LOCAL OFFICER SLASHED WHEN MAKES ARREST

Deputy Constable Is Painfully Cut by Drunken Reveler

Taylor Scott, deputy constable of this city, is today suffering from two painful knife wounds in the neck and shoulder, received last night when a drunk resisted arrest and pulled a knife on the officer.

Jimmie Hartswell of this city is in jail, charged with the cutting affray.

Scott attempted to place Hartswell under arrest for drunkenness and disturbance of the peace last night about ten o'clock, in front of the Texas Theatre. Hartswell resisted and drew a knife on the officer, slashing him painfully.

Every Child in City Must be Visited By Santa This Year

In listing the families and inquiring of their needs, two representatives of the Democrat made visit yesterday of fourteen homes in the city whose names had been obtained for the Empty Stocking fund.

Without an exception, in every family there was sickness. There was poverty. Practically everyone visited were widows. Widows and married women, who with their limited means, had arisen early in the morning in an effort to tidy their homes. Homes where there was no paper on the walls; no panes in the windows; no cov-

FIRE DAMAGES CAR OF COTTON AT COMPRESS

Three Bales Burned In Car of Cotton From Claydon

A Fort Worth and Denver freight train going through Memphis at an appropriate time last night probably saved the Memphis Compress Company considerable money and the Memphis Fire Department no little time and effort.

Local fire fighters were almost at a loss as to what to do this morning about 2 o'clock when they answered a "wildcat" call to the Memphis compress, after being summoned by a watchman who smelled smoke and knew that there must be a fire somewhere.

The fire fighters discovered the blaze in a freight car load-

An appropriate Christmas program is to be given. Christmas

The petition, County Attorney Periman stated, has been filed by Oklahoma attorneys representing Olaf Wade of Altus, Okla., asking that officers be prevented from arresting operators of marble boards or from seizing the boards.

SCHOOLS CLOSE FOR HOLIDAY

Students Will Have Nine Days Freedom From Classes

All public schools in Memphis, from the High school to the colored school in Morningside, will dismiss this afternoon for the Christmas holidays, Supt. W. C. Davis has announced.

Studies at the local schools will be resumed on December 30, giving the students a holiday of nine days.

Several Memphis teachers plan to visit parents and relatives out of town over the Christmas holidays, but the majority will remain in Memphis. Coach Chesty Walker will attend the Rose Bowl football game at Pasadena, Calif.

The Democrat may not always be right in the stand it takes; it may not always be wise in standing for what it believes; but, right or wrong, wise or unwise, the Democrat will stand for the things it believes are for the welfare of the community.

HAD YOU RATHER BE A "GOOD FELLOW?"

SINCE the Daily Democrat inaugurated the Empty Stocking Fund, several citizens and one or two organizations have expressed the desire to look after the Christmas needs of one particular family, instead of donating a small amount to the Empty Stocking Fund.

That is fine, and the folks who have expressed such a desire and agreed to do this have been furnished the names of needy families from the list compiled by the paper.

That is exactly the movement we at first contemplated starting, but we were afraid there would not be enough folks who would care to assume the total burden of one family, so we thought best to solicit a fund for the purpose, and we are proud to state that donations, so far, have been good, but more . . . much more . . . is needed.

If you, as a citizen, or your club as an organization, desire to adopt a needy family for Christmas, get in touch with us and we will give you full particulars on each family on our list. Each family taken from this list in this manner will lighten the load on the Empty Stocking Fund just that much.

However, in adopting a family, bear in mind that it carries with it the necessity of a "real" donation . . . food for the family and toys, fruit, nuts and candy for the little ones, and sometimes clothing.

The Democrat is anxious that the present amount in the fund be at least quadrupled before Christmas Eve, as it will take not less than that amount to properly care for the needy families and give them a real Christmas.

When you make a donation to the fund, or adopt a family, you may be assured that the families benefitted are really in need of this attention. We are making a personal investigation of each and every family whose name is turned in to us. Representatives of the paper are visiting each home, seeing for themselves the condition of the family, talking with the mother and father and children, and learning just what is needed in each case to make their Christmas complete.

