It's a Sesquicentennial celebration

Jubilee activities continue through week

The Town & Country Jubilee started out on the right foot Saturday with the Greg Black Memorial 10K and 2-mile Fun Run. (See results, Page 8A)

Colorful banners have been put up and the Jubilee committee is putting the finishing touches on the Sesquicentennial Year Jubilee.

There is still time to get involved. The Chamber of Commerce has several game booth kits available and parade chairman Hawk Kreig would like this year's march down main to be the longest ever to make it a Sesquicentennial memory.

HOSE CUTTING TODAY

More Jubilee activities are planned today with the Hereford Fire Department's Open House and "Hose Cutting" at 2 p.m. Tours of the new facility will be given and a cornerstone ceremony held, according to Fire Marshall Jay Spain.

JUBILEE SALES

Shoppers will want to check out merchants' Jubilee sales this week. Also, many stores will be passing out Jubilee Bonus Checks good for discounts and prizes, but redeemable only after Aug. 16. Pat Lawson is in charge of the sale project.

DOMINOES, CARDS

Name your game on Friday evening. The Hereford Senior Citizens is inviting the town to play dominoes, 42, bridge and Skip-bo in tournament rounds which start at 7 p.m. at the Senior Citizens Center. Players needing partners may call the Center to pre-register. Procrastinators will be allowed to sign up just before play begins, too.

Margie Daniels and Homer Garrison are leading the game night.

JUNIOR RODEO

The Hereford Young Riders Rodeo will have performances at 7 p.m. in the Riders Club Arena on Friday and Saturday. Fourteen events are planned for the youth.

Admission is $3 for adults and $1 for children 6 through 12 years and senior citizens. Children under 5-years and under are admitted free. Travis Shields and Sandy Burrus are the head honchos of the rodeo.

JUBILEE OF ARTS

This year's exhibit of arts and crafts in the Hereford Community Center promised to be the most diversified. Jolene Bledsoe and Linda Minchew have booked the entire center with artist from throughout the region.

The show will be open from noon until 6 p.m. on Friday and from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m. on Saturday.

Joining for exhibits are the Genealogical Society, King's Manor, Deaf Smith County 4-H, the National Cowgirl Hall of Fame, and the Jubilee Quilt Show.

Praline, chocolate, and strawberry crepes are on the menu of the Toujours Amis Study Club concession in the Center during the art show.

JUBILEE PARADE

Hawk Krieg says the Jubilee Parade is "shaping up."

Boy Scout Troop 51 will carry flags to kick-off the parade at 10:30 a.m. Twelve engines from the fire department will drive the route from the Hereford High parking lot down Avenue F to Park, and south on Main.

Ian Hensley, a resident of Hereford's twin-city of Bordertown, South Australia, will ride as an honored guest in the parade.

Parade entries will be judged at 9:30 a.m. and no entrant arriving after 10 a.m. will be eligible to compete for the awards and ribbons. First through third place awards will be granted in categories of floats, vehicles, riders group, commercial, and organizational. Ribbons will be awarded to children who enter in costume or with decorated bikes. All entries need to register with the Chamber office before the parade.

Bill Johnson, Raul Guerrero, and Buddy Peeler will be in charge of the judging stand, music and announcements at the parade.

JUBILEE JUNCTION

Fifteen game booths, a petting zoo, various exhibits and eateries are planned for the Jubilee Junction which opens at noon in Dameron Park after the parade ends.

The Chamber office has room for more organizations to join and offers "booth kits" that only need a person to take charge. Registration forms are available at the Chamber office.

Chairman Waldo Baxter will have booth assignments ready soon.

Entertainment from atop a stage in the park is planned. Opening acts are by the Hereford Day Care children and by a group of singers from the Hereford Senior Citizens Association. Bluegrass, gospel, western and rock music is on the agenda for that afternoon.

Bucket calf project awards will be presented on stage at 2 p.m., according to County 4-H agent Davy Vestal.

Jubilee Practice

Choral talent from the Hereford Senior Citizens Center is being polished for the singing group's performance at the Town & Country Jubilee Junction set for Saturday, Aug. 16, in Dameron Park. The singers have slated several patriotic Texas songs, a few gospel numbers, and some humorous music.

Three sites equal until after study, manager says

By CINDY SMITH
Staff Writer

Linda McClain's world is on hold. McClain, Texas project manager for the world's first permanent repository, now works in the Department of Energy office for the Salt Repository Project in Columbus, Ohio. She is waiting to come to Texas to manage the site characterization planned for Deaf Smith County.

She will act as the Department of Energy's liaison to the governor, local officials, and the local public. McClain will be heavily involved in developing a public participation process and consultation.

In a telephone interview this week, The Brand asked McClain if the Deaf Smith County site is any closer to being chosen as the permanent repository? McClain thinks not.

"Since the decision was made, the site characterization program hasn't been kicked off progressively in any of the three selected sites," said McClain.

"It's a little hard to give a side-by-side comparison of the three sites because each of the rock types have certain characteristics that appear to be favorable for waste storage and they each have some characteristics that require some additional study," explained McClain.

Some of those characteristics are that the Nevada site is near a nuclear bomb test site and the Washington site close to the volcanic Mount St. Helen's.

According to McClain, one site hasn't had any more opposition than the other two. "In all the sites we've had under study there has been different levels of opposition," she said. "Every piece of land is dear to someone."

Concerning safety measures, McClain feels that the DOE study will prove what can be noted as a safety prevention system when dealing with the waste. She said that part of planning for an emergency is part of understanding what "might" happen. Underground and surface land nuclear accidents are the two kinds of emergencies that will be considered.

"I think the first measure is the very careful technique of drilling through the aquifer and putting in casing and seals in the shaft construction," said McClain.

"In order to get a license to put nuclear waste in the ground at all we have to demonstrate very strongly that the aquifer will be safe and shaft construction is one prospect," she said.

McClain said that in selecting the Texas site that the geology and the behavior of underground water both proved to offer natural protection of the water being contaminated.

Nuclear waste will be stored in a solid salt formation 1,500 feet below the Ogallala if the repository is in Texas.

Some people are wondering how the DOE will stop the water, if it is contaminated, from reaching the seven other states. But McClain explained that the water flow would prevent this.

"Based on the data that we have (we will be collecting much, much more), if there were a hole that penetrated the Ogallala and the salt and then the much deeper water formation in that area, the data we have now indicates that the water would flow downward instead of upward due to water pressure differentials of the upper aquifers," explained McClain.

"We think the most likely way that this repository could be affected would be future oil and gas explorations. If someone in the future were to drill through the repository the water flow would be downward, not upward," she said. "And if they were to drill through and reach a waste package, any radioactive release would be carried downward very deep due to the water flow."

McClain explained that in that very deep water, the flow travels extremely slowly and within the time it would take to travel a mile the radioactivity would decay to a harmless level. "It would take a

Long agenda slated for school board meeting

Hereford Schools trustees will face a 28-item agenda in their regular meeting set for 6 p.m. Tuesday in the administration building.

At 5:30 p.m. a public hearing on the new budget will be held.

Guidelines for curriculum which were presented in a special meeting last week are expected to be voted upon in the meeting.

Other business on the agenda, other than routine matters, includes:

Reports -- from the Texas Research League, the Environmental Protection Agency, a policy update, board committees, from the assistant superintendent for instruction, on Honors English II, and from the superintendent.

Policy -- an ordinance setting the tax rate, policy on dyslexia students, a 1985-86 budget amendment.

Spending -- adoption of the 1986-87 budget, purchase of computers, a contract on roofing at Bluebonnet, student health insurance, special salary schedule, bids on milk and bread.

Other -- a request from Elizabeth Criner regarding private music lessons, a cancellation certificate, and personnel report.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Less than 4 percent of $1 billion in the Reagan administration's drought relief package will trickle down to farmers in the parched Southeast and Middle Atlantic states, the House Agriculture Committee says.

The program, announced a week ago by Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng, would boost the advance income subsidies being given to farmers by 10 percent.

But figures worked out by the Democratic-controlled committee show that of the $1 billion in additional advance payments, only about $32 million will go to farmers in the eight Southeastern and mid-Atlantic states with counties so far designated as agricultural disaster areas.

The largest chunk of the payments — $143 million — will go to farmers in Iowa, which has had well above normal levels of rainfall and is near harvesting a bumper corn crop. Illinois, with $96 million, would get the second-highest amount of help.

The $1 billion in so-called "advance deficiency payments" was the largest single item in the administration's drought-relief package, which was largely a compilation of existing programs. It included help for buying livestock feed and emergency loans.

The numbers reflect the usual distribution of farm subsidies, which are based on volume of production. The Southeast is a relatively small producer of the major subsidized crops like wheat, corn, cotton and rice, and a smaller proportion of farmers there participate in federal subsidy programs.

But several Democrats criticized the way the aid was announced, saying it made it appear more generous to the Southeast than it actually was. "They're using it as filler to make it look like they're doing something," said Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla. "It's just not honest."

Daniel Amstutz, undersecretary of agriculture for international affairs and commodity programs, said the aid had specifically been requested by officials of drought states and denied that there was any intent to make it appear targeted strictly to those areas.

"I can understand the confusion," Amstutz said, adding that some news reports had made it appear there would be $1 billion in drought aid. "I'm sorry for that. There's been no intent" to confuse the issue, he said.

The announcement came a week after President Reagan, stumping for Republican candidates in Columbia, S.C., said the drought "is reaching tragic proportions, one of the worst in the century" and promised: "Everything that our farm program will allow us to do, we're going to try to do."

A fatter drought aid package was passed Wednesday by the House, and a similar measure has been approved by the Senate as an amendment to an unrelated bill.

Senior high schedules ready by Wednesday

High school class schedules will be ready by Wednesday, according to the school district's main office.

Registration for junior high students and elementary school pupils will be Aug. 20-22 at each campus.

Classes begin Sept. 2.

High school students may pick up schedules from 8:30 a.m. until 3:30 p.m. in the counselor's office, which is temporarily located in the home economics room during remodeling.

Junior high students may pick up schedules between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. on registration days, Aug. 20-22.

Each elementary building will be open from 8:30 a.m. until 3:30 p.m. for registration. Students transferring from other districts need to bring any information from the other district, such as report cards and health records, for enrollment. (The Hereford district can obtain records from the old district if necessary.)

Pupils entering school for the first time will need to bring immunization records and proof of age. Pupils are required to have shots for diphtheria, rubella, rubeola, tetanus, polio, and mumps.

Pre-Kindergarten pupils must be 4-years-old by Sept. 1, economically disadvantaged, or have limited English proficiency.

Kindergarten pupils must be 5-years-old by Sept. 1.

million years to go a mile," she said. "The example I've just discussed is what we have to be able to demonstrate and document for the data we collect before the Nuclear Regulatory Commission would consider a license for that radioactive waste storage site," McClain said. "So it's all solid waste in a solid rock half a mile deep."

People in the area are concerned about liquid waste, they fear it more than solid waste. There are no plans to store any liquid waste at the Texas repository site. She explained that any liquid wastes will be consolidated before storage.

The liquid waste is not any more harmful than the solid nuclear waste, according to McClain. She felt that the fear of liquid waste is simply perceptual. "Liquid you pour whereas if you drop a solid form, it could be picked up in pieces," she said.

Other emergency procedures for the accidents occurring on the surface, regardless of where the repository is located, includes a DOE-type SWAT (Special Weapons and Tactile) team that would be notified immediately of any nuclear accident.

"We've handled spent fuel rods on the surface for several decades," said McClain. "And we really haven't had those kinds of accidents with that magnitude (like the Chernobyl incident) in our country."

"But there is an emergency response capability for the Panhandle area. For example, there are teams around the country who, in the event of an accident, can move in almost instantly to determine the level of hazard involved, to insure that people in the area are protected and to clean up materials that might cause radiation exposure," said McClain.

She referred to the Three Mile Island accident where people were evacuated. "It was a good precaution to take although it was not life threatening radioactive levels," she said.

"People don't understand the capabilities the country has already to respond to emergencies of all types," McClain said.

McClain said there still isn't a target date for the repository because DOE is working on some things internally.

"We will be planning public meetings once we know when we will relocate and we'll be able to talk in considerable detail about what studies will be going on over the next few years, what schedules we'll be working toward, contract opportunities, how to go about getting contracts for the project, and land acquisition activities," McClain said. "What we're estimating for our first group of people down there will only be 10 to 12 folks. And then, as we get access to land, and begin technical studies, we would move the remainder of our staff," explained McClain.

She said that the DOE's staff for Texas is about 40 people and the contractor's staff is about 150 to 200, but not all will move.

"So, as the project builds, we'll gradually move our people down there and hopefully hire local people. Also, during the project build up there will be a number of contracts and we think most of them will be local contracts," McClain said.

According to McClain, the project for the most part will be construction, especially when building the shaft. "We'd need earth movers, electricians, fencing contractors, the whole range of construction type skills," said McClain.

She said that one of the first activities for when their people get here will be to work with local businesses so that they understand what contracts will be available and how to go about bidding on them.

"And then there will be needs for clerical staff, security people, various levels of professional skills, and other kinds of labor," she said. "If there are skills needed for our project that are not available in the area, we'd like to work with local educational institutions to explore what job training programs might be made available."

She said they will also be posting and advertising job openings.

"One of my main themes in this program is to help educate people about nuclear waste, nuclear waste storage, the whole thing we're dealing with here. People just don't understand," said McClain.

"I think that now that we have a site and we know that we are going to relocate, one of the most exciting things will be to greatly improve public participation in our program," she said. "To help people understand what we are doing and to take part in decisions that affect them."

She said right now the President has accepted the recommendations to study the Texas site and they are making preparations to do the study.

McClain has been visiting Texas for five years and said she is personally looking forward to the move. "I've made a number of friends in the area and I feel like it's my second home."

One comment McClain wanted to add: "We are still here in Columbus, Ohio, and we do pick up many of the stories or rumors going around. I urge people to check with the DOE office if it sounds far-fetched and get it verified."

Parade Preparation

Hereford State Bank employees intend to have their float in the Town & Country Jubilee parade depict the theme of "Texas - my kind of state." Trimming the float are HSB's Waldo Baxter and Jeff Brown. Baxter is one of the co-chairman organizing the Town & Country Jubilee.

