The lonely, untrailed stretch of The lonely, untrailed stretch of mountain and forest north of the bor-der settlement of Euclid was called Land's End. When the little hamlet burned down one night it was blotted off the map and the final outpost of civilization became a mining town fifty miles to the east. Laura Boyd, a young, pretty widow, looked to the general hegina as a re-lief from hard grubbing with no se-finements. She had married a yery finements. She had married a very ordinary man who had died leaving next to nothing. She had remained at Euclid because she could not very well get away, patiently accepting the burdens of necessity, but all the time dreaming of a better future and longng for books, for companionship in he real busy, bustling world. True to her kindly, helpful nature the had remained in makeshift shel-ters until nearly all of the people of the settlement had left, Then, with her sole possessions, comprising a suitcase and a horse, formerly her husband's, she started alone for the magnet form nearest town.

Laura was entirely unfamiliar with the trail across the hills. However, she calculated that by closely follow-ing the beaten track made by those who had preceded her she could not go far astray. "Better walt till next week, Mrs.

Boyd," suggested a neighbor. "Yes, and we can all keep together," submitted another.

"Besides, we're due for a storm, I'm thinking," added a weather-wise old man. The predicted storm overtook her The predicted storm overtook her and she had to seek the shelter of a copse until nightfall. When it ceased she allowed the horse to follow his bent. The next morning a high wind prevailed, she was chilled and soaked to the skin. Between whiles she dis-mounted and rested, dealing sparingly with her meager supply of food. On and on went the horse, steed and rider were lost as to ideation or compase were lost as to location or compass

Another day, another night. Now they were threading the mazes of a vast forest. The third morning Laura awoke from a soggy couch of fern and brush to find the horse had wandered on. When she awoke the next morning she was weak from lack of food. She found some wild berries and about the middle of the afternoom entered the middle of the afternoom entered habitation. As Laura neared it she discerned that it was built entirely of tree bark. Its door was open, she peered within. The room beyond was furnished with a table, two chairs and a couch. These were all made of roughly hewn trees. The covering of the couch was of deer skin. Upon the table was a dish holding some cold brolled game. Ravenously hun-gry, Laura assuaged her appetite with this food and some wild grapes. Then her wearled head fell upon her out-stretched arms and she slumbered. Laura awoke to look up with a start. Laura awoke to look up with a start. A bronzed faced young man stood re-garding her with amazement. His at-tire was strange and unique. His coat was made of woven dried grasses, his shoes of the skin of some animal, his can of brailed symm floor. He suc cap of braided swamp flags. UGLY CHARGE

Government Should Handle Army Social Work Through a Single Agency

By RAYMOND B. FOSDICK, Training Camp Commission

Social work in the army in any future emergency should be handled by the government itself through a single nonsectarian agency.

It seems to me that the lesson of the war in social work involves perhaps three points: The elimination of sectarian auspices; reduction in the number of agen-cies employed, and the transfer to the government itself of much of the activity hitherto left to private initiative. After eight months with the troops in France I am convinced that the average woman worker attached to a hut is worth four or five men workers. Certainly her effect on the morale and spirit of the troops is extraordinary. An "Honest to God American Girl," as the soldiers call her, can do more to keep the men cheerful and create an atmosphere of home than any other factor; and the work of our women in France-Y. M. C. A. girls, Salvation Army girls, Red Cross girls, and the representatives of other agencies-has been in no small degree responsible for the unflagging devotion and inexhaustible patience with which our troops carried forward their high enterprise.

Our men have been glad to receive what the societies had for them in the shape of service or supplies, and they have not cared two straws whether it came from Protestant, Catholic or Jewish hands. Our boys fought at Chateau Thierry and in the Argonne as Americans. They did not fight as Protestants, Catholics or Jews.

As a matter of fact there is no reason for sectarianism. The religious interests of the army are wisely confined to the chaplains.
