NAACP Asks Supreme Court To Rehear Richmond Case

Washington—(NBNS)—Lawyers for the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc. have asked the U.S. Supreme Court to rehear the Richmond Metropolitan area school consolidation case which resulted in a 4-to-4 deadlock decision last month.

In a related matter, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger gave the Richmond school board until July 16 to file a petition for a rehearing of the case, something which the high court only rarely grants.

U.S. Cuts School Funds

Washington—(NBNS)—The acting federal commissioner of education sent spending guidelines to state school commissioners two weeks ago that omit funds for impact aid, school libraries, and strengthening state and local school operations, and which amount to almost $400 million in cut backs.

In the guidelines, dated June 8, John R. Ottina set total spending at $2.5 billion, the same as last year, but his memorandum did not list the three major categorical programs. A cover letter noted that the Nixon Administration will no longer push for the Better Schools Act, which would have merged 32 categorical programs into five, because of opposition from Congress and educators.

Prisons Exempt From Minimum Wage Law

New Orleans—(NBNS)—A three judge panel of the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled last week that inmates working under the Federal Prison Industries (FPI) trades program do not have to be paid minimum wages for the work. The ruling came in response to a petition by 187 inmates of federal prisons in Atlanta, Ga., and Marion, Ill.

Black Gets Treasury Award

Washington—(NBNS)—Samuel Pierce, the former general counsel of the Treasury Department, recently received the Alexander Hamilton Award, the highest honor that can be bestowed by the Department. Pierce was the first black official to serve in a Treasury sub-cabinet post. In presenting the award, Treasury Secretary George Shultz said Pierce was being commended for "outstanding and unusual leadership in the work of the treasury."

HOW DOES THIS GRAB YOU as a vacant apartment in Green Fair Manor? It appears as though vandals have gone through this bathroom and completely upset all the fixtures. This type of situation should not exist in a Public Housing program. Taxpayers should not continue to let this type of situation happen in Green-Fair Manor or any other complex where tax money is used.

Last of Two Survivors of "Brownsville Affair" Requests Aid from Congress for Veteran Benefits

Washington—(NBNS)—Dorsie Willis, one of two known survivors of the 1906 "Brownsville Affair," came to Capitol Hill last week to seek veterans benefits and compensation for the 66 years he suffered gross humiliation and lack of employment opportunities because of an undeserved dishonorable discharge from the Army.

In the Brownsville Affair, Willis and 166 other black soldiers were discharged by orders of President Theodore Roosevelt because of what was called a "conspiracy of silence" in which the men refused to point out the guilty parties involved in the slaying of a white man in the nearby town of Brownsville.

Last September, then Secretary of the Army Robert Froehle ordered the discharges changed to honorable for the 167 members of the black First Battalion, 25th Infantry stationed in Brownsville, and called the mass punishment, the only one documented in the history of the Army, a "gross injustice" since no evidence was ever produced which could connect the black soldiers with the shooting.

After the dishonorable discharge, Willis and other members of the Brownsville based regiment, were unable to obtain jobs in the military or civilian branches of government. Willis worked as a $7-a-week yard man for a white family in his hometown of Guthrie, Okla. and for 59 years he shined shoes and served as a porter in a downtown bank building.

Willis was subsequently presented with his new honorable discharge, an engraved certificate in a leather cover, but was not provided with back pay or military allowances to compensate him for the 66 years of ostracism he encountered.

"I never did feel that the world owed me a living, but I did feel that it owed me an opportunity to make a living myself," said Willis. "Any job that I might have qualified to do, I couldn't get it. I couldn't even get a job sweeping the floors in the post office."

So, last week Willis spoke at a congressional hearing on a bill proposed by Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., that would pay retirement benefits to the regiment's survivors and their heirs and a $40,000 compensation for the suffering caused by the dishonorable discharges.

A similar bill has been introduced in the Senate by Sen. Hubert Humphrey, D-Minn., who said, "this nation owes these men and their families an apology in fact and deed, not just in words."

Under the bills, Willis and other survivors would be eligible for a total of about $100,000 in benefits.

St. Louis—(NBNS)—The large Pruitt Igoe housing complex in St. Louis is a microcosm of the problems of public housing around the country. Built in 1955-56 at a cost of $36 million, Pruitt-Igoe was one of the world's most densely packed communities with a population of 10,000 stacked on top of one another in 33 eleven story buildings set row upon straight row on a 57 acre plot. By 1959, Pruitt-Igoe had become rife with vandalism, and premature decay, suffering from overcrowding and inadequate social services; a "dumping ground" for thousands of persons dislocated through slum clearance projects said James Hurt a prominent Black civic leader who was the first manager of the project.

The Board of Commissioners of the St. Louis Housing Authority adopted a plan for closing down the complex last week. Thomas Costello, the Authority's executive director said that "there must be an honest recognition that this development, Pruitt-Igoe, has been a complete and colossal failure from a social, moral and economic standpoint."

