The Air Force has been able to consistently reduce its major aircraft accident rate through expeditious work of aircraft accident investigation officers who arrive at the scene of accidents as rapidly as possibe. Their on-the-scene investigation and subsequent work by appointed investigation boards are essential to good accident prevention. The remaining parts and pieces in a major accident hold the key to their success.

Reese officials said they feel sure the public will cooperate once it understands the facts and the serious consequences of removing parts for souvenirs or for other reasons.
