Sister Regina Foppe Attends NETWORK Legislative Seminar

"An appropriate way to understand the world is through a value perspective." Keynoting NETWORK's sixth legislative seminar, Saul Mendlovitz, president of the Institute for World Order, described those values needed for a new social order: promotion of peace, economic well-being, social justice and ecological balance at home and abroad.

Sister Regina Foppe, O.L.V.M., Director of the Social Action Service of the Diocese of Amarillo, joined participants from 35 states in the week-long seminar on Capitol Hill, June 19-26. This is her fifth year of participation. Designed to give the 228 participants an experience of the legislative process as well as a knowledge of issues, the seminar provided them with the opportunity to lobby for just legislation in food policy, employment, economic justice, disarmament, and human rights. Participants attending their third seminar and/or who had worked with NETWORK as interns participated further in Track II with additional workshops on the Social Encyclicals, establishment of credit unions in neighborhoods, and on organizing vs manipulating people.

Congresspersons, legislative aides, administrative officials, and public interest group representatives addressed the participants on a variety of issues, including nuclear energy and jobs, worker participation, defense spending, and human rights. Among the speakers, James Jeffords of Vermont spoke on a variety of food policy issues, one small portion of which is to remove the purchase requirement on food stamps which will allow 50 percent more of the low-income wage earners and their families to participate in the program while under the same guidelines eliminating 30 percent of the present recipients above the poverty level.

Seminar delegates attended Congressional hearings, visited Representatives and Senators, observed Congress in session, and participated in "how to" sessions on political involvement.

NETWORK, a religious lobby for social justice, focuses on relating national legislation to social justice issues. Under the direction of an eight-member Washington staff, this national "grass roots" 3,000 member organization works to make legislation more responsive to the concerns of all people, particularly, the powerless and the poor. While its membership is primarily sisters, priests, married deacons, and lay persons inbred with gospel values, are welcome into their ranks.

With the seating of single black and white delegations from Mississippi and Louisiana at its annual convention, the National Education Association today completes 13 years of intensive effort to end racially separate teacher organizations in the South.

Louisiana teachers have voted to consolidate their separate organizations by Dec. 1, 1977, forming the Louisiana Association of Educators. Mississippi teachers merged dual affiliates following the national convention in 1976. The two states are the last of 11 to elect to consolidate since 1964.

Since unification in 1966, the Texas State Teachers Association has organized more than 20 school districts and almost 500 local human relations committees to help eliminate educational neglect in the state.

From a base of $4,104 in 1966, teacher salaries have climbed to a minimum of $8,000. Through its political action program, TSTA has sent many blacks to the legislature, and has supported those candidates who are friendly to education, regardless of race. Teachers now lead all other professions in America by having unified their divided membership into strong, united groups working toward common goals. With this historic opening of NEA's 115th Annual Meeting, President John Ryor noted that the completion of merger "is a testimony to the strength and vitality of (the Representative Assembly), and to the courage and foresight of the men and women who make up our professional association. It further demonstrates our commitment to the improvement of education for the children of America."

Ryor noted that teachers have long been in the vanguard of the civil rights movement in the South. For example, it was a courageous band of black Alabama teachers who helped set the stage for the celebrated civil rights march from Selma to Montgomery in 1965. In a subsequent Selma march, several teachers were clubbed, kicked, and gassed.

Within 24 hours of passage of the Civil Rights Act, NEA delegates, on July 3, 1964, mandated the elimination of separate teachers' associations. From its inception in 1857, membership in the NEA has always been open to qualified persons without regard to race. At that time, black teacher Robert Campbell became one of 43 charter members of the National Teachers' Association, forerunner of the NEA.

In 1965, Mrs. Elizabeth D. Koontz was installed as president of the former Department of Classroom Teachers of NEA, the first Black to hold this office. In 1968, the North Carolinian leaped to national prominence by becoming the first elected black NEA president.

The black American Teachers Association merged with NEA on June 28, 1966, just two years after the 1964 Civil Rights Act was passed, and 12 years after the U.S. Supreme Court attempted to ban "separate but equal" provisions nationally. Other professions, such as medicine, dentistry, and law now admit Blacks as members, but have parallel black organizations on both national and local levels.

