Thousands Return Work in Textile Mills; Others Idle

Thousands of textile workers returned to their jobs today, but other thousands are still out.

As mills reopened after a three-week strike, it appeared that re-employment in many centers may be gradual as a few mills failed to reopen.

A few disorders marked the return. Two hundred members of the United Textile Workers occupied the courthouse at Concord, N. C. They said they sought to return to work in the Concord mills but were told their jobs were filled. They threatened to stay in the courthouse until their jobs are "given back."

Fighting broke out between strikers and employes going to work at the Prudential knitting mills, Philadelphia. Fifty persons were arrested.

Employes on strike at the Mamp-ton company, East Hampton, Mass., said the company failed to provide work for them today.

The attitude of the employes toward the boards recommendations, which brought an end to the strike remained uncertain. George A. Sloan, chairman of the Cotton Textile Institute, said it would "require time to determine the views of the industry."

There were 27 additions to the church from all sources. It was reported as being the best revival the church has had in several years. Sunday school attendance during the meeting broke all records. Many visitors from out of town were in attendance, especially from Plaska, Leslie, Lakeview, Childress and Clarendon.

Three Borger Men On Trial in Four Recent Killings

BORGER, Sept. 24 — Three men will go on trial during a term of Hutchinson county district court which opens at Stinnett today in connection with four killings which have occurred here in recent weeks.

Arthur Huey, county tax collector, faces trial on two murder charges growing out of the deaths of A. P. Borger, founder of this city, and Lloyd Duncan, oil company employe. Borger was killed instantly in a duel with Huey in the Borger post office Aug. 31 and Duncan died several days later from a wound effected by a stray bullet allegedly fired from Huey's gun.

L. D. Compton of Borger faces a charge of murder in the killing of Charles Payton, former Borger policeman. The "eternal triangle" with two men and Compton's wife involved, was hinted at the preliminary hearing as the killing motive.

Jim "Moon" Mullin, former operator of a night club near here, faces a charge of murder in connection with the death of Charles Hovey, carpenter, in a fist fight

THE LINDBERGH CASE

The most famous kidnaping case in history, that of the Lindbergh child, apparently is nearing solution. The arch-fiends who perpetrated the crime that touched the entire world may be meted out justice in a short time.

This will be far more important than just the bringing of the criminals to justice—although there probably is not a person in the world, other than the fiend's own kind, who will not rejoice for this reason alone.

The solution of the Lindbergh case will mark a new era in criminal annals. This case headed a list of kidnapings almost too numerous to mention, extending from Milwaukee to San Francisco and from Tucson to Canada. The whole nation was held in the grip of fear. Many rich and prominent men were threatened, or because of threats against their wives and children they rushed them off to Europe. Prominent persons were almost afraid to venture out without body guards. The situation, for a time, was unbearable.

Then federal enforcement agencies were brought rapidly into play, aided by the famous Lindbergh law, and kidnaping after kidnaping was brought to justice. The fiends who undertook to live by extortion grew thinner in ranks.

Now, if and when the Lindbergh kidnaping case is cleared up, we believe the last of the extortionists will disappear, with a few exceptions, of course, but they will be as scarce as the Dillingers, Barrows and Jesse Jameses. This is the real important point that may be an outgrowth of a solution of the Lindbergh kidnaping.

It is interesting to speculate upon what course the arch-criminal will settle next. If he is wiped out as an extortionist, just as he was as an all-powerful racketeer and bootlegger, he will return in another form. We are not through with him. But we are learning how to meet him half way.

WHY MOTHERS GET GRAY.

BEACH CLUB GIRL

By MABEL McELROY

BEGIN HERE TODAY
BOOTS RAEBURN, 18, and lovely elopes with RUSS LUND, handsome swimming instructor, because her pride has been hurt by some petty social snubs. Russ goes to Miami, promising to send for her later. Boots gets a job in a department store. She is living in a tiny room in Greenwich Village when she is stricken with influenza. DENIS FENWAY, young author befriends her and later introduces her to some of his friends. Boots finds herself possessing the beautiful KAY CHILLINGFORD has toward Denis.

Just before her illness Boots received a telegram telling her Russ had been killed in a motorboat accident. She goes back to the store to work, too proud to appeal to her parents. She sees EDWARD VAN SCIVER, one of Denis' friends frequently. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXXII
 Boots and Denis lunched at an inn hanging over a willow-circled pond where ducks swam lazily in the dappled water. Denis was at his most charming—neither abstracted nor fitfully interested. He was solicitous for her comfort. But his long, lean brown hands lighted cigarette after cigarette and Boots noticed that he ate little. He seemed thinner; he had a fine-drawn look about his mouth.

