Two Settlements Struck In Oklahoma, Two Lives Claimed

DENTON (AP)—Edna Ferguson, 18, was killed and her parents were reported injured seriously Wednesday night when their home at Fairfield community was demolished by a strong wind. The twister struck suddenly and apparently covered an area a mile long and a quarter of a mile wide.

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP)—A tornado's toll in two little southern Oklahoma farm settlements totaled two dead and at least 16 injured Thursday, with scores of homes crushed.

A third death may have been an indirect result of the storm. Tornado winds flipped into a farming community along the Little Washita river near Chickasha Wednesday night. Northwestern Oklahoma received damaging hail and sandstorms.

WASHINGTON By Paul Mallon

Kingfish—

Something very peculiar lies behind the latest Huey Long outbreak. The day before those Louisiana citizens filed a series of dynamite charges against him he criticized President Roosevelt's general program severely in the senate. It was the first time Long had broken with the President.

Those who jump at conclusions assumed Long was trying to get in a lick against the Administration before it walloped him. That is not true. The administration had nothing to do with the Louisiana charges.

Underneath it has taken mild measures to make Huey a good boy but generally it has been almost too considerate of hurting his feelings.

The Democratic cloakroom understands that the man whom Long fought so bitterly in Arkansas has followed the Bible and turned the other cheek. That man is Floor Leader Robinson. He has done a crackerjack job pacifying the various Democratic elements including Huey for whom he can have so much love. His leadership for the Roosevelt program has been so quiet and effective that he has not received the proper credit for it yet in the country.

Those inside give him credit for saving Long's skin in the Louisiana primary investigation. He selected a committee which let the matter rest. It announced the Howell inquiry would be ardently pursued and then proceeded to sit down and do nothing.

The effect of that was to keep Long on his best behavior for the time being.

Even after Long criticized Mr. Roosevelt the Arkansas leader went to his rescue.

That was what was behind the switch of the recent anti-Long charges from the Elections to the Judiciary Committee. They had been referred to the Elections Committee first. That is headed by Senator George of Georgia. He is an able man and a close friend of Senator Carter Glass who would just as soon cut Long up and have him for lunch some day. Long would have had a hard time of it in the Elections Committee.

The Judiciary Committee is ruled by Progressives who are Long's friends if he has any here.

Glass—
Treasury Secretary Woodin nearly broke the heart of Senator Glass by trying to ditch the Banking Reform Bill. He did not break the Glass spirit.

Glass went back to his committee and it voted unanimously to sustain him.

The situation indicated a fight was near but there is reason to believe things will NOT go that far. Those involved are reasonable men.

Nine Dollars Added To Some Stock Issues

Cotton Advances $2.50 Per Bale, Wheat More Than Three Cents

NEW YORK (AP)—Turnover of seven million shares, largest in three years and one of the largest ever experienced in a rising market, occurred on the New York Stock Exchange Thursday. Closing tone was buoyant.

NEW YORK (AP)—Delegated with sensational buying orders the commodity and stock markets swooped upward with sensational activity Thursday.

The Stock Exchange trading was the wildest since the boom days of 1929. High speed tickers geared to handle 6,000,000 shares a day dropped nearly a half hour behind business on the exchange floor.

Billions were added to quoted values of stock and staples. Rises of one to nine dollars per share were matched on the Chicago Board of Trade, where wheat was bid up three cents and more per bushel.

Cotton at New York soared two dollars and a half per bale. NEW YORK (AP)—Commodity markets rushed higher again Thursday as word that the United States had temporarily dropped the gold standard brought wide declines in the American dollar against foreign currencies.

Stocks charged up to win dollars in commodities trading, but lost roughly a third of the gains profit-taking. What's extreme advances of three cents a bushel and more were similarly pared, while cotton by beginning of the last hour had relinquished about half its maximum advance of $2.50 per bale.

Not until 1:50 p. m. when the market was reacting, did the ticker catch up with transactions on the exchange floor. Activity in the morning and into the early afternoon was the largest in several years.

Activity slackened in the early afternoon. At 1:30 p. m. it was announced the ticker was running even with actual transactions. Prices then were holding modestly under the morning highs. U. S. Steel began quoted at $48 at $50 below the top. Sales to 1:30 o'clock totaled 4,400,000 shares. At that time Wednesday volume amounted to 23,000,000 shares of stocks then available.

