Looking at WASHINGTON

McGovern In N.Y.-
California-
Veep Questions-
Eagleton-

Washington, D.C.--Senator George McGovern, who must carry New York and California to win, is having trouble raising money in New York, even though Sargent Shriver's addition to the ticket will help some in that state.

In his recent meeting with rich Jews in metropolitan New York (2,000,000 live there) McGovern found many deeply suspicious of his neo-isolationism and come-home America policy.

McGovern's New York visit was therefore disturbing to some of his supporters, who know large sums of money are needed from wealthy Jewish Democrats there, and also that a loss of much of the normally Democratic Jewish vote could push that state into the Nixon column in November.

Meanwhile, in California where McGovern is favored, Republicans are far from conceding. Instead, President Nixon himself strongly favors a massive effort in his home state, which he carried narrowly in 1968.

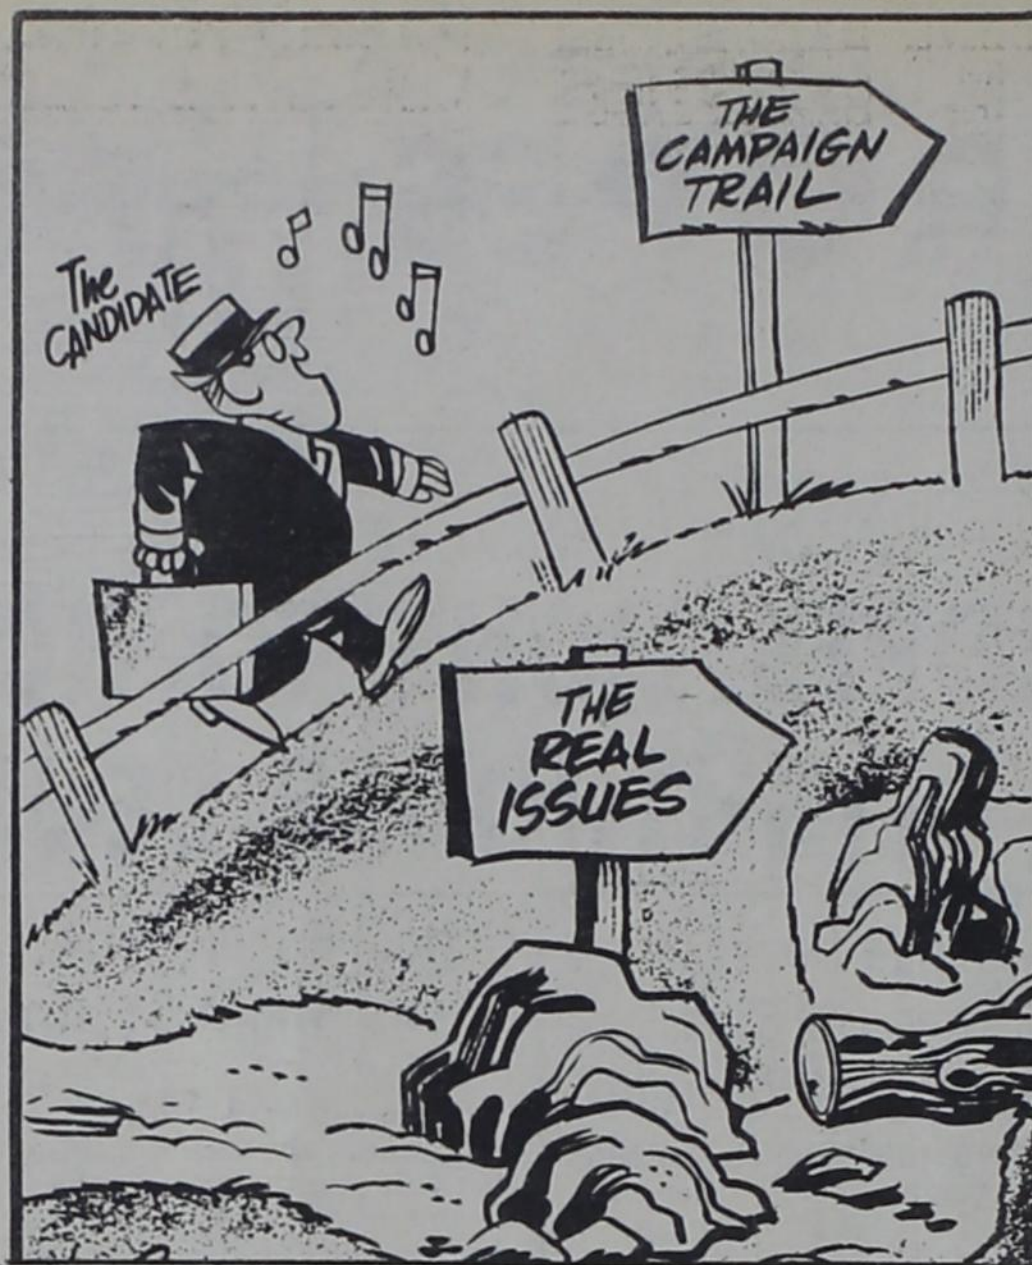

Repercussions from the dumping of Senator Tom Eagleton from the Democratic ticket are still being felt in Washington. There is much sympathy for the Missouri Senator and one result of his removal is growing sentiment to have the party convention --not the top nominee--pick the Vice Presidential candidate in the future.

This, it is argued, would be a more democratic process. Eagleton, incidentally, has won the admiration of many in the national capital for a sporting acceptance of his fate. McGovern is still not forgiven, however, by some Eagleton backers, might lose Missouri as a result.

Experts estimate there are 20,000,000 voters who have undergone some form of psychiatric treatment. Millions are now completely cured.

How many of these voters resent McGovern's action in removing Eagleton? The answer to that question is one strategists in both parties would like very much to know.

'AND I'LL TAKE THE HIGH ROAD'

Labor Day

The first man to suggest a day be set aside in honor of labor—the working man and the spirit of industry in the nation—was probably Peter McGuire. He was President of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America in 1882 when his suggestion was adopted by the Central Labor Union in New York.

