Boat Locked in Ice Gorge Death Squeeze

TAX COLLECTIONS REPORTED GOOD

Tax collections, which are usually considered a fair barometer of business conditions, were unusually good in Memphis and Hall County last month, the monthly report just completed at the county tax collector-assessor's office showed.

Collections for last month were almost $80,000 above those of the preceding month, and they were approximately $20,000 above the January collections last year.

A total of $100,441.61 in state and county taxes were paid in at the collector's office last month. Of that amount, $77,110.47 was for county taxes. The December total for state and county taxes was $20,899.70.

January was the final month

OPEN TRAINING SCHOOL IN CITY FOR WPA AIDES

Vocational Home-Ec Assistants Being Trained for Work

A preliminary training school opened here this morning in the City Hall for those who are to assist Mrs. L. Carroll Smyers in the Vocational Home Economics program that will be initiated in Memphis within the next three weeks.

Ten women, the maximum number, transferred to the Vocational Home Economics project from the sewing room project, began their studies under Mrs. Smyers this morning; and the school will run for two or three weeks. The women will study eight hours each day.

Those who will assist Mrs. Smyers in the Works Progress Administration home demonstration program are Mrs. Wilma Watson, Miss Vivian Farley, Mrs. Annie Lee Forkner, Mrs. Vergie Geter, Miss Fairy Dell Parmley, Mrs. C. D. Romines, Mrs. Blanche Duke,

MRS. S. E. MAJOR DIES AT VERNON

Word was received in Memphis this morning of the death of Mrs. S. E. Major, who died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. W. Andrews, in Vernon, at 7:10 o'clock, after an extended illness.

Funeral services for Mrs. Major will be held in the morning at the First Methodist Church in Vernon at 10 o'clock, with the pastor conducting the services. Burial in the Vernon cemetery.

Mrs. Major was a resident of Memphis for a number of years before moving to Vernon to make her home with her daughter, Mrs. Andrews, and has many friends here who will regret to learn of her passing.

Besides her husband she is survived by two daughters, Mrs. J. C. Hennen, Seymour, and Mrs. C. W. Andrews, Vernon.

District Court Tries Non-Jury Actio

With juries for the week dismissed, the time of the District Court this week will be taken up with non-jury cases, including perhaps several divorce hearings.

In the case of G. C. Ewing et al vs Radford Grocer Company, which occupied the court most of last week, the jury Saturday at noon reported on the questions given them for consideration in the case. As soon as the attorneys present their pleas for judgment, Judge Fires will pass judgment in the case.

Saturday afternoon, the case of the State of Texas vs L. B. Dobb, charged with hog theft, was heard before the judge, the defendant having waived trial by jury. Dobb was sentenced to four years in

PICKED UP AND ROBBED BY MEN IN AUTOMOBILE

Found By a Motorist and Brought Here For Treatment

Picked up by three men yesterday afternoon as he was walking home from Memphis on the Lakeview Highway, Jesse Misenheimer, living on the F. J. Gardenhire farm south of Lakeview, was slugged, robbed and thrown out of the car by the men.

Misenheimer was hailed by the men about 7:00 p. m. at the west edge of the city and asked if he wanted a ride. He climbed into the car with them, and that is the last he remembers until he came to in the Clark Hospital, suffering a slight concussion of the brain and a painful bruised side.

The unconscious man was found in the bar-pit alongside the highway by a Memphis-bound motorist, who brought him to the hospital in this city, where he was given treatment and then taken home.

To officers of the sheriff's office, Misenheimer stated that he could give no definite description of the men, save that there were three of them in the car. He does not know what kind of a weapon was used in knocking him out, or whether he was thrown out of the car. A badly bruised side indicated that he might have been thrown from the car. He was robbed of about six dollars by the men.

The sheriff's office sent men to the scene of the crime, and it is understood that, despite the fact Misenheimer could not give any definite information as to the men's appearance, they have a clue which may lead to their apprehension.

Misenheimer is reported to be recovering from his adventure.

COUNTY FARMERS WILL GET FUNDS

The office force at the county agent's office this morning were busy finishing work on the corn-hog compliance papers, preparatory to sending them to District Agent Parker Hanna at College Station, where they will be rechecked and sent to Washington for payment.

