A 10 años del 11Sep, Seguridad Nacional tiene trabajo pendiente

Casi diez años después de los ataques terroristas del 11 de septiembre del 2001, el

Nacional y Asuntos del Gobierno, concluyó que, desde que dicho departamento fue organizado en el 2003, completó aproximadamente la mitad de las 1.500 recomendaciones formuladas por los auditores federales.

Pero todavía quedan resquicios, incluso la falta de un sistema biométrico de alta calidad y una mejor tecnología de detección de explosivos para el equipaje registrado en los aeropuertos.

"La conclusión de nuestro informe es que se han logrado muchos progresos desde el 11 de septiembre, pero todavía queda trabajo por hacer para cerrar huecos y debilidades que permitan al Departamento concretar todo su potencial", dijo el contralor general Gene las compras y el perfeccionamiento de las pruebas tecnológicas y programas de información de todas las 22 agencias del Departamento.

Jane Holl Lute, segunda en jerarquía en el Departamento de Seguridad Nacional, coincidió en que todavía quedan trabajos por hacer pero agregó que su agencia ha mejorado la infraestructura cibernetica, la revisión de pasajeros en los aeropuertos y la seguridad en la frontera con México, entre otras cadas.

"Podemos detectar las amenazas más pronto, con mejor información, y hacer ajustes más rápidamente", afirmó. "Hoy sabemos más acerca de los que quieren entrar en nuestro país, qué amenazas pueden representar y qué se necesita para impedir que los problemas potenciales lleguen a nuestras costas".

Lute agregó que el Departamento está mejorando la elección de tecnologías. Los programas que no han dado resultado, como el programa SBInet de 1.000 millones de dólares destinado a crear una cerca virtual en la frontera con México, se han cancelado.

Lute y Dodaro dijeron que el Departamento trabaja para solucionar los problemas restantes.

En una conferencia en Washington horas antes, la secretaria de Seguridad Nacional Janet Napolitano dijo que hace diez años, la policía y la comunidad de inteligencia estaban advertidos sobre amenazas potenciales a la seguridad nacional pero que no existía un sistema para anticipar y prevenir amenazas y proteger al país como lo actualidad.

gobierno de Estados Unidos ha mejorado su seguridad nacional, pero todavía carece de un sistema para saber quién sale del país ni cuál es el contenido de la mayor parte del equipaje documentado en sus aeropuertos.

Randolph quickly realized there

While "La Migra" agents are often demonized as heartless or unfeeling, in a series of interviews with HuffPost Latino Voices, a more diverse picture of their ranks emerges.

"I was twenty-two years old, and I have never had more fun in my life," said Kent Lundgren, Chairman of the National Association of Former Border Patrol Officers. Lundgren loved the years he spent patrolling the El Paso border. "You think of yourself as a man-tracker, a man-catcher. And you try not to let it go to your head, but that's how young men think. And then you grow up, and you realize it's serious stuff," he said in a phone interview with the Huffington Post.

If Lundgren was born in Mexico, he'd try to cross the border illegally, he said. He believes the vast majority of the immigrants who cross our borders are good and hard-working people. He has a profound sympathy for the men and women he once chased, but simultaneously a determination to keep them out of his country.

Lundgren believes illegal immigration is not in the national interest, and spends his days of retirement pushing for harsher enforcement policies—such as the strengthening of pending E-Verify legislation.

Lundgren's case exemplifies a tension inherent to the experience of many border patrol agents. On a day-to-day basis, patrol agents get to know those they chase, learn their language and often come to sympathize with their plight.

CHANGE OF HEART

Steve Cribby, a spokesperson for the U.S. Customs and Border Protection agency, told HuffPost that having compassion, that is part of the skill set necessary to being a good border patrol agent.

For certain agents, having compassion has meant having a change of heart. John Randolph became a border patrol agent when he was 27 because the job paid well and allowed him to speak Spanish. But Randolph's experience as a border patrol agent led him to become an immigrant rights activist. He wrote about his change of heart in a blog post for The Huffington Post last week.

In my 26 years as a U.S. Border Patrol/ICE Agent, I caught many people. At the time, common sense told me that the vast majority of the people I caught were good, hardworking people. I began to wonder why immigrants had to be chased like animals, and why I was being paid to chase them.

Randolph quickly realized there were big problems with his position.

"It was a hard job, because I knew I was hurting people," he said. Interacting every day with border-crossers made him question the entire premise of the immigration system. "It just didn't make any sense to me why we'd be punishing people who were here to pick out vegetables," he said.

Randolph describes most of his fellow agents as "compassionate people" who felt bad for those they were chasing. He says a few agents had "power trip stuff with racism mixed in," but the vast majority got into their line of work because they wanted a secure job. "We'd go do it for the whole day and then go home and try to forget about it," he said.

Randolph, now retired, spends his days playing music and speaking out against the government he believes are responsible for a flawed immigration system. By his estimate, he spends nearly four hours every day reading immigration news. "It's taken me a long time to put my finger on it. But, I'm retired now, and I've had time to investigate it further to see why our system is fundamentally broken," Randolph said.

Randolph's long-time friend and fellow retired border patrol agent, AJ Irvin, has also changed his stance on the border and immigration enforcement system. He said empathy for those who cross the border has led him to advocate for alternatives to forced deportations. He claims to have convinced judges to spare many immigrants from deportation, even flouting his chain of command in order to do so. Most border agents, he said, don't let themselves experience compassion in the way he does.

"I think most border patrol agents have compassion, but a large number of them overcome those feelings or have masked them so that they can do their job—but only because they have to," he said. "They deal in such large numbers, it would be difficult if you didn't mask those feelings."

Irwin describes himself as a "hardcore agent." After getting his start patrolling the border in New Mexico, he hopped around various federal enforcement agencies for more than 20 years. In 1999, he led a task force that targeted and successfully prosecuted the "largest alien smuggling organization ever dismantled in United States history," as former U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno described it.

