CAN'T USE THEM

The proposal of a New York bank er to send a colony of German Jews who are refugees from Hitler to West Texas farms for settlement, is a distinguished example of the superlative ignorance of some people who have lived long enough to know a lot, but probably know a lot of things that are not so. There are more people in West the firms are engaged in. Texas today than are needed to operate the farms here. Hundreds are leaving the farms every year. There are more acres in cultivation than are needed to produce the farm commodities. Hundreds of thousands of acres are kept out of production every year.

We have a proper sympathy for the persecuted Jews or anybody else who is persecuted, but to bring them here to aggravate the already pressing problems of unemployment and overproduction would not be less than criminal. There are countries where such colonies may be needed and are desired, but Texas has not asked for them and can't use them. True, there is land for sale here, as there is in any state, but to break down the immigration bars for such a venture is a thing we think beyond the wildest nightmare of the most thoughtless legislator, and utterly unthinkable to Amateur Program the worthy patriots who make up the

Truck Load Limit Vital Problem Says Slatonites

While petitions urging that the 7,-000 pound weight limit on trucks be maintained are receiving a large number of signatures of Slaton citizens, four heads of business are among those locally who express strong opposition to any increase in the limit. Their statements of opinion come as first hearing on another bill to increase load limit is due to come up in the legislature at Austin February 7. To Fred Schmidt, grocer and president of the board of city development, opposition to any increase is based on several factors. He believes trucks are already a danger on th highways; that they are not paying their proportionate share for use of these highways; and that railroads are being discriminated against unfairly by the failure of the state to regulate trucking. "If I were convinced that the railroads were no longer of any use to us, I'd say let's abandon them and let trucks take over transportation," he says. "But I am certainly not convinced that this is true. Railroads are a very important factor in transportation, and in time of national crisis we would be almost completely dependent on them. If railroads are required to maintain their own rights of way, keep them in safe order and pay taxes on all their property, let's see that trucks furnish their rights of way, and leave the highways free for lighter vehicles. Highways will not be able to stand up under the heavy loads a greater weight limit would put on them. Trucking laws as they now stand ought to be more rigidly enforced-the weight limit maintained and 40-hour stretches of driving on the part of truckers stopped. That in itself is a danger." Fagan Genn, manager of Rockwell Bros. & Co., B. B. Castleberry of Higginbotham-Bartlett, and C. A. Porter of Plains Lumber company are equally strong in their opposition to raising the load limits. They place safety on the highways as one of their most important reasons, and damage that would result to the business of smaller towns as another. Slaton has a number of industries that would suffcr seriously with an increase in truck load limits, and an immediate decline in payroll, employment and allied business would be felt, they believe.

CITRUS FRUITS PLENTIFUL

Farm economists have been telling us that this winter is the time to stock up on canned goods. Also we see by the fine 60-page Special Citrus Fiesta Edition of the Mission Times that 45 per cent of the greatest crop of citrus fruit ever produced has been processed. That means that most of the forty-five per cent has been canned as grape-fruit juice. Those folks down there are rendering a service to the consuming public when they go on producing the appetizing, vitaminladen citrus fruits in such quantities that they become common-place on the tables of America. Theory of Spending Ourselves Out Of Depression Seen Unwise Course been my conviction that the American people will find a sound answer to every national problem, if they are given the facts and the time to figure out what those facts mean. They may be swayed temporarily; they may be led or herded or threat-ened and these conditions may put them in a wrong spot temporarily, but I repeat that if they are given time, the national conclusion, the collective thinking, will be along sound lines.

Evidence in Congress of Definite Determinaton to Cut Down on Appropriations; Sound Sense of American People Always Finds Answer to National Problems.

Bruckart's Washington Digest

They are demonstrating these things as a fact, again. There is no doubt about it. For five or six years, a considerable majority of the nation's citizenry was following the theory of spending ourselves out of the depression. It was an un-sound course, obviously, but money was made to do a lot of talking-as money in billions of dollars will talk. Lately, however, hardy American thinking has been carrying the majority back to normal understanding, and the influence of spending by the federal government is sagging, distinctly.

