More criticism thrown at DOE officials

By REED PARSELL Managing Editor

Despite terrible reviews in the past, the U.S. Department of Energy's "road show" returned to the area Tuesday. with the result being more criticism.

At a "public information exchange" meeting in Vega's Oldham County Barn, DOE officials were given a decidedly unfriendly reception by approximately 125 area residents. Their explanations of the department's search for a nuclear waste repository were mostly judged unsatisfactory by the crowd.

Vega hosted the session since it is located only a few miles northeast of one of nine sites being considered for housing the nation's first high-level nuclear waste dump. The only other Texas site candidate is located four miles north of Tulia, which is to host a similar exchange Thursday evening.

Energy Department officials are in the Panhandle this week to explain their recent recommendation the two Texas sites each be reduced in size to specified ninesquare-mile areas. Descriptions of how the suggestionwas formulated are detailed in two large technical report volumes, one for each proposed location.

Wayne Richardson, a partner in the Richardson Seed Company, described the "Millions of dollars were spent somewhere to say nothing." The DOE, he claimed, has continually shown a "callous disregard" for area residents by refusing to answer their questions.

Citizens should not attend any future meetings with DOE, Richardson implored, unless answers are provided for the many concerns.

His company, one of the largest employers in the county, is located within the proposed nine-square-mile area for nuclear waste dump consideration.

One lady remarked DOE, by investigating only areas west of the Mississippi River for a nuclear waste facility, feels people in Texas "aren't worth a dang." Most of the utility plants producing the waste, she pointed out, are located on the East Coast.

When asked who would be held responsible for an accident, DOE panelist Jim Fiore replied, "I think the federal government can be held responsible." His lack of certainty was awarded with laughs and gestures from the audience.

"How can you put a value on human life?" a man soon asked. When a reply failed to immediately surface, many spectators yelled, "Answer! Answer! Answer!"

Richard Forrester, who owns property which extends into the proposed Deaf Smith County site, pointed out the technical reports make mention of "routine releases" of radiation. "Is it going to be safe?" he queried.

within amounts accepted by the Environmental Protection Agency, assured Linda McClain, DOE project director for Texas. "There will be radiation in the building where the waste is received."

One Vega resident, Linda Richardson, asked what benefits her town would receive from the dump and who would come work at the facility. Some of those who are hired to work on oil projects, she maintained, are "trash."

The federal government, McClain said, provides money for the expansion of school, hospital and other facilities needed due to a dramatic rise in population. Approximately 1,200 would be employed at the dump site.

"There will be an emphasis on hiring local people," she continued. The type of work area residents would do might include roadwork, carpentry and other construction not directly connected with nuclear waste.

The safety of transporting waste to the dump site was a frequently raised concern Tuesday night. Fiore claimed only one death has ever occurred during moving of radioactive material, and that was caused by a truck crushing the driver.

Prior to the questionanswer session, three of the four DOE panelists gave presentations. Fiore, who heads the financial aspects of Any emissions will fall the project, explained a to be made not before 1990.

history of the site selection process.

Energy Department guidelines for the process are now being reviewed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, he said. Though originally expected to be approved last month, the guidelines are now likely to receive the NRC nod in mid-May, Fiore claimed. A final list of procedures should be prepared sometime in June. Fiore stressed the importance of outside comments inthe DOE's project. "We've got to work with the state people and the local people," he said, "if we're going to get the job done."

Later, during the questionanswer session, several onlookers contended comments from citizens have no effect on the project's outcome. One said this was evident by the DOE not recording the exchange.

McClain replied she and the other candidates were taking notes and were jotting down "most of the major" concerns." One might be missed, she allowed, but those "repeated several times" were being noted.

"You're going to forget a hell of a lot of it," a man commented.

