LOCAL WOMAN AWARDED FIRST CONTEST PRIZE

Mrs. R. S. Greene Is Author of Chosen Centennial Play

Mrs. R. S. Greene received word this morning that her play, "The Last Page," submitted in a state-wide contest, had been awarded first place by the Texas Federation of Women's Clubs...

MRS. R. S. GREENE

quite an honor for the local author, and the presentation of the play by women's clubs throughout the state will bring much publicity to this city.

"The Last Page" has as its setting the old town of Salisbury, established by the railroad, and supplanted by Memphis, and gives much history of early days in Hall county.

Mrs. Greene submitted the play as a representative of the 1913 Study Club of this city.

COUNTY TESTS ARE REPORTED MAKING HOLE

Burst Water Main At Hughes No. 1 Delays Work Some

Work is progressing smoothly on the Hughes No. 1 and the Knorpp No. 1 oil well tests in Hall County today, according to advices from the locations.

Progress was hampered somewhat during the recent cold spell at the Knorpp test because of the fuel oil congealing.

The water main at the Phillips test, the Hughes No. 1, burst as a result of the freezing weather Sunday night, but it has been repaired now. The main, which is only about two miles in length, is to be buried a foot under the soil this week to prevent a recurrence of the bursting.

A big was lost in the hole at the Phillips test last week but was fished out without much delay, and a depth of approximately 2,500 feet has been reached. The Knorpp test is down around the 800 foot mark.

Memorial Fund

Donations to the Will Rogers Memorial Fund are coming in disappointingly slow. In fact, unless donations to this fund get much better, we are going to have to have to turn in the amount as Memphis' contribution to a memorial for the great character. Use the coupon in each issue, and send in your contribution, however small, now.

WEATHER KILLS ARMISTICE DAY CELEBRATION

Parade and Speaking Called Off After Cold Hits the City

The committee which planned the festivities for yesterday in this city, on the occasion of Armistice Day, failed to take Old Winter into account, and, as a result, the day was one of the quietest in many moons.

Plans were all made for an impressive parade at 1:30 yesterday afternoon, after which a program of music and speaking was to have been presented on the courthouse lawn.

The morning, however, broke with zero temperatures prevailing and a sleet storm in progress, which later in the morning turned to snow. The combination of sleet, now and blustery cold wind proved too much for the celebration committee and all activities were called off for the day.

Business places in the city, with the exception of cafes, were closed from 10:00 o'clock until 6:00.

The flying circus at the airport braved the elements, and a goodly crowd was present at the field to watch the free exhibitions and many took rides in the cabin plane.

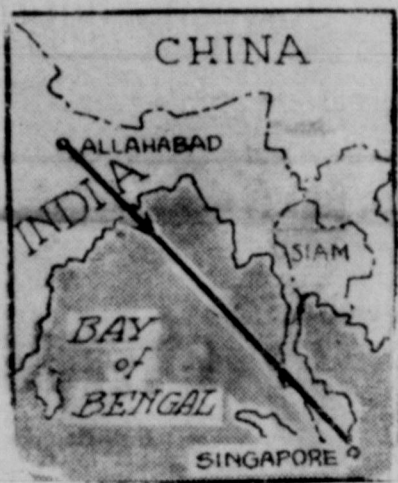

About the middle of the afternoon, the weather moderated and the balance of the day was not unpleasant, until the sun went down and the cold again crept in.

COLLEGE CENTER IS OPENED THIS MORNING IN LOCAL HIGH SCHOOL

Lost in Flight

Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith

Fears that the death he defied for years in thrilling aviation exploits at last had overtaken Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith, famed Australian aviator, grew into practically certainty, as searching airmen failed to find any trace of plane or pilots in the vicinity of the Bay of Bengal, where the intrepid aviator was last sighted battling a monsoon.

Twenty-one Students Are Registered In New College Course

The Memphis Freshman College Center opened at the High School this morning, with the day being devoted to registration and the selection and assignment of courses.

Superintendent Davis reports that 21 students reported for registration this morning from Memphis, Lakeview, Estelline and Hedley, and that several more were expected to report tomorrow, when actual work in the new department will get under way. The students registered from Hedley stated that there would perhaps be six or eight more enter from that city tomorrow.

Mrs. Nora McMurrie, of this city, has been employed as instructor in the College Center courses. Mrs. McMurry holds a Bachelor of Arts degree from the North Texas State Teacher's College, has had seven years of experience in teaching, and was County Superintendent of Dooly County for two years.

The local College Center will provide freshman college instruction for students in this and surrounding counties for students who are unable to attend classes at college.

