Black Men, Women Honored for Achievements And Promoting Job Opportunities for Women

WASHINGTON — Fifteen blacks employed with the U.S. Department of Labor here have been honored for personal career achievement or for improving job and promotional opportunities for women.

The awards were presented at a ceremony marking the first of a full week of activities by the department to observe Federal Women's Week.

The department's Federal Women's Program seeks to foster employment and promotional opportunities for women in federal government.

Cited for personal career achievement were: Shirley V. Ashton, Geraldine W. Legree, Doris C. Wilkins, Margaret J. Washington, Doris D. Wooten, Sheila Warner, Thelma B. Smith, Allean M. Allen, and Bonita A. Jefferson.

"Impact Awards" given to individuals who have helped improve opportunities for women were: Andre C. Whisenton, Charles F. Wood and Cassandra A. Isom.

"Appreciation Awards" were presented to Dr. Bennetta Washington, a special assistant to Assistant Secretary of Labor Ernest G. Green, and to Renee Poussaint, co-anchor of News 7, WJLA-TV, Washington.

Speakers at the "kick-off" ceremony spoke on the importance of the program within the department. Men and women alike were called upon to reaffirm their commitment to improve the status of women in federal employment.

Ruth Britt, manager of the department's Federal Women's Program, called for the establishment of "an old girls' network," but emphasized the network would also be open to men committed to the objectives of the program.

Women were urged to persevere, to be supportive of each other and to examine their career goals.

Ruth Prokop, chair, Merit Systems Protection Board, observed that "the journey to equality must be travelled on two tracks—as women working together and as individuals driving alone."

Accomplishments of organized women have been numerous, but the achievement of equality must come from within and a large part of one's success must be accomplished alone, Prokop said.

Noting women Presidential appointees and nominees in the Labor Department — Women's Bureau Director Alexis Herman, Assistant Secretary Eula Bingham, Solicitor Carin Clauss and nominees Dr. Janet Norwood to be Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics and Marjorie Knowles to be Inspector General — Prokop added:

"These appointments in this Administration are by no means the alpha and the omega of equality for American women."

The Federal Women's Program is a part of the department's Office of Equal Employment Opportunity, headed by Mrs. Velma Strode.

Reps Want All Nixon Tapes Opened To Narrow GSA's Lost-Records Gap

Copyright, 1979, United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

WASHINGTON—It has been five years since Richard Nixon was condemned by his own words. They were recorded on secret White House tapes, which provided evidence of the greatest political scandal in White House history—Watergate.

But the tapes may also contain evidence of other scandals. Most of Nixon's White House conversations have never been made public. We have joined other reporters in asking the courts to open up all the tape recordings. But the former president is fighting to keep them secret.

Now a congressional subcommittee wants to listen to Nixon's conversations with Arthur Sampson and Robert Kunzig. They headed the scandal-scarred General Services Administration while Nixon was president.

The agency is mired in corruption. Ten juries are now sifting through the sordid evidence. They have already handed down more than 40 indictments and obtained 27 guilty pleas.

While the Justice Department has been cracking down on lesser officials, the top brass have miraculously gone unscathed. One reason for this is that the records are missing. Government sources told us that some key files have been removed or destroyed.

The congressional subcommittee is quietly looking for the missing evidence. Chairman John Burton, D-Calif., hopes to find some clues by listening to Nixon's conversations with his General Services Administration subordinates.

The controversial tapes are now tied up in the courts. The subcommittee, therefore, is expected to ask the District Court for permission to listen to all tapes dealing with the GSA.

Already, Richard Nixon's incriminating conversations have brought down his own presidency. Now, his voice, speaking from the past, may ruin other men involved in today's General Services Administration scandal.

Corporate Greed: We previously predicted that the oil companies' profits for the first quarter of 1979 would be exorbitant. The corporate reports have now been released, and they confirm what insiders told us.

Exxon, for example, reported profits of more than 37 percent. Standard Oil of Indiana showed an increase of nearly 28 percent. These shocking profits came at a time when President Carter was calling upon everyone else to hold down their salary and price increases to 7 percent.

