MONDAY -OCTOBER 12, 1835. Latest from England .- The ships Britannia, from Liverpoo and Louisa from London, have arrived at New York, bring ing London news to Aug. 31. There is no news of importance. The Municipal Corporations Reform Bill had been returned to the House of Commons, with the amendment of the Lords, but had not been acted on there. The Obser-

It is not expected that the discussions respecting the Municipal Corporations Bill will be brought to a close before Friday. The amendments will be taken into consideration on Monday, and the objections of the Commons communicated to the Lords in conference on Tuesday or Wednesday. The answer of their Lordships will determine how far a second conference may be necessary—but it is not likely a second conference may be necessary—but it is not likely that the question can be protracted beyond Friday.

The fate of the bill is quite uncertain, but it seems probable that it may pass as amended with the support of Ministers, but with the opposition of the violent members of the Seville, Malaga and Grenada, on the 23d and 24th of August, and that the Constitution of 1812 was proclaimed. All the Friars at Malaga were imprisoned on the 23d, and a number of them killed or wounded. The troops were put down, and all that were not in favor of the new Constitution were either shot or imprisoned. There was great joy and illuminations through out the place when Capt. H. left, and things were getting quiet.

Death of Mr. Barry .- Letters from England, received at New York, announce the death of the Hon. Wm. T. Barry, Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Spain, and late Postmaster General of the United States. Having reached Liverpool, on his way to Spain, his journey was nterrupted there by severe illness, from which he did not

Maryland Election - The result of the election in Mary. land is the choice of five Whig and three Van Buren members of Congress, and fifty seven Whig and twenty three Van Buren members of the State Assembly. The members of Congress are Daniel Jenifer, George C. Washington, James Turner, John N. Steele, James A. Pearce, Isaac McKim, Benjamin C. Howard, Francis Thomas. The members of the Senate, previously chosen, are all Whigs.

Abolition Meeting at Utica .- Ten of the eleven gentlemen residing in Albany, whose names were affixed to the notification of a meeting at Utica, for the purpose of forming an Abolition Association of the State of New York, have declared that their names were thus used without their knowledge or consent, and that if they had been consulted, they would have opposed the measure.

Its motion is in a southeasterly direction. It is about five days behind the time assigned for it by the astronomers, as indicated in the tables published in the American Almanac, and other publications. This is not a great mistake, in a reckoning of more than seventy-six years.

Hops .- The Bangor Advertiser states that large quantities of Hops are raised in the vicinity of that city, and that the quantity brought to market from the neighboring towns, in the course of the preceding week, was estimated to be worth $50,000. They are selling at 16 a 18 cents per lb .-At these prices they are a profitable article of cultivation.

Fire .- On Saturday evening, a little before 10 o'clock. fire was discovered issuing from the stable of Messrs Nudd & Moore, on Pond and Charlestown streets, near Charles River Bridge. The building was wholly destroyed. It immediately communicated on the West to a two story wood en dwelling, owned by Messrs N. & M. and occupied by Abraham and Hewes Moore, which was about half burnt. Messrs N. & M. had $1100 insured at the Tremont office. On the East, a large store house, owned by Mr Aaron Ban croft, was destroyed, in which was stored a large amount of merchandize belonging to different persons. A quantity of rags owned by Messrs Grant & Daniell, were valued at $5000, and part of them were saved; insurance at Manutacturers' office. Much of the crockery ware, which belonged to Messrs Taylor & Waldron, was saved. The chain cables belonged to heirs of Pick'g Dodge. A quantity of Liverpool coal, owned by Messrs Josiah Whitney & Co in that part of the building towards Pond street, will be saved in part. Mr. John Dodd occupied one part for the storage of tobacco and other articles. Two sheds adjoining the building, containing hard coal, belonging to Mr Ban eroft, were demolished. Adjoining the store house on Pond street, was the carpenters' shop of Messrs Brown & Emerson, which was destroyed, although a great part of their tools were saved. Presentation of the Vase. - Monday evening, the large and splendid Silver Vase, procured by the subscription of gen tlemen of this city, was presented to the Hon. Daniel Web ster, in presence of a great concourse of ladies and gentlemen, at the Odeon. The Vase was presented, in the name of the subscribers, by the Hon. Francis C. Gray, who made a very pertinent and eloquent address, expressive of the sense of the donors, of Mr. Webster's distinguished public

Mr. We bster replied in an animated and eloquent speech of more than an hour in length, in which he gave a review of the leading principles of his public life, and described the dangers to which the constitution has been recently exposed, and which he has used his best efforts, in conjunction with his colleagues in Congress, to avert. The address was listened to with deep attention and interest, and was cheered with the most enthusiastic applauses.

The house was crowded in every part to its utmost capacity, and the streets adjoining were so thronged, long before the house was opened, that when the doors were thrown open, and the house was filled, the crowd in the streets was hardly diminished. Vast numbers were consequently obligto return to their homes without gaining admittance. Serious apprehensions were entertained that accidents would be occasioned by the involuntary pressure of the multitude, but the most exemplary order was preserved, and we did not hear of any one suffering any material injury,

South Carolina College .- The Columbia Telescope announces the assurance of upwards of sixty fresh applications for admission to the College before the 1st of January. The expenses of board for forty weeks and tuition, will be $180. Three of the newly elected Professors had arrived, and Dr. Lieber was expected by the next steam packet, and Mr Nott was on his way.

Consumption of Beer and Spirits in Great Britain .- According to an account lately laid before Parliament, it appears that there were consumed in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, during the year ending on the 5th of July last, for the brewing of Beer, 32,139,650 bushels of Malt. Of this immense quantity, 28,969,903 bushels were consumed in England, it being equal to two bushels of malt for each person in the kingdom, or four bushels for each grown up person. The consumption in Scotland was 1,139 801 bushels and in Ireland 2,055,326, being about half a bushel for each person grown up.

The consumption of home made spirits in the same period was 23,408,000 gallons, of which 7,664,000 were consumed in England, 9,707,000 in Ireland, and 6,036,000 in Scotland Supposing one third of the population to be consumers of spirits, this quantity gives a sixteenth of a gallon to each consumer in England, two and a half gallons to each in Ireland, and seven gallons to each in Scotland.

The quantity of foreign spirits which paid duty in 1834, was 4,765,000 gallons, of which the greater part was consu-

Proposed Couvention in Pennsylvania .- By an act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, the people of that State are required to give their vote on the question, whether they are in favor of a convention or opposed to a convention of delegates, to propose amendments to the Constitution, to be submitted to the people for ratification or rejection.