TODAY and TOMORROW

By WALTER LIPPMANN
 The Great Decision

In the series of financial crises which have followed each other since the summer of 1931 each nation has finally been forced to decide whether it would defend the gold parity of its currency or its own internal price level. No nation has been able to do both. No nation has been able to maintain the value of its currency in terms of gold and also to stabilize the domestic purchasing power of its currency. A choice has had to be made between keeping up prices at home and keeping up the gold value of the currency abroad.

The first great commercial power to be confronted with this choice was Germany. In the summer of 1931. The Germans elected to maintain the gold value of the reichsmark and in order to do this they subjected themselves to the most drastic exchange control. They have succeeded in keeping their currency at its gold parity. But wholesale prices in Germany have fallen about fifteen per cent, and the German people have been subjected to a deflation which has been so terrible that it brought about a revolution.

The second great commercial power to face the issue was Great Britain in September, 1931. The British chose the opposite course. They elected to defend their price structure rather than the gold value of their currency. The pound sterling has therefore depreciated in the outer world. But the price level in Great Britain has been virtually stable, and though British industry remains depressed, there has been no acute crisis.

The third great commercial power to be confronted with the choice was the United States on March 4, 1933. The paramount question of the hour is whether we shall follow the German policy of defending the gold parity of the currency or the British policy of defending the internal price structure against continuing deflation. At the present moment the choice has not been made, for the Treasury, the Federal Reserve System, and the financial community are without a clear policy.

The decision which has now to be taken is the most important with which this Administration is likely to be confronted. For the evidence is now, I believe, conclusive that a decision to maintain the gold parity of currency condemns the nation to the intolerable strain of falling prices.

Now what has to be determined here is whether the efforts now being made to maintain the gold parity of the dollar shall be persisted in or whether the dollar shall be allowed without interference to find its exchange value with the other currencies of the world. If the decision is taken to keep the dollar, then, for as long as that ex-

He Can Take It

The treasurer of the United States, for the next four years, will receive a check each month for the sum of $64,750. This check will bear the signature of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

It represents an exemplification of the Rooseveltian theory that what is for the goose is likewise a dash or two of seasoning for the sender.

Congress can not touch the president's salary during his tenure of office. The constitution says so. But there is nothing in the constitution to prevent a conscientious occupant of the White House from bottling his own wages. Mr. Roosevelt, having imposed a 15 per cent reduction in the way of other government employes, votes a like adjustment of his own $75,000 salary. Hence the monthly check, putting the 15 per cent back into the treasury.

Most presidents spend their entire salary while in office trying to uphold the honor of the position. There is something to be done, donations to make. So the Roosevelt pasture isn't an empty one, after all.

Our Conduit was Broken on March 4th, and an honorable opportunity was then presented, through the forced suspension of the gold payments, to arrest the American deflation and to proceed to raise the American price level. All the commodity markets registered the conviction, in terms of enhanced prices, that the United States would, of course, seize the opportunity to relieve itself of the crushing burden of deflation. Thus far the opportunity has been fumbled. The Treasury, which is undermanned, overworked, and so busy pruning the trees that it does not see the woods, has been too unsure of itself to adopt a policy which required courage and technical competence. The Federal Reserve System has been without leadership and has had no policy worthy of the name for the past eight weeks. As a result, without realizing the consequences or intending to suffer them, we have allowed a control of foreign exchange to be set up which, with the help of the British, maintains the dollar at an artificial over-valuation, and thus clamps down upon the American economy a deflationary policy.

What is the result? On the one hand, the Administration is pushed further and further toward schemes like the farm bill, the 30-hour bill, and these latest proposals for "mobilizing" industry, all of them hopelessly intricate devices to counteract the effect of a general fall in prices. On the other hand, Congress, which is hearing from home about the consequences of the deflation, is moving nearer and nearer to some form of inflation by fiat.

