letters and other expressions of support as diverse as from labor union locals and associations of insurance agents in San Antonio and Port Arthur.

"Apparently a lot of people would like to see me confirmed," he said.

Yantis said he was not going to ask the Senate nominations committee to delay action on his appointment, adding that he wanted to "meet the issue head on."

OCEANSIDE, Calif. (AP)-Production of a motion picture about giant man-eating tomatoes has been temporarily halted after a helicopter used in the filming crashed while trying to land in a tomato patch.

SOUTHEND-ON-SEA, England (AP)-Ellis Fraser, 43, swallowed 50 pence coins to feign illness because he enjoyed the company of nurses.

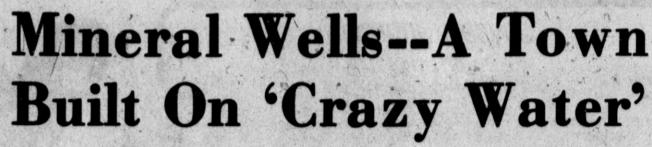

He encountered little love, buta lot of trouble with the law. Fraser, a fishmarket ice porter, was sentenced to a year in jail after pleading guilty Tuesday to three charges of obtaining hospital treatment by deception.

It turns out Fraser frequently has been hospitalized across the country usually complaining of chest pains, a natural result of swallowing the coins, about the size of a U.S. half dollar and worth about 95 cents each.

A $76 a day, hospital stay financed by the government, can be a costly drain.

Defense counsel Witold Pawlak attempted to gain the court's compassion. Fraser, he pleaded, liked nurses because they gave him the sympathy and affection he lacked in the outside world.

EDITOR's NOTE — Approaching Mineral Wells from the east, motorists descend into a lovely valley surrounded by hills, oak, mesquite and memories. For more than half a century, this was a playground of the rich and poor, famous and nous. It was a town built on water. Crazy water.

By MIKE COCHRAN Associated Press Writer

MINERAL WELLS, Texas (AP) - Particularly late at night, the stately old hotel looms as a regal ghost of another era, one filled with bright lights and big bands.

It is the shuttered symbol of a boom town that lost its boom. Once a playground for cattle kings and oil barons, the Baker Hotel remains the focal point of a historic township, 12 stories and 450 rooms of elegant emptiness.

It collects dust and pigeons and curious glances from motorists approaching or departing Fort Worth, 50 miles east on U.S. 180.

Its future is unknown.

Such a scene would distress if not demoralize a normal community. But Mineral Wells is not normal. It is crazy. Delightfully so.

And it's the first to admit it.

In the middle of the 100 block of South Oak, on the east side of the street, there is this historical tribute to Mineral Wells:

"A town built on water. Founded 1877 by J.A. Lynch, a settler who miraculously recovered from rheumatism after drinking the foul-tasting, but apparently healthful, water in this well.

"As the news spread, hundreds converged to 'take' the waters, and a boom town sprang up.
"Its commercial slogan "Crazy' arose from a reputed cure of insanity at the 'Crazy Woman Well.' Although the water's curative value is likely due to dissolved epsom and glauber salts, amazing powers were attributed to it...

Whatever, the Crazy Woman Well was the forerunner of not one but two "Crazy Well and Drinking Pavilions," the Crazy Well Water Co., Crazy Well Theatre, Crazy Well Bath House.

There was something called Crazy Flats and a Crazy this, a Crazy that. Foremost among the Crazies was the Crazy Hotel, a fireproof edifice that burned down in 1925.

A second Crazy Hotel emerged from the ashes two years later and would reign as the city's most famous and majestic fixture until the magnificent Baker was erected.

The Crazy, its name intact, is now a retirement center. When A.F. Weaver produced his photographic history book of Mineral Wells in 1975, he titled his work: "Time Was in Mineral Wells. A Crazy Story but True..." A remarkable collection of fact, fiction and photographs, "Time was" represents a loving monument to one of Texas' zaniest communities, now a city of 16,500. Once Texas' leading health spa, Mineral Wells prospers today with a wide variety of light industry. There are no mineral baths and but one mineral well water company. There is no tourist business, but a visitor to the Crazy Pavilion can get a free cup of water from the Famous Mineral Wells

Water Co.

Whatever its future, this is a city with a past.

A bewhiskered gentleman named J.A. "Judge" Lynch founded Mineral Wells on Christmas Eve, 1887 after being stranded in the area with a couple of dead oxen.

According to "Time Was," one of the beasts dropped dead from the heat and the second succombed to a blizzard, both the

Mineral Wells was off to a good start on the road to Crazy. Three years after the oxen tragedy, Judge Lynch chanced upon a driller and promptly swapped him two live animals for digging the community's first water well. 'It tasted funny and everyone was afraid to drink much of it, because they thought it might be poison," Lynch's son C.C.

would recall many years later. C.C. also remembered the well as a handly alternative to the erratic flow of the Brazos River and confirmed that it was not poisonous. He in fact said: "Mother was suffering from rheumatism, and after drinking the water for some time she was not bothered with it any more.

Neighbors found out and started drinking it for their ills." According to C.C., the city's immortal link to the word "crazy" stems from the third well dug in the area.

"Among those who came to drink the water, a woman came with her family; she was suffering a nervous breakdown," C.C.recalled. "People claimed she was crazy, demented, and after several weeks of drinking the water, she was cured.

"Hence, they called it the 'Crazy Woman's Well,' later dropping the 'woman' and calling it the Crazy Well."

Whatever the actual curative qualities of the mineral waters, one of the earliest recorded converts was a J.H. Baker of nearby Palo Pinto, who thoughtfully kept a diary.

On July 21, 1880, he wrote: 'Sent wife and children to the medical well today. There is considerable excitement in the county below the mountains beyond the river concerning a well that has been dug, the waters of which seem to be benefiting those who drink it. In a subsequent notation, Baker was even more euphoric: "It seems that the waters here are performing wonderful cures of cancer, neuralgia, nervousness, rheumatism and other various ills that the human flesh is heir to." The word spread. Soon, boarding houses sprang up to provide food and shelter for health-seekers, who eagerly purchased both for $7 to $10 weekly. After finding a bed, it was off to the drinking pavilions, where

$1 secured unlimited drinking water privileges for a week. If huckstering was not born in Mineral Wells, it certainly flourished in the environment. Suppliers of Texas Crazy Water said it:

'Makes a man love HIS wife,

"Makes a wife love HER husband.

"Robs the divorce court of its business.

"Takes the temper out of redheaded people,

"Puts ginger into drinks and pepper into plodders." The road Crazy was short and well traveled.

Longtime residents recalled that upwards of 200,000 visitors poured into the city annually, many seeking such mineralized treats as the Turkish, Salt Glow, Russian Massage and Vapor

"Many took the baths regularly, some not because they had ailments but because it was the thing to do," a historian said. It was champagne days and starry nights, with dancing atop the roof gardens of the Baker and Crazy hotels, often to the sounds of Lawrence Welk, Jack Amlung or Paul Whiteman. Prohibition was a nuisance, no more, no less. David Mathews, who manages the Crazy tody, said they routinely provided moonshine at $5 a quart. Neither gambling nor girls were strangers at the Baker or Crazy, he said, a revelation somehow omitted or overlooked by official historians. Weaver's history book did include a vivid account of the ever-popular Badger Fight, an annual affair described thusly:

"The fight is pulled off by the Civic League and Old Maids" Convention, and usually the Mayor, and sometimes the Governor of the state, is master of ceremonies.

"After...weary-brained business men arrive from far and near, the crowd repairs to the vacant lot opposite the Crazy well, where the badger is placed beneath a barrel, with a strong cord attached to its person.

"Some prominent young man who does not dread death...is requested to "pull" the badger; another is requested to hold the most ferocious bulldog that ever trailed after Molly Bailey's

"The barrel is lifted by the Chief of Police and then the fun begins.

"After the mangled forms of the dog and badger are scattered to the four winds, the crowd repairs to a nearby drug store, where the hero who pulled the badger if he survives usually pays for the cigars and drinks."

Despite their alleged appeal, it is doubtful the badger brawls rivaled the Baker for entertainment.

Jean Harlow stopped in for a Coke at the soda fountain and Bonnie and Clyde reputedly holed up there once between bank robberies and shortly before they were gunned down.

In 1940, Mineral Wells was selected for an infantry replacement training center, which became Camp Wolters and which brought a new clientele to town.

But the dizzy splendor of the '30s was losing its glitter, and by 1950 the convention business had trailed off and the city's reputation as a health resort was all but forgotten.

By the time the Baker closed, said one resident, it had gone from "poshy to patriotic to plastic." And so went the road to Crazy.

United Airlines To Purchase Wide Jets

CHICAGO (AP)-United Airlines announced Friday it would purchase 30 of Boeing's 767 wide-bodied jets, becoming the first airline to order the only new American commercial jet design of the decade.

United, the nation's largest domestic airline, said it will spend $1.2 billion for the 30 jets, which have a range of 2,500 miles and will hold about 200 passengers.

United President Richard Ferris said the purchase will help usher in a new generation of jetliners. The Boeing design had been in competition for United's order with the European A-300 Airbus.

The announcement, which followed a meeting of United directors, also said the airline would buy 30 more Boeing 727-200s for $400 million.

The 767 is a twin-engined jumbo jet priced at about $20 million. Boeing's 727, the most numerous jetliner in the world, costs about $13 million to $14

United has a fleet of 355 planes. Of those, the company says 260 are older models which must be replaced to meet federal noise regulations. The airline also wants more fuel-efficient aircraft than the older models it now owns.

Pope

NEW YORK (AP)-Technicaly, apyone can be elected pope. Inder Roman Catholic rules, it ould be a Paris policeman or a lew Orleans plumber. But Imost inevitably, it's one of the hurch's active cardinals, currntly 117 of them.

