'Big bang' concludes Fourth festivities

NEW YORK (AP) — Liberty's beacon towers in dignity over New York Harbor as the Lady holding out "the hope that is America" reopens today for the first time in two years after the biggest fireworks display in America's history climaxed her 100th birthday party.

Nancy Reagan was scheduled to cut the ribbon Saturday opening the Statue of Liberty to the public after its two-year, $66 million restoration, a dazzling rededication, a Fourth of July parade of tall ships, and Friday's pyrotechnics.

President Reagan described the Lady as the symbol of "the hope that is America," then added, "While it's good to talk about serious things, it is just as important and just as American to have some fun."

Then, as an estimated 2 million people watched from the harbor's shores and millions more on television, 41 barges circling Liberty Island launched 40,000 shells — 20 tons of fireworks — that bathed the statue in brilliance.

Fifteen miles of the New Jersey Turnpike were closed as motorists stopped and climbed on their vehicles to watch.

"It's spectacular ... It's a knockout," said Joan Charnin of White Plains, who shouted and clapped at Liberty State Park in New Jersey.

There were aerial shells, ground displays, fountains, candles and rockets. The statue sometimes disappeared in smoke and flame, and the starbursts were reflected by the water and by the glass of Manhattan's towers.

At the end of the 28-minute lightshow came the grand finale: 3,600 shells that painted the harbor with red, white, green, silver and blue.

Smoke and echoes drifted up the Hudson and applause rolled as the harbor resounded with the blasts of boats sounding their horns.

Reagan introduced the show by recalling America's history of bravery and brotherhood.

"Tonight, with heart and hand — through whatever trial and travail — we pledge ourselves to each other and to the cause of human freedom, the cause that has given light to this land and hope to the world," he said.

The Fabulous Fifth of July promised more, including a classical concert in Central Park and — at last — the statue's opening.

The Glorious Fourth ended with fireworks in the air, but the rest of the day came by land and by sea.

On land — the Harbor Festival, a street fair that filled 50 blocks of lower Manhattan with 1.5 million people, and a televised Boston Pops concert viewed by 15,000 at Liberty

State Park and millions more on television.

On the water earlier, Reagan reviewed 32 warships and the parade of tall ships, surrounded by an estimated 20,000 craft that filled the harbor.

Operation: Sail left indelible images in the minds of millions who watched and hundreds who participated. The spectacle was "as colorful as fireworks, as majestic as Lady Liberty herself," said Reagan.

Twenty-two tall-masted schooners, square riggers, barks and brigantines were accompanied by more than 200 other sailing vessels as they cruised up the harbor filled with private craft.

Earlier, Reagan boarded the battleship USS Iowa to review warships from the United States and 13 other

Ag industries have major doubts

Would prefer nuke dump be located somewhere else

By CINDY SMITH
Staff Writer

It has been rumored that if the Department of Energy's nuclear waste repository goes in, then some of Deaf Smith County's major industries — Arrowhead Mills, Holly Sugar, and Frito Lay — will go out.

Following are each major industry's answer to that very question. "We're a fairly large employer of some 70 people, making $9 million in revenues," said Vance Devareaux, executive vice president, secretary and treasurer of Arrowhead Mills.

"Some 22 million pounds of natural food products, much of it grown in the immediate area, is produced at our plant here," he said.

"We're an employer, but first we are citizens and a number of us go back several generations," he insisted.

"I weigh the repository on a cost benefit basis and the potential benefits seem a little 'iffy' to me.

"I've heard that any where from 475 to 600 families are supposed to move in. Their permanence beyond the period of construction seems questionable to me," Devareaux stated.

"The billion dollar number has been used for monies to be spent on this project," he continued. "Much, if not most, of the money will be banked in the hometown of the contractors — not ours."

Devareaux explained that the hazards associated with the repository can be divided into three categories: nuclear waste, construction problems, and representative redress, which he calls "our rights to appeal to our employees in Washington."

"The nuclear hazards are rather remote for at least 10 to 15 years, but the construction hazards are to begin this summer," reasoned Devareaux.

The technical difficulties associated with drilling a 12-foot diameter shaft through two major aquifers and into a salt dome seem very considerable to him.

"They're going to have to drill through the Santa Rosa and the Ogallala aquifers without co-mingling them or contaminating them with salt from the salt dome at the bottom of the hole," Devareaux explained.

"They're also going to have to dispose 'ultimately' of a large volume of salt.

"Any breakdown in these areas will affect not only our community but the entire mid-section of the United States and thereby, the food supply of the whole country," Devareaux calmly stated.

"I'm sure their technology is adequate," he said. "But the shuttle misadventure, the Vanderburg mishap, Love Canal, and Three-Mile Island all raise questions in my mind."

Devareaux noted that probably, more immediate than these, are the inabilities of concerned citizens to get satisfactory response to their questions.

"The bottom line in the DOE's argument is that the aquifer will be dry by the mid-1990s," said Devareaux.

"Data recently released from the Water Conservation district strongly suggests that this assumption is not correct," he said.

"If that be the case, how many other assumptions are flawed?" asked Devareaux.

"If they're not more careful with using 15-year-old data information than that — without checking to see if it is valid — do we really want them playing around with nuclear materials?" asked Devareaux.

"As far as the relocation of Arrowhead Mills is concerned, we are relying on the good judgment of the voting public in Deaf Smith County and the entire U.S. nation to stop this project."

Arrowhead Mills is in active support of POWER, (People Opposing Wasted Energy Repositories). Devareaux said they have attended and studied each of the DOE meetings.

"We have contacted our distributors and our customers ranging from New England to Southern California, from Washington to Florida, to contact their state and national representatives and senators and make their feelings known," he said. Flyers and bumperstickers have been supplied to their consumers.

"Really, at each stage, we've been expecting better judgment to prevail. And we still believe it will in the end," Devareaux said. "It definitely appears that the city and the nation are in danger of trading their birthright for a mess of pottage, a poisoned pottage at that!"

The executive vice president explained the route of the Ogallala which he said begins down by Lubbock and extends to South Dakota, providing much water for irrigation and municipal and residential water wells.

"You see, the tainting of this with the Santa Rosa water, salt, or radioactivity would cripple or devastate the entire mid-portion of the country," Devareaux pointed out.

"Also I've heard there is technology available that should be ready in three years to recycle this waste into usable fuel.

"The waste could be stored on site for that period of time so that the repository may never be needed, in my point of view," he said. But, he said, the damage potential in site characterization may also be irreparable. "If they mess up that aquifer, there's no way to clean it up," added Devareaux.

Devareaux said Arrowhead Mills is relying on the free press to clear the issues. "It would appear that we have a bureaucracy that has no answer..." he said, although not wanting to sound too critical or caustic of the DOE.

"Visualize Deaf Smith County, and we're not only thinking of

Rape in city park reported Friday

A Hispanic female was assaulted and raped in Dameron Park early on the morning of July 4th and police Saturday were looking for an unidentified Hispanic man in connection with the incident.

The assault occurred about 2:30 a.m. Friday, according to the police report. The victim was treated and released from Deaf Smith General Hospital. The suspect was described as being about 20 to 23 years of age, 6-foot tall, with shoulder-length black hair.

Officers made three arrests — one in connection with a shoplifting incident at Save-N-Gain, one for public intoxication and one for driving while intoxicated. They issued 14 citations and investigated two minor traffic accidents. Numerous other complaints kept officers busy during the holiday.

Complaints included a report of an

Donations short for Farm Aid II

MANOR, Texas (AP) — Farm Aid II produced the expected music and traffic jam, but fell short of attracting the amount of money that Willie Nelson wanted for struggling farmers.

Telephone donations added up to about $500,000 by early today, according to Farm Aid spokeswoman Margaret Wade. The approximately 40,000 tickets sold for the Friday show added another $800,000, she said.

"It's not too good," said Ms. Wade, who, nevertheless, called the 18-hour concert a success.

The first Farm Aid show, held Sept. 22, 1985, in Illinois, raised $9 million, but not all of it on the day of the show.

In a pre-concert interview, Nelson said he hoped Farm Aid II would raise at least $9 million more. He sounded disappointed when he met with reporters 12 hours into the show.

"According to the way the phone calls are coming in, I'd have to confess we're not approaching that now," Nelson said, referring to the Farm Aid I total. "I had hoped the phone calls would come in better than they are at this point."

Ms. Wade said the Fourth of July might not have been the best day to draw a large television audience that would call in donations. The show was telecast on cable network VH-1, opposite televised celebrations of the Statue of Liberty's centennial.

"The people who watched this show and called in are the people who need the money. People who could afford it probably watched the Statue of Liberty," Ms. Wade said.

"We didn't lose any money. Let's see if we raised the consciousness," she added.

The show featured about 75 pop, country and rock performers, including Nelson, Neil Young, John Cougar Mellencamp, the Beach Boys, Julio Iglesias and Alabama.

The crowd weathered mid-90 temperatures at Manor Downs, a quarter horse track about 11 miles east of Austin.

The day started with a traffic jam that had vehicles backed up to Austin. A major jam also was expected after the show.

"By sunrise we'll probably be checking the ditches and the fields for the bodies that remain, probably just live bodies that were knocked out," said security director Mike Simpson. Workers at medical tents treated hundreds of people who wilted in the heat.

Houston physician Dr. Red Duke, medical director of the concert, said, "For the most part, it's problems with what people have ingested," coupled with the heat.

Simpson said about 100 people were arrested, most for minor offenses. Many were held at the site

We attended the Texas Press Association's summer convention in Kerrville last weekend, and one of the highlights was a trip to the Y.O. Ranch, owned since 1880 by the Schreiner family. The 50,000-acre ranch boasts the largest quality herd of Longhorn cattle in the world. In addition to Longhorns, other breeds of cattle, sheep and goats add to the varied ranching activities.

The YO is one of Texas' largest working ranches with about half the income derived from ranching. Having no oil or gas, the Schreiner family decided about 30 years ago that another source of income was necessary to the survival of the ranch. Today, the YO is world renowned for its hunting program and is larger than some of the game preserves in Africa and India.

Our tour of the ranch included a ride on a hay wagon to view the largest collection of free-roaming exotic animals in the world. The ranch is home for more than 10,000 animals, the vast majority of which are free-ranging and living in a natural environment. Many of these animals are only to be looked at and photographed.

The game animals include the Indian Blackback Antelope, Axis and Sika deer, Aoudad, Fallow deer, American Elk, and the ever-abundant native Whitetail Deer and wild turkey. The ranch also has experimental herds of many rare and endangered species — including Ixex, Sable, Oryx, Gemsbok and Addax. Also seen on the tour were zebra, ostrich, giraffe, eland, emu and rhea.

We were surprised to learn that the ranch has no running water. Water for the vast area is supplied by 52 windmills. The tour also included a great barbecue supper, western music and an exhibit of roping by some of the cowboys. The ranch also derives income from a famous registered quarer-horse program.

ourselves, just visualize Deaf Smith County without any water," he imagined.

Devareaux said that in the early stages, the DOE planned on piling the salt on the surface.

"And, of course, nothing can grow out of ground with salt on it. And the prevailing winds from the southwest will carry this salt half way to Oklahoma," said Devareaux. "But that's 'IF' they get through the Ogallala."

Devareaux said the last he had heard, the DOE is planning to freeze the aquifer to drill through it.

How many have written to congressmen?

So how many have written to their congressmen? Not that many if the issue is nuclear waste in Deaf Smith County. A spokesman from Rep. Beau Boulter's office in Washington, D.C., said that office had record of 767 comments on the issue—but that number included several hundred signatures on a petition. Approximately 150 comments have been filed there since January of 1985 and about 20 were made in the last month.

Sen. Lloyd Bentson's office has on file a petition with approximately 3,000 signatures, but has no readily available count on individual correspondence.

Rep. Larry Combest's office has received 66 letters from individuals since he took office in January 1985.

Rep. Phil Gramm has the smallest mailbag. Last month netted him approximately 20 letters on the issue, according to a spokesman.

"Can you imagine dropping a body of water affecting six states by 20 degrees?," asked a skeptical Devareaux.

On the other side of the industrial fence, Holly Sugar's agriculture manager said, "We're shocked that they're actually considering it! If there is a need for such an installation I feel it ought to be put in an area that isn't agriculturally productive," said ag manager Dennis Printz.

"Sugar is an industry that is needed here—it gives the farmers a choice in an alternative crop," he stated.

