City And County WPA Projects Submitted Today

SAW CLUB HOUSE IS GOAL OF WPA PROJECT

Would Utilize East Ward Building In New Plan

A surprise project submitted for approval by the WPA last night was one which had been conceived by Superintendent Davis and approved by the School Board of the Memphis Public Schools.

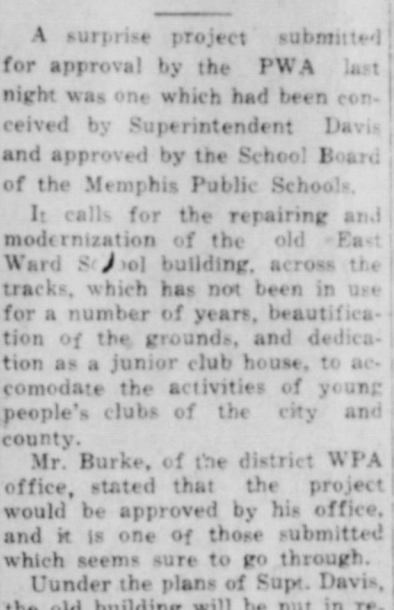

Mr. Burke, of the district WPA office, stated that the project would be approved by his office, and it is one of those submitted which seems sure to go through.

Under the plans of Sup. Davis, the old building will be put in repair, re-roofed and redecorated. Some changes would be made in the interior arrangements, to provide for a large assembly hall, the grounds would be graded and beautiful, and new walks and other improvements put in.

The building, when completed would be used as a meeting place for junior organizations of all kinds, such as the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Hi-Y Clubs, and other kindred groups. It would also be available for adult usage, and would be under the supervision of and a part of the Memphis Public School System.

Citizens who have become acquainted with the project are enthusiastic over the plan, and it looks as if the old building may again be put into useful purposes.

Liner Hurlled on Reef

Morgan Line flagship Dixie, which was hurled on Caryfoot Reef, off the coast of Florida, endangering the lives of 325 people. Map shows location of grounded vessel, 18 miles from the mainland, and 40 miles south of Miami.

MIAMI, Fla., Sept. 5.—Three rescue ships were this morning removing the remaining 143 passengers and part of the crew from the stranded Morgan liner Dixie, aground off the Florida coast, as the rescued unfolded a sea saga of courage.

The rescue operations, started yesterday afternoon, were resumed under overcast skies but with a calm sea prevailing.

Captain E. W. Sundstrom of the Dixie advised the Coast Guard that it would no longer be necessary for their cutters to stand by. He and a skeleton crew will remain aboard the vessel pending release her from the grip of the sands.

Rescued passengers told how they sang in the face of death during the agonizing three days and two nights wait for rescue. One passenger said that "fear seemed unknown, although all were of the opinion that they would finally be carried down."

Another reported that both food and water was very low when the rescue ships appeared.

DISTRICT REPRESENTATIVE HERE CONFERRING WITH COMMITTEES

Additional Projects Are Hurriedly Prepared On Advice of District Official, to Absorb Total of Funds Available to County

Meeting with W. E. Burke, head of the projects department of the WPA District Office at Lubbock, representatives of the County Planning Board, committees from the City Council, County Commissioners from all precincts, and representatives from practically every town in the county worked far into the night last night, shaping up projects to submit to the Works Progress Administration.

Going into session at 8:00 o'clock last night at the Commissioners Court room in the courthouse, Mr. Burke took care of the various committees in turn, and working with them until 2:00 o'clock this morning, when they adjourned for the night.

At eight o'clock this morning they took up where they left off last night, and until noon today the courtroom and County Judges office were the scene of feverish activities, as projects were whipped into suitable shape for submission.

Mr. Burke left for the Lubbock office just after noon, with his brief case bulging with Hall County projects.

Due to the advance in submission deadline from the 12th to the 5th, practically all projects submitted from this county had to be presented in skeleton form. At the district office, they will be filed in the proper order, assuring them of consideration, and then sent back for completion.