For those who wish to avoid both the kind of paternalism which is exemplified by the farm bill and the kind of inflation which is popular in Congress, there is a course of action open which has been tested by many countries and is almost certain to bring substantial relief. That course is to keep gold payments suspended to let the dollar depreciate in terms of gold, and to support the government credit and the capital market by a policy of credit expansion which is regulated not by gold but by the price level. I do not say that this monetary policy will make us prosperous immediately. I do most thoroughly believe that it will stop the economic rot and permit us to recover. And I believe that we fall to take this course the depression will become still deeper and still more acute.

CHAPTER XXXIX

"I suppose," Rolf said, "I could not have done that if I didn't intend to do that—I mean that wasn't what—oh, hang it all, I'm sorry."

Janet did not answer. She had drawn away from him and in the darkness he could not see her eyes. Only the shadowy oval of her face.

"Well, I guess you don't believe me," he went on, "but it's true. It's just like everything else lately. Everything goes wrong. Oh, Janet, I'm in such a mess!"

"What's the matter, Rolf?"

"Everything."

"You mean there's something wrong at the office?"

"I mean there's something wrong everywhere! At the office. At home. Everywhere I go. I had a row with McPhail this morning. Well—almost a row. Blamed me because we lost the Liberty job and because Horners wouldn't come through with a contract. Can I help it if they change their minds? Oh, what's the use! It's the same thing all the time—"

"But why should he blame you for that? Are you handling contracts?"

"Well, you see," Rolf began awkwardly, "after we got back from White Sulphur Springs Betty thought I should have a more important job. She talked to her uncle and he agreed that I could take over some of the better contracts. On commission. But with times the way they have been it's only natural we'd lose a little business, isn't it? Everyone else has."

"Yes," Janet said doubtfully. "I suppose it is."

"That's what I wanted to talk to you about!" His tone was eager now. "Do you think I could get a job at 'Every Home'? They've never taken on anyone in Hamilton's place, have they? I'd like to cut loose from the Atlas Agency. That would show them! Just because I came there without much experience nobody will listen to me. If I could get a job like Hamilton's—"

"I don't know," Janet put in doubtfully. "They've cut down on the staff. Of course I don't know how things are going lately but when I left Mr. Hamilton said they were going to try to get along without taking anyone else on."

"But they can't do that!"

"You could try, of course. Mr. Chambers would be the one to see."

"Chambers? I'll remember. That's another thing I wanted to ask you. Oh, boy, I hope I can get this over! I'll show those kids yet."

"I'm afraid they wouldn't want to pay very much."

Rolf's laugh was bitter. "Well, I'm not getting so much as it is. That's another thing that makes me sore at McPhail. It takes an awful lot to go around with this crowd of Betty's."

"Yes, I should think it would."

"It takes a lot of dough and—oh, I don't know! Sometimes I get pretty tired of it. Parties or something going on every night. I'd rather stay home lots of times but Betty always wants to go."

"I shouldn't think you could do much work and go to parties every night."

"I can't. I've tried to tell Betty that but she won't listen. Betty and I haven't been getting along so well the last few weeks. You see she—"

"Please!" Janet protested. "I'd rather not hear about it."

"All right." He moved nearer. "It's like old times talking to you, Janet. Helps a fellow to get things off his chest. You always understand about everything."

The moonlight on the patch of grass had shifted and was coming nearer to them. Janet said, "I think I'd better go in now, Rolf."

"What's the hurry? I haven't had a chance to talk to you for weeks. Don't go yet!" He caught her hand.

"Oh, but I must. Really! I'm getting late and someone will be looking for me or the telephone might ring. Lucy isn't here tonight."

"All the more reason to stay!" She shook her head. "No, I can't."

"You're not mad about anything, are you?"

"No."

"I mean—about what happened?"

"No, Rolf. I'm not mad. And I hope you get the job at 'Every Home' only I can't stay any longer to talk about it. I—I really must go!"

"Please!"

"But I must!" She pulled her hand from his. "Good night, Rolf," she said and fled up the walk toward the house.

Inside the hall was dark and she stood for a moment, leaning against the door. She closed her eyes and pressed her hands over them tightly but that did not shut out the memory. Nothing could do that! Nothing!

Slowly she made her way up the stairs to her room.

Mrs. Curtis put down the letter she was reading. She said, "Janet, you're looking pale this morning. Don't you feel well?"

