

Bus Drivers Yield Union Petition; May Shift Gears

By CLIFF AVERY
Staff Writer

Citibus drivers may have to change gears in their campaign to unionize after the union representing them before the National Labor Relations Board withdrew its petition for local election.

The Meat Cutters and Packing House Workers District Union, after a conference with NLRB and management officials Monday in Fort Worth, bowed out of the drivers bid, deferring to the Amalgamated Transit Workers.

Ronnie Brown, a Lubbock representative of the meat cutters group, explained that, as an AFL-CIO union, his local was "outside of this jurisdiction" in representing the drivers, and that he felt the drivers would be better represented by a transit union.

Brown said that the petition for a union election was withdrawn

"without prejudice" which means that the election petition may be resubmitted—this time under the auspices of the transit workers group—at any time.

Edwin Youngblood, a NLRB spokesman, said the petition was withdrawn after a representative of Lubbock Transit Corp's parent company, St. Louis-based American Transit Corp., questioned NLRB jurisdiction.

Under the National Labor

Relations Act, the NLRB has no jurisdiction over an employer which is a "political subdivision" of the state—such as the city of Lubbock.

The management representative argued since the city government pays Lubbock Transit a fixed fee to operate the bus lines, in effect, the city is the employer of the bus drivers, not Lubbock Transit Corp.

"We haven't made any determination" on the union request, Youngblood said. "The union decided to withdraw and check it (the management assertions) out. They may refile next week."

City transit advisor John Wilson said that although Lubbock Transit Corp. manager Ernie Prenevost signs drivers' checks, the city may be seen as the employer and Lubbock

School Breakfast Plan Goes Hungry for Support

Lubbock School Trustees put the last nail in the coffin of a program that would make breakfasts available to school children at their Thursday morning meeting, deciding not to consider the program at the June meeting.

After hearing Cecilia George, Secretary of the First United Church and Dr. Floyd Perry, Chairman of the Education Commission of the NAACP's Lubbock chapter, the board voted down a motion by trustee Joan Ervin to place the federally-funded program on the June agenda.

Board president Charles Waters sid a three-fourths majority—or four votes—was required to act on the program, since the board already voted it down in its March 17 meeting.

The vote was 3-3, with trustee Harry Harriger absent.

George, reading a statement in the crowded board room, said objections to the program included the belief that breakfast is a parental responsibility and that a breakfast program could be taken advantage of by those students who did not really need it.

She countered that parents of the children all pay taxes to the Federal government, and since the program is federally financed, no children are getting a "free ride."

Perry spoke to the nutritional values of the program. Whatever the reason parents fail to provide a nutritional meal, Perry said, "it is not the child's fault."

"Nutrition is as important to a child as school texts," Perry said.

Trustees did not discuss a bill recently passed by the Texas House of Representatives which would require participation in a breakfast program if 25 per cent of the students showed a need. Any future action by the Board of Trustees on the breakfast program would probably be under the guns of that bill, now awaiting action in the State Senate.

The breakfast program has been riding on the rim of the Hub City since the middle of February, when Sister Regina Foppe of the Social Action Service for the Diocese of Amarillo first asked the board to institute the program. The breakfasts would be funded by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and coordinated by the Texas Education Agency (TEA).

The program would not cost the Lubbock Independent School

Vacationing?

'Plan It' When on Tour of Planet

A few days on the beach and you're sunburned. Or worse yet it rains and you're short a tan and a good time. Your luggage is in Montezuma, your husband is with the stewardess and even the margaritas aren't any good.

Sometimes vacations aren't what they're cracked up to be. While you may lose out in some ways, vacations should be under your control—after all, vacations are supposed to be a far cry from work.

Whether you never leave your home state or you travel around the world, there are some basics that make the going easier.

For instance, planning ahead of time insures that this year's vacation will go smoothly.

Know your vacation site before you get there and know how much money you can expect to spend. Air fare rates go up June 1 and stay that way until after September. You can take advantage of off-season rates in Florida and Mexico and enjoy the added benefit of uncrowded resorts.

Make your reservations as soon as you know you'll be taking a trip. Hawaii is so popular year-round that reservations are now being made for Christmas.

by Janice Jarvis

If you want to save a lot of time—as well as money—making reservations, travel agents can be helpful.

If you choose a reliable agency—one that you know will be in business when you return from your trip—you can reap the benefits of having the hard work done for you. Look for agents who are members of the American Society of Travel Agents or International Air Transportation Association.

Since travel agents spend their days checking flights, you can expect them to know the fastest and cheapest way to get there. They also know the best hotels, restaurants, sites and even shopping areas.

Finding the best of everything is a harder job than you might think. There are 75 flights from New York to London, and finding the quickest one can take a lot of phone calls. However you might want to double check a few airline flights, just to make sure you're getting a good deal.

Most agencies don't charge for this service. "We're paid on commission through airlines, hotels and car rental agencies," explained Patricia Muschalek, travel agent.

If you're looking for the cheapest rate you'll usually find them on tours. But don't expect a tour to do everything for you. While they help, they do leave a lot of free time up to the traveler. "You save money flying with a group, but once you're there you're on your own," noted travel agent Susie Black.

If you prefer traveling with a group look for one that suits your needs. There are all kinds of specialty tours, all with advantages.

"I personally like tours because they take care of your luggage, they get you to and from the airport and they provide sightseeing," said Muschalek.