Terrorists reject negotiations request

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A statement signed by the Islamic Jihad terrorist group rejected appeals by an Anglican Church envoy to renew negotiations for the release of American hostages, and said a letter from the hostages would be released soon.

The statement did not mention the envoy, Terry Waite, by name but clearly was issued in response to his repeated appeals this week for renewed talks. Waite visited Beirut several times last year and met with the kidnappers.

"As for those who are issuing repeated publicity pleas, we say: 'You perfectly know our demands and how they can be met. So why don't you take a categorical action toward solution?'" the statement said. "You must know that empty publicity goes with the wind."

The typewritten Arabic statement was delivered to the west Beirut office of a Western news agency. There was no way to immediately confirm its authenticity.

Waite said Friday in New York, "Let's get out!"

Islamic Jihad, believed made up of Shiite Moslems loyal to Iran, has said it kidnapped four Americans still missing in Lebanon: Terry A. Anderson, 38, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; David Jacobsen, 55, administrator of the American University Hospital; Thomas Sutherland, 55, acting dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut; and William Buckley, 58, a political officer at the U.S. Embassy in Beirut.

Islamic Jihad said last October that it killed Buckley, but no body has been found.

Today's statement harshly criticized U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz for, in its words, "describing the defenders of freedom and Islam as murderers and criminals."

"They (Americans) should realize that this ... will not resolve the question of the hostages," the statement said. "This (attitude) threatens grave consequences."

"The hostages have a position on what Shultz has said and we shall declare this position in a letter from the hostages to the American people in the near future," it said.

The statement was delivered by a young man who walked into the news agency office, said "Marhaba," Arabic for hello, dropped an envelope on a table and walked out. He drove off in a waiting wine-colored Volkswagen.

The envelope also contained a photograph of Jacobsen. He wore the same shirt as in a similar close-up photograph delivered to the independent Beirut newspaper An-Nahar last Sunday.

In a statement published by An-Nahar that day, Islamic Jihad rejected any form of negotiations with President Reagan, Pope John Paul II or Anglican leader Robert Runcie, the archbishop of Canterbury.

It threatened to kill the hostages "unless our demands are met."

Neither statement reiterated the demands made previously: that Kuwait free 17 prisoners convicted of bombing the U.S. and French embassies there in 1983. Kuwait has refused.

Sunday's statement also denied reports that Islamic Jihad sent messages to the pope, Runcie and Reagan through another American hostage, the Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, when it freed him July 26.

Jenco said he was carrying messages from the kidnappers and delivered them in private meetings with each of the leaders.

Liquor store owners say they will abide by new age law

For some Texans, a different kind of dry spell is coming soon.

Monday, Sept. 1, will mark the day the legal drinking age jumps from 19 to 21 for the state. The new law will make it illegal for anyone under 19 to purchase or consume any alcoholic beverage. The only exception will be if the under age person is in the immediate physical presence of his parents.

Possession of alcohol by an under age person will result in a fine of up to $200.

Local retail liquor salesmen David Hudgins of The Store, and Rob Lemon of Mid-Town Beverage both feel the change in the law may slightly dampen their business.

"We are going to have to be a little more careful when it comes to checking identification," said Lemon. "But we are careful anyway."

Hudgins stated that his employees will also be instructed to watch for those under age persons wanting to buy alcohol. "If they want to buy it, they usually find somebody who is old enough to buy it for them," said Hudgins.

Both Hudgins and Lemons have good reason to fear if they are found to be selling to minors.

According to the new law, the sale of alcoholic beverage to a minor will result in a fine of $100 to $500 and a year in jail.

The law also states that underage persons will not be allowed to enter package stores.

"Many young people do not realize it is a criminal offense to ignore the warning signs and enter a liquor store," said W.S. McBeth, Administrator of the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission.

McBeth also said that it is a common misconception that drinking age violations only apply to public places. "That is not true," said McBeth. "It will be just as illegal in a party barn, a fraternity house or a car parked on private property."

Contamination high at Savannah River

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nuclear waste activities at the Savannah River Plant in South Carolina have produced high contamination levels inside the boundaries of the weapons facility but little environmental impact outside them, say congressional investigators.

A General Accounting Office study, released by Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., on Friday, said there is a remote possibility that waste sites at the plant could someday contaminate the Tuscaloosa aquifer, the main source of water for South Carolina and Georgia.

DuPont operates the nuclear weapons plant for the Department of Energy. GAO said the department has taken steps to limit further contamination at the plant and is considering action to clean up the facility.

GAO said its two-year study found that from 1980 through 1984, streams running through the plant's property showed "elevated levels of radioactivity."

Texas doctor says Chernobyl taxed Soviet medical system

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Soviet doctors believe that treating Chernobyl victims has taxed the entire Soviet medical system, according to a Texas doctor who observed treatment of victims of the Soviet nuclear accident.

Dr. Wes Wallace, who addressed the Spokane chapter of the anti-nuclear Physicians for Social Responsibility Thursday and spoke at a Friday rally at Richland, said he remembers observing treatment of a young Soviet engineer exposed to a major dose of radiation from the disabled reactor. The man lay dying in Moscow's Hospital No. 6 in early June.

Because the radiation had destroyed the engineer's immune system, one simple fever blister he had before the accident was running rampant over his body as he lay encased in a plastic bubble.

"In seeing that, I could no longer look on these radiation victims solely as a professional physician," said Wallace, a member of Physicians for Social Responsibility. His speeches were part of Hanford Action Week commemorating the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

"The personal terror of it sunk in," Wallace said. "These people had inhaled the seeds of their own death."

Charities fighting tax proposals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Major charitable groups believe that if negotiations on tax-overhaul legislation continue in the current direction, the nation's charities — and the people who depend on them — will be the big losers.

Losses could be around $13 billion a year, or 20 percent of the nation's private giving, officials of major charitable groups told members of Congress Friday.

The charities have been fighting the same general proposals, including elimination of the charitable deduction for people who don't itemize, since early 1985.

South, Midwest toughest for women execs

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Female executives face less sex discrimination in the northeastern and western United States than they do in the South and Midwest, a new study shows.

"Our study indicates that attitudes, in general, tend to be more conservative in the southern and midwestern regions of the U.S. and more liberal in the eastern and western regions," Baylor and Texas A&M university researchers wrote in a report published recently in "Personnel Administrator."

Those attitudes have "a very real effect on women's performance appraisals, job assignments and promotions," said Charlotte D. Sutton, who is completing a Ph.D. in management at A&M. She co-authored the study with Dr. Kris K. Moore, a Baylor business school professor.

Sutton and Moore surveyed 782 executives, 44.5 percent of whom were men and 55.5 percent women. The executives were selected randomly from Standard & Poor's and Dun & Bradstreet references.

Almost 24 percent of the respondents came from the South; 33 percent from the East; 23 percent from the Midwest and more than 20 percent from the West.

In the survey, executives were asked to respond to the statement, "Women rarely want positions of authority." More than eight out of 10 disagreed, but executives from the West and East rejected the statement strongly.

"It may be that executives in the Midwest and South are less supportive of women in business because more of those executives believe women are not serious about moving up the corporate ladder," the researchers wrote.

"They may view female employees as women simply trying to make ends meet or working for 'pin money' rather than as women desiring positions of responsibility," they said.

Sutton and Moore said that response is particularly interesting because three-fourths of the respondents from the West were women, by far the largest percentage.

Of those respondents from the East, 57 percent were women; 50 percent of the respondents in the South were women and 44 percent of those from the Midwest were women.

The researchers found a definite pattern in attitudes among regions.

Executives in the West were most accepting of women in management positions. Those in the Midwest, while harboring positive attitudes about female executives, generally were the least positive, the study found.

One of the biggest differences was in the area of personal attitudes.

While the vast majority of executives from each region had generally favorable attitudes toward women in management, differences were reported in expressing "strongly favorable" attitudes about corporate women.

Almost 65 percent of the western executives indicated "strongly favorable" attitudes; 57 percent of the eastern executives; 48 percent of the southern executives and only 40 percent of the midwestern executives.

What makes 21 the magic number?

What makes 21 a magic number?

That is a question that millions of 19 and 20 year-olds will be asking as Labor Day approaches because the legal drinking age will be rising from 19 to 21.

The old argument will come about: "If I am old enough to vote and die for my country, why can't I buy a six pack of cold ones at the local grocery store?"

Or the other old argument will come around: "If kids want to drink, they are going to find a way to get it."

Both arguments have merit, but not enough to outweigh the hardships drinking at an early age can bring.

One might argue that there is only a two-year difference between a 19 and a 21-year-old. So why is the age such a big thing?

The difference lies in what a person goes through in those two years. There is no other time in a person's life that such extreme changes and pressures are involved. At 19, most of us were either leaving high school, or had been out for a year. The apron strings are loose, but usually still attached.

By the time a person turns 19, he has had to make decisions concerning his future. He must pick the path of either a vocation or college or the service. He must learn how to become self-supportive. A slow stage of separation begins during those two years. A separation from parents, high school buddies and high school sweethearts begins to take affect.

Those Friday night football games do not have the same meaning they did before. The letter jacket does not hold as much pride as in previous days. Things just change.

With alcohol being so readily available to people going through those times, it makes a person wonder if it is right to look to a bottle for support. And even if 70 percent of the people in that age group do not turn to alcohol, there is a great number who will. Alcohol related deaths and suicide are the number one killer of Americas youth.

The number of teenage deaths linked to suicide projects a troubled time for the youth of America.

When all the cards are on the table, the drinking age simply makes more sense if it is 21.

The only law changes that might be more beneficial to the public would be if the laws were changed to read that the drinking age be 55 and the speed limit be 21 mph.

Guest Editorial

Keep 'double nickel'

The federal agency official in charge of enforcing the 55 mph speed limit on most of the nation's highways doesn't approve of the law.

Federal Highway Administrator Ray Barnhart believes that drinking, more than speed, contributes to highway accidents. More than 50 percent of all highway fatalities across the nation involve drinking drivers.

Regardless of his personal conviction, however, Barnhart will enforce the speed limit law, which he is convinced should be changed.

There is legislation before Congress proposing to raise the limit.

There are advantages and disadvantages, but we think advantages of the "55" law outweigh disadvantages.

Feels good to be American, again

Revolution by evolution is the preferred kind; everybody bends, nobody breaks.

The "Reagan revolution" so far: In economics and in foreign policy, liberal government has been overthrown. The new dynamic is vigorous, innovative, bold, assertive conservatism.

A president who is cheerful, high-spirited, enthusiastic and forward-looking has reshaped us in his image.

Public opinion surveys reveal that, for the first time ever, Americans—more than 50 percent—are optimistic!

What's next?

Before this year is out President Reagan will sign a tax bill giving the United States the most economically favorable tax system in the industrialized world.

President Reagan has just named a new chief justice and an associate justice for the Supreme Court. This, with his other appointments to district and appellate benches, is accomplishing a fundamental reordering of the principles that guide our federal judiciary.

In foreign policy, the president can claim the invasion of Grenada and the bombing of Libya as substantive victories. The former clipped the wings of expansionist Castro and the latter has drastically curtailed Kadafi-sponsored terrorism.

At the same time, President Reagan's commitment to a "star shield" for our nation has confronted the Soviets with a kind of war they can't win.

Now it is they who are on the defensive; it is Moscow seeking peace talks.

Not all our nation's problems have been resolved. Congressional inability to curtail spending still inflates our national debt.

The President is proposing a line-item veto of congressional spending. All that will require is another miracle.

And the best assurance that this president's philosophy will be felt for many years beyond his next 30 months is the fact that he reflects you. He carried 49 states and, though now a lame-duck in the second year of his last term, your vote of confidence in him measures an unprecedented 68 percent.

President Reagan has said that "A nation's greatness depends on its devotion to the principles and values that bind its people."

It is mostly on this moral and cultural front that this President has welcomed us home.

It feels good again to be an American.

I know, Paul Harvey sure sounds partisan. Anything optimistic is likely to and I am that!

Bootleg Philosopher

Editor's note: The Bootleg Philosopher on his Johnson grass farm on Tierra Blanca Creek gives an off-beat report on the recent British Royal wedding.

Dear editor:

As everybody knows, the British can't be beat when it comes to putting on a Royal wedding.

They've got the pomp and ceremony, they've got the carriages, they've got the horses and the men willing to ride them while wearing some of the craziest-looking hats this side of Halloween, and for a thousand years they've produced young Princes who need to get married if the Royalty business is to continue.

As for brides, they can be picked from the common masses. It doesn't matter, because the Queen or King, whoever's in charge at the time, can, with a wave of the hand, turn the chosen one into a Princess. Nothing to it. No harder than our turning an ordinary man into a Congressman.

But this time, although it worked out all right, when Prince Andrew and Sarah Ferguson got married there was a serious blunder.

While Miss Ferguson was headed for the church as cheering throngs lined the street they had her riding in a glassed-in carriage. That was fine.

But on the return down the same street after the wedding ceremony they had her riding in an open carriage.

Now according to the account I read, the bride wore a wedding dress with a train of skirts that trailed behind her for a length of 17 feet. You put somebody with that kind of rig on in an open carriage and a puff of wind comes along and billows out those 17 feet of cloth and what do you think it'd do to the skittish horses trailing behind the Knights in armor astride trying to keep their hats on? Liable to be the worst run-away in Royal horsemanship.

The British need to shorten the bride's train or keep her glassed in.

Yours faithfully,
J.A.

Letters to the Editor

Dear editor:

I have lived in Hereford for 27 years, which is all my life. I have spent the last 5 of those years teaching at Stanton Jr. High School, within the Hereford Independent School District.

Recently I have had the opportunity to take a job in Borger, which will be a promotion for me.

I am writing this letter to thank all the many Hereford people that makes my leaving very difficult. I love this community and feel that it is a good place to grow up and live.

Thank you all for your support in everything that I have tried to do. I have tried to work hard for the community and school systems, and I feel that I have been given love, support and appreciation.

I will miss Hereford, the faculty at Stanton Jr. High, the coaches in the school system, my friends, and definitely I'll miss all the kids I have worked with the past 5 years.

