TODAY and TOMORROW

By WALTER LIPPMANN
Governor Roosevelt At St. Paul

Governor Roosevelt's reply to Al Smith's warning that he would "fight to the end against any candidate who persists in any demagogic appeal" in a speech which is about as free from demagogic appeal as any speech that any candidate is likely to make. Mr. Roosevelt has not persisted. He has desisted.

What made the original radio speech of a fortnight ago definitely "demagogic" was not the fact that Mr. Roosevelt expressed his sympathies for the "forgotten man." The vice of that speech was, first, that it pronounced the forgotten man something—namely, the improvement of his purchasing power—without offering even a hint as to how so desirable a thing is to be brought about, and, second, that it played upon his suspicions by a sheer misrepresentation of the facts as to the work of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

To make empty promises and to arouse suspicion by misrepresentation is the essence of demagoguery, and former Governor Smith was clearly warranted in issuing his challenge and his warning.

The orator at St. Paul was chastened and a better man. Rooted in his general sentiments and in the two specific problems which he discussed Governor Roosevelt not only made honorable amends for his blunder, but went on to exhibit a breadth of vision and an understanding of principles which are entitled to ungrudging praise.

The generalities of the speech in which he asked for "a true concert of interest" as against sectional and class feeling are, of course, the commonplaces of political oratory. Yet I think no one can read the full text of this portion of the speech without feeling that Mr. Roosevelt is genuinely conscious of the size and of the variety of the American nation and that he is sincerely on his guard against letting his sympathies become narrowed and his understanding localized.

There was a note of autobiography behind these generalities as these questions from all the glorious dead. For about eight years Franklin Roosevelt has been carrying on a huge correspondence with influential Democrats in all parts of the union. It is this wide personal acquaintance which is now yielding him such excellent returns in the form of support. It has encouraged him to believe that he knows the American people rather better than most candidates and that therefore he is entitled to identify himself with the greatest, and in speaking of Jefferson to allude indirectly to himself saying that: "he was no local American; he was no little American."

shows how valuable it is in public life for men to speak frankly. For so good a speech would hardly have been delivered in St. Paul had Al Smith not spoken so boldly the week before.

Lee Satterwhite To Open Campaign At Wortham May 10

AUSTIN—Lee Satterwhite, of Odessa, candidate for Railroad Commissioner, is to make his opening address in the campaign at Wortham on May 10. He spends his headquarters at Austin last week.

Mr. Satterwhite will present in his speech at Wortham his reasons for entering the race for Railroad Commissioner and expects to show that this office is one of the most important in the state government. He will then be prepared to discuss with the people of Texas the record made in the past by the Railroad Commission.

Mr. Satterwhite chose Wortham as the place to make his first address because it was from this district, Freestone County, that he was sent to the capitol to do his first service in the state legislature. He also spent most of his early days in this community.

"The Bank Where You Feel At Home"

the MAN HUNTERS BY MABEL McELLIOTT

HERE TODAY SUSAN CAREY, pretty and 15, is secretary for ERNEST HEATH Chicago architect. She lives with her AUNT JESSIE on the west side. One of her admirers is BEN LAMPMAN, young musician, who asks her to marry him and is refused. JACK WARING, a man about town who is divorced, takes her driving one night and kisses her. She resolves never to go with him again. RAY FLANNERY, employed in a neighboring office, gives her some advice on popularity. Susan is in love with BOB DUNBAR, handsome young millionaire she met at business school, but she believes he is engaged to DENISE ACKROYD, a debutante. Denise asks Susan, Ben and some others to attend a house party. Dunbar appears. He drinks too much and tells Susan she is a flirt. She makes him stop his car and gets out. ERNEST HEATH happens along and drives her back to the Ackroyds. His wife, who is jealous, warns him against doing it.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXVI
"Did you have a good time?" Rose asked. It was Sunday afternoon, a gray and lifeless Sunday.
"It was all right," Susan said tonelessly.
"Well, I must say you don't sound enthusiastic."
Susan said she was sorry. She tried to whip herself into the response Rose wanted. The lace dress had been a great success she assured her.
"How about Ben? Did he like it?"
"I didn't see him this morning," Susan said vaguely. "I got up early and took their nine o'clock train."
Rose gasped. "My dear, what for?"
"Oh, I just wanted to."
How could she explain the urge that had sent her rushing back to the city and the safety of the little house? She had not slept the long night through. Phrases of Bob's had kept recurring to her. "Not the sort of girl I thought you were—Denise told me you went with this free and easy crowd—you can't always tell about angel faces."
Of course he had been drinking, but that was no excuse. She saw plainly Denise's purpose in inviting her. She longed only to be away from the big, unfriendly house. Even the note pushed under her door by a servant as Susan packed her bag had not deterred her.
"I'm sorry," the note had said, "I acted the fool last night. Don't remember all I said but hope you will forgive me." It was signed with Bob's initials.
She had not seen Ben again. The house had been silent, almost untenanted as Susan slipped down the stairs. There had been a maid during the great hall as she passed. The maid walked the two miles to the station feeling sick and faint.

and longing for some coffee. Back in the city she had stopped at a lunch counter in a sort of gray haze when she felt nothing at all. There were other times when the turn of a head, a man's voice calling to another across a restaurant or a phrase leaping at her from the pages of a book awoke her to something like agony.