Before you decide to take a tour be sure and read the contract

Med School Fractured

By CLIFF AVERY

Before the Texas Tech School of Medicine's new building even gets a chance to be all its cracked up to be, it's already showing a few cracks.

The building's dedication is scarcely more than one week away, and Texas Gov. Dolph Briscoe is scheduled to address graduating seniors and open the new facility June 5.

But some concrete panels on exterior staircases on the building's east side are cracked.

"Typically, when you work with concrete, you're going to have some cracks," said Jack Nottingham, an architect with Harwood K. Smith architecture firm in Dallas, which designed the building. "You're going to get some hairline cracks. We just accept it as fact."

Nottingham was also asked about uneven tiles on the second story portico he calls "the deck." Some tiles are not level and some masonry between the tiles is oozing out.

"The big deck is under repair," Nottingham said, "The waterproofing failed."

The architect emphasized that the repair job would not cost any more. "The contractor has to get it right. He'll fix it."

Of Hungry Children, Gored Oxen and the B-D

In a display of "rugged individualism" that would have made Herbert Hoover stand up and cheer, the Big Daily in town has come out "unalterably opposed" to a breakfast program for the city's schoolchildren.

"(It) would push an entire generation of young people into the concept that the government 'owes' them their upkeep," the B-D (for "Big Daily") pontificated.

Well, gee, if you put it that way ... For sure, the government has better things to do with its money, but we didn't hear B-D complain when the Feds chipped in for the Civic Center — in fact, good ol' B-D was right up there leading the cheers.

And then, Federal loans are bulding that li'l old teaching hospital out on the Tech campus, and B-D is just pleased as punch that its business manager chairs the Lubbock County Hospital District when federal money wasn't enough, by the by, LCHD marched hat-in-hand to Austin for $8 million from the state government to tail out the hospital. And, durn right, the federal government shouldn't have to feed kids at school since it's so busy keeping Reese Air Force Base open to pump money into the local economy.

"Rugged individualism", it seems, comes down to which rugged individual is reaping the harvest of federal largesse. The argument: If the money goes to feed people, it's Socialism. If it goes to build buildings, it's civic development.

One wonders if federal money is as big an evil as righteous, morally myopic hypocrites. —C.A.

OPINION

Bad Timing

Miseries, they say, come in threes, but for the Citibus system, the miseries seem to be coming in multiples of three. So much so, you tend to lose count.

First, the newly purchased buses arrived two months late, and the two months of revenue lost was critical to anything resembling a balanced budget (remember that the two months of revenue will, in effect, come off the tail end of the fiscal year when Citibus should reach peak ridership). Plus, the buses weren't getting the mileage they should, so it cost more for gas.

Then it was disclosed that the system would lose $150,000 more than the $404,000 it was budgeted to lose in the first place. The city council balked at upping the ante.

Now, Citibus drivers are in the midst of a move to unionize.

"Union!" That's not a favorite word among West Texans. It conjures images of ruddy-faced labor chieftains barring the door to increased profits and of messy strikes and of the loss of control over one's property.

But before your knee jerks up to your chin at the mere mention of the word, take a look at the benefits—or lack thereof—that drivers have. No retirement. No paid holidays. They provide their own uniforms. In fact, the city staff waved off any possibility of the city taking over the local operation, saying it would cost too much to bring driver benefits up to city standards.

Still, it's not the right time for drivers to unionize. The new system of buses is not yet a year old, but the costs of meeting union demands could cripple or even kill the new system, if only because the financially-strapped city government will probably refuse to get stuck with the charge. It may be that a union will have to negotiate eventually for better benefits, but a move like that right now—with the attendant hostility on the part of public and council—might strip drivers not only of benefits, but of paychecks as well. No city council will pay drivers to drive buses that aren't running.

Rather, the drivers should wait until the Citibus system struggles to its feet—or wheels—and can survive the onslaught of apparently legitimate financial demands from labor. (In fact, better benefits might help the troubled Citibus System, since officials lay the blame for some of the increased costs on the doorstep of increased training expenses because of a high driver turnover).

The drivers might know the time is right when there's a change of management at Lubbock Transit Corp., the subsidiary of the St. Louis-based company that is hired by the city to manage the bus lines.

One of the problems is 62-year-old Ernie Prenevost who, according to one source intimately familiar with transit operations, has purposefully underbudgeted, fearing the council would chop off its contribution to bus operation. After the budget was through, Prenevost turned around in the middle of the year, and pinned the council for an increased subsidy, effectively putting the council over a barrel.

Indeed, Prenevost's lack of accounting finesse led the City's Transit Advisory Board to muscle in on the money game asking for monthly profit-and-loss statements so the deficit balloon won't be blown up any more. Some board members were openly stunned at the explanation—or lack thereof—of the accounting that predicted the deficit in the first place.

It's not time for a bus drivers' union—the Citibus camel needs no more straws on its back—but when it comes time, hopefully the drivers will negotiate with more competent Lubbock Transit management. —C.A.

GOP Alarmed By Energy Push

By MERCER CROSS
Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — No issue on Capitol Hill is being pushed harder by the Carter administration than the President's comprehensive energy program.

Some critics, particularly Republicans, think it is being pushed too hard and too fast.

The House Speaker, Massachusetts Democrat Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill Jr., has given legislative committees only until July 13 to hold hearings and draft a bill on the massive, far-reaching package. He wants the House to pass a bill before adjourning Aug. 6 for its summer recess.