A meeting of the corn-hog county committee was held at the courthouse Saturday morning and afternoon, at which time all the compliance forms were signed. There will be over 200 Hall County farmers to benefit from the payments for corn-hog control this year.

CCC FIELD MEET HELD SATURDAY

The Washington's Birthday field meet held by Company 1821, at the local CCC Camp, proved to be an interesting and very successful event, with a nice crowd of town people present to watch the camp personnel compete in the various events.

Events held were 50-yard dash, 100-yard dash, shot put, standing broad jump, 200-yard relay race, 200-yard walk, washer pitching, horseshoe pitching, baseball batting and baseball throwing.

FEAR OF MACHINES HAMPERS

IT IS funny that a nation which owes so much to up-to-date machinery as America does should be so mortally afraid of the stuff.

This fear appears in various ways.

Sometimes it takes the shape of an order from a relief commission to the effect that jobless men put to work fixing a highway must do so without the help of automobile road-scrappers, concrete-percolators, or brick-shufflers.

Sometimes it leads an economist to declare that unemployment is an incurable problem which forever will grow worse and worse because of our mechanical ingenuity, so that in the end three or four job-holders will push the buttons and pull the levers which do all the work of the nation.

The man in the street talks about machinery which puts men out of work. The highbrow speaks of technological unemployment. Both of them mean the same thing, and both of them are scared of the nation.

Yet when we look back we might have a hard time figuring out just how the country would have grown great and rich without these same labor-saving pieces of machinery.

Indeed, it is this whole scheme of increasing man's productivity by turning more and more of his job over to machines that has led us up to the threshold of the great Age of Plenty—which, before we get through with it, should be the brightest age in human annals.

America's population increased 218 per cent between 1870 and 1930; the number of jobs, in the same period, increased 291 per cent. In the long run, machinery makes us better off, as a people, and not worse.

Why, then, should we be so afraid of it? Because our present list of unemployed persons declines less rapidly than our list of employed machines? That isn't the machine's fault. It's ours; we don't know how to handle them to the best advantage. There is no reason to think we shouldn't be able to learn.

We've always known that West Texans are the finest folks on earth, but it took a drive to Vernon and return yesterday to teach us just how kind they are. Until then we didn't know that folks in this neck of the woods took their livestock out for a ride on Sundays. While on the road, we saw several folks with trailers full of cows or mules hooked on behind their cars or trucks, giving the animals an airing.

One of the roadside parks being built here and there by the NYA, near Quanah. Quite an attractive

Behind the Scenes in Washington

WASHINGTON—Wild life, being relatively smart, knew enough to keep away from the North American Wild Life Conference.

Friends and admirers of ducks, geese, quail, deer and other game were represented. But the conference was controlled by men whose affectionate regard for those pretty critters is customarily expressed from the end of a rifle or shotgun. In the background were ammunition manufacturers.

The conference created what is called the "General Wild Life Federation," with a constitution drafted that the genuine wild life conservationists afterward figured that they and the wild life had been taken for another ride, in the name of conservation and restoration.

The real issue before the conference, according to the conservationists, was whether it wouldn't be a dandy idea to stop shooting for a while and let some of the wild birds and animals fill up their depleted ranks—especially certain species which rapidly are becoming extinct. But the insiders were so anxious for "harmony" that this wasn't even mentioned.

THE conference was called by Roosevelt at behest of a wild life organization said to be heavily subsidized and dominated by ammunition and other commercial interests, which felt such a gathering might be more successful if under federal auspices.

"What we all want," said Secretary Carl W. Shoemaker of the Senate committee on conservation of wild life and resources, "are some provisions in the constitution to prevent the women's groups, 4-H clubs, the farm organizations, and particularly the wool growers and cattlemen from any representation within the organizations."

The constitution would, according to the exclusion "everybody except men." The general federations have state federations provided that representative states must be chosen whose "primary interest" valuation of wild life.

That leaves out "groups" and other organizations which are apt to get sentimentalistic of wild life.

SPECIAL pretense farm legislation is a control measure—the court majority having crop control outside its power—is too much for the most loyal administration Democrats to swallow. Wagner of New York bones as to his belief that was "unconstitutional" new program, which he production control, but that should be passed by Senator Minton of Indiana.