While everyone generally agrees with the descriptions of the dismal state of the housing project, Ruby Russell, head of the Pruitt-Igoe Tenant Affairs Board declared, "we will not vacate Pruitt-Igoe if we are forced to move to conditions as bad or worse than our present living conditions."

The Board's plan calls for the forced exodus of the last 2000 tenants in the project by the fall and the boarding up of the last six, now occupied, buildings.

The problem of relocating the remaining tenants in the project poses the most difficulty for the board. Costello estimated that half of the families could be relocated elsewhere in public housing, but that estimate has been called high.

Costello has called on the city's housing relocation office to find homes for those the authority cannot relocate. However, in its three year history, that office has only relocated 205 families.

The authority has asked HUD to transfer $300,000 in funds already allocated for demolition of the project to relocation.

St. Louis Mayor John Poelker has suggested that if the people can't be relocated, the project be kept open to house people. Costello, however believes that the closing down of the project is a financial necessity since HUD is putting a lid on operating subsidies to local housing authorities. He estimated that closing the project would cut more than $1 million out of the authorities deficit next year.

About four out of five of the families left at the project receive welfare assistance.

AT & T Leads the Way Again

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company has shown the way by announcing it will sell its stock to shareholders by mail, without forcing them to pay a fixed fee to a broker.

AT&T will be selling its own stock, not stock traded in a market. The program gets underway July 2nd, stockholders of that time being allowed to purchase as much as $3,000 of AT&T stock per quarter. In addition, to the $12,000 they can buy annually, shareholders may also invest dividends without paying a fee.

The largest corporation in the nation sets an example for other corporations to follow. There is, of course, no valid reason all who wish to invest in a major corporation should be required to pay a brokerage fee.

The AT&T action is limited to shareholders; perhaps success of this new system will eventually induce the company to open sales to all.

Spain's Tortured Course

Dictator Francisco Franco of Spain recently turned back the clock in Spain—again. The 80-year-old reactionary, who overthrew a democratic republic when a colonel established his dictatorship, (1936-39), thus following in Mussolini's and Hitler's path, named Admiral Luis Blanco to succeed him as Premier.

Blanco promptly dropped many of the less autocratic members of the old Cabinet, including Foreign Minister Gergorio Bravo, who had favored friendly relations with the United States and Britain. He named hard-line rightists to replace these cabinet members, some of whom were members of the Opus Del movement—composed primarily of lay and liberal Catholics as opposed to more reactionary Catholics.

Franco, of course, seeks to prepare the way for an orderly transition from his dictatorship to a new monarchy—another backward step. Prince Juan Carlos is to succeed him as chief of state with the title of king. Franco thus seeks to go back to 1932, when Alfonso abdicated and Spain belatedly became a republic, with an elected parliament.

When this government was re-elected in a popular vote, in 1936, Franco, with powerful aristocratic, military and church support (the republic had begun to reacquire some of the vast land holdings of the church, which had become enormous) revolted; the rally cry at the time was that he and other fascists were saving Spain from Communism.

At the time of the revolt, however, Communists were an insignificant force and power in Spain. (By 1939, after the democracies had failed to help the duly re-elected government of Spain, and Mussolini and Hitler had strongly supported Franco, the Communists in Russia were at that time providing the bulk of support going to the loyalists).

The murder of democracy in Spain, in 1936 when it was not Communist-dominated, is the crime for which Franco is still guilty, and the record should be kept clear on this point. Doubtless should read the American Ambassador's (of the time) book, My Mission To Spain, by Claude Bowers.

Record Payola

A former director for artist relations at one of the nation's major recording houses in New York recently told federal investigators his company spent more than $150,000 a year on payola to black radio stations.

This is not a new turn; this racket has been in existence for decades now—and has been exposed on previous occasions. The idea is to pay disc jockeys and others unethical enough to accept bribes to get them to play certain records.

While there can be doubt over the accuracy of testimony, this nevertheless indicates payola still flourishes in the broadcasting industry. It probably explains, to some degree, the awful sounds on some radio stations.

Good, proven music isn't square. Beautiful melodies, great arrangements from the past, are as good today as they ever were. Only rarely can some young genius equal them. Instead of so many novelty sounds, contortions and screams, from young aspirants who try to improve our musical heritage, we should hear more proven music on our stations. Perhaps ten per cent modern, weirdo stuff. But one wonders if even that amount wouldn't be hard to take day after day.

JACK ANDERSON'S WEEKLY SPECIAL

NO HELP FROM BARRY

by Jack Anderson

(Copyright, 1973, by United Feature Syndicate, Inc.)

Washington—Of all the Watergate critics, the one who worries President Nixon the most is Sen. Barry Goldwater. The plainspoken Goldwater is the voice of the Republican conservatives, whose support the President seeks for his Watergate alibi.

His excuse for bringing the Watergate ringleaders, G. Gordon Liddy and E. Howard Hunt, into the White House was that a secret anti-subversive squad was needed to combat radicals and revolutionaries.