Meanwhile, the president is deregulating price controls on oil, which will increase profits even more. He has called for a windfall-profits tax to curb these profits. But his proposal would take away only half of the oil companies' new profits and permit them to pocket the other half.

The oil firms claim they need the extra bucks to pay for drilling new wells. They are not talking much about what they're really doing with their excess money.

Exxon, for example, has more than $5 billion in cold cash. That is more than many nations hold in their treasuries. Mobil had enough cash lying around to buy MARCOR, the parent company of the Montgomery Ward Department store chain. Mobil also submitted a multimillion dollar bid for a land development company and is negotiating for a paper manufacturing company called Bodcaw.

Atlantic Richfield paid a cool $2 billion for Anaconda Copper. Tenneco bought the Philadelphia Life Insurance Company for $644 million. Gulf Oil purchased a chemical conglomerate called Kewanee Brands at a price of $389 million. Sun Oil is trying to take over another chemical company called Becton-Dickinson for $600 million.

Yet the oil lobbyists are fighting tooth-and-nail against an excess-profits tax.

Brassy Brass: All employees of the federal government are required by law to fly on airlines owned by U.S. companies. The idea is to promote American-owned businesses.

But the law hasn't set too well with the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The brass hats don't like to be forced to transfer planes in New York City when they return to the states from Europe, which is the practice of U.S. airlines. The military chiefs would rather fly directly to Washington on a foreign airline.

They asked the General Accounting Office to grant them an exception to the law because of the undue hardship they experienced by transferring planes. The GAO refused to grant the waiver on the grounds that the Joint Chiefs suffered no more inconvenience than most international travelers.

Watch on Waste: Should the president become ill, he can count on luxurious facilities at military hospitals around Washington. At the Bethesda, Md., naval hospital in the suburbs of Washington, for example, there is a richly appointed presidential suite.

But the Army, not to be outdone, decided to build its own presidential rooms at the Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Northwest Washington. Begun in 1967, the suite cost $400,000 to build and contains a private elevator, a security room, a kitchen, dining room and sitting room.

Once it was finished, the Pentagon decided that a sick chief executive should continue to use the old facilities at Bethesda. So the Walter Reed presidential suite—2,800 square feet of expensive space—stands empty.

still be the ceiling but lenders could let rates "float" up or down according to the conventional money market.

Sen. Bill Patman of Ganado, a long-time foe of bumping the usury limit, and Texas AFL-CIO President Harry Hubbard felt it was just more than an odd coincidence that Fannie Mae's announcement came on the heels of Clements statement that he would veto a hike in interest rates unless something happened to change his mind.

Patman and Hubbard charged "collusion" between Fannie Mae and Texas lenders to "pressure the Legislature into raising the usury ceiling." FNMA officials vehemently denied such charges and said Fannie Mae's actions came as the result of vagueness over whether or not VA and FHA loans were exempt from state usury law penalties.

In the wake of Fannie Mae's announcement, it appeared that those with homes on the market were bearing the brunt of the tighter money market as lenders continued to offer VA and FHA loans with points charged not to the buyer, but the seller.

The Budget

While Clements was announcing his support this week for the repeal of the prevailing wage law, he was softening his stand on another key issue—teacher pay raises.

In the past, the governor has said flatly that he would veto any teacher pay hikes that exceeded 5.1 percent. But this week, Clements changed his tune, saying he had never pledged to veto pay raises of more than 5.1 percent.

The House appropriations bill bumps teacher salaries by seven percent in each of the next two years. Clements said that was unacceptable but believed it would be remedied in a conference committee. First though, the Senate must act.

Step One in that process was finished this week as the Senate Finance Committee completed work on its version of the 1980-81 state budget. That plan will cost the taxpayers $600 million more than the House appropriations bill.

Senate debate on the state budget will begin this week. The Senate's spending plan would give teachers only the 5.1 percent increase in pay that Clements says he can support.

The Senate's budget would cost the state $20.8 billion. The price tag on the House bill would be $20.3 billion. Earlier in the session, Clements proposed a $19.8 billion state budget—including a $1 billion cut in state taxes. Neither the House or Senate have left much for the tax relief Clements has been demanding since taking office.