Morning sunlight streamed thru the bedroom window. Mrs. Curtis, wearing a negligee of orchid silk, sat near the window and looked up at her secretary.

"Why, yes, Mrs. Curtis. I—I didn't sleep very well but I'm feeling all right."

"You don't look it. I think you should see a doctor."

"Oh, but it's nothing. Really, I feel perfectly all right!"

Mrs. Curtis said, "Hm! Well, I'm sure I don't want you getting sick. If you don't look better tomorrow I want you to telephone Doctor Roberts."

An hour later Janet slipped into her own room, brought out a box of rouge and touched her cheeks with color. She was careful to do the same thing next morning and nothing more was said about a visit from the physician.

Jeff telephoned Wednesday afternoon. He said, "Get something to celebrate, Janet. The Boss came across with a raise. Do you suppose you could go to dinner with me?"

"I'd love to but I'm afraid I can't get away."

"Well, then, how about seeing a movie? That's about all there is to do in town."

She said she thought she would manage that and agreed to be ready at eight o'clock.

It was promptly at eight that the little roadster appeared before the door of the brick house. Janet answered the ring, wearing her hat and coat, and a few minutes later they were off.

The movie proved to be only mildly entertaining. It was a gangster affair with a great deal of shooting and underworld warfare. As they came out of the theater Jeff said, "Where! I think I need air after that. What about 'Le's drive out on the hill road?'" Janet suggested, "I like it out there."

They got into the roadster and headed for the hill road. But this time when they came to the turn overlooking the lights of the city Jeff did not stop.

Janet said, "Tell me about the raise. How did it happen?"

"Nobody could have been more surprised than I was," Jeff told her. "Boss just called me in this morning and said that from now on I was to take charge of the department and the salary would be up $5. Honestly, for a minute I thought he was kidding."

"I'm awfully glad, Jeff. You work hard and you deserve it."

"Well, I'm going to try to. He

C. C. Slaughter Sells Land Out Of Large Ranch With Cotton As Tender

By TED H. MALLOY
United Press Staff Correspondent

DALLAS—Wielded 18,000 acres of fertile virgin West Texas land as his share of his late father's famous 250,000-acre Lazy S ranch, C. C. Slaughter, Dallas business man-rancher, is disposing of it in small tracts to farmers in a novel plan with bales of cotton—not money—the medium of exchange.

The terms of transfer are one acre for one bale of cotton. The plan has elements of the pioneer methods by which the father, Col. C. C. Slaughter, one of Texas' best known pioneers, acquired the vast ranch 40 years ago when land was cheap and its development inexpensive.

The pioneer's son, a heavy-set, nearly bald man who learned the ways of the West as a youthful cowboy on the Lazy S but now heads an insurance company, told the United Press of his plan to distribute the property, most of which is without improvements.

The pioneer's son, a heavy-set, nearly bald man who learned the ways of the West as a youthful cowboy on the Lazy S but now heads an insurance company, told the United Press of his plan to distribute the property, most of which is without improvements.

He is writing contracts with farmers to buy the land in tracts of 100 acres each, with payment to be made in cotton. A bale for each acre is all he asks, with 18 years to pay if desired. Slaughter even will accept in feed crops half the equivalent of any annual cotton payment if drought or pestilence ruins the cotton.

Applications for the land have swamped him since he announced his plan and he said he expected the entire 18,000 acres would be "sold" within a week.

The principal requirements made in the contracts are that 100-acres of each 100-acre tract be planted annually to cotton and that the farmer pay the taxes yearly regardless of state or national tax moratoriums.