"Economically, we produce a lot of dollars in the area. We have approximately 320 growers that raise beets for the local sugar industry," said Printz. These growers also involve another 200 landowners, so it actually involves a lot more people than we think."

According to Printz, the growers invest around $22 million in a seven county area which produce sugar beets for processing at the Hereford plant.

"Holly also employs 250 to 300 persons during processing season and approximately 100 people are employed year round," he noted. The Hereford plant is Holly's newest and largest, built in 1964.

"This generates an annual payroll of around $3 million per year," stressed Printz, adding that the most of that money circulates in the area.

"The point I'd like to make personally is I'm not against progress but I do feel another area, an area that isn't prime farm land, should be considered.

"I think we need to look long-term to make a decision—not just looking for a quick fix for our economic problems," Printz stated.

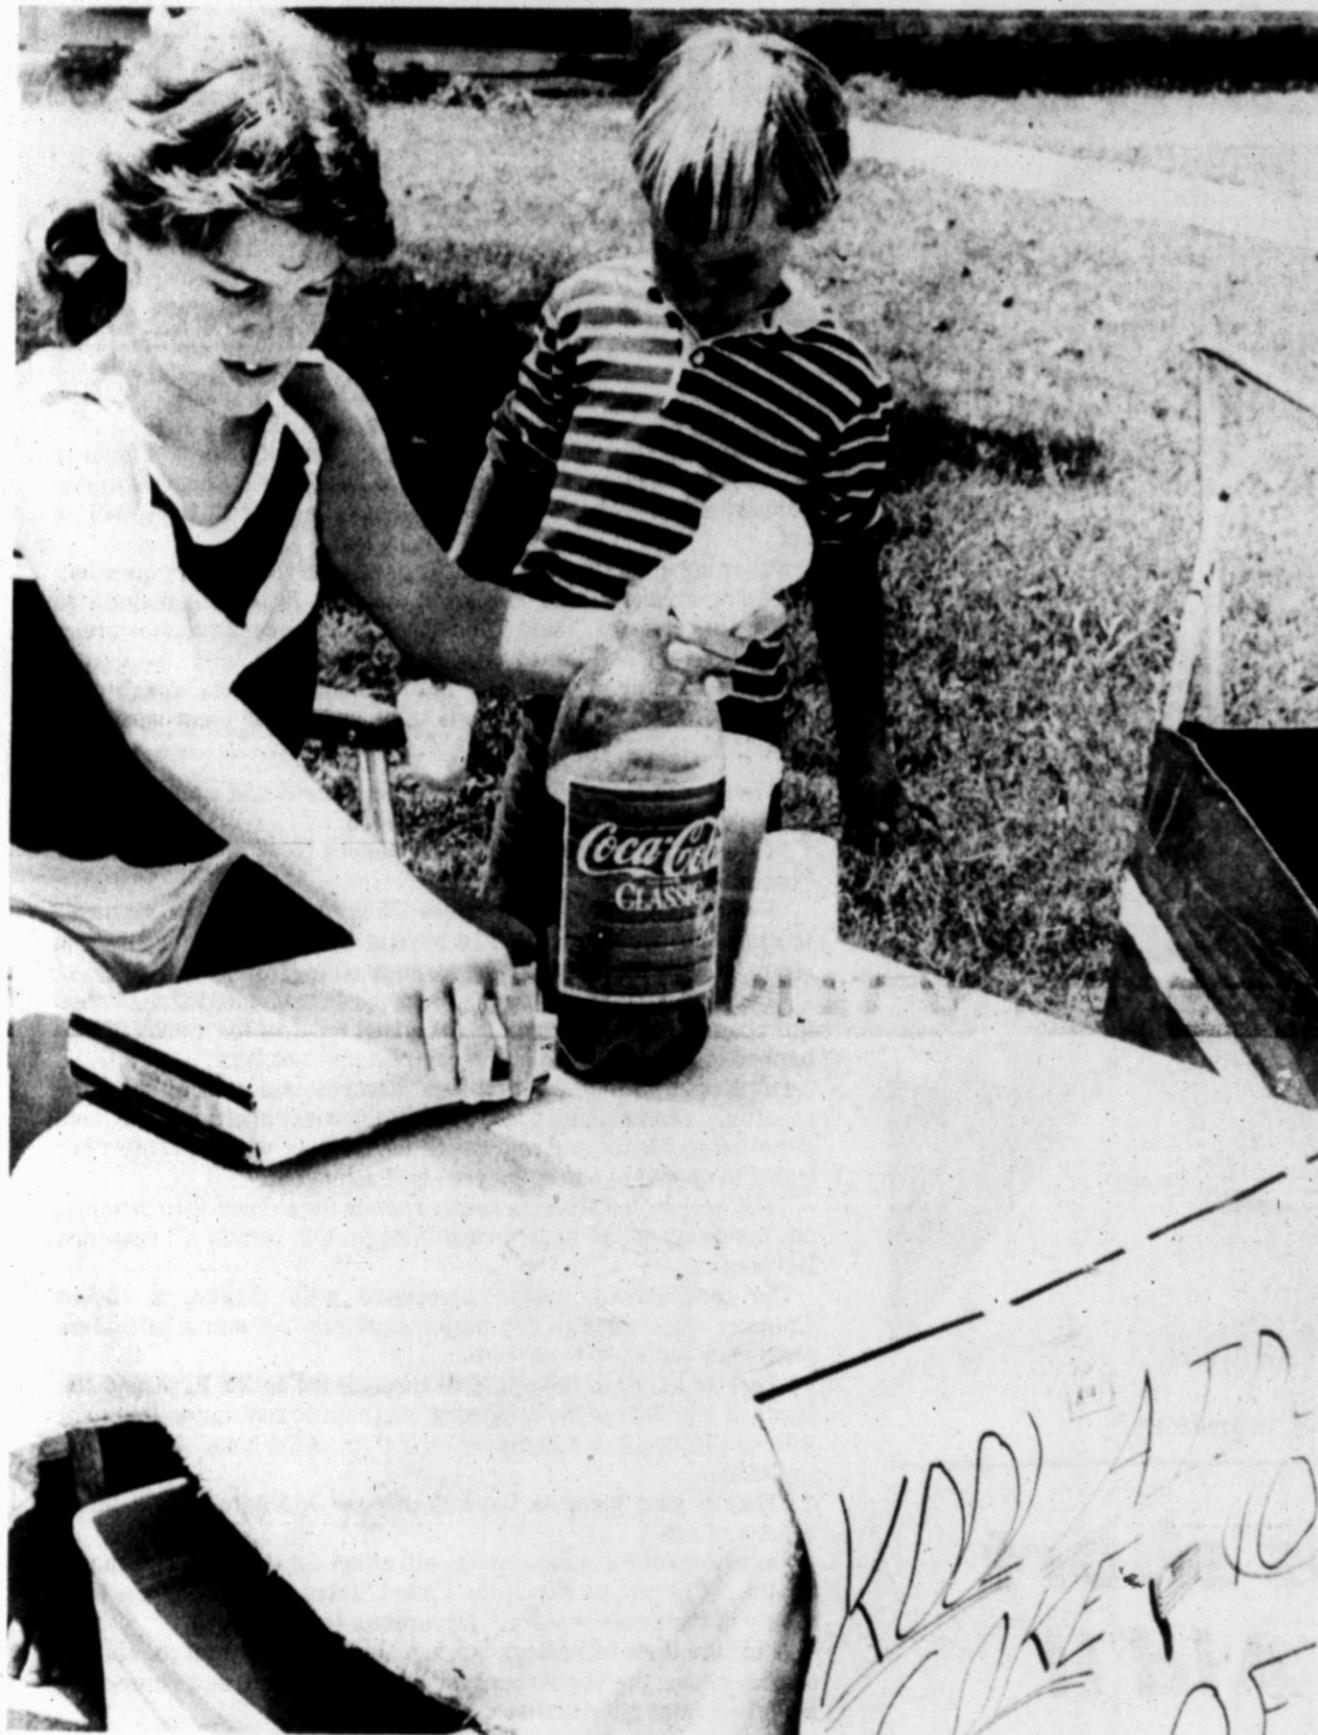

An official statement of Holly Sugar Corporation's view on the DOE repository site will be published within approximately 30 days.

Greg Overman, Frito Lay consumer relations spokesman, had more brevity. He stated, "We would prefer that another site be chosen and that is all we'd like to say right now."

Red, white, blue proposal welcomes woman at airport

GRAPEVINE, Texas (AP) — Fireworks were about the only thing missing when Wendell Dodd planned his red, white and blue Fourth of July marriage proposal spectacular.

Dodd, 27, wanted to ask Lorie Ernst, 24, to marry him and he wanted to do it in an unusual, spectacular way. He even told her he planned to propose to her in a different manner.

So Dodd and some friends went to Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport Friday to meet Ernst, who was returning for the holiday weekend from Ridgecrest Baptist Conference Center in North Carolina.

Dodd was dressed in a red bow tie, white top and tails. He carried a dozen red roses and had blue banner with white letters saying, "Lorie Ernst, Will You Marry Me?"

"I just wanted to do something different," Dodd said. "For Independence Day, I thought it kind of went together."

Dodd said he first met Ernst earlier this year in classes at Southwestern Baptist Seminary, where both are pursuing graduate degrees. He sent her a dozen red roses on Valentine's Day and they had their first date the next day.

"That really kicked it off," he said.

When Dodd saw an airliner taxiing near the terminal, he and his friends unfurled the banner.

"I hope this is the right flight," he said to laughs from a rapidly forming crowd of curious spectators.

When the walkway door opened, people aboard the plane began to file past the banner.

"Everybody's afraid to come out," Dodd said.

"He's been a basket case," one of the banner holders said of Dodd.

"You'd think it was his wedding day."

Then the object of the hoopla came out of the walkway.

One of Dodd's friends thrust the roses into her hand. She looked across the room, first at the flowers, then at Dodd, the unfurled banner and the crowd of spectators.

Dodd stepped forward, and dropped to bended knee for the proposal. The crowd cheered and applauded.

"Oh, yeah, it was a surprise," Ernst said. "He really outdid himself."

"I can't believe you did this," Ernst said to Dodd. But the couple is now planning for a Jan. 3 wedding. Dodd said he has no spectacular ideas for the wedding itself except that it would definitely be in a church.

As Dodd and Ernst walked from the terminal, a woman stepped forward and shook his hand.

"I'd like to see what you're going to do to top the wedding," she said.

Many of the performers mentioned the plight of farmers who are battling for financial survival.

"A lot of people — all the musicians backstage, all you folks out front — are here to help the American farmer," Nelson said in opening the show just after dawn Friday.

"He needs our help. And we're here to let the world know that he needs our help and he needs your help, too. So let's make today a great, historical day and a big positive day for the American family farmer."

Real estate loan benefits expanded for Texas veterans

Henry Reid, Veteran Administration property manager for the area, reports that new expanded benefits are now being offered to Hereford veterans.

The number of state benefits for Texas veterans tripled in June when the Texas Veterans Land Board voted to adopt recent recommendations of the Sunset Commission, Texas State Legislature, and Texas voters.

By a unanimous vote, the board agreed to change the current guidelines so that, instead of limiting participation to just one of the three, Texas veterans will be able to make multiple use of the Texas veterans programs for a four-month test period which began June 17.

In addition, allowing Texas veterans to participate in all three programs will greatly increase the state benefits now available to Texas veterans.

"I'm interested in this benefit veterans program because I think it's one of the best programs the federal government has ever put out," said Reid.

"Used to, all you could do was buy a 10-acre tract of land and now they're making it to where you can buy five-acre tracts of land and also, you can get a $15,000 home improvement loan or you can get a $20,000 loan to buy a house," Reid stated. "They're now offering three options for veterans here in Hereford."

At the end of the fourth-month test period, the board will study the effects of multiple participation and will a decision at that time on whether to make this change permanent.

In the past, veterans were limited to only one loan with the Texas Veterans Land Board. During this four-month test period, a Texas veteran who has already received one loan will be eligible to apply for a loan from one or both of the remaining programs as well.

For example, a veteran who already had received a Texas veteran land loan could now apply for a Texas veteran housing loan or a Texas veteran home improvement loan.

More Texas veterans will be able to borrow money to buy land as a result of the board's decision to reduce the minimum acreage required to get a Texas Veterans Land Loan. The Texas Veterans Land Board decided to reduce the minimum acreage requirement for a Veterans Land Program loan from 10 to five acres.