The President's strategy, according to those privy to it, was to raise the national security issue. He hoped the conservatives, with their strong sense of patriotism, would respond to this in a loud chorus. It was important to the President, therefore, to sell his national security argument to the Goldwater faction.

But from the first, Goldwater had misgivings about Watergate. His criticism of Nixon's silence, probably more than any other, caused the President to speak out on Watergate. Goldwater called upon him to take more decisive action.

The President solicitously asked for his recommendations. Goldwater urged him to bring more experienced politicians into the White House to fill the vacancies in the federal leadership and to rejuvenate the government departments.

The President quickly appointed two political veterans, Mel Laird and Bryce Harlow, as top White House advisers. The President also started filling the vacancies and took steps to rejuvenate his administration.

Our sources say the President then made a strong pitch to Goldwater to take up the national security cry. We phoned Goldwater who denies the President put any pressure on him. Goldwater accepts the national security alibi in part, but also believes the President is using it to justify the unjustifiable.

Government Eavesdropping: Much has been said during the Watergate affair about the team of "plumbers" President Nixon installed in the White House to plug the "leaks" of information that had been flowing out of his administration. The truth is that the gentle art of "plumbing" has been practiced by the federal government for years.

Virtually every government agency has a policy which permits the telephone conversations of its employes to be monitored. The official excuse is to insure that no information is given out which would endanger the "national security". The real reason, however, is that high-level government officials want to know which of their underlings are talking to newsmen.

Despite all the disclaimers to the contrary, the federal government claims the right to listen in on its employes' phone conversations at any time. The practice has become so common at the Pentagon, for example, that the brass hats recently felt compelled to announce in a memo that 42 phones in the building were tap-free. These were the telephones used by reporters in the Pentagon press room.

"...And sometimes just for sheer excitement, I'll fold, spindle, and mutilate an occasional bill!"

Now that it is known their phones are secure, reporters on the military beat tell me, they expect to be swamped with requests from Pentagon personnel wanting to make personal phone calls.

Reluctant Regulators: The Federal Aviation Administration is supposed to look out for the safety of air travelers. Instead, it is usually more interested in befriending some of the companies it is supposed to regulate.

The FAA, for example, obligingly changed its rules last year to allow air carriers to stow more radioactive material in commercial cargo compartments, although pilots had been fighting to get the FAA to reduce the legal amount. The pilots have told us that the radioactive material poses a more serious threat to passenger safety than hijacking. A District Court recently forced the FAA to change its decision and lower the amount of radioactive material in passenger planes.

The FAA might not be too vigilant when it comes to passenger safety, but they are really on top of things when it comes to their own comfort. FAA chief Alex Butterfield hopped on the agency's Jetstar to travel in style to the Paris air show recently instead of taking a commercial jet. But a more flagrant violator is chief of aircraft programming Jimmy Vines. Vines spent a week-end recently vacationing in South Carolina. Instead of paying his own way home like anyone else, Vines called on his subordinates to provide the transportation.

An FAA plane was dispatched from Washington to pick him up, but on the return leg, it ran into some trouble. The plane blew a cylinder and an emergency landing was required at the Greenville-Spartanburg airport. Another plane was sent down, with its crew drawing overtime from the government, to pick up Vines.

As I See It

It was a wonderful thing for the members of the District 2-T2 Lions Clubs to make it possible for several thousand young people to attend the All-America Game last Saturday evening at Jones Stadium here. It is a great thing when there are organizations as the Lions Club who are concerned about extending a helping hand to our young people.

Although there were millions around the nation who viewed the All America Classic, there were none happier than those youngsters from Lubbock who had an opportunity to see the color of this annual classic.

We, at the West Texas Times, are thrilled over the fact that Lubbock will again be the site of the annual game. We hope that we can continue to work with those persons in the Lions organization who worked so diligently to make this annual affair a success.

From this writer's point of view, the game last Saturday evening at Jones Stadium was perhaps the largest attendance of black people to attend a fete at Jones Stadium. This is good, and thanks that there are those who are concerned about helping others have opportunities in this day and time.

The West Texas Times was more than happy to see that several thousand young people would have an opportunity to become a viewer at last Saturday evening's event. We are also glad to be a part of a growing community that is moving forward.

Thanks again Lions Club for making life a little bit brighter for some young people who wouldn't have had an opportunity. I hope your organization will continue to move in the right direction in helping your fellow man. Of course I can't really express how young people appreciated what you've done. I can say, however, that you will never be forgotten for your concern for your fellow men in Lubbock and the world.

As one of the many hosts during the All American week activities, this writer was most fortunate to be host for Sam "Bam" Cunningham of the University of Southern California. Sam, a tremendous athlete, is a splendid person and is concerned about doing something for the black community.

As he told me, "I was born a poor boy, but I will make it someday and help those persons who are less fortunate than me." I enjoyed hearing Sam talk about his little brothers who were always awaiting his return home. As many of you may know, Sam was the one who scored four (4) touchdowns in the Rose Bowl Game last January.