They are a select fraternity, generally little known to the world at large, who make the hoice in highly secretive seclusion, a locked-door conclate. But for the first time, a group of influential Catholics seek to do what they can to open up the process to public scrutiny.

They launched their efforts this week as an international "Committee for the Responsible Election of profiles of present cardinals, and also introducing a monthly newsletter, "Conclave Confidential," weighing the prospects.

"We want full discussion of the men and the issues, rather than it being confined to a narrow club," said James H. Andrews of the group and board chairman of Sheed Andrews and McMeel Publishers.

It turned out the new volume of biographical appraisal, "The Inner Elite; Dessiers of Papal Candidates," by sociological specialist Gary MacEoin of Tucson, Ariz.

He spent three years in research and interviewing the cardinals, tracing their careers, attitudes and sway among their colleagues in the context of conditions that could affect their

It was found that some of them hardly knew each other, being unable even to pronounce the names of fellow cardinals, Andrews said. Even "more alarming," he added, was the fact that their impression of each other seldom matched assessments of close associates.

Beyond that, he said there is an incredible "lack of basic information available to the world community about this inner elite" who will chose from among themselves the next pope, with his worldwide church authority and voice in international diplomacy.

The new group, besides seeking to turn the light, and power of fuller information on the process, also is amassing data for computer projections of likely papal choices in various "simulated scenarios," with first results expected to be ready this fall.

The undertaking was described as not focused only on the "imminent near-term death" of Pope Paul VI, nearing 81 and increasingly frail, but as a continuing, long-term attempt to illuminate the traditionally shuttered proceedings.

The new committee, presently about 25 prominent Catholic clergy and laity, mostly professors, columnists, researchers, authors and editors, plans to expand to a worldwide network, also enlisting some Protestant and Eastern Orthodox specialist because of ecumenical aspects of the

Philip Scharper, the group's other co-chairman and editor in chief of Orbis Books, Mary-kno-ll, N.Y., said the project is a "logical extension" of reforms of the Second Vatican Council.

Requirment

Unconstitutional

AUSTIN, Texas (AP)-A requirement calling for patients to fulfill a one-year residency requirement for treatment at a public hospital is unconstitutional, Attorney General John Hill said Friday.

Hill said hospital districts may require non-emergency patients to claim residency within the district but may not set a specific period of residency.

The attorney general's legal opinion went to District Attorney William W. Day of Port Lavaca.

"A mere residence requirement would accomplish the objective of limiting the use of public medical facilities to bona fide residents of the county without sweeping within its prohibitions those bona fide residents who had moved into the state within the qualifying period," Hill said, quoting from a U.S. Supreme Court decision in a similar case.

"Emergency patients must be treated regardless of their place of residence," Hill said.

Inflationary Crunch Prompts Religious Morale Outrage

NEW YORK (AP) - Moral outrage at the crunch of inflation is generating in the religious sphere. Theologians and church convention representatives are starting to see it as a form of sin.

"It is essentially a moral problem rather than financial," says Quaker philosopher Elton Trusblood of Richmond, Ind., adding that the fundamental answer to it demands ethicalspiritual redirection.

It's termed a modern "plague" by Rabbi Dr. Ely E. Pilchik, president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis. "Inflation is the curse and the danger of the free Western world."

The Rev. Robert. G. Howes of Cheyenne, Wyo., an official of the Roman Catholic national pastoral planning council, cites notives of "greed and grab" behind the inflationary spiral.

"Its roots are deep in that selfishness which historian Arnold Toynbee rightly calls the cardinal sin of our times," Howes writes in the National Catholic Reporter.

That view of inflation as a manifestation of a rampant evil impulse has shown up as a new moral battlecry in some church gatherings, simultaneously with criticism of the long church silence about it.

A "strange silence," editorializes the weekly Christian, saying the churches have been lax in failing to speak out about a process having "painful personal and collective" impact on people.

But the issue is heating up in the churches, as indicated by a slate of proposals at the recent Southern Baptist convention in Atlanta, urging voting leverage to keep from office those supporting inflationary spend-

It is the hidden "robber of the people" by stealing from the worth of their earnings, declared one resolution, which would have urged the 13 million Southern Baptists to vote only for Congressional candidates who promose to "forfeit their right to continue in office" if the federal government spends more than it takes in.

Another proposal would have demanded a U.S. Constitutional amendment barring deficit spending except in time of war. Although the specific measures never reached the floor in the program crush, they showed a rising sense that inflation impinged on moral premises.

"It is the human cost of runaway inflation that is so terrible to contemplate," writes Trueblood in his quarterly letter to "Yokefellows," a transdenominational association committed to exercising Christian disciplines in everyday life.

He points out that inflation hits hardest at the most economically prudent - those who have saved and maintained life insurance - by devastating those assets. He says the present course also will inevitably "cheat our children."

Saying the national budget has multiplied five times in about 12 years, from about $100 billion to $500 billion, he cites the swelling staffs of public office holders, their tax-paid travels, the "double-dippers" on the public payroll also receiving government pensions, and adds:

"As our bureacracy grows, both in numbers and in level of payment, a large part of our total budget is that which pays those who are rendering no present service of any kind."

Watergate Changes Ironic

WASHINGTON (AP)-Chairman Sam is a sometime credit card huckster, Howard Baker and Lowell Weicker think of running for president.

Edward Gurney and Herman Talmadge have faced ethical questions about money. Daniel Inouye is as far from the limelight as his state is from the mainland. Joseph Montoya is dead.

Five years ago, the members of the Senate Watergate Committee were delving into America's greatest political scandal. The years have brought changes, ironic in some cases.

Sam J. Ervin Jr. of North Carolina, "retired" since 1974, hasn't changed much since he starred on daytime television - jiggling those eyebrows in time with his outrage, dispensing homilies like blue ribbons for peach preserves at the Burke County fair.

Watergate, he is fond of saying, made him one of the most notorious characters in the United States - a renown that didn't escape the attention of the firm that advertises those apple green credit cards.

"Do you know me?" asks Chairman Sam, the country lawyer, scrunching down in his airplane seat.

Well, heck, American Express, almost everybody knows Ol' Sam.

At nearly 82, the aphorisms still trip wondrously from his tongue.

Of Richard Nixon's memoirs: "I'd have to say that insofar the President discusses the things I know the best that he certainly did obey Mark Twain's injunction, 'truth is very precious, use it sparingly.""

Of his life since he returned home to Morganton, N.C.: "Oh, Lord, I'm working as hard as I did when I was in the Senate, one way and another. I'm practicing just a little bit of law. I'm making a lot of speeches. I'm being called on to aid this, that and the other."

The speeches and the rest keep Ervin on the road much of the time. He can command $2,000 for a speech, but makes many for nothing.

If Ervin was the best known Watergate senator, then surely that other country lawyer, Sen. Howard Baker, asked the most memorable question: "What did the president know and when did he know it?"

The post-Watergate spotlight has played longer over the Republican senator from Tennessee than any of his colleagues, Ervin included.

"It's interesting to listen to how I am introduced when I speak outside my home state," says Baker. "Watergate used to be the first thing they mentioned. Then it sort of slipped down into the body of the introduction and now they sometimes don't mention it at ali."

Baker tried to parlay Watergate exposure into the 1976 Republican vice presidential nomination. When that failed, he vowed never to run for the second spot again, and now his name is high among Republicans considered 1980 presidential candidates. But he says his first concerns are his job of minority leader, and re-election in the fall.

The other Watergate senator among early presidential prospects is Lowell Weicker, the maverick Republican on the committee.

And Weicker was no kinder to Zbigniew Brzezinski in declaring: "If I were president and I had a national security adviser who singled out American Jews as an impediment to my policies, I would have his resignation before sundown and his reputation for breakfast."

A Weicker-for-president committee has been formed, but the Connecticut senator says it is there only in case he decides to run - it is not a commitment to

For Edward J. Gurney, service on the committee augured sad times. Now he is running for Congress from Florida's 9th District, the House seat he vacated 10 years ago to run for the Senate.

Gurney was the third Republican on the committee and the man in Richard Nixon's corner. As he prepared to run for re-election in 1974, he was indicted on charges that included bribery and perjury in an alleged scheme to shake down Florida builders. He was acquitted in two trials, and was left $2½ million in debt to his lawyers. He said the Justice Department "has destroyed a U.S. senator, blackened my name, besmirched my character and ruined me economically."

For Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., trouble began after his 1977 divorce and a property dispute that followed. The Senate Ethics Committee is looking into the Washington Star's allegations that he accepted tens of thousands of dollars from constituents.

And Joseph D. Montoya, 40 days / before he died June 5, told a hearing he taw had not been influenced by $5,000 in acampaign contributions and gifts from acampaign contributions and gifts from heart from the following parts. The following many contributions and gifts from acampaign contribu

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, left the limelight with the end of the Senate watergate committee's hearings. He served as chairman of the Senate intelligence committee for one year, then stepped down.