Reducing the acreage requirement will make it easier for contemporary Texas veterans to buy quality land closer to the urban areas where 80 percent of them work or live.

The five acre minimum will open up the program to more veterans at all income levels and allow them to join the more than 90,000 Texas veterans who have already purchased land through this program.

The program offers eligible Texas veterans a $20,000 loan at 8.75 percent to purchase a minimum of five acres.

A veteran can now save as much $1,000-$1,400 in up front closing costs by using the $20,000 Texas Veterans Housing Assistance Program. This financing tool has helped more than 28,000 veterans buy a home during the past three years.

The VHAP program offers veterans a $20,000 30-year fixed-rate loan at 9.5 percent to apply toward the purchase of a home. When combined with a federal VA loan, no down payment is required.

Support for this program was expressed by realtors and veterans throughout the state.

Future bleak for squatters in Nuevo Laredo settlement

By CARMINA DANINI Laredo Morning Times

NUEVO LAREDO, Mexico (AP) — To others like them — the families who occupy more than 50 acres of once uninhabited land in the southwestern sector of this city — they are pioneers. But to their foes, they are interlopers, taking what is not theirs.

The families who reside in the Colonia Loma Bonita are not alone — there are others, many, many more, who live under similar circumstances near another settlement called La Sandia.

Given the continuing deterioration of the Mexican economy, it appears likely that the numbers of the squatters will grow, not just here, but throughout Mexico.

The problem of illegal possession of land is particularly acute in a city where good, cheap housing is scarce. Nuevo Laredo's population is being swelled daily by Mexicans from the interior who use it as a springboard for their trek north.

If they can't cross the border into the United States and have no means to return home, their only option is to stay here.

With unemployment high and jobs, even those that pay minimum wage, scarce, those men from the interior who bring their families with them are forced to take desperate measures.

Taking possession of uninhabited land is illegal, but how else will the majority of Mexicans obtain housing, asks Chamber of Commerce president Higinio Ibarra Murillo.

"I fear that this is the wave of the future in Mexico," Ibarra said about squatter camps. "It's not that they're being stubborn. They have a very real need for a roof over their heads, even if it's made of cardboard."

Cardboard is just one of many materials used in the structures that fill the eye for miles and miles at Loma Bonita and La Sandia.

The two settlements are located in the southwestern edge of the city, in what was once brushland. La Sandia is located across from a large PEMEX storage facility.

The majority of the two- and three-bedroom dwellings are made of a little of this and a little of that — some lumber, a lot of cardboard, plastic sheeting and cloth.

The materials used in the structures are not what someone would go out and purchase but would salvage out of a dumpster or landfill.

Those better off than their neighbors have homes made of cinderblocks. Paint, often in vivid colors such as turquoise and pink, adorns a few of the homes, but for the most part each of the two neighborhoods is predominated by tones of gray and beige.

Like the hardy men and women who settled here before them, the families that reside in the two villages lack basic services most take for granted: paved streets, running water, electricity, sewage and a drainage system.

"Even without that, we are happy here at Loma Bonita," said Maria Betancourt, a native of Veracruz. "We feel more comfortable because this is our home."

Only Mrs. Betancourt and her husband, an ice cream vendor who does not work every day because of circulatory problems with his legs, live here. Their children are grown and live in other parts of the city.

A neighbor, Maria Elulia Villalosa, mother of three, complained that she and the other residents will do without electricity, but not water.

"It's indispensable; we need it simply to drink," she said.

There are taps nearby at Loma Bonita and the city provides water stored in huge drums. Those that have the money, purchase water each week when a pipe truck comes by, but the cost, as much as $2 a liter, keeps many from having water, Mrs. Villalosa said.

At a small stand nearby, Maria del Refugio Garza sells soft drinks and chips. She watches over two of her three young daughters who are playing by the water tap.

The 27-year-old woman moved here nearly two years ago after rent at a small house near the old city cemetery nearly tripled.

"Here, we don't have to pay rent but I do wish we could get the land legalized so that the city could provide us with services," she said.

The need to legalize the land is a common thread that is repeated over and over by the residents of Loma Bonita. But that is unlikely to occur any time soon, said Irineo Bernal, who is considered by many as the neighborhood leader.

Bernal, a cabinet-maker, and his wife, Conchita, were among the first 10 to 15 families who took part in the invasion of the land on Nov. 15, 1983. The land is located just adjacent to the city's red light district.

Mrs. Bernal, 32, has been married to Bernal nearly 19 years, and they have three children. She said she supported her husband when he decided to take possession of the land.

With pride, she exhibited a sketch in which she and her husband drew out the neighborhood, complete with a school.

The school, Presidente Guadalupe Victoria, is not far from their corner house on Emiliano Zapata Street. Also nearby is a green-colored building that serves as the Baptist church.

Bernal, 39, said he and his family moved here because the land was unpopulated, it was used by "bad people," and "we weren't hurting anyone by moving in."

"By the time we came here, it was out of desperation. We weren't the only ones; everyone else was in the same situation," he said.

He said the owner, Alonso Trevino, is willing to sell, but the needed permission by state authorities has not been granted.

Because of the squabbles over who is the leader, Mayor Ricardo de Hoyos Arizpe and a representative of the Tamaulipas state government recently appointed a commission to oversee the affairs of the neighborhood and its residents.

City press secretary Federico Schaffler said the city has been attempting to work out the problems of Loma Bonita and La Sandia, but admitted the problems were many.

The basic services can't be provided by the city until the residents purchase their lots, Schaffler said. Meanwhile, a state agency that deals with housing and urbanization is attempting to help out residents with the deeds.

Schaffler said that more and more families are moving into the two neighborhoods, and the problems will increase.

And the residents maintain they will not move.

"It is a difficult matter," Schaffler said. "It would be more difficult to throw them out because there are too many people."

Public attention focuses on statue, Capitol structure

This year, state architects directed workers to lift the Goddess of Liberty statue from atop the Texas State Capitol and bring it down to be replaced with a newer, sturdier model.

The transfer has focused public attention on the statue, the Capitol structure and the history of both.

Texas legislators approved plans for the current Capitol after the former structure burned in 1881. The cornerstone was laid in 1883, then construction, marked by labor conflicts, took five years.

When Texas citizens passed through triumphal-arch entryways at the building's inauguration in May 1888, they were drawn to the building's vast rotunda.

Like its prototype in Washington, D.C., the Texas Capitol building is dominated by a monumental dome set upon a broad ring of classical columns and crowned by a statue of the goddess.

Architectural historian Ken Breisch states that both capitols, through such structures, emulated "as did the constitutions of the two governments they sheltered in their wings, the ancient tradition of Roman Law, as manifested architecturally by the doomed Pantheon in Rome."

Both the state and national Capitol buildings remind observers of the rule of law over the people.

The form of the Goddess of Liberty, adapted in public art throughout 19th-century America, consists of a robed woman wearing the olive wreath of victory on her head.

In ancient Rome, this goddess stood for the "personal" liberty of the freed slave.

But by the 19th century, she had come to symbolize broader political freedom as expressed in the French and American democracies. Also, the statue on the Texas Capitol holds the Lone Star in her upraised left hand, and her right hand grasps a sword.

Despite the dramatic show of this grand Capitol, it was county government that rendered the law across the vast state of Texas.

Particularly in the 19th century, county officials — the county judge, treasurer, attorney and clerk — administered law, collected taxes, issued birth certificates and marriage licenses and recorded the transfer of property, Breisch explains.

These transactions took place in the county courthouse. At the local level, courthouses held as much significance as did the Capitol.

State legislation passed in 1881 enabled counties to levy taxes for courthouse construction, so most counties erected them in the final decades of the century.

Among these are some of the finest architectural monuments in the state, Breisch asserts — the Hill County Courthouse in Hillsboro, the Ellis County Courthouse in Waxahatchie, the Lavaca County Courthouse in Hallettsville and the Goliad County Courthouse in Goliad, for example.

Majestic courthouses clearly marked the geo-political and commercial center of each county, and within the county seat, the center of town life and commerce.

Their sheer bulk and towering height brought a focus to the carefully platted streets in which the buildings were often centered.

"With four facades and entryways, these courthouses seemed to communicate with each side of the town square," Breisch points out, "offering themselves equally to every mercantile and banking establishment that surrounded them, proclaiming boldly the union between commerce and government.

"Their very form expressed Texan ideals of good government — yawning entryways were open to all, yet broad staircases elevated government above the people, and tall towers carried vaguely ecclesiastical associations of a strong faith in God and moral virtue. Constructed of brick and stone, the structures conveyed a sense of permanence and monumentality to instill confidence in the institutions within."

One hundred years later, many of these "temples of justice" still stand in the small towns and cities of Texas. Historian Breisch says that the courthouses "remind us of the pride and the optimism they held for the future of their state."

In celebrating the nation's Independence Day and the 150th anniversary of the Texas Republic, we pause to reflect on that faith in government.

Increased activity calls for more safety

By The Associated Press

Increased activity in the summer months calls for increased awareness of safety precautions, warns Ann Scott, project coordinator, Regional Spinal Cord Injury System, Rusk Institute of Rehabilitation Medicine, NYU Medical Center, in New York.

The majority of disabling spinal cord injuries, she says, occur during the summer months, particularly among the young and active. "Diving and sports activities and automobile and motorcycle accidents are prime causes," she adds.

She offers these safety tips:

— Before plunging in, check beneath the surface of ponds and lakes for submerged, unseen rocks in ponds and lakes.

— Know the depth of the water before you dive.

— When climbing, wear proper safety equipment for support to avoid falls.

— Always wear safety belts when driving, even to the corner grocery store.

Regarding safety around water, whether it's the ocean, a lake or the neighborhood backyard pool, Dr. Al J. Palmiotto, athletic director at United States International University at San Diego, Calif., offers this advice:

— Never allow your children to swim alone, no matter how experienced they may be.

— Teach children the "bubble theory." "Most kids have problems in the water because they get disoriented and don't know how to get to the surface," he says. "By opening their eyes and blowing bubbles, they can find their way to the surface by following the bubbles."

— Don't be a hero. If you see someone in trouble, contact a lifeguard or throw out any kind of floating object for the victim to grab onto.

— Pay attention to health officials' warnings of polluted water. Contaminated lakes or an imbalance of chemicals in a pool can cause severe ear problems.

Drug deaths

With the shock of Len Bias' death from cocaine still reverberating through our society, it seems almost unbelievable that another healthy young athlete has been killed the same way only eight days later.

The latest victim is Don Rogers, an immensely talented defensive back with the Cleveland Browns. Whereas Bias was apparently "celebrating" his first-round selection in the NBA draft, Rogers died the day before his marriage to his college sweetheart.

The death of Rogers, like Bias, was especially unfortunate because neither had a history of drug abuse. In each of his two seasons with the Browns, Rogers was voted the "hardest worker" on the club, an accolade given by the team members themselves to the individual who trained, studied and strived the most.

These two deaths have shattered the lives of the athletes' families and friends, and all we can do is hope that other Americans — particularly the young — will either stop using cocaine or lose the desire to "experiment" with it. Illegal drugs are stupid, deadly and dehumanizing in every sense of the word. Len Bias and Don Rogers died before learning that lesson; it's not too late for the rest of us.

The Penultimate Word

JULY THE FOURTH

Usually I write a little patriotic homily during this week. It is the birthday of our great land. This year we may well O.D. on patriotism. Between Texas having its Sesquicentennial with wall to wall barbecues and the Statue of Liberty's 100-year anniversary with a made-for-TV extravaganza, we will end the week with bleary eyes and a bellyache.

I decided to take a break from the hoopla and remember the Fourth of Julys of my youth. Times may not have been better, but they were certainly simpler.

I remember July 4th as the only holiday of summer. Summer in southwest Oklahoma meant bare feet almost tough enough to take whatever needed walking on. It meant sidewalks hot enough to fry eggs and mosquitoes big enough to take you home and eat you at their leisure. It meant stickers in your feet and Mother digging them out with a needle. It meant chiggers who seemed to have found out that Okies taste better than other folks. It meant season tickets to the swimming pool. I wish I could just once more be hungry like I was after four hours in the swimming pool.

July the Fourth meant a trip to the Wichita Mountains, swimming in the lakes, climbing the rocks, fried potatoes, pork and beans, and fried chicken. Late in the evening there would be a trip up Mount Scott to watch the buzzards.

