SHALL WE REVISE THE CONSTITUTION?

BY WILLIS THORNTON
Democrat Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Under heavy glass in a massive marble and bronze case in the Library of Congress here are several following sheets of manuscript with fading signatures that were affixed 148 years ago. On Sept. 17, 1787, these very pages were adopted as the fundamental law under which "we, the people" of the United States, chose to govern ourselves.

The document was conceived in storm and stress, was bitterly argued and contested before being stopped, has been interpreted, contested, amended and debated ever since.

Twenty amendments have been added since those sheets were written and signed. The first 10, however, were really part of the original, adopted as a portion of the original process of constitution making.

In the succeeding 148 years, only 10 changes have been made, Newton D. Baker has pointed out that out of 2600 proposed changes, only these 20 have been accepted, five rejected, and the others not regarded as sufficiently mature even to be submitted to the people.

It has proved one of the most durable written instruments in political history.

But on this 148th anniversary, a movement to scrutinize this document is spreading over the country. President Roosevelt himself, gravely and with deliberation, suggested, after the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that NRA violated the Constitution, that within "five or ten years" the American people must re-study their Constitution and determine whether basic law, devised for 18th century "horse-and-buggy days," is suitable in every way for a 20th century age of machinery, power, and close-knit national organization.

Following this lead, a flood of discussion instantly covered the country. Magazine articles, radio speeches, newspaper stories, pamphlets all aimed at informing people what the Constitution is, or persuading them that it ought or ought not to be changed.

The 148th year of the American Constitution is definitely destined to be one which the people will put it under a critical microscope and determine whether it needs overhauling.

Here is an effort to sketch the opposing points of view which will be advanced during the coming year.

Favoring Revision

Those who believe extensive or fundamental changes in the Constitution must be made in view of today's conditions argue somewhat as follows:

The Constitution was literally the product of a "horse-and-buggy" age, when the country had 4,000,000 people instead of 125,000,000, when communication was difficult, and life and business relations were simple.

It was a charter of political liberty in days when economic liberty more or less took care of itself. Today, political liberty is assumed in America, and the battle for economic liberty is just beginning.

The forefathers could not foresee or provide for the rise of great corporations and financial structures, the network of communications between states, or industrialization which utterly changed the relations between a working man and his job.

Therefore, in their zeal to protect state and individual rights, they denied to the federal government powers which are necessary today for control of industrial, communication, and financial conditions which may be handled successfully only on a national scale by the federal government.

Prof. Howard Lee McBain of Columbia has concluded that "No fundamental change in our economic system, no far-reaching alteration in the relations of government to business, can be brought about without changing the constitution."

"We should not rush or drift into such important changes upon the high tide of an emergency. The common man should understand what is up."

This point of view sympathizes with the supreme court's decisions against recent social legislation such as NRA and railroad pensions. The thing to do is to change the Constitution, so that the court must follow the new guide posts.

This fight for new economic liberty can be a victorious one without sacrificing any of the hard-won political or personal liberties which the Constitution was mainly designed to preserve.

CONSTITUTION CHANGES

TODAY in Constitution Day in the United States, so let's devote a little time to a consideration of our state.

There are three schools of thought in regard to this ancient and time-worn document.

The first, regarded as liberals, contends that the constitution should always be amenable to change at the will of the people it governs. Changing times and conditions make necessary, they claim, a flexible constitution, if the state is to progress from the horse and buggy days.

The second theory is based on the belief that the constitution deals solely with fundamentals, and that fundamentals remain the same, no matter what happens. They claim that what was a principle of government when the constitution was drafted is a principle of government still.

The third, which is rapidly growing in favor, advocates tossing the entire constitution out of the window and writing an entirely new one, in the light of modern trends and experience.

Each group advances some valid reasons for their stand, and all three have many supporters among the citizens of the state.

The fundamentalists scored a victory in the recent special election, when they defeated the amendment authorizing the submission of constitutional changes by a special session of the legislature.

And this same victory for the fundamentalists blocked the avenue by which the state had hoped to make provisions for relief, leaving the relief situation very much up in the air, insofar as the state is concerned.

OFFICIALLY WET

WITH the canvassing of the votes Monday, cities and counties in the state which were wet before prohibition, became officially wet again, according to the ruling of the Attorney General.

In those counties, the speak-easies will become loud-speakers, no doubt, and folks who so desire may perch their feet on the old brass rail again, right out in public.

 ment that, "I see no reason to think that the evolution has suddenly terminated and that the Constitution, which has been elastic for nearly a century and a half, has suddenly become rigid."
 Admitting the basic law to be the product of human minds in conflict in "horse-and-buggy days" which did not foresee today's mechanical world, they believe with Joseph Davis, Chicago attorney, that the Constitution accords with the great truths of human nature, which have not changed greatly during the period of recorded history: "It is based on deep fundamental truths; it recognized the weakness of man; it set up a rational influence; it was calculated to be of enduring character; it was the creation of some of the greatest minds that this country has ever produced."
 Therefore, argues this point of view, no sweeping of fundamental changes out to be made, even though it might be advisable to adjust some details for smoother working out of government problems in practice.

Experts In Lubrication

"Lubrication approved by the manufacturer of your car is what you get," says L. C. Mundy, manager of the Texaco Service Station at 10th and Main, "when it is done at our place."
 All lubrication at the Texaco station is in accordance with the Texaco check-chart, which is compiled in accordance with the requirements by car manufacturers.
 Many motorists are now asking for a winter greasy job, according to Mr. Mundy, and the station is equipped to give them this service.
 That many are also taking seriously the warning against driving with slick, wornout tires is indicated by the large sale of Firestone Tires at the station recently.
 "Firestones give you protection on wet, slick roads," Mr. Mundy said, "because of their deep cut tread and scientific non-skid design."
 The Texaco station is allowing liberal trade-in allowance on old tires now, on new, safe Firestones. You can afford to equip your car for winter driving, by fitting it with Firestones all around.

Harlow Has Fine Veteran Backfield

By ERNEST BARCELLA United Press Staff Correspondent CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Sept. 16—A new era dawned today in Harvard football. Richard Cresson Harlow, bird-fancier by avocation and football coach by profession, officially began his reign as Harvard's first non-graduate gridiron chief. The former Western Maryland strategist trotted out a string of talent which he hopes to mold into a combination that will restore Harvard football to the peak it held in the days before the Big Three, form the standpoint of gridiron prestige, became a hal-lowed tradition. Coaching System Changed Second of the trio of "ivy colleges" to establish such a precedent, Harvard scrapped its graduate coaching system entirely after Eddie Casey abdicated last December. Casey since has been named coach of the Boston Redskins of the National Professional Football League. He resigned under fire after pressure had been brought to bear, particularly by indignant alumni who began to take a string of Crimson losses as a personal affront.