Five sites of the nine sites are to be nominated for further study next January. Three of those are then supposed to be recommended to the president, who may ap-March. Detailed site characterizations are to follow, with a final selection

President greets pope in Alaska

By JAMES GERSTENZANG AP White House Correspon-

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) - President Reagan greeted Pope John Paul II in this inland Alaskan city this morning, saluting the pontiff's 'quest for human rights and world peace." The president and the pope, crossing paths here, were trying to cram discussions on arms control, Poland and East-West relations into a 20-minute airport conference. "I can assure you, the American people seek to act as a force for peace in the world and to further the cause of human freedom and dignity," Reagan said in remarks prepared for the pontiff's arrival by chartered Alitalia jet, from Rome and bound for Seoul, South Korea. Reagan, describing John Paul as "a minister of peace and love," turned to a theme he brought up repeatedly in the speeches he gave during his six-day trip to China.

He told the pope: "An appreciation for the unalienable rights of every human being is the very concept that gave birth to our nation."

"But no one knows better than your holiness that the quest for human rights and world peace is a difficult, Praises human rights quest often disheartening task," Reagan said. The president said that

'far more can be accomplished by the simple prayers of good people than by all the statesmen or armies of the world.'

"Only when the fellowship of all men under the Fatherhood of God is recognized and acknowledged, only then will the world finally know true peace and understanding," he said.

The president, who arrived in Fairbanks early Tuesday morning from Shanghai, was leaving for Washington immediately after his meeting with the pontiff.

Their meeting at the Fairbanks International Airport was the first opportunity for the two men to confer in person since the opening of full diplomatic relations between the United States and the Vatican earlier this year.

. William Wilson, a longtime friend of Reagan and U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, and Archbishop Pio Laghi, the apostolic nuncio to the United States, were joining the group in Fairbanks.

On Tuesday, an estimated 850 people marched through downtown Fairbanks to protest everything from the nuclear arms race to sexism during Reagan's 30-hour visit. Many of the marchers represented organized labor, although the rally, "May Day for Human Rights," was organized by a coalition of peace and human rights activists.

The Fairbanks Daily News-Miner devoted five of its first eight pages Tuesday to stories about the two men and their meeting.

Local Roundup Final arguments presented

Final arguments were presented Monday and Tuesday on a lawsuit claiming Deaf Smith County engages in discriminatory hiring practices.

Texas Rural Legal Aid attorneys, on behalf of class representative Cecilia Garza, say statistical information proves the county - over a period of several years - hired a smaller percentage of Hispanic than white job applicants. Defense attorneys for the county argue that discrimina-he was paid a lower wage than those Anglo workers received. On Feb. 6 of this year, Federal Court Judge Mary Lou Robinson determined that Garza should be the representative in the class action suit and that the claim of

Presidential candidates to debate

DALLAS (AP) - The eyes of Texas are on three Democratic presidential candidates who are vying for the state's 200 national convention delegates as they face off tonight in a one-hour televised debate.

Former Vice President Walter Mondale, Sen. Gary Hart and the Rev. Jesse Jackson meet in the fourth League of Women Voters debate, to be held at 8 p.m. at the Amfac Hotel at the Dallas-Fort Worth Airport.

The debate will be broadcast statewide by PBS and will be moderated by Sander Vanocur of ABC-TV.

It's believed to be the first time that presidential candidates have debated in the Dallas area. In 1986, Republicans Ronald Reagan and George Bush took part in the League of Women Voters debate in Houston shortly before the Texas primary.

Ellen Dudley, a league spokeswoman, said the format of the Democratic debate includes opening statements by each of the candidates, segments on domestic and foreign policy and closing statements.

She said the candidates will be allowed to respond to each other's statements, but they will not pose questions to each other.

A fourth Democratic presidential candidate, Lyndon LaRouche, said Tuesday he will file suit because he was not included in the debate. League president Dorothy Ridings said the group did not include LaRouche because he did not meet the league's criteria as a major candidate.

"It's nice to have a president who doesn't apologize for being an American. Under this president, we have the chance in our generation of building a more peaceful world," Kemp said.

Ms. Kettlewell, a former aide to Sen. John Tower, acknowledged there was a substantial drop-off among GOP voters in the 1982.