If we stayed home on the Fourth the evening would be spent on a blanket in the front yard. We did not have the money for many fireworks. A few sprinklers and one bunch of firecrackers were about it. We popped the things slowly to make the experience last. Lately I've seen kids pop fireworks like they were in a race to get it over with. When the fireworks were over we caught lightning bugs or June bugs. A June bug with a string tied to its leg is worth a whole evening of fun.

All of this does not sound like flag waving or patriotism, but remembering it all does make me feel renewed gratitude for living in such a country.

Immigration

Immigration reform, a subject long talked about and little acted upon in the House, has moved a notch. The House Judiciary Committee has approved a bill; it now goes to the labor, education and agriculture committees where some fine tuning may take place before it moves to the House floor.

That's extremely encouraging. The Senate passed a reform bill last fall; it has passed others in the past. But so far the House has failed its responsibility. So any movement in that body is appreciated.

Will it be enough? That's open to question.

But the most important thing is to get something through the house, and hope that either on the House floor or in conference with the Senate, a workable and acceptable bill can be written. The nation is imperiled by having no control of its borders; its own citizens are suffering. Immigration reform is essential this session of Congress.

Volunteers — keep them

By RICHARD L. LESHAR
President

LET'S KEEP OUR
VOLUNTEER WORK FORCE

In the absence of a mandatory draft, our military has found it can get along quite well with volunteers who enlist of their own free will. Even though a draft is sometimes necessary, especially when our nation's survival is at stake, most people agree that coerced service is contrary to the basic spirit of a free society.

If that is true in the military, surely it is even more so in the private sector where national security is not an issue. Individual workers are free to choose their own employers and decide for themselves whether to enlist in the ranks of a union.

Unfortunately, if the AFL-CIO and its allies in Congress have their way, that freedom of choice will be a thing of the past. The House has already approved a union-backed bill that would, in effect, draft millions of construction workers into unions whether they like it or not.

This is a desperate measure, but then the unions see themselves in desperate straits. For many years, organized labor has been losing clout, especially in construction. As recently as 20 years ago, unions represented in construction. As recently as 20 years ago, unions represented more than 80 percent of the workers on major projects; today it is less than 30 percent.

The focal point of this controversy is the common industry practice of dual shop operations, sometimes called "double breasting." It refers to situations where a construction company has separate affiliates, some of which are unionized and some of which are not.

The union-backed legislation approved by the House and now before the Senate essentially would outlaw double breasting. It would redefine the term "single employer" under the National Labor Relations Act to include all affiliates of a company, regardless of their function or location, provided there is any common ownership or management—even one share of stock or one common board member.

Every construction company would have to be all union or non-union. If one affiliate of a company were organized, every employee of other affiliates would be drafted into union ranks.

Not only would workers lose their fundamental freedom of choice, but the bill would also permit a form of common situs picketing. That basically means that one union on a construction site has the power to shut down the entire project until its particular grievance is resolved. Obviously, this would confer disproportionate power upon small unions. The bill also would permit multi-situs picketing whereby all other work sites of the employer could be picketed—even work sites in other states—because of a labor dispute at one site. Congress voted "no" to common situs picketing in 1977, but now the idea's ugly head is raised again.

The anti-double breasting bill, S. 2181, is now up for consideration by the Senate. This would be an excellent time for business people to re-establish contacts with their senators, renew old acquaintances and, not incidentally, urge defeat of this grotesque legislative atrocity.

Enjoying every day

"He jests at scars who never felt a wound." The vigorous and well imagine that they will live forever, that any enjoyment of life can be deferred.

George Russell of Grants Pass, Ore., knew that his earthly time was likely to be cut short so he deferred nothing—he learned to enjoy every day.

And he lived to teach others how. George Russell had Lou Gehrig's disease—amyotrophic lateral sclerosis—for 31 years.

For 25 of those years he was in a wheelchair.

He also suffered from various kinds of cancer.

Yet, few ever saw him without a mile-wide smile.

When a friend, Bob Schillinger, was enduring the trauma of losing the fifth member of his family—his mother—to cancer, he reached out to George for courage.

George showed him how to shed a tear and then how to shed two tons of grief and make the remaining time with his mother as enjoyable as it could be.

Out of that experience, those two men created an informal organization called OWL—On With Living. With shared tape recordings they were able to help anybody despondent discover that he or she was not alone.

George died in 1984 but not before OWL had been expanded to include a whole library of videotapes, available on loan to anyone and eventually marketed at cost through hospitals and nursing homes.

The message of the tapes is simple: "Make today count." A spokesperson for the Portland Area Hospital Council says, "On With Living is an invaluable program. The videotapes are powerful, moving; they fill a vital gap in patient and professional education."

Each tape is recorded by somebody who is suffering a terminal illness.

Sal Nobile's recorded message starts out, "Not many people stop to look for the beauty in the fluttering fall of a leaf to the ground. I did. And wait'll you hear what's happened since!"

Sal counseled, "Too many people spend too much time racing around trying to get things done. They never see the tops of mountains or the insides of flowers."

One of the tapes was made by Pat Murphy, paralyzed, confined to a wheelchair, yet an active columnist and active in church, and his face mirrors so much more happiness than you are likely to see in so many with so much less.

OWL — On With Living... a permanent memorial to an uncommon man, George Russell. If his tapes are sufficient to get the terminally ill off the self-pity-pot and back to enjoying whatever time they have, this philosophy should be a remonstrance to us all.

COMMENTARY

Don Graff

Where the jobs will be

By Don Graff

The American labor force will continue to grow until the end of the century and so will the supply of jobs.

But forget about "re-industrialization" of the economy. Virtually all of the growth will be in services, which already employ nearly three-quarters of all working Americans.

The work comes from the Conference Board, the New York-based economic research organization that has released a study of long-term employment trends.

It finds that while the number of workers employed in manufacturing will hold roughly steady at 28 million, this will represent only 15 percent of the expanded work force in the year 2000, as opposed to 18 percent today.

Services, or "the production of intangible goods," is a category that covers a lot of job territory, from financial consultants collecting fees in six and seven figures to street sweepers. And growth is not uniform.

One of the most robust sub-categories is business services, which currently account for some 4.5 million jobs, more than double the number 10 years ago.

Another is what the study terms "people-caring," covering people employed in health and social services ranging from medical specialists to day-care workers.

Yet another is "protectors of people and property," which includes such traditional services as police and fire but now extends far beyond them. For example, private security guard services now employ more than 400,000, which probably says something about the state of the society that is enjoying this job boom. Thousands more are in such "soft security" positions as receptionists, building superintendents and just plain door-watchers.

And then there are the "cleaner-uppers" — the refuse collectors, cleaning crews and window washers. Their numbers are increasing because — here comes another social statement — "a more complex and litter-prone society requires plenty of manpower to handle its mess."

One service area that is not showing growth is government, which includes state, local and federal, as well as some 8.5 million jobs in education. The share of total employment has held steady at 15 to 16 percent since the 1970s, suggesting that something other than the Reagan "revolution" is at work here.

The not-so-good news in all of this is that many of the jobs being created are at the low end of the pay scale.

The better news may be that this country is not alone in the trend. Similar changes are underway, the study notes, in other major industrial nations — most especially Japan, from where the great threat to American industry is perceived to be coming. Services are already up to 57 percent of all jobs available to Japanese workers, and the share is increasing at least as rapidly as in the United States.

Bootleg Philosopher On taxes

Editor's note: The Bootleg Philosopher on his Johnson grass farm on Tierra Blanca Creek has been struggling with the tax reform bill, his letter this week indicates.

Dear editor:

I've been having trouble trying to figure out what the tax reform bill in Congress will do for me or to me.

Newspapers have been publishing charts showing how the Senate bill will affect a family of four with I suppose well-behaved kids earning $30,000 a year and how it differs from the House bill, which has its family of four earning $20,000, as best I can figure out. Maybe it's the other way around.

In addition to reforming the tax system, the bill is also supposed to simplify it. This has been accomplished by reducing the tax code from 3,000 pages to 1,500, which is like going a year and a half without rain instead of three, or as simplifying as having two flat tires instead of all four, plus the spare too.

Trying to understand a 1,500-page tax bill requires superhuman effort and I don't recommend asking a Congressman to try it.

As a matter of fact, a full understanding of the bill won't be available until a year or so after it's passed, which is how long it'll take the tax lawyers to figure out where their clients can safely dodge. Any tax lawyer who can't take 1,500 pages of Congressional language and squeeze out something beneficial for the few ought to give up and try ambulance chasing.

Understand, I'm in favor of tax reform. This time I hope it works. I only hope it's not like the bank robber who reformed in prison and was let out in time to rob another bank.

Yours faithfully,
J.A.

213 dams still considered unsafe

The Barefoot Lake Dam in the Liberty County community of Rye—washed away by Hurricane Bonnie—was one of 237 privately owned dams in Texas called unsafe in a 5-year-old survey.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and Texas Water Commission survey said 213 of the 237 dams remain unsafe because they will not hold enough water during heavy rains and flooding.

They are called "high-hazard dams," meaning loss of human life is possible if they are destroyed in heavy rains.

About 200 families in Big Thicket Estates were stranded for two days after the Barefoot Lake Dam washed away June 26.

In a letter to then-Gov. Bill Clements dated Dec. 4, 1980, Col. Donald J. Palladino of the Fort Worth office of the U.S. Corps of Engineers said inspectors found that Barefoot Lake Dam was structurally sound but that the dam would not accommodate maximum flooding in severe weather conditions.

The dam will hold back only 40 percent of the water experts predict could fill the lake during the most severe flooding considered possible at the site, the letter said.

Ray Reilly, president of Reilly Land Co., which owns Barefoot Lake Dam at Big Thicket Estates, said he knew the dam had been determined unsafe and said he spent $20,000 in 1985 to correct various structural problems.

"That (filling cracks in the dam) corrected some, but course, it wasn't all of the deficiencies," Reilly said. "The reason we didn't do anything else is we would've had to rip it out and start all over. It would have taken about half a million dollars."

The dam now will be redesigned and rebuilt in compliance with state regulations, Reilly said.

The remaining 213 are unable to hold enough water during maximum flooding, officials said. Exact locations of those dams could not be obtained Wednesday.

The owners of all 237 dams were notified by letter of the inspectors' findings after the survey. However, no time frame was set for them to come into compliance with the rules.

It would cost up to $100 million to upgrade or rebuild all unsafe dams in the state, said John Wise, chief of the Corps of Engineers' Dam Safety Unit.

The survey—the first of its kind in Texas—was conducted between 1977 and 1981 using criteria that regulates federal dams in the state.

The water commission inspects the state's high-hazard dams—now totaling 703—about once every five years. And although the water commission has adopted tougher inspection criteria, officials said the inspections aren't frequent enough.

"If I were living right below the dam, I wouldn't feel safe with that," Wise said.

Toward ordaining women bishops

Episcopal Church moves cautiously

NEW YORK (AP) — Indications are that the Episcopal Church is moving steadily, if cautiously, toward bringing women into its historic succession of bishops—a prospect of broad, interchurch ramifications.

When, or if, it happens, the denomination would become the first tracing its line of bishops back to apostolic times to expand that office to include women.

It would accentuate problems in Anglican-Roman Catholic unity talks on which a high-level exchange of letters made public this week cited even ordination of women clergy as a serious obstacle.

But the Most Rev. Edmond Lee Browning, the church's presiding bishop, foresees the further step "in the not-too-distant future," yet necessitating approval by the whole church leadership, not just by some single diocese.

In June, a woman, the Rev. Mary Chotard Doll, ran a strong second among five male priests for suffragan bishop of the church's Washington, D.C. diocese, which elected the Rev. Ronald H. Haines.

It was the first such bid by a woman since the church's House of Bishops last fall declared they "do not intend to withhold consent to the election of a bishop on ground of gender." But they ordered a study of the ecumenical implications.

At their request, Browning also has consulted with other Anglican primates about it. The church is one of 28 branches of the worldwide Anglican communion that claims the historic lineage of bishops, along with Roman Catholicism, Eastern Orthodoxy and the Lutheran Church of Sweden.

However, that succession is not held by most Protestant denominations, including those with bishops.

The prospect of women being brought into that age-old episcopal chain was a key topic, raised by Browning, at a recent meeting in Toronto of the heads of the 28 Anglican branches stemming from the Church of England.

Together they total about 70 million members.

The meeting of primates recognized the Episcopal Church's right to consecrate women bishops, but noted that its consulting with other Anglican branches showed concern for the wide impact of such action.