"The realities are that Mr. O'Neill has set some nearly impossible goals," said John Anderson of Illinois, ranking Republican on the new Ad Hoc Select Committee on Energy and chairman of the House GOP Conference. "I think to have an arbitrary timetable, as suggested, is nonsense. I'm afraid we'll act in haste and repent in leisure."

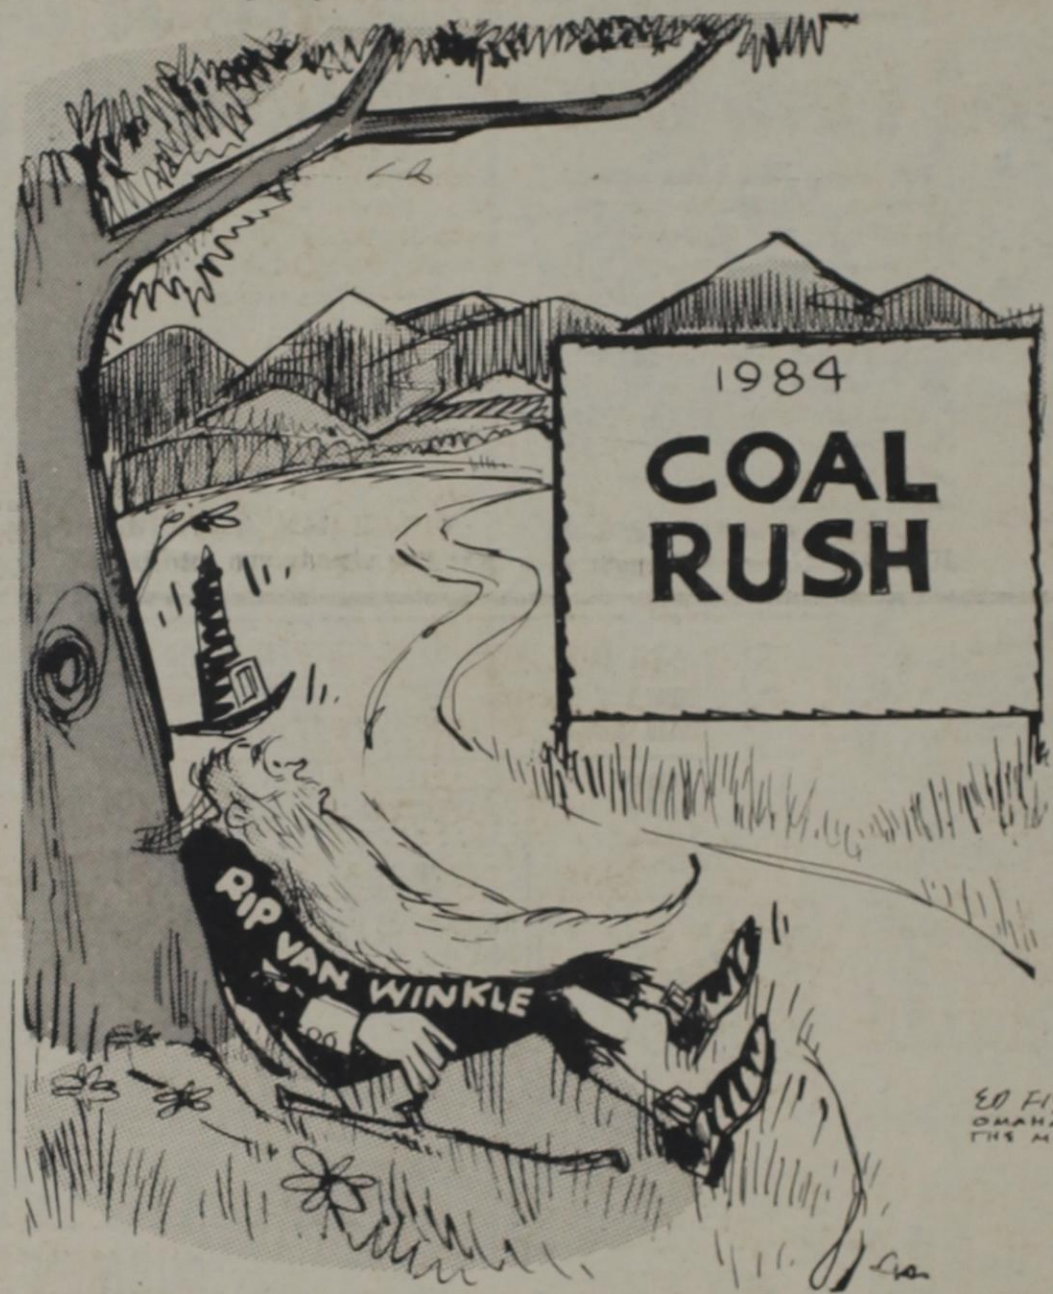

Even Democratic supporters of the legislation hint that the August deadline might give them problems. "The job of selling this program to the American people is very difficult," said Ohio Democrat Thomas L. Ashley, chairman of the ad hoc committee, as he opened hearings the other day.

New Approach

The new committee represents a break with Congress' traditional way of dealing with legislation. Usually a bill is handled by a regular standing committee before it goes to the floor of either the House or Senate.

But, because of the extreme size and complexity of the administration's energy bill, it will go through the extra step of the House ad hoc committee after passing through regular committee channels.

