Economic index rose in July, June revised

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main gauge of future economic activity rose a strong 1.1 percent last month, the government reported today.

The July increase in the Commerce Department's Index of Leading Indicators, the sharpest since April, was better than most private economists had expected.

Today's report, however, revised the June figure sharply downward — from a 0.3 percent increase to a 0.4 percent decline — softening the good news the July gain might otherwise have suggested.

Coupled with the June decline and a 0.1 percent decrease in May, the new report was hardly encouraging for a national economy that has been very sluggish in recent months.

The index, a compilation of 11 forward-pointing economic indicators, was given its biggest push upward in July by substantial increases in the money supply and in the rate of new business formation.

Other positive indicators included slower business deliveries and higher raw materials prices — both indicative of a business pickup — an increase in contracts and orders for new plant and equipment, a rise in outstanding credit and a decline in initial unemployment claims.

Negative indicators, which kept the overall index from rising higher, included declines in stock prices, building permits and new orders or consumer goods and materials.

There was no change in the average workweek.

The biggest reason for the June revision was a big drop in business inventories on hand and on order, a figure that had been unavailable when the June report was compiled.

The overall July gain of 1.1 percent was widely rumored on Wall Street on Wednesday, raising the possibility there had been a leak of the closely held information before today's official release, especially in light of the fact that most economists had been predicting a gain of no more than 0.6 percent.

Commerce officials, who have been plagued by occasional leaks of other sensitive reports, had no immediate comment.

The July gain put the overall index at 179.4 compared with the 1967 base level of 100.

For the balance of 1986, Data

Resources Inc., the Lexington, Mass., forecasting company, said it expects economic growth at a slightly improved 2.5 percent rate in the second half of the year.

Michael Evans, president of Evans Economics in Washington, also sees growth at a rate of 2.5 percent to 3 percent during the current July-September quarter.

In his latest analysis, Evans described such a gain as "not ordinarily considered a spectacular increase but quite at odds with all those recession forecasts that have suddenly mushroomed on Wall Street."

Taking on the more optimistic

Reagan administration as well as pessimists fearing a new recession, economists Roger Brinner and David Wyss said in the Data Resources analysis, "There seems only a slight risk of a mini-recession ... and even less risk of the return to 4 percent-plus growth forecast by the administration."

Negotiations continue on spending cuts

AUSTIN (AP) — Senate and House negotiators went back to work today to erase the $322 million difference between their chambers' proposals for cutting 1987 state spending.

If no compromise is reached before this special session ends Sept. 4, Gov. Mark White has indicated he may call a second session.

At the first meeting of the conferees Wednesday, the 10 people spent about three hours of discussion but made few tough decisions.

Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, House Appropriations Committee chairman, said the committee would meet again today and Friday, probably take the weekend off and then meet Monday, on Labor Day.

"The instructions are to go in there and work hard and do the best they can," Speaker Gib Lewis said about the five House conferees. "Sure, there's always room for compromise."

Lewis said he had breakfast Wednesday with White but there was no talk of taxes, which Lewis opposes. White has proposed a temporary increase in the state sales tax of 1½ cents.

During the first meeting of the conference meeting Wednesday several hundred sign-carrying demonstrators gathered on the front steps of the Capitol to protest budget cuts proposed in both the Senate and House bills for health and human services.

White and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby spoke briefly to the crowd assuring them their views were being considered by lawmakers.

Jim Oliver, executive director of the Legislative Budget Board, pointed out to the conference committee the major differences between the House bill, which made $740 million in 1987 budget cuts, and the Senate bill's $418 million in cuts.

Oliver said the House made about $30 million more than the Senate in cutting executive agency budgets, $44 million more in health and human services agencies, and $200 million more for state colleges and universities. The Senate made about $75 million more in spending for state courts.

The conferees began negotiations with the health and human services agencies.

Decisions made included: — Adopting a House provision that any reductions made in the Department of Health would affect current funding for needy mothers and infants.

— Adopted the House bill provision that was $4 million less than the Senate in providing more money for nursing homes that take care of patients with state money.

House approves banking bill

AUSTIN (AP) — The House has sent back to the Senate a slightly altered version of the interstate banking bill that had been approved by senators.

House sponsor Bruce Gibson, D-Cleburne, predicted senators would approve the minor changes and send the measure to Gov. Mark White.

Final House approval of the bill came in a voice vote Wednesday. It had won preliminary approval Tuesday in a 116-24 vote.

In another Wednesday voice vote, the House sent to White a bill that would allow Texas savings and loans to do business outside the state.

Also gaining final approval was a Senate-approved branch-banking bill that would go into effect if a constitutional amendment allowing branch banking is approved by voters in November.

That bill returns to the Senate with an amendment that would make Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday a bank holiday. Gibson said senators have indicated no objection to the amendment.

Gibson pushed the interstate banking bill as a way to give Texas banks a needed boost. Opponents claimed the change was being pushed too quickly through the current special session.

White put the topics on the agenda for the special session. Gibson said the governor indicated he would sign the measures if approved by lawmakers.

"He expressed no reservations to me about any of the stuff we've adopted," Gibson said.

The Cleburne lawmaker also predicted Texans would see high-profile campaigns to push for voter approval of the branch-banking amendment.

Plays down war of words

Speakes renews warnings of plots

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes, while denying the United States is waging a war of nerves against Libya's Moammar Gadhafi, also is playing down the war of words among administration officials over evidence of a Libyan terrorist threat.

Speakes on Wednesday renewed his warnings of plots by the Libyan leader and pointed anew to U.S. resolve to deal firmly with such activity.

But the spokesman repeatedly refused to cite any specific evidence for the administration's fear of new Libyan attacks, citing an unwillingness to discuss information acquired through intelligence sources.

That discussion was left to unnamed administration officials, who engaged in a transcontinental spat over the type of evidence gleaned about the Libyan leader's terrorist activities.

Speakes said Libya still has "the capability to commit terrorist acts, and we want them to be fully aware that our policy is unchanged."

"We will do what we can to prevent them (terrorist attacks) and be prepared to take the necessary steps, either before or after these are committed, in order to ensure that they don't happen again," Speakes added.

Speakes rejected suggestions that the United States is attempting to prod Gadhafi into irrational acts.

"Our goal is to prevent Gadhafi from doing things, not to provoke him into doing things," the spokesman said.

Meanwhile, a senior administration official in California with the vacationing President Reagan contended "there is hard evidence that the Libyan government has been planning and seeking to execute terrorist acts ... since the U.S. bombing" of Libya on April 15.

The administration said the U.S. attack was partially in response to a terrorist bombing at a West Berlin discotheque that killed two American servicemen.

"We do have intelligence reports that Gadhafi has not been deterred in his efforts to commit terrorist activity," the official said. Even though the official would not cite specifics, he said, "It is clearly not disinformation. ... It's fact."

But other officials at the White House and State Department, who also spoke only when granted anonymity, insisted there was no such compelling evidence.

Veteran teacher reflects on TECAT, curriculum

By CINDY SMITH
Staff Writer

Carolyn Waters, teacher at Stanton Junior High School, said the Texas Examination of Current Administrators and Teachers was not fair.

The veteran teacher who starts her 23rd year of teaching when school starts next week says the TECAT was not a true evaluation of a teacher.

"There was no way it could say who was a competent teacher and who was incompetent. That really is what upset everybody — it was supposed to be a competency test," said Waters.

"The TECAT evaluation doesn't test the compassion that a good teacher should have and it couldn't measure the extra overtime hours we spend beyond our regular job description," Waters said.

She added that it never was answered what the school districts and the state would do about the incompetent teachers who passed the test.

"They told us what they would do with the ones who didn't pass. You don't pass, you take it again at the state's expense and maybe you take it another time but, at your own expense," Waters said.

"That's really why it was such a joke because it cost taxpayers an estimated $14 million and what did it prove?" she asked. "I'm not the only one who's made this statement but I believe whole heartedly that there are many teachers who could pass any test that still don't need to be in the classroom."

Giving an example, Waters said there are some teachers that are insensitive to students needs, some don't care about the student. "But I don't know why anyone would teach for the money," she half-joked.

Waters realizes how important the leader of the group can be. "I always felt like a coach," she said. "In many ways the coach has more of an opportunity to be a leader than the classroom teacher to affect a child for a lifetime."

"And if they handle that opportunity

The 'Animal' gets life term

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Stealing two cans of beer from a Tyler couple at gunpoint has netted a life sentence for Jerry "Animal" McFadden, who still awaits trial on a capital murder charge.

A state district court jury deliberated about three hours before returning the sentence Wednesday, and at least two jurors cried as the foreman read the verdict.

Dorothy McFadden, the defendant's mother, burst into tears when the sentence was announced, rushing from the courtroom with her arm around her son's 16-year-old daughter, Ronda McFadden.

Both had asked jurors for leniency during punishment testimony earlier in the week.

McFadden, 38, who calls himself "Animal," showed no emotion.

He is also accused of slaying an 18-year-old Hawkins woman, and made national headlines when he escaped from Upshur County Jail in July, taking a jailer hostage and leading more than 200 lawmen on an East Texas manhunt.

The hostage escaped unharmed, and McFadden was later arrested without incident.

McFadden had previously pleaded guilty to two rapes and one aggravated sexual assault, allowing him to be sentenced as a habitual criminal and upping the possible sentence to life in prison.

Medical examiners facing probe

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas medical profession should take some blame for the State Board of Medical Examiners' poor policing of doctors, lawmakers have been told.

William Whitehurst, an Austin lawyer and president of the Texas State Bar, told the Senate Health and Human Resources Committee Wednesday that the board was doing "a great disservice" to both the public and medical community by not getting rid of bad doctors.

"But I don't believe the medical examiners can do it alone," Whitehurst said, adding that he was speaking for himself and not the State Bar. "It must be a joint effort with the medical profession."

Whitehurst and others testified in the second phase of legislative examination of the alleged failure of the board to discipline incompetent physicians.

Board officials have said they lack a proper staff and financing by the Legislature. Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, health committee chairman, said his panel would make recommendations to the 1987 Legislature.

Whitehurst, an attorney specializing in medical cases, told of a recent federal court suit involving a Killeen physician and military doctors in the death of Shiella Wheat of Pine Bluff, Ark.

Whitehurst said records in the trial showed Ms. Wheat consulted the doctor in 1979 after going to military doctors at Darnell Army Hospital. When the physician performed a hysterectomy, he learned she had cancer of the cervix.

Shuttle search and recovery ends

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The largest search and recovery effort ever conducted — for the remains of Challenger and its crew — is ending today after seven months and the retrieval of 45 percent of the space shuttle.

The three ships still participating, down from a high of 31, will call it quits after they return to port tonight, seven months to the day after the Jan. 28 destruction of Challenger and deaths of its crew of seven, officials said.

"It was the biggest search and recovery effort ever in the world and had the most emotional impact on the people involved," said Air Force Col. Edward O'Connor, who directed the overall effort.

The project involved 6,000 people, 52 aircraft, 31 ships, a seven-person nuclear-powered submarine, two four-man submarines, five unmanned subsmersibles and 115 divers. It cost more than $100 million.

About 93,000 square miles of the Atlantic Ocean surface and 429 square miles of ocean bottom were scoured.

Oil producers allowed to increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is planning to give the hard-hit U.S. oil industry a chance to sell domestic crude to the nation's strategic petroleum reserve.

The Energy Department said Wednesday it has begun a process that could lead within a month to calling for bids from domestic producers to supply as much as 35,000 barrels a day to the emergency stockpile.

The purchase of 35,000 barrels for the reserve — which has gotten most of its crude from Mexico — would represent just a minuscule portion of the nation's daily production of about 8.6 million barrels.

But the buy-American policy shift could be a boon for small producers in places such as Texas and Oklahoma, where low-output wells have been rendered uneconomical by the worldwide drop in oil prices.

"Today's decision ... underscores this administration's concern for our national energy security and the need for a healthy U.S. petroleum industry," Energy Secretary John Herrington said in a prepared statement.

The move was called "a step in the right direction" by Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., chairman of the House Government Operations energy subcommittee.

David Devane, an Energy Department spokesman, said the exact amount of domestic oil that could be purchased for the stockpile will depend on the prices U.S. producers offer to the government.

Mexico says agent 'out of bounds'

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government said American narcotics agent Victor Cortez Jr. had gone beyond the "strictly limited" bounds for drug agents here when he was detained by state police in the western city of Guadalajara this month.