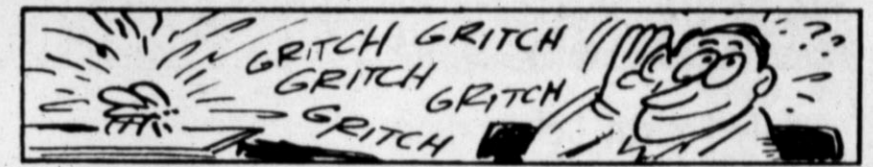

The meeting also cited resolutions of the 1978 worldwide Lambeth Conference of Anglican bishops, saying there were no basic theological obstacles to women's ordination, including their becoming bishops, but adding:

Such a step should not be taken without inclusive Anglican consultations and without "overwhelming support" in the particular church "lest the bishop's office should become a cause of disunity instead of a focus of unity."

The meeting in March of the primates also suggested that their joint "collegiality" suggested "some restraint" about the matter until it is taken up by the next Lambeth Conference in 1988, a once-each-decade affair.

The Episcopal Church is one of several Anglican branches now ordaining women and the "mother" Church of England is debating it. Women also are ordained in the Lutheran Church of Sweden.

Some people believe the first frost will be six weeks after a katydid is heard.

Refugees main topic for Cerezo's first visit

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Guatemalan President Vinicio Cerezo arrived here Wednesday for a three-day official visit in which the major topic will be the 46,000 refugees from his country living in camps in southern Mexico.

The visit also is expected to improve relations between Mexico and its southern neighbor, strained while conservative military or military-dominated governments held sway there for the past three decades.

The Jan. 14 inauguration of Cerezo, who is of the centrist Christian Democratic Party, marked a return to elected civilian rule.

Information released by Mexico's Foreign Ministry said Cerezo would meet twice with President Miguel de la Madrid to discuss the situation in Central America and the efforts of the Contadora group to draft a peace treaty for the troubled region.

Mexico, Panama, Colombia and Venezuela formed the Contadora group in January 1983, but were unable to meet a self-imposed June deadline for completing the treaty for Guatemala and the other nations of Central America, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras and Costa Rica.

A statement said the Mexican government "reiterates its satisfaction on receiving here the first democratically elected, civilian president in the republic of Guatemala in the past 19 years."

Cerezo often has discussed the problem of the refugees who fled the political violence in Guatemala's northwestern highlands from 1980 through 1982 and has proposed guarantees for their safety should they return.

"We will discuss this problem with the goal that they might return freely," Cerezo said before leaving his country.

Most of the refugees are Indian peasants who became caught in the middle of fighting between leftist guerrillas and the Guatemalan military, which put a "scorched earth" policy into effect in its anti-insurgency battle.

Previous Guatemalan governments charged that the camps strung along the Mexican border were serving as sanctuaries and recruitment centers for guerrillas.

Mexico ordered the refugees for security reasons to leave the camps along the border for others in southeastern Mexico, but at least half of the refugees refused to move.

The Mexican government has said voluntary repatriation would be an ideal solution to the refugee problem.

ANXIETY AND A NEW BABY

NEW YORK (AP) — A new baby may upset your life, but don't despair, says Dr. Judith Kuriansky in Family Circle magazine.

Most first-time experiences naturally cause anxiety.

To a husband and wife in dispute over how to respond to a new baby, Kuriansky says: "If your worries are causing you to lose sleep and disrupting your marriage, you could be overreacting. Calm down. Discuss ways you both can assume responsibility for baby care with reasonable, shared concern."

How about the husband who suddenly acts like a stranger toward the new mother?

Says Kuriansky: "Tell him about your need to be close. Discuss ways to take a respite from parental roles. You both deserve to feel wanted and loved, now more than ever."

Hotel closing, tenants told to leave

HOUSTON (AP) — University of Texas officials are telling 100 residents in the Texas State Hotel in downtown Houston they have to leave so the university can close the 17-story building.

"Let's face it," said John Sawyer, 65, who has called the hotel home for a decade. "I'm up a creek. I ought to go out and rob a bank. But I don't have the guts to."

Sawyer, like other tenants, had paid $300 on Tuesday morning to keep his room for the next 30 days.

But by Tuesday afternoon, armed with a court order, UT booted the management and closed the hotel.

The university, owner of the hotel, decided to close the facility after a dispute with the leasing partnership about lease payments and taxes, said James S. Wilson, UT manager of endowment real estate.

The previous management, which leased the hotel for $8,000 a month, owed more than $100,000 in taxes, he said. The previous management also had control of the room money, Wilson said.

The only people who could refund the advance room rent to the residents, who include the handicapped, retirees, transients and downtown workers, are the people who no longer run it, he said.

"I'm sure my clients will refund the money," the partnership's lawyer, Stephen J. Cavanaugh, said. "I'm shocked the university would not."

Wilson took over the front desk and told agitated residents they must move out as soon as possible.

Reports

AUSTIN — The relative calm that has surrounded the hearings of the Select Committee on Higher Education is about to be broken. Nine months of largely academic committee meetings are about to give way to two days of the most politically charged sessions this legislative interim has seen.

On July 10 and 11, the select committee's staff will present a report on the effects of possible closures and mergers of Texas colleges and universities. For the first time in recent memory, talk of such a shake-up for higher education will emerge from the backrooms and be laid on the table for debate by a governmental body.

Larry Temple, chairman of the select committee, set the study in motion in June 3 memorandums to committee members and the committee staff. Temple's memos were even-handed, insisting that the studies list the pros and cons of all possible closures and mergers, and he gave no personal preference for any action.

What he did do was list a series of actions he wanted studied, and it is that list that has the worlds of politics and education alive with speculation. Some examples of what the excitement is all about:

Temple named four schools — Sul Ross State University, the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, East Texas State University and Texas A&M University at Galveston — as candidates for closure.

He also provided a list of schools he wanted studied as possible targets for merger. Some, like Texas Woman's University and North Texas State University, which are blocks from each other in Denton, were obvious. Others, like the University of Texas campuses in Dallas and Arlington, were somewhat surprising.

And, some were of particular interest to the Panhandle and South Plains. Candidates for merger in our area are West Texas State University with Texas Tech University, Midwestern State University with Texas Tech, UT-Permian Basin with Texas Tech, Sul Ross with Texas Tech and Sul Ross with Angelo State University.

Temple's suggested merger studies weren't limited to the four-year, multidisciplinary universities, either. He also wants the committee staff to look into the effects of combining all medical, dental and allied health schools into one super-system. That study has enormous implications for the Texas Tech Health Sciences Center and West Texas State's School of Nursing.

Studies also have been ordered on combining all four-year institutions with adjacent community colleges, an examination which would include looks at merging West Texas State with Amarillo College, Clarendon College and Frank Phillips College and Texas Tech with South Plains College.

Finally, Temple wants the committee staff to look at doing away with the Texas State Technical Institute system and combining the TSTI campuses with the nearest community college. An example would be merging TSTIAmarillo with Amarillo College.

The above-mentioned study list obviously gives us a lot of concern, as we're sure it does many others in our part of the state. But, it's important to remember that study isn't finished yet, and committee members are still weeks away from considering or acting on the study.

Everyone also should remember that the committee is only following its legislative charge. The committee's job is to formulate a plan for Texas to have the best higher education system in the nation, and studying closures and mergers is a natural part of their deliberations.

Still, it would be unfortunate if the committee got caught up in closure-and-merger fever. One does not create the strongest, most effective higher ed system merely by shutting down and combining schools.

Such a system is created by providing schools that offer a wide range of educational opportunities for every person who has the intellectual capacity to take advantage of them. These schools should be tailored, but not limited, to the needs of the economy.

Some colleges and universities undoubtedly will be fighting soon for survival, but they should be in trouble because they offer nothing unique for their students or because they fail to achieve excellence in any area. They should be in trouble because they have too few results to show for the state's investment.

What they should not be in trouble for is being in a remote part of the state or being too close to another, bigger, more politically powerful university.

If the select committee members keep these thoughts in mind, then the study on closures and mergers could be the best thing to happen to Texas higher education in years. If they don't, this study could be a disaster.

We would like to hear from you about the select committee's work or other issues. Please write us at P.O. Box 12068, Austin, Texas, 78711.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My husband and I eat at a neighborhood restaurant that serves good food at reasonable prices. It is very convenient.

Almost every time we go in there we see a young man with a paralyzed woman in a wheelchair. She cannot feed herself and has trouble swallowing.

The food runs down the sides of her mouth, and onto her chin. It is terribly unappetizing. That couple has ruined many meals for us.

We have spoken to the manager about this and he says he doesn't know how to handle the situation. Apparently he is obligated by law to serve these people. We have told him that in the future, if we see that couple when we come in we are going to leave. Apparently others have told him the same thing.

Can you give us your opinion of this situation? We feel sorry for the woman but aren't we entitled to a pleasant meal for our money?—A CHICAGO READER

DEAR CHICAGO: Your letter made me so furious I can barely see to type.

Apparently you believe that only beautiful, able-bodied people should be allowed in public and the others should be locked up, out of sight, so they don't upset anyone.

I applaud the courage of that handicapped woman who is trying to lead a normal life. And how wonderful that her husband is willing to expend the energy to take her out to dine. If you can't stand to look at her, why not just turn your head? If I were in that restaurant and knew who you were, I'd much rather look at HER than you. People like you make me sick.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: I was steamed when I read that letter from the parents of the 18-year-old boy who was in the Medical Center at Dartmouth—the result of a hazing accident.

The parents didn't know their son had been a patient until they received the bill, whereupon they telephoned to find out what had happened. They were told, "Sorry, we can't give you any information. Your son is an adult." You'll have to ask HIM what happened."

If that had been MY kid I would

Ann Landers

Turn your head

have sent the bill back to the Medical Center and told them to send it to my "adult" son and collect from him.—M.I.N., SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR M.I.N.: I received dozens of letters from all over the United States and Canada from readers who shared your sentiments and suggested the same thing. This may be another one of those times when everybody knows better than anybody.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Regarding the letter from "A Disgusted Coed": She should be glad she doesn't live in Philadelphia, where the first three questions asked of a woman are: What is your (full) name? What does your dad do for a living? Do you want to go to bed? Of course, the third question would not be asked until the man checked out the answers to the first and second questions in the Philadelphia Social Register. (Every unattached male in the Main Line has one.) Sign me — DISGUSTED WITH MEN OF THE '80s.

DEAR DISGUSTED: You're traveling in the wrong circles, honey. Maybe YOUR first question should be, "Do you own a copy of the Philadelphia Social Register?"—and go on from there.

Even if drinking is the "in" thing in your crowd, it needn't crowd you out. Learn the facts from Ann Landers' booklet, "Booze and You — For Teenagers Only." Send 50 cents and a self-addressed envelope to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Illinois 60611.

People have believed that small gems left in the ground will grow.

Tough times for public television in oil and farm states

EDITOR'S NOTE — Associated Press bureaus across the country surveyed the state of public television as a new fiscal year begins, and found some sharing the problems of the farms and the oil industry. Here is a report:

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

When the oil industry hurts, public television yells "ouch!" It's not so much the national programming that has suffered, however, but the stations in states where oil once was king.

The rapid drop in world oil prices has cut into state revenues in Alaska, Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana, and many public TV stations will be living with tighter budgets in the new fiscal year which began Tuesday. Farm problems have hurt stations in Idaho, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas.

"We're in the oil and gas business and we just didn't know it," said Terrell L. Cass, president and general manager of KEDT in Corpus Christi, Texas, where more than half the staff has been laid off since January.

Donations to KUHT in Houston fell $500,000 during the past fiscal year, or nearly 30 percent, and its budget is being cut 11 percent for the new year.

"We are reflecting what is happening in the oil industry, and it looks like it is going to be trouble," said general manager James L. Bauer.

In Dallas, however, KERA will spend $12.5 million in the new fiscal year, compared with $9.9 million last year. More than half the increase is for production of national programming, including the fall series "The West of the Imagination," and the new productions are fully underwritten by corporate and foundation grants, said Richard Meyer, the station's president.

Nationally, Mobil is continuing to support "Masterpiece Theater" and Chevron is not cutting its support for the National Geographic specials, but Exxon will phase out its support for "Great Performances."

Exxon will contribute $3.6 million for "Great Performances" again this fiscal year, but that will fall to $1.2 million in the next year and nothing the year after. However, Exxon is committed to $1.2 million per year for "Live from Lincoln Center" through the 1989-90 fiscal year, said communications manager Ken Kansas.

