Floodwater Structure Finished On Schleicher County Ranch

By BILL ROUNTREE

Dam 1, one of the dams located in Schleicher county, on the R. D. Johnson ranch, was checked for completion Friday, March 10, 1961.

This is one of 13 floodwater retaining dams, eight on the 100,622-acre watershed of Dry Devil's River and five on the 30,720-acre drainage area of Lowry Draw.

After completion, these structures will retard floodwater from 155 of the 205 square miles of watershed above Sonora. Total of 37,778-acre feet of floodwater could be retained should all dams be held at emergency spillway level.

The plan is designed to reduce flood damage in Sonora by 96%. Loss of livestock, fences, and soil erosion will also be reduced over the flood plain.

The program also includes application of land treatment measures such as brush control, deferred grazing, proper range use and other conservation practices, to hold the rain where it falls, reduce the crest of floods and prevent erosion and silting damage to structures.

There has been quite a bit of cooperation in getting this floodwater project constructed. The sponsoring groups include Sutton and Schleicher counties, the city of Sonora and the Edwards Plateau and Eldorado-Divide Soil Conservation districts.

The dam on the Johnson ranch has a rock blanket on the front side 15 feet thick with a dirt fill Yesterday morning, a total of 595 new 1961 license tags had been sold in the sheriff's office.

On April 1 of last year, 1,466 had been sold. So apparently nearly a thousand tags remain to be sold in this county by the March 31 deadline. Buy them now and avoid the last-minute rush, office personnel state.

Sheriff Orval Edmiston reports that the Tax Collector's office will be open until noon on the next two Saturdays, as a convenience to car owners wanting to secure new license plates.

On Sunday afternoon Fred Gunstead had the experience of meeting a former roommate and old printer friend that he parted with 38 years ago in Wenatchee, Washington.

Stanley Struble and Fred Gunstead were employed on the Wenatchee Daily World throughout 1922 and part of 1923. That summer their paths separated—Struble spent several years in Oregon and then returned to Wenatchee. Gunstead spent about two years in California and landed in Texas in 1925.

In the meantime both were married and the march of time brought the duties of rearing and educating children and finally, as the cycle was completed, the reward of grandchildren.

Cards and letters were exchanged, but they became fewer as the years rolled on.

About two years ago Struble took his retirement at the age of 66. Forty years in the printers' union brings him $22 a week pension; a hitch in World War One brings a pension of about $75 a month, and besides that there is Social Security.

With their own home in Wenatchee, long since paid for, a good car, and, fortunately, good health, they agreed that there was no reason why they shouldn't take off when they wanted to and visit the kids in California. And so that is what they have been doing.

In making a swing over into Arizona, they consulted their maps and discovered they were pretty close to Texas, and so they came by Carlsbad Caverns, and then on to Texas and Eldorado.

It was about 3:00 o'clock Sunday afternoon when Fred Gunstead answered the door bell, and a short, heavy-set, gray-haired man asked, "Is this Mr. Gunstead that runs the local newspaper?"

"Yes—?"

"Well, I wonder if you could help out an old-time printer?"

"Well, Come on in. Where you from?"

"Wenatchee, Washington."

Why—STRUBLE! You dog-gone ol' son-of-a-gun!"

From then on, until late bedtime, the evening took care of itself.

Cora, his wife, is pleasant and agreeable, but she was only able to get a word in edgewise once in a while. Two veteran printers had the floor.

There's a lot of talk going around about the proposed Peace Corps. Just how it will work out remains to be seen. The entire idea is fraught with many unanswered questions. Some say the plan could be a success, while others foresee many pitfalls which could make of it a dismal failure.

Here's the general idea of the set-up: Several thousand Americans, mainly young college grads, are to be recruited, then trained for three months in six Universities before being sent to "underdeveloped" countries. Their transportation would be paid by the government, and also food, lodging, and other personal expenses. They would be paid salaries of from $50 to $75 per month, to be retained and given each corpsman after the tour of duty. Congress has not approved any of this, however.

There has been no clear indication of what these people would do. It is theorized they would go out into the wilderness and tell the natives how to do things more efficiently.

Robert Shriver, President Kennedy's brother-in-law, has been appointed to head the program. He says the recruits must be hardy and have a "pioneering spirit."

But many questions are being asked. What would such young people do that is not now being done under Point 4? That is the purpose of Point 4—to give technical advice and training to help people help themselves. It would seem, therefore, that the new project would simply increase the number of such people in government service doing the same type of work.

How are such recruits to be screened, and who will do the screening? From UNRRA, Point 4, and in foreign aid programs, the U. S. has been embarrassed more than once by having the wrong kind of people representing this country abroad.