Notwithstanding the statements, frequently heard from Republican sources, that "you can't beat Santa Claus," or the variation that "you can't beat $4,000,000,000," there is plenty of evidence to show that there is quite a definite determination to quit that sort of thing. That is, there is a determination in most places outside of the so-called inner circle of New Dealers. Especially is this true in the halls of congress where, unless there is an earthquake, many important steps will be taken by senators and representatives in the direction of sounder government finance. The old and familiar American traits of initiative, of saving, of living within one's income, are coming to the surface very rapidly and the restoration of these traits to places of respectability in American life is being reflected on capitol hill in Washington.

WASHINGTON. - It always has | curtailment of federal waste has begun; that the national belt is going to be pulled tighter by a couple of notches and that, sooner or later, even the beneficiaries of the federal cash will note the stigma and slacken their demands.

> One of the leaders in this direction has been Sen. Harry Byrd, the Virginia Democrat, who is just as hard boiled in preserving a sound national government as his senior, the redoubtable Carter Glass. Through thick and thin, Senator Byrd has been attacking the spending policies, calling attention to the dangers of an increasing national debt and the certainty that the country as a whole must bear the burden of added taxation. He did this the while administration sharpshooters were firing one broadside after another at his head or hide.

The other night, Senator Byrd got on the radio and told the country again what was happening. He had some new facts and figures about the situation. The Virginian asked some rather pertinent questions, too, about the situation in England. He pointed out that England has not been running deficit after deficit and that, as a matter of cold fact, while the United States was adding more than $21,000,000,000 to its national debt, England was balancing its budget and making some headway in reducing its national debt.

States Take Heed and Start Cutting Expenses

Due largely, the senator thought, to the fact that England had tried to live within its income as an individual would do, that nation had a national income in 1937 that was 118 per cent of its income in 1929. Which is to say that it was more prosperous than in 1929. Senator Byrd pointed out that this had happened while our government was running from a billion or so to five or six billions into debt each year. ie suggested, moreover, that if the

Varieties of Shellfish

Clams, oysters, shrimp and scalops differ somewhat from other forms of seafood, chiefly in that they contain some carbohydrates. They have very little fat. Oysters are rich in iodine and they might be compared to the glandular organs, such as liver and kidney, as a source of three vitamins, A, B and G.

Place of Fish in the Diet

The most important contribution of all forms of fish is their proteins, which as we have seen may be used interchangeably with those of beef, pork, lamb, veal and poultry. The iodine of seafoods and shellfish is also extremely important, and in some varieties, the content of vitamins A and D. Opposition to Philosophy Of Spending Breaks Loose

It will be recalled how the opponents of President Roosevelt's philosophy of spending showed their mettle in the house of representatives when that body voted to cut $150,000,000 off of the deficiency relief appropriation. Mr. Roosevelt asked for $875,000,000. The cut was accomplished despite some hairraising stories from official sources in the administration that elimination of any of the requested funds would mean suffering, maybe starvation, maybe quick death, for many thousands of persons.

Well, the house members (or a majority of them) did not believe those stories, and thus they made a start at cutting governmental spending. They gave an indication at the same time that there must be a general revision of the federal government's machinery for relief of the unemployed. During the debate and in the corridors, one heard frequent expressions that congress had appropriated last year the funds the administration thought necessary to maintain relief until the end of next June. But profligate spending had used up the money and the professional relievers had returned for more. Some of the debate was quite acrimonious and various charges were hurled that the relief officials had tried again to "buy" the election, that being why the funds ran short.

Immediately after the house was through with the relief bill, the opponents of spending in the senate started after the appropriation. There were many in that body who wanted to appropriate only for two months, proposing that in the meantime there should be a brand new relief setup devised. But the majority sentiment was swayed by the general argument that, whatever the shortcomings of the Harry Hopkins relief methods, poor people years, this policy has resulted in should not be made the goats; it was no fault of the unemployed who needed help that Mr. Hopkins, now the secretary of commerce, had made a mess of the relief program.

United States had done as well this country's national income would now be $88,000,000,000 instead of the $60,-000,000,000 which was estimated for 1938. The thought was then advanced that England had not tried to "harry and frighten business" which was employing people who wanted work, not charity. There are other things happening besides the Byrd attacks and the congressional action on relief appropriations to indicate the growing strength of those who believe spending borrowed money has been, and is, unwise. Word has come through to Washington of the action of several governors who are insisting that their states avoid getting into the hole. Governor Cochran of Nebraska, a Democrat, and Governor Bricker of Ohio, a Republican, each has put their respective state legislatures on notice that expenditures are to be pared to the bone. There are others who could be named, but from the information we have here in Washington, Governors Cochran and Bricker are the outstanding examples.