Responding to a U.S. protest, the Foreign Ministry said in a diplomatic note Wednesday that police were justified in detaining Cortez Aug. 13 "to establish his identity and clarify his conduct."

Mexico's response came a day after the Attorney General's office charged 11 Jalisco policemen with abusing their authority and injuring Cortez, 34. The Attorney General's office asked a criminal court judge in Guadalajara to order their arrest.

The United States protested Aug. 18 that the Drug Enforcement Administration agent "was illegally detained, interrogated and tortured by Jalisco state police officers." Cortez said he was subjected to electric shocks.

Mexico's response mentioned the charges filed against the policemen and a medical report that said Cortez had contusions on the stomach and right shoulder that would take about two weeks to heal, but focused on its complaints about his conduct and limitations on DEA activity.

In Mexico City trial

Former chief faces accuser

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Former capital Police Chief Arturo Durazo, once among Mexico's most powerful men, listened from behind an iron grille Wednesday as a former bodyguard testified about the delivery of extortion money paid by policemen to keep their jobs.

Jose Gonzalez, who has described himself as a professional assassin, testified that he stood by the accusations he made in his best-selling book, "The Dark Deeds of the Evil Durazo."

Gonzalez' testimony came in Durazo's federal trial on extortion charges. Durazo, 68, is also being tried before a separate judge on charges of illegal weapons possession.

Gonzalez, 57, was security chief during Durazo's tenure as police chief, from 1976 through 1982. The two worked closely together.

Under questioning by Judge Maria de Jesus Medel, Gonzalez expanded on a chapter of his book and offered names and other details of how "large quantities of money" were delivered to Durazo every two weeks. For Christmas and the chief's birthday, the money was paid in gold commemorative coins, Gonzalez said.

The money was extorted from patrolmen, auxiliary officers and traffic police, Gonzalez said.

Durazo, wearing prison clothing and looking physically fit, sat silently through most of Gonzalez' testimony. Occasionally he turned to whisper to his attorney, Juan Velazquez.

During a break in questioning Velazquez told reporters that the charges were false and said he would prove that Gonzalez lied in the book, which the lawyer called a product of "mercantile urges."

The session took place in the courtroom of the city's Eastern Penitentiary, where Durazo has been held since he was brought here from Los Angeles last April 1 following long extradition proceedings.

Durazo was a childhood friend of former President Jose Lopez Portillo. On taking office in 1976, Lopez Portillo elevated him from a department chief in the customs agency to chief of the capital police.

As chief, Durazo amassed possessions that included two palatial homes, one with a race track; a collection of more than 50 vintage automobiles; and a full-size reproduction of the New York City discotheque Studio 54.

Durazo went abroad when Lopez Portillo's term expired in 1982. He was arrested in Puerto Rico in July 1984 and held in a Los Angeles jail until being returned to Mexico this year.

The government has confiscated much of his property. One of the mansions, on a highway from Mexico City to Cuernavaca, has been turned into a "museum of corruption." At the other, a Parthenon-like structure on a hill above the Pacific resort of Zihuatanejo, grass has grown over a long, winding driveway and a single guard has replaced soldiers on guard duty.

Authorities pledged early in the administration of President Miguel de la Madrid to prosecute Durazo. But it was not until September 1984, with the publication of Gonzalez' book, that the case became a public scandal.

In the book, which has since been made into a movie, Gonzalez accuses Durazo of activities ranging from "terror to narcotics trafficking, protecting prostitution, fraud, extortion, robbery, torture and murder." He claims to have witnessed Durazo involved in such activities.

Gonzalez said in his book he had spent 27 years as a hitman in the service of politicians and bureaucrats, and said he personally knew of 50 individuals "dispatched to the other world."

However, Gonzalez has never been charged in court. In an interview with The Associated Press shortly after his book was published, he said he "never killed anybody who wasn't a thug and I always did it under superiors' orders. Thanks to the bureaucrats I worked for there are no charges."

TEACHER

ty correctly, that's great—but if they don't, they could do more damage than good," said Waters. She also said that boys especially look up to their coach.

Waters is pro-athletics and said she is definitely against the length of punishment for the no-pass no-play rule.

"I have known numerous students through the years that extra-curricular activities (including athletics, band, ag class, etc.) that had they not been involved in those programs would have probably dropped out of school," said Waters.

"The University Interscholastic League already had the provision that you must pass before you play or take an active part in any extra-curricular activities.

"And then the legislative body came in and said the same thing but added that you have to stay out six weeks before you can play again. Gradewise, that's going fine, but for the activities..." said Waters. "For example if the band director has 40 kids out because of grades when they're going to contest, that affects the entire group and the whole school.

"What I think it's doing is breaking the school spirit. I had rather see a student involved in some activities, be a well-rounded student, than have their nose in a book studying to make straight A's all the time," she said.

Waters felt that a student should be involved in a lot of school activities to be able to adjust later in life in all areas not just being book smart.

"I'm hoping when the legislative body meets this summer or at least by January that they at least change the six week penalty to a reasonable length of time, possibly a week but no more than two weeks," said Waters.

"To me the no-pass no-play is just an unfair situation. It intimidates the kids and causes the students to take fewer advance or less challenging classes for fear of not passing and costing extra-curricular privileges," she said.

Waters said that one of the changes in society is that children are not taking the responsibility to get their work done or do their assignments on time. She explained that the mastery learning program allows ample time to do both.

"Mastery learning is a method of teaching to integrate the essential elements which were mandated by the Texas legislative body.

"The basic program is a grade concept. And, as we iron the problems out that have occurred over the past two years, each year is easier than the one before," said Waters.

"With mastery learning concept the child knows exactly what will be covered in a unit, what material will be used for the unit, and what they will be tested on. They are given a pre-practice test before the major test and this pre-test, upon being graded, shows the student and the teacher what he needs to study more in-depth, what correctives need to be made, before taking the main test," Waters said.

She said if the student makes below 70 on the unit test and desires to retake the test he may do so by doing some extra assignments and going for tutoring which is provided free by the school.

"But the student can obtain a grade no higher than 70 even if he passes," she said.

The mastery learning concept is different compared to the days when a student studied a chapter on his own time without knowing what questions would be asked on the test. Students had to be more responsible in the past.

"The mastery learning, or any other concept of teaching needs to have time to work out the problems, work out the good and the bad, and have changes made, before changing into another program," said Waters.

"Constantly changing from one program to another is confusing and time consuming and you lose ground in the process," she said. "About the time you get everyone zoomed in on one way someone wants to change it again.

"I feel like the local school system is losing control to the state. Members of the Texas school board should be elected by the people, not appointed by the governor. I wonder what he thinks we're doing up here?" she said.

Waters said that teaching school has more stress than some people realize. "In junior high we interact with approximately 200 students per day by having students in class, in hall duty. We listen to their problems. We try to cope with their anxieties and then we have the endless paperwork, the seemingly never ending changes in curriculum, mandates from the state. This all provides a very stressful situation," said Waters.

"I don't expect anything of a child that I wouldn't have expected of my own. We send out progress reports during the third or fourth week of every six-week period to kind of let students and parents know before you get down to the tests.

"For every 50 that you send out you may get parental response from five and that's not a good percentage," she said. Of 67 reports that Waters sent out one time last year she had only three parents respond.

"We don't request a conference for every one of those but we leave it open for a parent to get in contact. We encourage parental involvement. We, as teachers, care about the student. We don't want to see their names reported," said Waters.

"We must have our administrators, our school board, our teachers and parents working together. We have to. We are there for the students the students are not there for us.

"Too many parents expect the schools to do it all but if a mistake is made it's our fault," she said.

"Most of our kids are good kids, and all of our kids could be good kids if given a chance. But it's going to take the teachers, the parents, the entire community working together for the welfare of the student. They are going to be our leaders of tomorrow. We need to give our students more heroes and less villains," said Waters.

She believes that a student and the teacher, both get out of school what they put into it. "We have the future of these children in our hands really," she said, "and in many ways, it's just like being a parent. Many things we do as teachers have a life-long bearing on the child."

Ann Landers Suicide a deadend

Dear Ann Landers: I read this in the Arkansas Gazette. If you print it, you might save some lives. Please?—A.R. in Little Rock

Dear A.R.: You bet. Thanks for sending it on.

To the Editor: Every year we lose several young people in our community to suicide. We keep hoping it will stop, but so far it hasn't. I hear it is a national epidemic. Once every 90 minutes a teenager in this country commits suicide. This is for every youth who is considering ending it all.

You haven't seen the world that exists outside your family. Soon you will be on your own and then you will understand what is important and what is not important.

What you don't know is that 15 minutes after you decide to kill yourself, you might have felt better. Or two hours later, or two days, or two years.

What you don't know is that you are stronger than you think. You can find another girlfriend, or you can stand being shamed more than you realize. Failing in school, getting in trouble with the law may be painful, but you can get over it. You can fix it. Don't be killing yourself over events that you may barely remember 10 years from now.

What you don't know is that there is nothing romantic or mysterious or "deep" about killing yourself. It is a god-awful mess that you can never understand until you have kids of your own.

What you don't know is that suicide is sneaky and spiteful and filled with anger. If you are thinking about suicide, you are furious with somebody. You can be furious without killing yourself or thinking you need the punishment of death.

What you also don't know is that suicide is forever, and nobody, not your parents or your doctor, can fix it. You won't be around for the funeral. And you won't be coming back.

So get smart. Join the Marines. Go to California. Find a therapist. Lapse into sadness. Become mad as the dickens. Do your time in jail. But get off the suicide kick. It's a dead end.—Tom Heisler, Wynne, Ark.

Dear Tom Heisler: That was a sensible piece you wrote and in language kids can relate to. I hope somebody listens. Nothing in this world causes more grief and suffering among parents the suicide of a child.

As you pointed out, suicide is often an irrational act, an immature response to disappointment, fear and anxiety. It can also be punitive. It these kids would just cool it and look ahead a week or a month, they might live to see the best days of their lives.

Dear Ann Landers: I work with a woman who insists on telling me every detail of the party she went to over the weekend. She goes on and on. Then she'll ask, "What did you do?" When I start to tell her she walks away. This really burns me up. Others have complained about the same thing.

What do you call people like that?—Griped in Georgia

Dear G.I.G.: I call them self-centered, egomaniacal, crashing bores.

Dear Ann Landers: A while back a woman asked you how to get rid of scuffs on her shoes that resulted from driving. You suggested she keep an extra pair of shoes in the car. I have a more practical suggestion. Tell her to take a piece of cotton and go over the scuff marks with nail polish remover. It works like a charm.—Dee Dee

Dear Dee Dee: At least 25 women suggested this. I tried it and the dye came off the shoes. What am I doing wrong? I feel like an idiot. Help!

Drugs? How much is too much? Is pot OK? Is cocaine too much? If you're on dope or considering it, get Ann Landers' all-new booklet, "The Lowdown on Dope." For each booklet ordered, send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope (39 cents postage) to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Illinois 60611.

DEAR POLLY — Our farm is being overrun with poison ivy. Is there anything you know of that will kill it? — RUTH

DEAR RUTH — Since you live on a farm, perhaps it would be practical for you to keep a few goats. Apparently they love to eat poison ivy — at least according to an article by David Schwartz in a recent issue of Country Journal. If that's not practical, you'll either have to try pulling it out by hand or use a weed killer.

Early spring or late fall is the best time to try to pull out poison ivy by hand, since the substance that causes the allergic reaction is less volatile at those times. Wear heavy cotton or leather gloves to protect yourself. When you're finished, put all your clothes right into the washer for a double wash cycle and take a long shower to rinse off. If you know you've rubbed the poison ivy on your skin, douse the area with copious amounts of alcohol.

If you can't pull it up, you'll have to use a herbicide to eradicate it. Choose one that contains ammonium sulfamate or a combination of 2,4-D, 2,4-DP and triclopyr. Handle any of these chemicals with great care and follow label instructions explicitly. Spray on a breezy day. (Note that some of these herbicides will kill other plants as well as the poison ivy.) After the plants are dead, you'll have to pick up the remains and double bag them for the dump or to be buried; since the dead plants still contain the rash-producing substance, they should never be burned, because droplets of the nasty substance can be carried along in the smoke and enter your lungs.