Another interesting provision of the Senate Finance Committee's proposal is that it eliminates over $400 million found in the House measure to reimburse school districts for revenues lost because of the Tax Relief Amendment approved by voters last November. The Senate plans to take up reimbursement when it begins debate on school finance.

The Senate Finance Committee also did away with additional exemptions for the elderly and handicapped with yearly incomes over $10,000.

The House

With the appropriations bill behind them for now, House members seemed to get a second wind this week as they passed a constitutional amendment legalizing bingo for non-profit and charitable organizations, approved legislation giving voters the power to rollback property taxes that exceed five percent, made it legal for farmers to produce alcohol to mix with gasoline (making "gasahol"), and, finally, overwhelmingly voting to require motorists to have liability insurance.

The "bingo" amendment, already passed by the Senate, was altered slightly and senators will now have to concur with a "local option" provision tacked onto the amendment before it is sent to voters for their approval.

"Gasahol"

Farmers are hoping they can squeeze a little alcohol out of some of their by-products and then add that to gasoline. The House made that a little easier this week by first making it legal to manufacture alcohol (for cars though, not human beings), and by authorizing the state to provide loans so farmers can build alcohol-producing plants on their farms and ranches.

STATE CAPITAL HIGHLIGHTS

By Lyndell Williams

TEXAS PRESS ASSOCIATION

AUSTIN—Almost three weeks ago, Gov. Bill Clements said he saw no "compelling reason" to raise the state's interest rate ceiling and vowed to veto any legislation designed to do just that.

Luckily, the governor left his options open, saying he would keep his finger on the pulse of the housing industry and if he felt a drop off in activity, he wouldn't hesitate to call a special session if that was the action needed to remedy the situation.

When Clements arrived at his press conference this week, he had just received the news that the Federal National Mortgage Association—better known as Fannie Mae—was backing off from accepting low-interest VA and FHA home loans offered in Texas. Clements said he was numb from the news.

The effect of Fannie Mae's announcement—a tighter money market—was soberingly clear to the governor, lenders and people looking to buy or sell a home.

What Fannie Mae feared was purchasing VA and FHA loans in Texas that might exceed the state's legal interest rate of 10 percent. Home buyers had been turning to the cheaper VA and FHA loans after finding the conventional money market all but dried up.

Lenders normally add points (one percent of what is borrowed) to get VA and FHA interest rates up to conventional money market levels. But when VA and FHA interest rates went up last week to 10 percent that meant lenders charging points on those loans might be in violation of the state's usury law.

Later in the week, Clements met with Sen. Bill Meier of Eules and Rep. Jerry Donaldson of Gatesville, the sponsors of legislation raising the usury limit from 10 to 12 percent, and said he was "reassessing and rethinking" what actions he might take in light of Fannie Mae's announcement.

After his meeting with Meier and Donaldson, Clements said he was evaluating a new twist to Meier's bill that would tie interest rates to those charged on long-term government loans. Twelve percent would

by Joe Kelly

Off and on, for a long time, I've been harping that the City of Lubbock, and its citizens, should do something to honor Sam West. There aren't many cities in this nation that can brag of being the home of one of the first (he played in the first game) All Stars.

One of these days Sam is going to keel over and look up at the posies (although I hope it isn't soon). When he does, people will say "gee, we shoulda done something for him." And that they should have. Typically, it will have come too late.

Typically, there's another man who deserves the same type of acclaim and acknowledgment. No, he didn't play in the major leagues, he played in the minors. But he achieved fame through collegiate athletics.

I was, with my wife, at a faculty women's affair, and we ran into Morley Jennings and his wife. Morley was talking to Arthur Elliott at the time and, of course, the talk was on sports. Arthur, it seems originally came from Minneapolis, and Morley had played there.

When were you in Minneapolis? we asked, and Morley replied: "From 1915 through 1922."

That was, if memory serves, in the old American Assn. and they played a brand of ball only a step below the majors. It was, in short, pretty fast company and a tribute to the type of player Morley had to have been.