A fine gentleman, he contributed a great deal to this year's All American Classic. He enjoyed being a part of something which would help his fellow man. He was voted as a recipient for the Ernie Davis Award and showed his leadership on and off the field of play.

Although our paths may never cross again, I can say that Sam Cunningham is truly an All American, on and off the field of play. I would like to thank the efforts of all athletes for their concern for sportsmanship while in our city.

Eastern Little League will need the support of all concerned as they prepare for a tournament which will be held July 16 and 17. As parents, friends and patrons, let's get behind this important effort for our young people.

The Eastern Little League has one of the finest diamonds in the city, and with your support, it can become the best little league field in the city. Of course, it'll take a great deal to make this tournament go. With the help of all persons concerned, it will be a great success.

Let's not let anything stop us from having a great tournament in East Lubbock at the Eastern Little League Park. I realize that the league will need some financial assistance. If you are a member of a local social club or church and would like to help with this effort, then please contact an official of the Eastern Little League. Give the Eastern Little League your complete support.

After we've given our support, both financially and morally, let's all go out to the games on July 16 and 17. I am sure you will enjoy yourself. Help the Eastern Little League go over big, with your attendance and money. For further information concerning what you can do, contact Dr. F.L. Lovings.

A Walk Through Green - Fair Manor

It appears as though the City of Lubbock Sanitation Department has never swept this area with its street sweepers. In the background is a glimpse of a dumpster which covers the curb area. Tenants are seen taking their trash and rubbish to this dumpster where it falls off in the gutter as you can see. Really, is this a good place for a dumpster?
(Staff Photo)

At one time this was a playground area for our young people in the Green-Fair Manor Apartments. Now, the sand box is used for trash which is sometimes burned by tenants. Our young people are suffering, because the lack of recreational facilities in this complex. In the background is a glimpse of a dumpster which is fasionable in the area.(Staff Photo).

Green - Fair Needs Help

by T.J. Patterson

There's no question about it, the Green-Fair Manor Apartments are in bad shape and something must be done about it if this Public Housing program will continue to exist in East Lubbock. As you can see from the pictures on this page, there needs to be something done about this situation NOW!!

This writer, along with two other friends, had an opportunity last Saturday morning to go by these apartments and get a close-up look on the conditions of the predominately black tenant apartment complex in East Lubbock. With a wrecking yard in the back yard of this project, which was developed for low-income people, the public housing concept is completely lost. From what this writer saw last week, East St. Louis, Il. doesn't have anything on Green-Fair Manor. It's saying a heck of a lot when we say that the City of Lubbock has let this monster exist and nothing being done about its condition.

Who's to blame for such a situation in East Lubbock? Well, it is really not hard to say. It appears as though these apartments are lacking two of the basic functions of management—organization and control. They appear to be loosely operated at a minimum amount of cost, financially. No one apparently gives a "hoot" about the welfare of people who reside in this area.

On the other side of the coin, those tenants who reside in Green-Fair Manor and destroy the efforts of such a housing project should be removed from the complex. It is not totally management, for people too, are responsible for the welfare of the local housing project. Those persons who refuse to comply with the guidelines of the complex should be told in some manner that their negative efforts are not needed. It will take a strong manager, with the assistance of the Local Housing Board, to put those persons in the right frame of thinking.

In looking at one unit of the complex (as you can see from the photos), which was vacant at the present time, it would appear as though management would utilize its authority to at least clean up this vacant area. You talk about rodents or rats (and I really mean rats) in the vacant apartment, well, they are there in numbers. It is a wonder East Lubbock hasn't complained to the City-County Health Department about the rat problem, because they (rats or mice) have a perfect place to breed.

One tenant told this writer that they can't get necessary insecticides from the Lubbock City-County Health Department to take care of this rodent problem. In talking to this person, she said: "They tell us that they don't have enough for us to take care of the rat problem." If this is the case, then something must be done to see that we have enough insecticides to take care of this emergency problem in East Lubbock or anywhere the problem exists.

The Green-Fair Manor situation has been written before in the West Texas Times, but to no avail, nothing has been done about the terrible situation. Two mayors, Dr. James Granberry (a recent announced candidate for Governor of Texas on the Republican ticket) and Morris

Green-Fair Manor is equipped with a sprinkler system which hasn't been used for years. This finger is pointing to a system which could help the area a great deal. Wouldn't it be a good investment if the management would do something about this system so there could be grass in the area as it once was.

"Moe" Turner, are familiar with the Green-Fair Manor situation and have visited the area. I am sure they will agree with me when I say something Must be done about the situation Now. We can't continue to hide this situation.

Recently, according to the information I have received, there have been recommendations made to correct the situation, but nothing has happened as of yet. Recommendations aren't worth a dime unless they are implemented. This writer will see to it that those recommendations will be printed in this newspaper as soon as possible, so our readers will get an idea of what is being recommended in our community. Sometimes we don't know exactly what is going on.