It's not an easy job getting rid of poison ivy. It requires persistence and caution to avoid contamination. Hope these tips help. — POLLY

DEAR POLLY — When my daughter gets a splinter in her hand or finger, I just put her in the bathtub to play for a while. The water will often soften the skin enough so the splinter works free by itself while she's soaking. — BETH

Three women claim to be widows

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A funeral home director says he's thoroughly confused after three women claimed to be the widows of Eddie Cooks.

All three insist they are Cooks' widow and should ride in the funeral limousine and should be listed as the widow in his newspaper obituary.

"I've never seen anything like it in 17 years," says Gregory Spencer, the home's owner. "All of these wives swear they are not divorced. Each one wants her own limousine" for the procession.

Cooks, 62, a former chicken processor for J.W. Nichols Co. until he retired two years ago, died Friday after being struck by a car while crossing a Fort Worth street.

He was to be buried today.

Spencer said the questions he faced Wednesday were who would be listed in the obituary and who would ride in the limousine, but Spencer says he's taking his direction from the person paying the bills.

And that is Cooks' niece.

"She pays me, and she says not to list anyone as his wife," the funeral director told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Afree "Effie" Johnson Cooks said she married Eddie Cooks on June 2, 1951, and has the marriage license to prove it. Although they separated after only a year or so, she said they never divorced.

She says she doesn't know anything about the other women who say they are Eddie's widows.

"I didn't keep up with his life or anything," she said.

Helen Cooks is certain she too was married to the man.

"I know I am married to him," she said. "It's already been checked. I am the one drawing his Social Security benefits. I don't think it's lawful for anyone to have three or four wives."

She said she married him on April 15, 1955, and lived with him for about 12 years. She says Cooks told her his marriage to his first wife was annulled.

The third woman claiming to be Cooks' wife was living with him when he died, Spencer said. She could not be reached for comment.

Adding to the confusion, a fourth woman has contacted the funeral, saying only that she was formerly married to Cooks.

"It's a mess," Spencer said. Only Cooks' four brothers and seven sisters are listed in the obituary.

Spencer says he has strict instruction from the niece about the women who claim to be widows.

"If they want to ride in a limousine, the can pay for it," Spencer said.

Tricks standard procedure for subpoena server

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Ted Odom dressed as a paper boy this time — jeans, tennis shoes, T-shirt, cap and satchel.

"I don't love doing this," he said as he parked his car in an exclusive suburban New Orleans neighborhood. "It's the kind of thing that takes nerve, but I like pretending."

He walked to the house. About a minute later, he scurried back. He jumped in the car, breathing hard.

It worked. He had tricked her into accepting a subpoena.

"I always get so shaky after," Odom said. "God, I hate it. It's kind of exhilarating, but I get nervous all the way home."

This time he pretended to be delivering a newspaper.

"What I did was, I went around the side door, banged real hard, and yelled, 'Good morning.' Figured I get her in a good mood. She saw me. And I yelled, 'Are you Mrs. Blank? I have your paper for you.'"

"She opened the door a bit and said sort of suspiciously, 'I don't need my paper.'"

"And I said, 'Well, then here's a deposition subpoena for you to testify in court. I've identified you.' I wanted her to know she was stuck."

Odom, 28, a court filing clerk who moonlights as an actor, has become a specialist in the art of serving subpoenas for a New Orleans law firm. His method is simple: lie.

When he started 20 months ago, the firm had been trying to serve a subpoena to a woman for more than a month, but she had cleverly avoided all the standard deliveries.

The firm was ready to use a private investigator, but Odom, wanting to make a good first impression, volunteered.

"I dressed as a delivery boy," he said. "I got a big box for flowers and had a big ribbon tied around it, but with nothing inside except a subpoena."

Security was tight at the woman's home, he said. There was a high, stone fence and a locked iron gate. He rang the buzzer.

"I tried to look and sound real 'delivery boyish,'" he said. "She answered from her window, asking who I was. I gave her the name of a flower shop. She looked tentative, but was sort of smiling. She let me in."

"She said, 'Those can't be for me.' I said, 'Is your name Blank?' And she said, 'Yes.' So I said, 'Well, these are for you.'"

"She was all happy, but the box was empty, except for the subpoena. I felt sort of guilty. I ran. I hadn't done anything like that before. You really have to develop a sneaky-for-the-fun-of-it attitude."

A person's home is the hardest place to deliver a subpoena, Odom said, but people also have sneaked out the back door of a business as he waited hours in the front.

Luck helps. Once, Odom said, he had subpoenas for the entire board of directors of a corporation. He had tried for weeks at their homes, even staking out their streets in hopes of catching them off guard.

Finally, he went to their office building.

"I thought a secretary would stop me, but none was there at that time," Odom said. "So no one saw me come down the hall ..."

"I opened a door and saw all these men inside, sitting around a big meeting table. I thought, 'This has got to be them.' So I began calling out names and passing out subpoenas. They were dumbfounded."

Odom said he remembered the tricks from a movie he saw years ago. But he laughed hesitantly when he told past stories of subpoena sleuthing, proud of his gutsy moves, but sympathetic with the people he tricked.

"With some of these people, it's like major things have gone wrong with their lives," Odom said. "That takes some of the amusement out of it."

"But you get this sense of accomplishment, too. Some of these can be a pain. ... It can be nearly impossible to get them to open their door. So you have to be, uh, aggressive."

DR. GOTT Surgery, stroke and medications

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — My husband had a myocardial infarction in 1973 and was placed on Inderal. Ten years later, he underwent quadruple-bypass surgery; the surgeon prescribed Persantine and continued the Inderal. Our local doctor immediately discontinued the Persantine and tapered off the Inderal, but checked his blood pressure regularly.

Five months after the surgery, and only one week after stopping the Inderal, he had a brainstem stroke. A reading at the time showed extremely high blood pressure. He's in a nursing home and still has left-side paralysis and aphasia.

Is there any correlation between the cessation of the drugs and the stroke? Did the stroke cause the blood pressure to go so high or did the high pressure cause the stroke?

DEAR READER — Persantine (to reduce blood coagulation) and Inderal (to lower blood pressure and reduce the heart's work) ordinarily are prescribed after coronary-bypass surgery. Most patients continue the medications for several months, but there is no hard-and-fast rule on how long the drugs should be taken.

Your husband's situation is complex, and I am reluctant to blame his stroke on the discontinuation of the medications. He might have had the stroke even if he were taking Persantine or Inderal. When patients stop Inderal, their blood pressures rise. This could have triggered a stroke in your husband's case. Conversely, strokes often cause high blood pressure, so this is a chicken-and-egg issue. Because your husband had a heart attack (myocardial infarction), he undoubtedly had arteriosclerosis and arterial narrowing that predisposed him to further difficulties, such as stroke. I am unclear about the role his medicines did or did not play.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Since our relative contracted herpes, we have not visited his home. We fear our young children may pick up the germ in his bathroom. When he visits, we panic, then clean like crazy after he leaves. Are we being overly cautious?

THE ENDURING TEDDY BEAR

NEW YORK (AP) — Theodore Roosevelt may be remembered as a Rough Rider, but in reality he earned a soft spot in the hearts of millions of children as the inspiration for one of America's most enduring toys — the Teddy Bear.

Created in 1902, these soft toys remain as popular as ever — although they are more sophisticated than ever before. Today's teddies involve children in interactive conversations, according to Hasbro, which calls its talking bear Bingo.

Agriculture Department proposes giving recognition to Polish breed of horses

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department has proposed giving formal recognition to a Polish breed of horses and its book of record.

Bert W. Hawkins, head of the department's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, said Wednesday that the Wielkopolskich breed of horses and the Księga Stadna Koni Wielkopolskich book of records pertaining to the breed would be officially listed if the proposal is adopted.

Purebred animals of recognized breeds that have been registered in a book of record recognized by USDA are allowed to enter the United States duty free if they are to be used for breeding purposes.

The proposal will be open for public comment until Oct. 27. Comments can be sent to Steven R. Poore, Acting Assistant Director, Regulatory Coordination Group, APHIS, USDA, Room 728, Federal Building, 6505 Belcrest Road, Hyattsville, Md. 20782. Refer to docket No. 86-077.

Pope says

'The devil exists'

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The devil exists and "is a cosmic liar and murderer," says Pope John Paul II, going up against polls that indicate Satan has largely crept out of Christian consciousness.

The pontiff addressed himself to Satan in the last of a series of summer sermons that began with discussions of angels.

John Paul maintained that the devil is still very much in the world, "tempting men to evil ... to turn them away from the law of God."

He invoked stark Biblical images that portray the devil as an unclean spirit, tempter, evil one, anti-Christ, lion, dragon, or serpent.

Italian newspapers and magazines seized on the sermons — the first papal pronouncement on the subject in nearly 15 years — running special features and drawings of a grotesque creature with horns and tail and armed with a trident battling a white-robed John Paul.

The pope's explanation of the origin and meaning of devil came at the end of six weeks of teachings on God's creation of "all things seen and unseen," including angels.

The devil, in the Roman Catholic Church's teaching, is a fallen angel, a potent force in constant struggle with good, trying to tip the balance of morality in his favor. John Paul's description stuck closely to that traditional line.

But the pope's sermons made headlines because church doctrine on the devil has largely gone out of fashion over the past two centuries.

Many theologians today view the devil as a metaphor used to explain the presence of evil in man and in the world. Polls in several European countries over the past 15 years have shown that most Catholics do not take the doctrine of the devil seriously.

John Paul said he wanted to prepare followers for the end of the world, as prophesied in the Bible, and to "clarify the true faith of the church against those who pervert it by exaggerating the importance of the devil or by denying or minimizing his malevolent power."

Monsignor Corrado Balducci, a Vatican expert on demonology, said the pope's lecture was designed to restore "the rightful perspective" to the church's doctrine of the devil.

The pope asserted that Satan "has the skill in the world to induce people to deny his existence in the name of rationalism and of every other system of thought which seeks all possible means to avoid recognizing his activity."

A Vatican official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the pope appeared to be motivated by two concerns — that Catholics should not lose sight of the devil's existence, and by teaching authoritatively on the doctrine, the church can stem the rise of satanic cults and "popular exorcisms" carried out by lay people without church approval.

VIOLIN LOANED

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an unprecedented gesture, the Library of Congress has loaned its prized "Kreisler-Guarneri" violin to the International Violin Competition of Indianapolis where it will be exhibited and played during the competition Sept. 6-21.

Fritz Kreisler presented his Guarneri violin to the library in 1962. The instrument was made in 1733 in Cremona by Giuseppe Guarneri del Gesu.

At the time Kreisler donated the violin, its value was appraised at $60,000. Today, its estimated worth is in excess of $1 million.

Farmer turns songwriter, performer

WACO, Texas (AP) — You'll have to forgive Mack Abernathy if he seems a little taken aback lately.

In the past year the soft-spoken cowboy from Valley Mills hobnobbed with legislators, played with some of the top names in music, recorded an album and found himself with a full-page ad in "Billboard" magazine.

Not bad for a guy who a year ago couldn't decide between fixing his tractor or buying new guitar strings.

Abernathy, whose first single, "Don't Tax My Beer," is being played on a number of country and western radio stations, said he's been playing music since he can remember.

"That's partly because out there our farm was, there was nothing else to do," he said. "I eventually even had a little rock 'n' roll band at North Junior High School. I went on to Sam Houston State and got a master's degree in agriculture, rodeoed a bit, taught school, worked for the railroad for 13 years — until I got laid off — and wrote songs the whole time for my own amusement."

One day last spring, friend Rick Cardwell visited Abernathy's farm on Childress Creek and coaxed Abernathy into performing a few of his songs. Cardwell liked what he heard and suggested Abernathy take the songs to Austin songwriter-performer Gary P. Nunn.

"So I just walked up to Mr. Nunn during a break while he was playing at the Broken Spoken (in Austin), inroduced myself and said I'd written a song I wanted him to hear. That's the only way I knew how to do it. He said, 'Fine, let's go hear it out in the parking lot.'

"I played it, and about halfway through he said, 'That's enough.' I was so embarrassed, I could've died. So I thanked him for his time and started to walk off. But he wanted me to play it onstage with him."

Weeks later, Nunn performed Abernathy's song at the Kerrville Folk Festival, and the audience seemed to like it.

"It was at that moment that I got an inkling of what it was like," he said. "I started dreaming right then of $50-a-night gigs of singing my songs."