Maryland Election.—From Allegany, we learn that four Van Burenites have been elected to the House of Delegates from that County. In other respects the result is not varied from our statement of yesterday. We have, we believe, no corrections to make. We have succeeded in electing three of the four delegates from Frederick, as was intimated in our last; and the general result, or aggregate strength of parties in the State Legislature will be as follows: House of Delegates, Whig 55; Van Buron 25. Senate, 15, all Whigs.—Whig majority on joint ballot, 45.

With regard to members of Congress, as stated yesterday, we have elected five, and our opponents three. We have thus secured a strong and decisive majority both in the State Legislature, and in our Delegation to the next Congress. In every event, under all circumstances, therefore, gress. In every event, under all circumstances, therefore, the vote of Maryland will go against the 'spoils_{it} party, and in support of Whig principles. Serious Affair .- Chesnut street, between Third and Fourth, was yesterday afternoon througed with persons attracted by the operations of the Sheriff. It appears that a short time since, Mary McKinley, who has done business in the fancy dry goods line for some time past as a femme sole, upon a pretty large scale, stopped payment for $120,000 to $150,000. The circumstances created no little surprise, and $150,000. The circumstances created no little surprise, and several meetings of her creditors were held in consequence, which resulted in a full conviction that there had been some dishonest dealings on her part. Yesterday it was ascertained that she had hired a large, store house in the rear of her store, and suspicion was at once raised that it contained some of the goods that had unaccountably disappeared; the Sheriff was therefore empowered to attach, for the benefit of the creditors, whatever could be found; the doors and windows were well secured, but an entrance was finally effected, and a large amount of valuable goods discovered and taken.

WHIG CONVENTION.

After reading the resolutions offered by him, Mr. Foster addressed the meeting as follows :--

Mr. Chairman,—Perhaps it may be expected of me on presenting these Resolutions, that I say something in support of them. So completely occupied, however, has been my time, that I have made not the least preparation for that purpose. I will not, however, wholly avail myself of this apology, for the subject itself is of such deep and stirring interest that it may be easier to give utterance to the feelings it excites, than to retain them and keep silence.

In the first place, sir, permit me to congratulate my numerous friends here assembled upon the harmony and good feeling which pervade this meeting. So many intelligent feeling which pervade this meeting. So many intelligent and patriotic men from the different parts of the State, from the various professions and occupations of life, assembled the various professions and occupations of file, assembled to select candidates worthy to receive the suffrages of the enlightened and independent electors of Massachusetts, and performing this labor with an unanimity hardly to have been anticipated, is a cheering omen that what we have so well begun, our constituents will fully execute.

The candidates whom you have with one voice agreed to recommend to the people, as entitled to their confidence and support, are indeed such men as do honor to us and our constituents while we referse to do honors to them.

stituents, while we profess to do honor to them. They are taken from different sections of the State and from different occupations, and cannot fail to have a full knowledge of the interests and wishes of the whole people. They are practi-cal politicians who, you may expect, will endeavor to be useful, rather than projectors of novel experiments. Above all, sir, they are men of spotless integrity, against whom the tongue of envy or of malice has never whispered a word of But with all these fair prospects, we are not to deceive ourselves as if the work were already accomplished, or as if all danger and difficulty were overcome. Sir, the best of causes is destined to meet with opposition, and to be liable to failure if not sustained by its friends. In the language of one of the Resolutions before you, there is no safety unless the public are "excited to vigilance against the assaults of open foes, and the machinations of false and insidious friends." With the open and avowed enemies of our cause, we have long been accustomed to contend. We have witnessed the emissaries of an administration not over-scruptures of the means to be employed in the accomplishment of nessed the emissaries of an administration not over-scrupu-lous of the means to be employed in the accomplishment of a desired end, holding out to our citizens the honors and emoluments of office as the price of political apostacy, and we have seen the proffer met with manly firmness and in-dignation. Our citizens have heard the oft-told tale of these deceivers, and looked upon the glittering gold within their reach, and then they thought of their freedom and their inde-pendence, they thought of their fathers, their fresides, and their children, they remembered that they were sons of Mas-sachusetts, and the temptation lost its power. But we have been called of late to be on our guard against pretended and insidious friends, who in a thousand disguis-pretended and insidious friends, who in a thousand disguis-es and forms endanger our success. When open attacks fail, the motto is, "divide and conquer." Hence we see portions of our honest citizens forming themselves into po-litical parties of different names and getting up their respec-tive candidates for the various effices of government, without professing any very distinct and peculiar system of poli-cy. Sometimes we hear of the middling class in the city, and working men in the country, sometimes it is an anti-square and compass party, and sometimes a sectarian or sectional party. The effect of these, if not to destroy, is to divide and weaken, that portion of our fellow citizens who agree in the general system of policy which ought to be puragree in the general system of policy which ought to be pursued, and thereby prostrate an election. An insidious attempt of this kind is now in operation. But yesterday the seats of the gentlemen of this House were clandestinely furnished with an electioneering handbill, without the name of the author, or of the printer, and, as we are bound to believe, in justice to the gentleman proposed to be run as the opposition candidate, without his consent or knowledge.—

our greatness."

Sir, while I portray the difficulties and dangers which lie before us, let me not dishearten, but rather simulate those who must engage in the conflict. The enemy you are called on to encounter is the same you have so often vanquished. The object for which you contend, is the one in support of which your fathers nobly pledged "their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honors." Yes, sir, let me remind you that and their sacred honors." Yes, sir, let me remind you that you are the descendants of those master spirits who reared our political temple. In yonder edifice is "the cradle of liberty," where your fathers taught those great principles which constitute your code. The very streets through which we daily pass have been stained with blood in defence of your inheritance. On Bunker's Hill the die was cast, and the charter of your liberties sealed in blood. Sir, let me entreat you to remember this, and if you see your sister States falling victims to an electioneering administration. mayed, but rather think it glorious to stand alone, unconquered, uncorrupted. Com-municate to your constituents a knowledge of the fitness and ments of your constituents a knowledge of the timess and merits of your candidates, and prepare them to meet the crisis, and to meet it as one man. Yes, sir, hand in hand, shoulder to shoulder, let us march to the polls in one solid, unbroken column, and "achieve another glorious victory over the mercenaries of a political and military chieftain,"—not for the purpose of rioting on the "spoils," but that we may transmit, unimpaired, this fair inheritance "to our children to produce a children's shilds on to research and forever it." dren, and our children's children forever and forever!

Mr. BLAKE, of Boston, rose, he said; not for the purpose of attempting to add anything to the force and strength of the remarks that had already fallen from other members of this Convention in support of the nomination, upon which we had unanimously, and, he trusted, most cordially, agreed, is evening.