Rep. Phil Sharp of Indiana, a Democratic member of the committee, described it as a means to "slug out the tough things by a small group that has a handle on all parts of the package."

ED FISHER '77
OHAMA WORLD-HERALD
THE MESAUGHT SYNDICATE

Sharp's comment touched on another potential snag in congressional processing of Carter's vast program, which encompasses everything from oil and gas taxes to home insulation. House laders hope to enact one broad bill. The Senate may pass four or more. Agreeing on the final form of the legislation promises to be a headache.

Hearings and More Hearings

At the moment, though, final action is the least of anyone's worries, either in Congress or in the White House. Hearings are in full swing before three committees in the House, and they'll begin soon in the Senate.

Not all has gone well. When the House Ways and Means Committee opened hearings on tax-related portions of the program, for example, it heard a barrage of criticism of the proposed standby tax on gasoline and the proposed tax on gas-guzzling cars. Nevertheless, Democrat Al Ullman of Oregon, Ways and Means chairman, predicted after the hearings, "We'll get a good bill."

"In the main, it's a good bill," said the staff director of the House subcommittee that is holding hearings on the non-tax parts of the package. "The dimensions are sound and it deserves enactment."

But even the staff director doubts that the House can meet its August deadline. "The legislation itself was written at white heat," he said, "and as a result there are serious technical problems."

Democratic Emphasis

The energy package, a combination of conservation and tax proposals that will, if enacted, touch every American in some way, is the most important initiative of the Carter administration so far. Carter himself has gone out of his way to impress the public with its urgency.

"Energy legislation is the priority of priorities," said Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, the Democratic leader of the Senate. By the end of June, he said, the Senate will have acted on a new Energy Department, strip-mining regulation, offshore oil drilling and increased use of coal as an energy source.

But, Byrd said, "I can't say all of the package will be enacted this year." If it's not, he conceded, the more controversial aspects of the program would be harder to pass in election year 1978 than this year.

Republican Alternatives

Even at this stage in the legislative process, Republican criticism of parts of the Democratic package has been pointed. Already, GOP senators have issued a list of alternatives, criticizing the President for seeking "further regulation, further bureaucratization, further governmental intervention into every facet of the energy problem."

Byrd said the Republican plan was "a product of considerable division among themselves." He said that he doubted, when the Senate takes up the Carter package, "that there would be a solid position on the part of all the Republicans."

Although House Republicans have not produced a comparable document, Anderson said they might do so. "What is there in this bill that really creates incentive among producers?" he asked.

Further criticism of administration tactics came from Clarence J. Brown of Ohio, the ranking Republican on the House energy subcommittee that has been holding hearings. "In a political sense, the administration strategy is a disaster," he said.

'The Holey Sock Game'

And Other Gambits of the Love-ly Stewardess

By JANICE JARVIS
Staff Writer

Hi Y'all. Sit down, sweet things, fasten those seat belts and I'll tell you a story about the sweetest little stewardess who hit Lubbock just last week when Southwest Airlines landed their planes and their media blitz at the same time.

Jan Block. That's her name and the prettiest little girl you'd ever find in the air or on the ground. She's REALLY an absolute doll—do anything to sweeten your ride.

Fun? That girl knows how to have fun like no one I've ever seen before. Like the time she dressed up as an old dumpy housewife for Halloween. Can you imagine this DARLING girl wearing a nightgown down to her knees and a shorter worn-out robe, and all those awful rollers sticking out all over the place. I mean the girl looked AWFUL, and there she was prancing down the aisle like she was a real beauty.

When she isn't wearing those silly bunny costumes for Easter or dressing up like a package for Christmas, she wears the CUTEST little uniforms. Orange hot pants with those absolutely gorgeous boots and that floppy hat with all that curly auburn hair peaking out from under it. Then she wears that pendent that says SEXY in little gold letters. I mean, you know she really has it!

And when she gets on the p.a., she has those sweet daddies just called, "whoever-has-a-hole-sock-wins-free drinks."

And does that girl ever lead the life? She only works about 70 hours a month, and with all that extra time she just does as she pleases. And the best part is she hardly pays anything to travel anywhere. That girl flies to Acapulco for just $17—can you IMAGINE? And I know she must soak up the sun in Hawaii. She know. When she first started she had a few problems, the airline being just brand new and all. "Sometimes there were only 10 passengers on a flight," she says, "And when some guy would get too anxious, I'd just have to grin and bear it." But now she handles things so smooth. Like if some guy keeps flirting with her, asking for one drink after another so she'll come back to see him, she just brings him a tray of eight drinks and that puts him in his place.

And that seems to go for men off the plane too. The girl is a doll, but she can put a man in his place faster than anyone I've ever seen. Usually she doesn't have much trouble with men thinking she's the "coffee tea or me" type. I mean it wouldn't make any difference if she were, 'cause she says, "Stewardesses are a dime a dozen in Dallas and men don't see them as anyone special."

As far as any of that wild flying in the pilot's cabin, well, that goes on in any business, she says. After all, Southwest is spreading love all over Texas. As they say.

'If you don't fasten your seatbelt, you'll lose lavatory privileges' melting in their seats. She plays the CUTEST games. She likes to start with, "lets drink-up, buckle-up, put the cigarettes out and chug-a-lug." And she can get people to do anything. If someone doesn't cooperate she hands them a line like, "If you don't fasten your seat belt, you're going to lose your lavatory privileges."