A month later, Abernathy stood over his broken tractor, covered with grease and exhausted from days of trying to fix it.

"There's gotta be something better'n this, if a guy with a master's degree in ag can't fix a tractor," Abernathy said to himself. So he cleaned up, headed into town, walked into the office of local music store owner Tommy Hennig and asked for 20 minutes of his time.

"I played him eight, 10 songs and then asked him whether or not I should buy new guitar strings or pay to have my tractor fixed."

Hennig opted for the guitar strings and introduced Abernathy to steel player Willie Kaluza of Tours. Performing Abernathy's songs, the pair won the Wrangler Country Showdown in Palestine, which gave them the opportunity to play at Billy Bob's Texas in Fort Worth in the Wrangler finals.

Although he didn't win, Abernathy received some valuable advice from Moe Bandy backstage.

From there, things began to move quickly. A rough demo of his songs found its way to Waco businessman Leo H. Bradshaw Jr., who immediately contacted Harry Warner of BMI in Nashville. Texas music entrepreneur Cowboy Hines introduced Abernathy to a number of Texas legislators, including Speaker of the House Gib Lewis. Bradshaw and Hines offered to become his managers.

"Next thing I know, Mr. Lewis asks me to play at the Governor's Ball in Austin with Rusty Weir, like I'm really supposed to be there," Abernathy said.

"I did some other political dates, and somebody must have liked me because they asked me to close the Texas Sesquicentennial celebration at the San Jacinto Monument.

"One of the tunes we did was my song 'Texas,' a swing song that has some pretty good lyrics, if I do say so myself. It's kind of a sesquicentennial song, and a lot of people seem to be taken by it."

Fiddler Johnny Gimble helped Abernathy put together a band that now includes Kaluza, John Inman (formerly of the Lost Gonzo Band), Jed Richardson, Howard Kalish, Ernie Durawa and Francis Anne Kyle.

Also helping out at some of his bigger concerts, including a show recently at Billy Bob's Texas, were Dick Gimble and Clark Nauert.

When he was pleased with the stage performances of his songs, Abernathy went to Arlyn Studios in Austin to record an album.

"I wrote all but two of the songs on the album and co-wrote one of those," he said. "I asked Johnny Gimble to help on 'Don't Tax My Beer,' and he added all kinds of 'Gimble-ish' touches that really made it nice. We cut it live right there in the studio to keep the energy up."

Helping him out on the recording session were Steve Bruton, Kris Kristofferson's guitar player; Bobbie Nelson, Willie's sister; and Freddy Joe Fletcher, who also produced the session.

"We ended up with 14 songs in the can and decided to release it on our own Tex-Trek Records," he said.

Unlike many regionally pressed releases, "Don't Tax My Beer" is getting national attention. Ed Spacek (Sissy's brother) in Dallas has hired two promoters to push it in Los Angeles and Nashville, and the song is already on rotation in Denver, San Antonio, Austin, Waco and a host of smaller cities — many of which Abernathy has visited.

Abernathy calls the album "Different Situations" and said it contains western swing, traditional country, crossover country, country-flavored rock 'n' roll, a "Marty Robbins kind of tune" and a Texas waltz.

"I don't want my writing to get into a straight line," he said. "I don't say, 'This is all I do.' I wanted to make this album a showcase of music, from left to right. Hopefully, if a couple of the singles are hits (and "God Save the Country Farm" from the album sounds like it has commercial potential), one of the major labels will take an interest in us."

This summer, Abernathy is performing in Austin and Fort Worth. One of his biggest thrills, though, came when he opened for former Wacoan Hank Thompson at the recent Billy Bob's Texas show.

"What was special was that 'Don't Tax My Beer' has a line that goes, 'It's been a while since I've had a six pack to go.' ('Six Pack to Go' was one of Thompson's biggest hits). That tickled him. There's a nice thread of continuity, seeing the old and the new from Waco performing together."

Texas prison employees' families learn to adjust to life at TDC

ROSHARON, Texas (AP) — "This is TDC life," says Wanda Bradshaw, sitting in the living room with her husband and two daughters.

"You eat TDC. You sleep TDC. We both work for TDC."

Mrs. Bradshaw works for the Windham Independent School District at the Darrington Unit of the Texas Department of Corrections near Rosharon. Her husband, Brad, is a lieutenant at the unit.

With their two daughters, Sherrie, 20, and Tina, 12, they try to live as normal a life as possible on the unit near Rosharon. They are among about 2,000 people in Brazoria County employed by the TDC whose families live in state-provided housing at the six units in the county.

The differences from life in a typical community are inevitable.

Things of no concern in the free world are food for second thought on the grounds of a prison.

Sherrie, washing her car once as trustees doing roadside work approached, was asked by a guard to go inside until the inmates passed.

"I guess they thought I was going to cause a riot or something," she says.

Sometimes visitors can't get past the front gate, she says, so she often calls and tells the guard when expecting company.

"Living on a prison farm, it invades your privacy to a certain extent. Inmates stare at you, male or female. It makes you feel very self-conscious," she says.

While Sherrie would rather live off a unit, closer to stores and friends, Tina thinks the free world would be boring.

Units have swimming pools and recreation facilities that might be farther away or unavailable in a town.

Tina also said she feels safer on a unit.

She feared burglars in the free world, but those fears don't exist on the unit.

"Not many burglars are going to come to this place to break into a home. They'll want to be away from here," Bradshaw says. "Not many muggers are going to stand down there by the unit picket waiting for women and children to walk by."

"I feel safer on a unit than I did living off the unit," Mrs. Bradshaw agrees. "I don't know if I could adjust to that type of life again."

That security is not felt by outsiders. Some parents won't allow their children to visit the prison community, she says.

But Mrs. Bradshaw says she would worry more about a child who was five minutes late returning in a community than one an hour late on the prison farm.

The remoteness and their jobs draw residents closer, Bradshaw says.

"It almost gets to be a society within itself. Because we all have so much in common on the unit, it's like a close-knit family," he says, comparing it to other people drawn together by similar interests.

But isolation causes problems, too. Keith Price, a 14-year-veteran of the TDC and warden of the Darrington Unit near Rosharon, believes that too many employees, himself included, can allow themselves to be separated from the rest of society.

That is not good, he said.

"Prison is such a unique experience. The reality of the situation is that the average inmate stays in prison three and a half years. The average correctional personnel stays in prison a lot longer than that," Price says. "They're a lot more affected by the environment than the prisoners are. And you always have to be conscious of that effect on you."

Price says it is too easy for TDC employees to limit their experiences to their jobs and the people they meet at work.

"Probably the worst part about living on a prison and raising a family there is that it tends to make you narrow in your scope and view of things," he said. "If the people in your social milieu are the people that you deal with everyday in work, you only get one way of looking at and dealing with things. I think it's healthy to socialize and deal with people who have different ideas about things."

He uses himself as an example of how prison can change a person's life.

"In my case, it no doubt contributed to a divorce. The isolation, the long hours, the pressure that the job demanded, no doubt helped destroy my first marriage," he said.

Price, remarried, consciously tries to extend his experiences beyond the prison. He chose to attend a Lake Jackson church because he thought too many TDC employees would attend churches in nearby Angleton.

For him, the effort works. He met his second wife, Runae, at the church.

TDC makes it attractive economically to live on the units, but that might not be the best choice, Price said.

"When I move off of a prison farm for the last time, I will never regret it. In the long run, I want to be a part of society. My thoughts are not the same as the people that this place houses," he said.

"You never forget that you're on a prison farm here. You never forget it," Mrs. Price says.

LEGEND AND REALITY

NEW YORK (AP) — "Hollywood: Legend and Reality," an exhibition surveying the development of the motion picture industry, will be at the Cooper-Hewitt Museum through Oct. 12.

The exhibition explores the impact of movies on American culture through 400 works of art, photographs, posters, costume and production sketches, special effects models, and equipment.

After closing in New York, the exhibition will travel to Miami's Center for the Fine Arts, the Cincinnati Art Museum, the Denver Art Museum, and the Natural History Museum of Los Angeles County.

'Stuppies' thrive as complex is topped off

DALLAS (AP) — Oiled bodies loll beside the Olympic-size pool. Couples mingle at umbrella-decked tables. Others take to barstools inside, or tennis matches, volleyball games and softball tournaments.

See and be seen, that's the name of the game.

This is "the Village," a city within a city, 400 acres called home by 12,000 people who might best be labeled "Stuppies" — Single Tanned Urban Professionals.

Completed in July after 19 years of carefully paced construction, the Village has evolved into a Dallas institution. A product of the "swinging singles" side of 1960s city life, it has come of age as a monument to mixing and mingling in the 1980s, pairing up and moving out.

"If you don't know anybody in Dallas, you move to the Village," said resident Cindy Devaul, a sales representative.

The recently topped-off town is actually a collection of 14 apartment complexes bordered by four of Dallas' busiest boulevards. The Village has 32 swimming pools, a dozen tennis courts, two ornamental lakes with paddle boats, two softball diamonds and a bandstand for outdoor concerts.

It has a health club, two bars and a restaurant at its "country club," not to mention a shopping center and a grocery store — rated by local magazines as one of the best singles scenes in its own right. (The produce section is reported to be a favorite pickup point.)

According to Lincoln Property Co., the developer and manager, 85 percent of the residents are single, and 90 percent fall into demographic categories of either white-collar professional or sales-clerical.

Fifty-two percent are male, and 90 percent are aged 22 to 34. Tenants under 21 aren't allowed.

The average salary is about $25,000, and monthly rents range from $335 for a 420-square-foot efficiency to $1,050 for a two-bedroom unit in the newly completed section, the Lakes. Grass is mowed twice a week, maintenance workers are on call 24 hours a day, a warehouse is stocked with replacement materials ranging from windows to washing machines, and fresh flowers are planted year-round.

With 7,115 apartments, the Village is so big it has its own greenhouse, its own mounted security patrol and its own interior decorating service.

There's a furniture rental company, and the Dallas transit system even has a "Village Express" bus line, packed at rush hour.

But it's the management-sponsored parties that residents often mention first when asked about life inside the manicured compound.

"You can get worn out living here," said resident Tara Pirtle, who was "laying out" at one of the swimming pools. "There's parties every weekend. It can still be a swinging-single sort of place. That's a lot of the attraction of living here."

The residents, four-year Village veteran Don Chouinard said, are instantly compatible.

"The people are all of the same basic age group, socially inclined, athletically inclined. I hate to put it this way, but it's a better class of people. You get better conversations," Chouinard said.

"And," he said, scanning the lounge chairs at poolside, "you can't beat the scenery."

Pools are the center of much of the socializing, and the more expensive the complex, the more crowded the pool, residents say. "The Corners are the least expensive apartments and you can tell that laying out over there," said Laura Semeta.

Parking lots are filled with foreign sports cars, some economy cars, and lots of Camaros, bright red Camaros. There are boats on trailers and fancy motorcycles. Fast times in Dallas' fast lane.

"There's a status attached to belonging to the Village," Ms. Pirtle said. "These are old apartments, with the exception of the Lakes. They don't have microwaves and they're not very spacious. So you're paying for status."

To Dallas historian and author A.C. Greene, the Village has evolved into an important, if somewhat dubious, institution.

"It's sort of a traditional stopping place for people moving to Dallas," Greene said. "And at one time, it was the epitome of swinging single. Some very important people have passed through there before and after marriage."

Some, like Greene, think the Village's swinging has mellowed from its heyday 10 years ago.

"People still live here because it has the reputation of being a wild place," said Sue, a schoolteacher who declined to give her last name. "I say to people that I live in the Village and they raise their eyebrows. They've heard all about it."

Occupancy has stayed close to 96 percent, Lincoln Property says, despite Texas' economic downturn and an average occupancy city-wide of 87 percent.

The company does little advertising for the Village, which it says is the nation's largest garden apartment complex, but not the biggest overall — a high-rise complex in New York holds that title.

"The Village is so well-known, we don't have to do that much," said marketing director Carol Winfrey. "There's an air about it. There's a certain amount of prestige to living in the Village."

And the residents enthusiastically agree.

"When I was moving here from San Antonio, people said, 'Go to the Village,'" said Ms. Semeta, working on her tan. "I didn't look anywhere else."

Roadblocks again go up in troubled Soweto

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government said today 21 people were killed in riots in Soweto, including 20 blacks shot by security forces. Anti-apartheid leaders said up to 30 were killed and said they were appalled by the "cold-blooded massacre."