"In 1982, we lost a lot of good Republican voters not because they voted Democratic but because they didn't vote at all," she said. "The national drop-off rate was 12 percent, but ours was 14 percent statewide and up to 18 percent in some precincts where voters stay with us consistently."

In the 1982 election election, Democrat Mark White beat Gov. Bill Clements and ended the first Republican administration in Texas since Reconstruction.

Ms. Kettlewell said that as a result, the Reagan-Bush campaign is developing a grass-roots voter registration drive that will recruit 10,000 volunteers to go door to door signing up new Republicans.

Anti-Communist President puts China in category

By R. GREGORY NOKES AP Diplomatic Writer

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) - When President Reagan came face-to-face with Chinese-style communism, he didn't blink, but didn't find it so bad either, he says. "If they prefer socialism or communism and we prefer the democracy that we have, we may know that ours is best, but we won't say that to them," he said.

In fact, as Reagan indicated in a speech here Tuesday, he isn't entirely persuaded China remains a communist country, referring to it as "this so-called communist China."

But there was no doubt the Chinese consider themselves communists. As Reagan drove away from his final meetings with Chinese leaders Monday, his motorcade passed huge, newly erected portraits of Karl Marx and Josef Stalin, the Soviet dictator.

Reagan drew a distinction between communist countries that try to impose their ideology on other countries, and those that don't. He put China in the second category.

"I found that our Chinese leaders I was talking with have no expansionist ideas at all," Reagan said. "They are resistant to that."

"So as far as I'm concerned we can live at peace in the world together," Reagan

His remarks seemed reminiscent of a statement by President Jimmy Carter early in his presidency that Americans need not have "an inordinate fear of communism."

Carter came to regret that statement after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in 1979: Reagan was among those who later ridiculed him.

Reagan spoke to a group of civic leaders in Fairbanks during an overnight stopover - for a meeting with Pope John Paul II - on his return from a six-day visit to China.

Reagan has spent most of his adult life as an implacable critic of communism throughout the globe and was a staunch supporter of claims of the government on Taiwan to all of China.

When Carter established normal diplomatic relations with China and broke ties with Taiwan in 1979, Reagan wondered how he could "coldbloodedly betray a friend for political expedience."

Reagan said here his views, agreed with Chinese Premier haven't changed toward communism for Americans. "I -week that "any politician am an anti-communist if you talk about communism for the United States."

But he said in an interview during the flight here that he.

Zhao Ziyang, who said last with vision will see it as an outmoded idea" to judge another country on the basis of ideology.

"I say that, too," said

Reagan. While he said differences remain, "we found we could agree on a great many things." He said the two countries had reached "a new level and a new stage" in their relationship.

I had planned to end my own life that very night with an overdose, but that letter made me stop and think about the pain I would inflict on my teenage sister, and the grief my death would cause my young niece and nephew to whom I have been a second mother. I also thought about my 35 elementary school students who would be

Jersey departs Milwaukee with split By MIKE EMBRY AP Sports forward against Buck

MILWAUKEE (AP) - The New Jersey Nets got what they wanted on the first leg of their National Basketball Association playoffs against the Milwaukee Bucks.

"We came here hoping to gain a split," Nets Coach Stan Albeck said after his team fell 98-94 in Game 2 of the Conference semifinal series Tuesday night. "We got that split. Now it's back to our place."

New Jersey took a 106-100 victory Sunday in Game 1. The third game in the best-ofseven series will be Thurday at East Rutherford, N.J.

Milwaukee evened the series despite a sub-par performance from star forward Marques Johnson, who finished with only three points, making only one of 13 shots from the field. He averaged 20.7 points a game during the regular season.

"It was a combination of things," said Johnson, who missed his first 11 shots. "They were doubling on me down low and giving me the outside shot, which I couldn't

In the only other playoff game Tuesday night, Los Angeles went ahead 2-0 in its series against Dallas with a 117-101 triumph.