Whenever things get a little slow she starts passing out those Harvey Wallbangers and those little almonds she calls "love bites" and things get MOVING. She has the one game she plays practically thinks nothing of spending a few days in Europe.

But it's the hours that are really super. Sometimes she starts her day at eight and is home by the pool by two in the afternoon. And she never has to work late since the airline shuts down at 10:30. "I guess I'm just spoiled," she says. SPOILED! The girl makes at least $1,000 a month for part-time work.

She says the only bad part of the job is handling passengers that get a little out of line, you

At the Bond Vote Canvas: Take My Tally Sheet—Please

By CLIFF AVERY
Staff Writer

Even for a city council noted for its good-humored banter, it was something of a minor pinnacle. A triumph of dry wit on a wet morning.

The props: tally sheets from the city's $26.4 million bond election. All six propositions passed by healthy margins, but it was the worst voter turnout in the city's history.

So when the city council Thursday retired to its antechamber for the legally-required canvas of the votes, the lights went up and the council improvised the lines.

Oh, yes, the other characters: the members of the press. But most of them stood awkwardly on the edges of the tiny room like newlyweds at their spouse's first family reunion.

COUNCILWOMAN CAROLYN JORDAN: I think we ought to send out thank you notes to those who voted. I've decided if somebody calls me this fall to complain about taxes, I'm going to ask them if they voted.

CITY MANAGER LARRY CUNNINGHAM: (Former City Manager N.B. McCullough said there were more cigarette butts than there were people where he voted.)

people who said they voted than actually voted.

ASSISTANT CITY MANAGER JIM BLAGG: (on a total of five votes cast at the Texas Tech Box): "They locked the dorms."

COUNCILMAN BILL MCALISTER (After interrupting the procedures to say he found a mistake in one tally, then, in the hush that followed, determining there was no mistake): I liked the Middleton-Jordan race better.

COUNCILMAN DIRK WEST:

I met some retired men who like to play golf who told me 'Well we voted for your golf course.' I told em 'If you did, you had to write it in.' They didn't know what they were voting on.

HENRY: (on the Tech Box): It was a real horsrace down here. Four to one. (Votes, not margin).

WEST: I think we need to go back to the poll tax and make it about $50.

Music, up and over.

Hap Padgett, the building's general contractor, refused comment.

"It's not finished," Nottingham advised of the building, "so don't worry about it."

"We're inspecting it. The contractor is inspecting it and the people at Tech are inspecting it. We've got everybody on it."

Short concrete parking curbs in the parking lot were apparently installed incorrectly. Spots on the parking lot indicate that the concrete curbs were bolted in then pulled up to be placed on alternating sides of yellow parking lines.

According to one workman on the site, the basement near the med school's loading platform was flooded when pipes apparently burst. "They were running around looking for the plumber," he said.

Dr. Richard Lockwood, vice president of Tech's Health Sciences Centers, said he "hadn't noticed" any complaints about the building, but when contacted by a reporter, said he would check on it.

The completed building, with furnishings and equipment, is estimated to cost $40 million.

Transit as a "subemployer".

"Because the city taxpayers pay for any increase in the costs" of operating the Citibus system, Wilson said, "any increase in costs—if the union struck for example—would affect the city taxpayer."

The Citibus system began operating with city-owned buses in December of last year, and faces $554,000 worth of red ink in its first year of operation—$150,000 more than budgeted.

The Transit Advisory Board has about two months left to study the budget and either reduce service or increase fares, or both, to lop off at least some of the increased deficit, after the city council balked at picking up the tab.

Techsans Return For Summer

Between 7,000 and 8,000 summer students are expected to enroll Tuesday, for the first summer session at Texas Tech University, according to D.N. Peterson, registrar.

KELLY'S HEROES

by Joe Kelly

It's beautiful! Here's Texas, boasting the best won-loss record in the conference; Texas A&M, the seasonal champion; and Arkansas, with the third best record.

So what happens? Baylor beats the bejaspers out of the titans. The Bears, what's more, don't even lose a game, while UT and A&M are hanging on by their fingernails. When it's all over, Arkansas has dropped two games, Texas has eliminated A&M.

Baylor, given little chance, not only beats Texas, the Bears whitewash the Longhorns. They skunk 'em. So, guess who goes to the NCAA playoffs? Yep, that's right, Baylor.

A&M has been taken because it won the conference regular season title, but Texas sits home and nurses its wounds. This is a situation hardly known in Orange history. The team with the best personnel and best playing facilities waits for another year for glory.

Baylor's victory gives hope to all other conference teams in basketball and baseball. Like Tech beating the Aggies a year ago in the cage tournament, it gives hope to the also-rans.

Is it fair? Well, it depends upon where you sit. If you're on the champion's side, no. If you're on the also-rans' side, yes. I've always thought that the team which won the regular season title had to be considered the real champion.

Several years ago minor league baseball introduced the Shaughnessy playoffs. It was, of course, primarily a financial deal. But it did establish a champion and maybe a playoff winner, not one and the same. Then, fans of both could claim the championship.

I've always thought it cheapened the championship won by a team over the full course. A great many fans look on the playoff winner as the champion, no matter what is said.

Seattle Slew may not be the greatest racehorse in track history, but the double winner in two of the most prestigious races, the Kentucky Derby and The Preakness, must be considered more than adequate.

Slew was panned, by some, for not running a stronger race in the Derby. She won, didn't she? Some panned her because of this or that nitpicking after the Preakness. Slew won and remained undefeated. What else can you ask a horse to do?