Public Housing has a tough new boss on the national front. He is H.R. Crawford, who believes that if tenants refuse to behave, "Give them a 30-day notice." Either they stop their destruction within 30 days, or they will be evicted. Start with one, and you'll set an example," he says.

If Brother Crawford could see what is happening in Green-Fair Manor, I wonder what his reaction would be. If he is that strong about tenants, then I'm sure his concern about management would be even stiffer.

During my visit in the complex last Saturday, I saw a pretty little girl playing in front of this dirty, filthy vacant apartment. It bothered me that the young child (approximately 8 years old) would either cut herself or be bitten by a rodent in the area.

Not only should the finger be pointed at management, but at tenants of Green-Fair Manor who are destroying the complex. If there are those who could care less about the complex, then I say let's do something to correct this situation.

Another thing worth mentioning is the way those dumpsters are parked in front of the apartments. This is a very unpleasant situation and it doesn't help the situation. This newspaper learned that there's not enough money to hire enough manpower to keep this situation up as it should be. This being the case, then let's find a means to find monies to keep this project up as it should.

What's needed is for Brother Crawford, who is Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, to know our problem with Green-Fair Manor. He, along with the Secretay, needs to know what is going on in Lubbock in regard to Public Housong. If this doesn't help, then all concerned citizens of Lubbock, needs to inform U.S. House of Representatives in Washington, D.C., with special attention to the Honorable George Mahon, on what is happening to Green-Fair Manor. As taxpayers we can't continue to let this situation happen. Something has to be done. I am sure there are others in the United States of America who would say that their area is worse than ours. What I would say is, they haven't seen Green-Fair Manor Apartments.

Although Lubbock is a city of only 149,000 people, we still have enough problems in the housing aspect to take care of 800,000 residents. As the largest minority race in America, let's pay attention to what is going on in our community. If Lubbock can continue to grow in the southwest area, surely we can bring our problems to the light. Green-Fair Manor is in a bad situation. Let's all pitch in and do something about it. If you walk through Green-Fair Manor, you will see the same things I did, or perhaps more.

Police Beat

Assault With Intent To Commit Murder

A strange thing happened to Curtis Shipley, 2407 Weber Drive, Apt. B, one night last week. You see, Brother Shipley was assaulted at a "beer joint" at East 37th Street and Yucca Avenue.

He told police that he was at this "beer joint" when he was attacked by an unknown person.

It was learned that he was stabbed one time in the left shoulder. He was taken to Methodist Hospital where he was treated and released.

House Burglary

Buelah Parker, 2511 Weber Drive, Apt. D, reported to the Lubbock Police Department that someone took a 12 inch television set from her living room one day last week. It was valued at approximately $60.

Also taken from the apartment were 13, 45 rpm records valued at $1 each. Parker admits that she had no idea who could have taken the items.

Burglary

Edward L. Nelson, 2608 Weber Drive, Apt. C, reported to the Lubbock Police Department that persons unknown did enter his apartment through a window to gain entry.

Taken from the apartment was a cassette tape player valued at $114. Also taken were a .38 caliber pistol and an old suitcase.

House Burglary

Jewell Miller, 3316 East 17th Street, reported to the Lubbock Police Department that persons unknown did break into his house one night last week. Entry was apparently gained, according to the police report, by kicking the back kitchen door open.

Taken from the house was an eight-track stereo player. There were also 9 or 10 tapes of assorted music (Soul Style) taken. The items were valued at approximately $250.

Miller informed Lubbock Police that this tape player was stolen previously this year in the 1300 block of East 17th Street. Man, you must have a swinging player.

Short Change Artist

James McGaha, Route 7, Lubbock, who operates a service station at 512 Idalou Road, told Lubbock Police that two men came into his service station and did their thing on him.

He said one of the men asked for a fuse and paid for it with a $20 bill. The slick fellow then asked if he could have the $20 bill back and pay a different way. McGaha agreed, and this is when he got taken.

One of the men asked for the change back and McGaha asked for the change he had given.

There was some sort of a mixup and one of the men managed to get $10 extra from McGaha.

According to McGaha, the men left in a hurry. If you ask McGaha, he will tell you that you can be gotten in a hurry.

Assault

Sammie Richard, 809 David Street, was a mad brother one night last week. He told Lubbock Police that an unknown man, approximately 50 years old, came up to him and asked him to take him home. He (Richard) told the man he didn't have a car; therefore, he could not take him home.

At this time, the man hit Richard in the mouth with an unknown sharp object. Richard suffered a deep cut, running from his right nostril through his lip.

Richard told police that he did not know where the man lives. "I have never seen the man," admits Richard.

The incident happened at the Checker Board Lounge, East Main and David.

Mae Kathryn was quite excited and anxious to go as this was her first flight. Her mother was pleased to know she made the trip safely.