"This was one of the darkest days in our history," said the Rev. Frank Chikane, deputy president of the Soweto Civic Association.

The state Bureau for Information, however, said police fired "to protect life and property" during the street fighting Tuesday night and Wednesday morning in Soweto, the sprawling black township outside Johannesburg.

It said the 21st victim was a Soweto councillor, who relatives said was hacked to death. Another 98 people were injured, the bureau said.

The government had said previously that 13 people were killed and 70 injured. It said the dead included a 13-year-old boy.

In Cape Town, the government turned down a request from the opposition Progressive Federal Party to hold an emergency debate on the Soweto violence.

Reporters said youths in six neighborhoods rebuilt street barricades Wednesday night, and that security forces fired birdshot and tear gas at them. The government confirmed widespread stone-throwing.

Soweto was reported quiet today.

Chikane and Murphy Morobe, chief spokesman for the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid coalition, told a news conference that reports from Soweto hospitals and doctors indicated up to 30 people were killed and 200 wounded.

They said the violence began Tuesday night when police fired without provocation at blacks leaving a meeting called to discuss threatened evictions of residents taking part in a rent boycott.

They said the shooting began about two hours before the incident that the government said triggered the violence — a confrontation at a street barricade. The government said four police officers were wounded at the barricade when someone threw a hand grenade at them, and that the police fired at the crowd.

"We are appalled by this cold-blooded massacre of our people," said Chikane. He and Morobe called on the Soweto town council to resign.

The council owns most of the township housing, and rent is its only source of revenue.

The Rev. Beyers Naude, a white activist who is general-secretary of the South African Council of Churches, urged at the news conference that Sowetans be allowed "to bury their dead in peace."

"If that is denied, it can only lead to further tension and conflict, with the inevitable consequences," Naude said.

The Sowetan newspaper quoted the township's housing director, Del Kevan, as saying the town council will suspend evictions to avoid further trouble.

Soweto town clerk Nico Malan said, however, that no evictions had occurred in neighborhoods where the fighting took place.

In an editorial today, the Sowetan said the township council should have known the rent dispute was potentially explosive. "We are afraid the government has not learned from past mistakes and the whole sorry business might go from bad to worse," it said.

Councils were elected in the black townships in 1983, but 90 percent of the black electorate boycotted the polls. Town councilors and black police have been singled out as targets by young militants who regard them as sellouts to the Pretoria government.

Soweto councillor Sydenham Mkhwanazi, 56, was killed by youths who attacked him late Tuesday. His wife, Novascotia, said the youths were angry because one of their friends had died after being shot by guards at the councillor's house.

The house of another councillor, Sigfried Manthata, was burned but Manthata escaped unhurt.

The outbreak in Soweto was the worst under since a nationwide state of emergency was imposed June 12. The official death toll was believed to be the highest in any 24-hour period since 69 blacks were killed by police in Sharpeville in 1960.

Judy Holiday won the Best Actress Academy Award for "Born Yesterday" in 1950.

CONTEMPORARY ART SHOW

ATLANTA (AP) — The exhibition, "Contemporary Art From the Museum Collection," is on view at the Emory University Museum of Art and Archaeology through Oct. 11.

The exhibit features prints, drawings, photographs and sculpture drawn from the museum's permanent collection of art from the Renaissance to the present. Although one photo dates from the early 1930s, most of the works were completed in the '60s, '70s and '80s.

Among the works on display is a lithograph by Philip Pearlstein and four silkscreens by Robert Rauschenberg.

SHARE THE SAVINGS

MIAMI (AP) — More than 3,000 truck drivers saved their employers nearly $1 million in fuel costs last year by taking part in a fuel conservation program.

Called "Share the Savings," the program gives the drivers a chance to share in 60 percent of the money they help save the company. It rewards the drivers with travel packages, sporting goods and leisure and home entertainment items.

Craftsmen make everchanging art

HOUSTON (AP) — Sir David Brewster was experimenting with the polarization of light when he created the first kaleidoscope in 1816, and people have been intrigued with the changing reflections of color patterns ever since.

So why aren't there more antique kaleidoscopes around?

"They're hard to find because so many people take them apart to see how they work," said San Antonio artist Carmen Gallo Colley. "I took my first one apart when I was a kid."

Now Ms. Colley is putting them together in fanciful jewel-encrusted forms with hypnotizing combinations of brilliant colors and patterns, and she's selling them to kaleidoscope collectors from New York to California. Each is one of a kind and designed to carry out a theme, such as Mardi Gras or even the Texas Sesquicentennial.

The company name Gallocolley combines Carmen's maiden name, Gallo, and husband Stephen's name, Colley. When they married in 1978, each took both names, so he is Stephen Gallo Colley. Colley is a licensed architect who spends more hours designing kaleidoscopes with his wife than practicing architecture.

"At first, making kaleidoscopes was more like a hobby subsidized by my architecture practice," he said. "We would do one scope a month. But when Carmen started getting lots of orders, we had to really start working at it. Now there are two others helping."

In the crowded garage-turned-studio of their modest San Antonio home, the couple turns out three to five kaleidoscopes a week, depending on their size and intricacy. Each is almost as fascinating to look at as to look through.

Tiny objects that relate to one of the 25 or more themes are worked into the design of the stained-glass body. For instance, the "Big Apple" scope includes a tiny part of a New York theater ticket, a souvenir art deco pin, a portion of a map of Greenwich Village and a tourmaline apple. While they may repeat a theme, no two designs will be alike since the objects and patterns vary.

When Carmen began making kaleidoscopes, she created the changing patterns with an external stained-glass wheel, rather than with bits of glass and plastic floating inside. She learned to work in stained glass in classes Stephen taught, which, which was how they met.

"After 10 years as a secretary and bookkeeper, I went to San Antonio College, started out in the psychology department and wound up in art," she said.

Today her scopes have two jeweled wheels to twirl in opposite directions for endless dazzling patterns. The wheels are created with semi-precious stones, glass beads, synthetic stones, fused and sandblasted glass, blown glass pieces — just about any pretty stone or glass that will transmit light.

Carmen's use of jewels in her scopes started the day after John Lennon died. "I was so depressed, so I decided to make a kaleidoscope. For some reason I decided to put one crystal piece in the wheel, and that was it! Since then I've had to have jewels and other pretty pieces in every one I do," she said.

"I've used everything in my scopes from a cloisonne pendant to cobalt glass from a German wine bottle and pink Depression glass. Glass marbles make pretty feet for the scope when it's sitting on a table or shelf. People are always sending me things — loose stones, glass beads, broken glass. But I can't use plastic," she said.

A native of New Orleans, Carmen enjoys creating scopes with a "Mardi Gras" motif, complete with doubloons and other mementos. One of her newest designs, "Lady Liberty," is a tribute to the Statue of Liberty's birthday celebration. Each large scope is signed and titled and sells for about $895.

The smaller Gallocolley scope, which is almost 4 inches long and called a "Minnie," can be worn on a chain around the neck like a pendant. While these are stained glass with jeweled wheels, they don't have themes. Each is numbered and sells for $325.

Donna and Art Milstein, owners of Houston's Hanson Galleries where many of the scopes have been on display this summer, commissioned the Colleys to make a special "Minnie" scope for their daughter Anya's ninth birthday. The design includes one of her baby teeth, a lock of her hair, her birthstone, unicorns, clouds and other things of interest to her. They call it the "Anyascope."

Recently Carmen created a showpiece scope called "Thoroughbred," to exhibit at Lexington, Ky., at the world's largest kaleidoscope show. She says she wants to try one with a lighthouse theme, too. Mainly Carmen works with the color palettes, the objects and the glass, while Stephen designs the patterns for the sides of the scopes. He also makes a card to go with each theme scope listing all the pieces found on the individual design.

As the saying goes, "It's all done with mirrors," and that's certainly true with a kaleidoscope.

"We use three mirrors inside placed at equal lateral 60-degree angles. They must be done very precisely so that the repetitions can't be counted; they just go off into infinity. Some scope makers use two, three or four mirrors," Carmen said.

All metal parts on the scopes are given a polyurethane coating to prevent tarnishing, and the wheels turn on ball bearings.

"After all," Carmen said, "we want our scopes to be handed down from generation to generation."

The Colleys began making kaleidoscopes in 1979, the year after they married. "Everything we are is packed in these scopes," Stephen said.

Although the work is artistic in nature and fun, it's still work. Some days, Carmen says, it requires a lot of discipline to walk into the studio. "Whenever I think I don't feel like doing it, I just remember how it was going to an 8-to-5 job," she said.

"We're not getting rich, but we're keeping up with the bills," Stephen said. He also writes a six-page newsletter called "Oculus" for people around the country who are involved with kaleidoscopes.

"You wouldn't believe the number of kaleidoscope collectors out there," Stephen said. "There are at least 10,000. That should be able to keep us busy for a while. We've been in the mainstream of collectors for about two years, and more and more galleries are getting interested in our scopes."

Carmen says: "kaleidoscope fever" hasn't hit Europe yet, but a man in Germany is putting together a show. "Oh, and World Famous Gifts in Sydney, Australia, called the other day, they want to carry our scopes. Today Australia, tomorrow the world!"

Hostage tells of ordeal; escapees at large

PECOS, Texas (AP) — A woman taken hostage by two prison escapees says they didn't harm her during 50 hours of captivity, but that she was so frightened when finally released she drove lost and dazed more than 200 miles before calling police.

The two Louisiana prison inmates remained at large late Wednesday. They are suspected of kidnapping two women since their flight from the Louisiana Penitentiary in Angola, La., last weekend.

L. Karyn Laccheo, 29, a U.S. Army intelligence officer stationed at Fort Hood in Killeen, Texas, was questioned by investigators in Pecos Wednesday, said FBI agent Gary Webb in El Paso.

She was released unharmed in El Paso Tuesday and then drove to Pecos, he said.

Another woman, 38-year-old Linda Mayeas, said two men forced her into her car at knifepoint in Alexandria, La., Sunday morning. She was freed in Houston about eight hours later.

Ms. Laccheo told investigators of a tiring drive during which she lost track of her whereabouts and heard her abductors drop few clues as to their plans.

"They did not threaten her nor abuse her after they initially got her in the car," Webb said. "They let her have food, drink and go to the restroom but they did not let her sleep. One always had his eyes on her."

In Houston, she said she was stopped at a grocery store.

"She said they stuck a gun in her ribs when she was putting groceries in her car in Houston on Sunday" where she was spending a leave from Fort Hood, Webb said. "They told her to get in the car or they'd kill her."

After about 50 hours in her Toyota Celica with the two men — and little more than two hours sleep — they left her at an El Paso shopping center parking lot about 5 p.m. Tuesday, Webb said.

"The last she saw of them, they both walked her back to her car, handed her her keys and said 'you're free to go.' The last she saw of them they were still standing in the parking lot," Webb said.

Investigators today hope to find someone that may have been contacted in El Paso by the two escapees, Danny Weeks, 33, and James Colvin, 32.

Weeks, who had broken out of jail twice before, and Colvin were discovered missing with another inmate Saturday night at the penitentiary, said Warden Frank Blackburn.

Ms. Laccheo told the FBI the men drove from Houston to San Antonio, spent the night in a hotel, then drove to San Angelo. There they forced her to buy them a .380-caliber automatic pistol, Webb said.

Houston Police Sgt. Bill Stephens said earlier Wednesday that Ms. Laccheo told officers that the men robbed a savings and loan association office in San Antonio.

After reaching San Angelo, "(they) became very paranoid of the interstates. They took state highways and county roads into southeastern New Mexico," Webb said.

Ms. Laccheo said she recalled driving through Carlsbad. On Tuesday they traveled to El Paso, she told investigators.

She was released at the shopping center after spending about four hours in a bar with one of the men while the other left.

After they told her she could go, she drove aimlessly before spotting Interstate 10, headed east, then pulled off the road in heavy rain at a Holiday Inn in Pecos about 11 p.m. Tuesday, Webb said. She phoned Fort Hood, and the police.

"She said the reason she did not stop and call the police (was) because she was scared to death, and second, she'd had approximately two hours sleep" and was dazed, Webb said.

The men did not discuss any names or specific destinations in front of her, but indicated initially that they would go to Mexico, then later talked of California, Webb said.

It was uncertain how the inmates escaped, but apparently they crossed the Mississippi River by floating on a log.