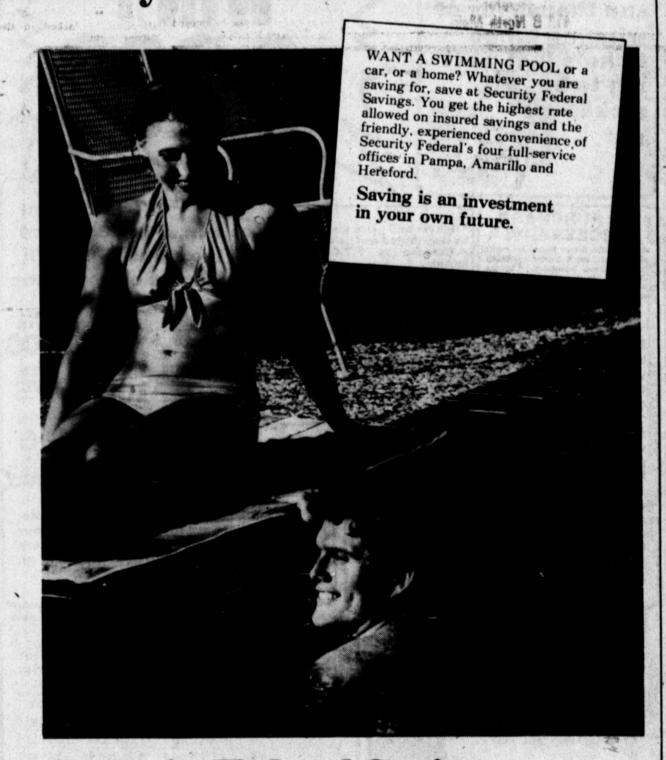

And the Senate Watergate Committee, which in its infancy had riveted the nation's attention, left stage with little notice after 1½ years work. By then, June 1974, another congressional committee held the spotlight - the House Judiciary Committee, debating whether the House should impeach Richard Nixon. Nixon resigned that August.

Chairman Sam wrote this epitaph in his committee's final report:

committee's final report;

"A select committee such as ours, created by the Senate for a special function, appears briefly on the nation's scene, does its work and disappears. It is my firm belief that the bright light this committee has shed on the matter given it to study, iffurninated the American pubic's understanding and consciousness of the Watergate affair and will not quickly fade."

'Kerry Dancer' Destroyed As Plaything for Swimmers

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND, Texas (AP)-The Kerry Dancer, a grounded shrimp boat that had confounded officials here since May, is no more.

The 56-foot vessel, which attracted death and injury in the shallow waters here, was destroyed Thursday by a series of shattering explosions that left the beach strewn with charred debris.

A U.S. Army ordnance squad from Corpus Christi had been called in to do away with the deadly hazard.

The boat ran aground here May 4 quickly became a plaything for swimmers in Andy Bowie park. One youth died and several were injured while playing in the Gulf waters near the boat. "We're trying to get rid of the boat the cheapest way possible," said Randy Friebele, an assistant Cameron County district attorney.

The local prosecutors had taken the boat's owners to court in an effort to have the boat removed. But Elizabeth Pierson of nearby Laguna Heights claimed she sold the boat for $1 after it beached. The salvage firm she said she sold it to,

State district Judge Filemon Vela ordered Mrs. Pierson to have the boat removed. On a crowded Saturday at the beach she and a friend tried to set the water-soaked boat ablaze. Deputies stepped in and quashed that effort. It went back to Vela's court and the judge ordered the county to arrange the boat's removal. The ownership - a financial responsibility - will be decided

It took over a week for the county to arrange the demolition. There were questions about whether the boat was technically in the county - it was nestled in the sand some 50 feet from shore.

But the district attorney's office, after consulting with the U.S. Coast Guard. decided the most important thing was to get the menace out of the water.

Deputies cleared the beach here early Thursday as the project began.

Mrs. Pierson watched from afar as the demolition crew waded out to the boat with cases of explosives.

"You'd have to be a shrimper to understand," she said of her emotion.

Mrs. Pierson and her husband had purchased the Kerry Dancer several months before he died of cancer.

Although upset at the destruction of the boat she had called her "dream," she said she was glad the hazard was gone.

The use of the Army team will save money for whoever the court decides owned the boat. Original estimates showed it would cost some $10,000 to haul the boat ashore, but Freibele said the ordnance team was not charging the county for its services. The only cost will be the $300 per day being paid to local driver-salvager Gene Robeson who aided Thursday.

The explosions splintered the boat and spewed debris some 400 feet into the air. The remains washed ashore and were collected by county employees.

Friebele, who had watched the Kerry Dancer become a major nuisance, took home a small chunk of a warning sign from the boat.

Roberson said he planned to return Friday to remove the remaining fragments. The bottom of the vessel is wedged six feet into sand below the

Federal Reserve Board Hikes Interest to Highest Level

It's all reminiscent of 1974 when the Fed's pressure or interest rates and the money supply played a major role in the nation's plunge into the deepest and longest recession since World War II.

But wasn't that in the days of Republican presidents and the conservative chairman of the board, crusty old Arthur Burns? Didn't Democrat Jimmy Carter name his own man, G. William Miller, to run the Fed? What goes on here?

What goes on here is that the Fed, the the Congress and the presidency, has a role to play in government that sometimes transcends the inclination of any

The Fed, on the other hand is in a position to try to counter the impact of excess spending, especially when it shows up in worsening inflation. It reacts almost instinctively by tightening the money supply, an action that, theoretically at least, relieves pressure on prices by pushing up interest rates.

> But there is a danger that as the Fed pushes up interest rates to slow the economy and cool inflation it may push them too high and plunge the country into a recession. Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal has said the Fed is courting precisely that danger now.

Miller openly has admitted the Fed's actions could result in a recession if the White House and Congress don't cooperate by reducing federal spending.

But last week, Miller even voted against the latest increase in the Fed's discount rate, which was raised from 7 percent to 71/4 percent, the highest in more than three years. Borer Control Program To Begin

Mites, 'Hoppers Being Watched Closely

By JIM STEIERT Brand Farm Editor

Entomologists in the local area continue to monitor insect pest populations closely after Panhandle corn producers were burned last year by a massive buildup of spider mites that drastically reduced overall corn yields.

Of particular concern to farmers and pest control firms at this time is a buildup of grasshoppers in Ochiltree, Hansford and Lipscomb counties.

The 'hoppers reached a population level which resulted in serious damage to rangeland in portions of the northern Panhandle, and a massive range spraying effort was completed during the past week in an attempt to turn back the tide of insect invaders.

'We feel like we've obtained a good kill with our spray program," a spokesman at the Perryton Chamber of Commerce reported Friday afternoon after malathion was applied by air to a large area of grassland in the three counties.

"We had some severe damage to rangeland. but the 'hoppers appeared to only attack irrigated crops that bordered rangeland," the Perryton spokesman added.

Although there is a population of grasshoppers in the area, a spokesman for a local aerial spraying firm reported that the jumping pests have not reached a population density sufficient for serious damage yet, and there are only isolated cases of damage to crops.

Spider mite populations are still building in cornfields in the Magic Triangle area of Deaf Smith, Castro and Parmer counties.

"Although the population of mites is beginning to build rapidly in local cornfields, we still are not seeing the high populations of this pest that were encountered at this time last year," the spokesman continued.

Area farmers are seeking to avert serious damage from this nearly microscopic pest by applying miticides to a wide acreage on a trial

A pest control campaign of massive proportions should get underway here within the coming week as local aerial applicators launch their Southwestern corn borer control program for 1978.

Chief weapons in the fight against the corn-girdling insect pest will be the pesticides Sevimol and Furadan.

Both are applied by air over the top of corn as the second generation of the corn pest emerges.

Two or three applications of the pesticides are made at seven to ten day intervals during the borer control campaign, and aerial applicators will be spending long hours in the cockpits of their ag aircraft as they move over the huge acreage of corn in this "Corn Belt" of the Texas Panhandle.

While the borer control program is time-proven and has continued to prove successful, the pesky spider mites that attacked corn here last year were virtually indestructible, and both farmers and pesticide applicators admit that the best bet yet for good mite control is a slow, soaking rain to wash them off of corn plants.

Insect control aside, local farmers would also welcome the rain at this time to boost thirstycrops.

The Agriculture Department said Thursday that June milk output was about 10.9 billion pounds. That compared with more than 11 million pounds in June of last year.

"The fungus enters the plant causing a brownish discoloration of the stem and especially the glumes covering the seed. The seed become shriveled because moisture and nutrients are diverted by the disease organism. There are a number of related organisms in a complex that causes somewhat similar symptoms and damage. Some of these cause a brownish discoloration or a black tip on the seed," Petr explained.

The agronomist emphasized that if farmers hope to prevent similar extremes of light test weights in their wheat crop next year, they might be will advised not to hold over shriveled or discolored seed from this year's crop for planting this fall.

Petr also advised farmers to treat any wheat seed with a fungicide.

'Most fungi causing diseases in wheat are soil-borne, and crop rotation and clean fallow may be helpful control tools. It is likely that septoria or gloom blotch occurs to a limited extent in most years, but economic losses from the disease occur only about every 15 years. It is not considered a major disease in this area, but, records show that epidemics occurred in 1941 and again in 1955. In 1977, there was evidence of glume blotch caused by septoria or related organisms in the wetter-thannormal eastern part of the Panhandle, especially in Gray and Hemphill counties," Petr related.

Early in the season there was moderate incidence of wheat streak mosaic virus. The diseased fields were generally planted early and were located in the proximity of volunteer wheat or row crops infested with summer annual grassy weeds that harbored the virus-bearing mites. Wheat that is fall-infested shows severe mosaic symptoms and generally fails to produce heads, consequently, such fields were grazed out or plowed up. "It is likely that some fields were infested with the virus in the spring after the heads had formed. In that situation the leaves may show some yellowing but usually the effect on yield or test weight is small. However, with the severe drought stress in April coupled with abnormally cold temperatures, the effects of the disease could have been severe enough to reduce yield and test weight. USDA Sets Up Shop For Agrahol

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Agriculture Department has officially set up shop to gather ideas from the public on how to convert barnyard manure and other agricultural products into fuel.

There is a big kicker, however. The plans must result in products that contain more energy than it takes to make them. In other words, if it takes two gallons of petroleum to make one gallon from a farm product, forget it.

