The Democrat may not always be right in the stand it takes; it may not always be wise in standing for what it believes; but, right or wrong, wise or unwise, the Democrat will stand for the things it believes are for the welfare of the community.

TAX DEBTS ARE JUST OBLIGATIONS

WE are nearing the time limit to pay current taxes without additional penalty and interest—January 31. It does not seem likely that the Legislature will take further action regarding remittance of penalties and interest on delinquent taxes. The 43rd Legislature put itself on record regarding the matter as follows: "a continuation of the policy of remitting the penalty and interest on delinquent taxes would be detrimental to the best interests of the state and would, if, continued lead to still greater delinquencies in tax payments that has ever been in the history of the state."
A tax debt is no different from any other obligation, and the longer it stands unpaid the larger it becomes and the harder it is to pay. A tax debt is a collectible obligation, and we all realize that some day we will be called upon to pay.
There are, of course, those who are simply unable to pay their taxes, and no citizen has any desire to urge any taxpayer to do that which he cannot do. However, we do believe that it is the absolute duty of every American citizen to pay his taxes, if and when it is at all possible for him to do so.

We may feel at times that we receive nothing in return for the money we pay out for tax purposes. However, every convenience that we have, such as educational institutions, good roads, farm relief programs, work relief programs, relief for the destitute and protection for our families, homes and property, is made possible by the money you pay as taxes. Without these facilities and protection, what kind of a country would we have in which to live?
It is just as necessary for your country, city and schools to have funds to operate their business on as it is for any other type of business to have financial backing.
Let's each of us do our utmost to contribute our bit, by making every effort possible to pay our current and delinquent taxes this year.
This is your business, as well as the business of your city, school and county, so let's help put it over.
It is much better to keep your current taxes paid, rather than run the risk of losing your home or property.

Charlie McNary, Republican leader, is one of the members of Congress opposing Townsend's plan. Some of the members are convinced that they will return to Washington next year as a Townsendite. His state of Oregon will come one of the first to vote for the $200-a-month pension plan.
McNary is working with Senator Borah in a pre-convention strategy. He already has found at least tentatively some support.
The WPA is working around for one or two writers in need of a particular section. It is looking for a bit of the interest known as the American Book—a comprehensive encyclopedia of the interests of American life. It has many writers and new talent seeks some.
The particular cover the area of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and South Carolina. Names are being listed for the next year's court cases.
The Senate Minority Committee has a list of possible cases for the day of January 1st. There is a provision in the bill that it will receive in December.

When the German submarine war against England, the British merchantmen with their heavy armaments were obliged to give up their arms and permit removal of their armaments. Then the British merchantmen with their heavy armaments were obliged to give up their arms and permit removal of their armaments.
After a few days of experience, the German submarines began to torpedo their previously harmless and began to torpedo their passengers or crew.

A new sensation in the famed "gift of God" baby case was in the sworn statement of Mrs. Grace Thomasson, above, baroness of an alleged plot to obtain a baby and palm it off as the Mrs. Nelle Muench during the latter's trial in the Dickason kidnaping. According to a copyrighted story in the St. Louis Times, Mrs. Thomasson, comely blond widow of a St. Louis banker, said that one infant, which died, was obtained before the baby was born and that she had gone to Chicago in an effort to buy the baby for $500 after the Wars child had been restored to its mother.

I'VE been doing a lot of experimenting this winter and with the help of a family of most critical testers, I've come to the conclusion that my beef roasts have been more tender and flavorful when NOT seared, which contradicts expert advice to keep the oven very hot for twenty minutes to seal in the juices. Searing really never did keep in the juices, yet made it almost impossible to cook the roast uniformly. I've gotten my best results when I put the roast into an oven preheated to 325 degrees F. and allowed thirty minutes to the pound.

We like beef best if it's salted about thirty minutes after being put in the oven. Salt tends to extract the juices of raw meat, and the thirty minute period cooks the surface of the roast enough to avoid this.

Roast Without Covering

To cover or not to cover: this is another much discussed point. When you cover a roast the steam given off by the meat acts like water. To roast, the roasting pan should be left uncovered during the entire cooking period.

Flouring is a matter of choice. Some cooks like to rub flour into the meat because it helps to make a nice brown gravy.

There are certain important factors to remember when you're choosing a cut of beef for roasting, too. If the meat is from high grade beef you can roast the expensive cuts very satisfactorily or you can use the same cuts from lower grade beef provided you have them well broiled. The rump, round, bottom chuck and Boston but all are good cuts for roasting. A chuck roast, rolled and larded and served with plenty of the good winter root vegetables leaves little to be desired.