Thanks Hereford,

Dear editor:

I don't know what Mr. B.L. Jones is so concerned about on 25 Mile Avenue. I was born and raised at 600 S. 25 Mile Ave., as were my older brothers and sisters. One sister still lives at 713 S. 25 Mile Ave. None of us felt deprived in any way by our location.

If all cities could be planned out to their maximum size when they first start, then there wouldn't be any numbering discrepancies. Likely all streets could be numerically or alphabetically correct.

We used an alphabetical A through K on streets east of N. 385 and much later opened up another street between J and K and called it Star. Also, what caused the difference on numbering of N. Ave. K blocks—the west side has only about half the numbers of the east side? (The blocks are shorter.)

There are probably other discrepancies I could name, such as Columbia Dr. and Columbus Street, Jackson Ave. and Jackson St., Cherokee Drive and Cherokee Street. But they don't seem to concern the residents of these streets very much. I don't believe they have lost any sleep over them, so far.

I believe I could take a street index of any sizable city and find many anachronisms in every one. Maybe I am just not worrying enough about the right things at the right time, but I believe if it ain't broke, why fix it?

Sincerely,
Bennie Womble

The Penultimate Word

THE 165-MILE-PER-HOUR JEEP

"Red" Stevens lives in Bixby, Oklahoma. He has the distinction of being the fastest jeep driver in history. He is not in the book of records because no one would believe his story.

At the end of the Korean War, red was sent to a base in south Texas to kill time until he was mustered out. They gave him this job of hooking up gliders behind the airplanes that pulled them airborne. This process involved hooking the tow rope to the front of a jeep, stretching the rope by backing the jeep and setting the brakes, then attaching the rope to the gliders. They usually pulled three gliders at once.

Since the pilot could not see behind the plane, there was a guy on the ground who signaled when the gliders were ready. As a safety precaution there was another person stationed at the end of the runway to give a final "go" or "no go" signal.

On this one day Red had hooked up the two outside gliders. He had stretched the rope for the middle glider and set the brakes. It was the end of the day and the person in charge of signaling to the pilot had a friend ride out on a bicycle to meet him. The friend arrived, the signaler waved, the pilot thought the wave meant go and he went.

Red was in the jeep when the plane started. For some reason he thought he should release the brake on the jeep. Why he did not think he should jump out of the jeep is a mystery to this day. Suddenly, he was in a jeep tied to the tail of an airplane. He had the windshield down so the rocks stirred up by the airplane began to hit him in the face. All he could do was lie down in the front seat of the jeep.

The guy at the end of the runway saw the plane coming with two gliders in tow. Since the jeep was in the middle, it was hidden from view. It was not unusual for the planes to pull two gliders instead of three, so he gave the go signal.

Now Red is not sure whether he was lucky, had an angel on his shoulder or was the recipient of divine intervention. Knowing Red, I doubt that there was much divine involved. For some reason the pilot looked down at the signaler just as he cleared the runway. The pilot later said this was very rare. The signaler was frantically motioning to cut the middle rope.

Red said that it got quiet and the jeep finally stopped. He was alive and became the only person to ever drive a jeep 165 miles per hour. True or not, that is a great story.

Warm fuzzies,
Doug Manning

Taxpayer honesty to return?

Richard L. Leshner,
President

WASHINGTON — "The income tax," Will Rogers said, "has made more liars of the American people than golf has."

Rogers made that wisecrack back in 1924 when the tax code was relatively simply by modern standards. Today it is much more complex, so intricate, in fact, that no mortal human can pretend to understand it all. If you take your tax returns to five different accountants, chances are you will get five different results.

The economic repercussions are less clear and will depend to a large extent on what the House-Senate conferees agree to. They must reconcile the differences between their competing versions of tax reform, and the decisions they make will guide our nation's economic performance for a long time to come. Of the two, the Senate version is vastly preferable, and even it has some serious flaws. In the long term, it would foster economic growth through: lowered individual tax rates that would reduce the bias against work, savings and investment; lowered corporate tax rates that would reduce the after-tax costs of capital investment and doing business; and maintenance of accelerated capital cost recovery allowances over short lives for most plant and equipment.

Unfortunately, in the short term the Senate bill could have an adverse impact on the economy because it: retroactively repeals the investment tax credit in 1986 with no compensating rate reductions; does not fully phase in the tax rate reductions until 1988; and raises the government's tax take by over $30 billion in the next 18 months.

Absence of candor

The space agency has compounded the tragedy of the Challenger loss by an absence of candor that is both untypical and unforgivable. While the accident itself was preventable, the human mistakes leading up to it can be sadly understood. Confusion and contradiction after a period of clammung up are not.

The initial stonewalling silence in the aftermath of the disaster and subsequent contradiction of some information that was released is surprising. Perhaps so much time had elapsed since the Apollo I disaster that NASA had forgotten some of the lessons purportedly learned then. It is easy to be open and forthcoming when things are going right. ...

There has been additional confusion and uncertainty about the future role of Johnson Space Center (and employment levels there) in the space station project. Timely release of accurate information — however unpalatable — could have avoided all sorts of speculation and woeful predictions about Houston's space future.

It's hard to tell it like it is when things go wrong. But not doing so makes the situation worse. NASA should know that by now.

WINNING BONES
Mission, Kan. (AP) — There were nine NCAA Division I-A football teams which made no "bones" more in 1985 and there could be more in 1986.

The teams in question used the wishbone, the flexbone or, in the case of Mississippi State, the inverted wishbone style of offense. Most of the teams had winning records.

One squad, however, Auburn, dropped the wishbone for the "I" formation to give Bo Jackson more room to run. Bo now is gone from the school, having completed his eligibility.

Bobby Valentine loves to manage

By Murray Olderman
 ARLINGTON, Texas (NEA) — "Oh, oh," says Bobby Valentine, manager of the Texas Rangers, ready to go about his business. "I better get serious."
 He takes a chaw from the packet of chewing tobacco on the desk in his office, which is reached through a maze of corridors under Arlington Stadium. He stuffs the tobacco in his mouth.
 He arranges for three tickets to be delivered to family friends for the impending game this night — they'll sit next to his wife, Mary (the daughter of former Dodger pitcher Ralph Branca).
 He tucks his uniform jersey into his white knickers, adjusts his cap, clicks off the VCR that has been running a taped ballgame on the mounted TV set and flashes a dazzling smile.
 He heads for the dugout.
 It's time to talk baseball — to explain how and why his Texas Rangers are (along with the San Francisco Giants) the surprise team of the majors this summer.
 Valentine, 35, is the youngest big-league manager. He took over the Rangers early last season. In this, his first full season, he has put together his kind of team. It stresses, naturally, youth.

 The everyday Texas lineup sometimes has six men who on April 8 experienced their first Opening Day in the majors. The bulk of his pitching staff is composed of rookies.
 "It's tough to do what we did," concedes Valentine. "It takes conviction. And hard work."
 "As a first-year manager, I was advised against doing it. You can get the veteran players, send them out (on the field) and when they don't perform very well, you can say, 'Well, these guys can't do it.' And then you send young players out there."
 "But I preferred going with the young guys right away."
 Bobby Bragan, a former big-league manager and executive, who directs publicity for the Rangers, says: "Bobby Valentine has the guts of a burglar. He wasn't afraid to pitch Bobby Witt (21 years old, and a collegian a year ago). He put in Pete Incauglia (22, and also a collegian last year), who had never played a pro game in his life and kept him in right field when he was batting .111."

'Managing has been an absolute delight. My life is dedicated to the game, to the guys, to what we're trying to do.'

— Bobby Valentine

Bragan believes Valentine is the major reason behind the Rangers' renaissance. So does Tom Grieve, the young general manager who elevated Bobby to the top job.

"Bobby Valentine is a once-in-a-million guy," says Grieve, who was his teammate on the New York Mets in 1978 when they both played the outfield. "When you meet him, there's something about him — enormous drive and determination and enthusiasm, with a great grasp of the game, and the power of his convictions."

There is also unlimited energy, from 7:30 a.m., when he gets up to play with 3-year-old Bobby Jr., until he gets home from the ballpark at 12:30 a.m. — and then turns on a ballgame "if it's on the cable."
 In spring training at Pompano Beach, Fla., Valentine put up a net for the batting cage because the groundskeepers, who are city employees, wouldn't do it. He raked the infield himself at 6 in the morning when the groundskeepers were having coffee. After a rainstorm, he was on the field with a pump, getting the water off. "He made me tired watching him," says Grieve.

Valentine might still be playing baseball instead of directing others if he hadn't run into an outfield wall early in 1973 at Anaheim Stadium and broken his leg in two places. The accident noticeably affected his speed.

He had come out of Stamford, Conn., touted as the greatest high-school football runner in that state's history and recruited by the University of Southern California as the next coming of O.J. Simpson (though chunkier at 5-foot-10 and 185 pounds). But he signed a baseball contract instead.

Valentine's goal was to get to the George Brett, second in batting in the American League in 1985 with a .335 average, batted over .300 in nine of his 11 full seasons with the Kansas City Royals.

Six American League clubs drew more than 2 million fans at home in 1985. The California Angels led with a turnstile count of 2,567,427.

Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, N.Y. He fell short because his ability didn't match his zeal, though he played 10 big-league seasons (1969-79) with the Dodgers, Angels, Padres, Mets and Mariners.

"I still want to get there (Cooperstown)," insists Valentine. "I'm just going to have to take a different route."

That might mean something like managing eight pennant-winners in a row. "If that's what it takes," he vows, "that's what I'm going to get."

He's completely serious when he says it.

There is an infectious quality to Valentine's managing. "A lot of the kids," he says, "don't realize yet that this is a job. And that's really a stimulating situation for me."

"Managing has been an absolute delight. These eight months (of the baseball season), my life is dedicated to the game, to the guys, to what we're trying to do."

"I don't think you can treat your mind and body like an automobile and just turn it on and off. It's got to stay continually running."

And Bobby Valentine, gimpy leg and all, does run, even if it's only to the batting cage to watch his kids get ready for another game.

MIGHTY MANUTE
 WASHINGTON (AP) — Manute Bol, all 7-7 of him, lends more to a team than just blocking shots.
 Bol, in his rookie season with the Washington Bullets, topped the NBA in that department in the 1985-86 season.
 "Manute is a force," K.C. Jones of the Boston Celtics observed. "You have to remember that every shot he blocks is saving two points for the Bullets and those points add up. Another thing, they may play with the equivalent of four men on offense but on defense Bol gives them six."

DAVID DAVIDSON

Lieutenant governor candidate opposes income tax

David Davidson of Austin, the Republican candidate for lieutenant governor of Texas, made a campaign visit in Hereford Friday and declared that spending cuts are the solution to the state's fiscal problems, not tax revenues.

"Lt. Gov. Hobby has recently toured the state promoting higher taxes," Davidson noted. "Mr. Hobby has missed the heartbeat of Texas. The Texans that I have talked to say they don't want any more taxes, and neither do I."

Davidson, who is opposed to any kind of a state income tax, called attention to the fact that Hobby has refused to back a constitutional amendment to prohibit state income taxes. "During the 14 years Lt. Gov. Hobby has been in office, state spending has increased 400 percent."

The Austin businessman noted that by law, the lieutenant governor is the president of the legislative budget board, which prepares all budget recommendations. "The lieutenant governor has more to do with the budget than any other single individual. The blame for a state budget which is out of control needs to be laid at his feet."

Davidson added that "Texans have been misled into thinking that we have taken in less money this year than last. The state government has received $1.9 billion more in revenues this year than last year, an increase of 5.5 percent. Money is not the problem."

Asked about the no-pass, no-play rule, Davidson said the bill needs to be fine tuned to remove the six-week restriction placed on students. "Teachers were allowed a second chance on their testing. Teachers and students should both be treated fairly."

Davidson said he has five top priorities if elected: (1) Reduce the power of the office of lieutenant governor; it has grown so powerful under the Democrats that no legislation can be passed without his personal consent; (2) Return legislative power to the senators; (3) Eliminate duplication of agencies and functions; (4) Increase efficiency of state operations by at least 5 percent; (5) Return governmental decision making to the local level.

Ann Landers

DEAR ANN LANDERS: A letter appeared in your column recently accusing you of having a filthy mind because you said "Rosie" the nurse who got into bed with a male patient had in mind something more than just comforting him.

You replied, "No nursing director that I know would condone such behavior."

I am a registered nurse who agrees with you. However, some time ago an item appeared in RN, one of the most popular and prestigious of journals for registered nurses, that gives "Rosie" the green light. I have enclosed a copy of the item.

Unfortunately, when I cut it out to show other nurses I didn't note the date of the magazine or the page number, but you can get it by contacting "RN Magazine" in Oradell, N.J. — R.N. IN CORAL GABLES, FLA.

DEAR CORAL GABLES: I had a hard time believing that this highly respected publication would condone such a practice, so I wrote to the editor, James A. Reynolds, and enclosed the item which featured a hand drawing of a male patient with a female nurse lying beside him. The item was titled, "Lying Down on the Job to Calm a Panicked Patient."

It read, "Problem: Your patient is lying flat on a stretcher or on the bed, by being at his eye level, you are likely to be more successful in making contact with him and calming him down." The letter from editor Reynolds informed me that the material was questioned appeared in "RN Magazine" on page 116 in the November issue in 1982.

Reynolds wrote, "May I add that I think the item represents bad advice. I don't believe we would publish such an idea in today's RN."

So, dear readers, we are back to square one, with nobody agreeing that it is a good idea for a nurse to get into bed with a patient for any reason whatever.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: Can you stand another letter about out-of-town florists who send flowers and plants that are root-bound, half dead or a smaller arrangement than the receiver thinks he or she is entitled to?

We have received many calls from irate customers who scream, "My son would never send me such a dinky plant." Or, "The folks who sent this bouquet are very close friends. I'm sure they ordered something more elegant!" How are we to tell them that their son or good friends gave us only $17 to work with?

Also, when you call to complain, please do not scream and cuss us out. Being yelled at puts us in a foul mood and does very little to make us want to accommodate you.