Irwin believes that above all, the tenets of compassion, common sense and discretion should be at the core of a healthy immigration policy.

"The small percentage of the aliens who illegally enter the country or remain illegally and become illegally present are not a threat to anyone," he said in an email. "Let's focus on the criminals, terrorists, and bad people."

thoughts about calling an ICE bus to come pick up the family within 30 seconds of their arrival. By the end of the episode, Jorge looks into the camera and says, "Perhaps what we learned is that first and foremost, we are human-beings, and that's the thing that overrides politics and everything else." He tells the eldest Gonzalez daughter Ariminda, who is undocumented, that he will not return to the border as a Minuteman. He says he has gained "another perspective," and agrees to help the family members gain legal residence by attesting for their character.

But, Jorge now maintains that his change of opinion was mostly fabricated by the television show's producers. In a phone interview with HuffPost, he said he still considers himself a Minuteman and is now the co-host of "The Frank and Shannon Show," a radio show that advocates mass deportations and "securing" that border militarily, with armed soldiers, orders to shoot."

What was not fabricated, he claims, was his affinity for the undocumented family he lived with. "They were really lovely people, I loved them rather, I love them," he said.

Although Jorge himself is an immigrant and insists that he would "try 10 times a day to get over her" if he were on the Mexican side of the border, he says his intellect has driven him to be an advocate of harsher enforcement policies against illegal immigration.

He called the "30 Days" experience "heartbreaking."

"Emotionally, I felt very divided. I really love these people [the Gonzalez family]. It's a battle between my emotions and my intellect," he said. "Some of us are fortunate enough to have a good brain, and intellect tempers our emotion."

Jorge is able to separate his emotions from his politics. But for Irwin and Randolph, and other immigration agents, those borders are more difficult to maintain.

The episode depicts a change in Jorge's once stringent views on illegal immigration. In the opening of the episode, Jorge says he had

KING, CHAVEZ Cleared Path For All Of Us To Follow

(On Aug. 26, President Obama dedicated the 30-foot tall memorial to Martin Luther King at the Tidal Basin in Washington, D.C. This date marks the 45th Anniversary of King's "I Have a Dream" speech. Writer John Trasivis is Asst. Managing Editor of Hispanic Link News Service and Equal Opportunity, U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. He wrote this column for Hispanic Link in Jan. 1998, when he was a staff attorney and then managing attorney at the U.S. Department of Justice.)

By John Trasivis

As we celebrate the 69th anniversary of Martin Luther King, Jr., the torch of leadership is left to continue to flame a path for justice seekers everywhere.

From losing from an increasingly malignant disease to the way he will be remembered the United States of 30 years ago, his calls for justice and visionary steps embolden and inspire all of us to this day.

In his "Letter from Birmingham Jail," King recognized how he took the country forward and introduced his highest ideals, many people who occasion to review his dramatic speeches and now realize that he reshaped the nation's character of the 1960s.

It was no mere coincidence that during the 60s' grape boycott led by the late Cesar Chavez, King traveled to New Mexico to support the Spanish language version of "We Shall Overcome." Chavez explained to his biographer Jacques Levy that the early bus boycotts by Dr. King in the streets of Montgomery, Alabama, ignited in him the notion of applying a similar strategy, as founder and President of United Farm Workers, in the fields of California's Central Valley, although they worked together infrequently.

King's "Letter from Birmingham Jail" offers support and comfort. A turning point for farmworker organizing efforts was the hand-labor election of 1966, one large ranch after another joined the United Farm Workers.

Chavez marking the victory, Dr. King wrote:

"The fight for equality must be fought on many fronts. In the urban areas, the struggle must be fought on the political front. The struggle must be fought on the economic front. The most important struggle is really one – a struggle for freedom, for dignity, and for humanity."

We are together in spirit and determination to fulfill the dreams for a better tomorrow will be realized.

Following his death, Dr. King continued to have an impact on Chavez and the farmworkers, as well as on the lives of millions of agricultural workers. In a letter to a grape industry leader in 1969, Chavez described Dr. King as one who "gave himself totally to the cause of justice and equality."

Chavez died in 1993. Mrs. Cesar Chavez, King visited him there. She was one of the few whom Chavez felt understood the political impact of his calling.

What lies the legacy of King and Chavez is their roles not just as African American leaders for African Americans and a Latino leader for Latino Americans. It is their call upon persons of all ancestries, faiths, races and generations to stand a stand for justice for the benefit of everyone.

Their calls to conscience know no boundaries.

Echoing Dr. King's observation that "A man has a right to something that he has the strength to win," Chavez said on the 25th of May of his fast in 1968:

"These are all things that really belong to us. So it is time we live them. We have the strength to win. We have the strength to change our society. We are really one – a struggle for freedom, for dignity and for humanity."

We are together in spirit and determination to fulfill the dreams for a better tomorrow will be realized.

The United States needs to search for an affirmation of the goals that Martin Luther King, Cesar Chavez and other leaders set for us. Thus, President Clinton's call to build One America, not through money or technological og but through the power of the human spirit, can be answered by us – one by one, neighbor by neighbor, student by student, family by family, community by community.

One America's principles will also be brought to life by the soon-to-be established Cesar Chavez Public Policy Charter High School, which is designed to provide Disadvantaged students with the skills and education using public policy as a vehicle to engage young people and teach them critical-thinking skills. As such initiatives, we can begin to move forward to send a new generation with the tools of freedom and equality.

To share Dr. King's vision and passion for a better tomorrow, we must work every day each year but live it every day. To give full meaning to the lives of Dr. Martin Luther King and his partner such as Cesar Chavez, we all join the chorus of the Negro National Anthem. Let us march on till victory is won.

9 - 11 Ten Years Later

If you ask most people, they can tell you exactly where they were and what they were doing that historic Tuesday, September 11, 2001.

On that day, an attack was perpetrated on the United States by a terrorist group, forever changing the course of American history.

