NUMBER 27

There is no doubt about it some of the thickest people on Earth are living in Earth.

Whether this is just plain old "Spring Fever" or whether we all just have tired blood, remains yet to be seen.

Anyway, I've fat gained a healthy respect for the Indians after reading this story recently on how to enjoy life without fighting it so hard:

An Indian lecturer, Charles Eagle Plume, tells of an old Indian who was entertained in one of our large cities. He was taken to the best night clubs, heard the swing bands, and was shown how white men have their fun. He sat through a number of movies, and was feverishly rushed from place to place and given a taste of modern life in all its phases.

When the entertaining was finished, the old Indian was asked what he thought of it. "Ugh," he granted, "white man must be unhappy — work so hard to have good time — no have good time at all. Indian, he sit on rock and watch sun go down every night. Much good time. Moonlight on rippling water — much good time. Watch fire burning low — much good time. Hear pine trees whispering together on hilltop — much good time. Very still stars, like heap and heap candles in heaven — much good time."

The Indian trail to happiness is worth following. There is healing for jangled nerves and tired minds in the woods, the hills, the singing streams, and the mountain-tops.

All I can add to this is "Ugh," Heap Smart Indian."

Valentine Day is just around the corner and though it was a bit premature I have already received a big box of candy from Polly Jr. However looking back to the maids of an earlier day, Valentine Day was a time for serious husband hunting.

According to the Encyclopedia, a girl might start out at midnight by circling the church 12 times and repeating the rhyme, "I sow hempseed, hempseed I sow, he that loves me best come after me now." If no one did, she didn't give up, she still hoped to see her true love valentine in her dreams. Of course, she first took the precaution of pinning five bay leaves to her pillow, one to each corner and one in the center.

I'm not sure what the leaves stood for, but it was part of their beliefs. Our kids may drag up Main Street 12 times after midnight, but I've never heard a soul repeating this rhyme.

If they wanted to know if marriage was possible in the coming year, a peek through a keyhole could tell her that. The girl rose early on February 14 and set her eye to the keyhole. If she saw two objects, well and good. But if only one — better luck next year. (Bet the optometrist had lots of business on February 15 from eye strain).

Still, perhaps she could identify her husband to be. She wrote the names of her boy friends on bits of paper and rolled each one up in a piece of clay. Then she dropped the clay into water. The first scrap of paper that floated to the top was believed to hold the name of her valentine.

If she already had a favorite, she might test him by striking her forehead with a folded rose petal. If the petal cracked, obviously he loved her.

Those girls sure took the long way around, with rhymes, leaves, pecking through keyholes, clay notes, rose petals and the like. Nowadays they have dates, music and moonlight to help them make up their minds.

Young men went on a heart winning spree too. On Valentine Day they literally "wore their hearts on their sleeves" during early celebrations of Valentine's Day. The Encyclopedia relates that men chose their valentines by drawing slips of paper with names from a vase. Each young man then wore the paper with his lady's name on his sleeve for several days.

I never was considered lucky, I've always been so unlucky, that if I had two skirts to a three piece suit, I always wore the coat, so I'm sure I would have drawn the name of my very worst enemy, and would have had to carry my arm in a sling to keep from revealing the name.

Entertainment will be by the "Melody Misse," a trio composed of Patti Mann, Sharon Been and Evelyn Meadows, accompanied by Janet Cowley at the piano.

DON'T KNOCK HOLES IN YOUR BOATS!

By Melodie Brock

Wednesday, January 24, Dr. Loy McClung, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Plainview, Texas spoke to the Springlake Junior High and High School students. Dr. McClung told two very interesting stories concerning boys and girls today. This particular story told of three boys who had gone fishing. The boys started playing around. After a while one of them got angry & started at the other boys with one of his oars. The other two boys jumped out but the third one started knocking holes in the bottom of the boat, consequently the boat sank with him in it. This proves that boys and girls and even adults sometimes forget their blessings. We have such blessings as security, happiness, honesty and trust of friends, our democratic country, and freedom from communism. Let's all help keep these blessings for others to share. Please don't knock holes in your boat and lose all these blessings. If everyone will stay afloat we will help make America a better place to live.