COUNTY SCHOOL HEADS ATTEND MEETING

School Problems Are Discussed By Official

A good attendance of trustees, school officials and patrons from all parts of the county were present yesterday afternoon, for the school meeting called to hear an address by Deputy State Superintendent S. D. Wilson.

The program, which was held at 2:00 o'clock, at the Baptist Church Annex, was opened with a couple of musical selections by Miss Willie C. Wilson.

Following this, Lyman Robbins, of the Memphis Band committee, addressed the gathering. He explained the contemplated trip of the Memphis Gold Medal Band to the Tri-State Fair at Amarillo, September 21st, and stated that those in charge of the trip would like to have as many school children as possible make this trip.

Co-operation of school heads from all parts of the county was pledged to this movement.

Mr. Wilson then addressed the gathering, and his talk was one which was both entertaining and instructive. He outlined the school program of the state authorities, and took up many problems which confront the average school and discussed their remedies.

FOOD CANNING EXPLAINED IN MEETING

Expert Instructs In Art of Preserving Various Foods

Despite a last minute change in location, the canning demonstration yesterday, under the sponsorship of the County Agent's office, was well attended by local housewives, who learned the newest method of food preservation.

Announced to be held in the vacant building next to the Clover Hardware Company, it was decided at a late hour to hold the meeting at the Baptist Church Basement, where better facilities were available.

About twenty-five women were present at 2:00 o'clock, when Miss Gladys Kimbrough, expert connected with the Ball Bros. Co., began her demonstration. Her explanations were clear and covered the processing of all kinds of foodstuffs.

So successful was the demonstration, that it is possible another demonstration may be staged later, when conflicting meeting will not interfere with the attendance.

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY

ONE of the most heart-gladdening pieces of news which it has been our privilege to chronicle was tucked away in a short Associated Press dispatch received just before we went to press yesterday. You saw it on the front page, in a small box.

It was the announcement that by unanimous vote, the United Confederate Veterans, in national reunion at Amarillo, had agreed to unite with the Grand Army of the Republic, in a joint reunion of Civil War Veterans, in 1936.

Forgetting differences which started with the conflict that almost tore apart our nation, the Blue and the Gray will clasp hands in amity and friendship on the immortal field at Gettysburg, where thirty thousand of the flower of both North and South laid down their lives in defense of their rights.

We can think of no grander proof of the unity of thought and spirit which unites this great nation of ours. Orators can tell you of the wonderful oneness of purpose of our people. The press can print columns about a close-welded citizenship. The radio can broadcast hours of programs on American solidarity. The screen can bring countless messages of "united we stand, divided we fall." But the climax of it all, the most thrilling picture of a united people with but one purpose—the welfare of the nation—is the one which comes to our mind's eye when we visualize next year's reunion... a gray bearded son of the Stars and Stripes and an equally gray son of the Stars and Bars, clasping hands in heart-felt friendship on a field which once ran red with the blood of the sons of the North and South.

Can you conceive of a more momentous occasion than this will be, when, for the first time in history, these few feeble survivors of the great conflict join hands on the Field of Gettysburg.

In the United States, 3 people were killed each hour on Labor Day. If this mad pace keeps on, there soon won't be anyone left to attend the funerals of the victims.

BEGIN HERE TODAY RUTH WOODSON, an attractive, high-spirited girl of 19, an orphan, lives in Brooklyn with her cousins, the LAWRENCEs. She feels herself a burden to her relatives and realizes that her pretty cousin, LETTY LAWRENCE, dislikes her. When JACK WILLER comes to the house and is attentive to Ruth, Letty's jealousy flares of hatred.

Ruth impulsively leaves the house, pawns a pin inherited from her grandmother, and boards an out-going bus. Her seat-mate, MRS. COGLY, advises her to go to "The Girls' Industrial League" in Pittsburgh. Halfway there, Mrs. Cogle remembers that the Girls' League is in Cleveland instead of Pittsburgh and has Ruth get off the bus at the next stop. Ruth is bewildered and hysterically amused at her plight.