The Belmont is the third leg in the triple crown and it will be coming up in a couple of weeks. If I were to wager a bob or two, it would go on Slew. Not much return, of course, but it would be the principal of the thing.

Slew got a bad start in the Derby, won handily. It was a good start in the Preakness, a matter of running second easily and then turning it on to win convincingly. Slew is some kind of horse and the triple crown ought to erase any doubts.

Rodney Allison for the Heisman Trophy? Why not? The Odessa quarterback is one of the more gifted football players to appear on the college scene. He's done everything asked of him and more. He's been a leader and an able director of the Tech veer.

Allison, of course, can't, or couldn't, do it alone and he's probably be the first to admit it. Still, he's driven no less an authority than Steve Sloan to consider him a magician.

Allison is featured on the cover of the Tech spring and pre-season football report Ralph Carpenter has produced. It's an apt tribute. At the same time, it could have deeper meaning.

If Allison has the type of year he had in 1976, he should have a much stronger club with which to work. And Tech only had one regular season loss, too. Thus, you could get the inference that the Raiders are looking for an unbeaten 1977 and, quite possibly, a national championship. It's interesting to contemplate.

Steve expressed concern only about two phases of the Raider game following spring training—the kicking game and linebacking. If it was of deep concern, he didn't show it.

In fact, he opined that Tech had freshmen who could well fill the obvious void. The linebacking wasn't all that weak in the spring, even though the kicking game left a lot to be desired. A third area of minor concern was in running backs. Again, Steve thought that he had some freshmen coming in who could help here, right now.

Last year's statistics have two interesting things, among others. The thing that stood out, first, was the scoring by quarters. It told an interesting story.

The Raiders did two things—they had an almost 4-1 edge in scoring in the first quarter, a more than 2-1 edge in the final quarter. Thus, for those who didn't already know, it means that Tech jumped on opponents early and they scored heavily in the fourth quarter, when many games are won or lost.

Frank Robinson through as manager? I hope not. The brilliant player is struggling with Cleveland this year, it's true, but the Indians might be struggling anyway.

Many will contend, if he doesn't make it, that it proves that a black can't manage. That's nonsense, of course. What it might well prove—and let's be honest—prejudice hasn't been eliminated by federal fiat. If Robinson fails, everything else will be mentioned as the reason except for the real fact.

Local Tennis Pro Courted Variety of Other Rackets

By FRANK COATS
Staff Writer

Mel Carter always wanted to play tennis, but he never seemed to get the chance when he was growing up.

A young man, 6'4", growing up in Quitaque, Texas, about 95 miles northeast of Lubbock, was pushed in the direction of other sports. He played football, ran track, and went to South Plains Junior College on a basketball scholarship.

"I remember I always wanted to play tennis," the new pro at the Municipal Tennis Center said, "but I was always forced into other sports."

Carter became the tennis pro at the new center last July, after spending about 10 years coaching 4A high schools across the state. He came to Lubbock from Abilene Cooper High School where he had the state team champions the last two years. He gave part of the credit for the teams' success to Abilene's junior program, a program he hopes to start here in Lubbock.

Among his regular duties as a pro, giving lessons, running clinics and tournaments and operating a pro shop, Carter plans to start a junior development program. He already has separate classes of six-, seven- and eight-year old boys and girls. Carter hopes to train some future champs.

"The idea is to let them have fun, and if they enjoy it, guide them with more careful instruction," he said.

Carter's other coaching experience includes a stint at Lubbock High from 1966 to 1969, right after he graduated from college. He's also taught in Alvin, and run a summer tennis school in Tyler. But the 35-year-old began to have doubts about tennis as a career when he was in his late 20s.

"I got out of coaching for one year, from 1969-1970, and became a marketing representative for an insurance company. I went to Hartford for training, and when I came back I realized I didn't want to spend my life talking insurance. I found I had too much athletic blood."

"I always wanted to get in a municipal center rather than a private club," he said. "You have a larger range of students and programs and are free to develop teams."

The work started on the Municipal Tennis Center at 3030 66th 18 months ago, John Alford, the director of the City Parks and Recreation Department said. Completion is expected by July 4 and the estimated cost is set at $225,000. The money came from a 1971 bond election.

The center has been open since May 7, with 6 of the 12 planned courts playable. The center will also have two practice areas—one a lane slightly smaller than a regular singles lane, and equipped with a ball throwing machine and the other a practice wall for players to "work on their game," Carter said.

"We offer a pretty big volume of lessons, and the center has an ideal location," he said. "A huge number of tennis people live near here."

"I like this place. I think it'll be one of the prettiest tennis centers in the state," as well as a good home for a tennis pro who started out in basketball.

 carefully. Know what you'll get and make sure it's in print. Every trip has a cancellation policy, and if you don't read the fine print you may end up paying for a trip you'll never take.

"Most tours have cancellation dates about 10 days before a trip," noted Black. Cancel before then and you should get most of your money back.

A popular way of traveling this year is charter flights. Unless you plan ahead of time, a charter flight could be full of surprises.

For one thing you must pay as much as a month ahead of time, and if you decide not to go you could lose your money. You also have the problem of getting to where the charter leaves, usually Chicago or New York.

Once you're on the plane you're as safe as you would be on any other flight. "Most of the time it's on a Boeing, a regularly scheduled flight, that has a few passengers along with cargo," explained Muschalek.