After the luminous, and very eloquent address which had been made to us by the Chairman of the Committee, reporting the nomination, together with the accompanying Resolves, such an attempt would be, not only superfluous, but absolutely presumptuous.

His only purpose, in rising at all, upon the present occasion, was therefore, said Mr. B. merely to express, in a single word, the great gratification which he, for one, had experienced, at the reading of the Hesolves, in perceiving that the Committee had deemed it proper to avail themselves of the occasion, to reaffirm by one of those resolves the nomi-nation which was adopted at a former Convention, of our favorite candidate for the Chief Magistracy of the nation.— This renewed expression of our undiminished confidence in was a circumstance which might, perhaps, have had the gentleman, that, although some months have elapsed since his name was first announced as a candidate for the high office in question, a majority of his political friends in many other States of the Union had not yet thought proper to make any formal response to the nomination. For his own part, said Mr B. he was not at all surprised, nor discouraged by this circumstance, and he thought that, upon due reflection, it could not be regarded, by any one, as affording ust cause of distrust, or misgiving as to the policy or pro-riety of the measure alluded to.

The Massachusetts nomination to the Presidency, if it had not been formally and publicly approved and adopted by any other of the States, had, nevertheless, as he thought, been virtually though tacitly sanctioned by them all. We admitted; and the only question had been, whether there were not one or two other individuals of the same political sentiment, but infinitely inferior and subordinate, in every other, who, an account of their accidental popularity, so with every member of this convention, a disposition to adhere steadfastly and without wavering, whatever may be the consequences, to the former nomination of our Presidential candidate. It was true, that but little had been said or heard of it elsewhere; but, sir, the power of truth was not thunder or earthquake, in the roar of the storm or tempest, but was sometimes proclaimed by that still, small voice, which, though its accents were at first perhaps scarcely heard

As I have risen, let me add sir, an expression of the dial assent to these resolutions, as they relate to our State candidates. I cannot but hope sir, that the merit and worth of those gentlemen, will awaken and call forth those zealous and untiring exertions which will secure to them an overwhelming majority. Mr. BLISS, of Springfield, President of the Senate, then addressed the Convention.

Mr Chairman—I do not rise to make a speech, for I am well convinced that in a body which has shown so much of unanimity and zeal as has been here exhibited, there is more Mr. Chairman—I do not rise to make a speech, for I am well convinced that in a bedy which has shown so much of unanimity and zeal as has been here exhibited, there is more necessity for action than for speaking. But as the gentleman from Boston, (Mr. Blake) has alluded to the proceedings of the last Spring, I am constrained to say a word in reference to one of the resolutions upon your table. Indeed, sir, it is hardly necessary for me to say, that I hearitly concur in all those resolutions. As to that which refers to the nomination of the government, I will only add that I am quite willing to endorse every thing which has been said by the gentleman from Beskhire, in relation to the candidate proposed. My acquaintance with that candidate is not as niminate or of as long standing as their; it but from yelliph personal knowledge of him, I highly approve of the nomination. I know full well, sir, that in the district where he lives, he is highly respected for his intelligence and worth, and all those qualities which should commend the normal of the candidate for the office of Governor. The gentleman from Boston has referred to the momination of the candidate for the office of Governor. The gentleman from Boston has referred to the momination of the candidate for the office of Governor. The gentleman from Boston has referred to the momination itself is based upon principle, and as was some dissatisfaction with the mode in which that nomination was made. I myself participated in it. But, sir, it is it will be a such as a permanent and abding character. The selection, then sade ever since has had my suncer and hearty approbate to year first nomination as will those of the east, the north, then sade ever since has had my suncer and hearty approbate to year first nomination as will those of the east, the north, then sade ever since has had my suncer and hearty approbate to year first nomination as will those of the east, the north, then such as the proposed to the south, or of the centre. And I call upon all those who ar

Mr. Robinson, of Lowell, said he heartily concurred in Mr. Robinson, of Lowell, said be heartily concurred in the nominations which had been made, and approved of the resolutions before the meeting. This election, Mr Chairman, is of more importance to Massachusetts that any that has taken place for many years. It has a very important bearing upon the course which she will pursue, at the ensuing Presidential election. The question now before the people of this State is not simply whether the executive offices of the State, shall be filled by the election of this or that particular individual, but whether there be any such thing as principle in the people of this State; whether this ancient commonwealth, after having fought against and resisted the corruptions of the present administration for seven long years, is now willing to sauction those corruptions, to abandon her principles, secrifice her character for consistency, and bow her neck to the corrupt and corrupting resistency, and how her neck to the corrupt and corrupting Regency of New York. I say, sir, the state pride of Massachusetts and her regard for her own character for consistency, although she may be deserted on every side, can never permit her to give her aid in elevating Martin Van Burento the Presidency.

The result therefore of the ensuing election, whether for good or for exil I recent is of includeble in restrict. The result therefore of the ensuing election, whether for good or for evil. I repeat is of incalculable importance to the character of this State. But, sir, I have no fears of that result. All the buying and selling, and bargaining can never carry this State for Martin Van Buren. It he be elected, let him be elected without the aid of Massachusetts. Sir, I hold that his election under the particular circumstances in which he now stands before the people, would not only be a popular sanction of all the corruptions and usurpations of the present administration, but a sanction of a proceeding which will eventually work a complete change in the principles of this government.

Latest from England .- The packet ship England arrived at New York on Monday, bringing London papers to Sept. 7. There was a prospect, as will be seen from the extracts below, that the contest between the two Houses of Parliament would be settled, by the Commons, with the acquiescence of the Ministry, agreeing to a part of the amendments of the Municipal Corporations bill, and the finel passing of the bill. Should this affair be brought to a close, as was anticipated, parliament would be prorogued in a few days. Mr. Vail, the American Charge d'Affairs at London, had made a visit to Paris. A London paper of the 3d mentions that he was "gone on a diplomatic mission from his government, there not being at present an American Envoy, since Mr. Livingston's departure, at the Tuileries. Mr. Vail, on his departure from Dover for London, received the salute as Ambassador." We are glad to see this movement towards a diplomatic intercourse with France, as affairs between the two governments appeared to be at a stand. The celebrated musician Pagamini had fallen a victim to the cholera at Genoa, where the disease raged with great violence. Eight physicians had died. There had been 1053 cases and 398 deaths. It raged also at Florence and Leghorn, and with still greater violence at Algiers. There had been 1271 deaths to Aug. 22, of whom 850 were in the military hospitals.