Morley said that he was only there for baseball; the rest of the time he served Oachita College in Arkansas. That was before he went to Baylor and before he came to Tech.

Arthur drifted off to get some snacks, no doubt, and Morley and I continued our conversation.

"I'm in my 90th year," he declared, catching me by surprise. I've known the former Texas Tech AD for over 30 years and never would have dreamed it.

"I still play golf, not as well as I used to—I can't see the ball—but I'll shoot in the low 80s or so. I can tell how well I hit it and where it went by the sound. (Shades of an old outfielder).

"I don't drive (a car) any more, so I don't play as much as I'd like. I hate to ask her (his wife) to drive me to the course (where are you Polk Robison and J.T. King?)

Anyway, there's my nomination for a public testimonial at the Civic Center with the leaders of the community and Texas Tech paying tribute. If ever a man deserves that recognition, it's Morley.

Where would Tech be today without Morley and the late Dell Morgan? Somewhere in the dark ages, no doubt, forgotten and overlooked by the SWC and other institutions throughout the nation.

Pete Cawthon was necessary. He gave Tech reputation and nationwide recognition. But it was Morley and Dell who gained Tech respectability, which it badly needed as the 40s rolled around.

Morley, as hard as nails, but fair, was held in high esteem by other coaches and athletic directors. Dell was respected as a fighter, as well as a defensive coach without peer. The two men saw eye to eye on what it would take to get Tech in the Southwest Conference, one of the main reasons they were hired.

Neither lived to see that day, as AD and head coach. Indeed, Dell wasn't deceived. He told me in Fort Worth one night: "Jody, the day Tech gets in the conference, that's the day Tech gets a new football coach."

Dell, of course, was replaced by DeWitt Weaver, who also became athletic director. Morley stayed on in the athletic department and helped pave the way for Tech's eventual acceptance, along with Dr. J. William Davis and others.

And so Morley Jennings deserves the public tribute from a community and area that lived and died for Tech's admission to the prestigious SWC. It has, in these early years, been good for both university and conference. It would be nice to see the Chamber lead the way in paying tribute, a tribute long deserved and long in coming.

By the daily paper account, KFYO officials are bubbling over with enthusiasm over becoming yet another Country Western station in Lubbock. It's said that the enthusiasm overflows from top to bottom—from Gordon Thompson all the way down to Bob Nash!

Me? I'm excited too. Lubbock needs another CW station like Dolly Parton needs a training bra.

Texas Tech apparently is through basketball recruiting and the Red Raiders came up with three fine "small" men. Guards will be thicker than fleas at a kennel club convention. Maybe Tech can install a four guard offense next year.

The big man, which the Raiders need badly, escaped them for the second year in succession. Texas, A&M and Arkansas apparently locked up a corner, with Houston not far behind. The Raiders, despite what is said, need a big, tough physical type who can plant his feet and dare anyone to move him out.

In case you all missed it, Tech was 7-4 last fall with a big upset over Houston in a game that had the Cougars on the SWC and Cotton Bowl ropes. Impressive? You bet. Tech had a great season any way you slice it.

But, when the pro draft came along, how many Raider seniors were selected? One. There may be others who get tryouts, or who go to Canada, but one draftee out of the hundreds chosen pretty well indicates that, while Tech did well on the record, its material was thought to be lacking.

Oh, well, with any kind of success, James Hadnot ought to go in the first round next year. He could even be No. 1.

Baseball? Surprises galore. Baltimore, Minnesota, Montreal and Houston are making the early going interesting. How long they will last is anybody's guess. Spring flowers have a way of fading when the weather gets hot and the season gets long.

Philadelphia is starting to assert itself and it should, what with the talent the Phillies have. Boston is flirting with the lead and the Yankees are floundering. Kansas City isn't showing too strongly, and the Dodgers look to be horrible (could Tommy John, 6-0, be the difference?) Stay tuned. We have a long way to go.

Notice of Finding of No Significant Effect on the Environment

The City of Lubbock proposes to request the Department of Housing and Urban Development to release federal funds under Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (PL 93-383) to be used for Senior Citizens Title VII Nutrition Program of $45,000.00.