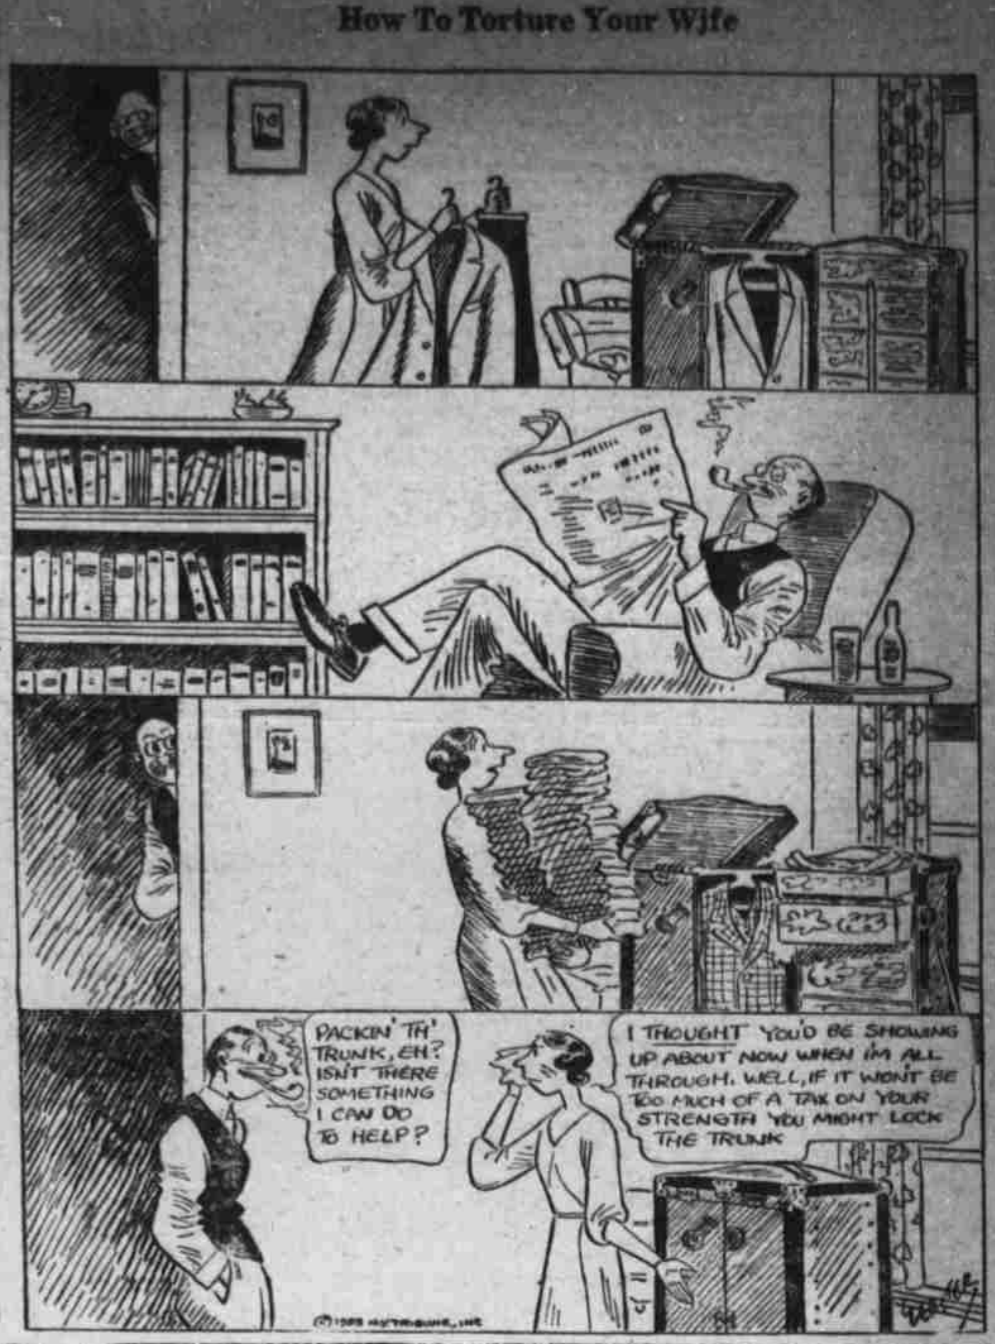

The remainder of each tract may be planted in anything the farmer desires. The minimum cotton payment asked yearly is ten 500-pound bales of seven-eighths inch staple if desired, the purchaser may pay for his farm in one year by turning over to Slaughter 100 bales of cotton.

Estimates are that the poorest tracts will produce one-fourth of a bale per acre yearly, with yields of one bale per acre not improbable on some.

The Dallas man was one of nine children to receive shares of the ranch when his father died a decade ago. All but one of the others have subdivided and sold their shares and agriculture has claimed practically all of the vast Lazy S expanse where longhorns once grazed.