Chuck Roast

Five pound chuck roast, 4 teaspoons salt, 1-8 teaspoon pepper. Have the butcher roll and lard the roast. Wipe with a damp cloth and put in a dripping pan. Preheat oven to 350 degrees F. If you use a meat thermometer insert in center of roast. Place in the oven and season with salt and pepper at the end of an hour. Reduce heat to 325 degrees F. and roast until thermometer registers the desired degree of doneness or one and one-half hours longer if you want it medium to well done. A meat thermometer which gives degrees should register 150 degrees F.

Remember, too, if you bake vegetables around the meat they must be given their own seasoning of salt and pepper.

DANA STANLEY, divorced from her husband, DR. SCOTT STANLEY, is making plans to marry rich RONALD MOORE.

Ronald had been in love with Dana before her marriage. After Dana leaves her husband (believing him in love with PAULA LONG) Ronnie is a loyal friend.

NANCY, Dana's half sister, loves Ronald but has always hidden her feeling from him by a disdainful attitude.

With no heart in her plans, Dana goes ahead with her preparations to marry Ronnie.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XLIII

Sarah was a believer in signs. When she opened her eyes Friday morning to find rain beating against her window, she involuntarily groaned.

Rain. 'Twan't no good sign. Rainin' on a weddin' day.

And rainin' on Friday meant double trouble. Miss Dana must have forgotten Friday was bad luck day when she picked Friday. She wished she had warned that poor child, who had been in plenty of hot water already.

Groaning again, Sarah started raising her bulky form. An then dropped back with a cry of pain.

Louella came running to her bedside. "What's the matter? What's troubling you, Granny?" "My laig," mourned Sarah. "I can't move my laigs. Mus' be rheumatiz lak I used to have."

She tried to sit up again. And then sank down on the bed, muttering. Anxiety showed on her wrinkled dark face. "What'm I gonna do? Get me some liniment, child, and some hot cloths. You've got to somethin' quick."

"It was all that stooping and rubbing when you ain't had no heavy work to do in a long time," said Sarah's daughter, Lou, who had come into the room. "You're bound to stay home in bed for a while, now."

"Go 'way from heah," grumbled Sarah. "I've got to get to Mis' if they tote me in a wheelbarrow. How you all specs we gwine have a weddin' and have thirgs nice for Mr. Ronnie, with me in the bid?"

"Miss Dana and Mr. Ronnie gettin' married!" cried Louella showing her white teeth in a delighted grin. "My, aint that nice, now?"

"Why Ma!" exclaimed Lou. "And you never told us nothing 'bout it."

Sarah could have bitten her tongue out. The wedding hadn't happened yet, and her mistress had told her not to talk about it until afterward. For a few minutes, she forgot her pain, and while Louella rubbed briskly, she exacted promises. Over and over again.

"Mis' said nobody was to know nuthin. And now, ole blab mouf couldn't keep her tongue in her haid. Lou, I know you won't ferget. But Louella here, she's young, and like as not she'll start talkin' 'fore she reaches the corner."

Sarah's trim young granddaughter tossed her head. "I can keep a secret as good as anybody. Rest your mind, Granny. I know a fine cook out of a job. She'll help Mis' Cameron today."

"Kin you lay hands on her? And will you phone Mis'?"

"First thing when I gets to work. Don't you worry."

Sarah resigned herself to the inevitable. It was a pity Lou had her delicatessen job, and Louella was working "regular." But Louella was smart. Maybe she would find a good woman to help, and they could manage to get Miss Dana married without her.

The trail of the good cook wound about, was lost for awhile, and picked up again at Dr. Osborne's home, where a relative of the jobless one was employed.

Mrs. Osborne, passing through the hall, heard the colored maid say: "Well, maybe, Mrs. Osborne would let me off to go tell her."

"Where do you want to go, Lillie?" Mrs. Osborne asked.

"Mrs. Cameron's Sarah is sick today. And Sarah's granddaughter wanted me to get hold of my aunt. They need somebody real bad on account of Mrs. Cameron's granddaughter marrying Mr. Ronald Moore tonight."

"You may get off awhile, Lillie, of course," Mrs. Osborne said.

She went into the dining room and joined her husband. "Richard," she said, "all that gossip about Scott Stanley's divorced wife marrying Ronnie Moore is true. They're going to be married tonight." Dr. Osborne frowned. "I'm sorry to hear that. I have an idea it will hit Scott mighty hard."

"You think he's still in love with her?"

"Not a doubt in the world of it. And she's in love with him. It's one of those things that happen—two people breaking for some petty reason and never getting back together again. That's why I trumped up an excuse when they called me to Mrs. Cameron. Thought if those youngsters were thrown together, something might work out."

His wife smiled. "Incurably romantic! Why don't you tell Scott? Though, I don't suppose at this stage, anything could be done."

"Scott's one hundred and fifty miles away. He drove up to Easton yesterday for the state medical convention. He's due to read a paper there tonight."

