Two Million Jobs Hinge On Success Of Effort To Restore Export Trade Expected To Be Made By Democrats

EDITOR'S NOTE—The rapid decline in United States exports has caused uneasiness at Washington and a widespread belief that the next administration must quickly address itself to this problem.

In the following article, Harry W. Franis of the United Press foreign department gives some of the background to the current situation and suggested some of the possibilities for recuperation.

UNITED PRESS ASSOCIATIONS, Washington.

WASHINGTON (UP)—The almost catastrophic slump in American export valuations from $5,240,000,000 in 1929 to $1,576,000,000 in 1932 offers an urgent and definite problem to economists of the next administration, according to the unanimous opinion of international circles here.

The United States, which since the days of the revolution has made foreign trade a primary objective of policy and a source of national pride, cannot long defer vigorous steps for the recovery of foreign markets, disinterested diplomatic observers believe.

Two million jobs, by official estimate, hinge directly upon manufacturers' exports, while the merchant marine, railway trunk lines, cable companies and port services are crying out through agents here against the adverse situation.

In the decade from 1929 to 1932, United States export trade seemed to have stabilized at a figure in excess of $4,500,000,000 annually. This flourishing business was regarded as the "prosperity leeway" for American industry.

Lippmann Finds Technocracy Calls For Communist Society Dictated By Engineers In Lieu Of Price System

Technocracy
IV. The Promise of Salvation

By WALTER LIPPMANN

After the doom, the technocrats offer us utopia. They believe that the problems created by the machines, the problems of technological unemployment, of disequilibrium between production and consumption, are entirely insoluble by any form of social control which men are now considering. They regard as entirely futile the current inquiries and experiments looking toward unemployment insurance, the public control of investment, the planning of industrial operations, the stabilization of money and credit, which most far-sighted men today regard as probable elements in the next phase of economic evolution. They have it fixed in their minds that what they call "the present system" is a rigid thing which must inevitably explode under the impact of increased energy consumption.

Why they should think so, I have been unable to learn. Is "the present system" the same system that it was in 1800 or in 1870 or in 1900 or even in 1920? Has not the present system been changing for a hundred and thirty years under the influence of the industrial revolution? Why, then, suppose it must now stand rigid until it explodes?

The technocratic answer to this question is to be found in what Mr. Scott and his friends call "the price system." It is not easy to find out what the technocrats mean by the price system, but as nearly as I can learn from their vague and excited remarks on the subject, they mean the whole financial mechanism of money, debt, profits and private property. This does not take us very far until we know what technocracy proposes to substitute for "the price system."

The technocrats are very reticent about this, but it is fair to infer from various hints which occur in their writings that what they have in mind is a communist society under the dictatorship not of the proletariat but of engineers. In such a society men would receive for their work not money but "energy certificates" which could not be sold or saved but would have to be spent. This, they think, would abolish "the price system." This is the technocratic solution for our present troubles and for the greater troubles that they predict. They claim that such a society would be incredibly efficient. The whole economic system would run like a perfectly co-ordinated machine.

But please note what technocracy assumes when it makes its splendid promises. It promises that we need work only sixteen hours a week. Work at what? At the job assigned to us. For otherwise how can the technicians make the machine operate according to the plans of the technicians? Technocracy promises an income equivalent to $20,000 in 1929. What income? Is the consumer to be allowed to indulge his fancy, live where he likes to live, in the kind of house he wishes to build, may he wear the kind of clothes and eat the kind of food and play with the gadgets that he wants? Not if the industrial system is to run efficiently according to plan, without overproduction of one commodity and underproduction of another. The consumer must take what is given to

Dr. G. W. Truett To Preach At First Baptist

Site Selected For Revival Campaign Opening March 6

First Baptist Church has been chosen as the site of the revival to be conducted here March 6-17 by Dr. George W. Truett of Dallas. Conservative estimates by pastors of the three sponsoring churches, the West Side Baptist, East Fourth Baptist, and First Baptist, place the number that can be seated comfortably in the building at 2,000. Installation of loud speaking systems will make possible the large seating capacity.