The history of merger in 11 Southern states is a dramatic success story, marked by difficulties. In two states, state attorneys general placed NEA on their list of subversive groups during the long and often bitter merger negotiations.

Combining the previously separate black and white teacher organizations—which originally followed the segregated school patterns in the South—has brought together the separate strengths of each group.

Black teachers, for instance were deeply concerned with the legal rights of their members since job security for blacks was tenuous, at best. White teachers on the other hand, identified more closely with the white power structure and concentrated on lobbying legislators, an area blacks avoided before they realized their voting strength.

"Black Press Has Shaped Goals" Says ATT Vice Prexy

"The Black Press has not only reported the events of the Black community's journey toward the mainstream of American life, it has helped shape the goals, chart the course, and rally the resources and support," American Telephone and Telegraph Executive Vice President James E. Olson recently told the annual convention of the National Newspaper Publishers Association—Black Press of America in St. Louis, Mo.

"It has been a journey, clearly. And one that is not over," Olson said. "Like any journey—one can look backward and say, 'how far we have come.' Or look forward and say 'how far we still have to go'."

Assessing the Bell System's accomplishments with regard to minority employment, Olson said the number of Black managers has increased by almost 1,000 since 1972, and that minority employees now represent about eight per cent of the management force and 16 per cent of all employees. Additionally, the Bell System last year purchased $40 million worth of goods and services from more than 600 minority-owned businesses.

While the Black community has been making significant economic strides, the unhappy fact remains that a large segment of the Black community is not affluent and that many are at or below the poverty line, Olson said.

"And so it would seem to me that the Black community, in particular, has a stake in assuring that telephone service is something that most people can afford—that it does not become a luxury for a few," he commented.

Today, most Americans have telephone service in their homes—some 94.5 per cent—with 17 million of them with incomes below $6,000. This has been possible because the telephone industry—with the approval of state and federal regulators—has priced its services with that goal in mind, Olson said. By placing more of its costs on business users and those who use optional services, such as long distance, the industry has minimized the costs that had to be covered by the basic price of home telephone service.

"That kind of pricing is fine in a world where there is no competition," Olson said, "but we are no longer in that kind of world"—by virtue of various

Racial Quotas

An increasing chorus of protest against racial quotas is being heard across the nation. There seems to be widespread recognition that reverse discrimination is not helpful to blacks or whites, and probably harmful to both.

The sharpest protest against quotas comes in the area of college admissions. Most support applies to hiring. In recent years it has become fashionable for many educational and professional institutions to determine admissions on a racial quota basis. As a result, white students have often been denied admission though entrance examination grades were higher than those of some admitted.

The Supreme Court will rule this fall on the college admission question. It is the guess of many conservatives and liberals alike that reverse discrimination will be found unconstitutional.

One of the liberals who have objected to the present college admissions system, Larry Lavinsky, of New York, chairman of the civil rights committee of B'nai B'rith, recently appealed for an end to today's discriminatory system. He argues that the stakes are far too high in a society ridding itself of racial discrimination to accept the claim that the only way to achieve equality is by more racial discrimination.

Support from such quarters, and wide dissatisfaction with admissions quotas elsewhere, indicate the current mood in America—which, however, does not telegraph the high court's determination, and should not.

As I See It . . .

by T.J. Patterson

As taxpayers in the city of Lubbock, black people are not coming by the Lubbock Tax Office and understanding what's going on. This week, the Tax Equalization Board is in session to hear any questions you may have as a taxpayer in our city. Surely there are some questions we have about our taxes which should be brought to the attention of this board.

This is the second year for this writer to have an opportunity to sit on such a board. During this tenure, there has only been one black to come before this board in question of taxes.

As citizens, we should be more concerned about what is going on in our community, especially when it comes to taxation. You still have time this week to come before the Tax Equalization Board and ask questions. As I See It, it sure would make a lot of sense.

A good man in our community has passed on. This man was Roy D. Anderson, a good friend of this writer. He was an individual who had something to say and knew how and when to say it.