If you receive dead or damaged flowers, please send them back to the florist so he can complain to the wholesaler or take the matter up with the truck driver who may have been careless in the delivery. Only when the florist sees the merchandise can he evaluate the situation properly. Thank you, Ann, for letting me have my say.—LONG-SUFFERING DESIGNER IN DETROIT

DEAR LONG-SUFFERING: I'm always pleased to be able to print both sides of the story. Thanks for letting us know that even the florist gets the thorns with the roses.

A no-nonsense approach to how to deal with life's most difficult and most rewarding arrangement, Ann Landers' booklet, "Marriage, What to Expect," will prepare you for better or for worse. Send your request to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Illinois 60611, enclosing 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

A Flair for Design

The family room is a space that is an expression of the persons who will use it more possibly than any other room in the house, except personal bedroom areas. If there are small children who will be using the room for television viewing perhaps carpeting should be first on your list of priorities. If not, specific areas for hobbies, and their storage and display may be more important considerations. For example, if someone is a painter or photographer, a gallery area might be nice to show off their skills, or even work-in-progress. If the hobby in question is a possibly messy one, now is the time to consider the cleanability of all surfaces to be used.

At FINISHING TOUCHES, we will be happy to help make those decisions that will make your Family Room work for you. We are at 501 East Park Ave., or call us at 364-8870.

...nee Debra Lynn Fry

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dywane Fry of Hereford. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Devoll of Quanah and the late Ray Denison.

They were wed by John Tabor, the groom's brother-in-law, who is the minister of Rosemont Church of Christ in Fort Worth. The bride's father gave her away.

An arched candelabra was flanked by two spiral candelabrum decorated with greenery, pink roses. Large gladiola and pink roses were arranged in baskets at the center of the podium area. Pink and gray bows marked the pews.

Miss Carla Fry, sister of the bride, was the maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Miss Kristi Lytal, Miss Wynn Denison, sister of the groom, of Quanah; and Miss Donnicc Milam, cousin of the bride, from Anton.

David Denison, brother of the groom, of Quanah; David Myers of Decatur, and Scott Jones of Abilene were groomsmen.

Serving as ushers were Clay Davis of Bowie, Wade Cave of Idalou, and John Smith of Lubbock.

Two of the groom's nieces, Valerie Tabor and Mika Denison, were flower girls. They are the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. John Tabor of Fort Worth, and Mr. and Mrs. David Denison of Quanah.

Philip Tabor, nephew of the groom was the ring-bearer. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Tabor.

Cousins of the bride Mis Dana

The Central Church of Christ chorus provided music with Mrs. Judy McDonald as soloist. Tim Head of Alvarado and Grace Batten of Ennis joined for a duet. Principal selections were "The Wedding Song", "The Pledge", "I Come to Pledge My Love," and "If."

The bridal gown was a white crystalite organdy over taffeta with a scalloped lace trim at the ruffle. The fitted bodice with applied alecon lace, pearls and iridescents was attached to a full pleated skirt. The neckline was covered with lace and had a collar accented with pearls and alecon lace. The leg-of-mutton sleeves were lace with pearl trim.

Bridal illusion attached to silk flowers and a pearl tiara comprised the veil.

Gray and pink ribbons flowed from the bridal bouquet which was made of cascading pink sweetheart roses, baby's breath, and stephanotis.

The bride wore diamond earrings belonging to the groom's mother and carried a crocheted handkerchief of her grandmother's.

Attendants wore crystal pink taffeta tea-length dresses with fitted bodices, gathered skirts and puffed sleeves. White lace gloves and white shoes completed the outfits. Attendants carried bouquets of pink sweetheart roses and baby's breath, accented by ribbon streamers.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the church fellowship room.

An heirloom white crocheted tablecloth belonging to the bride's grandmother draped the table. The three-tiered bridal cake was topped with a crystal heart figurine. A silver service and the bride's bouquet decorated the table.

Chocolate roses trimmed the heart-shaped chocolate layer cake on the groom's table.

Serving at the reception were Miss

Sharon Short, at the bride's table; Miss Desiree Pyaett, at the groom's table; Miss Joni Hicks, punch; and Miss Janice Payne, coffee.

RENEWABLE RESOURCE

ATLANTA (AP) — The amount of available timber on private U.S. lands has increased nearly 50 percent since 1950, despite an overall increase in wood use.

The increasing timber inventory is a result of America's successful transition to more intensive forest management, which tends to encourage younger, more readily renewable timber, says Georgia-Pacific Corp.

Italian chef delights East Texas

NACOGDOCHES, Texas (AP) — "You're probably wondering why I am in Nacogdoches," said Giacomo Aievola. "People always ask me that."

A long way from his home in Geneva, Italy, Aievola is preparing gastronomic delights for patrons of Rossini's Restaurant. Aievola learned to prepare his Northern Italian dishes at a culinary school in Sarano, Italy, on the Riviera.

Aievola's wife is a native East Texan, and "this is one reason why I am here in Nacogdoches. Nacogdoches, I think, is one of the best little East Texas towns — more culture, more open," he said.

The Italian chef says he also chose this area for its greenery and lakes. "I like hunting, boating, and fishing. It is a good place to relax and to get away from the pressures of the big city," he explained.

When he and his wife decided on Nacogdoches for their home, Aievola was looking for a place to relax and "play around more than cook — I want to enjoy what I'm doing. You get tired when you're working in the big city — pressure of the big hotel. It's a big facade — a big rush. There's somebody in the corner waiting for your job."

Aievola speaks from experience in the city. After graduation from culinary school, he signed up with an Italian cruise line because he wanted to see the world. He prepared meals for both Caribbean and around-the-world cruises.

Later he moved onshore, preparing delicacies in Miami, Fla., for such celebrities as Frank Sinatra, Tony Bennett and Jack Collins. For a three-year period he was the chef at The Crest Hotel in Vail, Colo. He owned his own "club" in Houston and was the executive chef for the Melrose Hotel in Dallas when it was renovated and re-opened.

As executive chef at the Melrose, he had 45 individuals working directly with him in the kitchen, Aievola said, all of whom he trained.

"I started six months before we opened the Melrose and I had to supervise everyone," he said.

"When you have average cooks you have to do everything yourself," Aievola said he has learned.

On opening night, the hotel expected 3,000 of Dallas' elite. He began preparations a week ahead of time.

"It seemed like everyone in Dallas showed up," he said. "Instead of 3,000, there were 5,000, but we made it."

Because of his strict professional training, Aievola was prepared to perform, he said, "You have to be able to produce."

When he was attending culinary school, Aievola said, "A chef at that time was God — he was 50-65 years old and very reserved."

In the "old days" those desiring to become chefs had to start from the bottom as dishwashers. Then the students learned to set up tables properly and the etiquette of a first-class waiter — how to serve and everything about wines and champagnes.

"A professional waiter, years ago, had to know everything," he explained. "It was his responsibility to show and tell the customer what he was eating."

From this point, those studying were required to memorize all the tools, pots and pans needed to prepare fine foods. Then they were taught "little-by-little" how actually to prepare Northern Italian recipes.

"A lot of people think Italian cooking is oregano and tomato sauce — that's not true. Italian cooking is more European," explained the chef.

POLLY'S POINTERS

Compounds can fill gouges in furniture

By Polly Fisher

DEAR POLLY — I bought a beautiful old chair at a thrift shop that I want to refinish. There are several deep gouges in one arm. Is there any way to cover or fix these marks? — KAREN

DEAR KAREN — You can fill gouges and deep scratches with either a resin stick or a wood-forming plastic. Both products are available at hardware and woodworking stores. I obtained the following instructions from my local cooperative extension office. The cooperative extension service is a great resource for solving many problems.

To use sticks of resin, match the color of the resin to the color of the wood you are repairing. The sticks come in various wood tones. Some come in a kit with an electric heating tool. Follow directions carefully. If the sticks you buy are sold separately, heat the tip of a screwdriver over an alcohol bunsen burner or the flame of a gas stove, then hold the resin stick and hot screwdriver together over the gouge so that the resin melts and drips into the gouge. Smooth the resin with the tip of the screwdriver, then smooth it further with a single-edge razor blade.

Wood-forming plastic also comes in various wood tones. You'll have to work quickly, since the plastic dries very quickly. Drying time can be slowed down by mixing a small amount of denatured alcohol into it before use. Following directions on the package, fill the gouge with the plastic so it is as smooth as possible, then finish smoothing by sanding, if necessary. However, sanding is difficult, so try to apply the product smoothly in the first place.

Both products should be applied after the furniture has been refinished. Purchase the repair product in a color to match the final color. After repairing the gouges, give the piece a final coat of finish, then polish.

Hope this helps. Have fun! — POLLY

Couple united

Debra Ann Morgan and Joe Arroyos were wed in holy matrimony Saturday at St. Anthony's Catholic Church with Father Joe Egan officiating.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert S. Morgan and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jose Arroyos Sr. of San Angelo.

The church was decorated with family pews marked with yellow ribbons and bows. Two silk arrangements of white silk gladiolas and small bouquets of yellow mums adorned the main altar.

Maid of honor and bridesmaids were Jana and Cindy Morgan, both sisters of the bride. The best man was George Arroyos, brother of the groom.

Acting as groomsman was brother of the bride, Barry Morgan, and the groom's brother in law, Loui Baros and his brother, Eloy Baros, served as ushers.

Niece and nephew of the groom, Jenee and Bryan Baros, daughter and son of Mr. and Mrs. Louie Baros, served as flower girl and ring bearer.

Carolyn Evers played the musical selections, "There Is Love", "God, A Woman and A Man", "Only A Shadow", and "Our Father", while Trina Morgan, sister of the bride, vocalized.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a formal length gown of white malte taffeta and re-embroidered alencon lace fashioned with a sweetheart neckline.

The fitted bodice of the dress was accented with alencon lace which was sprinkled with tiny seed pearls. The back of the gown featured a high neckline and a sheer English net yoke accented with lace covered buttons.

The puffed short sleeves were trimmed with cut-out lace motifs and pearls. The gown's skirt swept into a semi-cathedral length train which was trimmed with a wide band of schiffli lace at the hemline.

Atop the bride's head was a two-tiered finger tip veil of bridal illusion featuring a wreath of silk wedding flowers and seed pearls. She carried a cascading bouquet of white and yellow silk roses and stiphnotis with white and yellow satin ribbon streamers.

The bride's jewelry consisted of a single strand of pearls and pearl earrings with a matching pearl bracelet. She wore a wedding ring belonging to her maternal grandmother as something borrowed and carried a white rosary which was given to her at her first communion as something old.

The bride's wedding gown symbolized something new and as blue she wore the traditional garter. As good luck pieces she wore a six pence in her shoe and a penny dated the year of her birth.

Bridal attendants were attired in yellow formal length gowns made of taffeta with a full overskirt of crepe organza. The dresses featured french puffed sleeves and a square neckline. They wore matching pearl necklaces and carried bouquets of yellow silk roses centered on white lace fans and highlighted with baby's breath and white and yellow ribbon streamers. In their hair, the attendants wore combs adorned with yellow flowers. All flower arrangements, bouquets, the veil and headpieces were designed and made by the bride.

At the wedding reception held at the E.B. Black House Barbara Frands served the grooms cake and coffee was served by Vickie Baros, sister of the groom. Virginia Lucero and Velma Aroyos, both sisters of the groom, served punch and registered guests.

The three-tiered white wedding cake was decorated with yellow icing roses and was topped with white satin wedding bells. Accenting the bride's table were silver candlesticks, a silver punch bowl, and the bride's bouquet.

The two-layered chocolate groom's cake featured a replica of a truck, resembling the groom's line of employment. Enhancing his table was an antique silver bowl with an arrangement of silk flowers and a silver coffee server.

For a wedding trip to San Diego and Los Angeles, Calif., the bride chose a two piece floral print dress in pastels of mauve and pink featuring a square collar, bow tie, and matching accessories.

The couple will be at home at Route 2, Hereford.

The bride and groom are employed at Hereford Grain Corp. The bride is a 1979 Hereford High School graduate and received a degree in business administration from West Texas State University in 1983. The groom is a 1976 graduate of Hereford High School.

Out of town guests at the wedding including family and friends from Houston, Farwell, San Antonio, Plainview, Amarillo, Big Spring, San Angelo, Uvalde, and Yuma, Ariz.

Touring very possible

NEW YORK (AP) — Want to tour the world, but don't want to leave the United States?

It's possible, in a fashion, since the United States has many ethnic communities where the sights and sounds of "The Old Country" are very much alive.

Typical are the six communities chosen by Family Circle magazine to represent a whirlwind tour of the world without leaving home.

San Francisco's Chinatown, with its 120,000 Chinese residents, is as colorful and authentic as Hong Kong, with Chinese spoken as the common language. There are "Little Italys" in many American cities, but in Boston's North End many of the older residents still speak Italian exclusively.

New Glarus, Wis., is known as "Little Switzerland" and the traditional architecture of the home country is preserved there. Holland, Mich., was founded by Dutch settlers and has canals and windmills.

In Williamsburg, Va., you can experience a time warp back to 18th-century England, and a trip to Anadarko, Okla., for the annual American Indian Exposition, starting Aug. 18, will be highlighted by 10,000 members of 14 tribes displaying their customs, crafts and dances.

The circumference of the earth is about 42 miles greater around the equator than it is around the poles.

FITTING TRIBUTE
ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The University of Rochester says it has recently acknowledged a debt to a leading 19th-century suffragist by opening the Susan B. Anthony Center for Women's Studies.

After nine years of rebuff, an 80-year-old Anthony persuaded trustees in 1900 to enroll women at the previously all-male institution. After the long campaign, she suffered a slight stroke.

Dean Jack Kampmeier says he's proud his institution was associated with such an important figure in American history, but "embarrassed" that such heroic efforts were needed in those days to bring coeducation to the university.

The center will address issues important for understanding women in society.

Boxer Charles (Sonny) Liston was found dead in his Las Vegas home in 1971.

Porter, Sarchet exchange vows

MRS. JEFFREY JAMES SARCHET
...nee Patricia Porter

Patricia Marlene Porter and Jeffrey James Sarchet were united in marriage Aug. 2 at the First Baptist Church of Bluejacket, Okla., by the bride's uncle, Rev. W.D. Hollandsworth.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Lee Porter. Parents of the groom are Mr. and Mrs. James Lee Sarchet of Hooker, Okla.