If you want to experience a real Christmas yourself this year, you can assure that pleasant feeling of good will and happiness in no better way than to do your bit toward this worthy cause.

One here is trying to laugh at the current results of the Digest's current New Dealer majority poll. On the other hand, being discussed earnestly in the highest quarters.

The effect created far from being a panic, there is no New Dealer who does not talk himself into the fact that a 55 to 45 per cent general question comes meaning that all will when Mr. Roosevelt can next fall against a Republican candidate as yet unnamed.

Nevertheless, all of us are entitled to use our own judgment and if the prevalent swing in Roosevelt policies as shown by the poll continues, we will have to answer these questions:

1. Does a request for approval or disapproval of "acts and policies of the Roosevelt Administration" bring the same pro or con as a demand for choice of the election of Roosevelt, Hoover—or Landon—or Borah?

2. Is the present question in the minds of voters with that of the 1934 election, or is it a new question, or are Roosevelt policies "on the cards" for the 1934 election?

3. How much of the Deal vote is a protest against the liberal and left-wingers of the Roosevelt Administration? Roosevelt hasn't gone far enough, but who would be a Republican?

4. Is the Digest poll a true picture of the economic scale?

WANTED: A poor old man who killed two hogs for her family's use was promptly pounced upon by federal agents and penitentiary for her scant store.

A very serious effort is being made to locate this poor old man, and almost any official willing to dig down to the bottom for a reward to the sleuth.

She appeared first in the Atlantic Monthly in an article by W. Owens, who ascribed to a nice old retired clergyman his acquaintance who it while on a visit to his town in Maine.

AAA is also looking for a southern woman named Dryden, who is reported to have received $1000 from the government despite the fact that she had contracted to reduce cotton and who, on seeking to turn would mean "too late."

It would also like to see AAA agents reported to be distributing $100 bills in the districts as fast as they can get them out.

It is officially suspected that these people are closely connected with one another. And to the man who had never made more than $400 from his hogs, but $1000 by AAA for not doing them—he was at different times a resident of Iowa, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Louisiana, Minnesota, and Wisconsin and claimed as a "friend" by Dickinson of Iowa.

With All My Love

by Mary Raymond Copyright NEA 1935

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Forces are at work that threaten the happiness of lovely DANA STANLEY and her poor but attractive husband, DR. SCOTT STANLEY.

Dana's grandmother, who had hoped Dana would marry rich RONALD MOORE, hopes the marriage will go on the rocks. PAULA LONG, who has been in love with Scott for years, also believes the marriage will not last.

Meanwhile, Dana's half-sister, Nancy, is in love with Ronald. Knowing he loves Dana, she masks her feeling behind an antagonistic attitude.

Paula goes to Scott's office and asks him to prescribe for a severe headache. Scott is puzzled by Paula's description of her suffering.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXIV

Scott's birthday arrived at last. And Dana was ready for it.

She had two surprises for him. She had invited three other couples in for dinner. And this time there would be no chance that anything about the dinner would go wrong. During the past weeks her skill and confidence had increased greatly.

She was having Sarah's dusky young granddaughter, Azalea, in to serve. Azalea would wear a crisp white apron and cap and she could wait on the table beautifully. Sarah had served "quality" all her life, and her granddaughters were apt young creatures, well-trained in culinary accomplishments.

So there wasn't a chance that anything would go wrong. This venture would re-establish Dana as a graceful hostess in her husband's eyes.

An old, but becoming dinner dress had come back from the cleaners, rejuvenated for the occasion. It hung near Scott's new dark suit, which Dana knew, with a thrill in her heart, would set off his handsome blondness with an extra air.

Scott heard the first piece of news when he arrived home. Dana met him in an impetuous rush.

"Your things are laid out in the dressing room," she said. "We're celebrating your birthday with a dinner party."

"Great!" exclaimed Scott. He seized her, kissed her squarely on the lips. "So you thought you'd surprise me with a party."

"And I did!" Dana boasted.

Scott picked up a big box he had deposited on a chair and started, whistling, toward the dressing room.