This writer had an opportunity over the past years of working with Roy in various community efforts. He was most concerned about east Lubbock and devoted many hard working hours to help make it a better part of the city.

A well read man, he will be missed by all of us. He was articulate when talking about education. He gave the Lubbock Public Schools a great deal of his life as teacher and counselor.

Not only was his talents utilized in the public school system, but he was one of the first directors of the Upward Bound Program at Texas Tech University. He served in this position parttime while a teacher/counselor at E.C. Struggs Junior High School.

Andy, as he was called by many, was a very good artist. He didn't talk much about his artistic ability with paints. This writer will never forget his efforts there, too.

This writer is happy to have had an opportunity to have known this man. He was my critic on many occasions. His advice was positive. He helped me as he has helped hundreds of others—young and old.

For Your Information: The name of the Texas Department of Public Welfare will change to the Texas Department of Human Resources, effective Sept. 1. Gov. Dolph Briscoe signed the bill providing for the change on June 16.

This writer is glad to see such a move. It will describe the works and efforts of this program in Texas. It tells this writer that this agency provides more services than giving monies each month. It should let Texans know that one of the biggest responsibilities of this agency is providing social services for Texans.

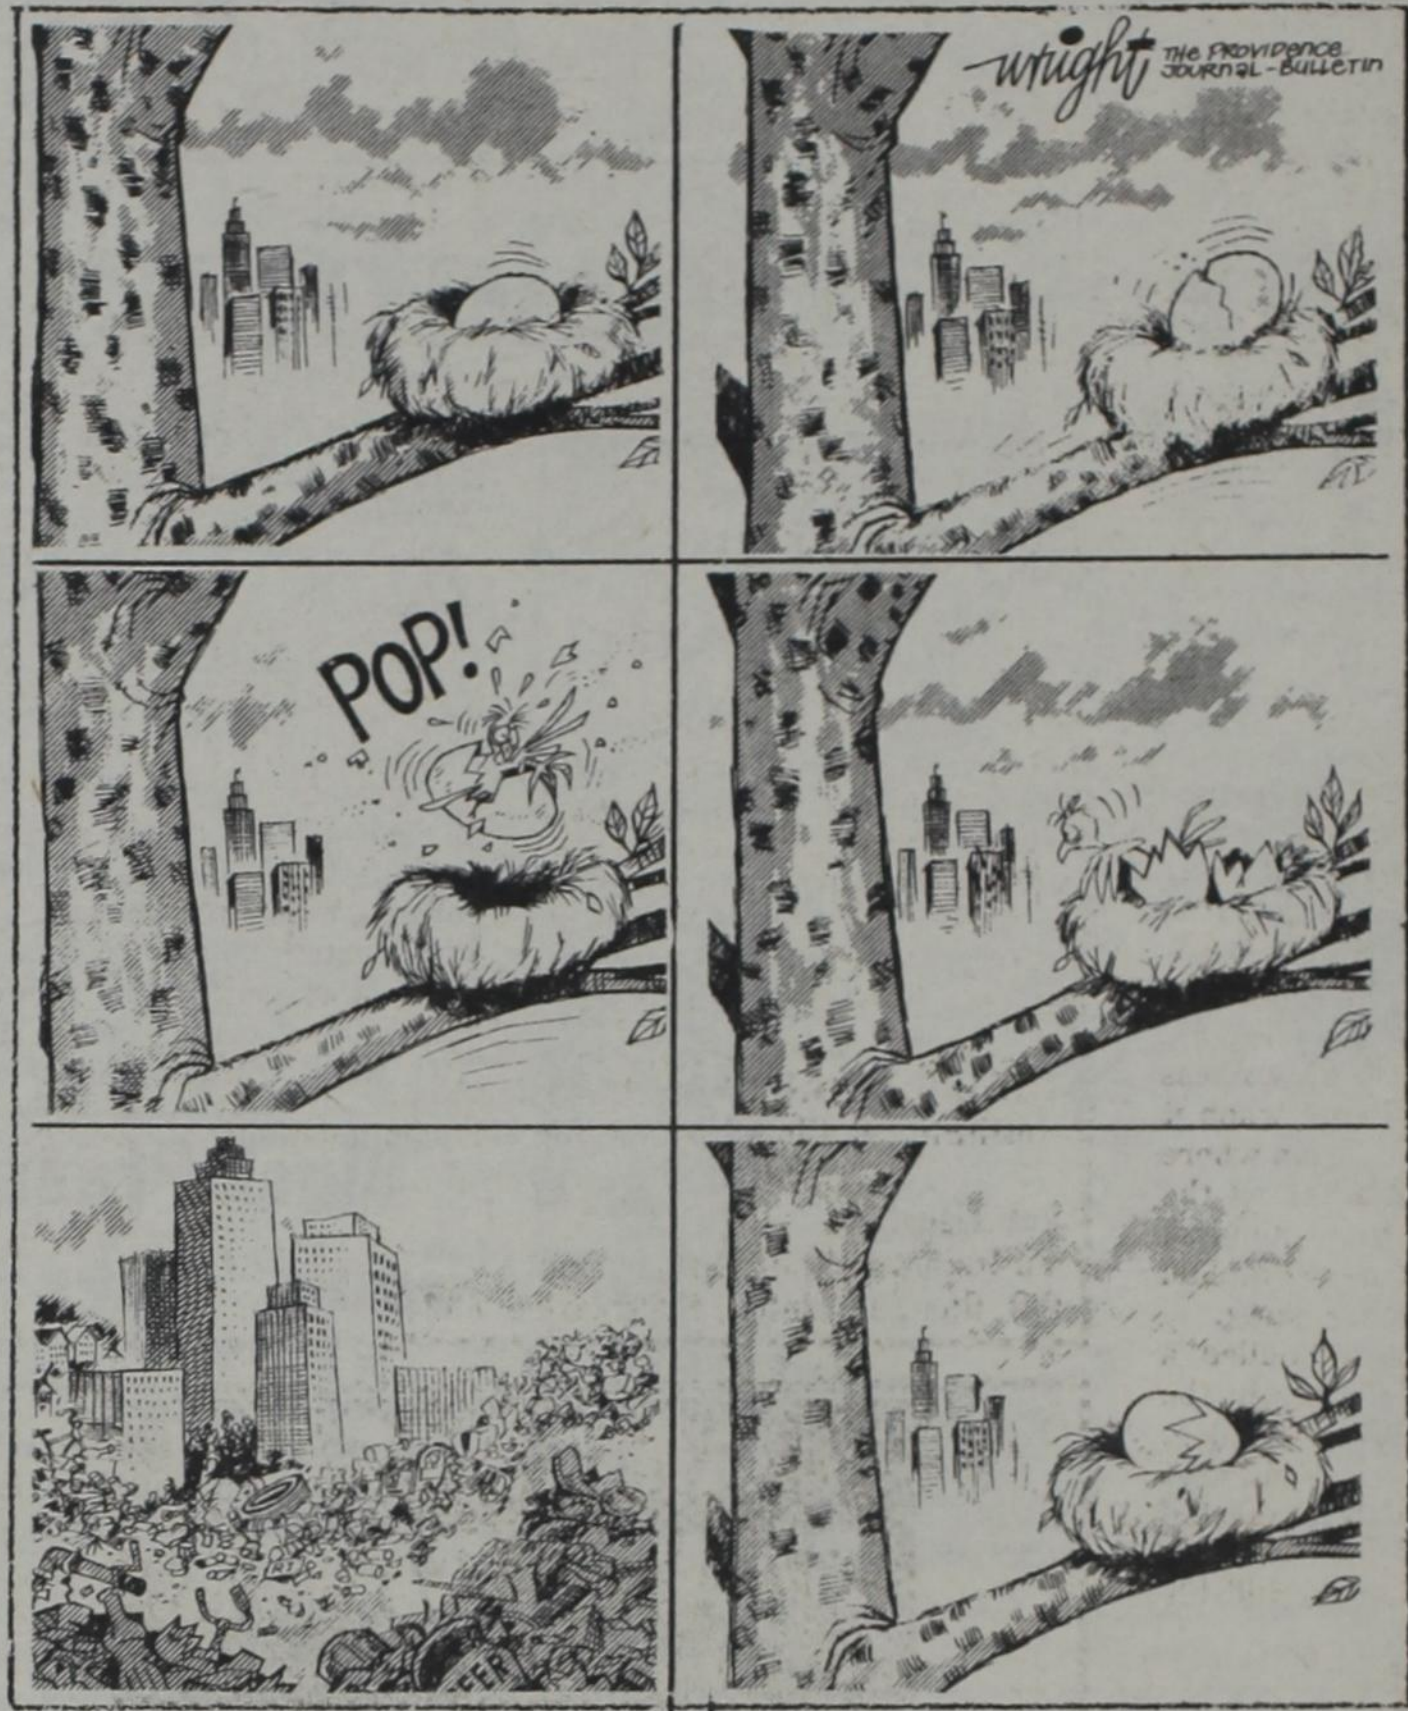

Some of those social services are assistance to abused and neglected children, assistance to needy children, assistance to low-income aged, blind and disabled adults.

Keep in mind that this agency is to prevent or forestall dependency now and in the future. It is not just an agency to dole out cash assistance as people are so easy to say.