The first Labor Day, then, was observed in 1882. In 1884 the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions, which later became the American Federation of Labor, adopted the suggestion and states (Oregon was the first) began to declare the first Monday in September a holiday. McGuire had chosen September because it was about midway between July 4th and Thanksgiving.

By 1894, when Congress declared the day a holiday in all federal offices and territories, some thirty states had acted to make Labor Day a legal holiday. After Oregon, Colorado, Massachusetts, New Jersey and New York were the next to declare the holiday.

One good feature of Labor Day, the traditional last weekend of summer in many areas, is that it always falls on a Monday, thus creating a long weekend.

This year Labor Day is on the 4th. As on other holidays, there will be many accidents; in observing it this year take care to see that you live to observe other Labor Days.

Prolonged Death

A growing question, especially among the elderly, is to what extent medical science's new wonder machines and wonder drugs should be used to prolong life—when death is certain.

The Senate Special Committee on Aging recently heard a Duke University assistant professor, Dr. William Poe, testify that prolonging life and relieving suffering often become confused with the result that only the act of dying is prolonged and suffering actually increased.

And yet who is to decide such a question? The patient usually can't. That means either relatives or doctors are usually faced with this dilemma. Where enormous expenses and limited means are involved, and the condition is hopeless, how many infusions, transfusions, emergency machines, special teams of doctors, etc., are to be utilized? The question seems certain to become a growing one in the years ahead for many Americans as medical science marches on.

Our Young

It's no exaggeration to say that the future of the nation is in the hands of today's young. Even though in recent years way-out and weirdo types have suckered television and other newsmen in obtaining disproportionate publicity, the fact is that most of today's younger generation are decent, honest, ambitious youngsters.

More than 50,000 of our young men and women are currently working voluntarily in day care centers. At schools and colleges across the country the vast majority of students begin this 1972-73 school year earnestly seeking an education, deploring disruptive behavior of extremists and militants in recent years.