She had sent him a money order for $10 the week before, her first payment against the debt caused by her illness and Russ's burial. He spoke of this gently. He hadn't written to acknowledge it, he said, because he'd wanted to see her first. She was not to bother about that until things were better with her. It was simply a loan between friends.

"How are you liking the work?" he wanted to know.
 She shrugged. No one was to know how dreadful the long days at Lacy's seemed to her. It was all right, she said. A little tiring sometimes. It was a job; that was all.

He gave her a thoughtful look. "I—I had something in mind," he said. "Remember Masterson, that publisher chap I talked to you about a year ago?"

She remembered. It had been when she was so desperate, so unhappy, not knowing which way to turn.

"His firm has an outlet bookshop over on Eighth Street. Nice little place. Copper kettles and spinning wheels, that sort of thing. You know?"

She knew. She remembered passing by, stopping to read the titles on the bright jackets.

"Well, the girl—one of the girls, I should say—is leaving in two weeks. She's a southerner. I think she's getting married. They want someone. When I was in Masterson's office the other day he was talking to someone on the telephone about it. I thought of you."

"But," she cried, her heart thudding painfully, happily at the thought, "maybe the job's already been taken. Oh probably it has!"

It was cruel of Denis to tell her about it too late to do anything about it. Because of course there were always dozens of girls after jobs of that sort. So different from Lacy's with its time clock, and its eternal vigilance, the wary eyes of the supervisor, the steady ache in back and feet. . . .

"I don't know. It's a chance anyhow. Worth looking into." Denis warmed to the idea. "Look, I'll call you tomorrow—or can I?"

"We're not supposed to have telephone calls at the store," she told him. "Can't I call you instead?"

That was all right, Denis said. She would call him about noon then? Good.

Today he was a delightful companion, easy to talk to, interested, amusing. He told lazy stories expertly; he flashed his remembered smile at her occasionally; and when the girl, relaxing in the pleasant atmosphere, responded in kind he laughed heartily at her sallies. Boots had never felt so gay, so witty and assured. She gave him brief sketches of some of the people at the store. She was repaid by the deep chuckle with which they were received.

"I don't believe a word of it," he said indolently when she had finished an imitation of Mr. Babcock, the floor manager, and his famous monologue about "Lacy Service."

"Oh, I assure you!" Boots began, protesting delightedly.

The other lunchers had drifted away. They were quite alone now in the big clean room with the square tables. Waiters drifted to and fro with trays of shining, empty glasses and someone turned on a radio in an inner room. A nasal tenor wailed the refrain:

"You have taken my heart. . . . Suddenly all the bright scene revolved kaleidoscopically for the girl. She was dizzy; her palms were wet with the revelation of the moment. There was some magic in the air, something had sprung up between her and this lean, long-legged young man with the narrow dark eyes and the reluctantly won smile.

"Boots . . . Barbara . . ." he leaned toward her, his brown hand capturing her small white one. "Do you know you're most awfully pretty today?"

The mists cleared away, the landscape righted itself, and only her heart pounding, pounding under the thin organdie of her blouse, testified to the giddiness of the moment.

"Really?"
 "Really!"
 This was nonsense, she reminded herself swiftly and sternly. She was Russ Lund's widow and Denis was in love with Kay Chillingford. He wasn't in the least interested in her. That speech he had last uttered was the merest pleasantry, the idlest compliment.

Confused, she gathered up her purse and gloves.
 "We—we really ought to be getting back," she protested, looking vaguely about her.

Denis followed. Oh, come, he argued, how about swimming? How about going on down to Easthampton? The Cranes, his cousins, had been asking him to drop in for ages. They had bathhouses simply running over with extra Denise's keen eyes. He was uncanny. He had been reading her very thoughts.

"Oh, I do!" And yet—and yet she wasn't sure she meant it. She missed the ease and warm indolence of the life but she was proud to think she had stood on her own feet this year, without anyone's help or connivance. She had proved, at least, that she wasn't only a beach club girl—a waster—a parasite!

She let the sand slip through her fingers.
 "Goiny in?" Denis had her arm.

Cyclone Starts Preparations for Invasion of Childress on Friday

Fresh from its 44 to 6 victory over the Paducah Dragons in its opening game of the season, the Memphis Cyclone returns to Fair Park stadium this afternoon to prepare for larger game.

This week-end the charges of Coach Chesty Walker invade Childress for a clash with the Class A Bobcats who last year offered "Red" Ratician to the annals of all-state football.

The encounter will be the Cyclone's first night tussle of the season since lighting equipment did not arrive here in time for the opening game.