The Department announced that proposals for four pilot energy projects now are being accepted. The deadline for submitting the ideas is Oct. 16. Congress last year in passing the Food and Agriculture Act authorized USDA to guarantee loans of up to $15 million each on four pilot energy projects. Public hearings on how to proceed were

A detailed step-by-step outline and rules were then drawn up. The 24-page document tells how applications should be made and describes how the loans are to be handled.

Specifically, the projects will be aimed at producing industrial hydrocarbons and alcohol from a wide variety of "agricultural commodities and forest products."

sense as all forms of farm crops, vegetation and residues" and also relate to "biomass" which includes, for example, "such diverse materials as the grain and stalks of corn, wheat and rice; cottonseed hulls; fruits and vegetables and their processing byproducts and residues; poultry and livestock manures and residues; wood products including bark, pulp, chips and residues from logging and diaper manufacturing; aquatic plants; and specific energy-farm crops," it said.

The regulations include provisions requiring financial statements for persons associated with the projects.

The guaranteed loans, if approved, will be available to a borrower for up to 20 years and will carry an annual interest rate "agreed upon by the borrower and the lender," the regulations said. Deligible participants in the projects include public, private and cooperative organizations whether they are profit or nonprofit.

Questions on the program and actual proposals can be sent to Harry Brown, Office of Energy, Room 38124s, USDA, Washington, D.C. 20250.

Vegetable Prices To Continue High

The report said that growers boosted summer vegetable plantings to 333,000 acres, up 3 is estimated at 47.5 million year ago. However, prospective yields are below last summer.

Thin Results

Wheat harvest is over for 1978 in Deaf Smith County, and if local farmers were finding any grain left behind the combine as they harvested, they probably weren't hauling any to town at all. Markedly low test weights were a problem here, and a combination of weather and disease factors accounted for the poor wheat production.

Area farmers are warned by agricultural specialists that they should refrain from using shriveled grain from this year's crop for their fall planting, as it could lead to additional fungus infection problems for next year's wheat crop as

Water District to Call For Higher Well Permit Deposit

LUBBOCK - In action at its July meeting, the Board of Directors of the High Plains Underground Water Conservation District No. 1 has voted to approve amending the rules of the District to call for a fifty dollar well permit application deposit instead of the currently required ten dollars.

This new deposit amount will still be refundable to the applicant if (1) the application is denied by the Board, or (2) if the application is granted, upon timely receipt of correctly completed registration and log of well, or (3) if said permit location is abandoned without having been drilled, upon return and surrender of said permit marked "abandoned" by the applicant.

The vote by the directors will allow the District to publish the proposed rules change in one or more area newspapers at least once a week for two consecutive weeks. After meeting this legal requirement the new rule will become effective on September

The Board also heard a report from Don Smith, Assistant District Manager, that 262 open holes have been found in Lubbock County as a result of a recent field survey taken by the District. Letters were sent to the owners of the land where the wells are situated advising them of the potentially hazardous situation and asking them to properly close the open well

In the initial follow-up, 31 sites have been visited.

Eighteen of the 31 were properly closed with eleven improperly sealed and two sites

Legal recourse to get the holes closed can range from a lien against the owner to a possible two hundred dollar per day fine.

In other business, the directors were briefed on the recent report given to the City of Shallowater concerning its water supply. In the report prepared by the District, A. Wayne Wyatt, District Manager, reported that Shallowater had approximately 71/2 years of water supply left in the aquifer underlying the corporate limits of the City.

The mayor and city council members already formed action committees to study various solutions that were recommended by the District. Wyatt said that there is "a definite problem and a definite need for some action; however, the Shallowater city leaders are already involved in considerations that should give them adequate time to come up with a near-permanent solution."

On The Turnrow

By Jim Steiert

Brand Farm Editor

In farm country, gardens are only rarely planted on a small scale, and it's seldom that they are planted solely to stock the family larder either.

Country gardens are kind of a community

There's an old saying that you plant one seed to rot, one for the birds, one for the worms and one to grow, or something like that. In these parts, you throw in a couple of extra seeds for the neighbors. "Garden" is a term applied very liberally here

When you pull into the field with a four or six row planter and start putting in "garden" 'til you think you've got enough, there's a little more in productive potential involved than the average back yard enterprise. In go seemingly unending rows of beans, peas and okra, and maybe a "roasting ear patch" of sweet corn.

Then, when all of the serious garden planting is finished, anywhere from a quarter to halfway through the field on the first pass, off come the planter boxes.

The kids find a perch next to a seed tube and begin trickling cantaloupe seeds down the tubes as the rig crawls along.

A little ways farther and they switch to black diamond watermelons. By the time the rig hits the turnrow at the far end of the field, this "country garden" is of grand enough proportions to stock any supermarket produce section.

Through the spring and summer, the garden is a place to keep the youngsters out of trouble on the business end of a hoe. And about the time the "little acre" gets thirsty, you're irrigating corn or milo anyway, so you just run a little more ditch, throw a couple of irrigation tubes in the rows and soak 'er down.

By bean picking time, you need a full crew just to keep up with the gathering.

There is no way for one family to put up everything that comes out of one of these little spreads, even if they snap and dice and freeze and can all summer.

By the time the okra is ready, everyone who comes along and can stand the taste of your produce is suddenly a deserving "neighbor" who really needs to pick and carry home a bushel or two of beans, peas and okra, a bucket of tomatoes and a sackful of corn.

Then the cantaloupe start ripening all at once. You stop between changing sets of water one evening to pick just a few for supper. Only gonna' take the real vine-ripened ones that turn loose when you touch them.

Half an hour later, the pickup bed is full of the sweet smelling fruit and you have to make a quick trip into town, looking for some more of those "neighbors" to share with, knowing you'll have that many more ripe cantaloupe in a day or two.

It's much the same story with the watermelons, although they hang on a little longer. It's no big deal for the kids from town to stop and "borrow" a few of them, and the ground around all the trees on the home spread eventually becomes lined with the deep green ovals of fruit you've placed in their shade to keep them cool until a likely-looking "neighbor" comes along.

Just the tradition of country gardening, I guess, but it's kind of a nice one, don't you think?

By the way, neighbor, do you like cucumbers and squash?...We've got more than we'll ever eat here, and you're welcome

GSPA Begins Asian Development Phase

LUBBOCK, Tex. - Another phase in Grain Sorghum Producers Association's market development program has begun with Elbert Harp. GSPA's executive director, leading a grain sorghum mission to Asia.

In cooperation with U.S. Feed Grains Council, the team of specialists will hold seminars and meetings with grain buyers in Hong Kong, Taiwan, Malaysia and the Philippines. Accompanying Harp will be John Brethour, livestock nutritionist of Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station and Dr. Lloyd Rooney, cereal chemist and nutritionist of Texas A&M University.

Grain buyers in Asia have been unhappy with grain sorghum due to the purchase of 'high tannin' grain from other sorghum exporting countries. Grain Sorghum Producers Association considers it of utmost importance that these buyers be made, aware of the difference between the sorghum grown in other countries and that grown in the U.S.A.

According to Harp, "The main objectives of this mission will be (1) to explain the nutritional difference between high tannin sorghum and U.S. #2 yellow sorghum, (2) to show how to differentiate high tannin sorghum and U.S. #2 by means of a simple bleach test, (3) to prove that grain sorghum relates pound-per-pound with yellow corn as a high energy feed grain, and (4) to emphasize the price advantage grain sorghum has over corn. In other words," concluded Harp, "the ultimate objective is to increase grain sorghum sales."

Number of Hired Farm Workers Now Stabilizing

WASHINGTON (AP)-After following a downward trend for more than a decade, the number of hired farm workers in the United States has stabilized in recent years, according to a new analysis by the Agriculture Department.

The analysis, issued Wednesday, was based on Bureau of Census figures for 1976. Updated annually by the department's Economics, Statistics and Cooperatives Service, the report said that the 1976 hired work force was abut 2.8 million persons.

"The number of hired farm workers has not changed significantly since 1971, . when the hired farm working force numbered over 2.6 million persons," it said. "Since that time, annual employment appears to have stabilized after the long-term downward trend of the previous years."

Although there were years of slight increases and decreases, the farm labor force generally declined after 1985, when it totaled abut 4.2 million workers. This coincided with increased mechanization in some sectors of agriculture, a continued migration of rural people to cities and the trend to larger and fewer farms on which to work.

"As in previous years, hired farmworkers were predominately young. white and male," the report said of the 1976 statistics. "The majority lived off the farm and more resided in the south than in any other region of the United States."

The report said also that: -60 percent of the hired workers were less than 25 years old and that half of those were 14 to 17 years of age. the median age of all workers was 23. years, meaning that helf were older and half were younger.

-74 percent of all farm workers were white.

-74 percent of all farm workers were

-81 percent of all workers did not live on farms at the time of the survey in 1976. The report said that only 12 percent of all hired help worked on farms yearround, meaning 250 days or more.

Another 10 percent worked on farms 150 to 249 days a year.

Averaged together, the 1976 hired labor force earned $1,652 per worker, an average of $19.25 a day for 86 days of farm employment, the report said. Those who worked on the farm yearround earned $6,392 in 1976 for an average of 305 days of employment or $20.95 a day, the survey found.

Looking at migrant farm workers, the report said that in 1976 there were 213,000 - about 8 percent of the total work force - who traveled across county lines from their usual place of residence to stay overnight and do farm work, a definittion used by the statisicians.

The study of migrants found that: -Nearly 60 percent of them were less than 25 years old.

-Almost one-third were students who were out of the work force most of the vear. -72 percent were males. -They averaged 82 days of farm work and earned $1,807 a year. -Whites accounted for 57 percent of migrant workers: Hispanics, 36 percent; and blacks and "others", 7 percent.

Hardwick referred specifically to the development of facilities at the Lubbock County Field Laboratory near New Deal, the renovation of facilities at the Texas Tech University Center at Amarillo, the building of a new Agriculture Pavilion on the Lubbock campus and curriculum development and teaching improvement.