It's crop control and is tional, irrespective of court majority says.

When Ashurst of Arizona the Senate that "any argument to constitutionality of a bill is profitless." Chairman Ed Smith of the Agriculture committee hastened to assert:

"We must not lose sight of the fact that this is a soil-conservation bill."

"Will the senator look the next time he makes the demand?" demanded Republican McNary.

"I have lately reached where it is impossible to be so," replied Smith.

Deductions for Professional Expenses

A professional man may deduct all necessary expenses incurred in the pursuit of his profession. These include the cost of supplies, used in his practice, office rent, cost of light, water, fuel, and telephone in his office, the hire of office assistants, and expenses paid in the operation and repair of an automobile, based upon the proportion of time it is used in making professional calls or for other professional purposes.

Many physicians use their residences both as their offices and their homes. In such instance the physicians may deduct as a business expense the rental value of the room occupied for office purposes if he actually pays rent, and also the cost of light and heat furnished these rooms. Also, he may deduct a portion of the wages paid domestic servants whose time is partly occupied in caring for these rooms. Membership dues in professional societies are deductible. Physicians and dentists who keep in their waiting rooms current magazines and newspapers for the benefit of their patients may deduct this item as a business expense. The cost of professional journals for the taxpayers' own use is also a deductible item.

The cost of technical books is not a deductible item, being a capital expenditure, but a proportionate amount for each year's depreciation of the books may be deducted. Depreciation may also be taken on office furniture and equipment. Insurance premiums on office or other professional equipment and liability insurance may be deducted. Automobile liability insurance may be deducted only when the automobile is used wholly in pursuit of the taxpayer's profession, and the cost of the entire upkeep may legitimately be claimed as a professional expense.

Centennial Adopts Color

DALLAS, Feb. 24.—A new shade of blue—a dusky blue whose hue was derived from the State Flower of Texas—will be a leading color in milady's spring wardrobe. This, the "Bluebonnet Blue," is as delicate as the flower from which it was derived. Because it is at its loveliest with grey accessories, it will be extremely popular with those who have made grey their spring color.

Texas Centennial officials recommended the color of the state's flower to Mrs. Margaret H. Rorke, director of the Textile Color Card Association of New York which sets many of the leading color styles. Some difficulty was experienced since the bluebonnet is of a rare blue and hard to duplicate but, after several weeks of experimenting, "Bluebonnet Blue" was perfected and Texans regard it as very authentic. Announcement carrying a sample of the color has been sent to all stores and fashionists and "Bluebonnet Blue" will be widely publicized throughout the United States.