The local Center is under the supervision of Texas Technological College at Lubbock, which institution sponsors the local work and certifies the credits of the students.

COTTON STAPLE AND GRADE ARE STILL LOWER

District Samples In Continued Slump Shown by Report

The current report from the U. S. Department of Agriculture shows that the grade and staple of cotton samples classed from Texas as ginnings continue to show, as did reports earlier in the season, that the average length of staple for this season is considerably longer than for last season. In contrast to the improvement in staple length, the grades reported this season are lower to a pronounced extent than the grades for last season.

The longer length of staple for this season's crop is indicated by the fact that this season, up to this time, about 52 per cent of the samples is 15-16 inch and longer lengths, compared with about 50 per cent for the corresponding length last season.

CERTIFICATES MAY BE POOLED

Tax Free Tags Over Production This Year Are Poolable

Hall County cotton producers who have surplus tax exemption certificates under the Bankhead Cotton Act may pool their surplus certificates now, County Agricultural Agent James A. Jackson said.

However, unless farmers know definitely that they will have surplus certificates after all their cotton is out, it is best that time of pooling the certificates should be deferred.

All tax-free tags over this year's cotton production and those left out of this year's special government pool may be re-pooled, in the latter case pooling of the certificates is to be done after the government checks are received. This will be about Thanksgiving or the first of December, Mr. Jackson said.

A large number of the Hall County cotton producers will have surplus tags after the crop is harvested this autumn.

COTTON REPORT SHOWS GAIN IN 1935 GINNING

Almost 10,000 Bales Ginned to Nov. 1 Government Report

A gain of 5,938 bales of cotton for this year is shown over last year's cotton ginnings for the county in a report from Tom Ballew, collector of cotton statistics of the United States Department of Commerce.

A total of 9,322 bales of cotton, counting round bales as half, from the crop of 1935 prior to Nov. 1 as compared with 3,384 bales ginned to Nov. 1, 1935.

Dooly County ginnings show a reduction this year as compared with a similar period last year. Until Nov. 1, 1935 3,633 bales of cotton have been ginned, and 4,162 bales had been ginned at a like time last year.

Childress County ginnings, according to figures from the Childress Index total 8,495 up until the first of this week.

BABY DIES

Word was received in this city at noon today that the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Adrian Odon had died this morning.

INDUSTRY IS HOLDING ITS GAINS

ENCOURAGING NEWS comes from those who keep track of the nation's business news which seems to bear out the belief that the famous corner in the depression is over and that things are again headed in the right direction.

No depression year, according to authorities, has seen such improvements in business as has 1935. In other years since 1929, there were substantial advances registered in business, but in each case these were followed by recessions that took us back to new lows.

This year practically every branch of commerce and trade has made big gains—and has held them. One of the most authoritative business magazines forecast that during this month the industrial barometer will pass the comparable period of 1931, when conditions were much better than in 1932, 1933 or 1934.

A comparison of 1935 with 1934 discloses that practically every line of business with the exception of five, shows substantial advances over last year, comparing the first nine months of 1935 with the same period in 1934.

The five which showed a decrease were construction, which decreased 1 per cent; hard coal production, which dropped 11 per cent, the greatest decline registered; soft coal production, with a decrease of one-tenth of 1 per cent; cement shipments, which were off 5 percent, and car-loading, which dropped 1 per cent.

The cost of living was 5 per cent higher this year. Food was up 12 per cent, a 32 per cent jump in meat prices marking the largest advance. Housing was up 8 percent and clothing 3 per cent. The sole item in this bracket to show a drop was fuel and light, which declined 2 per cent.

The wholesale price structure, including 784 items, rose 7 per cent. Farm income improved by 7 percent.

As noted before, the rise is continuing, and 1936 should, in the light of "normal years," such as 1926, be a good period of business.

IT APPEARS that another intrepid pioneer of the airways has given his life in the cause of aviation. Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith, lost enroute from England to Australia, is the latest to be added to the list of men who have given their all in the promotion of their craft.

FOOTBALL LAGS THIS WEEK IN THIS DISTRICT

Wheeler and Lefors Will Stage Best Game of Week-end

No crucial battles are slated for this week-end in the District 3 Class B football wars. Two teams, the Shamrock Irishmen and the Wellington Skyrockets, take a holiday.

Of the most interest in this district will be the McLean-Clarendon tilt. However, this will be of mild interest since the Tigers will in all probability take the comparatively weak Clarendon Bronchos in their stride. McLean has conference wins over Memphis, Lefors, Wheeler, Mobettie and Wellington, and she will probably meet the powerful Shamrock Irishmen November 22 on the Tiger field with an unblemished record in a battle that will settle the title for this sector.

