HOUSING PROGRAM IN CITIES

Holds U. S. Power To Reclaim Land

Associated Press
MEMPHIS, July 15.—The United States Circuit Court of Appeals held today that the Federal Government has the power to condemn land for use in housing projects. The court's decision sustained Judge Dawson of Louisville's ruling that the government's failure to come with a plan to build public buildings, schools and arenas, was not a failure to come with a plan to build public buildings, schools and arenas. The court's decision is a landmark in the history of the Federal Housing Administration.

PROTEST PLANS TO BUY TEXAS TIMBERLAND

Claim 11 Counties Would Be Embarrassed by Sale

By Associated Press
WASHINGTON, July 15.—The forest service's plan to purchase over a million acres of waste timberland in east and southeast Texas was vigorously protested today by Representatives Dies and Patton of Texas. They complained to Secretary Wallace that the sale of this land would cause such a reduction in the tax rolls of 11 counties as to embarrass them seriously. They said they thought the administration should re-emburse those territories for the loss of taxable values.

Temporary Highway Designations Are Cancelled in State

AUSTIN, July 15.—The Texas Highway Commission today announced the cancellation of all temporary highway designations except those maintained by the state and roads under construction or on which plans are nearly completed. The action was taken to improve the eligibility of roads to participate in the Federal Works Progress Administration program.

ROME, July 15.—With war between Italy and Ethiopia, increasingly regarded inevitable, Remo Mussolini today ordered the mobilization of another regular army division and the creation of an additional Blackshirt division. Mussolini also ordered the immediate construction of ten submarines. Today's order brings the number of regular army divisions destined for East Africa to five. Five Blackshirt divisions have also been created. This means that Italy will have at least a quarter million men for service against Ethiopia should war begin.

PARNELL TEST WILL START THIS WEEK

Machinery Expected To Be in Operation Wednesday

The deep oil test being made by Davis Brothers of Childress near Parnell is expected to be spudded in Wednesday or Thursday, according to word from the test area this morning. It was reported that machinery for the drilling, being shipped out of Oklahoma City, is expected to be in place so that work may be underway on the well by that time. The drilling contract was signed Saturday between Davis Brothers and the Johnson-Kenneth Drilling Company of Oklahoma City. Spectators at the well yesterday said that concrete had been poured for the base. The water well on the site is over 100 feet in depth. The crew also has constructed a road from the drilling site to the highway, a distance of 2.3 miles.

The Government canning plant which operated here for several months last fall and winter will be re-opened Friday, County Relief Administrator A. C. Hoffman announced this morning. The work project calls for 13 weeks of operation; however, Hoffman believes a supplement order may be obtained if necessary to handle the canning needs of the area.

Should Make Appointments
Mrs. C. A. Williams again will act as supervisor of the plant, and appointments for canning should be made with her, Hoffman stated. He hopes that the demand for canning will keep the plant open full time from the start. An average of eight or 10 persons will be employed daily in the plant. At the present, it is expected that the plant will be kept busy mostly for the canning of vegetables. The canning of meat and other commodities is expected to come later. However, Hoffman pointed out that the work will not be restricted to the canning of vegetables.

Under Old Schedule
The canning schedule will be continued as it was when the plant closed down, Hoffman said. This calls for a varied percentage on different commodities. The plant is located in the rear of the Davenport Building on South Seventh Street.

Soil Conservation Buildings Soon To Go Up on 3-C Site

Notices for bids on lumber and materials for the construction of four soil conservation buildings on the site of the Government 3-C camp are expected to arrive here today or tomorrow, according to George E. Hull, soil conservation supervisor.

The notices will be posted in public buildings for a period of five days before the bids are distributed. Then ample time will be allowed dealers for entering bids.

Wait Three Weeks
Hull stated that it will be possibly three weeks before the bids are returned. All bids will be distributed locally, he stated, and the contract awarded to the lowest bidder.

The conservation buildings will be separate from the CCC camp, but will be placed on the same plot at the Hall County Fair grounds.