As you read this week's edition of El Editor, we hope you take a moment on September 11 to remember the 10th anniversary of the day when close to 3,000 people lost their lives in the attacks on the twin towers in New York, the Pentagon in Washington, DC, and the open fields of Pennsylvania.

We also take a moment to remember the countless number of family members, first responders, and friends of those who died, and whose lives were also changed forever.

It is impossible to forget that day, when we saw destruction staring us in the face. We stared in disbelief,屏息凝视, mesmerized by the events taking place, not knowing what we were witnessing.

Bodies falling from the twin towers, the towers crashing from the sky like a house of cards, fire fighters desperately trying to save the injured and dying, as people ran for their lives covered in dust from the huge fireballs of concrete dust rising like a cloud to the sky; a huge chunk of the Pentagon carved out, smoke rising from the ashes of United Flight 93.

How can we forget?

Those scenes will be forever etched in the memory of all Americans and people from around the world who watched as so many innocent people died at the hands of terrorists.

Shortly after the attack, our government's response was to vow to bring the perpetrators to justice and hold them accountable for their actions.

In 2003, the Bush administration sent our military into Afghanistan with the sole purpose of capturing one person who had been determined to be responsible for the attacks, Osama bin Laden.

But it wasn't until Sunday, May 2, 2011 in Pakistan that that mission was accomplished.

Finally on that day, President Obama announced to the world what so many Americans had waited 10 years to hear.

Here's the way it was described in a story in the New York Times:

"In a late-night appearance in the East Room of the White House, Mr. Obama declared that "justice has been done," as he disclosed that American military and CIA agents had finally cornered Bin Laden, the leader of Al Qaeda, who had eluded them for nearly a decade. American officials said Bin Laden resisted and was shot in the head. He was later buried at sea."

So on this occasion, we join with other Americans to remember the lost lives and the people who have had to cope with their loss and sadness.

And even though one person responsible has paid the ultimate price for his actions, which has somehow brought a measure of closure, we can never forget that it could have happened to any of us.

EL GRITO DE DOLORES

Semanas de septiembre 14 de 1981 (Vuelta editar el 4 de septiembre del 2011)

Carlos B. Gil-Hispánic Link News Service

El grito de Independencia de México respecto de España se conoce por "El Grito de Dolores".

Fue dado primero por Miguel Hidalgo y Costilla, sacerdote párroco criollo de Dolores, Guanajuato, ante una multitud formada principalmente por campesinos indígenas y mestizos, el 16 de septiembre de 1810. El "grito" resonó en un aire fresco de la mañana, llamando a los mexicanos de todas clases a combatir en su nombre sus oprimidos y que trascendió las fronteras de los países de la América popular.

El grito, resonó por todos los callados adormecidos de la antigua aldea y más allá de ella, hasta los confines lejanos del intranquilo imperio español. Inició uno de los movimientos de reforma social más importantes, especialmente a favor de los indígenas, mestizos y mulatos. Este movimiento reformador fue suprimido sin escrupulos unos cuantos años después, pero la independencia llegó a ser realidad, por último y por razones no sociales, en 1822.

Justo Sierra, el gran historiador mexicano, escribe de la rebelión de Hidalgo:

"...Hidalgo no quiso. Recumó a tanta gente cuanta pudo, les dio las armas que tenía, los uniformes que tuvo y les dio la orden de marchar el 16 de septiembre, en el aniversario de la independencia portugués. Entonces salió para San Miguel (ahora de Allende). Por el camioncito que un cuadro de la Virgen de Guadalupe. La Madre de Dios de los indígenas, y lo declaró el asturiano sagrado de su tremendo empeño. Las masas campesinas, abandonando sus arados y cobertizos, lo siguieron como a un mesías. Al grito de "¡Viva Nuestra Señora de Guadalupe y abajo al mal gobierno!" (¡Abajo los gachupines!) (los españoles nacidos en España), las multitudes... Convirtieron el complot en un levantamiento popular poderoso. Ésta fue la insurrección..."

Sierra también que la insurrección dirigida por Hidalgo causara "rios de sangre" que corrían libremente durante muchos años posteriores. Esta habrá sido el año algo preciso que los mexicanos pagaron por la independencia.

El movimiento de sangre atraería a los muy odiados "gachupines", así como también a los criollos, mestizos, mulatos e indios por igual.

No se salvaron los dirigentes de la revolución tampoco, porque Hidalgo y sus colegas de complot, Ignacio Allende, Julio Aldama (ambos militares) y José María Morelos, otro sacerdote, serían capturados finalmente y ejecutados por las autoridades españolas. Como en otros tiempos y lugares, estos hombres serían considerados traidores priemo y después elogiados como héroes.

Estos acontecimientos se destacan, sin duda, como algunos de los más aterradores y dramáticos de todas las Américas. Nos son típicos porque comienzan a contar la historia de una de las numerosas revoluciones sociales que han ocurrido en el continente el 16 de septiembre.

Este es lo que los mexicanos y los latinos recordamos hoy. Es esto lo que los mexicanos y los latinos recordamos hoy.

Por qué se rebelaron Hidalgo y los demás? La respuesta es muy complicada, pero en general puede decirse que se rebelaron porque deseaban ver el fin de la esclavitud colonial, porque ansiaban que se tratará equitativamente a todos, en vez de los privilegios reservados únicamente para beneficiarios – los peninsulares (españoles).

Hidalgo combatió por la independencia revolucionaria porque creía que ésta permitía por medio de un nuevo gobierno criollo gobernar las autoridades "con la dulzura de los padres, tratándolos como hermanos y aboliendo así la pobreza".

Justificando la causa de la independencia mexicana, su gran lugarteniente, Morelos, brindó riesgos más agudos y más peligrosos que eran verdaderamente temibles y de gran visión para la época. La tierra debía ser propiedad de quienes trabajaban, todas las raza son iguales; la Iglesia debía hallarse libre de riqueza económica y influencia política y, por último, todos los mexicanos debían unirse en la "República de Anahuac," indígeno-mestiza.

