LOVE'S TRINITY

Homer Henderson In the fabric of life, love is the one thread which knits the whole garment together with a beauty which endures all changes in the fashion of human existence. Without love, life would be a shabby collection of rags. So love has about, written about, and thought about subjects of our time. Yet we are seldom led to reflect on the deeper dimensions of love, perhaps because our constant exposure to take it for granted. to take it for granted.
The Greeks had a word for words which pointed to the three basic kinds of love. First, EROS was sexual love, a love which by itself found its highest expression in self-satisfaction. From the Greek word, we have the English essentially egocentrir, seeking of self-fulfillment and selfenhancement. EROS in the most raw and isolated form is exemplified in the relationship of prostitution. EROS forms of love is exemplified in the relationship of marriage.