The couple was wed in front of a lattice archway made by the bride's father. Flower stands, also made by the bride's father, featured grapevine baskets, made by the aunt of the bride, and wreaths made by the bride and matron of honor.

The pews of the church were decorated with ribbons, spanish moss, and baby's breath.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and the Rev. W.D. Hollandsworth, uncle of the bride, officiated the wedding ceremony.

Matron of honor was Mrs. Harold McGuire and best man was Mark Honeman. Tammy and Kim Sarchet, both sisters of the groom, served as bridesmaids. Groomsmen were Chris Grounds and Kelly Smith and Marlon Porter, brother of the bride, served as usher. James Porter and Jason Sarchet, both brothers of the bride and groom, also served as junior groomsmen.

Courtney and Holly McGuire and Cody Cook, cousins of the bride, served as flower girls and ring bearer.

Lisa Johnson, cousin of the bride, played musical selections, while Dvena Laue vocalized.

The bride's dress, which the bride made, was fashioned in ivory bridal satin featuring a bodice overlay with embroidered nylon lace daisies.

The wedding gown was floor-length with a train, featured sheer sleeves which were puffed at the shoulders, a fitted bodice with a basque style waist, and was fashioned with a v-neckline with covered buttons in back.

The bride wore a bridal hat which she also made, trimmed in lace to match the dress, had nylon net streamers covered with seed pearls and had a net bow.

For her bouquet, the bride carried an arrangement of blue spider mums, yellow daisies, yellow statice, blue cornflowers and white baby's breath.

The bride wore a pearl necklace and opal earrings for her jewelry.

At the church's reception hall, Joan Hudelson and Donna Presnell served a three-tiered wedding cake and Tammy Hood and Kristi Wofford served punch. Kristi Diety registered guests with the assistance of Loretta Cook.

For wedding cruise to the Bahamas, the bride chose an aqua brocade polyester dress featuring a jewel neckline, front and back yoke at waist, and tulip sleeves.

The bride attended Oklahoma State University where she received a bachelor of science degree in December. She will be employed by the Hereford Independent School District.

The groom also attended Oklahoma State University and is employed as associate veterinarian at the Hereford Veterinary Clinic.

College noted for med school rep

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — The name Transylvania usually evokes dark thoughts of vampires, haunting castles and the bloodthirsty Count Dracula.

But there is a Transylvania University in Kentucky that has gained a glowing reputation for sending a remarkably high rate of students to medical schools.

Transylvania, the nation's 16th oldest college, has had 89 percent of its pre-med students accepted to medical schools over the past 14 years. This year, 15 of 17 applicants gained admissions.

According to a Money magazine article, only 39 percent of the 50,000 applicants to medical school are accepted each year. The article also said that a 50 percent success rate in getting pre-med students into medical school is doing well.

"It's been a successful program for so many years," said Charles Shearer, Transylvania's president. "Because it's been strong, we talk about it a great deal and promote it. And I believe success breeds success. We have also strengthened it over the years."

Transylvania is a private university affiliated with the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ). Tuition, fees, room and board for one year total $9,623.

During the early 1800s, Transylvania, which means "over the fields," was the dominant medical school in Kentucky, beginning with a medical department in 1799 and a full medical college in 1818. It was the fourth college with a medical department established in the United States and the first west of the Allegheny Mountains.

But internal problems forced the medical college to close in 1859, with one faction of teachers going north to Cincinnati and another west to Louisville.

While the university has always provided a strong science curriculum, Shearer believes the liberal arts education a pre-med student receives has been an asset.

"We encourage a strong liberal arts base," he said. "It's important to be well-rounded. A doctor is expected to be a valuable member in the community. That's one way we've strengthened the university."

Bryan Shouse, of Lawrenceburg, Ky., who recently completed the pre-med program and will be attending the University of Louisville medical school this fall, agreed.

"The faculty are super teachers who care and they know their business," he said. "They were able to communicate whatever the student needed to know."

Shearer, who has been president of the 875-student university for three years, said, "Our professors motivate and encourage students to reach their potential. I think that environment is important in a relationship."

Dr. Edward Leslie, who graduated from Transylvania in 1963, also stressed the liberal arts angle to pre-med education.

"You don't get that in the large universities," said Leslie, who has a medical practice in Frankfort, Ky. "The large schools are geared more toward a science background."

Shouse added, "The liberal arts courses helped. I was better versed during my (medical school) interview. When you can talk about something other than medicine, it helps you."

Shearer said the university tries to keep the curriculum within standards of medical schools and the American Medical Association.

"When you have a strong program, you want to keep it that way," he said. "It's probably easier to lose it than to build it."

DR. GOTT

Peter
Gott, M.D.

Surgery isn't the only option

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Last month my 13-year-old daughter was diagnosed as having 30-degree scoliosis. She was refused treatment. The clinic said, "It's too late — she has finished growing." Since she was adopted from Korea and suffered deprivation, we are concerned that the "normal" does not apply to her. She cannot be operated on because of a history of ITP. Would a brace help? Why are we being refused treatment? What can you suggest?

DEAR READER — The doctors have concluded that your adopted daughter's bone growth has stopped or slowed to the point where treatment would be more complicated than it would be in a younger girl. This does not mean she is untreatable. A brace and special back exercises may help straighten her spine, regardless of her age or her early deprivation. Ask the clinic doctors to refer you to a teaching hospital where orthopedic specialists concentrate on treating bone diseases of children.

Her history of ITP (a low platelet count) does not of and by itself mean that surgery isn't advisable. If her platelets are now normal and if she is followed carefully during and after surgery, an operative procedure could be carried out.

DEAR DR. GOTT — My doctor says that I have a hiatal hernia. She prescribed Mylanta tablets before and after meals. Is there anything else I can do to ease the discomfort? I am a female, 84 years young.

DEAR READER — The pain of hiatal hernia is due to a response called "reflux." Stomach acid enters the esophagus, where it irritates the unprotected lining of the swallowing tube.

Poison ivy remedies offered

Poison ivy and its cousins, poison oak and poison sumac, are well-known and little-liked hazards of the outdoors. Only about 15 percent of Americans are not sensitive to these three-leaved plants. According to the Texas Medical Association, no one has found a way—other than avoidance—to prevent or cure the condition known as allergic contact dermatitis, or more simply as "poison ivy."

The symptoms of poison ivy are caused by a chemical called urushiol (pronounced ooROO-shee-oh!). Urushiol is found in the resin, or sap, that is carried in canals within the bark, stem, leaflets, and certain flower parts of the plants.

Touching a bruised or broken plant, or an object that has touched the damaged plant, can transfer the urushiol and lead to a reaction. Once in contact with the skin, the urushiol begins to penetrate in a matter of minutes. In about 12 to 48 hours there is a visible reaction. First, there is redness and swelling, followed by blisters. Itching is inevitable.

In a few days the blisters become crusted and then begin to scale. If there are no complications, such as an infection due to scratching, the dermatitis clears up in about 10 days.

One of the many myths about poison ivy dermatitis is that it can be spread from one part of the body to another, or even to other people, via the oozing material in the blisters. This is not true. It is quite possible, however, to spread the poison ivy while the urushiol is still on the skin or clothes.

If you suspect you've gotten into poison ivy, the first thing to do is to thoroughly wash the exposed areas with soap and water. Washing may not stop the initial outbreak of the rash, but it can help prevent further spread. Clothing that has picked up the poison ivy sap should also be washed as soon as possible. Be sure to handle it carefully, with gloves, if necessary, to prevent any more exposure to the sap.

Mild cases of poison ivy may require no more than wet compresses or soaking in cool water to relieve the itching. Dilute aluminum acetate (Burrows solution), saline (salt), or sodium bicarbonate (baking soda) solutions may help dry up the oozing blisters. A variety of nonprescription drug products are also available to dry the blisters. Preparations with hydrocortisone may be used for temporary relief of itching.

Severe poison ivy dermatitis should be treated by a doctor, who may prescribe a stronger topical steroid preparation or oral medical to be used for several days.

Apples compared

The old axiom that beauty is only skin deep definitely applies when comparing apples from northern states with those now maturing in Texas, says a horticulturist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

While apples from northern states were harvested last fall when barely ripe and then stored for about 10 months, Texas apples are fresh off the tree and their taste and quality are unmatched although they do not develop the pretty red color of northern apples.

A consumer panel comparing Texas Red Delicious apples from Fredericksburg with Washington and Illinois Red Delicious and Washington Yellow Delicious rated Texas apples tops in taste and texture but poor in color.

A Texas Agricultural Experiment Station study found Texas apples higher in sugar content while comparing favorably in other quality tests.

Mammography best detector of cancer in early stages

Breast cancer is a frightening disease. In the United States, one out of 11 women will develop breast cancer at some point in her life. According to the Texas Medical Association, detecting the cancer at its earliest stage offers the best hope of cure.

Self examinations and regular breast examinations by a physician are among the best ways to discover breast cancer. But, sometimes lumps or other irregularities are so small they cannot be detected by the human hand.

Mammography is the most effective screening method for detecting breast cancer in its earliest and most curable stages. Mammography is a delicate x-ray technique that uses low levels of radiation to create an x-ray snapshot or "mammogram" of the breasts.

The procedure is simple and painless. During a mammography, a technologist positions the patient's breast on a special machine between two pieces of plastic. This flattens the breast so that all the tissue can be seen. Each breast is then x-rayed from above and from both sides. The resulting x-ray is then read by a physician who looks for lumps or other abnormalities that may indicate cancer.

Mammography is no 100 percent accurate—about 15 percent of the time, it will miss a potential problem area. While a negative mammogram is reassuring, some breast changes will not show up on a mammogram. And, some breasts and some types of abnormalities are not as easily imaged as others. It is for this reason that mammography is usually combined with a physical breast exam by a physician.

Since breast cancer usually occurs in older women, most physicians recommend an initial or "baseline" mammogram at age 35 or 40. A baseline mammogram is important because it gives a picture of what is normal for a woman's breast and offers a reference for later comparison.

Women between 40 and 49 should have a mammogram every two years, and an annual mammogram is recommended for those over 50 and for those considered at high risk. Yearly exposure to x-rays naturally raises the question of radiation hazard. Today, x-rays machines are highly sensitive and deliver less radiation than ever. And, there is no evidence that the incidence of breast cancer in women who have undergone mammography is higher than in those who have not.

If you want further information on breast cancer and breast examinations, contact your doctor or your local chapter of the American Cancer Society.

Good maintenance reduces utility bills

COLLEGE STATION — With the temperature — and utility bills—soaring, now is the time to make sure you're getting the most from your air conditioner at the least cost, says a Texas A&M University Agricultural Extension Service housing specialist.

"Good maintenance and operating practices can reduce cooling bills," says Dr. Susan Quiring.

Probably the easiest energy-saving measure is to check the air conditioning filters monthly and to replace disposable filters or wash permanent filters regularly, she says.

Then consider how you run the air conditioning system. Quiring says that homeowners often set the fan selector on manual rather than automatic. This leaves the blower fan running constantly and makes them feel more comfortable.

"From an energy standpoint, however, it's much better to set the blower fan on automatic because you get better moisture control," the specialist maintains.

Part of the air conditioner's job is to remove moisture, she explains. When the blower fan is left on constantly, it re-evaporates water collected on the condenser coils and puts it back into the air. This means the air conditioner has to work harder to remove that recirculating moisture.

"Using box fans, circulating fans or ceiling fans to move the air will achieve the same effect as constantly running the blower fan, and at less cost," says Quiring.

According to the specialist, some minor insulation jobs can also pay off in reduced energy costs.

She notes that many Texas homes have an attic access door which is uninsulated, inside the house. Fastening a batt of insulation to the inside of the attic door and putting weatherstripping around it will cut down on the loss of cool air into the unheated attic space.

A do-it-yourselfer can easily wrap insulation strips around attic ductwork and tape it with duct tape to reduce cool air loss, Quiring says. But attempt this job only if you feel comfortable working in an attic and take certain safety precautions, such as wearing a mask to keep from inhaling insulation.

"If your ductwork is already insulated, check the duct tape to see that it's still secure, since it will often pull away and create gaps after two or three years," the specialist says.

Quiring adds that as long as you're in the attic, take the time to vacuum the air conditioner unit if it is located there. The inside of lower ductwork can also be vacuumed from inside the house by removing the grates. Reducing accumulated dust will help the machinery run more efficiently.

"The best time to have your air conditioning equipment checked and in peak operating condition is before the cooling season," she observes. "But if you have any reason to think your equipment is not performing as it should, the expense of having it checked and repaired by a qualified service person may be offset by lower utility bills."

Rabies threat to both humans, animals

COLLEGE STATION — Rabies remain a threat to both humans and domestic animals in Texas due to the large number of confirmed cases in wild animals.

Since the outbreak of about 1,200 confirmed cases of rabies in 1979, some 700 cases are now reported annually, and most of these are in wild animals. For instance, rabies have declined in dogs and cats but have increased in skunks and bats.

As the incidence of wild animal rabies increase in a given area, the risk of exposure for domestic animals increases, points out Dr. Buddy Faries, veterinarian with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System. Most cases of rabies in domestic animals result from bites by rabid wild animals. Skunks cause most of the rabies in cattle, horses, dogs and cats. Almost all human cases since the early 1960s have resulted from exposures to rabid dogs.

Domestic animal rabies could best be reduced by controlling our eliminating rabies in wildlife. While this is impossible today, the combined effect of potent vaccines and organized control programs have greatly reduced rabies in dogs, Faries points out.

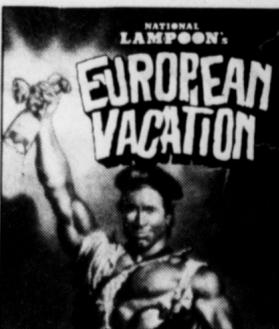

To reduce the rabies danger between rabid wild animals and humans, Faries suggests the following: have dog and cats vaccinated annually; avoid contact with abnormally acting wild animals; and do not own pet wild animals, especially skunks and raccoons.