Estos acontecimientos y tendencias representan solamente "el punto de una ín" en una amplia biblioteca de información referente a la historia del pueblo mexicano. Cobran importancia aquí porque explican la significación del 16 de septiembre. No recordar una herencia que es común a los mexicanos y chicanos por igual, da de la lucha revolucionaria y un deseo ardiente de desarrollo espiritual, intelectual y físico.

Aquí, quizás es más fácil enfatizar la importancia social y cultural, uniendo a los miles de millones de seres de ambos lados de la frontera en los tristes "gritos" del 16 de septiembre.

¡Que vive México!

¡Que vive la Virgen de Guadalupe!

¡Que vive la raza!

¡Y que muera el mal gobierno!

Incluso el líder de la mayoría republicana Dick Armey, uno de los principales apoyantes del movimiento conservador del Tea Party, preguntó, "¿quién fue el genio del Partido Republicano que dijo que ahora hemos identificado al grupo demócrata de mayor crecimiento ahora que hay asistido?"

Pensar que el desempeño de un voto por el presidente Barack Obama ayudó a las minorías a aumentar su auge electoral es algo que casi no se ha visto en las pasadas elecciones.

Porque George W. Bush obtuvo 45% del voto latino y cuatro años más tarde, en el 2008, el senador republicano John McCain solo logró 31% del voto hispano frente al 47% que consiguió el demócrata Barack Obama.

New Electoral Districts Open Up Opportunities for Latinos

The re-drawing of more than 10 electoral districts in the United States opens up an opportunity for possible Latino candidates in 2012, if and when they can get the support of the political machinery in their states, experts said on Tuesday.

"The 2010 Census was a wake-up call about the growth of the Latino population in the U.S. and the government, at all levels, needs to reflect that diversity," Astrid Garcia, Redistricting and State Policy Manager for the National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Officials Educational Fund, told Efe.

"But for there to be more Latino candidates the confluence of several factors is necessary, like the mobilization of voters, (monetary) contributions and the support of the leadership, both of the Democrats and the Republicans," the NALEO expert added.

"We Latinos are an important part of the social fabric of this nation and there has to be a change in the paradigm, in the focus, so that the parties cultivate new Latino leaders," Garcia said.

The idea is that having candidates in districts with Hispanic majorities would respond to the interests and needs of this growing segment of the U.S. electorate.

According to the 2010 Census, U.S. Latinos number slightly more than 50 million people and make up 16 percent of the national population. In addition, over the past decade they contributed more than half of the country's population growth.

States like Florida, Nevada and Texas are undertaking a redrawing of their electoral districts. Florida obtained two additional seats in Congress, while Texas — where Latinos contributed to 65 percent of the state's population growth — received an additional four.

At least one in every five voters in 2012 will be Latino in California, New Mexico and Texas, according to NALEO projections.

The United States Hispanic Leadership Institute said that Latinos have the chance to form "viable electoral coalitions" with other blocs to shape the future of the country's main urban centers.

But USHLI, headed by Juan Andrade, feels that there is scanty financial support and training for Latinos to fully participate in the design of the new electoral districts.

Texas Gov. Rick Perry, a GOP presidential hopeful, is facing a lawsuit in which he stands accused of having manipulated the electoral map, with the help of other Republican politicians, to prevent Latino candidates from winning electoral contests.

The plaintiffs, who include members of Congress and Latino organizations, intend to block the redistricting process proposed by the governor and his legislative allies.

COVENANT HEART MATTERS FREE SEMINAR TO FOCUS ON PAYING FOR PRESCRIPTIONS

Living with heart disease can be quite costly when it comes to purchasing medication. Learn ways to help with prescriptions costs at the August Heart Matters free seminar hosted by Covenant Health System. The presentation titled "Extra Help Paying for Prescription Drugs" will be from 9 - 10 a.m. on Friday, Aug. 26 at the Knippling Education Conference Center. Dana Franks, community outreach representative for West Texas Care Improvement Plus, will be the guest speaker at this month's seminar. Franks will discuss ways a patient can get help paying for their prescription drugs, resources to locate extra help and the new changes in rules and regulations for Medicare/Medicaid coverage. Cost is a major factor in why patients do not get the combinations of medication patients take to prevent heart failure, but as many as 50 percent of patients significantly underuse effective medication due to the high costs. Patients who adhere to their prescription medications are less likely to have adverse events, such as recurrent heart attacks, strokes, heart failure admissions and death than those who do not. Taking the recommended prescription medications for heart disease can greatly reduce the risk of heart failure. Covenant encourages you to attend the free seminar to learn tips about paying for your prescriptions in a cost-effective manner. To R.S.V.P. for the seminar, please call 1.866.4COVENANT (1.866.426.8362). A continental breakfast will be served and free parking will be provided. The Knippling Education Conference Center is located on the sixth floor of the west parking garage at the corner of 21st Street and Louisvile Avenue.

Descriptions and schedules continue:

La Ley del Miedo - Sunday, September 18 at 9 PM E/P

On April 23, 2010, Governor Jan Brewer of Arizona signed Senate Bill 1070 into law. The project, considered the most rigorous and comprehensive anti-illegal immigration piece of legislation of the past four decades, has caused unprecedented controversy and divided Americans across the country.

The one-hour special showcases the stories and personal experiences of illegal immigrants from their papers and in some cases awaiting deportation.

Their captivating stories are contrasted by those of Americans living on the border and the opinions of law enforcement, politicians and local officials.

Operación Soledad La Caida del

Mono Joyo - Sunday, September 25 at 9 PM E/P

Discovery en Espanol brings viewers face to face with one of the most daring rescue missions of the past decade, with a dramatic reconstruction of the military raid organized by the National Army of Colombia to find and kill top rebel commander of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of that country (FARC) Jorge Briceño Suárez, aka Mono Joyo, on September 22nd, 2010. Soledad was a joint effort between the Police, the Army and the Air Force in the Macarena mountain range in the department of Meta in Colombia.

