BEGIN HERE TODAY

JO DARIEN, finishing her first year in college, learns her father is out of work. Jo hunts a job and secures part time work in a marine supply store. There she meets wealthy, handsome DOUGLAS MARSH who offers her the job of hostess at his inn at Crest Lake. Jo accepts. This causes a quarrel with BRET PAUL to whom she is engaged and Jo breaks the engagement.

Fragonet pays Jo marked attentions, tells her he loves her and begs her to marry him as soon as he can secure a divorce. He goes to Hollywood, promising to return soon.

Bret Paul comes to Crest Lake as the life guard.

Marsh takes Jo to dinner at the Lone Tree Tavern. During the drive he kisses her.

CHAPTER XXIII

He released her and leaned back against the wheel, searching Jo's face as if he were really seeing it for the first time. Then, just as deliberately but infinitely tender now, his lips touched hers again.

Jo drew away, laughing shakily. "You mustn't make this too important," she told him.

Looking straight into her eyes, Marsh did not answer her laugh, and in a sudden rough gesture, he turned his attention to the car again, starting it down the long hill road which terminated at the Lone Tree Tavern.

"It was much more important than I dreamed," he said, seriously, his eyes on the road.

"And if I'd known it would have such a sobering effect on you," Jo told him, "I'd never have permitted it."

He turned to her slowly, smiling in spite of himself. "We shouldn't have done that, Jo."

"We?" exclaimed Jo in mock concern. "It was entirely your idea."

"You're right. And I'm sorry."

"And if you're sorry, I'm insulted," Jo said.

"Insulted?"

Jo nodded, her eyes twinkling with amusement. "Of course. Isn't it insulting for a man to—"

In addition to those the city already boasts. Our auditorium may be a bit fantastic, but we should have a municipal building constructed along some such lines as those listed above.

The belief was expressed in Wednesday's "What Do You Think?" column that to secure a PWA loan the project must be self-liquidating. Being rather architectural-minded, we have a City Auditorium all figured out that should meet all requirements, being self-liquidating as well as useful to Memphis and the people of this area in many ways and combining several projects into one.

Our auditorium would take up an entire half block, placed length-wise. It would consist of a parquetry and a circular balcony in the auditorium proper. The center section would be flat and with movable seats. Its width would be great enough to care for the length of a basketball court so that the goals could be attached to the balcony. Immediately behind the center section, the floor would start its elevation, with permanent seats to be used for spectators at ball games as well as stage attractions.

On opposite sides of the stage would be dressing rooms. The auditorium would be completely cut off from the remainder of the building behind the stage. On the side of the second section of the building facing the street would be the fire station and offices of city officials.

The remainder of the division would be given over to an elaborate municipal swimming pool with open front, perhaps with huge arches, tile floor, etc. The entire structure would be two stories high, allowing for the balcony, high basketball court ceiling and lofty swimming pool roof to make way for diving boards, etc.

In our opinion, such an auditorium would be one of the biggest assets Memphis could possess in state. They greeted Jo and Marsh effusively and directed them to a huge hearth fire while dinner was prepared.

"We do 't order here," Marsh told Jo. "It'll be either chicken or steak—and I promise you that it'll be good, whichever it is."

Jo sank into a chair before the roaring flames. "I hope it's chicken . . ."

It was, but that was not all. There were creamy mashed potatoes, the tenderest of new peas. There was a plate of hot biscuits which Mrs. Bowen kept heaped—and a bowl of honey. There was a huge pitcher of cold milk, and, as old man Bowen said, there was "more where that came from."

When Jo and Marsh had literally stuffed themselves with fried chicken and the "fixings" Mrs. Bowen brought in coffee with great square crackers and plain unpretentious American cheese.

"Oh . . ." Jo exclaimed. "I don't know when I've so enjoyed food, Mrs. Bowen. It was all beyond words."

Marsh laughed. "Mrs. Bowen has heard that so often she doesn't even blush with pleasure any more."

"That may be, Douglas Marsh," the old lady told him. "I ain't blushed now for 20 years or so, being carried and all—but that don't mean I don't like to hear compliments on my cooking."

She turned to Jo. "And when you get married—as you certainly will, being as pretty as you are—you'll want to hear compliments on your cooking, too."

Having delivered herself of this statement, Mrs. Bowen returned her attention to Marsh long enough to warn, "And that's something you want to remember, Douglas Marsh!" With that she waddled back into the kitchen, chuckling to herself.

When she had gone, Marsh grinned at Jo. "I've never been here with a girl before, so Mamma Bowen naturally takes it for granted that you're the future Mrs. Marsh."

Still embarrassed by the old lady's assurance, Jo laughed. "Well, I'm complimented to be the first girl you've treated to food like this."