The accounts from Spain announce the movement of the English auxillaries under Gen. Evans, and the successful result of an unimportant affair in which they were engaged The accounts from Madrid are not encouraging. The go vernment was inefficient for want of funds, and from disal fection in every quarter. There is no news from the Southern Provinces so late as that which has been veceived here, direct from Malaga. The Courier Francais says,

"The last accounts from Madrid announce that the Government funds are totally exhausted. Valencia has set a fatal example, which will have imitators. Instead of paying the Treasury, the Intendant of the Province has placed the money be had received at the disposal of the insurrectionary Junta. Deputies of the Cortes are every where at the head of the movement. Caballero, Las Navas, Roman, Simpsoni, and Palalox have arrived at Saragossa, from whence they intend proceeding in different directions. Count Almodovar, the President of the Chamber of Procuradores, directs the constitutions of the insureents of Valencia. All monovar, the President of the Chamber of Procuradores, directs the operations of the insurgents of Valencia. All the news and Proclamations that reach us from Spain confirm us in the opinion that a grand-confederacy is in progress of organization. All the Provinces are now acting with an ensemble which must shortly bring about the triumph of the revolution."

This seems to strengthen the opinion, founded on the reports received from Malaga, that a general effort has been

The French Chambers adjourned sine die, Aug. 29, having passed the laws relative to the Press and the Jury. The death of the Hon. William T. Barry, which has been before announced, took place at Liverpool on the 30th of August. The Liverpool Times of the Sth announces that the Count de Survillars, otherwise called Joseph Bonaparte, was to embark on his return to America in the Monongahela for Philadelphia.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 8.—Ministers and the House of Commons have amply justified the confidence reposed in them by the friends of effectual and temperate reform, by the by the friends of effectual and temperate reform, by the course which they have adopted with regard to the alterations made by the House of Lords in the Municipal Reform Bill. That great measure has been returned to the Upper House, after having been manurely considered by the representatives of the people, and it has gone back, if not quite as good a measure as it was when first proposed, still one of the most valuable plans of improvement proposed or effected, in the present age, in the instinutions of the country. It has gone back in the same spirit as it came from Ministers, but so judiciously modified in all non-essential points, that the Lords have found it impossible to reject it without sufficing at once an injury on the people and an insult on that the Lords have found it impossible to reject it without sinflicting at once an injury on the people and an insult on their own friends in the Lower House, who have wisely assented to the bill, in itsere-amended form, and especially on Sir Robert Peel, the ablest man of their party, who had done himself the highest honor by the frank and manly support which he has given to most of the leading principles of the measure. They have, indeed, made two alterations in the re-amended bill, both of considerable importance, neither of them justifiable, and which it is doubtful whether the Ministers and the House of Commons will or ought to assent to, but they have yielded much, and we, therefore, do not de spair of an amicable arrangement, or of a useful and popu

The conduct of Lord John Russell and his colleagues in this affair is worthy of universal admiration. They have succeeded in effecting what appeared almost an impossibility, namely, in preserving the most valuable parts of the bill, and the raconciling the more reasonable Tories to the measure. The bill still secures the rate-payers of the town affected by it the election of their municipal governors, still the parts are applied to the contract of t affected by it the election of their municipal governors, suit puts an end forever to the exclusive system, still enables them to elect the members of the municipal body from the mass of the rate-payers, and still secures complete responsibility in the governors to the governed. Yet this bill went back to the Lords supported by Sir Robert Peel and Sir William Follett, and every rational Tory in the House of Commons, and the Lords were compelled either to pass it or to insult their friends and ruin their party. The two principles on which the Ministers have acted have been to retain every thing necessary to secure free and pure municipal government, and to sacrifice every thing not essential to that object. They have, it is true made some considerable sacrifices, and have even surrendered some points which their friends would very gladly have seen maintained, but they have made no sacrifice which wilprevent the inhabitants of this and all other corporate towns choosing their own governors, and choosing them from the only class ever likely to receive their suffrages—namely, those who are in tolerably easy circumstances, and able to afford the time necessary for discharging their duties with effect.

The most important points of the bill are the nature of the franchise—the composition of the Council—the qualification for the office of Councillor, and the frequency of the elections. If the bill should pass in its re-amended form, the franchise will be vested in all inhabitants who have paid rates for three years—the inhabitants who have paid rates for three years—the Council will be composed of persons elected by the rate-payers, or chosen by the new Common Councils—all persons possessing property of the value of £1000 in large and £500 in small towns, or paying rates on an assessment of £30 per annum in large and £15 in small towns, will be eligible as Councillors, and none will be elected for more than six years, three lout his of the Councillors being elected for not more than three.

shan six years, three fourths of the Councillors being elected for not more than three.

The clause compelling the sale of the presentation of Corporation livings, appears to us to be one of the best in the bill. These livings have produced all manner of jobbing and favoritism, have covered the Corporations with obloquy—and hold out temptations too strong for the virtue of Corporations either of the old or the new regim. The sooner they are disposed of the better, especially as this is the only method by which the feelings of Churchmen and Dissenters can be satisfied. can be satisfied.

The two points which the Lords have refused to concede are the following:—First, they insist that boroughs with only 6000 inhabitants shall be divided into wards; of course, that the electors, being split into small fractions, may be corrupted, influenced and intimidated, more easily; and, secondly, they insist that the borough Magistrates, who for centuries have been chosen by the corporate badies, shall in future be appointed by the Crown, or in other words, by the Minister for the time being, the Common Councils not being allowed even to have the power of recommending the candidates for the office. Two more scandalous alterations never dishonored the name of amendments than these. The Commons were to consider them last evening, and we have very strong doubts, indeed, whether they would or ought to agree to doubts, indeed, whether they would or ought to agree to

The course which Ministers would recommend and the House of Commons take last night, relative to the two points on which the Lords have refused to agree with the Commons, namely, the division of the smaller boroughs into wards, and the appointment of local magistrates, was quite uncertain up to Saturday night. Both Ministers and the House strongly disapprove of the amendments, and it is not improbable that they will reject them and demand a "Free Conference" with the Lords, Lord John Russell has written to all the friends of Government, begging them not to leave to all the friends of Government, begging them not to leave London until the points in dispute are arranged.