Foreman Would Move Up Under New Ag Dept. Pecking Order

WASHINGTON (AP) - Carol Tucker Foreman, whose job is assistant secretary of agriculture for food and consumer programs, would be in charge of the Agriculture Department if the United States comes under enemy attack and Bob Bergland couldn't make it to work.

A new pecking order listing the line of succession was issued Thursday in a memorandum signed by Bergland.

Ms. Foreman, who has been filling in as acting secretary of agriculture when Bergland is out of town, actually is ranked third behind Bergland. But the No. 2 post of deputy secretary

White resigned last January to become chairman of the Democratic National Com-

"In the event of my inability to act as secretary of agriculture on account of enemy attack other national defense emergency, provisional authority is hereby delegated to the individuals named below to exercise all of the authority vested in the secretary of agriculture," Bergland said.

After Ms. Foreman, the line of succession in descending order includes: Assistant Secretary Dale E. Hathaway, succession behind the unfilled international affairs and commodity programs; Assistant Secretary Alex Mercure, rural development; and Assistant Secretary P.R. Bobby Smith, marketing services.

Sixteen others also were ranked to take charge in case the top six are not around during an attack.

Bergland said his new order supercede one issued March 10, 1975, by then-Secretary Earl L. Butz. If Butz's enemy attack order had been allowed to remain on the books, Ms. Foreman would have ranked fifth in Bergland's line of deputy's post, Hathaway, Mercure and Cutler.

Joseph T. McDavid, USDA press chief, said that Ms. Foreman was designated No. 3 in the hierarchy on the basis of seniority. She was the first of the assistant secretaries to be sworn in after Bergland took over the department at the start of the Carter administration.

Cutler, Hathaway and Mercure were sworn in together and were ranked alphabetically. McDavid said. Smith took over his job earlier this year and has the least seniority among the five assistant secretaries.

Use of Electrical Stimulation as Way Of Tenderizing Meat Under Scrutiny

Consumers may soon enjoy meat of increased tenderness and palatability as a result of experiments with electrical Carcasses of three species of animals were divided, shortly after slaughter, at the Texas A&M University Meat Laboratory. One side of each animal, treated conventionally, was compared with the other side which was stimulated with electricity.

Use of electrical stimulation to increase meat tenderness is not a new idea; its use for this purpose was first suggested by Benjamin Franklin in 1749.

But previous studies of this technique have used electrical currents of 250-3600 volts. The present study was conducted to investigate the use of a commercially availa.

ble low-voltage (uses 110 volt house current) stunning device to electrically stimulate beef, lamb and goaf carcasses.

Two experiments involving carcasses from 29 forage-fed steers, 14 concentrate-fed lambs and 11 concentrate-fed goats were carried out by a research team of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station. All three species showed increases of greater than 20 percent in tenderness of the longissimus muscle (the main muscle in steaks and chops).

Based on the results of these two experiments, 1) electrical stimulations can be utilized as a method for increasing the tenderness of certain muscles from beef, lamb and goat carcasses; 2) a relatively inexpensive and easily

ning device can be used effectively for electrical stimulation of carcasses; and 3) electrical stimulation may increase palatability qualities other than tenderness (flavor and overall satisfaction). Flavor scores for beef from the electrically stimulated sides were significantly higher than those from the untreated side of the same animal, according to Dr. Thayne Dutson, a member of the Experiment Station research team. Other scientists on the team were Drs. Zerle Carpenter, G. C. Smith, D. A. Suter, R. L. Hostetler and J. W. Sevell at Texas A&M.

In the experiments with lambs and goats, flavor changes were not as significantly different as with the Zealand abattoirs for accelerated conditioning of lambs.

The difference in results, Dutson says, may be due to intermittent pulses of stimulation at much lower voltage in current experiments compared to the continuous 3000 volts used commercially in New Zealand.

Results from these experiments indicate that electrical stimulation is of greatest benefit for use on carcasses that would produce less tender meat if untreated. Carcasses that are likely to produce inherently tender meat are improved, but to a lesser ex-

Pfannstiel said the entire state now needs moisture, particularly the area from Central West Texas and extending east and northeast to the Louisiana line.

The area reports limited hay cuttings, which could cause shortages this winter. Vegetable gardens, are burning, and the pecan crop-full of promise earlier - is shedding some of its nuts. Pastures and ranges are going down fast, stock tanks are low and grasshoppers "are a problem. Pfannstiel said livestock conditions are still fairly good and there have been no abnormal runs on the market.

Dry weather is becoming a problem in North and South Texas, too. And a baling wire shortage isn't helping the hay

NORTH CENTRAL: In addition to budworm and bollworm damage, cotton is troubled with a critical lack of soil moisture. Corn and grain sorghum also need rain. Ranges and pastures are below average and stock water is low. Cattle are still in fair to good condition.

NORTHEAST: Pastures and ranges are short, grasshoppers are troublesome, livestock conditions are fair and marketing is normal. Rain is needed for all crops, including hay. Vegetable gardens are burning and pecans are shedding prematurely. Peaches are being harvested.

FAR WEST: Unless rain comes soon, cattle won't be in their current fair to good condition. Some feeding is under way. Peaches are ripening, pecans are still growing well and there is considerable home vegetable harvesting. Dryland cotton is suffering, but irrigated fields are doing well. El Paso County is starting its third alfalfa cutting. Cabbage and onion harvesting continues, and Pastures and ranges are below average, stock water is critical and livestock are in fair to good shape. Peanuts are fair to good, and there is some mid-season peach harvesting in Gillespie County.

CENTRAL: This area is critically dry. Temperatures are 100 and over, grain sorghum yields are considerably below normal and cotton is shedding small bolls. Pastures and ranges are short to non-existant, while livestock conditions are fair but declining.

Pastures and ranges are short and dry, and grasshoppers are getting much of that. Livestock remain in fair to good shape and the market is steady. There is some supple-

Over 80 million acres of Texas rangeland has some type of brush that robs grass of water, sunlight, and other nutrients. Control of these useless plants, which has grown increasingly costly, may lie in a "systems concept" of a judicious mix of short- and long-term methods.

The need for brush control has long been recognized by ranchers and researchers alike as the principal barrier to effective range management.

Several different treatments including chemical, mechanical, biological, and the use of controlled fire have been developed to attack the brush problem.

Each of these methods of brush control has unique strengths but unfortunately, each has certain weaknesses. For example, in mixed stands of brush, a single method usually won't accomplish control, cost of treatment may be prohibitive, or treatment effect may be too short to be economicai.

Often, a single treatment lacks practicality in meeting overall needs for maintenance or improvement of wildlife habitat.

The systems concept of brush management, in contrast to traditional brush control efforts with single methods, is a long-term plan using a coordinated application of different methods as needed.

This approach makes sense when one recognizes that brush control is never a "oneshot" affair but is a perennial management consideration.

The systems approach, if done properly, has these advantages: 1) length of brush management effectiveness is increased while cost, per year of involvement, is reduced; 2) a series of economic alternatives is provided in selection of component treatments, and 3) management flexibility is provided in the timing of both costs and sequences of treatments.

Based on research initiated in the early 1970's by Dr. C. J. Scifres, range scientist with the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, one brush management system has emerged, and several promising ones are being researched.

Scifres' research has been conducted in the "brush country" of South Texas, the Rio Grande Plain, and the-Coastal Prairie.

However, project leaders in other resource areas of the State are also pursuing systems research for the Experiment Station.

Dr. D. N. Ueckert, stationed at the Texas A&M University Center at San Angelo, is conducting research on brush management systems suited to West Texas conditions.

Brush management systems for North and Northwest Texas are being developed by Dr. Pete Jacoby at the Chillicothe-Vernon Research and Extension Center.

Brush management systems suited to the Rio Grande Plains are being developed by Dr. Dean Chamrad stationed at the Uvalde Center.

Scifres initially developed a mechanical-herbicide-fire system for improvement of McCartney rose-infested range (500,000 acres) on the Coastal Prairie.

Previously, ranchers used 2,4-D applications, one annually for 3 consecutive years, without gaining long-term control of McCartney rose, also called "Cherokee," "Chickasaw rose," and "hedge."

Using the systems concept on thick undisturbed stands, an initial step in the improvement scheme might be to rake and stack the brush and burn the piles. This does not kill the McCartney rose but does open the area to allow reestablishment of forage. In about 18 to 24 months, when the McCartney rose had regrown enough to justify use of a herbicide and while there is still a good growth of forage, Scifres made tests of an aerial application of 1 pound per acre (total herbicide) of a 1:1 mixture of

.2,4,5-T + picloram. The herbicide application killed nearly all top growth which promoted range forage establishment. The chemical also thinned the stand of live rose plants; 25 to 40 percent were killed.

In 18 to 24 months after this treatment, McCartney rose makes considerable regrowth. When this happens, prescribed burns in late winter or early spring remove the McCartney rose canes left from the spray operation and top kills the regrowth.

Grass and weeds which grew during other treatments serve as fine fuel for the fires (about 2500 to 3000 pounds per acre of air-dry fine fuel is required for an effective burn).

Burning is then used as needed to maintain improvement; Scifres says 2- to 3-year intervals appear reasonable.

Individual plant sprays or ground broadcast herbicide application was applied as needed to selectively reduce "hot spots" of McCartney rose infestations. Surviving brush regrowth affords succulent browse for cattle and white-tailed deer.

The system may be refined by replacing the sprays with application of pelleted herbicide. Scifres' research indicates that picloram pellets may have potential for this purpose.