One of the biggest dangers of chartered planes is people send money to charter a flight without ever seeing the plane. As a result, they may show up for take-off without a plane or pilot.

If you prefer to make the getting there more leisurely, a cruise could be the answer. You can cruise almost anywhere in the world, and while cruising you'll be provided with six gourmet meals daily, swimming pools, casinos, exercise rooms and entertainment. The advantage is you pay ahead of time for all these services, so there's no danger of hidden charges while traveling. Once you've gotten the initial planning out of the way, pack your suitcase carefully. As much as you would like to think you'll spend the whole week in a swimsuit, the weather may not permit it. Equipment and clothes are usually more expensive at resort areas.

When the day finally comes to take off, forget the details and relax. "Don't let petty things spoil a good time," advised Muschalek.

Finally, on arrival, don't be surprised if your vacation spot doesn't look like the brochures. Relax. After all, if it rains the worst that can happen is you'll get wet.

Breakfast Program . . .
 District any money, Sister Regina has said.

The board, evidently concerned with going into what trustee Harry Harriger called a "breakfast business", voted down the proposal 5-2 in its March 17 meeting.

"If we offer breakfast, why not offer supper?" Harriger said.

The eligibility requirements for the breakfast program would be the same used for the LISD lunch program, and the regular price of the breakfast would be about 30 cents. Those students eligible for reduced prices would pay 10 cents, and students eligible for free lunches would also receive free breakfasts.

The breakfast would include such foods as eggs, meat, pancakes, potatoes, cheese, muffins or rolls, toast and jelly, milk and fruit or fruit juices.

The bill, SB 1078, is sponsored by Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi.

Ed Irons, Superintendent of Schools, said the bill, if it passes the Senate, would be "taken under consideration." The vote could change, Irons said, dependant "on if the bill mandated."

Waters does not believe the bill is a lawful one.

"The school district has the right to run the affairs of the school district," he said, adding the bill goes beyond the jurisdiction of the state.

"It's a dumb bill," he said.

Waters said if the bill was passed he would send it to the school board attorney and possibly get an opinion from the State Attorney General, "but I don't know if I would file suit against TEA or whoever would administer the program."

Sister Regina said she was a "political scientist" and trained for "social action." She said she was involved in the breakfast program, because "I've been trying to break the oppression in this city for 14 years."

If the bill passes the Senate and the local board does an abrupt about face the program would begin in the 1978-79 school year.

The modern puzzle is how the old folks managed to raise their children without a book on child care.

SHERIDAN'S RIDE

by Jack Sheridan

Writing a column for two weekly newspapers, Wednesdays and Fridays, for the West Texas Times, sometimes imposes a problem. For example, if I see a film or play over the weekend and I am so favorably impressed that I want all to know, I tend to want to repeat. It doesn't happen always, but it does happen.

So, what I do, is to try and re-phrase for the Friday edition my recommendation and my own personal enthusiasm so that I reach the fullest possible audience.

That is what I am about to do. In the Wednesday edition of West Texas Times I wrote an unqualified rave over a movie which has just opened at the South Plains Mall Cinema and I hope plays on and on and on, so you will all have the opportunity to see and enjoy.

The film is the Brut production of "Nasty Habits." In case you feel that "Nasty Habits" implies an X-rated, sexy job, forget it. What "Nasty Habits" implies is that a Catholic nun's garb is traditionally called a "habit."

"Nasty Habits" concerns itself with the struggle for power on the succession of an Abbess in Philadelphia and the collision between the liberated younger set of sisters with the older, power strong members.

What the film is, really, is the entire Watergate scandal, cleverly and wickedly transposed into the convent community. Here we have the Nixon, the "plumbers," the Haldeman's and the Erlichmans, the defector who gets all the dirty work to do, the break-ins, the pay-offs, the cover-ups. It's all too marvelously done and, as I said on Wednesday, if I thought there was a laugh out of the whole Watergate mess, I would have said "no." But, there is, and it is all here in this brilliant, rocking comedy satire, the best of its kind to come along since I don't know when.

Adapted from Muriel Spark's novella, "The Abbess of Crewe," Robert Enders who is both producer and screenwriter has done a positively astonishingly good piece of work. He has cannily taken the scandal of our times and superimposed it on this framework, transferred his locale from Crewe, England, to the fitting background of the City of Brotherly Love and come out a triumphant winner.

The director is a first-time-out man and how he scores. His name is Michael Lindsey-Hogg and you will certainly be hearing of him time and again, happily.

Now the cast. Oh, what a triumph is this. Hand-picked, all-star, each of the ladies involved—and the men, too—could not be better. You have two-time Oscar winner Glenda Jackson, never better, as the newly-elected Abbess, with her henchmen, Sisters Wallburga, the cigarette-smoking love, played to perfection by Geraldine Page, and Sister Mildred, superb in the hands of Anne Jackson. There is Anne Meara and a flock more of marvelous players and finally, but certainly not last, is a stunning, award-winning performance by Sandy Dennis as the bespectacled and put-upon Sister Winifred. When you see Dennis in action, it will put aside everyone else in the cast. I never thought anyone could steal a film from the marvelous Glenda Jackson but Sandy Dennis does just that. She is simply terrific and worth the price of admission alone.

And, you know, as soon as you realize that this is the whole Watergate mess played out against the cloisters of the Abbey, the whole thing becomes uproarious. And Glenda Jackson's final line in the film is the kicker of all time.