Rev. R. E. Day, speaking for the three sponsoring churches, said that all pastors, Christians, and other people were urged to hear Dr. Truett and cooperate in the meeting.

Dr. Truett recently closed a meeting in Tulsa, Oklahoma where scores of conversions resulted from his messages.

Water Struck In Ector Test

Stanolind Below 2,000 Feet In Offset To Harrison Well

Landreth Production Co.'s No. 1 O. B. Holt, northern Ector county wildcat, encountered one-half barrel of sulphur water per hour yesterday at 4,610 feet and drilled on to 4,627 feet. It then plugged back to 4,600 feet where it was testing to see if the water was shut off.

No. 1 Holt, in the center of the southeast quarter of section 15, block 43, township 1 north, T&P Ry. survey, got oil at 4,305-17 feet and an apparent increase from 4.22-29. Since the latter depth it had drilled in lime with no change but swabbed about 30 barrels of oil hourly to facilitate drilling. The well opened a new pool 18 miles north of the Harrison No. 1 Addis pool in producing its first oil and a complete test of this pay is now awaited. It drilled 580 feet in gray lime before encountering water. This was said in some quarters to be below the horizon in which other Ector wildcats got water.

Harrison's No. 1 Addis, five miles west of Odessa and in section 35, block 43, township 2 south, T & P Ry. Co. survey, was shut down at

SPOTLIGHT

CHAPTER XXIV

The road tour of the "Heigh-bro" company was proving successful. They visited small towns and larger ones. They found appreciative audiences and full ones. All things considered, however, the tour had been doing well. The show was making money. Few other road companies had as good a record.

Sheila's specialty dances (until closing) always won repeated encores. She was a favorite with every audience and Fletcher, the company manager, had allowed her to order new costumes for the "May Day" number and the little dance in which the spotlight that shone on her varied from red to green to blue.

In one of the larger cities McKee, the comedian, surprised her. "I know a lot of people here," he said. "Played here in stock years ago. There's a Mrs. Raymond—one of the social celebrities—who is giving a charity dance. She asked me to come and bring along some one else from the company. I wonder if you'd be willing to go and do your 'May Day' number?"

"Why, of course. I'll be glad to." "Good. It's $25 in your pocket," McKee explained. "Mrs. Raymond's a good sort and it's her charity—not ours."

Sheila nodded. "I can use the $25," she said. "For two days she looked forward eagerly to the night of the charity dance. It was to be a glimpse, close at hand, of the life that to her seemed the most attractive in the world."

The night came but it didn't, somehow, quite reach Sheila's expectations. In Mrs. Raymond's home she found herself in a different world. She was the same age as many of the girls she met there. She looked much as they did, dressed similarly. She shared the same youthful dreams of romance, gaily, adventurously. But Sheila was an outsider in spite of all this. For some reason a barrier existed, shutting her off from these young people. She didn't know how to get around it or climb over it. Sheila remained apart.

As she danced the "May Day" number, her feet weaving in and out in the complicated steps, she could hear whispered approval. A polite patter of applause at the end clearly showed that the dance had been appreciated.

"Good work!" McKee whispered as Sheila took a seat again at his side. He was not performing. Sheila noticed with interest that here he was accepted as a guest. Many people seemed to know him.

Me moved, easy and assured, among the others. Some of them called him "Ralph." Sheila spoke and spoke of the days years before when he had played weekly at the local theatre.

"Well, how'd you like it?" McKee asked the girl as together they drove back to the hotel. "Would you like to change places with any of those girls?"

Sheila hesitated. "It's an attractive life," she said. "I don't suppose they have many responsibilities. I guess they do just about as they please every day and never have to work."

"You should see them after a hard set of tennis."

"That's not what I mean."

McKee patted her arm. "I know it isn't," he said. "But you must remember there are two sides of the picture. Most of them would give their right eye to be behind the footlights. They envy you, Sheila."