It might be said that these refer only to states and not to national policies. Very well. No state executive could get away with such a program unless he had the backing of a majority of his own people. If they believe that way about state affairs, there is no reason to think they will take a contrary view concerning the national treasury and funds which it must borrow to spend.

'Pump Priming' Gifts to States Force Them to Borrow

Further, nearly all of the federal appropriations for "pump priming," when granted to states or lesser jurisdictions, are offered on condition that the state, or city or county, must put up an equal amount. In hundreds of cases in the last six states or lesser subdivisions of government being forced to borrow on its own bonds in order to get hold of the federal cash. The result: new debt. It becomes clear, therefore, that if the state executives insist on reduced expenditures, they are unlikely to accept these federal gifts because of the probable added debt burden.

Another thing likely to happen in some of the states is added taxes. The state legislatures are due for an awakening as to the actual condition of their state finances. Some may dodge it this year, but facts will have to be faced. When new taxes come, what a howl there will be! That howl will be heard in congress, too, both concerning state and county and city taxes on the one hand and national taxes on the other hand. It appears to me that taxes will prove to be the best antidote for the poison of borrowing to spend that can be found.

Bruckart's Washington Digest E CLEAR A A CONTRACTOR Theory of Spending Ourselves Out Of Depression Seen Unwise Course

Evidence in Congress of Definite Determinaton to Cut Down on Appropriations; Sound Sense of American People Always Finds Answer to National Problems.

been my conviction that the American people will find a sound answer to every national problem, if they are given the facts and the time to figure out what those facts mean. They may be swayed temporarily; they may be led or herded or threatened and these conditions may put them in a wrong spot temporarily, but I repeat that if they are given time, the national conclusion, the collective thinking, will be along sound lines.

They are demonstrating these things as a fact, again. There is no doubt about it. For five or six years, a considerable majority of the nation's citizenry was following the theory of spending ourselves out of the depression. It was an unsound course, obviously, but money was made to do a lot of talking-as money in billions of dollars will talk. Lately, however, hardy American thinking has been carrying the majority back to normal under-standing, and the influence of spending by the federal government is sagging, distinctly.

Notwithstanding the statements, frequently heard from Republican sources, that "you can't beat Santa Claus," or the variation that "you can't beat $4,000,000,000," there is plenty of evidence to show that there is quite a definite determination to quit that sort of thing. That is, there is a determination in most places outside of the so-called inner circle of New Dealers. Especially is this true in the halls of congress where, unless there is an earthquake, many important steps will be taken by senators and repre-sentatives in the direction of sounder government finance. The old and familiar American traits of initiative, of saving, of living within one's income, are coming to the surface very rapidly and the restoration of these traits to places of respectability in American life is being re-

WASHINGTON. - It always has | curtailment of federal waste has begun; that the national belt is going to be pulled tighter by a couple of notches and that, sooner or later, even the beneficiaries of the federal cash will note the stigma and slacken their demands.

> One of the leaders in this direction has been Sen. Harry Byrd, the Virginia Democrat, who is just as hard boiled in preserving a sound national government as his senior, the redoubtable Carter Glass. Through thick and thin, Senator Byrd has been attacking the spending policies, calling attention to the dangers of an increasing national debt and the certainty that the country as a whole must bear the burden of added taxation. He did this the while administration sharpshooters were firing one broadside after another at his head or hide.

The other night, Senator Byrd got on the radio and told the country again what was happening. He had some new facts and figures about the situation. The Virginian asked some rather pertinent questions, too, about the situation in England. He pointed out that England has not been running deficit after deficit and that, as a matter of cold fact, while the United States was adding more than $21,000,000,000 to its national debt, England was balancing its budget and making some headway in reducing its national debt.