Big business is doing something different. One of our largest oil companies began last week offering rewards of up to $5,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of anyone who robs one of their service stations in the company's Houston Division.

This oil corporation announced that it was installing maximum security equipment in many of its company operated self-service stations in the division, including bulletproof glass and steel base panels.

If this program proves to be successful, this writer predicts other oil corporations to do same.

Congressional Reform May Really Be Under Way

by Jack Anderson with Joe Spear

Copyright, 1977, United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

WASHINGTON — Don't hold your breath, but there may be some reforms on Capitol Hill.

We've been exposing congressional junkets for years, many of which were all-expense-paid vacations in official guise. Now the House Ethics Committee has called in a team of government accountants to investigate junkets.

The accountants will try to determine how many of the fact-finding missions were really pleasure trips. This might begin to curb the travel abuses.

The Senate's new code of ethics will also bar a retired senator, hereafter, from returning to Capitol Hill as a lobbyist for one year after he leaves office.

Unfortunately, the House hasn't yet adopted this reform. Lobbying has become a favorite occupation for defeated congressmen. For example, former Rep. James O'Hara, D.-Mich., was an outspoken supporter of the auto workers last year. He was defeated in a try for the Senate, and now has turned up as a lobbyist for General Motors.

Former Rep. Joseph Karth, D.-Minn., was a champion of the working class until he retired last year. He has returned to Capitol Hill as a lobbyist for General Electric.