Boston, which leads the New York Knicks 1-0, and Utah, leading the Phoenix Suns 1-0, resume their second-round series at home Milwaukee was able to offset Johnson's shooting as guard Sidney Moncrief scored a playoff-career high 28 points and veteran center Bob Lanier added 24. "That was NBA basketball at its best," said Milwaukee Coach Don Nelson of the game. "It was a hard-fought, very physical-type game."

The Bucks weren't able to take control of game until the final 13 seconds. They were holding a precarious 96-94 lead at the time.

Then New Jersey guard Micheal Ray Richardson, under heavy defensive pressure from Lanier, walked with the ball in the Nets' backcourt.

One second later the Bucks'

Junior Bridgeman, after being fouled by Albert King, sank two free throws for the final margin.

"I didn't feel that we were in control of the game until the horn sounded," said Bridgeman, who finished with 18 points.

New Jersey was hampered in the final quarter when center Darryl Dawkins fouled out with 6:23 to go. Lanier managed to score eight of his points down the stretch with Mike Gminski in the pivot.

"We were in a motion-type offense," Lanier said. "It didn't make any difference who was out there. It was more in and out with the ball.

It was a physical contest the first three quarters, with neither team able to take

The Bucks led 23-22 after the first quarter behind Moncrief's 12 points. They went on to a 43-38 advantage at the intermission.

New Jersey had a 15-2 run at the start of the third quarter to take a 53-45 lead. But the Bucks came back to take a 67-65 margin at the end of the period.

"We allowed them to control the tempo in the third quarter," said Williams, who finished with 21 points and 18 rebounds. "We needed force them to play our kind of running game.'

Richardson added 17 points for the Nets, while Dawkins, Gminski and Otis Birdsong had 10 apiece.

"They deserved to win it," said Dawkins, who had 32 points and eight rebounds in the first game Sunday. "I like it physical, but I don't have anything to say about the officials. They won and now we go to New Jersey. We got what we wanted here." Lakers 117, Mavericks 101

From 1964 through 1975, UCLA won 10 NCAA basketball championships. From 1939 to 1983, no championship team in the NCAA basketball tournament scored as much as 100 points in the title game.

Los Angeles, which captured the opening game of series against Dallas by 43 points, won easily again after a close first half.

The Lakers held a 55-50 halftime advantage, then scored the first 14 points of the third period in less than four minutes to go ahead 69-50. The Mavericks got no closer than 13 points after

Earvin "Magic" Johnson, who had 27 points and 11 assists, and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who had 22 points and 10 rebounds, scored four points apiece during the 14-0

The Mavericks, who got 27 points from Rolando Blackman, are yet to lead at any point in the first two games.

'Athlete of Year' awards to Streun, Phibbs

Jeff Streun, three-sport letterman and a senior, walked off with top honors at the Hereford High All Sports Banquet Tuesday night when he was named male Athlete of the Year, top basketball player, and male recipient of the Fighting Heart award.

Teresa Phibbs, a basketball and track performer, was named female Athlete of the Year, and Jan Harwell was the female recipient of the Fighting Heart award. Approximately 550 athletes and dates, booster club members, parents, school officials and special guests attended the 17th annual All Sports Banquet which is sponsored by the Whiteface Booster Club.

The Media Sports Awards, recognizing the top athlete in each sport, went to: Mickey Stengel, football; Jeff Streun and Cathy Bartels, basketball; Craig Jones and Selma Moreno, track; Ronnie Collier, baseball; Rosemary Castillo, volleyball; Dana Cabbiness and Eliseo Ramirez, cross country tract; Blair Rogers and Connie Zinser, tennis; and Matt Albracht and Whitney Drake,

The media awards were presented by Tom Simons of KPAN Radio and Speedy Nieman of The Hereford Brand. Mike Carr, executive vice president of Deaf Smith County Chamber of Commerce, made the Athlete of the Year presentations, and John Bunch, president of Whiteface Booster Club, presented the Fighting Heart awards.

Bunch also presented a special "Fan of the Year" to Leo Witkowski, longtime supporter of HHS athletic teams. Dale Scott, incoming president of the boosters, presented a plaque to Bunch for his service as president this past year.