It has been determined that the request for release of funds will not constitute an action significantly affecting the quality of the human environment and, accordingly, the City of Lubbock has decided not to prepare an Environmental Impact Statement under the National Environmental Police Act of 1969 (PL 91-190).

The reasons for the decision not to prepare a Statement are as follows: (a) overall effects of the projects are beneficial; (b) beneficial effects are long-term and the adverse effects are short term and environmentally insignificant, begin related primarily to activities necessary to construct the projects; (c) since the projects will occur at the neighborhood level, the short-term adverse effects will be confined to limited numbers of people; (d) historic and environmentally critical areas will not be affected; (e) no viable alternatives to the projects, including the no-action alternative, exist.

An Environmental Review Record for the projects has been made by the City which documents the environmental review of the projects and more fully sets forth the reasons why the Statement is not required. This Record is on file at the Municipal Building, 916 Texas Avenue, and is available for public examination and copying, upon request, in Room 207 between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

All interested parties disagreeing with this decision are invited to submit written comments for consideration by the City to the Community Development Coordinator, P.O. Box 2000, Lubbock, Texas 79457, by 5 p.m., May 18, 1979. All comments will be considered and the City will not request the release of federal funds or take any administrative action on the project prior to the date in the preceding sentence.

Sheridan's Ride

by Jack Sheridan

First of all, an embarrassing apology for an error in last week's column. In the review of the superb movie, "The China Syndrome," I gave a whole bucketfull of compliments to star William Holden whom I identified in the lead role, that on this harrowing role of the doomed manager of the nuclear power plant at its failure. I goofed.

The star, of course, who won hands down honors for the tragic role, was Jack Lemmon. It was to Lemmon that our accolades go.

Now, in a critical career that encompasses some 50 years from the silents to the "dirties" then, you know, I'm a lover of the business!

Jack Lemmon started out as a juvenile (young man) in farcical roles, light-weight and none too substantial parts; consider "Under the Yum Yum Tree," and a host of Robert Montgomery-like roles. He was a delight in everything he did. Think back to "The Odd Couple", to innumerable contributions to the screen and stage art.

But, you see, I did him an irreparable service to his work when last week, in this column, I gave all the credit to his stunning performance as the hapless manager of the doomed nuclear plant in the film, still held over at the Fox Four-plex "The China Syndrome."

This is the harrowing, fascinating account of what it could have been at Three Mile Island in the recent happenstance. The film, which prophetically told of the events to come, highlights Jane Fonda as the television mini-interviewer-narrator, her camera crew which split the scene wide open.

Lemmon, whom I slighted so sorely, looks as he ages, a lot like a handsome William Holden. I confess I got lost among the ravages of time. They have come to look alike!

But it was Jack Lemmon, not William Holden, and I hope you'll forgive the mix-up. As Lemmon has grown older, and disqualified himself, from the bright, young man with no longer-flexible middle parts image, he has, God be praised, become the actor he always should have been.

Lemmon is on his way to prove that "Hold The Tiger" was no mistake. With apologies for the false entry, its Oscar time for this man in this film.

Now, to touch a movie that is brand-new and probably the best picture of the year so far; one that has heart, modern rollicking language, direction and produced and written by a little man who moves, with this one, into the ranking file of major motion picture people, director-actor-producer, the sensitive man of our times, Woody Allen.

Now, get this, when Woody Allen first brought us the scrawny, openly Manhattan Jewish, writer, producer, star and what have you, well, he didn't send me.

He sent a helluva lot of people before me, but such entries as "Whatever You Wanted to Know About Sex" count me out. That went for him, Allen, focused on a flock of films that were at best, stand-up comedian, spouting on witticisms based on passive and flaccid sex.

Something came along in Woody Allen's life. (I'm nuts about him!). He made a film called "Annie Hall" which won Diane Keaton (the best around any day) the Best Actress, Allen, best director, "Annie Hall", best film, and honors.