"In three years, we'll look at it again," Kansas said.

"From all indications, it looks as though corporate funding has remained steady," said Peggy Hubble, director of public relations for the Public Broadcasting Service. "Some of the stations are in very good shape, others are having problems."

Among the major producers, WNET in New York has cut its budget and staff for the new year, but WGBH in Boston, KERA in Dallas, WTTW in Chicago, WQED in Pittsburgh and KCET in Los Angeles will be spending more than last year.

"I don't think there is a general cutback in public broadcasting," said Henry Becton, WGBH president and general manager. Being a major producer, he said, "brings with it swings in producing activity as projects come and go, and that happens here, too. Two years ago, our budget was $62 million." This year, it will be $60.5 million; last year it was $57 million.

It's a different story in the oil belt. Alaska's public broadcasters get up to 90 percent of their funds from the state, which in turn gets 85 percent of its money from North Slope oil revenues.

Every $1 drop in the price of a barrel of crude oil deprives the state of $150 million a year. With oil prices down nearly 50 percent since December, Alaskan officials expect to cut more than $1.1 billion from operating and capital budgets by the end of fiscal 1987.

Public stations in Alaska have taken 13 percent cuts in their budgets. "In Alaska, I'd estimate about 30 jobs will be lost in public radio and TV," said Diane Kaplan, executive director of the Alaska Public Radio Network, which serves four TV stations and 15 radio stations.

Louisiana Public Broadcasting, which covers the state outside New Orleans, got a state appropriation of $3.3 million for the new year, compared with $4.2 million appropriated but never paid in full last year as the state began adjusting to falling oil revenues.

"It means that for the first time we'll do a live on-air drive in August," said LPB director Beth Courtney. "I'm going to spend a lot of time looking for corporate and private grants ... at a time when it is very difficult in Louisiana because of the economy."

The budget for the Oklahoma Educational Television Authority was cut 16.5 percent for the new fiscal year.

KOOD-TV, a 4-year-old station in Bunker Hill, Kan., is cutting $150,000 from its budget because of problems in oil and agriculture, and a recent factory closing in nearby Hays. The station will spend $660,000 this year and broadcast fewer hours, said general manager Ken Gardner.

However, KTUU in Topeka is increasing its budget by $37,640 to about $1.2 million, said general manager Dale Anderson.

The Nebraska Educational Television Network will eliminate 11 full-time positions, decrease its broadcast schedule and reduce the number of programs it buys from outside sources and programs it produces to meet a $640,000 cut in its operating budget.

In the fiscal year ending Monday, the state's revenues fell $16 million below projections and expenditures were cut 3 percent across the board.

State support for the Idaho Educational-Public Broadcasting System was cut from $750,000 to $621,000 but federal funds are expected to increase by $220,000. Still, the system's $2.5 million budget will be $50,000 smaller than last year's and it will cut back on its purchases from PBS, said general manager Jerry Garber.

The budget for KDIN in Des Moines, Iowa, was cut from $6 million to $5.7 million. "Local viewers will notice a lot of repeats," said program director Dan Miller. "But by repositioning those programs at different times, you'll hit different audiences."

In Rhode Island, WSBE faces reorganization after a cut of $500,000 in support from the state, which contributed $1.6 million of the station's $2.5 million budget last year.

Boston's WGBH has indicated it will file a proposal to take over WSBE.

Wyoming's only PBS outlet, KCWC in Riverton, has a budget of $128,000 after a $20,000 shave — its share of $63 million in budget cuts sought by Gov. Ed Herschler because of falling state revenues. General manager Greg Ray said Saturday children's programming has been axed and the broadcast day has been shortened an average of two hours.

Increased emphasis placed on repayment

COLLEGE STATION — Agricultural lenders are putting increased emphasis on the repayment ability of farmers and ranchers.

"Because collateral based lending has several major weaknesses, lenders are starting to give more consideration to the borrower's ability to repay the loan," points out Dr. Danny Klinefelter, economist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

Collateral based lending considers only the protection of the lender and does not address whether or not the loan will benefit the borrower, notes Klinefelter. This type of lending also focuses on the expected value of collateral at the due date of the note or at the date of the next scheduled payment. Therefore, there is a tendency for lenders to be more liberal and for borrowers to borrow excessively when asset values are appreciating.

1987 CRP sign-up slated

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sign-up in the Agriculture Department's 1987 Conservation Reserve Program has been set for Aug. 4-15 at county offices of the department's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng said Tuesday he was pleased with the response for the 1986 program and that "even more interest by producers" is anticipated for the 1987 sign-up.

The program is aimed at getting millions of acres of highly erodible land out of crop production for 10 years, protected by cover crops or trees. Producers are eligible for federal aid of up to 50 percent of the initial costs of protecting the land, plus annual rental payments over 10 years.

During two sign-up periods for the 1986 program, 3.8 million acres were pledged, short of the goal of 5 million acres for the first year's operations. In all, Congress designed the program to take 40 million to 45 million acres out of production under the long-term contracts.

Copper, zinc, lead or molybdenum mineral particles are separated from unwanted ore components with the help of new chemicals it has developed, according to Phillips 66. It says the products are the first major advance in many years in the efficiency of the froth flotation process, which dates back in the mining industry to 1923. It is used to recover desired minerals from a slurry of crushed ore, leaving waste or "tailings" behind.

Testing soil temperature may be a clue, but won't tell all in cotton planting. Dr. James Supak, Extension cotton agronomist, believes after the minimum soil temperature at an eight inch depth averages 60 degrees Fahrenheit or more for at least ten days before planting the time may be right to plant cotton. However, Dr. Supak warns farmers to also check long-range weather forecasts, the calendar date and typical weather trends for the area. Soil will show a higher than usual temperature if the soil is relatively dry. Conversely, irrigated fields or those which have received a lot of rain will test several degrees cooler. Dr. Supak quotes a study which conducted a series of planting over a twenty day spread. The result was there was no appreciable difference in when the plants reached the first bloom stages. It was felt the limited heat unit for the earliest planting restricted growth.

"With lending based on repayment ability, collateral is viewed in its proper role as providing insurance and control, not as the justification for borrowing or lending," Klinefelter points out.

The problem is that many lenders and farmers are only going half-way in analyzing repayment ability by only evaluating annual cash flow projections, says the economist. Cash flow analysis is an important element of repayment ability, but on an annual basis, it is a short-run concept. A firm can be going broke and still be generating a positive cash flow by reamortizing debts, selling off assets (including inventories) and not replacing capital assets on a regular basis (living off of depreciation).

"The frequently neglected half of repayment analysis is profitability," says Klinefelter. "Without sufficient inheritances, non-farm income or asset appreciation to offset losses, a business has to be profitable to survive in the long run."

Even in those cases where profitability is evaluated, it is usually on the borrower's cash-basis of tax returns. This is fine for tax management purposes, but it can significantly misrepresent business performance, Klinefelter points out. True profitability has to be analyzed on an accrual basis.

Accrual income can be estimated fairly accurately by a series of adjustments to the cash basis data to account for changes in inventories, accounts payable and accrued expenses. These adjustments are relatively simple, notes the economist, but they are critical because cash basis accounting can frequently cover up developing profitability problems for as much as two years. That can be critical to both the borrower and the lender.

"By considering both cash flow projections and profitability, repayment based lending is a step in the right direction," says Klinefelter.

Sitting on the bank at the edge of a lake, one might have seen a red streak whiz by that looks and sounds something like a motorcycle. It whizzes by again and this time one catches a glimpse of the rider. Uh-oh, the rider falls off... and now the cycle is circling around to pick him up. What in the world?

It's a jet ski! The hottest thing on the market in water sports. "Just about anything we do anymore that's water sports is jet skiing," said jet skier, Kevin Cardinal. "It's the most fun you can have with a bathing suit on."

According to Cardinal, the jet ski first came into play in 1973 and didn't start getting popular until 1978 or '79.

"It was just a little too new and nobody new that much about it," explained Cardinal.

Since then jet skiers and makers have gotten their own International and National Jet Ski Boating Association, which is in charge mostly of racing.

Where once all one saw was the barefoot skier being pulled behind a boat, now movies feature everyone meeting at an island and getting on their jet ski to ride there.

Cardinal said the water-powered ski, resembling a motorcycle with no wheels, averages in cost anywhere from just over $2,000 to the more expensive, $34,000 skis.

"As far as the coast guard is concerned, the jet ski is a boat—it's not a ski bob or an intertube, it's a boat," stressed Cardinal.

A life jacket is required at all times when riding the jet ski and when one falls off the ski will circle around until the rider gets back on.

Cardinal, being a jet ski driver, believes the jet ski to be very safe. "The jet ski is propelled with a stream of water. The motor's enclosed and the ski has no rudders or propellers sticking out in the water to cut you with," he explained.

It is strictly a one passenger water vehicle with the exception of a new two seater that has been out on the market less than a month.

"Compared to the price of a new boat, the jet ski's very economical," Cardinal said. "It runs on a gasoline mixture just like an outboard motor boat and a person could probably go for a long weekend on 10 gallons."

Cardinal mentioned another advantage, he said, "If you have a boat you need at least three people (a driver, observer, and skier) to go skiing whereas on the jet ski you hop on and ride and you're free to go anywhere you want."

Cardinal explained that the jet ski association does a lot television and movie promotions and features the jet ski in a lot of commercials, but mainly the jet ski association is busy getting racing competitions promoted. "It's a lot like motocross but only with jet skis" explained Cardinal.

At the competitions, Cardinal said they break up the racing into several different categories and events.

The three major classifications of racing are divided into closed course, slalom, and freestyle competitions.

"The closed course is more like head to head motocross motorcycle racing," described Cardinal.

"Closed course is on an established course laid out with right and left hand turns and usually they have about three or four obstacles that you jump or do a bunny hop, (which definitely hurts your body going over the top of the object)," Cardinal grinned.

He explained that the slalom competition is similar to downhill snow slalom "except you have a bunch of buoys that designate your turning points."

"In freestyle, you have a two minute time limit to do any kind of jet ski routine you want," said Cardinal. He added, "it gets pretty wild."

The routines in freestyle tricks vary from tailspins, 360's, and submarines.

"Tailspins are where you stand the jet ski up on its' end and do a pivot in one point, spinning like a top," Cardinal explained.

According to the jet skier himself, the 360's are like ballet on snow skis and similar to 360's on a skate board.

"Submarine's are where you take the jet ski and ride it under an object, whereas if you did a bunny hop you'd go over the object," said Cardinal.

During the competitions, one is scored on an Olympic type scoring system. Points are based on how successful the routine was accomplished and the amount of difficulty involved in performing the routine.

"A 360 standing on the engine hood is one of the most difficult tricks I've ever seen," commented Cardinal. He said this was most difficult because the center of gravity is so high on top of the hood.

The last jet ski competition Cardinal attended was an interval part of Aquafest held last July in August. The jet skiers competing were part of the water show.

Due to an accident on the day before the competition, Cardinal was not able to compete but another Hereford jet skier, Orlan Douglas was awarded second place in closed course competition.

Presently, competitions held throughout the states include ones in Denver, Colo.; Austin, Texas, and one has recently been established in Oklahoma City, Okla.

Cardinal, Douglas and four other jet skier locals will be competing at the first race to be held in Oklahoma on the 15th of this month.

"The jet ski market is going to do nothing but grow in the future," commented Cardinal on the product's outlook.

"There are rumors that other companies are going to start offering jet ski type equipment and products but so far, Kawasaki has the patent on it and is holding all the cards," he said.

"Jet ski's are really a lot of fun," said Cardinal. Recalling the competition he attended in Austin, Cardinal was impressed to meet Catherine Bach, a star on the television show "Dukes of Hazards," (shown posing in cardboard cutout in the photo accompanying this article.)

She was promoting one of the jet ski companies at a dealers show and Cardinal was amazed that she was so tiny in real life.

"Well, I tried to get her to come back to Hereford but she wanted to know where the heck Hereford, Texas, was," he laughed.

Ten teenagers set world volleyball marathon record

DENVER (AP) — Ten teenagers volleyed and served for 100 hours, raising blisters on their hands and feet but also money for holiday dinners for the poor.

The volleyball marathon ended Thursday night, 11 hours after the players passed the Guinness Book of World Records mark of 89 hours.

The teams took five-minute breaks on the hour, two sleeping breaks of one and two hours and 10-minute food breaks every other hour through the marathon.