These former members speak the language of Capitol Hill and are at home in its backrooms. They have easy access to their former colleagues and understand the intricacies of political dealing. Their past membership also gives them access to the exclusive cloakrooms and dining areas where the members lounge.

The Senate has at last slowed down the revolving door between Congress and the special-interest lobbies. The next move is up to the House.

Closed Societies: The world's two most closed countries are Cambodia and North Korea. The only information that leaks out is small diplomatic tidbits.

The secretive Cambodians, for example, have allowed only nine nations to establish embassies in Phnom Penh. The diplomats are kept under close scrutiny and are accompanied by escorts wherever they move.

Phnom Penh was once a bustling city with an active night life. Now it's a dreary, drab city. There's a joke making the rounds among the diplomats that a big night in Phnom Penh is when the North Koreans and North Vietnamese get together for a discussion on ideology.

Inside North Korea, dictator Kim Il Sung is always referred to as "respected and beloved." Every time his name appears in print, the words "respected and beloved" are added. So he has come to be known irreverently among the diplomats as "old R and B."

Kim also likes all his people to vote for him when he holds an election. Ballot boxes are even carried into the hospitals so that the sick and infirm can mark an "X" after Kim's name. Not surprisingly, he is always elected unanimously, with a 100 per cent voter turnout.

Coffepot Tempest: The price of coffee is beginning to ease down again, but still costs three times more than it did a year ago.

The Commodity Future Trading Commission is supposed to regulate the coffee market. But no one has been able to find out what the commission has done about the great coffee price jump.