Probably the most evenly-matched contest carded for this week will be the Wheeler versus Lefors game. The two teams play at Lefors Friday and the winner will be bracketed in the first division of the conference, alongside Sham-

Displays Giant Stalk of Cotton

D. N. Beavers, living four miles west of this city, on Indian Creek, last Saturday was displaying one of the largest stalks of cotton ever seen in this section.

The stalk, which was Half and Half cotton, measured seven feet and three and a half inches above the ground, but had been so badly damaged by fleas that there were only seven developed bolls on it.

Mr. Beavers said that he had about three and half acres of this giant cotton, which would average almost six feet in height, and that it would produce better than a bale to the acre, in spite of damage by the fleas.

He also said he had a patch of black husk kaffir which had eight and ten heads to the stalk.

Mr. Beavers' farm is sub-irrigated, and is not greatly affected by dry weather.

Estelline Boys Judge Poultry

Special to The Democrat
ESTELLINE, Nov. 2.—The Estelline Poultry team went to Quantico, Nov. 2, to participate in the poultry judging contest there. Eight schools competed for honors, and Estelline placed fifth.

The following boys represented the Estelline Vocational Agriculture Department in the contest: Leon Townsend, Sidney Landers, Gordon Stout, with D. W. Huckaby and Alvin Phillips as alternates. The agriculture department being a new department in the school and having had only one workout, the boys made a good showing.

Word was received yesterday by Mrs. May Mason that her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Richard Patton, of Booneville, Arkansas, is much improved, following a serious illness. Mrs. Patton formerly lived at Lakeview.

Miss Pauline Turlington, who is employed in the WPA officers at Lubbock, spent the week-end with her parents in this city.

Miss Thelma Allison, employed in the farm rehabilitation office here, spent the week-end with her parents near Plainview.

SOIL EROSION

All material appearing from time to time in this column is furnished through the cooperation of the Soil Conservation Service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. It is offered as this paper's contribution to the farmer, in an effort to help them cope with the greatest emergency they have ever faced—that of saving the soil they till. An effort will be made to answer any questions addressed to this paper, and, if necessary, a representative of the local area office will be sent to confer with you concerning your soil problems.

Soil erosion has robbed the fields of the United States each year of more than 20 times as much plant food as has been consumed by the crop grown, according to H. H. Bennett, director of the United States department of agriculture soil conservation service.

The loss of top soil has made sub-soil farmers of these owners, consequently the fertility of cover crops and commercial fertilizers is lost to them.

Terraces placed horizontally around hillsides to catch run-off water before it can build up a destructive velocity, will materially reduce this danger, experiments have shown. Add a terrace outlet to these terraces so that excessive water is carried away gradually, and the soil in suspension settles out, leaving the fertility for future use.

CHAPTER XXXIV

Dunn sat in an old-fashioned chair on the porch of the farmhouse and looked at the fields that shimmered under the summer heat. She had been in the farmhouse just a little less than 24 hours, now, and every day she seemed to increase the queer dissatisfaction and uneasiness that possessed her.

gin with, he told her about getting back to the city. She had delivered the car which Mr. Montague had bought to deliver; that part of the business was finished. In addition, she and Sandy, satisfied her mind, his accident would not have serious consequences. She eased her mind on that point. She could not, then, stay on in the country. She had done all she could do; it was time to be leaving.

When she had mentioned this to Sandy, half an hour before, he had been rather unsympathetic. Indeed, his lack of sympathy seemed to arise from a new attitude toward her, one which she did not at all understand.

"Do you want to go back to the city?" he asked her. "Yes, as she said by his bed, she had her desire to return to the city."

"Sandy, I must," she said. "I can't stay on here forever. I've got to get back to the city." She said, waving a hand. "If you ask me, old Montague, I expect to see you in the city."

"Yes, widened. 'Why do you want to go back to the city?' he just sent me to give you that letter whatever it was." She grinned at her. "Don't worry, baby," he said. "He and I've got it bad. He's got a new secretary already."

"I just can't, Sandy." She had a lazy grin, laid one hand on her wrist, and slid it down her arm, and repeated, "I just can't understand."

he said, comprehension. "Forget it. We're going to be married. What difference does it make?" She stared at him blankly, while his hand continued to slide slowly up and down her arm. In the brief time that she had been here, Sandy had displayed a tendency to paw her; she didn't like it, and she disengaged her arm and stood up.

"I've just got to go back, whether you understand it or not," she said. "Can't somebody drive me—oh, part way, anyway? To Plainfield, where I can catch a train?"