Ruth seeks refuge in a big old stone house and faints from hunger and excitement just as the door is opened. She awakens to find herself in bed in a strange room. Before her stands a queer old woman and a handsome young man, named JOHN McNEILL.

The old woman asks, "Are you feeling stronger now, Miss Elaine?" NW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER VI Flashlights reached through the darkness, picking out a flagstone path that wound between autumn-tinted shrubbery. In the low-thrown, flickering light there shimmered the trailing skirts of evening gowns and satin-shod feminine feet.

Five young ladies of Graycastle College were assembling for a secret meeting forbidden by dean and faculty. "Elaine!" came a complaining whisper, directed at the girl in the lead. "Elaine Chalmers, look where you're going! This path doesn't lead to the Dell!"

"Get on my feet!" replied the tall girl in the lead. She looked back and blinked against the glare of a flashlight that covered her lovely face. Her eyes were as dark as the night itself, her hair was a burnished gold, shading into brown. Her skin was flawless, her lips "made." Like the other girls, she wore an evening gown carelessly thrown over her "home" dress, yet the yellow velvet of her wrap and the paler yellow of her dress seemed to dominate all those other pastel shades which surrounded her. "I meant to tell you, Hortense," she said, "we're not going to the Dell. Emerson's on the lookout. We're going to the birch grove."

There was an excited murmur from the four girls who followed. Hortense asked, "Can the new girls find us there?" "I've attended to that, naturally," answered Elaine. Her voice was beautifully placed and very insolent. All her personality and her egotism vibrated through it. The trail seemed never-ending. The flagstones ceased and five pairs of daintily shod feet skirted an 18-hole golf course and followed a mile of bridle-path before the birch grove was reached. Here they found five other figures awaiting them, and Elaine turned her flashlight full into each face for a relentless inspection. Each was a girl in her late teens. Each was breathless with excitement. Each was a beauty in her own right.

"O. K.," said Elaine's clear voice briefly. "Lay down your lights and join hands." They obeyed and the circle of 10 was broken only by the fact that Elaine's right hand retained her light. "We are here," she said impressively, "to add five lower classmen to our circle. This is customary. Last year five of us were taken in by the senior five who were graduating. In this way the circle of the Terrible Five remains unbroken. It is fitting that our newcomers—Pamela, Kathryn, Barbara, Laura and Janice—should know something about the order you are entering. It's not an ordinary sorority. It has no lofty or exalted aims. It is, as its founder designated it seven years ago, 'a cult for the conquest of the male.' It is fitting, too, that you should know something about this founder, so I shall tell you what I know, omitting only her name."

Hortense whispered in her ear, "Get on with it, Elaine! My feet are killing me—" "Well," said Elaine, "The Terrible Ten was founded by the most beautiful girl who ever attended Graycastle. Though she was terribly popular she made the mistake of actually falling in love. The man was some years her senior and he jilted her to marry a mere nobody—a woman almost as old as himself who had nothing but brains to recommend her. After that our heroine formed this secret circle by asking nine congenial girls to join her. Their object was the glorification of feminine charm and the annexation of male admirers."

She paused to sweep her flashlight from face to face and saw that the new girls were properly impressed. This was the very center of her little kingdom and she meant to rule it. "And now," she said, "the older five will repeat our creed, which the incoming members will say after us."

"I was made beautiful," chanted five soft voices, "for the conquest of the male!" Like an echo the five new girls repeated the words, spaking them with a sort of hesitant awe.

Then came another amazing assertion, chanted by Elaine and Hortense and their three associates: "It is my privilege as a beautiful woman to win as many declarations of love and as many proposals of marriage as possible!"

This was repeated with even greater intensity by the new girls. "Very good," said Elaine. "Now for our oath. We swear to pursue our careers of coquetry and masculine conquest to life's end! Amen."