Colvin, of the Shreveport, La., area, was serving an 80-year sentence for armed robbery. Weeks, of Monroe, La., was serving life plus 99 years for armed robbery. He was also convicted for second-degree murder.

Two out of three adults in the United States wear glasses at some time.

Fox Network programmer learned trade rapidly

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Garth Ancier, youthful head of programming for the new Fox network, is following in the footsteps of such television wunderkind as Fred Silverman and Brandon Tartikoff.

In fact, Tartikoff hired Ancier as a management trainee at NBC in 1979 when Ancier was fresh out of Princeton University. Silverman, whose wonder years were with ABC, was NBC president at the time.

"I think I was protected and brought along in my career by Brandon," Ancier said. "I consider him my mentor. Whether he considers me his protegee is another question. We're competitors now. It was a very, very painful decision for me to leave NBC."

Tartikoff, now 37, was 31 when he became president of NBC Entertainment, the youngest division president in NBC history. Silverman became VP and head of programming at CBS in 1970, when he was 33. Five years later, he became head of ABC Entertainment and then chief executive officer at NBC at age 41.

Ancier, at 28, is senior vice president for programming and is overseeing the programming needs of the aggressive move by Fox Broadcasting Co. to establish a network to compete with ABC, CBS and NBC.

The decision to hire Joan Rivers as host of a late-night talk show was made before Ancier left NBC, where he was vice president for current comedy programming. Since his move in April he has worked closely with Barry Diller, chairman of Fox Inc., and owner Rupert Murdoch in setting up the prime-time schedule.

"The Late Show Starring Joan Rivers" will make its bow on Monday, Oct. 6, while the first of the prime-time shows will begin next March on Saturday and Sunday nights.

"I was a management trainee at NBC for seven months," he said one afternoon in his spacious office on the 20th Century-Fox movie lot. "When Brandon became president of NBC Entertainment, I became his assistant. It took me out of the mainstream of programming since I did mostly special projects for him. But I learned how the department ran and I think in the long run it helped me more than anything."

Ancier said he learned a philosophy of programming at NBC that came down from Chairman Grant Tinker and Tartikoff.

"It's a philosophy of hands-off management of shows," he said. "When you've got a show like 'Cheers' you don't become involved in the production process. I sometimes visited 'The Cosby Show' because I loved being around a great show. But there was nothing I could contribute. When 'Taxi' came to NBC I was director of current comedy programming and learned a lot. It was an incredible collection of writing and producing talent."

He added he is also learning from

Diller and Murdoch. "You see a new way of looking at things, a new way of thinking when you're around them," he said. "They're very demanding."

Fox has announced few prime-time shows. So far, the network has made deals for a series based on the hit movie "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," an action-adventure series called "Jump Street Chapel" from Stephen J. Cannell ("The A-Team"), and a romantic half-hour comedy series called "Duet" from Gary David Goldberg's UBU Productions ("Family Ties").

Fox will start with Saturday and Sunday nights, then expand to another night, either Monday or Friday, in September 1987.

Hunts' foreclosure deadline Friday

DALLAS (AP) — The Hunt brothers of Dallas were battling a looming deadline today as a group of banks threatened to begin foreclosing on properties Friday to cover defaulted loans.

A federal judge Wednesday denied a request by the Hunt brothers to stop the foreclosures by 23 of the nation's largest banks, which are trying to recoup $1.5 billion in loans to the Hunts' Placid Oil Co. and Penrod Drilling Co.

Nelson Bunker Hunt, William Herbert Hunt and Lamar Hunt allege the banks are trying to corner the offshore oil drilling market by putting the two companies out of business, and have filed suits seeking $14 million from the banks.

Wednesday's denial by U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders gives the banks the victory this round, and leaves the Hunts facing a Friday deadline — the day the banks can begin selling off Hunt properties in Mississippi. Assets in Texas could be sold off beginning Tuesday, said Keith Burton, a Hunt spokesman.

"We do not intend to let the banks dismantle Penrod and Placid," Burton said.

Attorney Steve Gordon said that the Hunt companies could appeal the decision, file suits in another court or put the companies under bankruptcy court protection by filing under Chapter 11 of the U.S. bankruptcy code.

"There has been no election of which course of action to take," Burton said Wednesday night.

"Clearly, timing is a matter very important at this time to Placid and Penrod," he said, referring to the banks' announcement that they will begin selling assets on Friday.

Whiteface coach speaks with confidence

By GARY CHRISTENSEN
Sports Editor

Hereford High School head football coach Don Cumpton speaks with confidence and enthusiasm about the 1986 season, as he did Wednesday at the Hereford Lions Club meeting.

The Hereford Whitefaces have one more night of scrimmages before opening the 1986 season. On Friday night, at Whiteface Stadium, there will be three scrimmages—sophomores at 3:30 p.m., junior varsity at 5:30 p.m., and varsity at 7:30 p.m.

"We're going into District 1-4A, an extremely competitive district. Our whole district showed well in scrimmages last week," Cumpton said.

Noting that Lubbock Estacado is the preseason pick, in several polls and magazines, to win the district title, Cumpton said, "This should be an interesting season in District 1-4A, to renew some old rivalries."

Some of those old rivalries include ones against Pampa, Borger, Dumas, Levelland, and Canyon.

"You have to play every game one at a time and not look ahead. We're optimistic. We have 147 players in football. We feel our program is in good shape," Cumpton stated.

Cumpton said he hopes some key players will recover from injuries in time for the season opener.

About various groups of players on the Hereford Whiteface team, Cumpton said:

Receivers: "We feel we have an excellent group of receivers as we've had here in a long time. We have the kind of people there that hopefully we can take advantage of."

Running backs: "We have five running backs, but two of them are not healthy. We hope to have Mark Artho and Marcus Brown back for our first game."

Offensive line: "In our offensive line we have some experience. We're not bad sizewise, but we'll be blocking guys that weigh 20 more pounds than us. Andrews averages 250 in the defensive line and 230 in the offensive line."

Defense: "When you look for defensive players, you look for aggressiveness. You look for guys who love to play, who love to hit."

"We are real inexperienced on defense, with only one starter back, Robby Collier. The key for our season is to carry ourselves offensively to give our defense a chance to mature."

"We have a lot of underclassmen on defense. We have some guys at defensive ends who we think can play well in any situation."

Kicking game: "We feel real good about the kicking game if we can get Mark Artho healthy. Bobby Baker is a good punter and Tim Long is a good placekicker."

Cumpton said Friday night's scrimmages, as well as the two non-district games, are important in this respect: "We'll get lots of guys in the scrimmages and in the Andrews and Clovis games, to get ready for district."

The Herd varsity opens the season on Friday, Sept. 5 at home against Andrews, and plays at home on Friday, Sept. 12 against Clovis. Game times are 7:30 p.m., as are all the other Hereford varsity games.

The rest of the season schedule is: Sept. 19, at Pampa; Sept. 26, at home versus Frenship; Oct. 4, at Lubbock Dunbar; Oct. 10, at home versus Levelland; Oct. 17, at Dumas; Oct. 24, at home versus Canyon; Oct. 30, at Lubbock Estacado; and Nov. 14, at home versus Borger.

The first junior varsity game is scheduled on Saturday, Sept. 6, at home versus Tascosa at 10 a.m. The first sophomore game is at Plainview Red on Thursday, Sept. 4 at 5:30 p.m.

The second week of action for those teams will be the junior varsity at Vega on Thursday, Sept. 11 at 8 p.m., and the sophomores at home versus Lubbock Coronado on Thursday, Sept. 11 at 7 p.m.

HHS spikers

play today

at Brownfield

The Hereford High School volleyball teams travel to Brownfield today, for matches at 4:30 p.m. and 5:30 p.m.

The Hereford varsity team lost a pair of matches in the Lubbock Invitational Tournament last week—15-4, 15-2 to Pampa on Friday night, and 15-12, 15-4 to Lubbock Estacado on Saturday morning.

Both of those schools are District 1-4A opponents this season.

Today's action will be the season opener for the HHS junior varsity girls.

On Friday and Saturday, Hereford is scheduled to play in the Pecos Tournament. The first home matches of the 1986 season are set next Tuesday, versus Clovis—6 p.m. for the junior varsity match, and the varsity match afterwards.

'Y' volleyball

meeting set

tonight at 7:30

A YMCA volleyball organization meeting has been scheduled Thursday at 7:30 p.m. for three leagues.

The purpose of the meeting is to see what leagues will be organized this fall at the Hereford and Vicinity YMCA.

The leagues to be discussed are a co-ed church volleyball league, a men's open volleyball league, and a women's open volleyball league.

For more information about the meeting, contact the YMCA at 364-6990.

Hereford Whiteface Football Seniors

Boys Ranch Rodeo is scheduled this weekend

The 42nd annual Car Farley's Boys Ranch Rodeo will be held this Labor Day weekend when over 200 young cowboys will compete for top honors.

Boys of all ages will be competing for belt buckles and for the titles of Junior and Senior All-Around Cowboys. Several popular specialty acts will include a wild steer race, FFA project parade and calf scramble. Even the five and six-year-old boys will be seeking applause during barrel races on stick horses. Up to 10,000 people are expected to attend this nationally famous rodeo on Aug.

31, and Sept. 1.

Rodeo action will begin at 2:30 both afternoons. Riding clubs from area communities will join the award-winning Boys Ranch Honor Patrol during the rodeo grand entries. The Boys Ranch Alumni will also be represented as part of their annual reunion. Many of the Ranch's boys will be playing in the rodeo band, selling concession items or helping in other ways to make this year's event successful.

Reserved bleacher seats are still available for $3.50 each. General admission tickets at $2.50 and children (6-12) are admitted for $1. Barbecue plates will be prepared and served by the boys for $3.50 at noon each day. The public is also welcome to attend the Sunday morning chapel service at the Ranch at 10:30, and rodeo dress is appropriate.

The Boys Ranch Rodeo is the only one of its kind in the nation with boys of all ages riding professional rodeo stock. Further information and reservations are available by calling (806)372-2341, or by writing P.O. Box 1890, Amarillo, Texas 79174.

Wes Unsel, the former star center of the Washington Bullets, led the NBA in rebounding in 1975 despite the fact he was only 6 feet, 7½ inches tall.

Bill Sharman, a member of the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame, led the NBA in free throw percentage seven times.

Houston whips Chicago Cubs, 7-1

Astros' Ryan with 250th career game

By The Associated Press
Houston Astros pitcher Nolan Ryan says he was too concerned about the pennant race in the National League West to even realize he was poised to win his 250th game. Ryan did manage to win his 250th game, becoming the 36th pitcher to do so as he pitched six strong innings to lead the division-leading Astros to a 7-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs. Ryan gave up only one hit, two walks and struck out five in six innings.

Because of an elbow injury earlier in the season, Ryan is limited to approximately 100 pitches per game. Charlie Kerfeld relieved Ryan, allowing only one run on three hits in the final three innings. He struck out five and recorded his sixth save of the year.

"I wanted to go out there and have a good game tonight," said Ryan, "I didn't even think about the 250th win. I'm too concerned about the pennant race."

"I'm optimistic that the arm will hold up the rest of the year. It felt real good tonight," Ryan added.

Cubs manager Gene Michael was impressed. "(Ryan) is unbelievable. He doesn't throw as hard as he did 10 years ago, but he still gets the job done," said Michael. "He has to slow up sometime."

Phil Garner paced the Astros 11-hit attack with four singles and drove in two runs. Utility infielder Jim Pankovits also drove in two runs and sparked on defense.

Pankovits, who started at second base in place of the injured Bill

Doran, said, "I'm happy to contribute in any capacity. I work hard on all parts of my game and I'm ready when the team needs me."

The Astros scored three runs in the third and fourth innings to take a commanding 6-0 lead, victimizing Cubs starter and loser Jamie Moyer, 5-4.

Walks to Billy Hatcher and Pankovits, a single by Garner, a sacrifice by Glenn Davis and a single by Kevin Bass brought in three runs in the third inning.

In the fourth, singles by Alan Ashby and Dickie Thon led to run-scoring singles by Pankovits and Garner.

The Astros continue to lead both the San Francisco Giants and Cincinnati Reds by seven games in the National League West.

"No doubt we watched the scoreboard," said Pankovits, "But we have our destiny in our hands. The other teams still have to catch us."