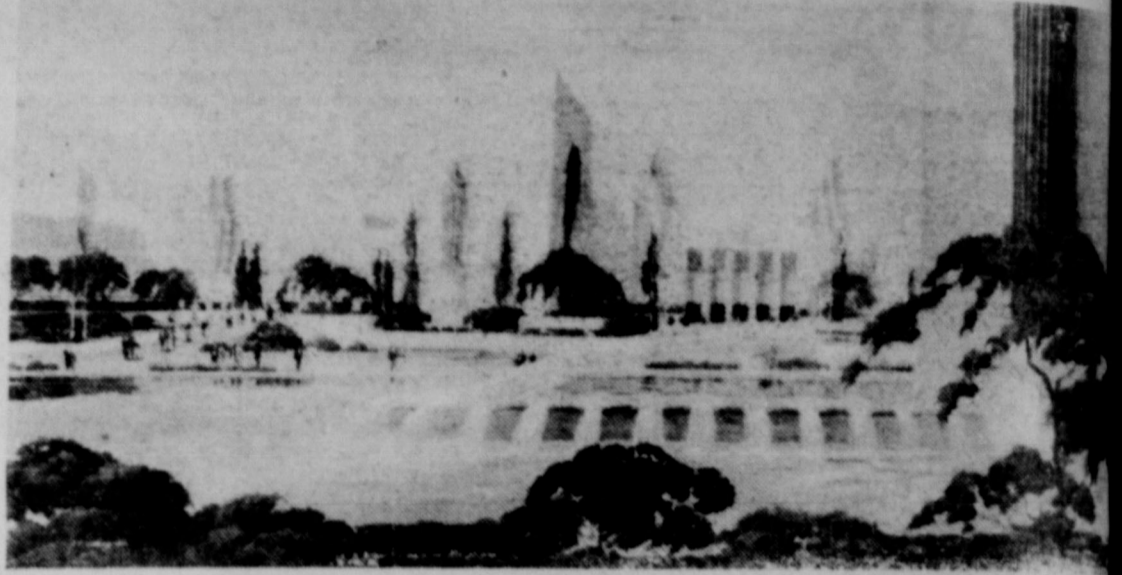

The Texas Centennial Committee will give "Bluebonnet Blue" wide publicity throughout the country in the press and over the air and this animated flower tone will also be featured in fashion shows, store displays and at various social events.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
JANE WESTON feels her dreams have come true when she sets out on a three weeks' ocean cruise, accepted in payment for the salary due her when the magazine for which she worked as typist suspended publication.

On board the ship, she meets handsome DIRK STROM, expert ski jumper, as penniless as Jane. The trip was a gift to him from the parents of a child whose life he saved.

Dirk introduces Jane to his friend, SNOWSHOES, a detective. Others on board are: NORA LANE, famous actress and owner of the Kokinor diamond; wealthy, eccentric MADAME DOREMUS; DUTCH LENZ and MANNIE JACKSON, blackmailers; TINO ROSSI, opera singer; KEN MARTIN and LINDA BAYES, floor show entertainers.

Jane and Dirk are much attracted to each other. She confides to him that she is merely a typist out of a job and he tells her he is not the playboy she has thought him.

A misunderstanding arises when each confesses to having dreamed of meeting much more glamorous companions.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XI

Jane moved away from Dirk, on the ship's hurricane deck, leaving him with his own hurt and injured pride. Hot tears stung her cheeks, but she wouldn't let Dirk see them.

Now they were both aware of a woman, heavily veiled and in autumn furs, who walked along the rail, pausing at intervals. She was alone. For a moment she stood and looked out over the huge swells in the sea.

Jane watched her breathlessly. Her figure was of the cast which should remain forever in black velvet or as now in a silhouette against the early evening. There was something imposing about her appearance.

The figure of a man was rapidly approaching her. It appeared as if he were going to speak, and she turned to him, revealing her face. She merely looked at the man with an ironic smile. The man walked away hurriedly, disconcerted before her smile. He had picked the wrong number!

Jane felt herself trembling. "You saw that?" she breathed, low, to Dirk. "It makes us see ourselves as we are. I'm a pickup, and you're the kind of a man who does."

She saw that he was irked. Frowns creased his forehead, and a hand went through his blond hair. "Aren't we a little too serious?" he begged. "After all, you're a swell girl. I'm a fellow—of sorts, even if I'm not a moon-struck opera star. But if that's the way you feel about us, goodnight, Miss Weston."

"Goodnight, Mr. Strom."

Jane walked away, her head held proudly erect. Disillusionment had been painful, but there were no tears now. She had the feeling that they had both merely indulged in hasty words. When she got to her room she flung herself down on the berth, and lay there, very still.

After she was gone Dirk stood by the rail, nursing his injured pride. He didn't see why Jane could be so touchy about a romantic notion. He had lived long enough close to nature to know realities. But he guessed he had let his imagination play a little on this cruise. He had wanted to know the sun and the moon and the earth and the stars.

He found himself watching the woman in veils who stood looking out over the water. He felt hypnotized by her poise, and for a moment he forgot the vanity which Jane had surprised in him.

The woman had a medallion-like profile. He saw her stretch her arms out over the water, and her lips moved almost imperceptibly. But the words somehow reached his ears.

"I don't know what I've done," she said, "to deserve all this unhappiness." She said it in a deep throaty voice that was less theatrical than convincing.

Dirk was sympathetic and sorry for her. This was the penalty for his honesty of sentiment in all his moods. He felt impelled to speak to her, but she moved away from him down the rail. He followed her, not knowing why, until she was lost in the maze of passageways.

For a moment he had almost forgotten Jane Weston! But he still remembered that he had hurt her with his frankness, and he was sorry for that. She had done something to him already. Kisses under this moonlight would alter any man's personality.