Four Buildings
The four buildings will consist of offices, garage, blacksmith shop and seed house. No information was available today concerning the construction of the 3-C camp itself. The camp is to be erected by the government, but the construction work is to be placed in charge here. Not arrived this morning and materials had not been received.

THE VOICE OF THE UPPER RED RIVER VALLEY

NO WAR JUST, TO REAL PACIFIST

THE editors of the Modern Monthly recently undertook to poll a number of distinguished Americans as to their attitude in the next war.

What will you do when America goes to war? Will your decision be altered if Soviet Russia is an ally of the United States in a war with Japan?

Would a prospective victory by Hitler over most of Europe move you to urge U. S. participation in opposition to Germany in order to prevent such a catastrophe?

From the wording of these questions, it seems clear that a large part of the pacifist strength in America today has definite Communist leanings; that the editors of the magazine, in other words, felt it likely that some of our peace-at-any-price spokesmen might sing a different tune if confronted with a war in which the survival of either Communism or Fascism were involved.

One of the most interesting answers received came from Archibald MacLeish, the poet. He made the point that the moment a pacifist admits he might support a "just" war, he ceases to be a pacifist; for, he points out:

"If enough people believe that a certain type of war might be justifiable, then the War Department will see that they get that kind of war—in print. The kind of war they have gotten in fact they will discover for themselves some years afterward."

And so, he concludes: "There is only one possible position against the menace of militarism: absolute hostility. Any other supplies the forces desiring war with the means of securing it."

A good deal of rather loose talk has been indulged in about pacifism in this country during recent years. Much of it represents a very real and sincere determination to have nothing more to do with war; but some of it, as this questionnaire suggests, is not so much based on opposition to war itself as on opposition to certain kinds of war.

And as Mr. MacLeish points out, that kind of opposition puts no real obstacle in the path of war. It simply lays everyone involved open to a flood of propaganda.

The uncompromising pacifist is at least logical. The man who says he would support a war under certain conditions will probably be found whooping it up for the next war that comes along, no matter why it is fought or with whom.

JO DARIEN, finishing her first year in college, learns her father is out of work. Jo gets a job as bookkeeper in a small marine supply house. She is engaged to BRET PAUL, athletic star.

DOUGLAS MARSH, handsome, wealthy, comes to the store to buy equipment for the summer colony he is establishing at Crest Lake. Jo works overtime, assisting with the order, and Marsh asks her to have dinner with him. She agrees. When Bret telephones Jo she tells him she has extra work to do that night.

Marsh takes her to a fashionable restaurant. He tells her about his summer colony at Crest Lake and offers Jo the job of hostess there. Scarcely able to believe such good luck, she accepts.

Marsh tells Jo to shop next day for the clothes she will need, charging them to an account to be opened for her. She is to leave for Crest Lake the following day.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER VIII

Jo's sleep had been woken with scraps of dream pictures in which she had witnessed herself buying clothes at Lytzen's—although the dreams had been spoiled a little by that queer realization which sometimes comes to the sleeper, the recognition that it's only a dream. But when she walked briskly across town and into the wide, blue-marbled entrance of Lytzen's there was nothing to spoil the daytime picture.

She went at once to the beach wear department to look at huge store she had been trying to plan what she would buy, and in what order. Too late she realized that in the quiet of her apartment she should have made some sort of shopping list. But in the end she convinced herself that, after all, it would be twice as much fun to shop without the list.

"I'll start off with a bathing suit," she told herself. "That's easy to buy—and then perhaps I'll get in the mood of taking full advantage of Mr. Marsh's generosity."

How much should she spend? That question worried her a little, although she knew perfectly well that it would have to be a goodly sum indeed to stagger the prodigal Douglas Marsh. With her natural training in economy she could probably buy all she would need for what Marsh would consider a very moderate amount of money. Still—they were awfully expensive at Lytzen's.

"Nevertheless," Jo assured herself as she walked into the busy store, "this is the place he chose!"

She went at once to the beach wear department to look at the bathing suits, and almost immediately her eye was attracted by a stunningly beautiful suit in white.

OUT OUR WAY

By "Cowboy" Williams

"It's very darling," the salesgirl said. "They won't allow them at all beaches. But with your figure and your blond hair you'd be a dream in white."