The season rolled on. The play was a success and Sheila was winning recognition as a dancer. Newspaper criticisms of the play always mentioned her name. Sometimes this praise was extravagant. It didn't make her more popular with the other principals in the company but the manager appreciated it.

McKee liked to see her receive good notices. McKee explained to invite her to supper after the show, to show her little favors and give her advice from his long experience. These attentions were always impersonal. Often he talked about his wife and family. He never tried to make love to Sheila.

Presently the Samper Sisters arrived to join the troupe. Paris had been written into the show for them. It was felt that "Heigh-bro" needed some new material and the Sampers' act provided that. The girls dressed exactly alike. They came on the stage with little shuffling steps, crooning a song in close harmony that was unlike any other singing Sheila had ever heard.

The Sampers were not particularly pretty girls but they were rated clever. They danced and sang in unison, their voices blending like notes of a violin, their agile steps matching perfectly.

They had a dressing room which they all used. They ate together after the show. On pay days one of them was always to be seen scribbling to the post office to send money home, holding out only what the sisters would need for living expenses.

"How's your beau?" Tillie Samper asked Sheila one evening as they waited in the wings for the leading lady's song to come to a close.

"Which one?"

"The one you loaned me one evening. Jim something-or-other. He's rich, isn't he?" Tillie spoke carefully. With the exception of Clark, who was married to a vaudeville headliner, the Samper girls had been dealess.

"Maybe. But he didn't earn his money."

Tillie nodded. "That's all right. Earning money isn't everything. I think men are afraid of girls who earn good salaries, Sheila."

"Maybe they are."

"That was another angle of the old argument. Home life or a profession for a girl? Sheila thought about it but couldn't come to any decision. She knew that for herself she wanted a home. She was making progress, however, as a dancer, gaining assurance and winning recognition. If she followed McKee's advice, returned to Broadway and landed a part there she might become a star. What would that mean? Only that she was farther and farther away from the dream in her heart.

Christmas week brought the troupe to a large midwestern city. The week passed almost exactly like any other with two exceptions. It meant seven days in one place instead of two or three brief engagements and it meant an extra matinee on Christmas Day. Business in the theater was not particularly good. People seemed to prefer to spend the holidays at home or in the homes of relatives and friends instead of going to the theater.

Suddenly Sheila discovered that she wanted to be back in New York. She wanted to feel the cold North River wind against her cheeks, to hear the bustle of Broadway traffic. She wanted to look at shop windows, to see the twinkling lights in giant office buildings, to drive through Central Park and to sit at cozy restaurant tables talking about plays and players with other troupers.

She wanted to see Dick Stanley, too. Now that the tour was drawing to a close Sheila heard from Dick often. Yes, it would be fun to be back in New York and see Dick. And Jim Blaine. And Trevor Lane. Sheila thought of Myrt and wondered how life was treating her. Alone one afternoon in her hotel room, she sat down and wrote Myrt a long, newy letter.

The answer came back almost immediately. Myrt was well, married to George now and very happy.

They had moved into an apartment in the Bronx. She promised to come to see Sheila as soon as the company returned to New York and Sheila must come up and have dinner with Myrt and George.

Well, it was better for Myrt to be married. As the wife of a steady, substantial business man, her future would be settled and safe. Myrt would make a go of it, too. She would make George a good wife.

The letter from Myrt increased Sheila's loneliness, made her even more anxious to return to New York.

The show played a series of stands in Indiana and Michigan. And then something happened which restored Sheila's affection for the road.

Cosden Hands First Defeat To BMA Team

Oilers Without White And West Take Game 36 To 31

BRECKENRIDGE—A determined Cosden crew minus the services of White and West, who usually lead the attack for the Oilers, roundly outplayed Breckenridge BMA in the YMCA gym, to take the game by a score of 36 to 31, to make it the first defeat of the season for BMA.