States Take Heed and

Start Cutting Expenses

Due largely, the senator thought, to the fact that England had tried to live within its income as an individual would do, that nation had a national income in 1937 that was 118 per cent of its income in 1929. Which is to say that it was more prosperous than in 1929. Senator Byrd pointed out that this had hap-pened while our government was running from a billion or so to five or six billions into debt each year. He suggested, moreover, that if the United States had done as well this country's national income would now be $88,000,000,000 instead of the $60,-000,000,000 which was estimated for 1938. The thought was then advanced that England had not tried to "harry and frighten business" which was employing people who wanted work, not charity. There are other things happening besides the Byrd attacks and the congressional action on relief appropriations to indicate the growing strength of those who believe spending borrowed money has been, and is, unwise. Word has come through to Washington of the action of several governors who are insisting that their states avoid getting into the hole. PRESENT-DAY nutritionist might easily quarrel with the A traditional distinction between fish, flesh and fowl. For the flesh of fish, cattle, swine, sheep and poultry is commonly referred to as "meat;" and the nutritive values of all these foods properly may be considered together. Their composition is very similar, consisting principally of protein, water and fat, with the chief variation occurring in the fat content. They also average about one .-

fewer extractives. For this reason, fish is considered less stimulating, and that is also why it is often served with some sort of sauce, or with a lemon garnish to point up the flavor.

The proteins of fish are regarded as equally useful with other forms of meat for helping to build and repair body tissues. Most lean fish are richer in minerals than fatty fish; in this respect, they resemble lean meats.

Salt water fish are notable as a source of iodine, required for the proper functioning of the thyroid gland. It is desirable that this mineral be included in the dietary to help prevent simple goiter.

When using canned salmon and other kinds of fish that have been put into the cans before cooking, it is advisable to conserve the juices which cooked out during the sterilization process, as these contain valuable nutrients.

Varieties of Shellfish

Clams, oysters, shrimp and scallops differ somewhat from other forms of seafood, chiefly in that they contain some carbohydrates. They have very little fat. Oysters are rich in iodine and they might be compared to the glandular organs, such as liver and kidney, as a source of three vitamins, A, B and G.

Place of Fish in the Diet

The most important contribution of all forms of fish is their proteins, which as we have seen may be used interchangeably with those of beef, pork, lamb, veal and poultry. The iodine of sea-foods and shellfish is also extremely important, and in some varieties, the content of vitamins A and D. The more fatty fish, including mackerel, salmon, eels, herring, catfish and shad are comparatively rich in energy values. The fuel value of cod, flounder, perch, smelts and haddock, which are low in fat, and halibut and whitefish which have a moderate amount, may be increased through the use of a rich sauce, or they may be cooked in fat.

Taking into consideration its food values and economy, and when the preserved forms are utilized, its ease of preparation, the homemaker who desires to feed her family well should serve fish or shellfish, in some form, much oftener than once each week!

Opposition to Philosophy Of Spending Breaks Loose

It will be recalled how the oppo-nents of President Roosevelt's philosophy of spending showed their mettle in the house of representatives when that body voted to cut $150,000,000 off of the deficiency relief appropriation. Mr. Roosevelt asked for $875,000,000. The cut was accomplished despite some hairraising stories from official sources in the administration that elimination of any of the requested funds would mean suffering, maybe starvation, maybe quick death, for many thousands of persons.

Well, the house members (or a majority of them) did not believe those stories, and thus they made a start at cutting governmental spending. They gave an indication at the same time that there must be a general revision of the federal government's machinery for relief of the unemployed. During the debate and in the corridors, one heard frequent expressions that congress had appropriated last year the funds the administration thought necessa-ry to maintain relief until the end of next June. But profligate spending had used up the money and the professional relievers had returned for more. Some of the debate was quite acrimonious and various charges were hurled that the relief officials had tried again to "buy" the election, that being why the funds ran short.

Immediately after the house was through with the relief bill, the opponents of spending in the senate started after the appropriation. There were many in that body who wanted to appropriate only for two months, proposing that in the meantime there should be a brand-new relief setup devised. But the majority sentiment was swayed by the general argument that, whatever the shortcomings of the Harry Hopkins relief methods, poor people should not be made the goats; it the secretary of commerce, had made a mess of the relief program.

CHAPTER IX—Continued _23_

The second day after that Hale and Joan and Bert again departed | thing eating her heart out for love in young Kneeland's motor-boat and of you, while you hustled around cruised about till evening. They looking for a poor girl to marry lunched at the camp to which they and support. Well, from what I g to fruit drinks had taken Stuyvesant. The day was a delightful one. Bert was at his quiet best. Joan looked better and and she went on. was in unusually good spirits. As always with her now, good spirits If the man hasn't sense enough or found expression in a steady baiting pep enough to ask the girl he loves of Uncle Casper's new secretary.