Wildlife which have bitten humans should always be examined promptly, emphasizes the veterinarian. Rodents are essentially free of rabies, so routine examination is not required. A dog or cat that has bitten a person should be examined immediately or should be confined and observed for signs of rabies for 10 days, says Faries. When unvaccinated dogs and cats are bitten by a rabid animal, they should be destroyed immediately or isolated for six months. If vaccinated, they should be isolated for three months.

For examination of suspect animals, contact the Texas Department of Health in Austin, any Public Health regional office or a local veterinarian, advises Faries.

It was reported that a 1963 cholera epidemic in India and Pakistan had taken more than 1,500 lives.

During the business session, minutes of the two last meetings were read and approved. General orders No. 1 from the Department of Texas were read and filed for future use.

Plans were made for honoring local newspaper, The Hereford Brand. Plans were also continued for District 13 Convention to be held in Hereford, Aug. 23 and 24. District Auxiliary President Florene Leinen from Dimmitt was present for her official inspection visit. Also present as a guest was Laura Broadstreet from Dimmitt.

Members present were Helen Bishop, Betty Boggs, Martha Bridges, Leone Buckley, Doris Coffin, Marie Goheen, Ada Hollabaugh, Ruth Morris, Lillie Muller, Erna Murphey and Vicki Yocum.

Special thanks was given to Ruth and Bob Morris for building and donating a bulletin board for the display of Auxiliary awards.

The next meeting will be held Monday night, Aug. 18 at 8 p.m. All members who can should come at 7 p.m. for a work session. We would like to get awards arranged on the bulletin board and our toy firetruck decorated with Buddy Poppies for Buddy Poppy Toy Parade to be held at District Convention. By starting work at 7 p.m. it will be possible to get this done before meeting time so it will not interfere with regular business session.

Special Session of Texas Legislature Affects Libraries:

Special session of the Texas Legislature which began on August 6th may bring cuts to libraries across the state of Texas. At Annual Assembly in Austin, July 16-18, Texas Legislator Ralph Wallace Houston, (Chairman of the House Committee on Cultural and Historical Resources) stated that the recommended cuts to libraries would definitely... "make a cut in our investment in the future." Mr. Wallace urged each of us to contact our legislators, and to write Governor Mark White, Lt. Governor Hobby, House Speaker Lewis and House Committee on Appropriations Chairman Jim Rudd.

If library funds are cut in the state of Texas, the Hereford Library would lose benefits as a Texas Panhandle Library System Member which is approximately $11,471,092 per year. As participants in the Texas Panhandle Library System, we have access to 1,553 16mm films of the Amarillo collection, 80 16 mm films in the rotating packets, 1,460 cassettes in 16 rotating packets, 600,000 books in other libraries through Reciprocal Borrowing, and 1,124 large print books in 22 rotating packets, plus free telephone service to system headquarters, availability of large discount for materials purchased negotiated by Amarillo Public Library, consultations and continuing Education workshops.

If state funds are cut we will also lose federal funds. The Deaf Smith County Library benefits a total of $160,813.83 per year from State and Federal funds. We have participated in the Texas State Library's title III grants for the past two years, which has allowed us to become participants in the Harrington Library Consortium, which has benefited our library a total of $127,593.00 per year.

We would like to encourage you to write or call your legislators in support of your local library. Important people to contact are Ralph Wallace, Chairman, Debra Danbert, Eddie Cavazos, Ron Gibbons, Chris Hanson, David Hudson, Jerry Yost, Bob Melton, and your local representatives and senators. If you need addresses for any of these legislators, please feel free to call the library for information at 364-1206. Remember, libraries are an "investment in the future."

HOME ON THE BRONX RANGE
OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. (AP) — Back in the 1860s, millions of bison roamed the Western plains. By about 1895, the number had been reduced to a few hundred animals. At the Wichita Mountains Wildlife Refuge in southwestern Oklahoma, there is a herd today of 600 American bison. The animals are descended from 15 bison that were raised in a corner of wilderness at New York's Bronx Zoo. The buffalo were shipped to Oklahoma in 1907.

Fish nutritious and easy

By BEVERLY HARDER
County Extension Agent
"Microwaving Fish"
Program To Be Held

Mary Blinderman, Home Economist with Southwestern Public Service Company will present "Microwaving Fish" in a special program on Thursday, Aug. 14, at 2 p.m. at the Southwestern Public Service Company, Reddy Room. Reservations may be made by calling the County Extension Office (364-3573).

For years, those of us living "inland" relied upon canned fish to provide us with a menu change from more familiar protein sources. A whole new opportunity has opened with the introduction of fresh and frozen fish available from supermarkets, mobile vendors and delivered to your door food salesman.

The recent interest in Cajun cookery has spurred consumer's interest in purchasing fish for use in these recipes. A recent survey by Better Homes and Garden indicated that about a third of the people who eat in restaurant order fish and seafood at least half of the time or more frequently. The problem arising for consumers in how to purchase, prepare and serve many of the fish varieties now available.

Fish and shellfish are foods that nutritionist call "nutrient dense". That is, they generally offer a wealth of nutrients as compared with the fat and calories they supply. For example, a 3 1/2 oz. cooked portion of just about any kind of white fish offers about one-third of an adult's recommended dietary allowance for protein yet it contains a small amount of fat and has less than 100 calories.

Fish also fits well into today's active lifestyle. Seafood cooks quickly, requiring little time in the kitchen. It can be poached and served with a low-calorie sauce, broiled and basted with melted butter or margarine and lemon juice, baked in a casserole or breaded and fried.

Consumers of fish products must exercise some wise decision making skills when it comes to fish purchasing. Knowing what you're buying is the beginning consumer decision. When a food has an unattractive name as do some fish, it's not unusual to see the name "dressed up." Squid may be sold as calamari, pollock as Boston blue fish, or flounder as sole. Srod is the market term used for any small-size fish in the cod family. After determining which fish you desire to purchase the next step comes in determining the best quality produce. In choosing a frozen product, one should be sure the product is:

- solidly frozen, and glossy in appearance.
- wrapping fits tightly and is free of frost build up.
- odor is fresh and mild.
- breaded product appears evenly coated

Live fish such as lobsters and crabs should show leg movement. For top quality fresh products make sure:

- skin is shiny, bright and metallic looking
- eyes are bright and clear
- flesh is firm and elastic to the touch
- odor displays mild ocean or fresh seaweed scent and no ammonia
- fresh shrimp should be firm and full fleshed, pink or white in color.

The demonstration by Blinderman will help those interested in adding fish to their family's menu and to help learn fish preparation skills and receive new recipe ideas.

Those that are interested in attending are asked to call the County Extension Office at 364-3573.

Assigned roommates compared to chosen

LUBBOCK - College freshmen who head to school with a chosen roommate are more likely to stay in school than their counterparts who get assigned roommates, but not because living arrangements among friends are any better.

Texas Tech University educational psychology Professor John C. Carey, who has been studying freshman roommate relationships for two years, said he was surprised to discover that the quality of a roommate relationship is apparently not a major factor in a freshman's decision to stay in school or drop out.

Records comparing roommate assignments of 120 Texas Tech freshmen for fall 1985 show that roommates of choice more frequently enrolled during the spring semester than assigned roommates, but a survey of the quality of their relationships revealed that the two setups have equal levels of rapport.

"There is lots of evidence that a good roommate relationship contributes to academic performance and a rotten roommate situation detracts from academic performance," Dr. Carey said. "This study shows that good and bad relationships occur just as frequently in self-selected roommates as they do in randomly assigned ones and yet the self-selected ones stayed in school the second semester significantly more frequently than assigned ones."

Another paradox is that fewer self-selected roommates who rated their relationships as having low rapport changed roommates for the second semester than assigned roommates who thought their relationship was bad.

"We were amazed at the number of self-selected roommates who had very strong negative feelings like 'I don't trust my roommate, we can't get along and I'm frustrated' and yet they were staying with that roommate the second semester," Carey said. "So, if you are randomly assigned roommates and you can't communicate, you find someone else. If you self-select and can't communicate, you stick with the relationship."

The tendency for roommates of choice to stay in school and in the relationship, whether it is good or bad, may be more a matter of level of commitment than anything, Carey said. A person who commits to a friendship and to being roommates may find it easier to make commitments in general than a person who goes to school to live with a randomly assigned roommate.

When the pressures of school and the roommate relationship start building, he said, the more committed person may have more motivation to stick with it.

"Ninety percent of learning, particularly for the traditional freshman, occurs outside class," he said. "Often the freshman roommate relationship is the first chance to learn what it's like being in an adult relationship with shared living. Balancing work and social life and many other things which have a lasting effect are packed into the college years."

Carey said universities have done a good job of attending to students' needs while they are in class, but their out-of-class needs have been ignored.

"Learning requires a balance of challenge and support," he explained. "Too much challenge and too little support result in anxiety, stress and eventually university exit. Too little challenge and too much support result in stagnation."

The research is partially directed at testing some assumptions made in university housing offices where the number one complaint received is roommate dissatisfaction and disagreements. Two common notions, he said, are that self-selected roommate situations are overly supportive at the start because freshmen need the challenge of becoming compatible with someone they do not know and that self-selected roommates inevitably do not get along.

Charles Werring, assistant director of housing at Texas Tech, is co-director of the research.

"The research gets into the general issue of what predicts success in a relationship. Ideas about smoking, drinking, dating and bedtime haven't been found to be accurate predictors of success," Carey said. "Since the roommate relationship is an important provider of support, we're moving towards trying to predict, understand and maybe even engineer what goes on in the roommate relationship."

Next year, the study will focus on expectations roommates have about what the relationship should be and whether compatibility of expectations influences success of the relationship.

"Man and women have very different views of roommate situations and intimacy," he said. "Freshman women who don't choose their roommates want to know who the person is as soon as housing assigns them. After that, they write or arrange to meet before school starts.

"Men don't care until they get to school. They just show up and if their person's things are in the room, that's fine. Men want someone to do things with - a more instrumental relationship - whereas women want someone to talk to - a relationship with more emphasis on interpersonal qualities."

Carey said it may be possible to improve roommate relationships by offering communication training at orientation and during the year. First, though, the factors which determine success must be determined.

Abundant Life

LIFE IN BALANCE

By Bob Wear

THERE IS A BALANCE which we can maintain that makes it possible to free ourselves from all pretense, and, at the same time, prevents the revelation of things which will be harmful to us and to others. This means that some things must be kept within our secret place of personal knowledge.

WE MUST FACE REALITY in our personal life situation, but this does not require us to reveal everything about it. We must face reality, in order to be able to make necessary corrections and improvements. We cannot hide reality very long by being a pretender, but full-scale pretense will always produce big troubles. We cannot live up to our pretense, and, in time, others will see us for the counterfeit we are.

IF WE 'keep the balance', and we can do this, we will be able to put the best construction on self and our life situation. To the extent we can do this, without pretense, we must do it. For instance, if we are not wealthy we must not pretend to be wealthy; however, it is right for us to make the best of what we do have and be grateful for it. We must not pretend to know things which we do not know, we must not pretend that we know how to do things we cannot do, and we must not pretend to be something that we are not; however, we must never degrade or downgrade ourselves.

WE KEEP THE BALANCE within the structure of realism, and this means that we are being honest and true, but not revealing everything to everybody; neither are we deceiving anyone. We will be presenting ourselves honestly in the very best way we can, but not pretending. Our heart may be heavy, but we can smile, and be pleasant, and can look our best and do our best; and be genuine.

WE MAY BE carrying some private burdens of sadness, regrets, disappointments and such like; but, with 'life in balance' we can be cheerful, pleasant, and hopeful.

New conservation rules have major impact on Texas

COLLEGE STATION — New proposed rules contained in the 1985 farm bill that relate to conservation of erodible lands and wetlands and conservation compliance provisions will have a major impact on Texas farmers.

The rules concern "sodbuster", "swampbuster" and "conservation compliance" provisions of the Food Security Act of 1985.

Sodbuster applies to any land newly cultivated for crop production since Dec. 23, 1985 while Swampbuster deals with farmers who convert wetlands for crop production after Dec. 23, 1985. Conservation compliance requires farmers who benefit from USDA programs and who are farming highly erodible land to plan and apply locally approved conservation plans.

"Farmers who fail to meet these rules will not be eligible for commodity price support and other program payments, disaster payments, crop insurance, FmHA loans, farm storage facility loans and other farm program benefits," points out Dr.

B.L. Harris, soils specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

"The rules are aimed at removing inconsistencies between soil conservation goals and traditional farm commodity program benefits."

"Essentially, the provisions on land conservation say that producers must comply immediately," Harris says. "This means they cannot produce crops on highly erodible land without following a locally approved conservation plan and they cannot produce crops on converted wetlands without being disqualified for certain farm program benefits."

However, a number of exemptions are outlined that allow crop production on erodible land or on wetlands until Jan. 1, 1990 or until two years after the Soil Conservation Service has prepared soil maps for a particular area.

Details of the provisions are published in the June 27 Federal register, and producers have until Aug. 26 to provide written comments to the Director, Cotton, Grain and Rice Price Support Division, ASCS-USDA, Box 2415, Washington, D.C. 20013.

"With these new rules relating to erodible land and wetlands, farmers may want to take a close look at the Conservation Reserve Program that also was created in the 1985 farm legislation," says Harris. "Some 3.8 million acres nationwide have already been accepted into the program (300,000 acres in Texas), and another sign-up period has been set for Aug. 4-15.

"The conservation compliance provision could have a major impact in areas of Texas where soil erosion is a problem, particularly in the South Plains," says Harris. "With the proposed rules, farmers would likely to have to change their cropping systems from a low residue crop such as cotton to crops which produce more residue and thereby help keep erosion in check. Cotton production in some counties could be reduced 75 percent or more."

Farm, ranch congress set Sept. 11-13

FarmAid is sponsoring the United Farmer and Rancher Congress in St. Louis, Mo., on Sept. 11-13, 1986.

The delegates for the Congress will be elected from local caucuses which are being held throughout the United States.

In the Amarillo area, there are nine local meetings planned.

V.B. Morris, Area Coordinator for the Farmer/Rancher Congress, will be having a press conference in Amarillo on Monday, Aug. 11, at 2:30 P.M. The press conference will be at the Texas Department of Agriculture Offices.