Simons served as master of ceremonies for the event, and ding ovation near the close of the banquet when Dallas Phillips, FCA secretary, paid tribute to enthusiastic encouragement and support of HHS athletic teams.

On receiving a certificates as Athlete of the Year, Streun was cited for being a twoyear letterman in three sports - football, basketball and baseball. He was alldistrict and named to a regional "super" team in football. He was the leading scorer in basketball with 332 points, and he carried a .36 batting mark in baseball.

Miss Phibbs was a stellar performer in basketball and track. She ran the 800, 1600 and 400-meter relays on the track team. Miss Harwell sustained a knee injury during the basketball season, but her coach praised her for providing leadership and striving to continue playing. Streun also sustained a broken arm during football season, but made a quick return and played under the stress of his injury. The head coach of each sport introduced the varsity players on the respective teams and recognized all the junior varsity players. the National Football League still cannot be certain that its draft choices w7ll not be prey to free-spending United States Football Lague teams, some players have made their intentions clear.

"I've always wanted to play in the NFL," said defensive end Keith Millard of Washington State, who was picked in the first round of Tuesday's NFL draft after being taken by the USFL's Arizona Wranglers last January.

"I didn't want to make a mistake, so I waited."

"I've already negotiated" with the USFL and that's out of the question," said linebacker Carl Banks of Michigan States, who the New York Giants made the third pick in the draft. "I will discuss a reasonable price and take the market price for a linebacker."

Agents like Leigh Steinberg, who engineered Steve Young's $40 million contract with the new league, suggest there may be bidding

Whether or not that happens, the USFL influence on the NFL draft was obvious.

With the new league having siphoned off the likes of quarterback Young and running back Mike Rozier, the NFL went primarily for bread-and-butter players defensive players and since 1974, no quarterbacks was picked in the first round and there was only one firstround running back choice the oft-injured Greg Bell of Notre Dame, taken by Buffalo with the 26th pick.

The two top picks, wide receiver Irving Fryar and his Nebraska teammate, guard

Dean Steinkuhler, were signed before the draft by New England and Houston. The fourth pick, wide receiver Kenny Jackson of Penn State, was signed by the Philadelphia Eagles almost immediately, thwarting the USFL's Philadelphia Stars, who had been wooing him since January

Dropped nine straight

Giants stumbling on road, at home

By KEN RAPPOPORT AP Sports Writer

After a disastrous road trip, the San Francisco Giants aren't finding home so sweet, either.

Playing at Candlestick Park, the Giants continued to skid with a 3-2, 11-inning loss to the Los Angeles Dodgers Tuesday night. It was the second straight defeat at home and ninth straight overall, a club record for the Giants in their 26-year history in San Francisco.

In other National League action, New York whipped Chicago 8-1; Philadelphia stopped Montreal 7-4; St. Louis routed Pittsburgh 10-5; San Diego nipped Atlanta 3-2, and Cincinnati edged Houston

Steve Sax broke a 1-1 tie with a two-run triple with two out in the 11th inning for the Dodgers' winning runs.

The Dodgers, who have won nine of their last 10 games, opened the 11th with Dave Anderson's two-out single off Gary Lavelle, 1-1. Mike Scioscia followed with a single, sending Anderson to second, and Sax got the game-winning hit on a 2-1 pitch from Lavelle.

Orel Hershiser, 2-0, the Dodgers' third pitcher, gave up an RBI single to Scot Thompson in the bottom of the 11th before Carlos Diaz came on post his first save of the season.

Los Angeles Manager Tommy Lasorda said in praise of Sax, "He's our catalyst. When he gets on base, he makes things happen."

Sax also started a gameending double play in the bottom of the 11th, after the Giants got one run home and had runners at first and third. Reds 2, Astros 1

In Cincinnati, Dave Parker's single over a drawnin infield scored pinch-runner Tom Lawless with one out in the ninth to send the Reds to their fifth straight victory.

The Astros had tied the game 1-1 in the top of the ninth on rookie Mark Bailey's RBI single, but Houston reliever Bill Dawley, 1-2, walked Tony Perez to start the Reds' ninth.