France.—In the sittings of Sept, 1st, the Peers voted, without the slightest amendment, the Bill against Juries, by a majority of 74 to 25, only 3 of its opponents, MM. De Dreaux-Breze, Dubouchage and Mounier, having ventured to encounter the murmurs of their servile colleagues. 82 to 3 carried the Bill for granting pensions to the wounded and families of the slain, on the 28th; and 88 to 3 voted the 300,000 francs required for the expenses of the grand funeral and Te Deum, by which the Government so artfully favored the introduction of the Fieschi Bills. In the course of the sittings, which the Duke of Orleans attended, the Keeper of the Seals presented the main Bill against the Press, which had just passed the Deputies, and a Committee was immediately appointed, consisting of MM. de Barante, Bastard, Cousin, Girod, Guilleminot, de Mortemart, Seguier, de Saint Aulaire, and Villemain, the last mentioned gentleman being the only one from whom the slighest opposition can be expected. PARTS, Sept. 5 .- Avalanche in Switzerland .- I have letter this morning, dated the 29th ult., from the town of Bex, in Swizerland, in which an account is given of one of those phenomena to which that mountainous region able. On the 29th of August, a considerable portion of the principal peak of the Dent du Midi, one of the great spurs of Mont Blanc, fell with a tremendous crash into a deep and marrow valley, situate about a league to the eastward of St. Maurice, on the road to Martigny, where an accident of a similar nature occurred in the year 1818, but it ended with much more disastrous results, as then no less than 400 housmuch more disastrous results, as then no less than 400 houses were washed away in a moment. In this recent instance the peak in its fall-carried with it a glacier, which, filling up the valley, dammed up the stream which ran through it, until it had acquired sufficient force to drive before it the whole mass of earth and rocks into the bed of the Rhone, the course of which became so completely barred as to dry up all below it, and convert the upper part of its rugged and rocky course into a sort of temporary lake. It was on the fourth day after the fall from the Dent du Midi that the let ter before me was written, and up to that time this extraordinary interruption to the course of the Rhone still continued, disturbed from time to time by intermittent bursts of the growing flood across the barrier, the recurrence of which was so uncertain as to deter the approach of the curious. It was not known that any lives had been lost, but it may be well to add that the passage across the Alps by the great Simplon road is for the present cut off. An attempt had been begun to re-open the communication by a provisional content of the content had been begun to re-open the communication by a provis-ional road, which was to describe a considerable circuit,

We are glad, if the ladies who compose this Society have not discretion enough to forbear calling together a public assembly to be addressed by that prince of disorganizers, George Thompson—the owners of the Hall, proposed to be used for this purpose, have had the good sense to forbid it. We hope that the proprietors of every other public hall, will act with the same discretion, until these foreign fomenters act with the same discretion, until these foreign fomenters

U. S. DISTRICT COURT.—A Fatal Bion.—On Saturday afternoon, Capt. Wm B. Cash, of the ship Courier, brought up from New Bedford, by Deputy Marshal Gordon, was examined before His Honor Judge Davis, upon a charge of Murder, committed on the high seas, upon Charles Edwards, chief mate of the Courier. On the 7th of February last, Capt. Cash had an altercation with Edwards respecting the cabin boy, whom Edwards threatened to flog for lying. Capt. Cash took the boy's part, and when Edwards attempted to put his threat into execution, he seized the ship's axe, and, throwing it at Edwards, struck him in the low was such as to sever the flesh six inches in length, and to break the bone. The indisposition which necessarily followed from this severe and critical wound terminated in a fever, of which Edwards died on the 14th of March, have

These buildings were attacked, carried, and destroyed. One kindred and fifty of the enemy fell into the hads of the sessilents and account many more had.

Mr Keyes's amendment was in the following terms: "Provided, however, that the tolls already collected, and that those that may be hereafter collected, shall be exclusively appropriated to the repairs and maintainance of said

To this section, Mr Kinnieut offered an amendment, by adding thereto the following words—
"And to the purchasing and making free all the bridges, and other avenues, on which toll is taken, connecting the city of Boston with the adjoining towns."
For the purpose of carrying out the principle of the preceding proposition more fully, Mr Andrews of Salem, moved to amend it by adding:—
"And also for the purpose of making free Essex Bridge, connecting the towns of Salem and Beverly, in the county of Essex."

Mr Kinnicut objected to the extension of the provisions of his amendment, which he said he had proposed as a com-promise between the friends and opponents of the Warren Bridge. Mr Keyes professed to be surprised that Mr Kin-Bridge. Mr Keyes professed to be surprised that Mr Kinnicut should shrink from the fair consequences of the principle of his proposition; and he saw no reason why, if the tolls of the Warren Bridge were to be employed in freeing all the City Bridges, they could not with equal justice be appropriated in freeing all the Bridges in the State, and for one he was willing to see them, and thought they ought all to be free. He only considered Mr Andrews's amendment as Mr

Mr Kinnicut rejoined, that his amendment was a happy medium, as i would give to other sections of the State, other than East the same facilities of access to the city, as the East gained by Mr Keyes's amendment. Mr Everett considered that medium, or compromise had nothing to do with the question; whether the State had a right to make the passengers over Warren Bridge pay for the other bridges was a question entirely of principle.

Rumored Defalcation.—No small stir was created in Wall st. this morning, by rumors frem Albany of the flight of the Cashiet of the Commercial Bank in that city, and the discovery of a large deficit in its funds. The rumors were in some degree confirmed by the following brief paragraphs the Hall of the Temple, TOMORROW AFTERNOON, and the Hall of the Temple, TOMORROW AFTERNOON, as a second to the second to some degree confirmed by the following brief paragraph from the Albany Daily Advertiser, bearing date of this morning, but published in anticipation:

"It was reported yesterday that the Commercial Bank of Albany had discovered that a portion of its kinds, to a considerable amount, had been abstracted."

The reports are numerous, and doubtless greatly exaggerated. We were told in Wall street of various sums having been abstracted from the bank, varying from $110,000 to 200,000. It was also reported that the bank of America had been overdrawn by the absconding cashier of the Commercial Bank, Mr Bartow: but such is not the fact. So far as the Bank of America is apprised of the facts of the case, the ny to the Massachusetts line, another from another point lower down the Hudson to the same point, and recently the people of Troy, jealous of the movements of their immediate neighbors of Albany, had also projected another to Stockbridge.-Thus were three new rail roads projected to the Massachusetts line. The question then waswhat is to be done here, -to co-operate with these great schemes of internal improvement? peared clear to his mind, that the people of Boston ought to unite their energies in the accomplishment of the good work. If every citizen would but take hold according to his means, it would be an easy task, and its speedy consummation might be anticipated. But, continued Mr. Lawrence, without detaining the meeting longer, as there are others more competent to do justice to the subject, I will advert to a single other consideration. The proposed improvement will add another golden link to the great chain which binds this glorious union to-