"Don't know if any of the cars are available," said Sandy. "Then I'll have to take the train from Middletown."

"There's only one train a day, in the direction you want, and it's gone already."

"But Sandy! Won't you help me? I don't like this."

He seemed to become penitent. "Don't worry—I'll fix it," he said. "I'll speak to Red about it. Just forget about it. I'll fix things."

On that assurance she had left his bedroom; and now, sitting alone on the porch and reviewing the conversation, she was forced to admit that she did not like the tone of it in the least. Sandy didn't seem like the sympathetic and understanding sweetheart he had been in Dover, and in Maplehurst; something hard and unpleasant was showing through from underneath. . . . Then her innate loyalty came to his defense.

"I'm just—silly," she told herself. "I've been tired and excited, and I see things wrong. And he's sick, poor boy, and not himself. I mustn't judge him so hastily."

Eve Lewis came out and perched on the porch railing. She lit a cigarette, tossed the match on the lawn, and looked down at Jean with a wry smile.

"This place is a hole, isn't it?" she said.

Jean looked up, smiled, and nodded.

"Well, we won't be here long," said Eve. "That's one comfort. The next place'll be better."

"Oh? Where are we—where are they going?"

Eve noticed how Jean corrected herself, and gave her a curious look. "What do you mean—'they'?" she asked. "You're coming too, aren't you?"

Jean shook her head. "I've got to get back to Dover, Eve."

"Oh, forget it. Trail along with us. I admit this place is a dump, but it's only for another day or so. Red's got another place spotted, and it'll be a spot where we can really enjoy life a little."

She yawned and stretched lazily.

"This place does give me the willies," she added.

"But I can't go," said Jean. "You can understand, Eve, can't you? I've got a job to get back to."

"Oh, a job—" said Eve, gesturing with royal disdain.

"Well, I have. And anyway, it's different with me than it is with you. You're with your husband. I'm not—Sandy and I—"

Eve smiled a worldly-wise smile. "Why let that bother you?" she asked.

Jean flushed, and her shoulders stiffened.

"It's too bad, I suppose, but it does bother me," she said coldly.

Eve looked at her in mild surprise, then tossed her cigarette butt out onto the lawn. She watched it smoldering there for a moment, then she shrugged and stood up.

"It's too hot to have a row," she said. She started to walk to the door, then paused and looked down at Jean. "You really mean you're going back?"

"Why, of course."

"Well, talk to Red about it then."

"Wait," she begged. "Eve—there's so much here I don't understand. Who is this man Red, anyway? Why does everybody wait for him to decide everything. You, Sandy, everybody—it's always, 'I'll ask Red,' or something. Who is he?"

Eve looked down with a strange, indefinable expression on her face. Then she withdrew her hand, forced a laugh, and said, "Why don't you ask Sandy?" and went on in the house.

This was hardly the sort of incident that would calm Jean's rising dissatisfaction. She hesitated, uncertain, staring out at the open fields; then she got up and went to the little bedroom she had occupied the night before, and proceeded to pack her overnight bag. Having finished, she cast a last glance about the room, stopped before the mirror to powder her face and pat her hair into shape, and then carried the bag downstairs. She deposited it in the front hallway and then went into the living room, looking for this strange, subtly menacing person they called Red.

To her surprise she found Sandy there, at ease in a big mission chair. He was dressed in gray flannel trousers, tennis shoes, and a white shirt, open at the throat. His bandaged shoulder was visible where the shirt stood open.

"Well," he said, "where you off to?"

"I wanted to find this man you call Red and see if someone won't drive me to Plainfield," she said.

"Oh," said Sandy. "Sit down while I explain."

She sat on the edge of a chair and waited. Down here, for some reason, Sandy seemed more like the Sandy she had known before—boyish, amiable, fondly familiar. Her unrest somehow diminished as she sat facing him.

"I talked to Red about it," said Sandy. "I'm afraid you're out of luck, for just now. You see, we've only got two cars here, and they're both tied up for the rest of the day. But listen"—he hurried on as she started to protest—"first thing tomorrow it'll be different, Red promised—and if you don't want to take his word, I'll give you my promise. Okay?"

She hesitated. She wanted to leave now—today—and yet . . .

"Oh, what's one more night?" asked Sandy, laughing. "Nobody'll bite you. There's two married women here to chaperon you—Eve Lewis and Mrs. Engle, the farmer's wife. And I'm crippled, anyhow." His eyes danced with mocking humor. She found herself smiling in tune with him.

"You're sure—about tomorrow morning?"

"Of course. Come on—it's okay, isn't it?"