Lawless, running for Perez, was sacrificed to second, and reliever Frank DiPino walked Nick Esasky and then intentionally walked pinch hitter Cesar Cedeno before giving up Parker's gamewinning hit.

Mets 8, Cubs 1

Keith Hernandez's two-run homer sparked a seven-run sixth inning, leading New York over Chicago behind Dwight Gooden's strong pitching at Shea Stadium.

Gooden, 2-1, a 19-year-old rookie, was overpowering at times, striking out 10 and yielding just four hits, including two doubles by Mel Hall, and five walks in seven innings. Doug Sisk pitched the final two innings. Phillies 7, Expos 4

Sixto Lezcano, starting in place of left fielder Glenn Wilson, who was sick with the flu, belted two home runs and a double and drove in five runs to lead Philadelphia over visiting Montreal.

Kevin Gross, 1-0, gained the triumph in relief of starter Marty Bystrom, who was recalled early in the day from Portland of the Pacific Coast League and allowed three runs in six innings. Bob James, 0-2, took the loss.

Cardinals 10, Pirates 5

Tommy Herr had four hits, three runs batted in and two stolen bases to lead a 16-hit attack as St. Louis crushed Pittsburgh at Three Rivers Stadium, dealing the Pirates their fourth consecutive loss. Joaquin Andujar, 4-2, survived a three-run Pirates' fifth inning to throw a complete game, allowing nine hits while striking out four and walking one. The Pirates are off to a 7-14

Job-seekers with skills receive welcome

A warm welcome, of course, means plenty of job offers at good money, says Professor Eugene Jennings after analyzing reports from his listening posts at several dozen major corporations.

Jennings, of Michigan State University's graduate school of business and adviser to corporations and executives, also maintains that the MBA degree, denigrated recently, retains its luster.

"If anything," he said, "the master of business administration has ridden out the recession in better shape than most other degrees." He forecasts the next two years will be banner ones for students who earn them.

An analysis of the most active employers of the MBA degree, he says, shows that as a percentage of graduate hires, the MBA eroded only slightly from the 1970s - to an average of one in 18 from one in 15.

At the same time, Jennings says, most corporations are now more selective in recruiting and utilizing MBA graduates, placing special emphasis on fitting the graduates to the demands of the job.

Companies also are more inclined than before to put MBAs in line functions, where hard business decisions are made. Previously, he said, three of four MBAs went into staff jobs, where duties are in advising, assisting and planning.

Among other findings: -While sandwiches are eagerly sought, redundancy carries a stiff penalty. That is, two degrees in the same or a similar field aren't likely to enhance the holder's oppor-

-Smokestack industries, which had frowned upon hiring MBAs, are now employing them in large numbers, due in part to the need for analytical and technical skills to deal with increased regulation.

-Financial services, such as banks and insurance companies, will not be as fertile territory for MBAs as they were in the past. But this slack is likely to be offset by middle-size companies entering the MBA market.

-An engineering degree in itself is enough to get a good

Earlier, an engineer with an MBA degree received greater consideration. Now it is necessary to sandwich-in experience.

Workers sharing in costs

WASHINGTON (AP) -Soaring medical bills are leading American companies increasingly to ask employees to share health care insurance costs, with a record 35 percent of workers in a 1983 federal survey paying into such plans.

After four years in which the percentage ranged around 29 percent, the proportion of employees who had health care premiums deducted from their paychecks jumped six percentage points in 1983, according to the survey released Tuesday by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The survey, which began in 1979, covers 20 million people working for medium and large companies with at least 100 employees.

As health costs increased, more and more companies sought to unload "noncontributory" health insurance plans under which management pays all the premiums.

"That's largely a reflection of a corporate awareness that employee benefit plans are no longer fringes," Mike Romig, director of the Employee Benefit Policy Center at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said of Tuesday's government report.

The trend toward increasing numbers of workers being asked to share the cost of health and other benefit plans also reflects a recognition by management that these various fringe benefits are getting more expensive, he

The strong and extensive root system will help prevent lodging in stressful times. The moderately open heads will be a desirable feature, for quicker drydown.