Oh, the others. Well, there is a new actress to us, Susan Penhaglion, who plays the wayward, rebellious, "defrocked" nun, to perfection. That goes, too, for Oscar-winner Merlina Mercouri as the Henry Kissinger-type missionary nun, flying from the North Pole to China on her works.

The men, too, deserve high mention. They include Rip Torn, Eli Wallach and Jerry Stiller, and you'll find real-life portrayals by Howard K. Smith, Mike Douglas and other media names.

It's all a wild and wonderful frolic and by all means the best picture to come forth during this year of 1977. It's "All the President's Men" set to the alleged austerity of a convent. And, if anything, it is the better of the two—and that takes some doing.

So, remember "Nasty Habits." It's a living doll of a movie.

I wanted to mention Muhammed Ali's "The Greatest" at the Lindsey, but, to tell you the truth, I couldn't get up enough courage to submit to two hours of the mouth. I liked the book; you'll have to tell me about the movie.

Woody Allen kind of affects me that same way, and so I haven't gotten organized enough to see his "Annie Hall" at Cinema West yet. Perhaps by this weekend I'll muster enough courage to go take a look. Or, I'll do what my heart tells me—go back and see "Nasty Habits" again!

At the moment of this writing it appears that the booked Bob Hope appearance at Civic Center tonight may be in jeopardy. With 6,000 seats to be sold, as of Monday only 2,000 had been claimed. The benefit for Texas Boys Ranch was not announced until the first of this week and it was problematical that the event would take place. No star likes to play to a quarter audience in a big hall.

I think, perhaps, that the primary cause is Hope's over-exposure on the television medium and his tireless benefits and appearances. He is a great man, a good man, but his wit is at the mercy of his writers and the exposures tell. I hope he makes the date; the area, as does the world, owes him support. But, time and end-to-end bookings in this town prove costly to the best of performers. There have been frequent cancellations of bookings in this area during this past year and the fault can be laid to too much, too soon. Seventy-five percent of the city's population do not attend anything and the other twenty-five percent can only afford both time and money to attend and support everything. If there is a fall-out, then it is due to this factor above all others. We hope tonight sees Bob Hope with us. We shall see.

Helpin' Comes Naturally Talkin' About It Doesn't

By FRANK COATS
Staff Writer

A lot of times it's the little things that count; those extra bits of kindness that let folks know someone cares.

John and Nina Shipp have been giving that extra bit in Shallowater and Lubbock for a good many years now, visiting and helping those who need it.

"You don't brag on what you do," Shipp said, with that kind of quiet pride which makes it hard for a man to talk about himself. But he'd politely answer if the right questions were asked.

Shipp and his wife help people. They visit them when they're sick or helpless, get the mail for those who can't and even work in yards of those who don't get out. They don't brag about what they do, but they won't dodge or refuse to answer any questions.

To know John and Nina Shipp you have to go to other people.

"John takes care of those who can't," Mabry Brock, president of the First State Bank in Shallowater, said. And without being asked, too, "He's that kind of a guy."

Every Sunday afternoon Shipp visits hospitals and nursing homes in Lubbock, while Mrs. Shipp makes her rounds in Shallowater. "When John doesn't show up, they get real upset," Mrs. Pearl Balkman, a friend of the Shipp's, provided another insight into the couple.

Since Shipp retired from farming in June, 1976, he and his wife have been concerned with helping. They list their interests now as their five grandchildren. Like most grandparents they'll talk about them — and in helping other people "if we can."

Many of the people the Shipp's help are up in years, old folks, and some of them can't get around anymore. Shipp's mother helped him to appreciate their needs.

"I've always been interested in the elderly," Shipp said. "My mother was an invalid nine and a half years, and I took care of her at home. I just enjoyed elderly people and kept it up through the years."

He and Mrs. Shipp "kept it up" partly by their visits.

"I visit all the rest homes, but I try to confine it to shut-ins — anybody in desperate need," he said.

Shipp said it was "just human instinct" that led him to those in need of his help. "I never mention it because there are too many people you miss."

Sitting outside on the front porch of his house, an impressive place he helped build, Shipp recalled his years in the Lubbock area since he moved here in 1938. Years spent as a basketball coach, a farmer and one of the original board members of the First State Bank in Shallowater. He gave up being a board member about 10 years ago to devote all his time to farming. But now he's back, keeping the bank's grounds. He does it because he wants to.

Shipp told Brock he wanted to keep the grounds at the bank. Brock was a little hesitant — after all, Shipp was a former board member. But Shipp insisted, and they shook hands on a "nominal fee," Brock said, adding, "John showed up and mowed seven acres of grass — I felt obligated."

"But you can't talk about me without talking about my wife," Shipp said. "She's the other half."

Shipp's "other half" keeps herself busy with church work, visiting and her intricate needlepoint. She needlepoints copies of famous paintings for her grandchildren, and several fine examples of her work are displayed in the Shipp home.

Shipp also tends the grounds in front of the Shallowater Clinic, and keeps up the yards for relatives of his and his wife who can't. In bad weather, he picks up the mail for them and for others who can't get out.

"This is one of the real advantages of a small town, part of the spirit of Shallowater," Brock said. In larger cities, "people get too busy to show any concern for folks."

"They help people who need it, and that's what Christianity is all about," Brock said, giving what perhaps is the greatest insight into John and Nina Shipp.