Tallying 6 points by BMA in the opening minutes of the first quarter made it look as though the Oilers were in for a bad night, but with their offense clicking the quarter ended with them leading 7-16, and holding the lead thereafter, having a 16 to 11 advantage at the half.

After pling up a 9-point advantage in the third quarter, the Oilers barely checked a fourth quarter rally in time, with BMA counting 7 points and being within 2 points of the lead. Dora played a stellar game for the locals, breaking the BMA defense time after time to score 14 points, only one shy of Miller who was high point man of the game with 25. Third place honors went to J. "Hook" Smith who counted 11 points, and using his left hand to much advantage against BMA guards. E. Wolford of BMA was the mainstay of BMA's defense until removed from the game on personal fouls. In the closing minutes of the fourth quarter Dora received a badly sprained ankle that may keep him out of the Oilers line-up for some time.

son has a certified copy of my conviction in Hall county and that Judge McGuire is willing to permit the 25 years here to run concurrently with the one in Hall county. I hope he does. I've got two other sentences, five years each, in Floyd county.

Edwards said his first prison term was in New Mexico where he did a year's stretch. The Hall county term was his first Texas sentence. "I worked for both those fellows from Paducah who came over here and spoiled my little story," he said in speaking of Sheriff A. A. Payne of Cottle county who was present to testify that a star defense witness did not reach Paducah until in August instead of being there in May as Edwards claimed.

Going To Behave "I'm going to behave and try to get out early," Edwards added. "Thirty-five years is long enough. Let alone 60 years."

Slaughter stated he was "going straight when I get out." He has two other indictments against him on liquor charges, it is said. What will be done with these was not discussed by Joe McGowan, county attorney.

Baker has hopes of a reversal of sentence by the state court of criminal appeals. Counsel Vickers immediately after the passing of sentence by the jury, announced an appeal. "Yes, we will appeal, he declared with emphasis. Baker was inclined to consider his sentence of 20 years a little too severe in view of the 30 years given Slaughter.

Large crowds attended the five days of hearings. Many from Gaines county were present, as well as Terry county. A special venire of 108 men was called for duty.

Report Is Awaited In jail, the four men awaited report of the fourth jury. "I hope it's not over 35 years," Herring said. He was very nervous and apparently was unable to stand still or remain quiet very long.

Slaughter said following hearing of his sentence, "I am glad I did not turn state's evidence as I was given a chance to do earlier in the week. I feel better about having received a 10-year sentence like I did. I am not sorry that I did not tell on the others in the case."

Brother Of Big Spring Man, Recent Visitor Here, Buys Chinese Junk And Prepares To Cruise Around World

Shanghai Newspaper Relates Plans Of John Blomshield And Friend For Leisurely Trip Trough South Seas And Beyond

Editor's Note—The following interesting article appeared January 13 in "The China Press," English language newspaper published in Shanghai, China. John Blomshield, named in the story is a brother of Carl Blomshield of Big Spring and was here on an extended visit last year. Mr. Blomshield, according to the Shanghai newspaper, planned to begin his interesting cruise by the end of January. A friend sent The Herald this article.

The romance of new horizons cannot be cooled by others' tragedies. And he who goes seeking adventure in a painted junk does not, apparently, profit by the experience of others. Because one man failed, he argues, it does not follow that I will fail also.

The disaster of the Ningpo junk Fou Po, which was wrecked on the Formosa coast and ended, before it had fairly started, the high adventure of Captain Eric De Biscop, is still fresh in the minds of Shanghaiers who read the newspapers and who saw the craft before it sailed down the Whangpoo. Such a disaster, most of us would say, should serve to cool the ardor of the would-be world-circler. But quite the contrary. A new Ningpo junk with a new crew of foreigners is preparing to leave Shanghai this month for the South Seas and the far horizons.

Or rather "New Horizons." That is the junk's name—Shin Di Ping Shi. She is a stout, 65-foot craft, built at Ningpo and with six months' service in the fishing fleet. Today she is lying at the Heng Chong Chang Shipyard at Pootung Point, undergoing the finishing touches before she crosses down into the Yontze and heads for the China Sea.