"Mamma Bowen is certainly a character. I want her to see the motion picture company when it comes to Crest Lake. She's quite a movie fan. They drive to a little town about 20 miles from here to see the movies. I brought Fragonet down here once and you should have seen the meal she cooked for him—enough for 10 men!" Marsh stopped suddenly. "I . . . didn't mean to mention him again today, Jo."

"I don't mind, really. I'm curious myself about what they're going to film at Crest Lake," Jo said.

"Well, all I know about it is that it's the story of a forest ranger—of course that's Fragonet—and he falls in love with the daughter of a rich timber owner. Silas Drann is directing it. He's very good at these outdoor pictures. Gets wonderful effects."

"Will there be quite a company come from Hollywood?"

"Probably not," Marsh guessed. "You see, they'll do a lot of the 'shooting' right on the Atlas lot in Hollywood. At Crest Lake they'll take just the outdoor scenes, and maybe Drann will have some footage taken for atmosphere to work into the picture later on."

"Well," Jo laughed, "we ought to be able to count on having the daughter and her timber-owning father, anyhow!"

"Surely. And don't forget there'll probably be a villain, and maybe a good-for-nothing woman who's after the hero. Drann will probably bring along more cameramen and sound technicians than actors and actresses. There'll be some excitement, all right—and of course we'll have to honor them with a party before they return to Hollywood."

"Isn't it strange that Silas Drann would decide to come to Crest Lake for location scenes when he hasn't the slightest idea of what it's like?" Jo wanted to know.

"Oh, Fragonet sent some pictures, and insisted it was just the place. Atlas lets him have his way in a lot of things, you know. He's a big box-office attraction and all the studios are anxious to grab him; the moment his contract with Atlas is completed."

Jo nodded, slowly, beginning to understand more and more why Fragonet should want his way so insistently, and be so utterly certain that he would be successful.

They talked longer than they realized, until Jo suddenly glanced at her wrist and exclaimed, "Good Heaven! I should be getting back." Marsh leaned indolently the back of his chair and greeted her with a smile.

In the car he helped her with her leather jacket, and as the chill night air that rushed through the windshield and doors

"This has been fun, mured. 'I'm . . . sort of warmth."

"Well," said Douglas, "I've a perfectly good pillow simply by having your head against it."

"I can't believe that." "Sounds like black magic." "There's only one way if it's true."

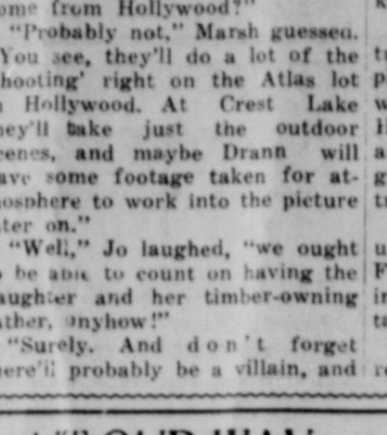

Jo tried that way . . . fore they had traversed quarter mile she was at

Owls Invade Paducah Sunday With High Hopes for Second Series Win

Already touched by the heat of the top positions, the Memphis Owls will attempt to step up into the strong wind of the Western Division's messy play-off Sunday.

Stepping stone last Sunday week they will attempt to surmount the barrier of the place Paducah club.

Order to move out of third place, however, they must enlist the services of Wellington's Gas against the slipping Childress and a week later turn out their allies.

Hope To Hold Place

They went into the final third place and assuming a spot in the play-off, so aren't counting too strongly on their position, which would be flung a little more this way, since the play-off would still be the Elect.

Owls invade Paducah Sunday with a feeling of uneasiness as determination. The club bunch has proven itself prior to the Memphis nine by time they tangled in a diabolical argument this season.

Since Memphis is making plans to reach the final round of the scheme Mr. Shaughnessy decided to bring more sheekles into Texas League, it hopes to show Paducah a few things before the of reckoning with the title at.

Blanchard May Start

Paducah has demonstrated its ability to rough Clifford Stewart the mound and at the same time dropped to Jerry Blanchard his youthful Estelline players, local managers are apt to offer Blanchard as probable sacrificial lamb Sunday afternoon.

And if Jerry can control his nerves so as to keep them from coming over the catcher after the ground in front of the pitcher—albeit the opposing batters tries his best to slam the ball on the outer regions—he may be on his tormentors with a vengeance.

When Wellington remains on the field schedule. A clean sweep of the home stretch series would be the Owls in a favorable light the division crown. But that's what "figuring" to do solely the strength of the club's vic-

One Body Found In Train Wreck

By Associated Press
WACO, Aug. 1.—The wreckage of a derailed Waty freight train gave up one charred body, apparently a negro, today.

It was feared that anywhere from seven to 25, largely hoboes, may have been crushed to death in a derailment near Bruceville last night.

Rescuers were hampered when another tank car caught fire.