WILLIAM B. CALHOUN, of Springfield, next addressed the meeting in an animated speech. He described the state of feeling among the people in the interior, as being strongly in favor of the Rail Road—and what was the mighty work to be done? It was asked of Boston and Massachusetts, to connect the city of Boston with Buffalo at the head of Lake Erie. This route was contemplated to pass through the heart, and along the whole line of Massachusetts to the western boundary of New York. A portion of this work was already executedlarge part was in progress-and comparatively but little remained for Massachusetts to do. From Boston to Worcester, the rail road was already completed. It was also completed from Albany to Schenectady—from Schenectady to Utica—and indeed on the whole of the remainder of the route, it was either commenced, or preparations were made which would ensure its completion within a reasonable time. The city of Albany had already raised a sum sufficient to complete the route to the confines of this State; and all that remains for Massachusetts, was to establish the remainder of the rail road between West Stockbridge and Springfield—and Springfield—and Springfield and Worcester. No one could doubt the importance of communication—no one could doubt that it should of communication—no one could doubt the remainder of the route, the residual properties and majestic course. [The Hon. E. Everett was to follow the speaker.]

It has oeen demonstrated to us, tonight, as no poetical fiction, but a mere business transaction, that by the help of some transaction, that by the help of some transaction, that by the help of the Aldantic, and reach the banks of the Hudson; embrace in the dudson; embrace of the encouragement of Arts, Agriculture, and Manufactures, (of which Nathaniel Gorham was Chair the waters of the great Lakes, and thence, stretch forth our had and grasp the Chio and the mighty Rivers of the West. Already is this great work nearly accomplished. It remained to the great work nearly accomplished. It remains for the citizens of Massachusetts to say whether it shall be completed.

This petition, said Mr. H. was referred to the Committee of both Hudson; embrace and Manufactures, (of which Nathaniel Gorham was Chair the waters of the great Lakes, and thence, stretch forth our had and grasp the Chio and the mighty Rivers of the West.

Already is this great work nearly accomplished. It remains for Massachusetts to say whethe little remained for Massachusetts to do. From Bosof communication-no one could doubt that it should be done-that it must be done; for the wealth, the great moral and physical power, and even the glory of Massachusetts was involved in this interesting question. There was another, and a more important point that had already been adverted to, to which he wished to call the attention of his auditors-the tendency which this direct communication with the inhabitants of the West, would have to strengthen our political Union, which he conceived to be now in more jeopardy, than it ha ever been since the foundation of the Republic was If the West was to be estranged from the East, and the North from the South, we might soon expect to see the Union destroyed. To prevent such a disastrous occurrence, we must keep up the system of internal communication. Mr. C adverted to the feeling in the interior of the Statethey had raised eight or ten thousand dollars for the purpose of surveying the route proposed. For several months past they had directed all their energies to this subject; and considering their limit ed means they had also contributed largely to the funds for completeing the work. The little town of Springfield had contributed one eighth of the whole amount necessary for the undertaking. Has the country done enough, asked Mr C., to induce Boston and vicinity to take hold and complete the work? The trade from the western part of Massachusetts, had for some time past been diverted to New York, in consequence of the great facilities afforded by the Connecticut river and canals—but the citizens of the interior, although they were in danger of losing their State pride, would prefer to restore their trade to the former and proper channel-and the trade of that section of the State was worth bringing back to Boston. The inhabitants of the interior wished to go heart and hand with the citizens of Boston; they wished to manifest a proper State feeling. As matters now stood, were it not for the provision of the constitution, which sends every year an army of legislators to visit the city, the communication between Boston and the interior, would soon almost entirely cease .-Mr. C. concluded his eloquent remarks, of which we have only attempted to give a brief abstract, by saying that wherever he went, the highest distinc tion, to which he could lay claim, was that he was a native Bostonian.

Mr. Chairman—Though by the arrangements of the Committee I was not to speak here tonight, yet seeing so fine an assemblage of our citizens, convened to act on so vitally an important object to the interests of Boston, I trust I shall be excused, as an early and ardent friend of Rail Roads, if I occupy a few moments of the time of the meeting.

Fellow Citizens !—I rejoice to witness such an assemblage on this occasion. It looks well, and favorably to the good cause we have so much at heart. Seventy-six years ago, when our fathers were the good and loyal subjects of his Britannic Majesty, King George the Third-General Wolfe, who commanded a British expedition for the subjugation of the Canadas, held this language to his soldiers :- " I congratulate you my brave countrymen and fellow soldiers on the success that has hitherto attended us in this important part of our enterprise. The formidable heights of Abraham are now surmounted, and QUEBEC, the object of all our toils, now stands in full view before us!"-Such, fellow citizens, is our case at the present time. The heights are surmounted, we have gloriously and successfully accomplished a part of the great work which our interests loudly call for. Already we have built, and have in successful operation, three short Rail Roads leading from Boston. years ago Boston people began to write, to talk and resolve upon Rail Roads. They were first and foremost in these particulars; but, it is well known that Rail Roads in Massachusetts had, in their infancy, a hard time of it. Long it was before there was even a beginning. They were commenced only by the untiring, unflinching efforts of a few. The strong men held off, snuffing apprehension and loss, and ruin, in the prospect of such an expendiloss, and ruin, in the prospect of such an expendi-ture of their money Thanks to you, fellow citi-To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Comzens, you were just to yourselves and to the pub lic, and have accomplished much by your enlight-ened and steady perseverance. By your efforts Benefittes AT FARVILH HALL, or were measured.

Mr. Lawrence said, that two or three weeks ago a preliminary meeting had been held, and that a large Committee was then appointed to take the whole subject into cenderate state. The hand is a large Committee was then appointed to take the whole subject into cenderate state. The hand is a large Committee was then appointed to take the whole subject into cenderate state. ulation in men, in sound political economy; the means of developing great resources and increasing, to an unlimited extent, the healthful moral population and the widely extended prosperity in the midst and around us. In such a speculation, those who have not the money, can help to contribute the public sentiment, which will give to capital the tright direction. The world is beginning to understand the true uses of wealth—to develope the resources of the country; and it is in great enterprises like this, which benefit the public more than those immediately concerned in them, that we have a practical demonstration of the doctrine of the greatest good of the greatest number.

ment of great interest, highly honorable to the enterprise of the public more than those immediately concerned in them, that we have a practical demenstration of the doctrine of the greatest number.