In the silence that followed the taking of the oath there came a sound like a footfall in the darkness, but when Elaine swept the place with her flashlight nothing was discovered. She then turned her light on the jeweled watch on her wrist. "I've only this to say before disbanding," she told them. "Let us remember that we are the outstanding beauties of the school and that we must dominate every tea and dance. Let us never become interested in studies and grades to the detriment of our purpose. Furthermore, let the new girls take note to certain achievements already accomplished in the past year by the five of us—"

She unfolded a paper of notes and inspected it. "Three of us have gotten West Point rings from the stuffed uniforms up the river. Two of us wear Harvard jewelry. One of us has annexed a Yale quarterback and has captivated an older man in Boston who is offering to divorce his wife for her. And I," she concluded, "am practically engaged to a first-classman at Annapolis, to the season's most popular dance orchestra leader and to Tedde Whitney Van Harrington, the Third."

There was an audible sniff which challenged Elaine's attention. "Does any one here doubt this statement?" she asked coldly. "If she does, she will find evidence on file in my desk and is welcome to inspect it. As you know, these tangible things count most as proof—" She ticked them off on her fingers, "Written proposals, cards accompanying flowers and gifts, telegrams, fraternity jewelry and engagement rings."

The meeting was ending when Hortense drawled arrestingly, "But you haven't mentioned your failure, Elaine! I rather think it's time for a showdown on that little matter—"

"It's getting late," Elaine reminded them. "Listen, girls," Hortense addressed the interested circle. "Elaine's come a cropper and she's keeping still about it. The three old members will back me on this. We each had a chore to do during the summer and we all succeeded except Elaine. The stunt was to win a declaration of love from our first sweethearts—or, rather, from the male we first adored. The five girls succeeded, and so have I. But Elaine Chalmers' girl who was a little better looking, a little richer and even try. For this reason I move a little more dashing that herself, she resign from the presidency." The time had arrived to even the Elaine's face was white as the flashlight played on it. "Hortense, you cat!" she said. "You know I've accomplished enough to make up for it. This Annapolis senior was my second love. Why split a hair?"

Hortense's long green eyes narrowed as they rested on her rival. "We all kept to the letter of the contract. All but you, Elaine! Connie Ogdon had to vamp the Spanish elevator man in her aunt's Park avenue apartment, because that happened to be her first crush—"

"Oh," spoke up one of the new girls, "how sweet! How utterly priceless! It's like Hilda Conklin's poem, 'I'm in love with the janitor's boy, and the janitor's boy loves me!'"

But Hortense was not to be diverted. For several years she had been playing second fiddle to this old cuckoo. But I'll get more," she stated calmly. "That's only fair, Elaine! Three serious voices already vote on us—"

The darkness held a moment of silence before Elaine spoke defiantly, "Resign. I'll go to Worth's fall vacation. There's nothing in Grandfather's old caretaker, and I'll get more," she stated calmly. "That's only fair, Elaine! Three serious voices already vote on us—"

Elaine said, "Hortense, you couldn't waste part of my vacation in that foul hole!" "Then resign," said Elaine calmly. "Play the game. That's only fair, Elaine! Three serious voices already vote on us—"

Elaine said, "Hortense, you couldn't waste part of my vacation in that foul hole!" "Then resign," said Elaine calmly. "Play the game. That's only fair, Elaine! Three serious voices already vote on us—"

TAILOR BIRDS, OF INDIA, DO NOT HAVE TO BE TAUGHT TO SEW! A YOUNG BIRD, REARED WITHOUT EVER SEEING ITS PARENTS, OR A TAILOR BIRD NEST, FOLLOWS THE NEAT-BUILDING CUSTOMS OF ITS RACE.

UNTIL RECENT TIMES, IT WAS A COMMON BELIEF THAT LIGHTNING THUNDERBOLTS HURLED DOWN FROM HEAVEN.

CAMELS WERE USED TO CARRY THE U. S. MAIL DURING THE CIVIL WAR.

THE exact origin of the belief in thunderbolts is not known. For centuries people believed that lightning actually hurled solid objects at the earth.