Scholarships offered for feedmill, elevator course

Students enrolling in the Feedmill and Elevator Technology course at Texas State Technical Institute in Amarillo this fall now can apply for 10 competitive scholarships paying up to $1,500.

The scholarships, funded with $10,000 in "seed money" provided by the Texas Cattle Feeders Association, will be available to students who select the 18-month (6 quarters) feedmill option. Scholarships of $250 per quarter will be awarded based on a student's past work experience, financial need and academic qualifications. Scholarship money will be applied toward tuition and fees, plus any books and supplies a student must buy.

The course, set to begin September 8, was developed by TSTI at the urging of the cattle feeding and grain industries because of difficulty in finding trained people to operate feedyard feedmills and grain elevators, according to Charlie Ball, executive vice president of the Texas Cattle Feeders Association.

Students will learn how to operate a feedmill and grain handling equipment, dust control techniques and hazards, electrical/electronic weighing controls, hydraulic and pneumatic systems and advanced trouble-shooting, according to Jim Lutes, course instructor and program coordinator at TSTI. Coursework will include training in equipment maintenance, electrical systems, welding and mechanics as well as industrial management and computer operation, Lutes says.

Two training options will be offered, he says. One is a certificate program in elevator technology lasting four quarters or 12 months. The other option, which will allow students to obtain an Associate of Applied Science degree in feedmill technology, will last six quarters or 18 months.

More information on the Feedmill and Elevator Technology course can be obtained from Jim Lutes at Texas State Technical Institute in Amarillo, telephone (806)335-2316.

Embryo workshop slated in Miami

MIAMI — Transplanting embryos in cattle on the farm will be demonstrated during an all-day seminar here Aug. 21 by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

The program at the Project Center, on the east edge of town, will stress techniques that can be used by the producer, said Roberts County Extension Agent Herman Boone. Registration will begin at 8:30 a.m. with the program starting at 9:30 a.m. A Dutch treat lunch will be available.

Dr. John McNeil, Extension beef cattle specialist at Amarillo, will explain the embryo transplant program and nutritional requirements of the cattle.

Dr. Bill Breeding, local veterinarian and breeder of registered and commercial cattle, will discuss donors and recipients.

The embryo will be discussed by Dr. Mark Steele of Graham. He is a veterinarian whose major practice is embryo transfer, Boone noted.

After lunch, the specialists will demonstrate flushing a cow and transplanting an embryo. Participants will be able to view an embryo under a microscope. Boone said the seminar should conclude by 3 p.m.

45 million acres to be idled

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers have signed contracts to idle about 45 million acres this year under government acreage programs for major crops, the Agriculture Department said in a final report.

The final figures issued Friday were only slightly more than USDA announced on May 8 in a preliminary report which showed that about 43.9 million acres would be idled this year under programs for feed grains, wheat, cotton and rice.

Farmers must idle a portion of their cropland base from production in order to qualify for federal price supports and other benefits.

Last year, producers idled 34 million acres under the programs. The record was more than 70 million acres taken from production in 1983.

To get a good bean crop, be certain to properly dry - if they are soybeans. Experts say to count proper drying procedures among the long list of problems associated with soybean harvest. Early freezes or late rains can make harvests more difficult and proper drying a necessity. Damaged beans may already be mold infested and will deteriorate at a faster rate. These beans should be dried to a moisture content below 11%. A high temperature dryer should be used to complete drying as quickly as possible. When batch drying in a bin, most experts believe temperatures of 90 to 100 degrees F should be used. Increase temperatures to 130 to 140 degrees for continuous flow dryers. Use high temperatures anytime the moisture content is 18% or above. Natural air drying is acceptable when moisture content is below 18%. Experts urge farmers to remember poor bean quality from unfavorable weather conditions makes fan drying operations a critical part of a successful crop.

Vietnam veteran recalls service as real life Top Gun

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — "MIGs, MIGs, MIGs, shoot, shoot, shoot."

High above the Vietnam countryside, then 29-year-old Navy Lt. John C. Smith ordered his wingman into action. Smith shot down the first MIG of the Vietnam war. The wingman downed the second plane, and Smith quickly blew another MIG from the sky. The date was June 17, 1965.

Four years later, although he never downed another enemy plane, Smith became the nation's first Top Gun, the commander of a Navy fighter weapons school. The school, a graduate training program, has been popularized in the movie "Top Gun," released this summer.

Smith, retired from the Navy, now is general sales manager for Jim Bass Ford.

The film features thrilling aerial combat maneuvers. Sleek, powerful F-14s streak through the air, rolling, climbing and diving.

One of the tactics featured in the film was originated by Smith. The F-14 finds a "bogey" on his tail. By using a maneuver which unexpectedly "puts on the brakes," the chase plane overflies the F-14, allowing that pilot to aim and shoot. The tactic was used twice in the film, but Smith claims it is actually used as a last-ditch tactic.

Smith's Vietnam MIG kill so impressed the Navy, he spent the next year teaching at various flight training schools around the nation, he said.

"It gave me credibility," Smith said.

It was Smith's reputation as a pilot and flight instructor that made possible his suggestion for Top Gun.

Smith had spent most of his Navy life as a flight instructor at Miramar, Calif. He had flown 300 combat missions (he would ultimately fly 436 missions, the most flown by any pilot in Vietnam). As instructor, Smith's main task was to familiarize pilots with the F-4, the Navy's new swept-wing fighter plane. That plane has since been replaced by the F-14, Smith said.

In 1968, three years after Smith shot down the MIG, a report was released by the Pentagon which said the kill ratio was 2½ enemy planes shot down for every one American plane.

After reading the report, Smith said he became angry.

"We could not live with that," Smith said. "We knew we had to have more hours, better tactics, better adversary pilots."

Smith, then 33, discussed the problems with his friend Lt. Cmdr. Dan Pedersen. They knew pilots were misfiring, missing targets, throwing switches and getting frustrated, nervous and scared. "They were not able to do the job."

They talked of how their friends had seen buddies shot down. Sometimes the downed pilots parachuted safely only to be captured by North Vietnamese. "We lost a heckuva lot of men," Smith said.

The men discussed the possibility of a graduate fighter weapons school. "We said, 'Hey, we've got to do this.'"

For three weeks, Smith and Pedersen worked day and night. They telephoned to Washington and other armed forces units for support. The Fighter Weapons School, nicknamed Top Gun, was approved. Three more instructors were recruited.

The first five classes were held in a trailer. "We had no money, only expertise," Smith said.

A pilot from in each fighter squad with top airmanship and instructor qualities would spend five weeks studying and practicing air combat maneuvers. Each pilot was expected to return to his unit to pass on what he had learned. The 5-week course included the latest research on the MIG-19. Smith designed the curriculum and devised new tactics, which are still used today, he said. Smith commanded Top Gun for 2½ years.

After Top Gun began, the kill ratio improved from 2½-1 to 14-1, Smith said. The school's first graduate shot down five enemy planes, achieving a status as ace pilot, Smith said.

Smith logged 8,000 hours in the F-4, but he never shot down any more enemy planes after the first encounter of the war. "I wanted ace so bad..."

Still, Smith's record is remarkable. He recalled that day in 1965 when he was catapulted off the deck of the Midway with five other F-4s.

The target, a highway bridge, was 120 miles inland in North Vietnam. Navy attack planes (light bombers) had struck the bridge.

"The bridge was down. The fighters stayed behind in a race track pattern in case MIGs came to hit the attack planes. The last attacker called 'feet wet' as he approached the coastline. Now we could exit. We were in teams of two, about 25 miles apart. I said, 'Let's vacate.'"

"But I changed my mind. I said, 'Let's give it one more orbit. I turned 50 degrees to the left and picked up two targets on the scope about 38 miles away.'"

"Who could have been there? All the friendlies had vacated. I could see two targets about three miles apart. I climbed higher, calling it out. 'Bogey dead ahead at 20 miles — bogey at 18 miles.'"

Smith and his wingman agreed on tactics. Smith would fly by the first bogey and identify it. If it was the enemy, the wingman would fire on it, Smith would shoot at the second plane.

Smith flew slightly off course into the sun as he met the bogey. The pilot rolled sideways to get a better look at Smith. Smith spotted the round wing tips unique to MIGs. Smith's plan worked, and three MIGs fell out of the air that day.

"It was not a dogfight. We were using the weapons system the way we were supposed to. There was no hurry, no panic. It was a classroom kill."

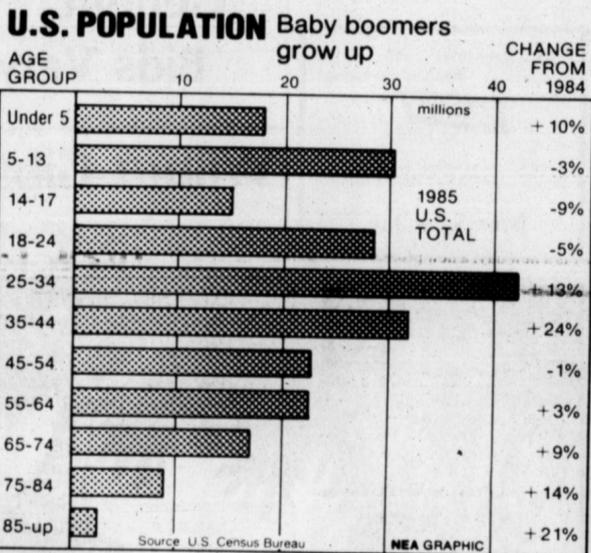

The impudence of fighter pilots depicted in the movie was true-to-life, Smith said.

In one scene of "Top Gun," a navy fighter pilot (played by Tom Cruise) flies his plane upside down over the cockpit of an unfriendly plane. The astonished pilot looks up to see the two Americans snapping pictures and gesturing objectionably.

"We did things like that," Smith said. "Fighter pilots are so cocky. Top Guns were the worst. Most women were turned off by them."

"If a pilot was quiet and sedate — if he was at home in the library, he's not a fighter."

Smith recalled how he flew cockpit to cockpit with Russian Bears or Badgers, when he had to discourage them from spying on fleet operations. Russian pilots looked up to find Smith and his backseat man holding up large cards with insults printed on them — in Russian.

While the number of American teenagers is shrinking, the post-World War II baby boomers — leaving their youth behind — still dominate the U.S. population. The greatest new increases have been among those Americans from 25-to-44 years old.

'Music is generic'

Christian says two-way lyrics just effort at quality

IRVING, Texas (AP) — There are a couple of things that really bug Chris Christian, the mild-mannered multi-talented guru of the Christian music business.

One is any effort to define a song as "Christian music."

"There's no such thing as Christian music. Music is generic," he says, explaining there are only Christian lyrics.

The other annoyance is questions about why he changed his name from Lon Christian Smith.

"You're not going to ask me about my name?" he asks. "That's a sore spot."

Christian said some people mistakenly believe he changed his name from Smith with the ulterior motive of tying himself to Christian music.

In fact, he says, he adopted his professional name at the start of a career that began in pop, but which today puts him at the forefront of the Christian music scene.

At 34, the Abilene native runs one of the largest independent Christian publishing companies, LCS Music Group, and has been responsible for 20 gold and platinum records.

He also is president of Home Sweet Home Productions, his record-producing company based here with satellite offices in Beverly Hills and Nashville.

He's written songs for Sheena Easton, B.J. Thomas and Olivia Newton-John, with one of his earliest songs recorded by Elvis Presley.

With an easy, relaxed manner that matches most of his music, Christian has been described as a Steve McQueen look-alike, a not-quite-accurate description. But he has the kind of blond good looks that wear well for performing on stage, having started out with summer appearances at Opryland during his college days at Abilene Christian College.

He is famous in the recording industry as the discoverer of Amy

Grant, the Christian rock sensation renowned as the top-selling gospel artist who helped bring Christian music to the wider audience it reaches today.

Christian has played no small part himself in broadening the Christian music audience with songs he writes and produces, many with lyrics of double meaning that don't always give the song away as religious in nature.

"Safe," recorded by Marilyn McCoo and Steve Archer, which wasn't written by Christian but was produced by Home Sweet Home Productions, is an example:

"I'm safe, safe inside your love. And there ain't nothing I can't face, safe inside your hiding place."

Christian thinks the whole two-way lyric issue is as overblown as the discussion on how Christian music ought to sound.

"People get caught up on whether Christian music can be rock," he said in an interview at his offices here. "We're just a bunch of normal people that happen to have a message... worth hearing."

"We as companies and artists, we want to give as quality a musical package as pop can give. We don't want it to be corny," said Christian, who likes listening to the latest secular pop recordings in his spare time.

With religious roots in the Church of Christ, Christian's musical roots are pop and the sound pervades his music.

Still, he says, "I think some records are anointed and some aren't."

He also believes Amy Grant was chosen by God.

"I really think she was anointed. God just planned her to happen," he said.

Her "happening" is thanks in part to Christian who in 1976 heard a tape she had cut when she was 16.

"She was just a little girl and sounded sweet and wrote real sweet little songs," he said.

But there was more.

"She sounded real believable."

In Christian's office in suburban Irving is a sweetly sexy poster of Miss Grant, clad in blue jeans, leaning over and holding a red high-heeled shoe in her hand. It is a harmless image, but one that helps add to the new look and sound that have become Christian music.

Christian's own climb up the music ladder began 15 years ago when, as a college student pursuing a business degree while songwriting and guitar-playing, Christian went to Nashville for the summer with $100 in his pocket and high hopes for his career.

One of his dad's old war buddies had an extra ticket to a Chet Atkins concert. It was there that he met Archie Campbell, one of the stars of television's "Hee-Haw."

"I guess I must have seemed like a nice guy," Christian says, because Campbell invited him to house-sit while he was out of town.

It gave the young musician a place to stay for the summer and entree to several music industry contacts.

"Had something not happened the end of that summer, I guess there was a chance I might have stayed in Abilene," he said.

Instead, he returned for three more summers, performing at Opryland, and making friends with members of the backup band for Elvis Presley, a development that resulted in an amazing fluke: the recording of his first song by Presley himself.

"It was not unusual for (Presley) to call everyone in Nashville about 1 a.m. and send a jet from Memphis and fly them down," he said. In the wee hours of the morning, the group would often sit around and sing.