Mr. and Mrs. Jackie Graves and son, Jackie, Jr., returned to their home in Houston Sunday after being here several days. Jackie, a scout for the Philadelphia Eagles (National Football League), was here in the interest of the All American Football Classic. Calvin H. Raullerson Receives Appointment As Executive Assistant to Texas Tech Dean

The appointment of Calvin H. Raullerson as executive assistant to the dean of the Texas Tech University School of Medicine and special assistant to the President on International Programs was announced Tuesday (June 12) by Texas Tech University President Grover E. Murray.

Raullerson, who comes to Texas Tech with high recommendations from the people with whom he has worked, is a consultant to the Phelps-Stokes Fund, management development consortium in Washington, D.C.

The Phelps-Stokes Fund is an alliance of several education service groups for predominately black colleges.

Raullerson formerly was the director of the African Region for the Peace Corps with offices in Washington. In this capacity he was responsible for management of Peace Corps operations in 22 African countries and was senior policy adviser to the director of the Peace Corps.

"Mr. Raullerson has earned great respect from his 10 years of active involvement with governmental leaders at home and abroad and with educators, artists, writers, and businessmen," Dr. Murray said.

"He has both the warmth necessary for working with others and a sophisticated approach to administrative affairs," the President said. "The five-year limitation of service with the Peace Corps gives Texas Tech an unusual opportunity to employ his talents in our developing programs."

COCU (Consultation on Church Union) meeting in Memphis, Tennessee in a 1973 plenary session recently set a new course for its efforts to bring unity to eight national Protestant denominations. The session also revealed a general reluctance to accept the organizational structure proposed for a united Church.

A plan of union for a singler church—"Catholic, Evangelical and reformed" which was the idea advanced nearly fifteen years ago by Dr. Eugene Carson Black, which seemed so promising several years ago, is now perhaps years away if ever. Simple reason seems to be that no major denomination is willing to lose its identity in a "merged" Church. There would be too many possible jobs as moderators, bishops, secretaries, general officers etc. lost. Who was it that said: "Self preservation is the first law of nature?"

The COCU plenary elected Bishop Frederick D. Jordan of Hollywood, California, director of urban ministries and ecumenical relations for the African Methodist Episcopal Church, as chairman for the next two years of COCU. He succeeds Dr. George G. Beazley Jr., of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ).

At a press conference, Bishop Jordan said church union is not only possible but "is the will of God. Eventually there will be union but God has not told us yet what the dates are".

In this connection it is important to point out that in spite of endless duplication in support of higher education (black owned and operated church-oriented colleges); shrinking operating budgets owing to huge overhead expenditures for bishops and general officers salaries; declining membership rolls, especially in smaller urban and rural areas; plans for union of the three major Black Methodist denominations (A.M.E.), (A.M.E. Zion), and (C.M.E.) remain on the drawing boards after more than five decades. Of course there are pockets of ecumenical thought and leadership in Black Methodist circles but in a definite minority status. And the struggle for survival goes on and on as in COCU. As one bellringer put it: "Unlike the business world, it seems the religious arena is not a good field for modern and advanced business practices. It's too highly a personal and emotional issue." We add: Maybe it is a case of "you can have the world, but give me the church of Allen, Miles and Varick".

Still it may not be too late to heed the great prayer request of Him who long ago cried out: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; That they all may be one, even as we are one". St. John 17:20-22.

If ever Black Methodists needed a new Moses to lead to the realization of this great supplication of the Master, it is Now, so many believe.

"You see, being a working man who writes books is my style. If I had been formally educated I probably would not have written my books," states 70 year old Eric Hoffer, who is a self-educated philosopher author of seven books. He adds, "my writing is about such things as honor, faith, hope, desire. I tell you about what is right there under your nose but you don't know anything about it. I tell you about it because I think I know about it." The title of his latest book is "Reflections On The Human Condition" a collection of aphorisms and philosophical comment.

More than a dozen prominent black figures in the contemporary literature of nine countries are in Kansas City, Missouri for the first Mid-American "Institute for African and Caribbean Writings in English". Nearly a dozen nations of the world are represented. The Institute will attempt to clarify the relationship of contemporary African and Caribbean writings in English to the world-wide tradition of English writing.

Editorial Quotes from the Black Press: "It was a great day not only in Los Angeles but all over the nation when Thomas Bradley was elected mayor of the country's third largest city. His election brought pride and gratification to millions of Black Americans all over the land and will serve as an inspiration to young blacks who too often are heard to say, "we don't have a chance". Black, white, brown and young voters of Los Angeles have given Bradley the chance that he said he wanted, and we are confident that in the next four years the new black mayor will justify their faith in him." End of quote from The Kansas City Call.

Sports of The Times

by Joe Kelly

Okay, so I lied a little last week. I said that I'd write about the Adirondack Mountains, then I went on a business trip for the Texas Safety Administration and stumbled on some information that I think is even more interesting.

How many times have you stuck your bait bucket on the counter at some marina and ordered a couple dozen or more minnows? Probably more times than you can remember.