This hybrid, because of its disease resistance, high yieldabilty, and tropical adaptation will make many friends among southern farmers.

'Cartoon' used as evidence in manslaughter case jury in a young man's manslaughter trial is scheduled this week to view the latest in high technology evidence: a computerproduced video graphic purporting to show exactly how a fatal auto accident occurred.

Legal experts say it will be the first time jurors in a criminal trial will be allowed to view a computer simulation or animation, and warn that such evidence may confuse jurors or unfairly persuade them.

The defendant is Michael McHugh, 18, the driver of a car that slammed into a concrete retaining wall on the Moshulu Parkway in the Bronx on March 13, 1983.

Four teen-age friends riding with McHugh were killed, and he was charged with four counts of vehicular manslaughter. If convicted. he faces up to 60 years in Police claim McHugh lost control of the car because he was drunk, but his attorney, Lawrence Feitell, plans to introduce a computerized animation which instead shows that the car crashed after it hit a utility manhole that had been left uncovered.

Because of publicity unrelated to the computer graphics, John Collins, the judge hearing the case, imposed a gag order on attorneys for both sides early in the trial.

However, the two Queens College physics professors who did a computer analysis of the accident and created the video graphics are not covered by the order, and both of them discussed their work enthusiastically.

Arthur Damask and Arthur Paskin have been doing computer analysis of auto accidents for lawyers for more be the first time they bring their computerized animation into court.

"This is modern technology," Damask said. "The future is here, it just hasn't been in the courtroom yet."

He said he will testify at the trial Thursday, introducing a 10-minute film made from his Apple II home computer. A little white box representing McHugh's car will move through two curving white lines representing the rainslick road on that moonless night

The film will show the car missing a curve where a traffic warning signal was not working and then sliding off the roadway. The simulation will show the car turning back toward the road surface, hitting the open utility manhole, spinning counterclockwise out of control and smashing into the wall, Damask said.

Paul Rothstein, a Georgetown University law professor, said computer simulations have been used in civil lawsuits to show how a piece of machinery works and how it stands up to stress.

But he said this is apparently the first time such a simulation will be introduced in a criminal case or to reconstruct an auto accident.

Frank Tuerkheimer, a former federal prosecutor who now teaches evidence at the University of Wisconsin, added that judges will have to exclude computer-generated animation if jurors become confused by how it was produced and what it may or may not show.

Both law professors said allowing such evidence could mean technical, complicated courtroom battles not only

Damask, a specialist in collision physics, will testify about the computer analysis this Thursday and Friday, while his partner Paskin, a specialist in metal strength and fractures, will follow him to the stand Monday and

They have done more than 100 computer analyses of accidents over the past two years, they said. Rather than relying on what witnesses say, they look only at the physical evidence, putting weights and masses and vectors and speed and torque into the computer and figuring out what happened by the hundredth of a second.

"We look at the debris and work backwards ...,' Damask said.

While they have not brought computer graphics to court, Damask and Paskin have testified in a number of cases, and their findings have led to a number of out-ofcourt settlements. In one case, they determined that a truck's brakes had not failed, but rather the driver had lost control; their client, the owner of the truck, settled out of court rather than fight a lawsuit.

NEW YORK (AP) - The Delmore Schwartz Memorial Poetry Award has been presented to Ruth Stone by New York University's College of Arts and Science.

Ms. Stone is the fifth recipient of the $1,000 award. It is presented periodically either to a young poet of exceptional promise or to a more mature poet who, in the opinion of the selection committee, has received insufficient national acclaim.

A resident of Brandon, Vt., Ms. Stone has published four collections of poetry, and her work has also been published in a variety of periodicals.

Good Citizens

Roxanne Gabel (left) of Dimmitt High School and Hereford's Dana Cabbiness were honored as recipients of the 1983 Good Citizen Award during a Sunday tea. The award is given to graduating seniors each year by the Los Ciboleros Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.