Much is said and more feared, about the divisions of the rich and the poor. But in truth, in our happy institutions, we need have no poor, forming a distinct class among the citizens. Where is your populace, your rabble? It is an inquiry which has often puzzled the foreigner who has passed through our streets when thronged by a multitude. We have no populace—no rabble, but free and independent citizens. What has made them so? The development of our resources. What has made them so? The development of our resources. What has stopped the tide of entergration, that once threatened to depopulate New England? The development of our resources. Go on developing these resources, and there need be no fear of setting the poor against the rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will be rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will be rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will be rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will be rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will be rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will be rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will be rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will be rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will be rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will be rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will be rich, for their will be no poor to set against them. All will are found hoarding it, holding it back from great eaterprises like this, and cautious of doing any thing to develope the resources of a community, there is then just cannot be poor to set against them all these great resources of a community, there is then just cannot be poor to set against the cannot be poor to set against them government like ours, and this grand specific lies at the bottom of the philosophy of our political economy. Develope the resources of the country; place the means of wealth within the reach of industry, and you produce the happy medium in society. All will then move forward evenly, as on the level of a Rail Road—with occasional inclined planes and elevations, to be sure, but none that can stop the powers level of the composite which involves forward every New Fermil decompline which is the opportunity.

and Fall River, your Waltham, Ware, and the hundreds of flourishing villages which now constitute the most prosperous communities in this Commonwealth? How small and feeble was the beginning of all this. In 1787, the first cotton mill in this State, was got up in Beverly, by John Cabot and others, and in three years it was nearly given up, in consequence of the difficulties which this first beginning of the developement of the vast resources of domestic industry in our State, had to encounter. I hold in my hand a document of uncommon interest, on this subject, found in the files of the Massachusetts Senate, which will show the early struggles of domestic manufactures, and the doubts entertained of their success, more forcibly than any single fact that can be stated. It is the petition of the Proprietors of the little Beverly Cotton Mill in 1790, for aid from the Legislature to save them from being compelled to abandon the enterprise altogether.

From this time may be dated the renewed prosperity and advancement of the great city of Baltimore.
Fellow citizens, I urge you to be true to your interests; to sustain the dignity, and high character, of Bostonians; to do what others have wisely done, and all will rejoice at the issue. There is no middle course; there is but one honorable, manly, respectable course—and that is, to a man, "to down with your dust."

Our interest, our honor, our reputation, as good and enlightened citizens requires that every man should come forward and do his duty. By union of efforts what cannot be accomplished by Bostonians? The prize is a grand and noble one; it must be reached and secured to us, and it will not be abandoned unless we are recreant to our truest interests.

REMARKS OF MR. HALLETT.

Mr. B. F. Hallett said that ig ave thim more pleasure on such occasions, to be the vehicle for communicating the speeches of offers to the public, han to make one of his own. Let us then propose an union of interests in this work. Let the rich level down, by investing capital in railways and great public improvements to develope resources, and those who are not rich will be sure to level themselves up, by industry, and all will meet on the happy medium—at least enough so for all practical proposes.

Tracted so much general notice. I am happy to say, that I see around me ample proofs of the correctness of those favorable representations, which have gone abroad. Your city, gentlemen, has undoubtedly experienced an extraordinary growth; and it is a growth, I think, which there is reason to hope is not unnatural, or greatly disproportionate tracted so much general notice. I am happy to hope is not unnatural, or greatly disproportionate I will not, sir, delay the gratification which this immense to the eminent advantages of the place. It so hap I will not, sir, delay the gratification which this immense assembly are anticipating from another source, by attempting to illustrate a view of this subject, which, could it be properly enforced, must tend directly to produce a state of public teeling, so desirable in relation to any great public improvement. The public sentiment, the good feeling of the whole mass of our citizens, eught to be enlisted in this work, and here are ample means for giving them a strong direction in that course. work, and here are ample means for giving them a strong direction in that course.

We talk now of the feture, in regard to railways, with doubt, as of an experiment yet to be tested, and many look pronte calculations of the sanguine as mere speculating dreams. Here is a new avenue about to be opened to the developement of resources, and yet men hesiate to go forward. Let us test what we can reasonably anticipate in this, by what we know has happened in the developement of resources, once deemed quite as visionary, through another medium of industry and enterprise—domestic meanufactures. There is not an adult among us, who caunot remember the time, when it was a source of mortification to be cressed in homespun. Now, our own fabrics are among remember the time, when it was a source of mortification to be dressed in homespun. Now, our own fabrics are among the best and richest stuffs of every day consumption, and the products of our looms are preferred even in foreign countries. so favorable a change; and so blended are our interests, that the general activity, which exists elsewhere, supported and stimulated by Internal Improvement, pervades and benefits even those portions of the country, which are locally remote from the immediate scene of the main operations of this Improvement. Whatever promotes communication,—whatsoever extends general business,—whatsoever encourages enterprise,—or whatsoever encourages enterprise,—or whatsoever advances the general wealth and prosperity of other States, must have a plain, direct, and powerful bearing on your own prosperity. In truth there our way, in definice of the Constitution and the laws; or that they may set up any thing for the declaration of that will except the Constitution and the laws; or that any public officer, high er low, should undertake to constitute himself, or to call himself the Representative of the people, except so far as the Constitution and the laws create and denominate him such representative. There is no usurpation so dangerous, as that which comes in the borrowed name of the people, they naturally oppose and resist it. It is an open enemy and they can easily subdue it. But that which professes to act in their own name, and by their own authority, that which calls itself their servants, directly staked on the general prosperity of the country, than this rising city. If any thing should interrupt the general operations of business,—if commercial embarrassment, foreign war, pecuniary derangement, domestic dissension, or any other causes were to arrest the general progress of the public welfare, all must see, with what a blasting it. public welfare, all must see, with what a blasting it.

what circumstances may render it proper now to repeat, that at the close of the late war, a new era, in my judgment, had opened in the U. States. A new career then lay before us. At peace ourselves with the nations of Europe, and those nations, too, at peace with one another, and the leading civilized States of the world, no longer allowing that commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich harvest of our commerce which had been the rich and the Constitution, is of the very essence of all security for the preservation of liberty; and that no one can be a true and intelligent friend of that liberty, who will consent that any man in public station, whatever he may think of the honesty of his motives, shall exercise or enact an authority above the Constitution and the laws. Whatever Government is not a Government of laws, is a deopotism, let commerce which had been the rich harvest of our neutrality, in the midst of former wars, but all now coming forward to exercise their own rights, in sharing the commerce and trade of the world, it seemed to me to be very plain, that while our commerce was still to be fostered by the most zealous care, yet quite a new view of things was presented to us, in regard to our internal pursuits and concerns. The works of peace, as it seemed to me to be come our duties. A hos ile exterior, a front of brass, and an arm of iron, all necessary, in the of brass, and an arm of iron, all necessary, in the just defence of the country against foreign aggression, naturally gave place, in a change of circum-Just defence of the country against foreign aggression, naturally gave place, in a change of circumstances, to the attitude, the objects and the pursults of peace. Our true interest, as I thought, was to explore our own resources, to call forth and encourage labor and enterprise, upon internal objects, to multiply the sources of employment and comfort at home, and to unite the country by ties of intercourse, commerce, benefits and prosperity in all parts, as well as by the ties of political association. And it appeared to me that Government itself clearly possessed the power, and was as clearly charged with the duty of helping on, in various ways, this great business of Internal Improvement. I have therefore, steadily supported all measures, directed to that and objects of the state will have no longer either steerage or motion. She will lie on the billows, helpless and hopeless; the scorn and contempt of all the enemies of free institutions, and an object of indescribable grief to all their friends.