Someone scooped the minnows out of a tank, aerated your water and took your money. You lugged the bucket to the boat, went on your merry way and probably never gave the transaction a second thought—especially if you caught some fish.

I was typical, never giving it a thought until, with night time hours to kill, I decided to drop out to Green Belt Lake and see B.J. Mooring.

Instead, I met Arlis Mooring, who told me that B.J. had had a heart attack just four days earlier and was in the hospital. B.J., known to a lot of Lubbock fishermen, had a pretty bad attack and will be in the hospital for at least a week or more.

Anyway, Arlis and I talked fishing. He is a salesman for an Amarillo sporting goods store and generally only fills in on weekends. Now he's taking up the slack for several days.

He told me that the channel cat fishing was good, with a lot of catches each day. The bass are intermittent, generally in the 3 to 4 pound class, with a few larger ones being taken. But none as large as the one B.J. caught earlier this year.

"They're taking some pike," Arlis allowed, "but you're never going to catch many at one time. If you get one, that's about it. I wouldn't say the pike fishing was good, but it's not bad."

Water in the lake is still up, despite the fact that several thousand gallons have to be emptied into the creek below the dam each day. As summer wears on, the level will drop maybe three feet, primarily because of evaporation.

As we talked, I glanced idly at the minnows. Two or three customers had come in and taken a couple of dozen and some had ordered water dogs. I asked Arlis about the minnows and where he got them. That touched off a reply that astounded me.

Arlis said that there are only about two places in the United States where you can get minnows—Arkansas and Louisiana. Some are raised elsewhere, but the best come from these two states.

The minnows are what I used to call Shiners. "That's right," Arlis said, "they are Shiners, Golden Shiners. If you let them, they'd grow to two or three pounds."

How in the world do you buy minnows?
"We send a truck to a 'farm' about 30 miles from Little Rock once a week during the season and bring back 400 pounds of minnows each time," he answered.

Four hundred pounds? Who counts them? I was kidding, of course, but ignorance showed through.

"We buy them by the pound," he replied. "They're weighed just like you'd weigh a bale of cotton."

Further discussion informed me that, on a good weekend—Friday through Sunday—it wasn't unusual for the Moorings to sell as many as 20,000 minnows! It sounds incredible at first, until you realize the number of fishermen and their demands on the minnow tank.

"Water dogs are the most popular bait, though," Arlis said. "We sell a lot of them and that's where we make the most profit. Right now we get most of our water dogs from Brownfield. Later, we'll have some around here, but that's the best place for them now."

As for the minnows, the turnover is so high that they aren't fed during the summer. When late fall and winter come, they are given food. The Moorings have good success in keeping them going.

In addition to the tanks inside the marina store, there are larger tanks right behind the store and even more up on the hillside. What about the water?

"It takes a particular kind of water," he said. "All our water comes from our own wells and it's pure. If you put them in lake water, it would make a big difference in their survival. The water in Arkansas and Louisiana is particularly suited for minnows."

I could go on, but space prevents, such as the Arkansas minnow "farm" covering six acres, minnows being shipped in transports, like milk carriers, etc.

But this ought to suffice for now. Next week, as promised, some comments and descriptions of the Adirondack Mountains and vacation.

Nine Black Muslims Convicted in 1972 Shooting Deaths

Baton Rouge, La.—(NBNS)—It took a jury of 11 whites and one black just two hours to find nine black Muslims guilty of inciting to riot in connection with a shooting last year which ended with five persons killed.

Convicted of inciting or participating in a riot in which deaths occurred, the Muslims face penalties of up to 21 years in prison.

Although they are scheduled to be sentenced later this week, the Muslims also face murder charges in the incident, in which two sheriff's deputies and three blacks were killed in a face-to-face shootout Jan. 10, 1972, after a Muslim sponsored rally on a downtown street.

Only three of them were convicted with unanimous votes. They all agreed on the guilt of Clennon Brown, 26, of Chicago; Toussaint L. Hale, 22, of Chicago and John Devine, 26, of Vallejo, Calif.

The other men, who were apparently convicted by at least nine of the 12 members of the state court jury, were Robert Barber, 21; Ronald Crawford, 23; Daniel McKinney, 23, and James McMath, 29, all of Chicago; John Bell, 24, of Philadelphia, and Lawrence Brooks 26, of Vallejo, Calif.

In making his summation, District Attorney Ossie Brown charged the Muslims came to Baton Rouge with every intention of creating a confrontation.

"They did incite," he told the jury. "And after they got that kicked off, a full-blazed war, they participated in it all the way."

Three other Muslims, who were arrested, are still to be tried. Another has pleaded guilty and testified for the state. A fifth Muslim is still at large.

Defense attorney Murphy Bell asked the jury to disregard "vague and ambiguous rhetoric," contending that the state never really proved conspiracy or intention to riot.