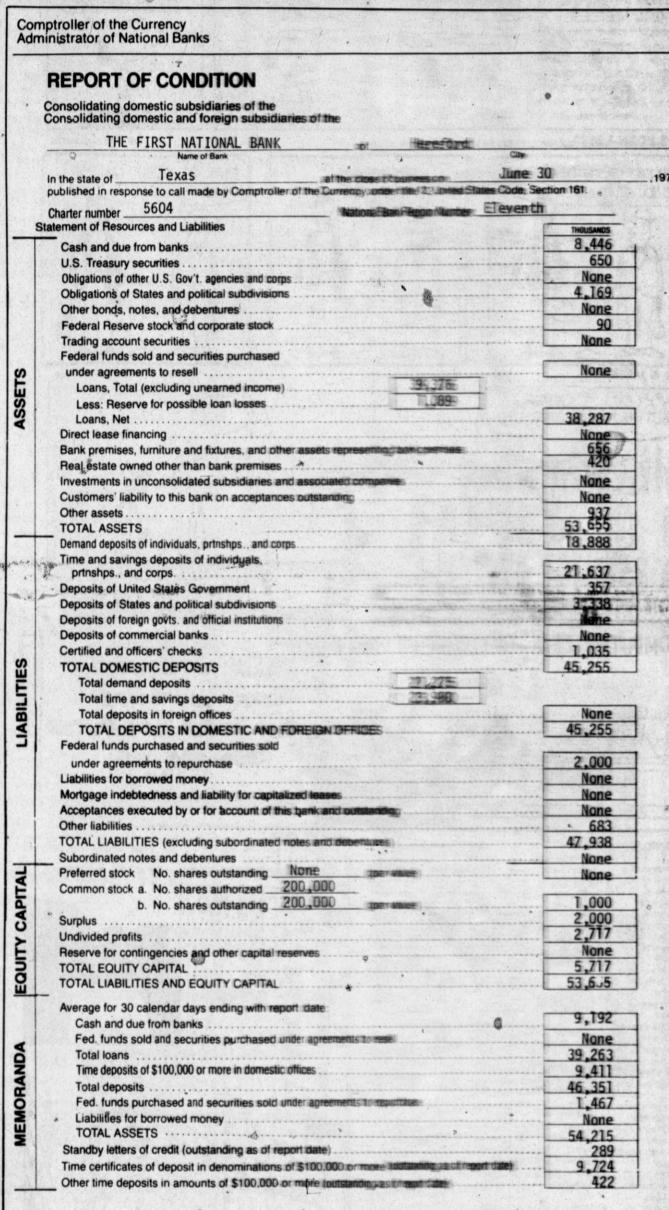

Another system being researched by Scifres is the use of an experimental pelleted herbicide, tebuthiuron, followed by burning, for improvement of whitebrush-infested rangeland.

Like McCartney rose, whitebrush infests some of the more productive rangeland soils of South Texas. The pelleted herbicide applied at 1 pound/acre may kill 90 percent of the whitebrush stand without the drift hazards associated with the sprays and releases herbaceous plants to produce fuel for effective application of prescribed fire:

Burning at 2 to 3 years after herbicide application removes the standing dead whitebrush stems which makes the treated area more accessible, suppresses surviving whitebrush regrowth, and helps restore the forbs initially reduced by the herbicide. Forbs are weeds preferred by cattle and deer and critical for good white-tailed deer habitat.

Scifres is studying a mechanical-fire system for improvement of huisache-infested Coastal Prairie. Huisache vigorously invades the more fertile solls, especially following disturbance, and has resisted most conventional control methods.

Secretariat only raced twice on the grass and won each time, taking the 1973 Man o'War Stakes and the Canadian International.

We, the undersigned directors attest the correctness of this statement of resources and liability

The trout fishing gear came out of the closet the other night for a bit of attention before the big trip. Funny how when I slipped the fly rod out of its case, snapped on the little reel and began cranking a new floating line onto the spool, I could almost feel the tug of a stream working impatiently

At hand was the business of letting the line slip between a silicone-treated pad of dressing, but in my mind was the vision of snow-capped mountains, towering pines and a clear and icy stretch of trout water, tumbling restlessly over the rocks and boulders along its bottom and waiting for me to flick a tiny Adams into its midst in hopes of enticing a fat cutthroat or rainbow.

A fly rod just comes alive in your hands, any way you want to figure it. There's a lot of wonderment in a limber 8 ft. 6 inch stick that can

As in 1977, the operation involves personnel of the U.S. and Canadian Fish and Wildlife Services, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department and other state game departments in the Central and Mississippi Fly-

For the Birds

Ornithologists searching for precise nomenclature have devised many colorful birds' names. Among them are the great racket-tailed drongo, yellow-bellied wax-bill, black-spotted bare-eye, red-whiskered bulbul, turquoise-browed motmot. rufous browed pepper shrike, and blue-faced booconjure up pictures of such majesty, and capture the very essence of the wild on a few feet of perilously thin leader.

And it's a good feeling to take the rod down again, tuck the reel away in your tackle box, and know that you're headed for a place where this combination can work its finest magic.

The waders got a quick inspection. They're theones I ordered for last summer's trip, only they were back-ordered and arrived a month after we got back home.

Memories of making do with a pair of tennis shoes over flimsy "stocking foot waders," in lieu of the aforementioned pair.

The stocking footers sprung a leak at the shin on the second day of fishing and the painfully frigid waters of that stream gushed inside to welcome me to the realm of feisty trout.

But they are good memories too, because although I was cold and wet, I had never caught such trout as those that slurped down my flies on that trip....And now, I have these waders that should keep me warm and dry this time around. and maybe let me get out there where even bigger cutthroats lurk.

I doled out for a fishing vest this time around. I'm still pretty green at this fly fishing game, but they looked practical on those boys from the mountain country last year, and maybe I won't have to do a balancing act in order to change fly patterns or find a bottle of dressing while I'm out in midstream. Anyhow, it's still in the package it came in--ready to collect a little of the dirt and stain that means it has some experience.

When I finished checking things out and looked over the collection of fishing gear, it impressed me that this stuff only took up about a quarter of the floor space in my den, instead of the traditional half to three-quarters sacrificed in preparation for a bass fishing outing.

I like this fly fishing more and more. Basically simple, yet requiring skill, and highly rewarding, even if you don't land a trout on every outing.

A lot has to be said for any angling pursuit that takes you to the high country and immerses you in such tradition and color-even if you do snag on the backçast every half dozen whips of the rod or

Canoeists Warned To Study

AUSTIN - Fishermen and canoeists drown every year in rivers because they do not understand currents and how to cope with them, says the Texas

Parks and Wildlife Department. The first thing to consider is the power exerted by moving water. A person standing in a shallow river running five miles an hour will have a 100-pound force exerted against him. The more area obstructing the flow of water, the stronger the force against it. Against a canoe, this force would amount to 2,100 pounds.

Currents are relatively slow flows faster on the surface in bends. With these differences in current, don't struggle against it but ride with it and try to work yourself to the shoreline. The best method is to go feet first so you can cushion any contact when a river is deep and wide, but must run faster when it's shallow. Also, velocity is not consistent: friction slows the water along the banks and on the river bottom, but water midstream, except around velocity, a person afloat will be

Counties Veto Spike Buck Rule

AUSTIN - Spike bucks will continue to be protected in four Edwards Plateau counties this fall after county commissioners courts vetoed Texas Parks and Wildlife Department recommendations that deferential protection be removed.

Commissioners in Kerr. Kendall, Bandera and Real Counties turned down the proposal.

On April 25, the Parks and Wildlife Commission removed protection from spikes in counties under the department's regulatory authority, a move which reflects the results of biological studies showing the spike to be basically an inferior animal.

Spike bucks are defined as deer which have antlers protruding through the skin but not having a forked antier.

A three-year study conducted on the Kerr Wildlife Management Area showed that a yearling (18-month-old) spike buck will remain sub-par in weight and antler development even after it matures, while a forked-antler yearling normally will be larger and develop larger antlers as an adult.

> Anglers often look for eddies because big fish are likely to lurk there, and canoeists use them to rest in. However, care and skill are needed to pass the eddy line.

Currents generally flow parallel to the banks, but there are dangerous exceptions, as in sharp bends, where a spiraling secondary flow is created. Other hazards to canoes are from fallen trees caught along the bank by the force of the water. from eroded banks, or from low level dams and ledges which cause perilous changes in current flow.

Attempting to run waterfalls is the cause of many fatalities. The fact that one canoe might make it successfully is no draft of a boat relates to the weight of passengers and gear. In still water, rocks are not readily apparent, but they are easier to spot in swift water which pours across them and forms scalloped, standing waves, with the rock at the tip of a V pointing upstream.

Standing waves or "haystacks" marking deep water are a canoeist's delight. They stand stationary while the water rushes downstream.

Spillway areas of dams, while favorite fishing spots, may be the most dangerous for canocists. Water comes from the dam with tremendous force. first hits the smooth area of the tailrace then rocks and debris, and sets up strong, erratic currents. Anyone falling in is in danger of drowning, but his chances are better if he is wearing a PFD (live preserver). Certainly no canoeists should

Former County Sheriff Named As Outstanding American Handgunner'

Outdoors Editor

A former Hereford law enforcement officer and longtime resident has been selected as 1978's Outstanding American Handgunner by the Outstanding American Handgunner Awards Coundation.

Charles A. "Skeeter" Skelton was recognized during a dinner held at Salt Lake City recently. Skelton is a former Deaf mith County sheriff and a graduate of Hereford High School.

He grew up in the local area, and presently resides in Deming, New Mexico.

Skelton became the sixth winner of the annual shooting ward, which has been presented in the past to individuals including Bill Ruger, Elmer Keith, Harlon Carter, Bill Jordan and Charles Askins.

The handgunner award originated as a means of recognizing individuals who devoted themselves to promotion of handgun shooting.