"What's in the box?" Dana asked.

"Couple of shirts," he told her. A moment later he called, "Look here, Dana, the darned cleaners have sent the wrong suit. This isn't mine—"

"No?" Dana's voice was cheerful. She waited.

And then: "DANA!" Thunder and lightning in Scott's voice.

She answered, walking to the door, a little frightened flutter in her heart.

Scott's face was white and stern. "This is a new suit, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"I didn't need a new suit. I won't have you buying clothes for me. How do you think I feel when my wife wears her old clothes and then goes out and lugs home a new suit for me?"

And then all at once Scott made a dive for Dana, lifting her high in the air for a moment. He put her down, crushing her slender body against him. "Darn little idiot," he said, kissing her hard.

Dana whispered, "Please don't mind too much. I'll never do it again, if that's the way you feel about it."

"How'd you manage it?" Scott said, after a moment. "It's a swell suit and must have cost plenty."

"I sort of stole from the house-keeping money," Dana said.

"Hmm. Well, open that box, will you? See how you like those shirts I bought."

Dana untied the box and turned back the tissue folds. She stood staring down at the contents.

"Scott, this isn't a shirt. It's a blue chiffon dress."

Realization dawned. Dana flung her arms around her husband.

"Daring goose. I didn't need it."

"I didn't need that suit, either."

"How did you manage it?"

Scott laughed. "I sort of borrowed from the budget. I'm a great budget fixer. Leave that to me."

"And how," Dana asked, "did you happen to buy this particular dress? I saw it in a window one day, and loved it."

"I know."

"How?"

"Paula saw you looking at it."

Dana's eyes sobered. So Paula was responsible for her having this beautiful dress. She wouldn't let that bother her. It must have been pure chance. But it hadn't been chance that had sent Scott to Burger-Goodlett's to buy it for her. Maybe it might have been a little more thrilling if he had just happened to pick this dress.

"I saw it in the window as I went by," Dana said with elaborate carelessness. "It is a beauty and practical, too, because the little jacket turns it into a dinner dress. And without it, it's very formal."

"All of which," Scott said, "doesn't mean much to me. If you like it, that's fine."

Azalea had come and was in the kitchen arranging the china for the different courses. Scott was keeping up a cheerful accompaniment to his splashing. He always whistled when he was taking a shower, which Dana found highly amusing.

She had taken her bath earlier, so there would be no last minute rush with her own toilet.

Dana went to the dining room again and gave the table a last appreciative glance before going back to slip on her dress. The table did look lovely.

For the centerpiece she had chosen delicate pink flowers. Slender pink tapers would glow in the white Dresden holders that had been a wedding gift. With her pretty crystal and china, the table would be a perfect picture.

The telephone rang, and Azalea answered.

"Hope no one's falling down on us at this time of day," Dana thought. The call was for Scott.

He came out of the bathroom with his robe on, looking immaculate and nice. Dana gave him an approving glance from the dressing room door.

Scott said briskly: "All. Tell her I'll be there in 15 minutes."

He put down the phone, turned to Dana soberly.

"An emergency," he said, stertical.

"But you can't go!" Dana suddenly limp. "Everybody's here in a few minutes."

"Sorry, honey, but if Mrs. son decides to have her hair done this time, there's nothing I can do but go. I'm her doctor."

Already he was getting into his old suit. Dana said "There be somebody else who could die it for you."

 "You don't know about the profession where do you think butter is coming from?"
 "You're teasing, but at the implication in a dumb doctor's office rather a doctor's office."
 "Cheer up, maybe she's only in pain. Lots of ways it works."
 "I'll work that way," she spoke as cheerfully. She had more of a self-pitying person.
 "So do I. I'd like to have my birthday dinner when you've done with all the frills. The dinner is great."
 "Oh, Scott, I'm sick."
 She tucked up her chin. The door banged.
 It was quiet and lonely. But soon there was a entering sextet, Dana, who came with her, and young Dr. his fiancée, Esther. He had been invited as nice to be on now, with the role left out. Ronnie was with Paula. Since Paula was Scott's friend of longest standing and also was so friendly to Dana, she was always included in their social affairs.