Then, last year, 1978, Allen to his cinematic idol, the Swedish director, Ingmar Bergman, and did his first serious film in which he did not personally appear, "Interiors," a sombre film that ranked high in the Academy consideration.

Now, at the Fox Four-complex at 19th and Quaker, we have Woody Allen's next cogent to comment on our ways and times.

Allen, who produced, wrote, directed and starred in this one, plays the role of a sexually driven, 40 year old man. He is a writer, TV first and then an expose of his mother's memoirs, a resentment against his second wife who abandoned him for her Lesbian companion and writes a book about their late marriage, and his today affair between his best friend's mistress, who becomes his own, and the long-lasting, honest affair between a teenager and the middle aged man.

It's all very complicated to tell it this way in a limited space. Suffice to say, it is not only a deep, incisive cut into human relations but a rare mix of physical, sensual and heart all rolled into one.

"Manhattan" is a Woody Allen production. The film is in black and white to bring out the dramatic qualities of the very day viewers' appreciation of the magical city by day and night. The score is a superb selection of Manhattan found in melodies of George Gershwin, played by the New York Philharmonic and the Buffalo Symphony.

"Manhattan" is a shoo-in for next spring's Oscars, in many of its stunning categories. More about this important one next week.

The history of the planter, slaves, and freedmen is the substance of "Dear Master": Letters of a Slave Family edited by Randall M. Miller. Hardbound, illustrated, indexed, 281 pp., $15. Order from Cornell University Press, 124 Roberts Place, Ithaca, N.Y. 14850.

This invaluable collection of letters—probably the largest left by an American slave family—tells the story of the SKIPWITH family from 1834 to 1865, revealing their relationship with the planter, John Hartwell COCKE of Surry and Fluvanna Counties, Virginia. Cocke, a supporter of colonization and gradual emancipation, freed Peyton Skipwith and his family who settled in Liberia. George Skipwith, Peyton's brother, and his family were sent to Greene County, Alabama, where they worked on Cocke's absentee-owned cotton plantation. Although separated on two continents, the Skipwiths demonstrated their deep commitment to family unity by maintaining correspondence through Cocke for two generations. This vast correspondence gives rare but brief insights into the lives of individual slaves and freedmen, thus providing a microcosm of other blacks at that time. None of the planter's letters to the Skipwiths, however, have survived.

The first series of letters were written by Peyton Skipwith and his children. They shed much light on Liberia's early social history and slave attitudes, values, and skills which survived emancipation. A stonemason, Peyton eventually prospered and took an active part in the local community. Proud of black achievement, he was "eager to trumpet the blessings of freedom and Liberia," as were other family members.

The second and more voluminous group of letters were written by George Skipwith, slave driver and eventually overseer of the cotton plantation, and his daughter, Lucy, a house servant and schoolteacher. Alabama plantation life is shown through detailed descriptions of farming methods, both scientific and practical, and slave care.

The bibliographical essay lists additional research sources on the debated virtues of black-authored sources on slavery, John Hartwell Cocke and other reformers, the Liberian experiment, slave drivers and house servants.

The Georgia Genealogical Society is offering two do-it-yourself family history research seminars on Saturday, May 19, at the Atlanta Biltmore Hotel, 817 West Peachtree Street, N.E., Atlanta, Ga., from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Mrs. Martin J. Sherry, Sr., of the Georgia Archives staff will teach the beginners' class. Mrs. Mary Bondurant Warren, renowned genealogist and publisher, will teach the advanced class. Reservations should be made by May 15. The $10 fee includes lunch. Checks payable to the Georgia Genealogical Society should be sent to the Society, Box 38066, Atlanta, Ga. 30334. and Catherine WILLIAMS. Please send your queries and genealogical information, free of charge, to Marleta Childs, 2308 21st St., Lubbock 79411.

Salinas Reports

State Rep. Froy Salinas announced today that the car tax exemption which he proposed and has supported since early last year, is having some difficulty in the Senate.

Rep. Salinas first introduced the car tax bill during the special session in July. This exemption was included in an omnibus tax relief amendment and placed on the November ballot.