Dreams Become Action The Shin Di Ping Shi was purchased here in November by Mr. John Blomshield, of Woodstock, N. Y., together with his future "chief officer," Mr. Loring Farnsworth, of New York City, he came to Shanghai last September with the express purpose of finding and purchasing a big Ningpo junk, and of sailing it around the world. Mr. Blomshield is, as he says, a writer and artist "of sorts" and has had the bee in his bonnet for many years of getting a small craft and making a long voyage in it. He is no novice as a sailor and navigator, having had years of experience with small fishing boats and similar craft on the east coast of the United States and in Europe. When he decided to take definite action instead of dreaming about it, he took a young friend, Mr. Farnsworth, who had also had considerable experience as a seaman, and the two traveled to China by way of Suez, stopping here and there en route to look over the possibilities of picking up some small, seaworthy craft for the venture. But when they had got as far as Singapore, they decided that the Chinese junk would serve their purpose better than anything else, and of Chinese junks, the Ningpo craft was the best.

In Shanghai, through the help of Mr. H. G. Mackenzie, formerly of the Maritime Customs and a man who knows good junk when he sees it, the Americans finally acquired the Shin Di Ping Shi. (That of course, was not the craft's original name, but Mr. Blomshield renamed it, saying that it would save a lot of trouble when people asked the ways and wherefores of the voyage. "The name," he grinned, "explains most everything quite satisfactorily.") The junk, when purchased, was 13 Water-Tight Compartments. Mr. Mackenzie felt, one of the finest and sturdiest of Ningpo crafts. It is 65 feet long with a 13-foot beam and draws 8 feet. It weighs in the neighborhood of 35 tons. The junk was brought to Wosung with the fishing fleet, and there it was purchased and taken into the shipyard for extensive alterations to fit it for all the trials and tribulations of a world cruise. Now, when it is nearly completed, it is fitted

Bids Asked On Red Bluff Dam And Spillway

Contractors To Leave Pecos February 25 To Inspect Site

PECOS—Much interest is being manifested by large contractors throughout the nation in the advertisement for bids for construction of the Red Bluff dam and siphonic spillway, now appearing in the Pecos Enterprise and other journals.

According to word from Vernon L. Sullivan, El Paso consulting engineer, who is also the engineer in charge of the project, inquiries have been received from contracting firms as far away as San Francisco. These contractors will be in Pecos on Saturday, February 25, at which time they will be taken for an inspection of the proposed reservoir site and also at which time the bids will be received by Mr. Sullivan at his office.

Charles Armstrong, Pecos contractor, received a copy of the complete specifications for the Red Bluff project this week and was kind enough to let the Enterprise look them over.

Mr. Sullivan has gotten the specifications into a very comprehensive and efficient form. No detail has been overlooked or omitted in his preparation of a tentative contract. The specifications have been neatly printed in a booklet, which includes maps of the entire system to be affected as well as of the detail of the spillway and dam construction.

The reservoir site as proposed will extend from about two miles north of the present Pasiocex pipe line, near Angeles, to two miles above the New Mexico line. The state highway and Santa Fe railway lie within a mile and a half of the proposed dam.

Seven distinct projects will be included in the Red Bluff district. These include the Arno Cedarvale, Farmers' Independent, Imperial, Grandfalls, Pecos River and Victor projects. Two sub-reservoirs are included, the Imperial and Pecos river reservoirs.

Stipulations in the call for bids are that a certified check for 2 per cent of the total contract price must accompany each bid. The successful contractor must make a surety bond for $250,000 on the dam and $60,000 on the spillway.

A total of 600 working days are allotted for the dam construction, and 300 days for the spillway or waters of the Pecos river, an inter-state stream; and

"WHEREAS, a preliminary investigation by said officers has revealed that a deplorable condition exists among the Texas farmers who irrigate their fields from waters of the Pecos river, which condition has been largely brought about by the inequitable diversion by the State of New Mexico, of thousands for whom pay envelopes were created or fattened.