"Don't worry any more about it," Mrs. Osborne said. "Nothing could be done. Scott probably wouldn't try to stop it if he were here. We are a couple of old silies. She didn't divorce him for six months, and he didn't do anything. Then she waited another six months to marry. If they weren't reconciled in all that time, you can be sure nothing could be done in one day."

"It's hard to see how she could have let Scott down. A fine boy like that, heading for a splendid career."

"Don't begin on Scott, Mrs. Osborne laughed. "Or we'll never finish breakfast."

After her husband had gone, she found she was worrying about Scott. She wished it were not such a conventional world. If it were good taste to be frank and impulsive, she would put on her hat and go straight to that charming girl who had seemed so happily married and then had impulsively walked right out of Scott's life.

If she followed the promptings of her heart, she would drive over and talk to Dana. Sometimes mountains dwindled to molehills when women talked together.

Several times she passed the telephone. Once she stood considering its blank face thoughtfully. How quickly it could be aroused. What far-reaching power it really possessed.

Perhaps, she should have encouraged Richard to call Scott over long distance. It would be better, anyway, to have the news come from a friend than to find the announcement leaping at him from a newspaper.

But Mrs. Osborne didn't call her husband. She decided he had enough perplexities and anxieties without adding to them.

At the Cameron home, Sara's substitute was being kept busy. Flowers were arriving. Great armfuls of chrysanthemums from neighbors. Big boxes of roses and other flowers from the shops, with cards enclosed. Before noon, the lower floor was a bower of blooms.

"I can't understand it," Mrs. Cameron said. "somebody must have said something."

She didn't really mind. She radiated importance and pride as she placed long-stemmed roses in tall vases.

"Don't try to pin it on me, Gran," Nancy said in a hollow tone. "Maybe the joyous bridegroom couldn't keep it. Maybe the license bureau forgot and entered it on the record book today."

"Ronnie got the license at Lakeville," Dana said, "and he told me it wouldn't be in any paper until tomorrow."

"Well, that clears Ronnie, if he's gone to so much trouble to keep his marriage a deep, dark secret," Nancy said wearily.

Dana flashed out, "It's all silly! whether people know or not! I'll be married in a few hours. What does anything matter?"

Mrs. Cameron put down a vase and came over, looking hard at Dana.

"I don't think that has a nice sound, Dana."

"Please, Grandmother, don't drive me. I'm marrying Ronnie. That's what you want, isn't it?"

Aunt Ellen followed her sister upstairs. "Dana's in a difficult, dangerous mood," Mrs. Cameron said, slowly. "I suppose you ed in, I don't know what would happen."

"I do," Aunt Ellen said.

"You do, Humph," Mrs. Cameron said, slowly. "I usposse you think she's still in love with him."

I suppose you think there is such a thing as real love. And that people go through their lives loving the same person! Well, you should know by your experience that they don't. That they forget and are happy and are glad they didn't lose their heads. I said, Ellen, you should know it's best for Dana to marry Ronnie Moore and be fixed for the rest of her life."

Aunt Ellen's face was scarlet. "Whatever did Agatha mean? Had she lost her mind, talking in that fashion? Was she crazy, to conjure up before her her barren, comfortable existence and the rightfulness of her happiness that

"Where are you going, Ellen?" Nancy asked as she came through the hall a few minutes later, her hat on.

"Something I forgot," she answered. "No, dear, I'm going a step. I don't need a body to drive me."

"There's somebody to see Dr. Osborne," the girl at the physician's office called through a telephone. "Send Dr. Stanley, and when her he was out of town, she for you. There are seven of her. But she says it's a gency, something that can't be done."

"Send her in," the girl said.

Ten minutes later, Mrs. Osborne pulled a telegram from a pad and wrote on it.

Maybe he had been a humor that romantic old who had insisted that Scott be told about the wedding suspected he had been to humor her. He'd been about that wedding all day.

Frowning thoughtfully, she considered the words he had said. Then he crumpled the message and reached for the phone.

It was 2:30 p.m. when the phone rang and the voice announced: "Ready Dr. Stanley at Easton."

A pause, then Scott's voice. "Hello."

"Hello, there, Dr. Osborne. Then, quickly, "Nothing I hope."

"Plenty, I'm afraid, Scott. "Let's have it, sir."

"They say your wife's married to Ronnie Moore tonight."

coming as fast as I can."

Telephone clicked. Dr. Osborne hung up, smiling a little. He was off his mind. He had made one of the big mistakes of his life. He would regret it if it hadn't been for the old lady. But now she was coming as fast as he could mean he'd be coming faster than fast. The new car was a traveler! And on roads all the way, he would have time to get more nightfall, with a tin to spare.

Scott spoke in the tone he used over the phone. He was bound to happen. It was a jolt like this to a hard-headed, hard-bit realist to his senses, him tearing across the road to put a stop to this fool.