At some (such as Princeton) students have rediscovered patriotism and voted to bring R.O.T.C. units back to the campus. A recent survey found most youngsters today desire a home, marriage, a good job and savings.

It's gratifying to see a trend away from militancy, extremism, immaturity and self-indulgence. This reflects the common sense of today's youth, who can and will make this a better nation.

Apollo 17

The Apollo 17 spacecraft is now less than 100 days from lift-off at Cape Kennedy. December 6th is launch day.

Apollo 17, the sixth projected moon landing, like Apollo 16 before it, is probably unnecessary. And it is to be the last of this country's moon spectacles for many years.

The Apollo program in general, however, has been an outstanding scientific and technical success. Though publicity, hero-making and too much cheap commercialism have marred the Apollo image, the world will always record the success of this American project as one of the great explorations and accomplishments in the history of our civilization.

Bremer & TV

The more one reads from the publicized diary of Arthur Bremer the more he sounds like a product of U.S. commercial television's shock and violence fare.

The 21-year-old, judged sane by the court which tried him for shooting Alabama Governor George Wallace, was out to kill to make a name for himself!

He first sought to kill President Nixon, then thought of killing secret service men. He wrote in his diary that he had to kill someone and wanted to make it glamorous!

In short, Bremer sounds very much like so many unreal, sadist killers of U.S. commercial television, who take it so lightly. At 21, he is of the first television generation.

Experts having often testified before Congress that excessive violence, sadism and shock on television comprise one of the causes of today's rising crime rate among impressionable youngsters. The Bremer case should prod Congress and the overly-timid Federal Communications Commission to insist U.S. commercial television finally be cleaned up.

Father Of 80

Cyril Chapman, of Wellington, New Zealand, recently became the father of his 80th child, according to news reports. It is only the 16th for his second wife!

The wire service report on the birth didn't offer a box score for his first wife or anyone else. But it did note that Mr. Chapman supplements his state pension by catching fish and growing vegetables.

One must assume he is quite a fisherman and quite a whiz in the vegetable garden, among other places.

$200,000 FOR NIXON

The Committee to Re-elect President Nixon has reported a $200,000 campaign contribution from Mr. and Mrs. Foster McGaw of Evanston, Illinois. McGaw, 75, said he made the contribution to Nixon's campaign because he sought "good government for the country."

The Last Battle

What was the costliest battle of World War II for U.S. forces? The Battle of the Bulge? Pearl Harbor? Midway? The answer is none of these, but the Battle of Okinawa.

The looming Japanese surrender anniversary of September 2nd and the end of actual fighting in August of the same year (1945) bring to mind the close of the war in the Pacific and the last and most costly battle of the war for U.S. forces that summer.

That battle began on April 1st when the first of eight divisions of troops began landing, against no opposition, on the 75-mile-long island. What at first seemed easy turned into grim surprise; the enemy was underground and waiting, in well prepared concrete bunkers and defensive positions.

Before the fighting ended months later the Army and Marines had lost over 7,500 dead and missing, over 31,000 wounded and suffered non-battle casualties of 26,211. U.S. Navy losses had been by far the highest of any battle—almost 5,000 dead, a similar number wounded, 36 ships sunk and 368 damaged!

Japanese losses were even more staggering. The U.S. war machine had wiped out 110,000 soldiers, 7,800 aircraft (mostly suicides) and sixteen warships. It was the last battle of the war and the bloodiest. But because it came so late, when the outcome of the war was no longer in doubt, less interest has been attached to it than to some earlier battles. Yet its outcome was a major factor in convincing many in Japan that the struggle was hopeless. The atomic bomb made that fate even more obvious.

The Wankel

From Detroit come hints that the conventional piston engine, the automotive standard of the world for half a century, may be enjoying its last few years as such.

A new, rotary engine, using fewer parts and running cooler, is now said to figure positively in the future of both General Motors and Ford. The first of these rotary-engine cars is expected to be offered the public no later than 1975.