Nor does all this take into account the $700,000 appropriated for the Vicks Antiseptic introductory advertising campaign, over 85 per cent of which is being spent in newspaper space. It's Vicks answer to the challenge of the time, "Can new business be created in a period of depression?"

Hidalgo Co. is 81 Years Old

Noted For Sweet Grapefruit And Bitter Political Campaigns

EDINBURG, (UP)—Hidalgo county, nationally known for its sweet grapefruit and its bitter political campaigns, is starting its 81st year. The 80th anniversary of its official organization as a political subdivision of the state passed during the last days of January.

The county, carved in 1853 from Nueces, Kenedy and Cameron counties, had an area then of 2,356 square miles—larger than the states of Delaware and Rhode Island combined. It stretches nearly 50 miles along the Rio Grande—a young and wild border country.

Where 80 years ago there was not a mile of improved road there stretch now more than 800 miles of concrete and other hard-surfaced highways, lined with palms and bright green citrus orchards.

Hundreds of thousands of acres once good for nothing but ranching and battleground for border raiders now are irrigated and in continuous agricultural use—the result of an unprecedented development accomplished since 1915 through use of Rio Grande water.

The development still is incomplete and authorities have conceded when it is finished the county will be one of the nation's greatest citrus-growing areas. Property last year was valued at $184,032,000 and the population approximated 77,000 whereas until 1876 there were less than 60 Americans in the county.

The first record book of the county commissioners, still well preserved and on file in the clerk's office, provides much interesting information. There was a cash balance of $56.80 in 1933 and no debts, but now there are millions of dollars worth of bonds outstanding for public improvements.

Where for nine months after the county was organized there was not business enough for a commissioners' meeting, the commissioners now meet twice weekly and devote full time to administrative duties.

Disorder prevailed in the county until 1876 when federal and Mexican authorities stopped bandit depredations and private wars. Ranching was the principal industry until 1914 when the first railroad was completed from the north.

Agricultural development followed, reaching such a stage that now the county ships citrus fruit and truck products the year round to all the nation and some foreign countries.

For many years the late A. Yancey Baker, sheriff, controlled political and economic affairs of the county. A "good government" party finally ousted the Baker organization after repeated campaigns and allegations of abuse of public trust on the organization's part.

"WHEREAS, said Senate Bill No. 502, regular session, Forty-Second Legislature, directed the bringing of suit to correct the conditions hereinabove set out, but no appropriation was made for expenses of such suit (which suit must be filed in the United States Supreme Court) and no appropriation was made with which to assemble the huge amount of evidence necessary in a case of this nature; and

"WHEREAS, it is imperative looking to relief of the oppressed that steps be taken at an early date citizens of the Pecos river valley in Texas; now therefore,

"BE IT ENACTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF TEXAS:

Section 1. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the State Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of Twelve Thousand, Two Hundred and Fifty ($12,250.00) Dollars, or so much as may be necessary, to cover the expenses of investigation, preparation and prosecution of suit against the State of New Mexico for the wrongful and inequitable diversion by said State or more than its just share of the waters of the Pecos River, as authorized by Chapter 188, General Laws, Regular Session, Forty-Second Legislature, (1931).

Section 2. The sum herein appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available and shall be a continuing appropriation and shall be available for the purposes herein specified, or so much thereof as may be needed therefore up to August 31, 1935. Moneys paid out under the provision of this appropriation shall be on sworn accounts approved by the Attorney General, and paid in the manner provided by law.

Section 3. The fact that a suit against the State of New Mexico for the preservation of the rights of the citizens of Texas in and to their just share of the water of the Pecos river can not be properly commenced and prosecuted until an adequate appropriation is made therefor creates an emergency and an imperative public necessity that the constitutional rule requiring bills to be read on three several days be suspended and the same is hereby suspended and this bill shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and it is so enacted."