"Sometime after the All Star game, this team really got the feeling we could win," said Garner.

Elsewhere in the National League, it was New York 6, San Diego 5; Philadelphia 2, Los Angeles 1; San Francisco 3, Montreal 2; Cincinnati

9, Pittsburgh 5, and St. Louis 2, Atlanta 1.

Mets 6, Padres 5

Even those who have followed the ups and downs of the Amazon' Mets for a quarter of a century would be hard-pressed to recall a whackier finish. After all, there aren't many games that end with a player singling into a game-ending double play.

But it happened Wednesday night to San Diego's Tim Flannery in the bottom of the 11th inning. Mets center fielder Len Dykstra made a perfect throw to catcher John Gibbons, who tagged Garry Templeton out at home plate and threw to Howard Johnson to get the aggressive Flannery at third base, wrapping up a 6-5 victory for the high-flying Mets.

"It was unbelievable," Flannery said following his game-ending hit. "I first said there was no way they were going to throw Tempy out. I glanced over my shoulder and I thought the ball was loose. I took three steps toward third and I heard the ump call Tempy out and I knew I was a dead duck."

The Mets blew a 5-0 lead and what would have been Dwight Gooden's 14th victory. They went ahead in the top of the 11th on a sacrifice fly by Keith Hernandez.

Darryl Strawberry led the Mets with a two-run single and a two-run homer, his 19th of the season and 100th of his career.

Reds 9, Pirates 5

Eric Davis hit a game-winning grand slam with two outs in the ninth inning off Don Robinson, 2-3. Davis also stole two bases, giving him 64 for the season.

Dave Parker added a three-run homer, his 26th, and a run-scoring double for Cincinnati, giving him eight RBI in the last two games.

Cardinals 2, Braves 1

Rick Mahler walked Terry Pendleton with a full count, two outs and the bases loaded in the eighth inning to force in the winning run.

Mahler, 11-14, has lost nine of 10 decisions since June 30.

Todd Worrell, 8-9, got the final seven outs in relief of John Tudor, who left with a stiff left shoulder. Tudor allowed eight hits, walked four and struck out four.

Phillies 2, Dodgers 1

Bruce Ruffin, 7-3, left a 1-1 tie for a pinch-hitter and wound up a winner when the Phillies pushed across an unearned run in the ninth inning.

Jeff Stone reached first on short-stop Dave Anderson's error in the ninth, stole second and scored when Von Hayes singled.

Loser Bob Welch, 6-10, allowed nine hits, walked three and struck out 10.

Giants 3, Expos 2

Montreal reliever Andy McGaffigan, 8-5, committed a throwing error and threw two wild pitches in a decisive two-run eighth inning.

That was some overdue good fortune for San Francisco's Kelly Downs, 1-4. The Giants have scored nine runs in seven starts for him.

Cowboys Center is diversified complex

By MURRAY OLDERMAN
VALLEY RANCH, Texas (NEA) — "America's Team" is now lodged near Dallas in what is officially known as Cowboys Center. If there was ever an indicator of the bigness of the NFL, this is it. Team president Tex Schramm and head coach Tom Landry plot the present and future of the Dallas Cowboys in a new 80,000 square-foot headquarters.

Located at Valley Ranch in northwest Dallas County, the complex has three separate wings, abutting two regulation football practice fields — the Cowboys actually play their NFL games at Texas Stadium in the community of Irving.

Coming along with team PR official Doug Todd and me on our tour of the huge new Cowboys Center — first stop, some commercial operations.

Through a picture window, see the Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders Dance Academy. Here the fairest of Texas hand-picked lassies rehearse their sideline routines. The wood floor also serves as a public dance studio, under the supervision of three "Cowgirls" who are licensed instructors.

Next is the Dallas Cowboy travel agency, which also has two branches in other parts of the city. "A real good business," notes Todd.

Down the hall are the spacious publication offices (and library), home base for the Cowboys Weekly (circulation 90,000), with typesetting and paste-up capabilities. Owned by the team, it is editorially autonomous — even Schramm doesn't see an advance copy.

Nearby is the Dallas Cowboys' Pro Shop, a retail center for team paraphernalia and mementoes.

Proceed, under one roof, to the administration center, where Schramm has a sumptuous suite — in which one of the Cowboys' two Super Bowl trophies is on display. The serious financial business of the team — accounting, etc. — is conducted here, plus the marketing and public relations work.

The biggest piece of the complex, however, is ceded to football.

Landry's office — entered through a huge carved wooden door (with bas-reliefs of Cowboys Stadium and the Super Bowl trophy) — would be fitting for any board chairman. The second of the team's actual Super Bowl trophies graces a corner, with designed lighting, of the coach's office.

The centerpiece of the football wing is the practice-site locker room with 56 individual stalls, arranged for privacy from prying eyes. A huge whirlpool can comfortably accommodate 28 oversized Cowboy torsos at one time. It has already been dubbed "Lake Landry."

Nearby, a Cowboys auditorium is used as the main team meeting room and for big press conferences. There are also two banks of coaches' meeting rooms, one for offense and one for defense; a studio for Schramm's weekly radio show; and a high-tech communications center that processes and plays tapes of all Cowboys workouts, scrimmages and games.

Add to this a kitchen, a dining room and a players lounge around a courtyard that will soon have spewing water falls.

Club Med never had anything like this.

Oh yes — besides the football fields — there are also two racquetball courts, a tennis court and an outside, covered concrete pad for universal exercise equipment.

Right now, only 30 of 200 acres in Cowboys' Center, a joint development of the Dallas Cowboys Football Club and Triland Corporation, are developed.

By the middle of 1987, they expect to construct a Dallas Cowboys Showplace, with a $14-million building fronted by a seven-story glass star, an indoor football-oriented version of Disneyland.

Of course, given their druthers, Landry and Schramm might trade all this for a winning quarterback.

Glanville gives Oilers a winning attitude

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer
HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oilers Coach Jerry Glanville wears black on the sidelines so his players can see him, and he teaches "smash-mouth" football that emphasizes toughness. But he lightens the mood during heavy workouts with nicknames for players such as "Bula Bula" (Allen Pinkett), "Captain Video" (Robert Lyles) and "Cornbread" (Frank Bush).

Glanville also has given the team a winning attitude and a winning record going into Saturday's preseason finale against the Dallas Cowboys. A victory would give the Oilers a 4-0 record and their second unbeaten preseason ever.

"I make some of the calls and I don't want the players on the field having a hard time finding me," Glanville said.

At practice, Glanville never is hard to find. He's in the midst of the action, praising, chiding, joking.

"The best thing I can say about Jerry Glanville is that he's a hands-on coach," General Manager Ladd Herzog says.

There is nothing aloof about Glanville, who is in his first pro head coaching job. He doesn't coach from a tower or leave the on-field instruction to his assistants.

But Glanville is at a loss to describe his coaching style. He didn't plan a style and there is no mold for the Glanville model.

"I didn't sit down and think for one second what a head coach should be like," Glanville said. "A coach has to be himself. If you try to put on a front, the players will see through it in five minutes."

Glanville, the Oilers' defensive coordinator last season, has earned praise for his organizational skills and his knowledge of offensive philosophy as well as defense.

"Sometimes he'll say something to a quarterback or running back and we'll step back and have to say, 'He's right,'" running back Stan Edwards said. "He knows both sides of the football. Because of his defensive background, he knows what will hurt a defense."

Rangers beat Boston, 4-1

By The Associated Press
For the first time since July 4, the opposing pitchers couldn't scan the Texas Rangers lineup and ask, "Who is that masked man?"

But on Wednesday night, the Boston Red Sox might have been tempted to check Rangers catcher Don Slaught's ID card after he banged out three hits in Texas' 4-1 win over Boston.

After having his nose and cheekbone broken by a pitch on May 18 in Boston, Slaught returned to action on July 4 wearing a protective plastic shield on his batting helmet.

But he'd been struggling at the plate and went into Wednesday night's series finale with six hits in his past 35 at-bats.

So he shed the shield during batting practice and led the Rangers' 12-hit attack on Boston starter Bruce Hurst, 8-7, and reliever Bob Stanley.

Edwin Correa, 8-11, was the beneficiary of the assault and got 3 1-3 hitless innings of relief from Mitch Williams, who recorded his sixth save.

"Donnie Slaught getting three hits without the mask? That's something," said Rangers manager Bobby Valentine. "He said he had a little difficulty seeing the ball through the mask, so he took it off and said the ball looked like a beach ball."

In addition to Slaught's three hits, Larry Parrish contributed his 21st home run and a single and Toby Harrah had his second home run in two nights.

"We know we've done a good job when we take two of three from Boston," said Harrah, whose homer was his sixth of the season. "They don't have an easy out in the lineup."

Williams proved otherwise, relieving Correa with the score 2-1, two outs and the bases loaded in the sixth.

He retired Wade Boggs, the American League's leading hitter, on a fly to left, then pitched three hitless innings to wrap up the victory, the Rangers' fifth in their six-game homestand.

The victory moved the Rangers to within 3½ games of California in the American League West while Boston's lead over Toronto in the East shrunk to five games.

In other AL action, Toronto beat Cleveland twice, 3-2 in 12 innings and 6-3; Chicago defeated Kansas City 3-1, Minnesota beat Milwaukee 7-5 and Seattle defeated Baltimore 4-1.

Blue Jays 3, Indians 2;
Blue Jays 6, Indians 3

It was too early to count out the Toronto Blue Jays.

"We're five down, and we've got a ways to go," Blue Jays Manager Jimmy Williams says, "but for us, it's progress."

The Blue Jays swept a doubleheader at Cleveland Wednesday night, 3-2 in 12 innings and 6-3.

Ernie Whitt homered in both games for Toronto, and Tom Henke got both saves, giving him 19.

Whitt's leadoff homer in the 12th inning of the opener gave Toronto the victory. Tony Fernandez doubled home a run that broke a 3-3 tie in the eighth inning of the nightcap.

Rangers 4, Red Sox 1
Mitch Williams pitched 3 1-3 innings of hitless relief to polish off a five-hitter started by Edwin Correa, and the Rangers pulled within 3½ games of California in the AL West by beating visiting Boston.

Larry Parrish and Toby Harrah homered for Texas.

Correa, 8-11, went 5 2-3 innings and allowed five hits, walked five and struck out five in breaking a personal two-game losing streak, while the loss went to left-hander Bruce Hurst, 8-7, who gave up 11 hits in six innings.

White Sox 3, Royals 1
Floyd Bannister, 8-10, scattered six Kansas City hits for his fourth complete game of the season to help the White Sox break a five-game losing streak. Ron Karkovice, playing in only his ninth major league game, hit a three-run homer in the second inning, accounting for all of Chicago's runs.

Twins 7, Brewers 5
Kirby Puckett had three singles and a double to break out of a 1-for-21 slump and drove in three runs as Minnesota ended a three-game losing streak by beating Milwaukee, which had won three in a row.

Minnesota starter Neal Heaton, 5-12, allowed 12 hits, five earned runs and two walks while striking out three through six innings.

Mariners 4, Orioles 1

Ken Phelps homered to help Mike Trujillo win his first start since coming to Seattle in a trade from Boston. Trujillo, 1-0, who came to the Mariners on Aug. 22, held Baltimore to five hits in five innings, and Mark Huisman pitched four innings to two-hit relief for his fifth save.

Bears have high expectations

WACO, Texas (AP) — There's a different atmosphere at Baylor this year. The Bears have the aroma of a conference favorite.

That was evident Wednesday when the Southwest Conference press tour made its annual pilgrimage to Baylor.

Baylor has won two Southwest Conference championships and played in five bowl games in Grant Teaff's 15 years as the head coach. But this is one of those rare times in Baylor football history where preseason expectations are high by both the Bears and media.

In the past, Baylor has reveled in the role of an underdog such as a year ago when Teaff was visibly upset at the media's low expectations of the Bears. All the Bears did was go on to win nine games and thrash LSU in the 27th Liberty Bowl.

A lack of respect won't be the case this season. For the first time since the early 1960s, Baylor is receiving the attention and praise normally heaped upon Texas and Texas A&M.

Baylor was picked to finish second by Texas Football magazine, and are ranked 12th in both wire service polls.

"We feel pretty good about ourselves," Teaff said, "but living up to people's expectations is a tremendous challenge."

The Bears will be under the media microscope as they prepare to open the season next Saturday against Wyoming.