"Time is flying," she informed Hale, after luncheon. Bert had tactfully spread himself out for a nap under the pines that formed the back curtain of the picnic ground. Just out of earshot Joan and Hale sat on a rug, side by side, their backs propped against trees. "In another month," Joan went on, "you will be Mr. Stuyvesant's young man, not mine. The reflection makes me desperate. I feel that something your state of mind." "I know only too well what those inquiries will be." Rex groaned. "All right. Speak to me of love. You can sing it if you want to. In fact, I'd rather you sang."

"On the contrary," Joan assured him, "I'm going to be extremely practical. I'm going to put an ab-stract case to you." She closed her eyes as if in deep concentration. "We may have to consider, say, a rich young girl, full of charm of person and character, who has no expensive tastes. Though her income is more than forty thousand a year she never spends more than ten thousand of it. That includes her small share of the running expenses of two houses-a town house and a summer camp."

Hale grasped his opportunity with enthusiasm.

"And I'm going to tell you that she's a shocking case," he broke in severely. "Has she no sense of the responsibilities of wealth? That money wasn't given her to be piled p in banks. She's expected to ge in for charitable works. She's supposed to share with her less fortunate brothers and sisters-" Before his sentence was finished he realized his slip, but it was too late. "That's exactly what she wants to do," Joan interrupted eagerly. "She wants to share it with a less fortunate brother. She knows of a poor little brother that thinks he must moneystruggle along on ten thousand a year. That's what I wanted to talk | hastily. "You couldn't imagine that, to you about. Don't you see that a fortnight ago." with his ten thousand, and her ten thousand, they can get along perfectly? It would be an equal part- this question. When a young man nership. They could-" Rex had found his breath. "I don't know your poor little brother," he said coldly. "But if he's worth his salt he won't want a wife who has to pay half their living expenses. He'll pay them as he goes. I should think he'd go pretty quick," he predicted gloomily, "if he's made fun of twelve hours a day, like a man I know. Speaking of going quickly," he added with I'd enjoy you more. But go on, as animation, "Stuyvesant wants me to long as you like. I can take it." start with him in a week or two. He's got a big new contract. He needs help." Joan nodded thoughtfully. "I know," she admitted. "You're I'll get me to a nunnery, where I getting restless and ready to escape. That's why I want your views men who don't know happiness on these important questions. I hardly dare to ask them. You have such a hunted look in your eyes all the time. Why doesn't she have a closed season on I don't think it will take long-not me till I go back to New York? more than a few years. But-I That would give me a chance to brace up for my new job." "And all the time," Joan went on calmly, "you love that girl to distraction. You know it and she knows it. Was there ever a woman | standing, humor and tolerance, with who didn't know when a man loved her?" she interrupted herself to ask. "One's always reading about them. But do they exist outside of books? I don't think so. However, that's a side issue. What I'm saying, Rex, is that you love that girl to distraction. It's only her money that stands between you two, as novelists would say. Well, why should it? You were mad about her from the first week you met her," she mental processes as if they were written on the wall. "This discourse is very interesting," he admitted. "You ought to give addresses before women's clubs."

"I may, some day. Just now, I'm busy. I'm trying my theories had to content himself with the soon you.'

He knew what this sort of thing had done to the girl. It had made her suspicious and a trifle hard. He knew her opinion of for-tune-hunters. What he did not know, to be, too, Hosanna," she ended could not be sure of, was the nature cheerfully. "You were fussing and of her real feeling for him. How much of her talk was raillery? How much, if any, was sincere? Today, at last, she had jolted him into selfbetrayal. Recalling that look in her eyes, and her final words-for once so serious-he suspected that the self-betrayal was not all on his side. But here, too. he was not sure. She was a good actress.

That night she deliberately avoided him. She dined with Mrs. Nash, and he was almost sure that she had asked for the invitation over the telephone. She took Bert with her as escort through the woods. Hale ciety of Miss Hosanna, who was also unusually silent, and of Mrs. Spencer Forbes, who earned his wordless gratitude by talking steadily.