Winners are not required to be handgun competitors or even shooters, but are recognized for efforts to encourage others to take up the sport of informal target shooting, plinking and hunting with pistols.

Lee Jurras, president of Super Vel Cartridge Corporation, helped to originate the OAHA awards, and began selecting winners from a field of 10 nominees who fit into the category of requirements. Subsequently, Jurras commissioned sculptor Adolph Gustav Wolter to create a bronze field shooter, 28 inches tall and weighing close to 50 pounds.

The sculpture depicts the classic form of handgunners with both feet well spaced but firmly planted facing the target with the revolver held in both hands. Castings are presented to each year's top handgunner.

The 1978 winner, Skelton has spent a good portion of his life carrying a handgun and a

TP&W MAGAZINES GIVEN TO ARCHIVES

LUBBOCK - A complete collection of Texas Parks and Wildlife magazines spanning 35 years of department activity have been presented to Texas Tech University by Joe Kirk Fulton, vice-chairman of the TP&W Commission.

The periodicals encompass a period from Dec. 1942 to this date and contain information covering parks, law enforce-ment, fisheries, wildlife and conservation. The magazines were the personal collection of Weldon Fromm, Lubbock regional law enforcement director.

The collection was accepted by Dr. Clyde E. Kelsey, Jr., vice-president for development and university relations. The magazines will be available to scholars, teachers, students and other interested individuals both on and off campus. The periodicals have now become a part of the Southwest Collection at the Archives for the American Southwest at Texas Tech.

Several copies of the magazine were given to Fromm by members of the Amarillo sportsmans club with a few copies acquired from the P&WD office in Austin. Originally titled Texas Game and Fish, the first monthly publications were priced at 10 cents each. Texas Parks and Wildlife magazine now has a cover price of 50 cents.

Individuals wishing to start their own collection of the TP&W magazines can do so by sending a check or money order for $5 for one year or $9 for two years to the P&WD, 4200 Smith School Rd., Austin, Tx. 78744.

HUNTER SAFETY IS ESSENTIAL

LUBBOCK - The art of tracking a deer or calling a wild turkey takes years of participation, but the training required to handle a firearm can be just as important.

Handling firearms along with first aid, conservation and survival will be taught July 31, Aug. 1 & 2 each evening from 7-9:30 p.m. at the Baptist Association Center located near 2601 Salem in Lubbock. A $1 registration fee will be required of each student and everyone is invited to attend the hunter safety classes.

Hunting is already one of the safest sports in Texas, however, there were 80 accidents in 1977 with 17 fatalities recorded by the P&WD. Nearly half of the accident victims were under the age of 16 and 29 were hunter-judgment related. In other words, the hunter made a mistake such as failing to identify the target, pointing a gun in the wrong direction or carrying a loaded gun in a

A Texas hunter safety card will be issued to all students who successfully complete the course if they are 12 years of age or older. These hunter safety cards are required by some 24 states with several restricting the sale of non-resident hunting licenses to individuals who do not have the card. Texas does not require a hunter safety card to purchse a hunting license.

Outdoor barbecues that include children sometimes end up looking like disaster areas, something to keep in mind when you plan one.

If youngsters aren't kept busy, they'll look for excitement on their own. What they find to do might cause a little excitement - and it isn't all fun and games.

At one barbecue five children managed to liven the social endeavor. For example, while the adults were enjoying a pre-barbecue chat, the youngsters were scouting outdoors and indoors for ways to express their individuality.

One 5-year-old boy found a can of green paint and then looked for a place to put it. Why not the white marble bust in the living room?

This bit of mischief was discovered only after his parents.

One little girl decided to try her hand at fishing in the aquarium tank. She caught a few angel fish and put them in her soft drink filled paper cup. This, too, escaped the attention of the host at the time because it was left on a windowsill in

Calliham Community To Sink Under Reservoir

CALLIHAM, Texas (AP)-Back in 1971 the future looked pleasant, though not glistening with progress, for the self-sufficient folks in this South Texas community.

The wants were simple.

"We put down our mobile home. We planted our trees and everything. I figured by the time I was old we'd have shade," said H.E. Sewell. "Now they tell us we'll have to go."

The 20 families that still live here and the community itself will soon be gone. Calliham, once a bustling small town, will be merely the setting for memories in the mind's eye of those who grew up here in the brush country.

The community will be replaced by nothing. Federal officials have calculated the area will be needed for the Choke Canvon Reservoir to gush into in case of flooding.

Last weekend about 500 former residents came home for one last look at the swimming hole, the old Rice Drug Store and other things that make up their recollections.

There was bitterness mixed with the nostalgia.

"If they'd told us the truth right at the beginning..but they've been lying to us here lately," said Henry Skenkir, a McMullen County commissioner. "You know, when the federal government people start lying to you, why ... '

Calliham residents don't appreciate the way the federal officials went about planning the community's doom.

"We read about it in the paper after it was over," Bobby Shannon, who now lives in Tilden, said about a 1973 congressional subcommittee hearing in Three Rivers.

Herman Smith, like Sewell, put up a new home here several years back.

"At the time, they were figuring on building the dam further down, you know. Nobody thought this would happen," he lamented.

The federal government will buy the locals out and will set up

New Calliham, a mile to the south.

Some of the residents here say the government has lied about the need for the land.

"If we'd stuck together and decided to stay, we'd have stayed, because this place isn't going to go under water. That's a lie," charged Shenkir.

The commission and others doubt the estimates that say Calliham would be five feet under if the reservoir flooded.

They changed the engineering to get us off. That another lie." Shenkir said.

Calliham was once a busy place. Gaslights lit the two block business district in the brighter days. There was a plank sidewalk, and the town boasted three hotels and four beer joints. The local high school enrollment was 300.

But the boom years of oil and gas exploration ended and World War II marked the beginning of a slow decline. Nevertheless, the residents remained proud and enterprising. They never incorporated, di but the community managed to provide services and facilities.

Volunteer labor built the water system. Community spirit. built and financed the fire it department. And when dwindling enrollment rendered the high school obsolete, the gym was refurbished into a functional facility for the community.

But the hard work and community spirit will go largely unrecognized by the federal government. It plans to seize the gym without compensation because Calliham is not a city and does not own the property on which the building rests. It was in that gym that Calliham residents, past and present, gathered Saturday night to swing around the floor to a musical backdrop of "Cotton Eyed Joe."

"I guess we're just like ants to the federal government," Shannon said. "They're so big and they don't even see us."

Q. - Can I use hardboard as the ceiling material in a basement where there is occasional dampness? There is no water leakage of any kind coming into the room. I want to use hardboard because I have found a textured design that fits in with the decor of the fin-

A. - Yes, but use tempered hardboard rather than the standard type. What do you intend to do about the seams? In any case, be sure that the panels are not butted tightly together just in case there is any expansion. Allow at least onesixteenth of an inch between paneling edges.

Q. - I recently put on a coat of lacquer over a painted child's desk because I thought it would be easier to keep it clean by wiping with a damp cloth. Whatever I did wrong I don't know, but the paint curled in several places. I guess I applied it poorly. Can you advise me what the trouble was and how to correct it.

- The trouble had nothing to do with the application of the lacquer, but with the use of the lacquer in the first place. Lacquer has a strong effect on paint and acts as a kind of paint remover. You will now have to remove both the paint and the lacquer and begin all over. Rub with lacquer thinner, doing it in a place where there is plenty of ventilation and no open flame, the best place being outside the house. This should remove most or all of the lacquer and have a softening effect on the paint, but then you will need a paint remover to complete the job. Follow the directions on the container very carefully, especially on how to rinse the wood

Q. - I bought an old bureau at a flea market held in our local park. It has a varnished finish, which didn't look too bad after I had cleaned it thoroughly. However, in the cleaning process, I seem to have dulled it considerably. I like glossy surfaces and now I want to refinish the bureau. Can I apply a new coat of varnish over the old or do I have to take off the old varnish?

A. — You need not remove the old varnish provided that it is in sound condition. Any time a new finish is applied over an old one, the life of the new surface will be as long as the life of the old. When the old finish begins to lift (and this may never happen), it will affect the top coat. Assuming that you have decided the old finish is reasonably permanent, look over the bureau carefully and sand down any remaining glossy areas. Remove the grit residue by wiping with a cloth lightly moistened with turpentine, then proceed with the application of new varnish. (The techniques of using varnish, lacquer, shellac, stain, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 35 cents and a long, STAMPED, s e i f-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. New Public Firms Stir Up Wall Street

NEW YORK (AP) - A few of the names are familiar, like Federal Express, the air freight company. Others are lesser known and sometimes a bit exotic - New World Computer. Tenderfoot International and Pacific Pistachios.

But they all share one distinction. They are among the 18 companies that have gone public this year.

Though that represents only a trickle by historical standards on Wall Street, it has brought a few stirrings of life recently to the market for new stock issues. which has been severely depressed since the early 1970s.

Federal Express' sale of 1.07 million shares on April 24 set off a surge of excitement that recalled the fever of the 1960s, when investors gobbled up new issues with little concern for such details as whether a company was making a profit.

Federal Express stock did just what a hot new issue is supposed to do. Its original price of $24 a share, climbed $43.25 this week in the over-the-counter market.

Far more spectacular performances were common 10 years ago. Investment advisor Yale Hirsch of Old Tappan, N.J., working with figures gathered from various sources, reports that of 550 first-time offerings of stock in 1968, 125 at least tripled in price and another 124 doubled.

Hirsch says his figures show which reached an annual pace of in this country.'

close to $3 billion at its late-1960s peak, had slackened off to around the $100 million level by 1974.

More than 1,000 new names poured into the market in 1969. In 1975, there were less than 25. By last year the number had edged back up to about 45.

The subject interests the financial community and policymakers in Washington who are faced with several proposals in Congress to give more favorable tax treatment to capital gains.