BIG CATCH ON THE TRINITY—If you ask Fletcher Hicks, of 2909 East Colgate, at right, he'd say that this is a "big catch." He is holding two fine catches—an 8 and a 15-pound catfish.

Sam Garrett of Jacksonville, Texas, was with Hicks at Trinity River earlier this month.

He said that the trouble occurred when officers tried to break up a rally and a policeman threw a punch.

Motive

"You say you came to the city to look for work. I put it to you there was another, a stronger motive, that brought you all that distance."

"Well," hesitated, the defendant, "there was."

"Ah!" cried the young barrister, triumphantly. "And what was that?"

"A locomotive."

Raullerson earned his bachelor's degree in economics and political science and graduated with honors from Lincoln University in Pennsylvania. His master of Public Administration Degree was earned at New York University where Raullerson was a Robeson Fellow. He has taken additional graduate work in government at Harvard University.

He began his career as director of Educational Services, United Negro College Fund, Inc., New York. In this position, he was responsible for the fund's fellowship, scholarship and testing programs and served as one of the technical experts on fund raising with the foundation's gifts committee.

He later was executive director of the American Society for African Culture (AMSAC), an organization engaged in social, cultural and educational exchange between the U.S. and African countries. His first AMSAC assignment was to survey the feasibility of establishing a West African Branch of AMSAC, and he later helped establish the center in Lagos, Nigeria.

Raullerson promoted the development of West African programs and organized a highly successful First World Festival of the Performing Arts in Lagos.

He subsequently assumed responsibility as executive director in New York where he developed and administered programs for cultural exchange, education, conferences and seminars, publications, language library development and assistance to artists, writers and theater development.

When he joined the Peace Corps, Raullerson was made chief of the east and southern African programs. He later became director of the program in Kenya where the basic purpose was to provide technical assistance to the Kenyan government in areas of social and economic development.

The Peace Corps operation in Kenya had a fairly large paramedical educational program and was responsible for placing some medical specialists, Raullerson said.

Earlier in his career he worked as a free lance journalist covering the First Conference on African Unity in Addis Ababa and the second in Cairo. His articles on these conferences appeared in publications of the American Society of African Culture.

In 1952, he served as associate editor of Who's Who in the United Nations.

In making the announcement, Dr. Murray quoted Kevin O'Donnell, former head of the Peace Corps, who said that Raullerson "has great managerial talent" and "my unqualified endorsement."

The politicians have convinced us that some of them have to be liars.

Burden of Support Falls More Heavily on Black Mothers

Washington—Three times as many black children (43%) as white (14%) live in families where the father is absent, unemployed or out of the labor force, according to a special study conducted by the U.S. Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The findings are reported in an article printed in the April issue of the Monthly Labor Review published by the Bureau.

The article notes that among families headed by women, 55 percent of the white children, as contrasted to 44 percent of the black children, had working mothers.

Anne M. Young, the author, attributes the workforce differences to several factors:

"Relatively more of the Negro than white families had pre-school children, which restricts the possibility of work outside the home. Only a third of Negro women who head families had at least a high school education, compared with slightly more than half of the white women who were family heads in 1971. With the increasing credentialism in recent years, the lack of a high school diploma or other certified training was at least a partial barrier to the employment for these women."

In one respect, there was no difference between blacks and whites. Whether white or black, income in families that women head is much lower than income among families headed by men. Of five million white children in fatherless families in March 1972, 30 percent were in families whose 1971 income was less than $3,000, and 24 percent in the next income bracket, $3,000 to $4,999. Comparable proportions for white children in husband-wife families were two and five percent.

Of the 2.9 million Negro children in fatherless families, 39 percent were supported on less than $3,000 a year and 33 percent were in the next broad income group. Comparable proportions for Negro children in husband-wife families were six and 13 percent.

The report observes historically a much higher proportion of Negro than white children are in families in which the mother goes out to work. As of March 1972, 51 percent of the black children under 18, compared to 37 percent of white children had a mother in the labor force. The difference reflects in part the greater economic pressure on many Negro wives to supplement the often low earnings of their husbands, the report says.

For both blacks and whites, the labor force participation of mothers has brought significant economic benefits to their families. When the mother worked, median family income was $12,990, if the father was employed; $9,290 when he was unemployed, and $8,010 when he was not in the labor force.

The labor force status of the mother in families headed by women made a financial difference to her family: median income was $5,795 if she was employed, $3,230 if she was not. Families with neither parent in the work force had a median income of $4,920.

A number of factors, including a declining birth rate, are propelling more and more mothers into the work force.

No fifths this Fourth.

There used to be a saying at Fourth of July picnics that fireworks and fire-water don't mix. Well, neighborhood fireworks are pretty much a thing of the past. So this year let's keep in mind that driving, drinking and speeding don't mix either.

That's what we mean by "No fifths this Fourth." All it takes is a little driving, a little drinking and a little speeding—and you've got the ingredients for big trouble.

This Fourth if you want to drink, get somebody else to drive. And take your time. That's DRIVING FRIENDLY.