But I'm restless and uneasy. I miss the stuff, as you call it, as a confirmed smoker misses his tobacco. I begin to think that I'm really unpreaching to me all last year. This year you haven't preached; but it must be a comfort to you to know I'm a reformed character. For I shan't go back to it. There's one lesson, and only one, so far as I know, that I've learned in my halfcentury of living. I make more mistakes than most people. But at least I've learned not to make the same mistake twice."

Hale glanced at Miss Hosanna. He expected some comment on this, some evidence of relief. None came. Miss Hosanna, busy with the knitting that occupied her spare hours, neither spoke nor raised her eyes from her work. He was not even sure that she had heard. Certainly she had not been listening to Ruth's previous monologue. She had worn all evening the effect of one so deeply withdrawn into her own subconsciousness that she heard or saw little around her. He became aware that Mrs. Spencer Forbes was looking at her, too. She was looking with what, in anyone else, might have seemed anxiety. But that must be a mistake. Mrs. Spencer Forbes was never anxious about anyone.

Hale went for a lonely walk along the beach. It was a beautiful night. The moonlight reminded him that he had been at Halcyon Camp almost two months. There had been moonlight on the night of his arrival. He remembered the glory of the moon's path across the sea. Well, he had done something in that time. Mentally he put his achievements in the order of their importance. He had fallen in love. He must admit that now. He had rid the Camp of Craig. He had also got Ainsworth out of it. Indirectly, he had probably saved Mrs. Spencer Forbes from becoming a heroin ad-

SAFETY TALKS

Crossing the Road

HERE'S the modern counterpart of the ancient chicken poser:

Why does a pedestrian cross the road-at the wrong places and without looking?

That's what the National Safety council is trying to find out after an examination of its records which proved that at least a third of the pedestrians killed in rural areas and 40 per cent of those killed in cities were crossing at places other than intersections.

In 1937, the loss of life from these classifications mounted over the 5,600 mark.

Stuyvesant would be glad to have him start in. He had said as much. Yes, his usefulness here was over. Or was it? The face of Joan swung before him, and he experienced a complete mental face-about. He couldn't leave Joan at Halcyon Camp. He didn't know why, but he couldn't. His reasons were so slight, so incredible, that he would not dwell on them. He would have been humiliated to have anyone, even Stuyvesant, know that he had sent that milk to New York for analysis. He was ashamed of having done it. Tribute To Mrs. Bailey

, was the dearest friend I ever had, nd n'w she's gone away; It wouldn't be so bad for a day or two, But I know she's gone to stay.

Why couldn't she take a pal along As she crossed on the rolling tide? I'd gladly give what I have on earth Just to be there by her side.

Don't mean so much to you, But the golden deeds she did for me Number many, not a few.

She shared with me her troubles, Her joys and sorrows, too; I always tried to listen, No matter what we had to do.

I loved her, Oh, so very much! And now she's gone away; But we'll meet again in judgment On that grand and glorious day.

I am sure that God in Heaven Texas' League of Municipalities, Will make the pathway clear And once again I'll meet her, The friend I love so dear.

more than 58 million dollars, due to poultry diseases. A large share of this staggering figure is represented by the death loss of baby chicks. Point 1. Give the chicks reliable medi the best ways of checking and preventing bowel troubles is by giving FOR RENT: Bedroom with connect- the chicks reliable medical tablets in their drinking water. One which is known to go to all parts of the chicks' intestines is recommended. Such a precaution will help to keep the chicks' systems clear of infection and help to Luild up strength, vitality, and resistance to sickness.

Point 2. Spray the chicks regularly with a reliable respiratory antiseptic. In order to lessen the danger or respiratory troubles (colds, gasping, and the various forms of pneumonia), chicks should be sprayed every night and at intervals during the day with a safe, effective antiseptic-one that provides soothing, medicated vapors for the chicks to inhale. This will help to prevent infection in the chicks' breathing organs and, thereby, aid in keeping these organs healthy. If inflammation or congestion is present, it will help to bring quick relief and clear up the trouble.

Point 3. Start the chicks on an early werm-control program. Since worms do the greatest damage while chicks are young, early worm control is very important. In order to offset the poisons produced throughout the grow ing period of the birds. Exceptionally satisfactory results have been obtained by giving a treatment that not only checks infectation, but also furnishes tonic and conditioning ingredients.