Jo took it. She couldn't resist it—and then she remembered Douglas Marsh's mother.

"Maybe—maybe I ought to have another suit. One a little more conservative," she confessed to the clerk.

For the swim suit that was to be "a little more conservative," she picked a dark blue. "And now," said the salesgirl, "you will want a beach robe. What about something in blue that will go with either of the suits? And of course, some smart sandals."

When Jo had quite finished in the beach wear department—after adding, also, a beach pajama outfit—the salesgirl asked, "Did you wish to charge this?"

The question startled Jo for a moment, but finally she managed to say, "Yes, please. To Crest Lake, Incorporated."

The girl's eyes seemed uncertain. "Is that a new account?"

"Yes, I believe it was opened just this morning," Jo gave the address, requesting that the purchases be sent direct to Crest Lake Inn.

And between the time Jo Darien left the beach wear department and sought the elevators, a curious thing happened. The salesgirl, just a bit dubious, had telephoned the credit department, and the credit department assured her that there was certainly an account opened under the name of Crest Lake, Incorporated. Thereafter, the word spread like wild-fire through the store. The young woman for whom Douglas Marsh had opened an account was in Lytzen's! Floor walkers straightened and peered about with more interest than usual. Salesgirls eyed every likely young woman who walked into their particular departments.

Jo was unfamiliar with the store, and she did not ask her way about—so it was some few minutes before she stood in front of the battery of silvered elevator doors. Just as she was about to step into an "up" car one of the floor walkers approached her tentatively and a little breathlessly.

"Miss Darien?"

"Why... yes," said Jo in astonishment.

"I hope you found everything as you wanted it in the beach wear department. The girl wasn't aware that the account had been opened for you, and—"

"Why, everything was all right," Jo assured him, embarrassed at his own embarrassment. "The girl was very nice, indeed. And I found just what I wanted."

"Thank you. And now may I direct you?"

This offer took Jo completely by surprise. For a moment, she tried to frame a sensible question to the anxious gentleman. Failing in this, she burst out laughing. "You see, you can't very well direct me—because I don't know myself where I want to go!" she told him.

It was his turn to show astonishment, but he recovered his equilibrium quickly. "I see. You wish just to look about. By all means, Miss Darien."

In the elevator at last, she stepped back into one corner and allowed herself to be hidden by the occupants. Good Heavens! It was going to be difficult indeed if everyone in the store was to be on the lookout for her! For the first time she realized that Douglas Marsh's name meant to the city, to this great store. Until now she had thought of him simply as a young man whose father had left him a lot of money; a young man who very sensibly took care of the various problems attending such a fortune. But she had never realized, really, how powerful and how deeply felt that money made Marsh. She wondered if, when she saw him again, she would be able to face him with the nonchalance of last night at the Olympic Bowl.

"I wish he hadn't given them my name," she thought, "but I suppose he had to let them know who would be using the account." Willingly she would have postponed the shopping tour then and there. But she had promised to leave for Crest Lake tomorrow, so it was now or never. When Marsh asked her how she had done with her wardrobe she couldn't say, "I bought two bathing suits—a white one and a blue one, and—some accessories."

She was startled from her thoughts by the car's sudden stop, and the operator's drone of: "Fourth floor, please."

Jo hadn't the slightest idea what was on the fourth floor, but as she stepped out on the deep pile of the carpeting she came almost face to face with a young woman modeling a chic evening gown.

"Well," Jo thought, "I certainly will need an evening gown!"

She decided on just one. She had two of her own which she had worn that winter at school. They were simple and inexpensive. Marsh had admired one of them last night, and if he didn't like the other it would be just too bad, Jo told herself stoutly.

The Lytzen gown she chose was a long beige lace which made her seem much taller than she really was; and to peep from under the stitched godets at the hemline she bought a pair of twinkling slippers. To make the dress informal if need be, Jo voted on a crisp little taffeta cape to caress her shoulders.

On another floor she bought a three-piece outfit of sturdy, sensible tweed—skirt and coat and topcoat, with a jaunty hat to