While Dana continued her rations in a half daze, she had a sense of unreality about everything. The rain had been but the sky was still blue and the gloom had penetrated the house, wrapping it in a shadow.

Her room, flower-filled rooms had nothing to do with a wedding. Dana could not look into the big, front room. Once she had, but she had fled away quickly. The girl facing her was like a rebuke.

Scott had stood in the room two years ago when he and Dana had made their pledges to each other with a soft glow from all sides.

candles about them. Forever and ever. What a mockery, nobody even married forever and ever any more.

Nancy was shut up in her room. Aunt Ellen's blue eyes looked as though they were being perpetually washed with tears. It was easy enough to understand why Aunt Ellen looked unhappy. She believed romance had reality, when it was only a trap. But why should Nancy who had so much to profit from this marriage withdraw from the plans with such cold hostility?

Her traveling cases were packed. Her traveling outfit was on a hanger. Hat, gloves, the new pocketbook, daintily outfitted, were on the bed.

An orchid shoulder bouquet was in the icebox. A big, beautiful one. But not bigger or more beautiful than the one Scott had sent on that other wedding day. She wished Ronnie had sent something else—anything but orchids. But then he couldn't have known that orchids were going to miserable. Aunt Ellen had almost caught her splashing tears all over Ronnie's orchids.

Nancy would probably smile cynically when she pinned them on her shoulder.

It was 5 o'clock now. Just 5. The hours seemed leaden. Not even lighted fires, recklessly blazing all over the house and the prodigal waste of electricity were bringing a cheerful aspect.

She would feel differently, perhaps, if Nancy were friendly, if people were chattering all over the place, and if Ronnie were here.

He was so dear and considerate. When she was with him, some of her doubts fell away.

"Dana, dear, Miss Burton has" come. Are you ready for the man-icure?"

Aunt Ellen opened the door gently and put her gray head in. Then she closed the door behind her quickly: "Dana, you're crying!"

"It's a cold, Aunt Ellen."

"I guess I know tears when I see them," Aunt Ellen answered with surprising spirit. Her own tears fell on Dana's bright hair, as she took her niece in her arms. "Dana, there's something I want to tell you. I—"

But her words were interrupted. Mrs. Cameron had opened the door. "Dana, here is Miss Burton."

Aunt Ellen had whisked a handkerchief from somewhere and dabbed Dana's cheeks quickly, and then her own.

"So this is the little lady who's getting married?" Miss Burton's eyes were fixed, admirable, on Dana. "Ready, dearie?"

"Yes, I'm ready," Dana answered listlessly.

Slashing of the local instructors from the WPA payroll followed a tour of inspection here last week by E. E. Kerr, WPA representative from Lubbock.

Miss Vera (Tops) Gilreath, county school superintendent, is leaving in the morning for Lubbock and Plainview, where she will attempt to have a number of the discharged teachers reinstated.

Reasons given by WPA authorities for the Hall County teachers being dropped centered around the idea that two members of the same family can not work for the WPA.

Mr. Kerr, who was here last week examining the FERA records of Miss Gilreath and Mrs. A. Haas, relief head, will be back in Memphis Wednesday to look into the records further.

It was announced last week that all adult teachers' salaries were cut from $48 to $42. Adult teacher supervisors also had their compensation cut to the same figure.

Sheppard and Connally, stating that they were doing everything humanly possible to work out a protective program for the farmers, were in reply to telegrams sent last week by a number of prominent Hall County farmers urging the working-out of a farm plan similar to the AAA.

Farmers in scattered sections of the Panhandle have held mass meetings and have sent telegrams urging the amendment of the United States Constitution that the Triple-A farm benefit program may be constitutional. Noteworthy among these meetings were those at Wellington and at Quanah.

Hall County cotton producers, who still have considerable time before they need an immediate program, have assumed an attitude of "watchful waiting" and are sitting back and awaiting a presidential announcement.

May Anthony for County Clerk

The Democrat is pleased to announce the name of May Anthony as a candidate for County Clerk of Hall County to the Democratic Primary.

Miss Anthony has been a resident of Hall County for several years and is well known to the people of the county.

She was Disbursing Auditor of the Collector's Office of Revenue at Austin, Texas, and was employed in the auditor's office at Austin for a time. She was also employed as a stenographer to Lieut. Governor B. F. Denny during his term of office.

Miss Anthony has several years of experience as an abstractor.

She feels that her experience in clerical work, responsible and intricate, makes her for the office should she be elected, pledges her efficient management of the office.

We recommend May Anthony to the voters of the county to go to the polls at the primary, and feel sure that given her candidacy for consideration.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Greenhaw and children, Owen, W. and Jerry, spent yesterday in Plainview with Mr. Gilreath, Dr. H. Gilmore, and in a Plainview Hospital.