She wondered why people said the young were happy. They certainly weren't. At least she wasn't. She kept reaching out and striving for things she could never have. It would be better to be like Ray, who accepted everything at its face value.

Over their cafeteria luncheon Susan happened to mention the fact that the day was her birthday. Ray widened her eyes.
"My eye! What did the boy friend give you?"
Susan smiled. "Haven't any boy friend."
Ray looked shrewd. "Expect me to believe that?"
Susan allowed herself a tiny shrug. "You can believe it or not just as you like. It's true."
"You are a funny one," Ray told her. "You're plenty good-looking—that is, if anybody likes the tall type. And you could have a good time if you only put your mind to it."
Susan ate her ice cream. "Maybe that's the trouble. I don't care enough," she said.
Ray announced, "It's just plain dumb. That's what it is! If you'd wear some snappy clothes and use a little more makeup, you'd be real cute. Why don't you come up to the house some night and let Mamma fix you up?"
"You're awfully kind," Susan told her. "I'll think about it." She squeezed Ray's plump little arm as they went out. Yes, it must be comfortable to be like Ray. Life would be simple if you felt as she did about everything.

It was unaccountable but Susan's heart had lightened somewhat. She told Pierson shyly that it was her birthday and he looked at her great eyes. Pierson was 35 and looked 40. Jack Waring arrived as they were talking. He looked at the girl curiously.
"It must be great to be 20," he said. There was a real note of envy in his voice. "What wouldn't I give to be back there, with what I know now! I wouldn't make the same mistakes."
"I've made a lot already," Susan told him almost gayly. "But from this day forward I'm determined not to make any more." She felt happy. She would work hard, she would study, she would read good books and make something of herself. Look at all the women who were great and useful in the world!
"It was in this mood of high endeavor that Susan answered her employer's buzzer. Heath seldom rang, preferring to come to the door and summon her.
She took her notebook, some freshly sharpened pencils, and presented herself. Tall and graceful in her old black wool frock, with her sheer white collar falling away from her young throat, Susan made a charming picture.
"Sit down," Ernest Heath told her. His voice sounded strange, almost harsh. Susan obeyed without taking her eyes from his dark, aristocratic face. There was something in his expression that vaguely alarmed her.
"Miss Carey," Heath went on, clearing his throat. "I've something unpleasant to tell you. Mrs. Heath is threatening to sue you for alienation of my affections."
Susan stared, a child's unwinking stare. The horror of what he had said had not fully penetrated her consciousness. She faltered. "But that's absurd! She can't do that."
"Nevertheless," said Heath grimly, "she's going to."

Old Hindy Relected

FIFTEEN years ago his name was an albatross in all allied countries; today the world heaves a sigh of relief when old Paul von Benceckendorf and von Hindenburg is elected president of Germany for a second term, with an impressive margin of votes over all his opponents, including the fascist Adolf Hitler.

In the war, old Hindenburg was more than a fairly good general; he was a symbol of German endurance and a bulwark of determination to the German people. Today he is a symbol to the rest of the world, too—a symbol of dependability, of calmness in the midst of chaos, of stubborn common sense. His reelection to the presidency at the age of 84 is more than a tribute to his strength of character; it is a compliment to the solid sense and stolid orderliness of the German people.

Old Hindy isn't a politician, and probably that fact helped him out at the ballot box. The politicians made a mess of the war, and their efforts to straighten things out since the armistice haven't improved matters greatly.

"Hell'n Maria's" Niece Stops Here

Miss Margaret Dawes, Chicago, niece of General Charles G. Dawes, head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and former ambassador to England, was here Saturday.

Miss Dawes, enroute home from Tucson, Ark., where she had been visiting, came to El Paso by train and caught the eastbound American Airways ship at 6 p. m. for Fort Worth.

An attractive young woman, Miss Dawes showed a keen interest in the city and asked many questions about this section. Taken for an automobile ride over town, to City Park, and around Bonnie Drive, she asked the driver to stop several times while she gathered wild flowers from the roadside.

With a girl friend she started from Tucson by air but became ill at El Paso and broke the air trip with a train ride overnight to Big Spring.

Texas Topics

By RAYMOND BROOKS

AUSTIN—The counties have a money raising racket of their own, by which they milk at least $250,000 out of the state treasury, most of it going to the big-city counties, a state official has pointed out.

This is what the counties themselves get, in addition to the fees, running to $8,000 in small counties and $12,000 in the big counties.

Officers' fees in felony cases are collected from the state. But when the fees of an office run above the limit the officer and his deputies are allowed to keep, they revert to the county, and thus, in the large counties, state treasury funds trickle directly into the county coffers.

Investigation of county expenses has shown that out of each $100 paid in as property taxes, $12 goes to pay the cost of carrying some other person's delinquent taxes.

Delinquency in taxpaying is something which usually is not voluntary. The state and the counties and cities, instead of trying to penalize it, ought to try to make conditions such that people can pay taxes.

But these figures show that non-payment of taxes concerns those

But however bad it may be, with officers sworn to perform the duties of government, this is not bad enough to justify farming out tax-collectors to contract taxpayers on the ruthless dispossession of the citizen-home-owner.