He was walking along Deck B toying with the idea that he was really in love with Jane when he met the purser talking with the veiled woman. He stopped on the rail to avoid the very meeting he had been seeking, and lit a cigaret.

"I can't sleep in my room for the men in the next suite," she said. "I've even had strange knocks on my door tonight. I'm a little afraid. And now, they're playing poker, next door, and saying things which are less shocking than loud. I took this cruise simply to rest my nerves, and get away from that sort of thing. But I don't like to annoy. They are quite possibly tired business men. Can't you give me another suite on board?"

The ship was filled. The purser was sorry he didn't have another suite. And it was obvious that he did not wish to disturb the poker players from whom his largest tips would come.

Then Dirk acted on impulse. He stepped up to the purser quickly, and tipped his fingers to his head. "I beg your pardon. Would Suite AA do for Madame?" he said, smiling. "I'm lost in it, honestly. I'd gladly exchange. I won't mind the poker players. I never go to bed before 2 in the morning anyway."

The purser stared at him. "You have Suite AA, alone? That's the best suite on board," he said. "The royal suite."

The woman lifted her veil and smiled at Dirk. "You are very kind," she said. "But I don't really deserve a royal suite."

For the first time Dirk saw her face clearly. It was the most intelligent face he had ever seen. It was the actress married and unmarried and unhappily married again, Nora Lane.

"I'm Nora Lane," she said, simply. "I tried to keep my room number a secret, but it was no use. Tonight every person on shipboard knew I was in Suite AD. I could hear them as they passed by on deck, saying: 'That's her stateroom—Nora Lane.' Perhaps it would help to change. I only want a little quiet. Will you gentlemen help me keep the secret?" she begged, smiling. "And I do thank you, Mr.—"

"Strom. Dirk Strom." He was as pleased as a small boy, and he pinched himself to see if he were dreaming. Here he was talking on intimate terms with Nora Lane, the most famous actress on two continents.

Jane got up from the berth in her stateroom and looked at her eyes in the mirror. "Shame on you, Jane, for that sort of thing!" she said. "I'll tell you what I'll do, I'll just—"

And she proceeded to do just that. She put on her best bib and tucker, which was the slinky evening gown she had actually fought over, torn out of the hands of a smartly-dressed girl at a Tuesday morning sale, price $4.98. Then she made herself up in a way that would put Myrna Loy to shame. She got out her dancing pumps, flung a borrowed cape over her shoulders and went upstairs to dance.

She was almost breathless when she passed through the Venetian Room on the way to the dancing floor. She didn't know who she was going to dance with, and she didn't care. No mere good-looking boy like Dirk Strom was going to make her unhappy. After all, he was only a ski jumper! Some man might think her attractive enough to ask her for a dance.

Before she was half way across the room, filled with people in evening clothes, she realized what a sensation she caused. Her face was a little flushed with determination, and it was this extra fire in her which made her the cynosure of all eyes. And it hadn't been intentional.

She seemed to be looking for someone.

Her eyes fell on the table where sat the small dancer, Linda Bayes and her partner, Ken Martin. They were toying with drinks before their time to go on as entertainers.

Jane saw another man at the table, a dark, exceedingly handsome young man whose head was crowned with black curly hair. In that same flash she saw him touch Linda's hand under the table, and motion with his head toward her.

Linda looked around at Ken, a bit nervously and then bowed to Jane, following it up with a beckoning nod. Jane walked toward them uncertainly, wondering if she was doing the right thing. She could hardly claim to know them.

"This is Tino Rossi," she heard Linda saying, as through a fog. "You may have heard his on the radio. Or at the opera. He's the one and only famous baritone," she concluded with a little flourish. Ken, standing, frowned at this proceeding.

Tino had stood up, and gallantly leaned over to take Jane's hand, bringing it to his lips for a gesture of flattery which left Jane in a pleasant flush. Everyone in the crowded room was looking at her. At Tino's invitation she sat down.

"Won't you have a brandy?" he said, while we are waiting to dance. And may I not claim the first dance?"

She said, "Yes," even as her eyes caught those of Dirk Strom, who sat across the room at a table with the detective. Her head went up with a soaring gesture of bravado. Dirk was looking at her resentfully, as if to say: "Well, I see you got your famous opera star. Moonlight and kisses on the Italian lakes!"