Gentlemen, I offer as a sentiment for the occasion—Civil Liberty; Its only security is in constitutional restraint on political power.

directed to that end, which appeared to me to be within the just power of the Government, and to availing themselves of the visit of Mr. Webster to be practicably within the limits of reasonable expenditure. And if any one would judge how far the fostering of this spirit has been beneficial to the country, let him compare its state, at this moment, with its condition at the commencement of the late war; and let him then say how much of all that has been added to national wealth, and national strength, and to individual prosperity and tional strength, and to individual prosperity and happiness, has been the fair result of Internal Improvement.

Gentlemen, it has been your pleasure to give utterance to sentiments, expressing approbation of my humble efforts on several occasions, in defence. I have, on some occasions, felt myself called on to maintain my opinions, in opnosition to power, to place, to official influence, and some promise and took occasion to refer at considerable length to some prominent political events in which Mr. Webster had been a leader and champion in defence of the Constitution against fearful and violent assaults from various quarters, but particularly from the administration or the party in power. We have no time to attempt a sketch of his remarks this week, which were interesting, animated, and to the point. He was frequently interrupted by bursts of

The toast was received with applause, loud and their measures to be called for, by a regard to its preservation.

The Constitution of the United States, Gentlemen, has appeared to me to have been formed and adopted for two grand objects. The first, is the union of the States. It is the bond of that Union, and it states and defines its terms. Who can speak, in terms warm enough, and high enough of its importance in this respect, or the admirable wisdom

The toast was received with applause, loud and long continued. After it subsided, Mr. Webster rose and spoke, we cannot tell how long, for we "took no note of time;" and though we began to take notes of his remarks, we soon found our pencil idle and our eyes fixed on the orator. We could not do any just time to be in the property of his character, but would be confirmed not only in his oninion of Mr. Webster's great intellectual power, importance in this respect, or the admirable wisdom with which it is formed? Or who, when he shall have stated its past benefits and blessings to those States, most strongly, will venture to say, that he has yet done it justice? For one, I am not sanguine enough to believe, that if this bond of Union ing the Union and the Constitution as it is, and adwere dissolved, any other tie, uniting all the States, monished us that if our present National compact would take its place for generations to come. It requires no common skill, it is no piece of ordinary political journey-work to form a system, which shall hold together four and twenty separate State. snamfold together four and twenty separate State sovereignties, the line of whose united Territories run down all the parallels of latitude from New Brunswick to the Gulph of Mexico, and whose connected breadth stretches from the sea far beyond the Mississippi. Nor are all times, or all occasions, suited to such great operations. It is only under the meet forwardle circumstances, and only when the most favorable circumstances, and only when great men are called on to meet great exigencies' silent inroads of corruption would be overlooked, the only once in centuries, that such fortunate political results are attained. Whoever, therefore, undervalues this National Union, whoever depreciates its people might get on without it, appears to me to encourage sentiments, subversive of the foundations of our prosperity.

""" to write the tensity of the foundation of our prosperity of the twelve millions of people now it for the benefit of the twelve millions of the benefit of the twelve millions of the benefit of the twelve millions of the benefit of the benefi It is true that these twenty four States are more scattered over our vast territory, and for their rapidly or less, different in climate, productions, and local increasing posterity which might be expected to pursuits. There are planting States, grain growing from it. They unite, on the contrary, to promote an aggregate result of unrivalled national happiness. It is not precisely a case in which

"All nature's discord, keeps all nature's peace,"

Should we then prove recreant to our sacred trust, disappining the friends of freedom throughout the wide earth, suffer our Constitution to go to ruins, and the essence and spirit of of liberty to depart from us, through our weakness, our aparts. mess. It is not precisely a case in which

but it is, precisely, a case, in which variety of climate and condition, and diversities of pursuits and productions, all unite to exhibit one harmonious, grand, and magnificent whole, to which the world may be proudly challenged to show an equal. In my opinion, no man, in any corner of any one of those states, can stand up and declare, that he is less prosperous, or less happy, than if the General Government had never existed. And entertaining these sentiments, and feeling their force most deeply, I feel it the bounden duty of every good citizen, in public and in private life, to follow the admonition of Washington, and to cherish that Union, which makes us one people. I most earnestly deprecate, therefore, whatever occurs, in the Government or out of it, calculated to endanger the Union, or disturb the basis on which it rests.

Another object of the Constitution, I take to be such as is common to all written Constitutions of Free Governments, that is, to fix limits to delegated authority, or, in other words, to impose constitutional restraints on political power. Some, who estem themselves Republicans, seem to think no other security for public liberty necessary, than a provision for a popular choice of rulers. If political power, be delegated power, they entertain little fear of its being abused. The people's servants and favorites they think, may be safely trusted. Our fathers, certainly were not of this school. They sought to make assurance doubly sure, by providing in the first in the following sentiment:

The Constitution of the United States—The proudest inheritance of the Merician people.

est, as it most obviously is, wherever party spirit prevails to the greatest excess, it is not without reason that fears are entertained of the existence of a spirit tending strongly to an unlimited, if it be but an elective, Government.

Surely, Gentlemen, surely this Government can go through no such change. Long before that change could take place, the Constitution would be shattered to pieces, and the Union of the States become matter of past history. To the Union, therefore as well as to until 9 o'clock, the drawing rooms at the Cumberland Housewere thronged with the friends of the favorite son of New England, flocking to exchange salutations with one to whom they feel a strong indebtedness for the able and fauthful manner in which he has ever sustained their principles. In the course of the evening, Mr Webster was addressed by one of the company in the name of the rest, and replied in his usual happy manner. We have not been able to preserve his remarks, which we cannot but regret. It was a pleasing occasion, and will doubtless be remembered with satisfaction and delight by the numbers that enjoyed it.