On the following week-end, however, the Cyclone returns to the local grid to open its series of home night games, at which season tickets will be honored. The game will be with the Estelline Cubs, a bitter rival of the Cyclone for grid supremacy.

A number of fans probably will follow the Cyclone on its trek to Childress, since this game will offer the first real test of what local fans believe will be a championship contender.

Coach Walker has not announced the order of the day in drills, but it is likely to follow the same as previously, with extra attention being paid to weak spots revealed in last week's tilt.

Especially is Walker likely to drill the club on pass defense, a position in which the team has shown exceptional weakness. This is most likely since Childress got away with several sensational tosses against Poly of Fort Worth last week-end. The Bobcat's lone tally in a 25-7 licking came as a result of a long pass.

Wellington Plant Is Being Swamped

WELLINGTON, Sept. 24.—After the first week of operation of the Collinsworth county canning kitchen, Miss Katherine Boverie, relief administrator, said that another crew was to be added within the next week.

Since opening Monday, Sept. 17, the kitchen has been literally swamped with applications, according to Miss Annie Mae Donaghey and John O. Stovall, county agents, who stated that an average of 300 cans daily were turned out during the first week of operation.

The greater part of the first week of operation has been concentrated on the canning of peas, corn and other perishable vegetables, but some beef has been canned—and due to the extensive drought and its effects on gardens a great portion of the winter's canning is expected to be meats.

At the present time a crew of 12 women and four men are being employed through the kitchen. County agents estimate that the plant, operating with one crew, would have a maximum production of 400 cans when the employees gain more experience.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT MOTION PICTURES

PALACE RITZ

Music. In one word "Twenty Million Sweethearts," current musical show at the Palace theatre is summed up.

And it's good music, what with the superb music makers Dick Powell, Ginger Rogers, Four Mills Brothers and Ted Fio Rito and his band.

Pat O'Brien, the fast-talking promoter, and Allen Jenkins, erstwhile poet whose "silly" poem becomes a song hit, furnish excellent comedy and speed for the picture, and there is enough of a love story to satisfy anyone who demands this element in his movies.

The play concerns the troubles of a would-be radio star and his fast-talking manager. The film is filled with songs by Dick Powell and Ginger Rogers, with added music by the Four Mills Brothers and by Ted Fio Rito and his band. All the music is good; the acting, as would be expected by this troupe, is excellent.

The picture is strictly entertaining, with no attempt at entraining plot or suggestions of any kind. It is recommended for anyone old enough and anyone young enough to enjoy modern music.

the strike committee, charged a number of employers of discriminating against active union leaders in the re-employment of strikers.

Dr. J. A. Odom went to Amarillo last night, where Ney Hale, son-in-law of Dr. and Mrs. Odom, underwent an emergency appendix operation. He was reported doing well this morning.

Here is one motion picture that will find favor in every eye, no matter how critical. The picture is "Hide-Out," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production current at the Ritz Theatre. It brings Robert Montgomery back in one of his most entertaining characterizations—"Lucky" Wilson, the prankish post-repeal racketeer who finds reformation through contact with a farmer's family in a typical rural setting.

Maurien O'Sullivan, always dependable for an excellent performance, again repeats with her portrayal of Pauline, the farmer's daughter. Whitford Kane, for 30 years a leading character actor of the London and New York stage, makes his screen debut as Miller, the farmer, Mickey Rooney, 12-year-old actor, appears as Willie the pesterful boy, and Elizabeth Patterson plays the farmer's wife. Other performances worthy of mention are contributed by Edward Arnold, Edward Brophy and C. Henry Gordon.

The Little Chill Chaser BRINGS Cozy Comfort TO CHASE THE CHILL FROM YOUR HOME

In the home where little children crawl about on carpets, or study their lessons for early years at their desks, there must always be the safety of comfortable heat. The Little Chill Chaser—our symbol for the modern gas heater—is the surest means of quick, clean, comfortable heat whenever needed. It sends its radiant warmth throughout the room instantly when a lighted match is applied to the open valve. It maintains its warm, cheerful glow as long as you require heating comfort, and obediently ceases burning when you close the valve. It stands ready to serve you throughout the heating season—from the early days of fall, through the winter and spring season, until nature's warmth and sunshine dispel the need for heating.

Natural Gas is one of the South's greatest natural resources. In the bosom of Mother Earth, in different sections of the Southland, great reservoirs of this fuel have been gathered into rich fields. Pipe lines are loaded with gas that is being transmitted to cities like ours for use in commercial, industrial and domestic heating. Natural Gas affords the quicker, cleaner, better way of heating, free from annoyance, inconvenience, smoke and dirt incident to the use of crude fuels. When all its advantages are considered it is truly a low-cost fuel. Heat with Natural Gas.