"We really don't care who wins or loses," said Lisa Borey of Overland High after the 224th game. "We're all on the same team."

The marathon was held to help Denver barbecue king Daddy Bruce Randolph continue his holidayfree dinners for thousands of people.

Sam Safarian, Daddy Bruce Foundation director, said he won't know how much money is raised until next week.

In NFL and world, declares conditioning coach

Cowboys' facilities said to be best

By LORI BLOCK
Dallas Times Herald

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Ed "Too Tall" Jones talks like a man whose contract has just been extended, and Dr. Bob Ward acts like a kid with a new toy, all because of one thing: the Dallas Cowboys' new training facility at Valley Ranch.

"I just walk on Cloud Nine," said Ward, the Cowboys' conditioning coach. "There's no doubt in my mind that we'll set the pace (with this facility), not only in the country — in the NFL — but in the world."

What excites Ward is a facility that features some of the most sophisticated equipment, surrounding the area's two (soon to be three) football fields. There is a 10,000 square foot outdoor weight area housing Universal weights of all shapes and sizes designed to exercise every part of the body, plus rowing machines, exercycles, and a martial arts area.

There are machines designed to make players run faster than they would normally be capable of and machines that increase their strength.

There's a jungle gym and exercise stations, and a sand pit for running and jumping in. There's a sprint track, jogging track and an incline-decline track all made of an elastic-type material that decreases the shock on legs.

"It saves them from stress and gives them endurance," Jones said. "That's my concern at this point. I want to save my legs."

Jones said he still is trying to figure out all of the equipment and its capabilities. But he does know it's all designed to turn the Cowboys into the fittest athletes they can be.

"The facility can have us in the best shape ever, and it will increase our playing time," said Jones, who at 35 is concerned about his longevity. Highlights of the facility include:

— The Sprint Master, a towing machine based on the idea that if you can force an athlete to run faster than normally possible, his muscles will remember the action and repeat it while running unassisted. The Sprint Master forces the athlete to increase his stride length and frequency, translating into faster times.

After a few weeks of training on the Sprint Master, most athletes can reduce their 40-yard dash times as much as four-tenths of a second, one fitness authority said. In football, that is a significant improvement.

— The Diagnostic Power Trainer, which operates on the opposite principal of the Sprint Master. The athlete wears a heavy leather belt, which is connected by a line to a machine with gears, similar to those found on a bicycle. Once hooked up, the player must overcome a heavy force, and apply some force of his own, to go forward.

The machine also plots a graph that shows when the athlete is putting out any force and when he is "taking a vacation," as the machine's inventor, Larry Brown, would say.

The purpose is to reduce errors in the athlete's form and increase his muscular and cardiovascular development while working under load. The exercise is especially useful because it can be adjusted to suit the individual athlete and his needs.

Running back Tony Dorsett would work under a light load. Theoretically, when the load is removed in game situations, he should be faster.

Center Tom Rafferty would work on a heavy load to maximize the amount of force he can exert on an opposing lineman.

— The 285-yard incline-decline track, part of the half mile track circling the complex, which not only puts a little variety into the jogging workout but is another form of over-speed training. It has two hills and four changes in elevation and is the only track of its kind, Ward said.

After tackling the incline-decline track, joggers can either continue along the jogging path or challenge themselves in the 50-yard snafu pit. They can also stop off at the circuit exercise station.

— The outdoor weight area, which has more weights than the Cowboys have ever used before. Players also can row, bicycle and practice martial arts in this area.

But all this equipment and machinery isn't any good if the athletes don't use it.

"That's where your own self discipline comes in," Jones said.

"But they made it so nice, with the racquetball courts and tennis courts, that you look forward to going out there."

Quarterback Danny White added, "The big question is whether it makes us a better team. That's the bottom line. It definitely takes away any excuses ... that an athlete might have for not reaching his potential."

Jones said, "When they decided to do it, they decided to do it right. It's a first-class facility."

Girls' Minor League Champions

The Giants won both the regular-season and tournament championship in the Hereford Kids Inc. girls' minor league. The team had a 6-0 regular-season record, and then won three of three games to claim the tournament title. Team members are: front row from left, Brandie Webb, Michelle Liscano, Vanessa Gon-

Determined by a state attorney

Hulk Hogan is officially a wrestler

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — Hulk Hogan may be relieved to know he's officially a wrestler, at least in North Dakota, where the attorney general grappled for a week over whether "Wrestlemania" is sport or entertainment.

"The question was a burning issue for the State Fair, which needed to know so it could determine whether it needed a sporting event license.

"As a politician, and thus a skilled mugwump, I have decided to give Hulk the benefit of the doubt and to declare him both a wrestler and an entertainer," Attorney General

Nicholas Spaeth wrote. That means Hogan would be subject to state regulation as a professional wrestler, but the State Fair is a charitable organization so it does not need to get a license for the event, Spaeth wrote Thursday.

"Anyone who has observed Hulk Hogan on television, either on All-Star Wrestling or his Saturday morning cartoon show, can appreciate why this question has taken me to the mat," he wrote.

Spaeth said he consulted two experts on the question — his 10-year-old son Kevin, a Hogan fan, and Bismarck Junior College wrestling coach Ed Kringstad.

The "Wrestlemania" exhibition is set for July 22.

Pro Football Hall of Famer Art Donovan of the Baltimore Colts was the son of a famous boxing referee and the grandson of a top fighter.

Casey Stengel listed among his many baseball accomplishments the fact that he managed the New York Yankees and Mets and played for the New York Giants.

POLLY'S POINTERS

When you water, do it thoroughly

By Polly Fisher

DEAR POLLY — I planted my first vegetable garden this year and I'm confused about watering. I've been watering whenever the soil surface is dry (two to three times a week), but my neighbor says I shouldn't need to water that frequently. How do you know when the garden needs to be watered? — A.L.

DEAR A.L. — A vegetable garden needs to receive about one inch of water a week. If you don't get this much rain in a week, you'll probably need to water. It's best to water only once a week, soaking the ground thoroughly. This way, the water penetrates deep into the soil, encouraging the plants' roots to grow down. If the garden is watered shallowly several times a week, the plants' roots will stay in the shallow moist area near the surface. Deep, thorough watering is much more efficient than shallow, frequent watering.

Many plants, such as tomatoes, wilt slightly in the hot midday sun, then revive in the cooler night air, so a little wilting does not necessarily indicate a need for water in the garden.

Mulching will do much to preserve moisture in the soil. Lay down a thick layer of straw, dried grass clippings, leaves, shredded newspapers or sheets of black plastic sheet mulch (available from garden supply centers) to conserve moisture and keep weeds down.

I'm sending you a copy of my newsletter "Vegetable Garden Pointers," which has more information on planting, maintaining and harvesting your garden, including how to make compost, how to grow your own seedlings, insect control measures and ways to get the most out of your harvest. Others who would like this issue should send $1.00 for each copy to POLLY'S POINTERS, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1216, Cincinnati, OH 45201. Be sure to include the title. — POLLY

Mysteries are featured this week at the Deaf Smith County Library!!! "The Eighth Commandment" by Lawrence Sanders and "Another Part Of The City," by Ed McBain will be available this week for check-out.

"The Eighth Commandment" is a tale of murder and venality among the New York rich. If happy families are all alike, the Havistock clan is a rare specimen. As is the Demareton: an ancient Greek coin that is the priceless star of Archibald Havistock's legendary collection.

When the affluent patriarch decides to sell his treasures to the highest bidder, it is six-foot-two appraiser Mary Lou Bateson who supervises the transfer of the coins from the Havistock apartment to the auction house where she works. When the Demareton mysteriously disappears en route, Dunk comes under suspicion for the theft. She will go to any length to clear her name.

Aided by two tall fellow investigators who happen to be rivals for her heart, Dunk hires on with the Havistocks to get to the bottom of things. "The Eighth Commandment" is Lawrence

Sanders at his unguessable, unput-downable best. He is also the author of "The Tomorrow File" and "The Fourth Deadly Sin."

"Another Part Of The City" is a brilliant hard-hitting foray into Manhattan's tangled web of twisting downtown streets and crooked uptown lives. When the affable owner of a checkered-tablecloth restaurant in Little Italy is cut down by the bullets of a pair of ski-masked thugs, Fifth Precinct Police Detective Reardon has his hands too full to care what's going on uptown. Almost too late, Reardon sees the connection between the deaths of a multi-millionaire and small-time restaurateur, and the fluctuations in the international markets for crude oil, fine art, and precious metals. ED MCBAIN is a well-known mystery writer.

"CELEBRATE TEXAS" highlights:
July 8 at 10 a.m. - Summer Reading Club participants will be meeting at the library parking lot to

—It takes a long swim to instruct—

By CINDY SMITH
Staff Writer

Debbie Black is literally a "fish out of water."

Starting at the age of six, she kicked, floated, and learned her beginner's stroke progressing her way to become a water safety instructor trainer.

"In Beginners I, you learn all that and breathing techniques and then you go on to advanced beginners," she said.

The swimming lesson courses she is referring to are offered by the local Red Cross every summer. Writing from experience, after completing the courses one will never be afraid of the water again.

The classes seem to specialize in focusing on having control in and out of the water, what to do when someone is choking and how to rescue someone from the shore with whatever is handy.

"In advanced beginners you coordinate you crawl stroke and your elementary back stroke," explained Black.

The Red Cross swimming courses start out with the basics and dispel any fears one may have of going under when floating on their back. They teach easy breathing methods of when to blow and when to hold one's breath and develop the skills to be accompanied with different strokes later on.

Then Black completed the intermediate course in which she learned the breast stroke, side stroke, and said, "you do more perfecting on your crawl stroke in this course and you learn diving entries into the water."

In intermediate, the swimmers also learn water safety techniques including self-safety which focuses on from-the-shore rescue. "That's where you learn how to properly throw a towel, use a pole, or even an extension of your body to rescue someone from the water without being pulled in," explained Black.

Swimmers is the next course on the ladder and this the highest course to complete before entering the junior lifesaving class.

"Swimmers is perfecting and strengthening all the strokes you learned and is designed to develop stamina in the water," Black said.

"Then you have your basic rescue class to complete which is learning all safety and rescue techniques except for the swimming or physical type contact rescues," explained Black. She mentioned that in this class one learns to use the ring bouy and rescue tube in basic rescue.

After completing this class one can swim on to the advanced lifesaving class where one learns all techniques of rescue, safety, and first aid.

"This class is necessary before you ever become a lifeguard or proceed further in instructing," Black commented.

At age 14, Black had floated through all courses required with hard work and discipline, except for the advanced lifesaving course which she completed at 16.

Black then attended an aquatics school in Branson, Mo., where she received an instructor's license in canoeing and first aid.

She then started working on her handicap instruction and received her water safety instructors license.

Utilizing her water skills, Black began teaching classes here at the city pool at age 18 and has helped students learn swimming skills since.

Teaching for 13 years, Black began getting her trainer's license at 22. "You had to teach two classes of each course—beginners, advanced beginners, intermediate, swimmers, basic rescue water safety, junior lifesaving, and advanced lifesaving—before you could be an instructor trainer," she explained.

Black noted that she was under a probation period while attending the national Red Cross classes at Texas Tech. "This is where the instructors observe you while you're teaching," she said.

"Then I had to teach two water safety instructor classes and then I was certified," she smiled.

At age 24, Black received her handicap instructors license and worked with the handicap at the Texas Lions Crippled Childrens Camp in Kerrville for two years, "which I really enjoyed," added Black.

Where does all the training put to use? When someone leg's and arm's are flailing in the air and they're gasping for breath and kicking, all that training may save someone's life.

"I've rescued some handicapped children at the camp," said Black, "pulled some small children out and I've used first aid in other areas."

Recently, Black, when coming upon a fatal car accident, was able to use pressure points and elevation techniques, and kept the victim warm so he wouldn't go into shock, all skills she learned in the Red Cross classes.

One never knows when they'll be of help in an emergency regardless of whether's it water, land, or accident related.

BACTERIA BUSTING BEGINS AT HOME

WATERLOO, Ontario (AP) — The failure of some homemakers to meet public health standards when cleaning dishes, cookware and utensils in the home may contribute to the spread of bacteria and viruses, says the Canadian Water Quality Association.

"Under public health laws, restaurants are required to carefully disinfect cooking pots, serving dishes and utensils," says Lou J. Smith of the association. "Homemakers do not always meet the same standards."

Smith says very hot, softened water and low sudsing detergents help insure against the spread of disease at home.