Bringing out new stock, thereby raising capital to allow corporations to expand and create new jobs, is a central element of the role the securities industry is supposed to play in the U.S. economic system. Wall Streeters contend the current tax structure on capital gains is a major obstacle to achieving that purpose.

The Carter administration is strongly opposing the capitalgains tax reduction plans put forward so far. Carter and Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal have said that bigger tax breaks on capital gains would provide a windfall for a relatively few wealthy individuals.

Blumenthal says many capital gains stem from speculation in real estate, commodities and other items "that have nothing to do with increasing the competitiveness of American industry, of aiding capital accumulation and of helping the that the new-issue market, growth and the creation of jobs

A former New York City contractor, Warshaw is the founder and president of the U.S. School of Professional Paperhanging. He is a man with a monopoly and a dream.

Someday, Warshaw vows, the ancient comic image of a clumsy paperhanger who glues his hands in his pockets and gets wrapped up in his paper will be given a long-overdue burial.

To that end Warshaw's school was born in an old machine shop in September 1973 with an enrollment of six students.

Today, the fledgling institution is the only paperhanging school to be accredited by the National Association of Trade and Technical Schools.

Immaculate in a white medical jacket with a razor blade clipped to his pocket, Warshaw runs his hands through thinning brown hair and reflects on the importance of wallpaper.

change in the attitude of a president who less than a month ago said the United States was being embarrassed and weakened for lack of passage of his energy measure.

Years ago, then-Sen. George D. Aiken suggested that the way to end U.S. involvement in the conflict in South Vietnam would be to declare a victory and get out. His advice went unheeded.

Carter seems to have adopted a somewhat similar position on energy, apparently to convince skeptical allies at the economic summit conference in Bonn that the United States really is doing something about the problem.

Fifteen months after he proposed his energy plan, Carter still is waiting for Congress to enact it.

House and Senate negotiators have approved portions of the program for final votes. So Carter will get part of what he sought.

But the oil tax that was a central feature of the original Carter plan is stalled and likely to stay stalled.

Again and again, Carter has exhorted Congress to get on time when he needs House and

More and more, gardeners are hearing or reading about soilless soil. A better title is soilless mix.

Several years ago we wrote about the Cornell (University) mix for planting, a blend of vermiculite, Canadian sphagnum peat moss and portions of nutrients and trace elements. This is the basis for many new mixes. And if good drainage is needed, perlite is added.

This mix is a substitute for soil for plants and garden and is often an improvement, because the ingredients permit drainage and airflow.

To find out about the ingredients we went to experts at Grace Horticultural Products, Cambridge, Mass., which turns out 10 types of soilless potting mixes (under the name Terra-

First vermiculite. Only horticultural vermiculite should be used in growing media because varieties used in insulation and fireproofing contain additives harmful to plants. It is a pure mica mineral-a hydrated magnesium-aluminum-iron silicate that is mined. It is heated to a sterilizing 1,400 degrees (F) which expands the mineral up to 20 times its original volume. Then it is packaged according to size.

In its expanded form, vermiculite can hold two to three times its weight in water without losing its drainage capacity. The experts told us that negatively charged vemiculite would attract positively charged elements such as potassium or ammonium. Thus nutrients are retained along with moisture.

The processing creates many noncollapsing air spaces that permit oxygen to reach the roots. The producers believe also that because of these qualities plus its much-lighter-thansoil weight, vermiculite is the best all-around mix ingredient yet discovered.

Perlite is a volcanic rock that undergoes a similar process. The two items look much alike but perlite won't absorb water. Both weigh about the same but perlite usually has a nuisance abrasive dust. Perlite doesn't have any nutrients for plant growth, but including some in the mix does improve drainage.

The other important ingredient is sphagnum peat moss, partially decomposed organic matter harvested from bogs. It is essentially sterile and structurally resists compaction; it is fibrous and spongy so that it absorbs considerable water without collapsing.

The combination with vermiculite encourages root growth. Among the variations in the Cornell mix are additions of bark humus, perlite and granite sand (the latter to help support taller plants) and magnesium.

At Grace they say plants grow faster, healthler and sturdier in a soilless mix. But remember that soilless mixes are not fertilizers, "though they may contain a starter nutrient charge that must be renewed as the plant matures."

Grace has a line of specialty soils for seed starting, to-matoes, African violets, rose bushes, terrariums and cacti-

To promote flower knowledge and identification skills among youngsters, Pan-American Seed Co. has developed a "Fun With Flowers" activity book (ages 5-11). The book offers coloring of pansies and petunias, identifies flower look-alikes, and cut out flower puppets. It is available to commercial growers through seed distributors nationwide.

Young Pilot Touts Joys Of Flying While Touring

By JOY STILLEY
AP Newsfeatures Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — It was love at first flight for Karen Coyle, who took her first air-plane ride at the age of 15.

By the age of 17 she had learned to fly and had soloed, and now, a veteran pilot at the age of 22, she is sharing her enthusiasm for flying with others as manager of a national-program to generate interest in arning to fly.

'Flying is one of the few pursuits you can use both in business and for personal and pleasure aspects," Miss Coyle said in an interview. "You can get more places and do more things in less time, stopping anywhere you want - with close to 14,000 airports to choose from - not having to depend on scheduled aircraft. Just about any occupation that exists today can utilize avia-

Miss Coyle, who lives in Washington, D.C., flies a singleengine, four-passenger plane around the country, speaking before civic, high school and college groups in her work as manager of the TakeOff program for the General Aviation Manufacturers Association.

"General aviation," she ex-plains, "is flying all aircraft except commercial scheduled and military aircraft. People from every walk of life fly — a beautiful cross section of the population is flying. I know pilots from a 14-year-old boy too young to solo to a 94-year-old grandmother."

Miss Coyle, who was wearing a gold skirt that matched her shoulder-length hair, a goldand-brown blouse, gold earrings and a tiny gold airplane pin, got her first taste of air travel 15 when she visited an aunt in Minnesota. She fell in love with O'Hare airport in Chicago.

"I'd always had a love for or-ganization, and O'Hare seemed extraordinarily efficient — people moving, coming from everywhere, going everywhere, and all those beautiful airplanes around.'

She decided to become an airport manager, enrolling in the University of North Dakota in Grand Forks, which offered the only business degree in aviation in the country at that

Three nights a week she took off from Grand Forks at 9, making various stops to drop off mail en route to Minneapolis. There she and her co-pilot "had a cup of coffee, loaded another ton of mail and headed back, making stops

Hysterectomy not cause

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB - My daughter had a hysterectomy four years ago. Within the last year she has had periods of depression. She is 53. This fall a doctor gave her a heavy hormone shot and she began to feel almost too high and exuberant. Now about a month later she is at low ebb.

She just wants to sit and shuns all responsibility. Planning meals is a problem. At times she feels angry at having to feel this way and she worries so much for fear she will become a mental patient. Is there any help medically we can obtain for her and is there anything that the family can do for her in the way of therapy? DEAR READER — First I would like to point out that your daughter's depression has nothing to do with her hysterectomy. In fact there is no good evidence that through the meno-is related to depres-

It is true that about this period of life many women do have depressions. I might add that about this same stage in life many men have depression which pretty well eliminates any relationship

I'm not sure what the doctor gave your daughter but he may well have given her an antidepressant as well as hormones. In any case I strongly believe that anyone who has a persistent

Finally, through professional counseling it is sometimes possible for a person to break through the depression much earlier and return to a more normal way of life. I would suggest that you ask your doctor to refer your daughter to a psychiatrist so that she can get some help from a specialist in this area. It could make all the difference in the world in her capacity to enjoy life without having to go through the agonies of depressions.

The 48-year-old head of the research group said the booklet stressed that "parents should manage to spare more time for heart-to-heart communication with children."

He said interest had been shown overseas in the booklet, and that an order for copies had already been received from Australia.

DEAR POLLY - My husband worked with a man who did not approve of smoking, so did not want to pass out cigars when each of his six children were born. He always took a box of assorted candy bars to the office. Each coworker took a candy bar of his choice to celebrate the new arrival. - MRS. J.M. © 1978 by NEA, Inc.

DEAR POLLY - Number the boxes that hold your children's puzzles and then mark the proper numbers on the backs of the various pleces, so there are fewer mixups and the right pieces go in the right boxes. - MRS.N.

Send your helpful hints to Polly's Pointers in care of this newspaper. DEAR POLLY - Line the bottom of your double boiler with waxed paper when melting chocolate, and you'll save chocolate as well as messy pan cleaning. - MARIE.

DEAR POLLY - When one has to take medication several times a day, carry several small paper cups folded in your purse. This is much easier when out shopping or at work than trying to use a drinking fountain. - D.G.

DEAR POLLY - One of those little coupon-clipping knives makes a wonderful thread cutter when taking out hems. Slip the tiny knife point under the stitches and snip each one, or carefully slide the knife along the stitches. - ROSE.

DEAR POLLY - When empty, those pretty colored plastic margarine cups make nice holders for flower pots and do not mar the window sills, - VIRGINIA.

DEAR POLLY - When writing a name on a child's school lunch box it is often written on tape and then smears so the name cannot be read. I put clear plastic gummed tape over the tape on which the name is written and have no more smears. - TiM.

DEAR POLLY - I use a longhandled oar snow brush to reach under the back of the refrigerator and other hard-to-clean places. A child's dust mop is great for washing out the tub. Certainly makes reaching over the tub easier. I keep a nylon mop just for this purpose. - M.J.

DEAR POLLY - Teachers and others who use posters year after year can avoid wear and tear to the backs where tape is taken off and on by adding adhesive—backed paper to the corners. The tape sticks even better to this than to the Poster paper. When the tape is removed, the poster is not harmed. - LINDA.