Meanwhile, the Japanese are enjoying considerable success with their rotary engine Mazda—the world over. And Mazda's producers have recently made optimistic statements about meeting U.S. pollution standards for exhaust emissions, in contrast to contentions of U.S. makers that these standards are impossible to meet.

GM and Ford rotary-engine projects are top secret at the moment but one official was recently quoted as saying the new U.S. rotary-engine automobile his company would offer would be far superior to those now on the market. Chances seem good, then, that two years hence American makers will be introducing rotary-engine automobiles.

These engines are cheaper to produce; they are about half the size of piston engines and contain fewer moving parts. They should enable manufacturers to bring the cost of automobiles down when they enter into mass production—good news for buyers who have seen costs rise steadily for almost forty years.

FAMILY POT LUCK

If making sandwiches every morning is an unwelcome chore, prepare them in bunches, at your leisure, and then freeze them until they are needed. Sandwiches that freeze well are ground or sliced roast beef, lamb, pork loin, ham or veal; sliced loaf and sliced tongue.

Most meat sandwiches are improved with addition of a slice of cheese and a touch of mustard. Good idea, too, as cheese is a nutritious, high protein food.

Serve your family the foods that please — but remember that foods build and repair tissues, regulate body processes and supply energy. Substances found in foods that perform these three tasks are proteins, minerals, vitamins, fats, carbohydrates and water.

"The day will come when we'll see women serving on warships."

I REMEMBER

Often, when driving along a modern interstate highway which carries traffic smoothly at nearly 70 miles per hour, I recall the transportation problems of the traveling salesman at the turn of the century.

I remember back to the days when the train was the most reliable and when the horse was a necessity to reach many places that were not fortunate enough to be served by rail.

And, then, of course, the horseless carriage came along. At first, it was not the most dependable method of travel and many a stalled motorist heard the message, "Get a horse!" Roads weren't so good in most areas of the country and muck and mud took a toll almost as heavy as mechanical deficiencies.

Today, we consider it nothing to travel several hundred miles a day on a modern highway. We have always been a nation on the move, but we are now moving faster, going further, with an exception or two. Traffic is so congested in some of our major cities that a man on a horse could get from one spot to another sooner than if he drove the same route in an automobile.

LOUISA'S LETTER

Dear Louisa,

My sister married a very nice guy about a year ago. Now they are separated because she said that her husband's aunt poisoned her. She also said that her husband's family all treated her bad. My sister has a little boy about 10 months old. Both her and her husband love their baby son.

What I want to know is this: You see I go with my sister's husband's brother. He and I have been going together since December 1969. We love each other very much. But now its hard for us to be with each other because of his family and my family. But it's mostly my mother. She thinks just because of my sister and husband, that she doesn't want me to be with my boyfriend. But we love each other and we've talked about this. Do you think my mother should stop me from seeing my boyfriend? And why?

My mother and father used to like my boyfriend but now they don't, and I don't believe my sister.

Confused--Virginia

Answer:

It is hard to answer your questions without knowing more about the circumstances. Did your sister live with her husband's people? If so, that is usually a hard situation when one is expecting a baby. Why does she think the aunt tried to poison her? Does she have any proof?

If she and her husband are still in love and both of them love the baby, it would pay them to live by themselves.

As far as you and your boyfriend are concerned there is no reason why your family should dislike him is he hasn't changed towards them. It may be that your parents are afraid that you may marry this boy and go through the same mistreatment which they think was given to their other daughter.

I believe in families being loyal to each other but that doesn't mean that they should dislike people who have been in arguments with other members of the family. Not all people in a family have the same ideals or characters, or behave in the same way.

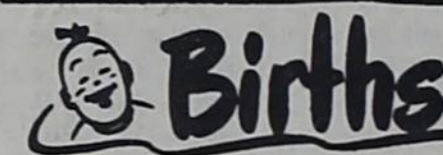

Louisa