So Congressman Fred Richmond, D.-N.Y., asked to see the commission's files to find out if the commission is investigating coffee prices. But Chairman William Bagley refused to open the files, claiming the coffee information was confidential.

Richmond then sought the support of his congressional colleagues to obtain the information from the commission. This enraged Bagley, who fired off a nasty letter to Richmond, accusing the congressman of using intimidating tactics.

Meanwhile, we still don't know whether the coffee shortage was real or whether coffee prices were rigged.

Carter's Mail: Letters have been blowing into the White House like leaves in a windstorm. President Carter has received letters from Americans of all descriptions.

We have seen some of the president's private mail. Most of the letters are friendly and folksy. Almost everyone, it seems, would like to have the president over for dinner or a visit. He receives more than 4,000 invitations a month.

One touching letter came from a home for the elderly in Cincinnati. It was written by the staff and told Carter that most of the residents depend on Medicare. A visit would mean so much to them, the letter said.

A first-grade class in New York sent the president a poster-sized invitation to attend their "ice cream social." A senior citizens group in Maryland asked Jimmy and Rosalynn to come to a "VERY senior prom."

An Allentown, Pa., couple invited the president to their son's birthday party and a Massachusetts bridegroom wants to take the Carters out for a night on the town with his new bride.

Almost all of these requests, of course, have to be turned down. The president doesn't have the time for very many social visits. But his private mail is beginning to convince us that his take-it-to-the-people campaign has caught on.

Theft Over $200

Albert James Patterson, 2720 Colgate Avenue, reported to Lubbock police that persons unknown came to his place of residence one day last week and took a good air conditioner from the stand it rested on. According to the police report, there was an old rusty air conditioner not taken.

Patterson has no idea who could have taken the air conditioner. He checked very closely to see if it was picked up by mistake.

Aggravated Assault

James Cooper, 708 Hub Homes, reported of an incident which happened to him one night last week. He told police he didn't go out looking for any trouble, but it seemed to have followed him.

According to the police report, Cooper was at a place of business at 1705 East 14th Street when it all started. He got up from where he was sitting and went to the bathroom for a few minutes. Upon his returning, he got into an argument with another party.

The man apparently pulled a knife and stabbed Cooper in the left upper part of his arm and leg. He was taken to Methodist Hospital where he was treated and released.

He told police that he will file charges this week.

Burglary of Vehicle

Willie Arthur Moore, 1908 East Colgate Avenue, reported to Lubbock police that sometimes during the night last Thursday, someone unknown gained entry to his pickup. Some of his property was taken.

Entry to the truck was apparently gained by prying the window vent latch on the right door to unlock the door.

After gaining entry, persons unknown removed a CB radio and tape player from inside the pickup. Taken from the back of the truck was a tool box containing over $200 worth of tools.

Approximately $570 worth of items were taken from Moore's pickup.

Criminal Mischief

Jimmy Davis Wilson, 2415 East 9th Street, reported to Lubbock police that persons unknown broke three wooden pickets on his fence one day last week.

Wilson, very angry about the incident, had no idea who could have been responsible for the damage. Approximately $5 worth of damage was done.

Burglary of School

Denver L. Samples, principal of Harwell Elementary School, reported to Lubbock police that persons unknown broke a window to gain entry to the school one day last week.

Once inside, the unknown persons took three cases of soda pop. The empty cases were left outside the window. This incident is believed to have been done by teenagers.

The soda pop was valued at approximately $15. Damage to the window is approximately $5.

decisions by the Federal Communications Commission opening up selected parts of the telephone industry to others.

The other firms, Olson said, do not provide home telephone service, but compete with the telephone industry in those services that have been priced above costs in order to keep home telephone rates low. By picking their spots, they can underprice the telephone companies on those services.

Clearly, Olson said, the logical effect is eventually to force the Bell System to reduce its rates on those services in order to compete.

"And if we are forced to do that, it means more of the costs of the business will have to shift onto the shoulders of the average home telephone user.

"In short, because of competition, home rates could be forced up substantially—and low income users would, of course, be hardest hit."