Los Hipopótamos del Capo -

Sunday, October 2 at 9 PM E/P

In the early 1980's, Pablo Escobar, one of the most ruthless criminals of the 20th century, illegally transported wild hippos for use in his personal zoo at the Hacienda Napoles in the outskirts of Medellin, Colombia. Today, Escobar's original herd of hippos has multiplied creating a natural hazard that threatens the lives of Colombians. Via exclusive interviews with veterinarians, smuggling experts and Roberto Escobar, Escobar's eldest brother, the documentary details the origins of the private zoo, as well as the devastating ecological effects that these aggressive guests are having on Colombia's rivers and lagoons.

La Vida Despues del Rescate - Sunday, October 9 at 9 PM E/P

October 13, 2010, a day that made international headlines. In front of hundreds of journalists and millions of people around the world, 33 miners emerged from the bowels of the earth after being trapped for 77 long days. But, this gripping rescue was not the end of the story. It was only the beginning of a profound transformation. Following the experiences of Edison Peña, Ariel Ticona y Carlos Mamani, three of the famed miners, this documentary explores the aftermath of their post-rescue lives and the challenges they faced on a day-to-day basis, including dealing with their new found notoriety.

La Ruta de la Muerte - Sunday, October 16 at 9 PM E/P

In August of 2010, 72 migrant workers were kidnapped and brutally murdered on a ranch in Northern Mexico in the State of Tamaulipas. The news was once again evidence of the growing humanitarian crisis faced by hundreds of migrants on their journey through Mexico to the United States. With exclusive access to the crime scene and the testimonial of one of the survivors, La Ruta de la Muerte recounts this macabre story, while it accompanies migrants on their trek across this murderous route, showcasing the dangerous realities as never before.

to ban landmines and protect the children of Colombia from armed conflict.

"It's refreshing to have an artist of Juanes' caliber use his voice and platform as a vehicle for change," says Paguaga.

The event, hosted by actors William

Levy and Marite Peroni, will also honor Jorge Vergara (business), Juan Andrada Jr. (leadership), Roberto Gomez Bolanos (legend), Hugo Sanchez (sport) and Elizabeth Molina (Morgan education).

"The Latino community throughout history has made a positive impact in America and the world," said Jose Antonio Tijerino, president and CEO of the Hispanic Heritage Foundation. "The Hispanic Heritage Awards were created by the White House 25 years ago and we will salute the past honorees and pay tribute to this year's recipients."

A day prior to the awards show, HHF's Latinos on the Fast Track (LOFT) leadership program will host the LOFT Actionable Leadership Summit and so that they can have impact in the community.

The awards were established in 1987 by President Ronald Reagan and the White House as the official celebration of Hispanic Heritage Month, Sept. 15-Oct. 15.

Diego Luna, que asistió el lunes por la noche en el DF al estreno de la película Miss Bala, aseguró que los mexicanos están "en medio de una guerra" que han querido pensar no lo afectaba y que hoy es más suya que nunca.

El actor hizo estas declaraciones en el estreno de Miss Bala, filme de su productora, Canana Films, que cuenta la historia de una joven mexicana atrapada en las rutas del narcoficío que aspira a ser reina de belleza.

"Más nos vale que todo lo que hagamos tenga ver con el lugar donde vivimos y nos preguntemos dónde estamos y dónde queremos estar. Miss Bala te lleva a hacer eso," dijo el actor en la alfombra roja del Teatro de la Ciudad de México.

Los mexicanos estamos "en medio de una guerra que pensamos que no nos afectaba y que hoy es más nuestra que nunca," señaló el actor.

La oleada violencia desatada por el enfrentamiento entre organizaciones criminales y de estatales con las fuerzas de seguridad en varias regiones del país ha causado 40,000 muertos desde diciembre de 2006.

Para Luna, hay que tomarse la situación en serio porque "es responsabilidad de todos" y más "vale hacer algo".

Miss Bala es una película que, según Luna, es una obra de arte, hace preguntas e invita a la reflexión.

Gael García Bernal, también dueño de Canana Films, se retiró, asimismo, a la situación mexicana reflejada en la película.

"Estas últimas semanas estamos sobre todo resentidos, tenemos un dolor en las entrañas, un dolor visceral," declaró.

La película del cineasta Gerardo Narancio ya fue exhibida en la pasada edición del festival de Cannes, participó en el festival de cine de Nueva York y competió en el festival de Cine de San Sebastián.

Miss Bala se estrenará en México este próximo viernes.

LSU moves to No. 2, Auburn drops out of AP Top 25

Winning the biggest game of college football's opening weekend boosted LSU to No. 2 in The Associated Press Top 25.

No. 1 Oklahoma held on to the top spot in the first regular season rankings, while the Tigers used their 40-27 victory against Oregon to jump rival Alabama, which slipped to No. 3.

The Sooners received 32 of 60 first-place votes and 1,448 points. LSU received 17 first-place votes and 1,415 points.

Alabama had nine first-place votes, and two voters had No. 4 Boise State top-ranked after the Broncos' impressive 35-21 win against Georgia. Florida State moved up to No. 5.

Oregon dropped nine spots to No. 13 and defending national champion Auburn, which started the season at No. 23, fell out of the Top 25 after needing a late rally to beat Utah State 42-38 at home.

The Tigers became just the second defending national champions since the preseason poll started in 1950 to fall out of the rankings after the first week of the season in the first regular-season poll - though the circumstances were far different the first time it happened.

Alabama, the 1964 AP champion, started the '65 season ranked No. 5. The Crimson Tide lost 18-17 to Georgia to open the season and dropped out, but The Associated Press only ranked 10 teams that season. Alabama eventually returned to the Top 10 and won another national title.

The 1961 Minnesota team is the only defending champion to be unranked in the preseason poll.