Store winter bedding in the large plastic or paper bags from the dry cleaner.

Pretty But Quick

Debbie Black, water safety instructor trainer, is pretty but quick when it comes to an emergency. Utilizing skills she learned in Red Cross swimming classes, Black is able to help others learn about water safety as well. She has been an instructor for 13 years at the Hereford City Pool.

Couple to be wed

Wedding vows will be exchanged July 26 at San Jose Catholic Church by Rachel Flores and Tony Valle, both of Hereford.

The bride-elect's parents are Juan and Oralia Flores of 107 W. 9th St. and the prospective bridegroom's parents are Antonio and Emilia Valle of Hereford.

Miss Flores is a 1986 graduate of Hereford High School. Her fiance graduated from HHS in 1984 and is presently employed by Griffin and Brand. He is a member of San Jose Catholic Church.

Hospitals

According to the World Almanac Book of Inventions, the first hospitals were Roman sanitary stations built behind the fortified zone that protected the Roman Empire from invasion. The first public hospital was built in 372 by St. Basile in Caesarea in Cappadocia. A second hospital was built a few years later by St. Fabiola in Rome, and thereafter hospitals proliferated.

No incest there

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Six months ago my mother remarried. We moved into her new husband's home. He has custody of his three sons, ages 10, 12 and 15.

Jeff is the 15-year-old and I think he is smart and awfully nice. I am 15 too and we have become attracted to each other. He kissed me last night for the first time and I know it won't be the last. But I feel guilty because he is my step-brother. If we should get married when we are older would it be incest? No name. Just—LOOKING AHEAD IN NC.

girl next door. There are no stereotypical victims either. Anyone can become the victim of a violent crime.

It is wonderful to be a good samaritan, but it's common sense to protect yourself in the process.

Here's a suggestion: Ask the stranger who wants to use your phone to give you the number and make the call for him or her. This way a person can be helpful without being vulnerable. Anyone who is on the level will be grateful. — P.O. OREGON

DEAR LOOKING: No incest there. You are not blood relatives, but I strongly advise to cool it. The set-up is awfully convenient but you are both too young for a serious involvement. If you became pregnant or the relationship turned sour it would be awfully hard on the family.

DEAR OREGON: You will be pleased to know that the mail ran 10 to 1 against letting strangers in for any reason whatever. Many who wrote recounted some hair-raising experiences. Thanks for an informed point of view.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Regarding your "Stranger in the House" debate, you are 100 percent correct to advise people not to allow strangers to enter their homes. I would like to mention a couple of points that might help your readers get over feeling guilty because they refused a person who wanted to use the phone or the bathroom.

I am a parole and probation officer. After 10 years of working with criminals who have been convicted of everything from shoplifting to murder, I would never let a stranger into my house.

You focused on "Junkies" but I can assure you that the most dangerous people do not look like derelicts. They look like the boy or

WORKS ON PAPER

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — "New Acquisitions: Works on Paper," an exhibition of graphic work that has recently entered the Walker Art Center's permanent collection, is on view through Aug. 31.

The exhibition features work by many major contemporary artists here and abroad and a number of artists whose work is just becoming known.

Among the established artist-printmakers whose work is included in the show are Sol LeWitt, Robert Motherwell and Jim Dine. Benchmark prints from the 1960s and early 1970s by Jasper Johns, Robert Rauschenberg and Frank Stella also are on display.

Mankind was matchless until the friction match was invented in 1834.

DEAR MRS. L.S.: You'd be surprised at the number of letters I received from animal lovers who said I had no right to encourage people to put their old ailing pets to sleep. "Next, it'll be humans!" they wrote. I appreciate your support.

What's prudish? What's O.K.? If you aren't sure, you need some help. It's available in the booklet: "Necking and Petting—What Are the Limits?" Mail your request to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Ill. 60611, enclosing 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

DR. GOTT Skull fracture and ear problem

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — My daughter has lost part of her hearing and is dizzy all the time. She was in a car accident 27 years ago and had a serious head fracture, but it healed. What can we do now?

DEAR READER — I'm afraid that if your daughter's deafness and inner-ear disturbance are due to the skull fracture, very little can be done to correct the condition. However, she may be helped by using a hearing aid and medicine to control dizziness. An otolaryngologist can advise you.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I'm getting white spots all over my body, and they're getting bigger all the time. It's almost as if my skin were being bleached out. What causes this?

DEAR READER — You may be developing vitiligo, a blotchy depigmentation of skin. No one knows what causes these patches to appear. Check with a dermatologist for confirmation and suggestions about how to treat this.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Can cancer, hypertension, arthritis and cataracts result from the stress of chronic, unrelieved sexual frustration suffered for many years? I'm convinced that there is a connection, yet doctors never seem to mention it.

DEAR READER — I think not. I'm not aware of any studies that suggest a relation between sexual frustration and the diseases you mention. Now that you bring it up, however, I might add that many forms of sexual frustration may be self-induced. Sexual expression does not necessarily require another person. Modern experts recognize that no physical or emotional harm will befall a patient who chooses sexual self-gratification. Masturbation is an acceptable way to relieve sexual tension and, as the writer Philip Roth pointed out, its advantage is that you don't have to look your very best!

DEAR DR. GOTT — I have been on birth-control pills for three years and am now considering having children. How soon before conception should I stop the Pill?

DEAR READER — Stop the Pill at the conclusion of your next cycle — that is, when that month's supply runs out. You probably will be able to conceive within three months thereafter.

DEAR DR. GOTT — I have a terrible problem of ballooning up the minute I drink any liquid. My waistline increases by two inches after one glass of water. Is this serious?

DEAR READER — I don't know, but it certainly is unusual. Did you actually measure your waistline before and after? If you really documented such a pronounced change, stop by your doctor's office for an examination.

'22-CENT STOMP' GREET'S NEW STAMP
NEW YORK (AP) — The day the Duke Ellington 22-cent stamp was issued by the Postal Service, the Ellington Band, conducted by Mercer Ellington, played "The 22-cent Stomp." Ellington, who died in 1974, composed "The 3-Cent Stomp" in 1943. In introducing his father's retitled tune, Mercer Ellington said, "Of course, the rates have gone up. And so did the tempo."

A Flair for Design

Many people are uncomfortable about selecting and placing art in their homes or offices, so the month of July will be devoted to art: its care, protection, and display. Paintings in different mediums require different types of framing. For example, an oil or acrylic on a stretched canvas is never placed behind glass since the surface needs to "breathe". The back, as well, needs air circulation to prevent a moisture build up and this is done by the framer, usually in the form of a small hole cut in the protective paper on the back. If you have a canvas that is sealed on the back, simply take a razor blade and carefully cut a hole about one inch square in the paper. This will help prevent possible mildew. FINISHING TOUCHES at 501 E. Park can assist you with all your art and framing needs. Phone 364-8870.

by Carmen Flood

"Oh Granny, Uncle Tray just won $25 in sumptin' called a rodeo. He must be the best cowboy in the whole, wide world."

It was the 4th of July, 1883. And something mighty unusual was taking place next to the Pecos, Texas, courthouse. Right there on the lawn, stock from ranches like the Lazy Y, W, and Hashknife milled around nervously. Reckless riders dodged loco broncs, and wild-eyed steers were turned loose down Main Street. There were no chutes at the world's first genuine rodeo.

A thousand folks crowded into town to see Tray Windham win the top prize, by tying his steer in the middle of Oak Street in 22 seconds flat. The indestructible spirit of The Cowboy had launched an athletic contest that thrives in today's world championship circuits.

At Southwestern Bell Telephone, we're well acquainted with what the human spirit can accomplish in Texas. That same spirit has launched a few circuits of our own. Take Daniel Clower's great drive of 1881. Leaving Dallas with a crew of men and wagon teams, Clower rounded up 400 poles from the cedar brakes at Five Mile Creek, then drove them back to build the first telephone exchange in North Texas.

The story of our growth in Texas will always be a story of people with the pride and zeal to get the job done right. Whether it's an all-out effort dealing with a disaster, or the daily challenge of providing quality telecommunications to our 4.8 million customers, the spirit of Southwestern Bell Telephone will always be on call.

INSIGHTS INTO ILLNESS

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Drawing, painting and sketching can help cancer patients and their families communicate their stress, fears and uncertainty about the disease.

Cathy Ann Berendts, a nurse at the University of Rochester Cancer Center, says the patients and family members can use art to communicate their understanding of cancer and how it has affected the family as a unit.

"Art activities show how family members perceive each other's personalities and how they relate to one another," Berendts says. "Learning how to express feelings through art helps families to resolve problems and promotes family discussions about the disease and how to deal with it."

Silver bowls made to hold fruit or flowers need careful tending. Acid from decaying flowers or fruit can etch ugly little pit marks into silver that will be there forever.

Native Texans think state Sesquicentennial important

AUSTIN (AP) — Among native Texans, 50.9 percent think this year's celebration of the state's 150th anniversary of independence from Mexico is more important than the 100th birthday of the Statue of Liberty, according to a recent poll.

Among those who have lived in the state for less than three years, however, only 16.7 percent consider the Texas Sesquicentennial more important.

When responses were tabulated from all 606 persons people, including those living in Texas for varying periods of time, the Sesquicentennial trailed the Statue of Liberty celebration in importance 46.4 percent to 42.2 percent.

Of those polled, 11.4 percent did not know which was most important or refused to answer.

The poll was conducted for the Foundation for Education on Free Enterprise, Inc., a recently established tax-exempt organization that says its activities will include research and publication of information on how the free enterprise system relates to Texas.

Foundation spokesman Joe Wyatt, a former Texas congressman, said the poll was done by Arthur J. Finkelstein & Associates, an Irvington, N.Y., firm that interviewed 606 Texas registered voters June 14-19.

Asked "What single person from the state of Texas, living or deceased, do you most admire?" 17.3 percent named the late President Lyndon B. Johnson and 12.2 percent said Sam Houston, former Texas revolutionary war hero and later president of the Republic of Texas and governor and U.S. senator of the state of Texas.

Third on the list of most admired Texans were "my parents," 7.6 percent. Former congresswoman Barbara Jordan was fourth, 5.7 percent, and Gov. Mark White was fifth, 5.4 percent.

"Interestingly enough," Wyatt said, "when we asked people what they liked the most about living in Texas and what they liked the least about the Lone Star State, the answer was the same — the weather."

The poll showed 25.2 percent mentioned "weather-environment" when asked what they liked most about Texas, and 28.6 percent said "heat-humidity" when asked what they liked least, with 18.8 percent mentioning "weather-environment."

The economy was rated the "most important issue" facing the state — 21.8 percent, followed by the oil industry, 17.0; education, 10.7; and unemployment, 10.1 percent.

Disregard of safe sex habits blamed for rise in disease

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — City public health officials blame a disregard of safe sex practices largely among heterosexuals for an alarming increase in sexually transmitted diseases.

They note a 33 percent increase in gonorrhea and a projected 10 percent increase in hepatitis B for the first half of the year, compared to the same period in 1985.

Another portion of the rise was also attributed to the addition of another physician in the sexually transmitted disease clinic that allowed more people to be tested and treated.

New cases of gonorrhea jumped to 1,972 cases for the first six months of this year compared to 1,572 cases for the first half of 1985, figures from the Metropolitan Health District reveal.

The increase in new cases apparently has occurred through heterosexual relations because homosexual cases have remained at about the same level as last year, according to Gerry Dabbs, trained by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control as an advisor to the health district.

"A lot of people who are heterosexual don't think the AIDS situation will affect them so they're not paying attention to safe sex practices," said Dr. Diane Simpson, health district coordinator for communicable diseases.

However, the startling increase in the reporting of new cases of the deadly disease AIDS earlier this year has slowed.

Current figures indicate new AIDS cases are developing at about the same rate as last year. There have been 13 new cases of AIDS in civilian Bexar County residents during the first six months of 1986, the same number as reported in the first half of 1985.

But 19 AIDS deaths have occurred already this year whereas 22 deaths were reported during all of 1985. And there are at least seven women among 210 people in the county who have developed AIDS or a preliminary form of the disease since 1983.

Nearly one-third of the people who died this year from AIDS, accounting for seven deaths, cited homosexual relations as the only way they could have contracted the virus.

Eighty-seven cases of hepatitis B were reported in all of 1985, but the projected figure for this year indicates there will be 96 cases in 1986. Hepatitis B, which affects the liver, also is spread primarily through intravenous drug abuse and sexual contact.