Owls Will Schedule Games With Several Strong Teams

FEW POST SEASON GAMES BE PLAYED

Baseball fans of this city will cheer by the news that, in all probability, the Memphis Owls will play a number of exhibition games during the next few weeks.

Shunted out of the finals in the league by their loss to the Childress Electric, the local team is still rearing to go, and they plan to schedule several games with semi-pro outfits of the Panhandle.

The roster of players will be kept intact for these games, and our dyed-in-the-wool rooters will have their favorites to root for.

Teams to be scheduled for these post-season games will probably be Pampa, Borger, LeFors, Colton and squads of that calibre, assuring our fans of the best diamond entertainment possible.

Announcement of games to be played will be announced from time to time, and an effort will be made to schedule most of the contests for the city.

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

Local Opinions on Pertinent Topics.

THE QUESTION: What do you think of the work of the Memphis Parent Teachers Association?

THE ANSWERS:
MRS. ROY GUTHRIE: The Parent-Teachers Association is the only recognized, dependable link between the home and the school, taking those two institutions as community units. Through its work, and that alone, can the home and school strive together harmoniously, without loss of energy or time, for the good of the youth. One of the chief aims of the Parent-Teachers Association is to bring into closer relationship the home and the school that parents and teachers may co-operate intelligently in the education of the child. Of course, there are other far-reaching aims, such as parent education, raising the standards of the home, effecting legislation for the protection of child life and mothers, and promoting regulations that will advance the educational, economic, and social standards of the community, state and nation. But the immediate aim in each local unit is a vital contact between the home of the children and the teachers of those children.

Regardless of how intelligently parents endeavor to rear their children, they may do much damage if they are not in full accord with the school system. The superintendent and faculty have set up a definite philosophy, a particular theme, an attainable goal. All of their efforts are centered about this one ideal. There is concentration there, psychology, unity, co-operation and understanding. If every parent of every child in the system can become thoroughly familiar with this setup and, getting behind it, support it 100 per cent, the entire force predominating the child's life will be in accord, and there will be no waste in the promotion of his interest. But if the parents are educating in one direction and the schools in another, the child is torn between the two and receives limitless harm.

This, in my opinion, is the reason that it is the paramount responsibility of every parent to belong to the Parent-Teachers Association—and not only belong, but to attend. Fathers are needed there, as well as mothers. In the regular meetings, parents will become acquainted with the situation and then will be enabled to make for their children home backgrounds that will supplement and stimulate the ideals of the school.

It is not the purpose of the Parent-Teachers Association to concern itself with the technical management of the school. To be sure, parents are interested in the qualifications of the teachers, the financial status of the system, the health conditions, and the curriculum, but direct control of these things is none of the business of the organization. Neither is its business that of money making. Its business is that of educating parents, teaching co-operation, encouraging visiting schools during working hours, building morals, lending inspiration, and leading parents, teachers, and therefore, children to look for the attainment for a higher, more satisfactory life than they have thus far enjoyed.

MRS. CLYDE MILAM: My philosophy of the Parent-Teachers Association is that no matter how intelligent the parents are—no matter how earnestly they are trying to raise their children to be up-standing citizens of any community, and then, on the other side, the schools are trying to do practically the same thing, but if for one reason or another they do not work in conformity or have any inconsistency or discord between the home and the school—then both are working for naught. It is for the correspondence that the Parent-Teachers Association was organized, and it is for this purpose we are campaigning and soliciting the membership of every parent, both father and mother, to attend all the meetings.

I know every mother is interested in the child's school life, if they were not then they would not be sending their children to school. As long as the children are in the care of the school the parents should take enough interest to find, who is in charge of their children and their welfare. I would like to take this opportunity to make a personal appeal to the parents of our school children to come to the Parent-Teachers Association. We are having a combined meeting of the three separate associations Friday, Sept. 13. At this time Supt. Davis has arranged for an outside speaker to talk on the aims, the purpose and the work of the P.T.A. I am urging all to be present.
