hunting season, never asked permission and climbed fences and left gates open all over the place. He didn't say anything, being a very even-tempered man, but just noted who the guys were who hadn't stopped to ask permission to hunt on his land, which permission would have been gladly given. A few days later the farmer and his six offspring and his better half, drove up to the prettiest places in town. They backed the farm truck up onto the lawn, got out and staged a picnic right on that feller's lawn. And, what do you know? . . . It made the guy mad!