Snowshoes looked across the table at Dirk, and said, low: "Since I saw Tino Rossi twist the little dancer's wrist, I've been watching him. What kind of wheels turn in a man's head like his, I wonder? I don't like him."

Jane's face was hit with pride as she turned to the baritone with a smile which engaged his whole attention. "You are too lovely for mere words," he was saying, in his most courtly, most flowery tones.

HARRY GRAYSON'S SPORTCAST

THE shortage of baseball talent certainly isn't due to lack of education.

The baseball school business is booming.

In addition to the several schools annually conducted by the St. Louis Cardinals in various sections of the country, three other institutions will cram the nogginns of would-be Ty Cobbs, Honus Wagner, and Christy Mathewsons with diamond knowledge this spring.

There also is the National Baseball Correspondence School, which offers a seven weeks' course by mail.

The chief recommendation of this clout college, which makes its headquarters in Los Angeles, is that it saves its pupils a lot of bus fare. Jess Orndorff, the old catcher who is the head instructor, advertises that graduates are placed immediately. He neglects to mention where or for how long.

Ray L. Doan, the ubiquitous promoter of Muscatine, Ia., once more has assembled the faculty for what he bills as the Original All-Star Baseball School at Hot Springs, where mighty maestros of the nace and mound will drill classes from Feb. 15 to April 1.

The only university for umpires is run in conjunction.

DOAN'S park of learning offers an imposing array of instructors. Dizzy Dean, Lon Warneke, Schoolboy Rowe, Rogers Hornsby, Tris Speaker, George Harold Siler, Lew Fonseca, Burleigh Grimes, Clyde Milan, Hank Severid, Johnny Mostil, Dutch Zwilling, and Guy Sturdy will propound their doctrines of catch-as-catch-can, make 'em pitch to you, and cutting corners.

George Barr, of the National League, heads the staff which is to show aspirants what an arbiter needs in addition to an indicator.

No less than 150 bright young gentlemen from New York, Chicago, Chillicothe, Emporia, and other such centers of industry and culture are gazing with longing at the tropical sands of Miami at the moment, sighing in anticipation of the six weeks' training course they will embark upon Feb. 11, when they are to sit at the feet of seven begowned pedagogs shepherded by President Max Carey.

When he launched his school of higher baseball learning three springs ago, President Carey very logically reasoned that teaching children between the ages of 15 and 21 would be a pipe compared to tutoring alleged grown men who made up what the scribes called the Brooklyn Baseball Club.

PROFESSOR LINDSTROM, known affectionately to students as Uncle Freddie, will be forced to drop the title when he joins the Brooklyns at Clearwater. There is no place on the roster of the Dodgers for any professor guy.

Bill Terry advertises that enrollment for the New York Giants' first school at Pensacola is filled, and that no more students can be accepted.

Baseball schools stimulate interest in the game. Tuition is moderate and pupils have the time of their lives. The schools are not exactly picnics, either, with the boys minding their home work from 9 o'clock until 5.

While the class of products of these schools has not been high, Joe Engel, the Washington Senators' one-man scouting system, plucked Cecil Travis out of one conducted at Atlanta.

Foragers never know when another Travis, Dizzy Dean, or Arky Vaughan will roll in seeking enlightenment after thumbing his way across the country. Consequently, they keep their eyes scrunched against knotholes.

one toy factory project. There are 607 women working for the Works Progress Administration in this district, and Memphis has requisition for 45 of them.

Before being transferred to Lubbock last August, Mrs. Walker was director of public welfare for 13 years at Dallas.

"I never visit the Memphis sewing room that I do not take back with me some samples of the work being done here; the room has been run in a highly efficient manner," Mrs. Walker stated. The work being done in Memphis is as good as any in the district, she said.

Miss Gray was transferred to the Memphis sewing room from Esteline, which she helped set up a month ago. Prior to her connections at Esteline, she was stationed with the Lubbock office.

The Memphis sewing room was enlarged Saturday, the office space having been enlarged 10 sewing machines added, women will be added to the staff shortly, and it was pointed out that they will be taken from those who are already affiliated with WPA. No new women will be employed, it was said.

The government common house, in the same building with the sewing room, was also enlarged considerably.