The people of Texas voted overwhelmingly for this tax relief measure. Rep. Salinas again introduced the bill at the start of the 66th Legislative Session. And it was again included in an omnibus tax bill which passed the House of Representatives and is now being considered by the Senate.

Rep. Salinas stated today that the city of Dallas is conducting a strong lobbying effort in the Senate to have the car tax exemption placed on a local option basis. "If they are successful," Salinas stated, "I am afraid that some local governments will not pass on the option." He further stated that in the event this change occurs he hopes the city of Lubbock will pass on the local option and commit to give the citizens of Lubbock this type of tax relief. However, Rep. Salinas said further that he is still hopeful the bill will pass as it was originally intended and that he will continue to work with the members of the House as well as the Senate, to get the measure approved on a statewide basis.

Ringling the Bell . . .

with Bob Tieuel

Black Commentary: Dear Bob—Martin Luther King was above anything else a churchman, and he understood the persistent paradox of being in the world and not of the world. King, like the church of which he was a minister, made people uncomfortable, reminding them of things they would rather forget, standing for things either assumed or ignored, summoning a reluctant nation, race and world to a moral grandeur the likes of which had not been heard since the time of Christ and the Holy Apostles. He spoke the clarion call and it was too much for us to bear, and so, with Joseph's brothers, we said to ourselves: 'Here comes this dreamer. Come now, let us kill him . . . and we shall see what will become of his dreams.'

The story of Joseph has a happy ending, at least for Joseph. The King's story is not yet ended, and we shall have a far journey to see how ours is concluded.

"Dr. King understood as few do that in the face of virtue, we are called to be faithful rather than successful, and that the means of keeping faith with a dream worth having is perseverance . . . There are many who will say 'We have outgrown the agenda of the 50s and 60s.' And indeed we have. We have outgrown it only because now we are able to see that our so-called domestic crisis, and that international crisis was but a symptom of the entire human condition which can be described in a rather old-fashioned word, heard frequently in this place: SIN. It is not ignorance that sets race upon race. It is not ignorance that blinds us to the needs of our neighbor. It is the alienation from God's design and our own human needs, estrangement, separation, the arbitrary isolation of which ignorance is a symptom but not the cause.

"Our brother Martin has gone on before us: we must follow, and be doing the works of Him who sent him and sends us forth into the world in peace, justice, and love. Nothing more is necessary, nothing less will do." Signed: Peter J. Gomes, minister in Memorial Church, Cambridge, Mass.

Dear Mom: (and to all the Moms in the world):

As far as this son is concerned every day is Mother's Day. I remember how you struggled that I might continue my education and "someday be a real leader for my people who have had to climb so many mountains." We never realized that you would be with us for this season as you have been ill for sometime but as we pen these lines, you are still here to lend encouragement and inspiration to "my boy who is a preacher" and a would be news writer and what have you. We are (my only sister and myself) glad that God lent you to us until now and may you have a great day every day you are with us. Like other sons and daughters everywhere: We love you for what you are. God be with you. Your son—Bob and daughter Theresa. Until later, peace.

International Museum Day To be Observed

International Museum Day will be observed May 18 at The Museum of Texas Tech University with an open house and special guided tours, giving the public an opportunity to see areas usually not on view.

The Museum will be open from 6 to 9 p.m., Friday, May 18, and the guided tours will take visitors to the basement areas where there are collections in historic costumes, historic furnishings, arts, archeology, ethnology, anthropology and geosciences.

Dr. Leslie C. Drew, director of The Museum, explained that this is the second International Museum Day observance, and he encouraged all ages to participate.

The museums of Texas are among the finest in the nation, he said, and The Museum of Texas Tech University is one of the finest in the state.

"It offers educational programs for very young, enlightenment and advanced educational opportunities for scholars, and it is a continual source of enjoyment, cultural enrichment and lifelong learning for all," he said.

The Museum annually has visitors from almost every state in the Union and from a great many foreign countries, but on this International Museum Day the emphasis will be directed especially toward visitors from the Lubbock area who may come frequently but seldom have a chance to view the work that goes on behind the scenes.

Refreshments will be served.