 Paula was fluttering about now like a brilliant butterfly. She wore a shade of lipstick that somehow went well with her red hair.
 Paula said, "It's your penalty for marrying a doctor. Deserts you at his own birthday party. You're looking sweet, Dana. That blue is a heavenly shade for you."
 Ronnie apparently was studying the glowing tip of his cigaret. He crushed it in a tray and came over to Dana, taking both her hands in his. "Yes, how do you do it?" he asked. "Always manage to get the one dress."
 "The one dress is right," Dana smiled. "I couldn't afford two dresses at the same time."
 "You know perfectly well what I mean," Ronnie said in a low tone as they went to the table.
 "Of course," Dana said absently. "It was flattering, too."
 Everybody looked so smart. The table was lovely, the stuffed anchovy salad perfectly delectable. Only Scott was not here. He was not coming.
 The dinner was progressing gayly when Paula Long said carelessly, "I rather stole a march on you today, Dana. I entertained Scott at a birthday luncheon. Quite without design, I can assure you."

are that he was last night over Northern Canada, and headed directly for this city. He said he and his pilot were on time to the dot, and that he would get here a little before 10:30, circle the city a few times and then land and taxi the plane to the public square, where he would alight with his bag of souvenirs and good things to eat for the kiddies.

Every child in the Memphis territory should be in the city tomorrow when Santa lands, to show him that he is really welcome. And remember, he is bringing every little boy and girl whistles, balloons, nuts and candy.

Bring the children in early tomorrow, so they can see Santa land. He will be here most of the day, before starting the return trip to his North Pole castle, to complete arrangements for his world-wide trip on Christmas Eve.

The men who broke into the local store stole three guns, a supply of ammunition and a man's fitted case with brushes. The men arrested at Anson had in their possession some shells like those stolen here and a case which fitted the description of the one taken in the burglary.

If identified by the local officers, the men will be brought here to answer to charges of burglary.

A chance freight train pulled up and took the car with the burning cotton to a rail siding, where the fire department easily extinguished the flames.

Damage was estimated by Matthew Allen, compress manager, to be in the neighborhood of $500, three bales of cotton having burned. Origin of the fire was a matter of speculation. The car of cotton was shipped here from Clarendon.

THE DEMOCRAT

The latest facility added at the Junior high school is the lounge room, to be used by visitors and by students who become ill while at school. The room, an airy, beautifully-decorated resting spot, was opened this week; its opening having been made possible by the Junior High Parent-Teacher Association through a "country store" sale.

All rooms at the junior building on South 9th street have been garbed in fitting yuletide decorations as a part of the regular school work, and a festive spirit is radiated throughout the building. Colored chalk work has been done on the blackboards in the various rooms, depicting well known Christmas scenes; and the rooms are swathed in green and red streamers and other Christmas dress, notably large Christmas trees.

Outstanding among the rooms are those of Miss Ira Hammond and Mrs. Beth Lemons. Children in those rooms in carrying their class subjects to completion have designed and constructed miniature sand table scenes of Christmas in foreign countries.

Each section, or "home room," will conclude the holiday program this afternoon with the distribution of gifts from the various trees. All students and faculty members will take part, L. C. Linn, principal, said.

Section 51, 61, 62, 71 and 72 put on a Christmas skit at the weekly chapel hour yesterday morning at 11:30 o'clock. After the playlet was given, short talks were made by pupils who told interesting facts about the celebration of Christmas in other countries. Original poems were read by four of the students.

Eager little faces peered through the windows at us as we passed. Eager little voices called into their homes. One boy, keeping watch for a valid grandmother, opened the door in an effort to suffer an answer. Yet, he invited us in. One mother pointed to a little doll where a little doll was hanging. "That is what the Campaign bought for my girl last year. She had it with the doll, oh! She said she wouldn't like it and to see her this year."

Can the Memphis children like this girl that has kept her by you last year was afraid Santa was this year. Can they, a great many of them, suffering from illness and malnutrition, afford their Santa?