Moving into this week's rankings were No. 20 Baylor, which beat TCU 50-48 in overtime, and No. 22 South Florida, 23-20 winners at Notre Dame, along with No. 23 Penn State and No. 24 Texas.

Texas had the start season unranked for the first time since 1998.

TCU dropped 11 spots to No. 25.

Penn State moves into the rankings ahead of Saturday's home game against third-ranked Alabama.

Notre Dame and Georgia all tumbled out of the Top 25 after losses. Like Auburn, Southern California, which opened the season ranked 25th, fell out of the rankings after a victory. USC squeaked by Minnesota 19-17.

The rest of the top 10 had No. 20 Stanford, followed by Texas A&M, Wisconsin, Oklahoma State and Nebraska.

No. 11 is Virginia Tech, followed by South Carolina, Oregon, Arkansas and Ohio State.

No. 16 Mississippi State and No. 18 Florida give the Southeastern Conference six ranked teams this week, matching the Big 12 for the most. No. 21 Missouri joins Oklahoma, Texas A&M, Oklahoma State, Baylor and Texas.

The Big Ten has five ranked teams, with No. 17 Michigan State, Penn State and Ohio State.

No. 19 West Virginia and USF give the Big East two teams in the Top 25. The Atlantic Coast Conference (Florida State and Virginia Tech), the Pac-12 (Stanford and Oregon) and the Mountain West (Boise State and CU) also have two ranked teams.

The Raiders and Browns

made big improvements under

Rob Ryan expected to be an NFL head coach by now, just like his twin brother Rex and their father Buddy before them.

It didn't work out that way, but Rob's not complaining.

He figures the teams that haven't picked him have made a mistake, and that the Dallas Cowboys are lucky to have him as their defensive coordinator.

Of course he thinks that. He's a Ryan.

Big, loud and proud like Buddy and Rex, Rob also keeps up the family tradition with a variety of innovative, attacking defenses. Another common trait is being his usual, boisterous self when talking to reporters - especially this week, with his first game in charge of the Cowboys defense coming against the New York Jets in prime time on Sunday night.

"I've been an assistant coach of the year in pro football and in college football, so apparently I'm pretty good," Rob said. "No one else believes it, but they all will after this game."

Rob is only 48 and going into his 25th season as a coach, having spent more than half his life working on the sideline. And the majority of that time has been in the NFL, this being his 14th season.

He and Rex broke into the NFL in 1994 as assistant coaches on their dad's staff in Arizona. They were all swept out following the '95 season, and Rob had to work his way back up to the NFL. After a year at a community college, then three more at Oklahoma State, he was hired by Bill Belichick in New England. He was the linebackers coach on two Super Bowl championship teams before becoming the defensive coordinator in Oakland. He spent the last two years coordinating the defense in Cleveland under Belichick disciple Eric Mangini.

The Raiders and Browns

made big improvements under his watch. With his pedigree, what else would you expect?

"(Buddy) brought us in the world of defense and I was fortunate enough to get with Bill Belichick, who's fantastic

- it's like getting in there with Vince Lombardi," Ryan said.

"You're going to learn something if you're smart and I am. I've been around the best defensive coaches to ever coach the game in those three, and I don't know what the order is, but when you've got Buddy Ryan, Rex and Bill Belichick, those are pretty good three."

Rob's chances of becoming a head coach have been hurt in part by how lousy the Raiders and Brown were, overall. The last six years, he's never been part of a team that won more than five games.

The Cowboys weren't much better last year, winning just six.

The defense was a huge reason Dallas failed to live up to pre-season talk of reaching the Super Bowl, allowing the most points and yards in franchise history.

But listen to his assessment of the talent he inherited: "We've got seven Pro Bowlers over there on defense, so it's (pretty (expletive) good."

He's sticking with the 3-4

scheme that Bill Parcells installed and Wade Phillips taught. He's also adding to it.

A lot.

His system is so extensive that it fills three playbooks to hold.

Inside linebacker Bradie James joked that he needed an extra suitcase during training camp to hold it all.

"I was overwhelmed," said outside linebacker DeMarcus Ware, who has led the NFL in sacks two of the last three years.

"I was like, 'What are we doing?'

The thing is, once you learn it, it's all about the same stuff,

but just changing little pieces."

Players love the system almost as much as they love the wild man behind it.

Ware said the first time he met Ryan, "I didn't know if he was a defensive coordinator or a Harley-Davidson motorcycle rider." That's because of Ryan's enormous belly and his mop of long, stringy, gray hair.

Add in his salty language and jovial nature, and it's easy to forget the most important thing: this guy really knows what he's doing.

"He's serious and he's intense, but at the same time, he is loose and he cracks jokes and has fun," inside linebacker Keith Brooking said. "I've been around a lot of characters and coaches with great personalities who weren't very good football coaches. But when you're around him for a very short period of time, you see his knowledge."

And his confidence.

When the Philadelphia Eagles were loading up on big-name players - including outbidding the Cowboys for former Raiders cornerback Nnamdi Asomugha, whom Ryan calls perhaps his favorite player he's ever coached - Ryan won over Cowboys fans with this retort: "I don't know if we win the all-hype team. That might have gone to someone else, but we're going to beat them (beaten) when we play them."

Ryan said it's easy to be so confident "in stuff that I'm good at," adding that it's his brother and his father "got just enough arrogance to be good at this job."

Are you listening, NFL owners in need of a coach? Because the way Rob Ryan sees it, the only question is when someone is smart enough to give him a chance, not if.

Until then, he's going to keep doing things the Ryan way.

"It took my dad 25 years to be a head coach in this league and that's not just who drives me," Rob said. "I want to win another Super Bowl. I've only won two. I want to win a third and keep doing that. When I get an opportunity to be a head coach, I'll be ready."

Márquez no quiere más trampas

Juan Manuel Márquez no quiere correr ningún riesgo de que vuelvan a robarle la pelea cuando enfrenta a Manny Pacquiao por tercera ocasión.