One morning about 4 a.m., one of Christian's friends sang Presley a song Christian had written his junior year in high school, "Love Song of the Year."

Presley said he wanted to record it and did, said Christian, adding: "That was one of the first good songs, decent songs, I'd written."

Christian quickly became a backup guitarist for such performers as Wayne Newton and Jerry Reed before musician — and later politician — Mike Curb recruited him in 1975 for a new group, Cotton, Lloyd & Christian.

At about the same time Christian formed Home Sweet Home Productions, which is now part of a growing music empire.

Married and the father of two young daughters, the Abilene banker's son moved back to Texas this year after several years on the West Coast. He's built a house in Dallas.

"I want my kids to grow up with their grandparents," he said.

Texan hopes to to turn sun screen into made-in-shade business

DALLAS (AP) — A man who makes his living selling plastic key chains, stuffed animals and other trinkets designed to be bought on a whim, then later discarded, says he's found a cool item with staying power.

A piece of accordion-pleated cardboard designed to keep down the temperature of car interiors is going to be hot, predicts John Newton, the Texas distributor of Auto-Shade.

"People are drawn to this crazy product," he said. "I don't believe I've ever had an item that has (such) universal appeal."

The shade stretches across the inside of a car's windshield, held in place by the visors. Its California makers claim it cools the inside of a vehicle by 15 degrees.

The side facing the street is printed with a giant pair of sunglasses. The other side reads, "Need Help Please Call Police" for use in the rear window in case of a breakdown.

At $4.99 retail — $5.99 for the model with decorative Groucho Marx-style glasses with bushy eyebrows or heart-shaped glasses framing cartoon eyes — the Auto-Shade qualifies as a novelty item while packing the extra punch of having a purpose, Newton said.

"This is bigger than the pet rock — which was hot, then died. The auto shade will not die."

Auto-Shade was introduced in California four years ago, trickling into K-Mart and Target stores in Texas last year. But it wasn't until spring that Newton got the rights to distribute the shade in Texas and the Midwest and started giving the product its big push.

Since then, he estimates he's sold more than 50,000 Auto-Shades to grocery, discount and gift stores throughout the state.

Newton, originally of Chicago, spent time at several toy manufacturers and worked for Russ Berry Co. novelty items for nine years in Texas before he quit to sell Auto-Shades.

He learned of the product when his son Jack brought several home from a California vacation.

After visiting the two Israeli emigrants at the helm of Auto-Shade

Inc., Avi Ruimi and Avi Fatal, in Los Angeles in December, Newton was inspired enough to sink $140,000 into the venture.

He established an office at his Dallas home and began shipping the shades in March out of a Carrollton warehouse.

He benefitted from the founders' perseverance.

Ruimi and Fatal took two years to go beyond sluggish sales, hitting upon the sunglasses-help design in 1984, which brought international success.

"If it was just a pretty design, it wouldn't work," Newton said, explaining the tie-in between sunglasses and shading a car is what makes the idea work.

Texas State Optical purchased 2,000 original Auto-Shades from Newton. Half sport a "California Dreamin'" theme and half a Texas Sesquicentennial design.

All of them advertise the TSO name and its summer offer of a free Auto-Shade with the purchase of a pair of sunglasses.

"If you walk around Dallas," said TSO marketing director Phil Suttle, "you'll see lots of people utilizing towels, sheets, whatever they can to keep their cars cool so they don't burn their legs and hands. There's definitely a need for Auto-Shade."

The success has invited imitations. Newton says he spends much of his time aggressively pursuing those who market copycat products. The shade itself is not patented, but the shade with glasses is, he said.

And he continues to dabble in other novelty items. On the drawing board now is something called a Freedom Planter — a molded plastic self-watering pot with a control dial which allows the gardener to regulate the amount of water released.

"It's exciting and fun," Newton said of the novelty business. "Every day is a new day, a new product."

Kindergarteners learn computers

HARTFORD, Mich. (AP) — When school officials decided it was time little Hartford went high-tech in a big way, they started out with two computers and only a vague idea how to work them into the curriculum.

That was five years ago. Today, even kindergarten students are expected to put down their crayons and punch a keyboard.

The rural southwest Michigan district now has 150 microcomputers — one for every 10 students — mandatory computer classes for grades six through eight and a blinking video screen in nearly every classroom.

"We're going full tilt now," said Carol Godlew, principal of Hartford Middle School.

That sort of high-tech explosion, echoing throughout the nation's schools, has prompted the National Education Association to study Hartford and two other districts to see how schools are teaching students about computers and how computers are being used to teach.

"We're taking three snapshots of three districts to see where they've been with computer literacy, where they are right now and where they are going," said Roy Fuentes, NEA manager in instruction and professional development.

Hartford has been picked to represent a rural district; Dallas as an example of an urban environment; and Concord, N.H., as an example of a suburban district, Fuentes said.

"We were very, very pleased with Hartford," Fuentes said. "A lot of people would go into a rural district and not expect to see much in technology. But they were very sophisticated."

Hartford developed a computer literacy program for the district's 1,500 students with the aid of the University of Michigan, said school Superintendent Robert Pobuda.

Kindergarten and elementary students use computers to recognize shapes, letters and colors, then later to assist with spelling and other classwork. Students begin learning how to load software and operate the machines in third grade, said Red Arrow Elementary School Principal John Busch.

Middle school students take on more sophisticated tasks, including some introductory programming and word processing. Training becomes more technical in high school, where computer classes are optional.

But the district also uses computers as teaching tools for nearly every other class, including to assist special education students, Pobuda said.

If you put a piece of wax paper directly on top of soups and stews before you refrigerate them, you can peel the fat off when they're cool.

Weddings, ballgames part of country doctoring

LEONARD, Texas (AP) — Modern minor emergency clinics may be as slick and faceless as fast food franchises, but this 65-year-old medical clinic is cozy and comfortable, like a country kitchen.

Never mind the ghastly green walls. Dr. James Davis' clinic feels like home.

Maybe it's because he and wife, Ruth, live in the other half of the building, and on a late afternoon the smell of fried chicken drifts down the hallway to the well-worn waiting room.

Maybe it's because people in his waiting room aren't here just to see a doctor.

They wait to visit a friend. Davis, 64, retires this month as Leonard's only resident doctor after 34 years as a family physician.

"I won't miss the phone ringing in the middle of the night or being on call seven days a week, 24 hours a day. I won't miss the clinic," he said.

"But I'll miss the people who come in. Visiting the people. Yeah, you bet. Most of them are my friends, you know. They'll be what I miss the most."

By his reckoning, Davis delivered 750 babies during his first 15 years here. That's over half the population of this town of 1,421.

Of course, Davis' practice isn't limited to Leonard proper. His patients come from nearby towns like Celeste, Trenton and Blue Ridge to see this town's only resident doc.

"I'm not sure exactly what a country doctor is, but I think that's what I am," Davis said. "I think a country doctor practices in a town of under 3,000. He participates in the community in which he lives: goes to high school ballgames and people's weddings and funerals.

"That's all a part of being a country doctor."

There's more, of course. Davis still makes housecalls when they're needed, usually about once a week.

"Now that was much more common when I started. I carried a much bigger bag then. The bag I carried weighed about 50 pounds. It looked like I was moving to another town to live or something.

"The (bag) I have now doesn't hold much. Back then you carried a little bit of everything to try to handle most any emergency that came up. But as you get more and more equipment in the doctor's offices and in the hospital, there's less reason to make housecalls because you can do a better job (at the clinic or hospital) where you have everything available," he said.

"Now a housecall does very little other than relax the nerves of the patient while you get them ready to go on to someplace where you can really do some good."

He drew the line at delivering babies at home.

His first — and last — home delivery was performed while he was a medical student in Illinois. The ordeal involved a heavy woman and a feather bed.

"Don't tell the story in the newspaper. Just say I don't believe in home deliveries," Davis said, smiling at the memory.

Davis' practice grew so large that he stopped delivering babies about 20 years ago. Now he sees about 50 patients a day and even opens for an hour every Sunday to see three or four people.

"That's so they won't call on Sunday afternoon," he said, laughing.

Davis does a little bit of everything — from setting fractured bones to stitching up wounds — in his clinic, which was built as a hospital in 1921 by Dr. John Pendergrass.

"We get a lot of garden variety illnesses here. The most common things you see are strained backs or hayfever and colds, something like that.

"Over the years, the illnesses have been pretty much the same. You read about herpes and AIDS and that sort of thing, but they're not very big here in Leonard."

Davis sees his share of life and death cases, and that's when being a country doctor is especially difficult, he said.

"You become emotionally involved with them. That may put an extra strain on you when you're trying to save their life. You know who they are. You know their family."

He has known many of his patients since the moment they were born.

"And it's kind of sad. Some of my patients have cried," he said of his retirement. "It's taken them 34 years to get me just like they want me and now they're going to have to start over with someone new."

Dr. Rodney Franklin, 26, will take over Davis' practice and operate the clinic.

"I know he has a few new things in mind. Computers and that sort of thing, I suppose," Davis said.

After he retires, Davis will move back to his family's farm in Paris, Ill.

"My mother still lives up there. And I'm going to do some light farming, though nothing that will alarm the department of agriculture."

He said he and his wife will return often to Leonard to visit.

And he said he's never regretted answering a job ad in a medical journal 34 years ago and moving to this small North Texas town.

"This is what it's all about, right here, not in big hospitals," said Davis, whose town has made him everything from chamber of commerce president to volunteer high school swim coach.

"Of course, Denton Cooley or somebody like that might have another viewpoint.

"A fellow has to do his own thing, you know. In other words, just because I do this doesn't mean that I think every doctor should. Somebody's got to do the open heart surgery and that sort of thing.

"But most of the doctors in the big city, I imagine they don't practice in the same neighborhood in which they live.

"Here, it's rewarding. You feel like you're a friend to the patient as well as a physician."

How would he like to be remembered in Leonard?

"As a good doctor."

"No. As a good doctor and a good friend."

Turtles affectionate, smart

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND, Texas (AP) — "Turtles love people," she tells her attentive audience of tourists and visitors. "They love us as much as they love each other."

For 20 years, Ila Loetscher has pleaded for protection of endangered sea turtles. She's carried her message to several countries, appearing on Johnny Carson, David Letterman, "Believe It or Not," the "Today Show," and several other television programs.

"The Turtle Lady," and her turtles give a show for visitors twice a week during the summer at her home on Gulf Boulevard in South Padre Island. Guests over the age of 4 are asked for a one-dollar donation.

During one recent show, the Turtle Lady's enthusiasm seemed infectious to the audience, which included tourists from Dallas and the Midwest and school children from the Valley. Several of the spectators marveled at Ms. Loetscher's energy.

Ms. Loetscher insists that the various sea turtle species she keeps and nurses at Sea Turtle Inc. display both affection and intelligence.

"I know they are loving because they love me," she says. "They love being held by people. They love being held tight so they can put a flipper around my neck."

During the shows, the turtles wave hello to the audience, give pats on the cheek with their flippers and perform various other tricks. One, a hawksbill sea turtle named "Pancho Gonzalez," is dressed in a Mexican costume. "Pancho shows how relaxed he is by leaning his head way back," she says.

Ms. Loetscher says the show turtles follow commands they learn by the sound of the human voice. They learn fast and never forget, she says, and are rewarded with affection instead of food.

Besides intelligence and affection, Ms. Loetscher says sea turtles have even shown that they will help each other in times of danger.

About three years ago, a fisherman found an injured Atlantic green turtle in the shallow waters of South Bay and brought it to the "Turtle Lady." The animal couldn't raise its head, and a veterinarian from the Gladys Porter Zoo in Brownsville later determined it suffered from two collapsed lungs.

The injured turtle was placed in a tank with two other Atlantic green turtles that Ms. Loetscher has kept for over 12 years. The turtles, which she calls "Geraldine" and "John Livingston Sea Turtle," seemed to sense that something was wrong with the new visitor in their tank.

The Turtle Lady says Geraldine and John Livingston Sea Turtle took turns going down and pushing the 75-pound injured turtle up to the surface so it could breathe. This continued every five minutes, until the vet arrived.

"They were trying to save her life," Ms. Loetscher says. "It was done nonchalantly, as if they had talked over what they were going to do."

Ms. Loetscher says she had heard of porpoises engaging in such life-saving activities, but this was a first for turtles.

The Turtle Lady became interested in the plight of sea turtles after seeing the demise of the Kemp's ridley sea turtle in Mexico.

As late as 1947, over 40,000 female ridleys would swarm ashore to lay their eggs at Rancho Nuevo, 50 miles north of Tampico. But collectors would kill the turtles to obtain leather, and the newly-laid eggs were gathered as aphrodisiacs.

In recent years, only 500 female ridleys show up each summer to lay their eggs on the beach. However, Ms. Loetscher says the numbers should gradually increase. The beaches are now patrolled by Mexican marines, and civilian crews from Mexico and the U.S. work to make sure no turtles are injured, she said.

Ms. Loetscher and other concerned residents are seeking to establish a second nesting ground for the ridley turtle on a 12-mile stretch of Padre Island National Seashore near Corpus Christi. Turtle eggs from Mexico were transported so the young turtles would hatch and crawl into the sea. After about nine years, the females are expected to return to their birth place to nest.

The second nesting area was initially established on South Padre Island, but was moved when increased development took place here.

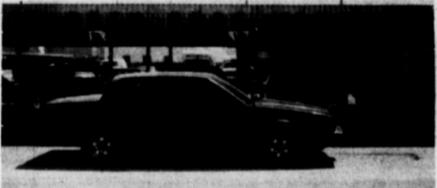

The Turtle Lady's latest conservation effort is to convince shrimpers to use a new type of net which has an escape hatch for turtles and porpoises. Shrimp fall into a second net and no shrimp are lost in the "Ted trawler" net, she said.

Ms. Loetscher also encourages South Padre beachgoers to bring her any injured turtles they may find. Her organization, Sea Turtle, Inc., tries to nurse them back to health, though they aren't always successful.

The turtles currently on display at Sea Turtle, Inc. include several large turtles which weigh 125 pounds and measure almost six feet in length. Ms. Loetscher says Atlantic green turtles can weigh up to 600 pounds, and live up to 136 years.