Because the consequences of the FCC's competitive policies have not been adequately assessed, Olson said, the telephone industry has brought the issue before the Congress. Currently, both the House and Senate are evaluating the role of competition in the industry and the future direction of national telecommunications policy.

"It is our view that telecommunications policy should continue to assure that home residence service is provided at as reasonable a price as possible."

Olson concluded his remarks by saying that the Black Press and the telephone industry "both face changing times and that we both will have to adapt to these changing times. But I also have no doubt of our endurance. As to my business and industry, I feel we can adapt.

"As to your business . . . I am confident it will endure on two accounts." The first, Olson said, was that the role of the Black Press remains essential in the struggle for equality. Second, "even when the last discriminatory barrier falls, I believe that the Black community's heritage is proud enough, its experience distinctive enough to always require a Black perspective on the world around us."

A member of the Greater Saint Luke Baptist Church, he worked in many community activities.

Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Lillian Anderson of the home; two sons, Brent, stationed with the U.S. Air Force in Germany, and Keith of the home; a daughter, Angela of the home; a brother, Earl Allen of Austin; and two sisters, Willa Simpson of Dallas and Lula Mae Anderson of Houston.

Mrs. Rosanna Harris sang "I've Done My Work", and the church choir sang "Jesus Keep Me Near the Cross."

Active pallbearers were Clarence Priestly, Jerry Caldwell, Roy Grimes, Arlee Jackson, Arthur Curry, and Garner Jordan. Honorary pallbearers were the Deacons of the Greater Saint Luke Student Council and Secondary Counselors.

Final Rites Read for Roy D. Anderson

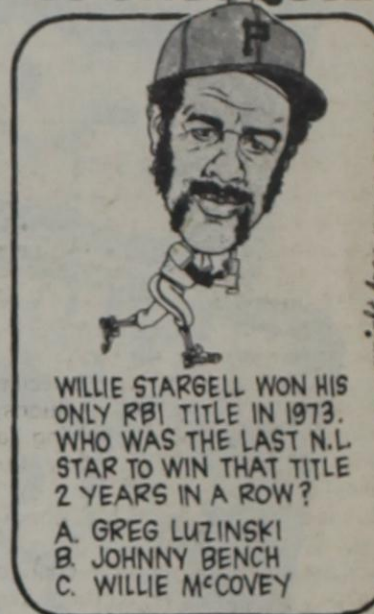

Roy D. Anderson

Final rites were read here Saturday morning for Roy D. Anderson, longtime educator in the Lubbock Public Schools, at the Greater Saint Luke Baptist Church with Rev. A.L. Davis, pastor, officiating. He was assisted by Rev. A.W. Wilson, pastor of Bethel A.M.E. Church; and Rev. Adolphus Cleveland, pastor of New Jerusalem Baptist Church.

Interment was held in Resthaven Cemetery under the direction of South Plains Funeral Home.

Anderson died last Wednesday from a boating mishap at White River.

THE PEOPLE IN YOUR COMMUNITY NEED YOU

A police officer is involved in much more than fighting crime. The people in the community depend upon the police officer to help them deal with and solve problems in situations which usually see them scared, excited or confused, whether it be in the aftermath of a robbery or at the scene of a minor traffic accident.

The appearance of the police officer inspires hope and confidence that the problem will be resolved. The police officer faces the challenge of seeing that confidence confirmed, and the resolution of the problem speedily effected.

This challenge takes different forms with the functions of the different departments and duties available. In addition to patrol duty, other officers are assigned to the juvenile division, detective division, planning and research, and motorcycle patrol. There also are the specialized K-9 and tactical units, in addition to places in the Academy staff.

The Lubbock Police Department keeps abreast of progress and innovations in police procedures and equipment to assure the best performance in the big job of protecting the lives and property of the 170,000 persons in the City of Lubbock.

If, after reading this brochure, you think you would like to become a police officer with the Lubbock Police Department or have more questions about this opportunity, please come down and talk with our interviewers at the City of Lubbock Personnel Department, Room 103, 916 Texas Ave., Lubbock, Texas 79401, or call that department at Area Code 806, 762-6411.