El triple campeón mexicano sabe que para conseguir ese objetivo el 12 de noviembre próximo la única alternativa es el nocaut.

"Vamos a tratar de dejar a los jueces fuera de esta pelea y por eso voy a buscar el nocaut," dijo ayer Márquez (53-5-1, 39 KO's) en Nueva York, a donde llegó junto a su opponente para promocionar el combate que tendrá lugar en el hotel MGM Grand de Las Vegas.

"Tengo el poder y con una buena preparación lo puedo lograr," agregó un convencido Márquez, quien sostiene

— como muchos críticos — que es el legítimo ganador de los dos enfrentamientos previos con Pacquiao (53-3-2, 38 KO's), pero que los jueces optaron

por un empate en el primer y triumfo del filipino por decisión dividida en el segundo duelo.

Tras agradecer a Pacquiao, así como al promotor Bob Arum, de Top Rank, "por aceptar el reto", Juan Manuel "Dinamita" Márquez indicó que la gente vio en las peleas anteriores que acabaron en decisiones controversiales.

"En esta tercera pelea voy

a buscar el nocaut con inteligencia, voy a buscar el nocaut a como dé lugar," recalcó el boxeador mexicano, campeón en tres divisiones diferentes.

Para él, Márquez dijo que durante su preparación buscó mejorar en su fortaleza y en su velocidad.

"La gente sabe de las dos peleas que hemos tenido y por eso

responde de esa manera," dijo

Márquez sobre el recibimiento que ha tenido tanto en Filipinas como en Nueva York.

Pacquiao también indicó que el 12 de noviembre quiere

despejar cualquier duda de que los resultados de los enfrentamientos anteriores.

"No era mi intención pelear contra otro boxeador mexicano, pero así pasan las cosas," dijo en un perfecto español. Pacquiao cuando EL DIARIO/LA PRENSA le recordó la lista de púgiles mexicanos que ha derrotado en su ascendente carrera a la cima.

Solo, Erik "El Terrible" Morales le ganó una vez al ahora congresista de su país, quien además saca tiempo para dedicarse a la música.

En la mejor forma

Don Ignacio Beristain,

entrenador de Márquez, indicó que su pupilo llegaría en la mejor condición física, porque "Pacquiao es muy fuerte".

¿Cómo contrarrestar la rapidez del filipino?

"Ya lo contrarrestamos 24 rounds," dijo en referencia a las dos peleas previas, "a puños contragolpes lo hemos contratado y dominando la zona de combate", agregó don Nacho, quien considera que están en capacidad de volver a ganar el idolo filipino.

El veterano entrenador, quien este año fue exaltado en el Salón de la Fama del Boxeo Internacional, en Canastota, Nueva York, cree que es posible que Márquez vuelva a imponerse al filipino, pero será más complicado vencer al promotor Arum.

"Las primeras fueron duras y siente que las ganamos, especialmente en la segunda cuando la influencia del señor Bob Arum pesó sobre los jueces," aseguró. "Esta vez los estamos con la misma empresa y será más pareja la situación," añadió don Nacho.

Prometió espectáculo.

"Lo que se promete al aficionado es que van a ver otra gran pelea. El aficionado pagará su boleto para ver una gran pelea y el 12 de noviembre van a tener... vía televisión también la van a ver, con estar dividida entre el mundo," dijo "Dinamita" Márquez.

"Nosotros vamos a ir con todo y a buscar el triunfo, el comodín de lugar", sentenció el campeón de peso medio.

Pacquiao arriesga por tercera

vez el título mundial welter de la Organización Mundial de Boxeo (OMB), que ganó el 14 de noviembre del 2009, cuando arrebató el cetro al puertorriqueño Miguel Ángel Cotto.

La cartelera será televisada por HBO, a través del sistema pago por evento (pay per view).

"Dinamita" podría cantar.

La gira mundial de promoción del combate continúa este miércoles (12:00 del día) en Beverly Hills, California, y culminará mañana jueves en la capital mexicana con la conferencia de prensa en frente al Monumento a la Revolución, fiesta también para el mediodía, y a la que podrán concursar los aficionados.

Y como Pacquiao interpreta

ayer, junto a Dan Hill, su popular canción "Sometimes when we touch," Márquez bromó que a lo mejor él también hacía lo mismo en el D.F.

"A ver si me animo yo también canto en la conferencia de México," dijo un sonriente Márquez.

Cesar Chavez Center Designated as Historic Site

The Cesar Chavez Foundation's National Chavez Center at Nuestra Señora Reina De La Paz in California, where the founder of the United Farm Workers is buried, has been placed on the National Register of Historic Places.

"I very happy because (inclusion in the registry) proves that my father's work really is part of the U.S. social fabric," Paul Chavez told El Pueblo.

"Despite the fact that he fought with farm workers who were Mexican, his message of being at the service of helping the less fortunate; it's a message that resonates with many people from different roads in life," he emphasized.

On May 19, the nine members of the California State Historical Resources Commission nominated the site to be included in the national historic register.

The National Chavez Center is a complex of buildings and cabins for the training of leaders that extends over 187 acres in the Tehachapi Mountains near Keene, California.

"I want to confirm that the National Chavez Center at Nuestra Señora de La Paz is part of the National Register of Historic Places as of Aug. 30, 2011," Adam Fletcher, the spokesman of U.S. Interior Secretary Ken Salazar, told EFE.

"People of color have been left out of the history of this great country," Jose Zapata Calderon, a sociology professor at Pitzer College in Claremont, California, told EFE.

"Therefore, this space and the life of Cesar Chavez truly signify for us bringing to center stage those people who have been left out and who often contributed even more than those we consider to be the great heroes in this society," he said.

Zapata Calderon organizes student visits to Villa La Paz with the aim of making them aware of the history of the farm workers' movement.

Early this year, the spot where Cesar Chavez held his first hunger strike and later founded the UFW union movement for the last 22 years of his life, he added.