She gave a little laugh, with just a faint note of irritation in it. "I guess it'll have to be," she said.

Time seemed to drag, in this farmhouse. Sandy was still weak, unable to walk with her outdoors. Lewis was absent in one of the cars, and the strange "Red" was aloof and unapproachable. Jean took a stroll across the fields with Eve, sat in a dusky, old-fashioned living room with Sandy, lounged aimlessly on the porch—and somehow got through the day and the evening, conscious always of a queer feeling of unease, almost of guilt, at her continued presence here. But the day did end, eventually, and the night of broken and unquiet sleep ended also; and at last it was the next morning, and she ate her breakfast at the gingham-checked table in the big farm kitchen, at a table littered with many dishes—the others, it seemed, had arisen earlier and breakfasted before her.

She went out to the porch to wait for the car. And after a few minutes the red-headed man came out and surveyed her dourly.

"All ready, are you?" he asked. "Got your things packed, and all?" She nodded.

"Come on, then," he said. She took her bag—which he permitted her to carry for herself—and followed him through the back yard, where the big blue sedan was parked. Two men were in the front seat, and Eve Lewis sat in the back.

"Get in," said Red.

She hesitated. Why were so many people in the car? "Come on, we're in a hurry," said Red. "We're all going for a little ride. Sandy and Wingy've gone on ahead in the other car. Steen on it, baby."

"But—but where are we going?" she stammered uneasily.

"Never mind where," he said, bending his face close. "Get in, sit down, shut up and do as you're told."

And as she looked into his cold blue eyes she knew she had to obey.

Featuring New Laundry Service

"By our new method of connecting live steam to each washer which keeps the water boiling hot while the washer is in motion you can turn out a better washing as the clothes will be snow white" states Mr. Piland owner of the Handy Laundry. This improvement enables you to regulate the temperature of your wash water as you need it" continues Mr. Piland. More people are using the Handy Laundry as it is convenient and has many new features that make washing an easier task. After you have used Piland's Handy Laundry service once you will continue to use it as our list of satisfied customers is increasing daily. Just phone 31-J and say you wish to reserve a place.

At Shaw's You Get Service and Smiles

"No wonder so many people stop at our service station" remarked Bill Shaw, manager of the Shaw Service Station. "Whether they stop for '5 gallons of the regular' or just ask the quickest way to the next town. We're glad to give them anything they need and ask for." We have, of course, complete facilities for servicing all makes of cars. Our cold weather hints to car owners in the care of their car and the proper greases and oils to be used has saved many motorists costly repair bills and tow charges. Bill Shaw says if you have not yet had your car checked for winter driving just bring it in and we will do the job. Ask any motorists why he stops at Shaw's—it's smile and service.

STORIES IN STAMPS

By I. S. Klein

FIRST OF THE KAISERS

THE glory that was Rome's never shone in greater light than during the lifetime of Gaius Julius Caesar, great statesman, military leader, orator and historian.

After that came his military campaigns, in which he added to Rome's prestige with victories through what is now France and as far as England.

When he was not on the march, Caesar instituted many reforms in Rome. But envious conspirators ended his popularity by assassination in 44 B. C.

The stamp shown here, picturing Julius Caesar, is one of a set issued by Italy in 1929, commemorating the founding of Rome.

DUTIES OF A CAPTAIN
The selection of a captain of a football team is generally left to lettermen of the previous year's squad. In my opinion, the captain should be the fellow who has the most team spirit, one who fights with no regard for individual glory. That's the reason why so many men from the previous year are elected leader of the squad. The captain should be a player who, by his own example, inspires a team to greater heights; one who never says die in the face of certain defeat; one who has the quality of leadership similar to that of a general who is in the front ranks with his men on in the face of cruel strafing. The captain also should be one of the best students on the team so that he can offer an example to those who have the tendency to fall behind in their studies.

grades, as reported for this season, are very much smaller than for last season. To date, about 18 per cent of the samples classed this year is Strict Middling and higher grades (white and extra white), compared with about 67 per cent for last season.

In district 3, of which Hall County is a part, the report for the week ending November 7 showed that 21.6 per cent of the samples were Strict Middling and better, compared with 1.2 per cent the week before, and 32.9 per cent the week before that. The percentage of this grade to date for the district is 21.8.

In staple, the district samples show an increase in length. For the week ending November 7, 3/4 inch staple and better was 83.9 per cent of the crop, compared to 74.9 the week before, and 77.11 per cent the week before that. The proportion of staple an inch in length and better rose from 4.8 per cent to 5.8 per cent for the week mentioned above.
