

DARLING FOOL

CHAPTER XXXVI
Charles' thick lips awaited Monnie at the hotel in London. Curious how her heart leaped at the sight of it. It must be, she told herself, that she expected from Charles some news of Dan. Yes, that was the reason. The square white envelope, the bold, irregular black handwriting were eloquent of Charles' personality. The letter, too, was filled with characteristic phrases.

Monnie tucked Charles' letter in the bottom of her overnight bag among her creams and brushes. He'd said he missed her—but he hadn't said a word about Dan. Gossip about home, about Kay and her mother and the boys. The Watermans had given a party on the 17th and Kay had looked lovely in some yellow thing. Kay and Charles! Well, that would be nice, too. Why did her heart suffer that queer little pang at the thought? It was Dan whom Monnie wanted—Dan whom she loved! Pride was all very well. It sustained you sometimes but not when you were aching desperately for news of the loved one. Why hadn't Charles mentioned Dan? Probably he, like everyone else, thought Monnie had gone away to forget about Dan. Well, everyone was right—only the plan didn't work as well as she'd hoped it would.

These days. Oh, she knew he was spoiled—she could see that but it didn't matter. He was inclined to pout quite like a big baby, at the first hint of not getting his own way. "Women have spoiled me, Monnie," he had told her, half laughing, the night before as they danced. "You're the first one who ever kept me from having my own way in all things." That was funny, Monnie thought—funny that she, a small town girl, should be the one to humble this king of finance. What he had been speaking about in particular was her stubbornness in standing out against him when he'd wanted to buy her that fur wrap yesterday morning. He had come upon her and Miss Anstice, trailing along Bond street looking in this window and that, and had insisted on accompanying them upon the foray to buy the hat.

The mannequin in the fur wrap had strolled past them at Mackenzie's bidding. Monnie had crowded softly at sight of the wrap—deep, soft fur, cuddling the thin cheeks of the blond English girl who wore it. "Splendid for foggy weather," Mackenzie had asked with a twinkle. "Oh, excellent for that, sir," the saleswoman had chirped, and the mannequin had given Monnie an envious sidelong glance. "Try it on, Monnie," the man had urged under Miss Anstice's clear, critical gaze. "Nonesense!" She had been very sturdy about it. "No use making myself unhappy. I should be remembering always how it felt." He had smiled again at that. "But I'd like you to have it. Little remembrance of this trip," Monnie had not needed to look at Miss Anstice to know that the prim little lips were pressed together even more primly. Her own conscience had risen in protest. "Sorry. I couldn't possibly—"

Afterward Miss Anstice had been downright strange about it. She had said in a dimly regretful tone, "What a pity you couldn't have accepted it from him, Monnie." At the girl's exclamation of surprise she had hastened to add, "Naturally I know you couldn't. But, after all, he's so nice, takes such an interest—and you would have looked so lovely in that. Quite dazedly, wouldn't you?" Monnie gave the older woman a huge, "Miss Corey, I'm surprised at you!" "I know. I'm surprised at myself. But I guess I've got my values a bit mixed on this trip. I'm getting soft with so much luxury." Tonight Monnie was dining with Mackenzie alone. Miss An-lighted table with an obsequious pair of waiters hovering in attendance, she returned his smile with one of honest liking. How nice this man had been to her! Last night at the party Corinth Faneway had said to her with a curious high laugh, "Artie's taken a great fancy to you. Make the most of it." And when Monnie had looked at her curiously the other girl had cried, gratingly, "Oh, don't be a little fool. He's all right, Artie is." It must be true—the gossip she'd hear—that Corinth and Mackenzie had been in love with each other although he was almost twice her age. But she was married to someone else now. It didn't seem to matter. "If I'd ever cared for anyone like that," thought Monnie, "I should hate the thought of giving him up to someone else."

Mrs. Housewife:

Your Husband Married You "for Better Or For Worse"

Of course he knows how lovely you are . . . how you are skimping here and there to make both ends meet and have a little for that savings account . . . but it really is hard to tell whether or not you are "better or worse" than you really could be. Are you sure just what that normally efficient self of yours really could be? Unless you are a consistent and diligent reader of the advertisements that appear in The Big Spring Daily Herald you are really overlooking a good bet in becoming one of the "better housewives". Of course, the intelligent purchasing of supplies for your family and household is only one of the things that add to your true worth to your family . . . but it is really one of the biggest and most important of the many.

Approximately 75 per cent of the housewives in Big Spring who have been married three or more years read and study The Daily Herald advertisements. They save time, money and energy in doing their shopping. In nine cases out of ten they make up their shopping list before leaving home. They buy their groceries, wearing apparel, household needs and little personal luxuries from the advertising columns of The Herald. If you are one of the 25 per cent who haven't yet learned this simple lesson in thrift we urge you to try it for just two weeks . . . then compare the quality merchandise you have bought and the money you have saved with the two weeks shopping you did before starting to read Herald advertisements!

"The Power Of Music" Program Repeated For Women's Societies

"The Power of Music," a musical reading of a form very popular with Big Spring women at the present time, was given for the second time Monday afternoon by Misses J. H. Kirkpatrick, M. N. Mieser, and Bob Galbraith on the First Methodist W. M. S. program. Mrs. Fox Stripling offered the devotional. This reading shows the influence of music on a man's life. The introduction was given with the music of "Star Spangled Banner,"

"Melody in F," and "Dixie." The story starts with the mother singing "Rock-a-Bye." Then the boy starts to Sunday School and learns "Jesus Wants Me For a Sunbeam." "School Days" marks the beginning of his school life. When he reaches college age, the "Stein Song" gives his mother occasion to tell him of "Home Sweet Home" and to beware of the "Sleepy Time Gal." He enters college to the tunes of "Boola-Boo-

It's really on account of you. For 'Toasting' plays a bigger part than you might think in making Luckies so mild and fragrant and pure. Remember, your cigarette comes in rather close personal contact with you, and if it weren't for 'Toasting's' purifying heat, even Lucky Strike's choice tobaccos could scarcely be as mild, so pure. So you see what a big part 'Toasting' has in making 'Luckies Please!' because 'It's toasted.'"