Born on March 31, 1927, in Yuma, Arizona, Cesar Estrada Chavez died of heart failure on April 23, 1993. "Being part of the National Registry of Historic Places means more protection on the part of the state for the care and preservation of the site," said Paul Chavez.

Latino children are 60% more at risk for asthma than white non-Latino kids. Because I am Latina, I've become even more interested in the topic and what I can do to create awareness.

Even though my 5-year-old daughter was diagnosed with asthma two years ago and I've done my share of research on the topic, I don't consider myself an expert. Thanks to my involvement with the Moms Clean Air Force - a group of moms fighting for clean air, I've learned a lot about how this disease affects Latino children in particular.

I've been lucky that my daughter has never had a full-blown asthma attack, but I know many of her problems will soon stem from what they usually have to treat a bit more aggressively so they don't become a more serious ailment.

But, nothing could have prepared me to hear Lydia Rojas' talk during the Moms Clean Air Force's Blog Talk Radio Show about the asthma epidemic and Latino kids. Four and a half years ago, Rojas' daughter, Steph, died of an asthma attack two months before she would've turned 16 years old.

I listened in horror as Rojas retold the heartbreaking story about how her daughter died and how she still doesn't know how it happened. No parent should have to tell such a story. According to Rojas, her daughter's asthma was fairly under control. A specialist regularly saw her, and Rojas made sure her daughter was taking her medication accordingly.

The most harrowing part of the story for me is that the time Rojas made it to the hospital, her daughter had already passed away.

If you have a child with asthma, I beg you to make it a point to listen to the show so you can be moved to take it like I was. If you don't have a child with asthma, you should still listen to the program because it offers invaluable information about the epidemic that is affecting our nation, in many instances because of the bad air quality they are breathing.

After my daughter was diagnosed with asthma, I made sure I carried her inhaler around with us everywhere we went. In addition, I informed the preschool she attended of her condition and gave them an inhaler to keep in their office. I was reassured to hear that both the director and the assistant director were trained to deal with an asthma attack. Moreover, my daughter's preschool teacher's child had asthma, so she was completely aware of the signs.

Because, my daughter has been blessed, and never had an asthma attack, I eventually stopped carrying the inhaler. When she started Kindergarten three weeks ago, I didn't even bother to find out what procedures were in the event of an attack, nor did I give them an inhaler in case my daughter had an attack. Stupidly, I thought her asthma was obviously under control and if she'd never had an asthma attack, then what was the point of the inhaler.

Listening to Rojas' heartbreaking story made me realize that I should have been more involved. On Monday, I marched into the school and asked for my daughter's inhaler and found out what they do in case of an attack.

Every day I pray never ever has one. But at least, now I am more aware that I cannot let my guard down when it comes to this debilitating disease.

I'm more committed than ever to do all that's in my power to fight for clean air and to encourage other parents to stay informed about their child's condition.

Dormir es importante en adolescentes

Dormir es tan importante como el aire que respiramos, el agua o la comida que ingerimos y en los adolescentes es fundamental para su desarrollo, ya que dormir es alimentar el cerebro.

El sueño nos ayuda a mantenernos sanos y a "recargar baterías" en nuestros sistemas celulares, para que así podamos disponer al máximo de las actividades cotidianas, además el "sueño" es un aspecto fundamental para verse mejor, estar creativo y sano.

La mayoría de los adolescentes necesitan entre ocho horas y media

y más de nueve horas de sueño cada noche para estar en óptimas condiciones al día siguiente, y poder desempeñarse en actividades escolares, o practicar un deporte. Muchos adolescentes no duermen lo suficiente y nos preguntamos ¿por qué?

Según La Asociación Americana del Sueño (ASA) durante la adolescencia (12-17 años de edad) ocurren cambios en los patrones del sueño debido a la cantidad y calidad del mismo, ya que tienden a dormir más tarde tanto en los días de escuela como en los fines de semana lo cual significa una disminución en la cantidad y calidad de horas dedicadas al sueño.

En otros estudios realizados se ha encontrado que durante la adolescencia el cuerpo experimenta un reajuste temporal, indicándoles a los jóvenes que se duerman y se despierten más tarde ya que la hormona del cerebro "melatonina", se produce más tarde por la noche en los adolescentes en comparación con los niños y los adultos.

Esto puede dificultar que los adolescentes corrijan el sueño temprano por las noches. Muchos jóvenes padecen trastornos de sueño que precisan tratamiento tales como, náuseas, insomnio, síndrome de piernas inquietas, apnea del sueño, etc.

El sueño ayuda a desarrollar importantes funciones del organismo y de la actividad cerebral, la falta del mismo puede ser nociva, si no se duerme normalmente automáticamente se quedará dormido en cualquier momento.

Según la La Administración Nacional de Seguridad y Tráfico en Carreteras de los Estados Unidos, se calcula que cada año mueren 1.500 personas en accidentes de tráfico provocados por conductores de edades comprendidas entre los 15 y los 24 años que simplemente conducían cansados.

Más de la mitad de las personas que provocan accidentes por quedarse dormidos al volante tienen menos de 26 años.

Otras consecuencias de la falta de sueño son que la apariencia física, empeora y puede crear problemas dermatológicos como el acné, favorece conductas agresivas e imprudentes con comportamientos, tensiones con profesores, familiares, se puede tener depresión, y la eficiencia escolar.

Para realizar actividades básicas o regulares disminuye. Lleva a comer de manera poco saludable, que con-tribuyen al aumento de peso. Potencia los efectos del alcohol e incrementa el consumo de caféína y/o tabaco además de contribuir con el desarrollo de enfermedades.

Entre los síntomas para saber que no se está durmiendo bien se encuentran los siguientes: cuesta mucho levantarse por las mañanas, dificultades para concentrarse, se queda dormido en clase o está triste o deprimido.

La mayoría de los adolescentes necesitan entre ocho horas y media y más de nueve horas de sueño cada noche para estar en óptimas condiciones de salud.