Colonel Slaughter was the first white male child born in the Republic of Texas. Too young to enlist in the civil war, he joined the Texas Rangers, engaged in skirmishes with the Indians and rose to the rank of colonel. He started the Lazy S in 1866.

Under The Dome

At Austin

By Gordon K. Shearer

AUSTIN—The most controversial topic in Texas politics for years apparently has been settled to the satisfaction of both sides. For the first time in more than 15 years prohibition has failed to divide the Texas legislators. How an agreement was reached when a bitter battle seemed imminent is one of the inside stories of the present session of the legislature. To Ben O'Neal, quiet, business like senator, of Wichita Falls the credit is generally given for evolving a plan which ends the perplexing beer problem to popular vote. To Rep. Preston L. Anderson of San Antonio, insiders give the credit for working out the O'Neal proposal, a plan that the beer advocates find acceptable. Briefly this was the situation: The House had recessed with a resolution for a beer referendum under discussion and a bill to legalize 22 beer by statute next to

An immigrant couple, Mr. and Mrs. John Vasco, barricaded themselves in their Hastings, N. Y., home threatening to pour boiling water on anyone who might seek entrance as part of their determined effort to prevent an operation which physicians said was necessary to save the life of their infant daughter. A doctor calling to attend the child's twin sister, who was taken suddenly ill, was refused admittance. Picture shows a crowd in front of the Vasco home. (Associated Press Photo)

Lufkin Folks In Celebration Of 50th Anniversary

LUFKIN (UPI).—Time was turned backward here today and old settlers of Lufkin and Angelina county were carried back to the scenes of their childhood in the celebration of the 50th anniversary of this city. Through efforts of Mrs. Ora McMillen, librarian, and the board of the Kurth Memorial Library, this bi-centennial celebration was made possible. Pictures and relics of early days here were displayed. Many interesting accounts of pioneer days were related. J. E. Wilson told of his first night in Lufkin some 25 or 30 years ago. The weather was freezing and the hotel had but one stove, which was in the lobby. Wilson spent a very restless night because his room was directly in front of one of the "better" saloons of the town and rowdyism prevailed. A shot finally rent the air and the rest of the night was peaceful. Someone had found the evening dull and shot his friend through the leg. The oldest picture in the collections dated back 45 years. In it two prominent Houston men, formerly of Lufkin, can be identified. They are Frank and Johnny Bonner. The next picture in regard to age was made some 30 years ago showing the home of Judge E. J. Mantooth when he was entertaining John Kirby and Louis J. Worthan former editor of the Fort Worth Star Telegraph. A picture of the old brick kiln portrays the beginnings of a Lufkin industry. The mud mill and the brick laid out for drying in the sun give a vivid picture of early days when a brick maker turned out 450 bricks in a 10-hour day. Now a brick plant machine with 20 men turns out 800,000 bricks per day. Among the relics exhibited is a tin Bible taken from the pocket of a boy soldier, killed in the battle of Manassas, La. The boy, Galvin Cochran, enlisted at the early age of 15 to be in the same company with an older brother. Just before the battle the boy found this Bible and placed it in his pocket. Soon after he was killed and the blood stains are still visible—70 years later. The Bible bore the inscription on Sarah Brunson, in Fort Worth, to visit Mrs. Billings, formerly Miss Mamie Hair of this city, who lives in Dallas.

Jolly Time Bridge Club Is Organized

A new bridge club was organized Wednesday. Its name is the Jolly Time Bridge Club and it will meet on alternate Wednesdays. Mrs. Guy Tansitt was the first hostess. Mrs. H. V. Crocker was chosen reporter. At the party Mrs. West made members high and was given a silhouette picture. Mrs. Boatler made guest high and was presented with a similar gift. Mrs. McGinnis was consoled for low score with a salt and pepper set. Mrs. E. C. Boatler and Mrs. Cecil Burman were local guests. Out of town guests were: Miss Irma Smith of Kaufman, a cousin of the hostess, who came for tea; and Miss Edith Bowlin, of Baird. A frozen salad plate was passed to the guests and the following members: Mmes. W. G. Borlus, Clyde McGinnis, Cecil West, H. V. Crocker. Mrs. West will be the next hostess.