Teaff is confident the media attention won't affect the Bears.

Defensive tackle Steve Grumbine credits a team laden with fifth-year seniors and Teaff as the reason why the Bears can handle the attention and adulation.

"We've got a bunch of fifth-year guys who have been around for a long time," Grumbine said. "This team has the leadership not to let anything be a disruptive force. I think everyone realizes you can read the stories written about you, but it doesn't play your game on Saturday. I've never seen words make a tackle. Plus coach Teaff runs a tight ship. He's going to make sure we have our shoes tied and belts buckled this season."

At Texas Tech, Billy Joe Tolliver was the late-season surprise during the 1985 football season. After losing the starting quarterback job during spring workouts, the Boyd native is again the Red Raiders' No. 1 signal-caller.

First-year Tech head coach David McWilliams made the announcement this week during a question-and-answer session with members of the 1986 Southwest Conference Press Tour Monday.

"Tolliver's still our starting quarterback," McWilliams said. "He's doing a lot better as a drop-back quarterback. That was the hardest thing he had to learn. He was more of a roll-out quarterback last year. He's performed well this fall."

As the leader of the offense, the outspoken Tolliver, a 6-foot-1, 190-pound sophomore, knows just what the Raiders need this season to snap a string of seven consecutive losing seasons.

"I've said it a thousand times. We've got the defense — one rated (among the leaders) in the nation every year," he said. "The only thing that hurts us is a lack of offense."

That's pretty much the story of Tech's 4-7 season last fall. The Raiders were eighth in the conference in both total offense and rushing offense and sixth in passing offense. Tech didn't have a top 10 rusher or passer, and only the ninth-ranked receiver.

Yet the Raiders were close to an 8-3 year. They lost two games when two-point conversion attempts failed with less than one minute to play, and lost two others when opponents kicked school-record 57-yard field goals late in the fourth quarter.

McWilliams' staff is also hoping the Raiders understand a new offense.

Following a trend in college football, Tech will combine several strategies this season with an overriding theme: pass the football.

"I'd like to come in and be able to (complete) 60 percent (of my passes)," said Tolliver, who won the QB battle with junior Aaron Keesee and senior Monte McGuire.

The offense will combine the "I"

Ways with Wine
by David Hutchins

FOR COMPARISON'S SAKE
Along with sushi, Americans seem to be discovering sake. This is the delicate, slightly warmed drink from Japan. Many people think the sake is a rice wine because of its similarity in texture and flavor to grape wine. In reality, sake is a brewed product much closer to beer than wine. Like beer, it is made from a grain (rice) that must have its starch converted to sugar before it can be fermented. Beer barley is moistened and germinated (malted) before being fermented. In the manufacture of sake, the starch conversion takes place at the same time as fermentation. As a result, undiluted sake has an alcohol content of somewhere around 20 percent. This is the highest of any naturally fermented beverage. THE STORE features an extensive inventory of spirits, wines and beer from around the world. You'll always find our staff very knowledgeable about everything we carry so please don't ever hesitate to ask questions or to ask our assistance in your selection. Stop by 400 N. 25 Mile, 364-7802. Open: Mon. - Sat. 10-9, use our drive up door until midnight for beer and wine, on Sun. only beer and wine is available from 12-12. Once they are bottled, sakes do not age.

UPS cargo plane crashes near airport

TEXARKANA, Ark. (AP) — One person was killed early today when a cargo plane leased to United Parcel Service crashed during an approach to Texarkana Municipal Airport, the Federal Aviation Administration said.

THE PRISONER IS GONE! WHAT HAPPENED?

Peter went to the home of Mary, mother of John Mark, where many were gathered for a prayer meeting. He knocked at the door in the gate, and a girl named Rhoda came to open it. When she recognized Peter, she was so awed that she ran back inside to tell everyone that Peter was standing outside in the street!

They didn't believe her. "You're out of your mind," they said. When she insisted they decided, "It must be his angel. (They must have killed him.)"

Meanwhile Peter continued knocking! When they finally went out and opened the door, their surprise knew no bounds. He motioned for them to quiet down and told them what had happened and how the Lord had brought him out of jail. "Tell James and the others what happened," he said--and left for safer quarters.

At dawn, the jail was in great commotion. What had happened to Peter? When Herod sent for him and found that he wasn't there, he had the 16 guards arrested, court-marshaled and sentenced to death. Afterwards he left to live in Caesarea for a while. Acts 12:12-19

The FAA had said but declined comment about where the flight had originated.

Texarkana, Ark., Fire Chief Sammy Jewell said the wreckage was confined to a small area. "The aircraft wasn't going very fast and hit on its back. There wasn't much skidding," Jewell said.

Fire officials were awaiting instructions from the NTSB before removing the wreckage, Jewell said.

Lee Rains, a supervisor for General Telephone Co., said two of his employees were driving on U.S. 67 near the airport when the plane crashed. "They said it was sputtering and all of a sudden it just flipped over and went down," Rains said.

THE PRISONER IS GONE! WHAT HAPPENED?

Peter went to the home of Mary, mother of John Mark, where many were gathered for a prayer meeting. He knocked at the door in the gate, and a girl named Rhoda came to open it. When she recognized Peter, she was so awed that she ran back inside to tell everyone that Peter was standing outside in the street!

They didn't believe her. "You're out of your mind," they said. When she insisted they decided, "It must be his angel. (They must have killed him.)"

Co-ops, SPS agreement could benefit irrigators

Irrigation customers of South Plains Electric Cooperative, Inc. of Lubbock, Texas, and Bailey County Electric Association of Muleshoe, Texas, could benefit from an experimental rate structure agreed to by the cooperatives and Southwestern Public Service Company (SPS).

The rate structure is pending approval by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC).

The arrangement would allow the cooperatives to surpass their target demands for electricity without increasing their cost of electricity per kilowatt-hour or interrupting service to their irrigation customers, said J.C. Roberts, general manager of South Plains cooperative, and Duane Lloyd, general manager of Bailey County cooperative.

SPS supplies wholesale power to the cooperatives.

Under the existing rate structure, the cooperatives interrupt service to irrigation customers when a target peak demand is reached. This is done because the cooperatives' electric bills for the next year are based in part on the peak demand during each preceding summer. The concept is that classes of customers who cause the need for more power plant capacity to meet brief peaks in electric usage should pay their fair share for the cost of additional capacity, said Gary Gibson, SPS vice president-marketing.

The experimental rate structure is possible because there is ample electric generating capacity available due to the completion last year of SPS' Tolk Station power plant unit number two near Muleshoe, Gibson said.

Under the new rate structure, prices effective September 1986 through August 1987 would be based on the target or actual peak demand — whichever is lower — that occurred from June through August 1986. Thus, if farmers need to irrigate this summer more than the cooperatives' target amount, they wouldn't risk having their service interrupted simply because demand is exceeding the target.

South Plains Electric Cooperative serves 5,570 irrigation wells. Bailey County Electric Association serves 2,449 irrigation wells.

This rate structure would be instituted on a one-year basis. After one year, the electric cooperatives and SPS will review the effectiveness of the program.

The two electric cooperatives and SPS applied to FERC for the new rate structure on July 9. A ruling is expected later this summer. FERC regulates wholesale sales by SPS to electric cooperatives.

South Plains Electric Cooperative provides electric service to portions of the City of Lubbock, and in the counties of Crosby, Hale, Hockley, Lubbock and Lynn.

Bailey County Electric Association serves customers in Bailey, Castro, Cochran, Lamb and Parmer counties.

At church conference

Financial problems to be discussed

COLLEGE STATION — Strategies for dealing with the crisis in Texas' heartland—the financial woes that have beset farmers and ranchers and smalltown businesses — will be discussed at the 1986 Town and Country Church Conference at Texas A&M University Sept. 15-17.

"Rural Crisis in Texas: Hope-filled Strategies" will be the theme of the 41st annual conference, which is for clergy and church lay leaders.

The conference is aimed at identifying dimensions of the current economic crisis, at understanding the concerns about the crisis, at determining what churches and agencies are doing to overcome the crisis, at providing church leaders with positive approaches for helping families in financial difficulties, and at exploring ways that churches can cooperate with other agencies in information and action programs.

Key parts of the conference will feature small group listening sessions, special interest areas, and a session on developing a constructive response for dealing with crisis issues, points out Dr. Dave Ruesink, sociologist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, who is coordinating the conference program.

"We hope to get a good perspective of how clergy and lay leaders are involved in dealing with the financial crisis throughout Texas and how their efforts and the efforts of various agencies can be interfaced for greater impact," Ruesink points out. "We want to develop positive approaches for dealing with problems that are affecting families, churches and communities as a result of the current financial crisis."

The conference opens with registration at 10 a.m. on Sept. 15 and continues through noon on Sept. 17.

Keynote speaker at the opening session at 1 p.m. the first day will be Charles Kanten with the American Lutheran Church of Minneapolis, Minn., who will discuss "A Displaced Farmer Helping Church Leaders Understand the Farmer's Story."

The morning program on Tuesday, Sept. 16, will feature Roman Catholic Bishop Michael J. Sheehan of the Diocese of Lubbock. Sheehan, who has been involved with the agricultural crisis in the Lubbock area, will address highly charged emotional issues associated with the agricultural crisis.

His address will be followed by a special video developed by Charles Kanten titled "Another Family Firm."

Special interest workshops Tuesday afternoon will deal with these topics: "Agriculture," "Energy," "Direct Service Providers," and "Last Ditch Efforts—Ethical and Legal Aspects."

A highlight of the conference will be the recognition of the Texas Rural Minister of the year at a banquet that evening. The award is presented annually by the Progressive Farmer magazine.

The concluding session on Wednesday morning, Sept. 17, will feature remarks by Frank Dietz of Dallas, executive director of the Texas Conference of Churches, and Robert Greene of Luling, director of the Resource Center for Small Churches. Also, Lucy Todd of Austin, with the Texas Department of Human Services, will talk about the "Texas Crisis Hotline," and Roddy Peoples of San Angelo, with the VSA Radio Network, will give an overview of his radio program, "Cow Country News."

Promoting U.S. foods pays off

WASHINGTON (AP) — A special promotion of American food products in West Germany will lead to nearly $1 million in additional grocery sales, a modest trade coup that illustrates one of the export goals sought by U.S. farm officials.

The Agriculture Department described Wednesday how a large-scale "Eat and Drink American" retail food promotion went over in West Berlin earlier this year. It was a success, said Hilton P. Settle, U.S. agricultural trade officer in Hamburg.

Settle said it was the first large U.S. food promotion in more than 20 years to test the potentially rich West German market.

Although the prime export items for farmers are still raw grains, cotton, livestock products and other commodities, U.S. farm leaders for years have been trying to get a larger share of the overseas market for high-value finished or partly finished products.

By selling flour, cake mixes, ready-to-cook chicken, high-quality steaks and pork roasts, canned and frozen grocery items, processors can use more American workers to turn out goods bought by foreigners.

Settle, writing in a new issue of Foreign Agriculture magazine, said the two-week West German promotion took place in about 100 stores of the Bolle retail food organization.

Food items featured in the stores included California wines, raisins, dried prunes, prune juice, soft drinks, whiskey, turkey livers, thighs and drumsticks, rice, orange juice concentrate, canned corn and kidney beans.

Other items promoted were popcorn (raw and popped), flavored popcorn, almonds, red delicious apples, fresh pears, canned California cling peaches, fresh grapefruit, grapefruit juice, and strip and sirloin steak.

Settle said consumer sales of 30 U.S. food and beverage products during the two weeks totaled about $445,000. Further, he said, a dozen of the U.S. products have been listed by the Bolle chain in Berlin, accounting for additional sales of $132,000 in three months following the promotion. Before the promotion, Bolle carried only three U.S. items.

In all, he said, the two-week promotion is expected to generate nearly $1 million in sales over a year's time.

West Germany is one of the top 10 foreign markets for U.S. farm products, accounting for about $1 billion annually.

Don't underestimate the value of a good brisk walk. It won't burn up as many calories as jogging or swimming, but it's twice as effective as bowling or playing golf with a cart, according to the Health Insurance Association of America.

On Oct. 3, 1863, President Abraham Lincoln proclaimed the last Thursday in November as Thanksgiving Day. The holiday was moved to the third Thursday of November in 1939, before Congress moved it to its present location on the calendar, the fourth Thursday of November.