To whom would such young people be responsible? Or would they, as it appears, be on their own, answerable to the head office in Washington?

It is well to recall that only recently Mennen (Soapy) Williams caused much embarrassment to our Ambassadors in East Africa by virtually insulting local governments. This alone would indicate the difficulty in getting the right kind of people to speak for us when visiting strange countries.

worth of a message

Today's telephone is a far cry from the old pony express — an enormous advance in communications.

There it is, available for use around the clock. And the call you make can be local, across the continent, or overseas.

What's more, the lines and the intricate electronic equipment behind your telephone are maintained continuously, as an unseen part of the service you get.

Any way you measure it, the modern telephone is one of today's big bargains.

GENERAL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF THE SOUTHWEST

Austin.—After hours of fiercely critical debate, the House voted by a surprising 149-to-1 to attack the state's fiscal problems by working first to retire the deficit as an emergency matter.

This is the approach advocated by Gov. Price Daniel and Speaker of the House James Turman. Several who spoke against the deficit-retiring resolution voted for it.

Agreeing to retire the deficit, however, is not the same as agreeing on how to do it. Some new measures, big and broad, have been introduced.

Rep. George Hinson of Mineola has submitted an omnibus tax measure which he says will bring in $293 million over a two-year period. It is backed by Governor Daniel.

Hinson's bill includes levies on natural gas pipelines, power-driven objects and parts, utilities, stock transfers, jewelry and watches, construction materials, soft drinks, beer, wine, liquor, restaurant meals.

According to the governor's office, the bill would provide revenue for an $800 a year teacher pay raise and other spending but is not aimed at wiping out the deficit.

Reps. John Allen of Longview and Forrest A. Harding of San Angelo are proposing an even bigger one. It is a 2% general sales tax to raise an estimated $317 million.

Rep. Ben Atwell of Dallas has introduced, as promised, his "Texas broad-based excise tax."

It is not called a sales tax, but, in the language of the bill, imposes "upon each separate sale at retail of tangible personal property within this state an excise tax of 2%."

It has a long list of exemptions, including some already-taxed items.

Co-Op Bill Killed
REA electric co-op hopes for more city privileges were tumbled by a 77-to-64 House vote.

Several years ago the Legislature passed a law authorizing co-ops to continue to serve the same customers when a co-op area is annexed by a city. This year the co-ops sought permission to add new customers to existing lines in annexed areas.

Opponents charged that this would put a government-subsidized operation in competition with private enterprise. Spokesmen for private utilities declared they have to pay 27.4% of their income in taxes compared to 1.6% for co-ops.

Co-op leaders say that, after taking electricity to areas the private companies wouldn't serve, they are now in a life-or-death struggle.

Annexing Curb Passed
No longer would Texas cities be able to reach out and annex "all out of doors" under a bill passed 139-to-5 by the House.

It provides that cities would be encircled by a zone in which they would have control of building and sanitation codes, but would not have taxing powers. A portion of this zone could be annexed each year.

Also, cities would be required to get city utilities to an annexed area within three years.

Loan Law Sought
House Banking Committee is engaged in one of the sessions' toughest and most difficult tasks—hammering out new regulations for the small loan industry. A constitutional amendment voted by the people last November removed the blanket prohibition against interest of more than 10% and gave the Legislature authority to set interest rates and regulate the loan industry.

Five bills are under study. In general, they provide for a maximum charge of 3% per month on loans under $100, less for larger loans. Whether credit insurance should be included in maximum charges allowed is one of the questions at issue.

New Insurance Rate Bill
As a new approach to auto insurance rates, Sen. Grady Hazlewood of Amarillo has introduced a bill to require legislative approval of State Board of Insurance orders.

Hazlewood said his first approach, a bill directing the board to make certain changes in the present auto plan, has been "bottled up."

On the other side of the Capitol, the House Insurance Committee voted out favorably a "flexible rating" bill that would take away from the Insurance Board the authority to set auto rates.

A few days earlier, Atty. Gen. Will Wilson issued an opinion that, under present law, only the State Board, not the companies, can set these rates.

Prior to his resignation as chairman of the State Insurance Board, Penn J. Jackson had suggested letting individual companies set up their own merit rating plans on an optional basis.

Man Sentenced For False Tax Return

An ex-postal employee, Abner J. Coit, pleaded guilty to five counts of falsely listing a dependent or his income tax returns for the years 1954 through 1958. Federal Judge Joe E. Estes sentenced Coit to three years in the custody of the Attorney General. The sentence was probated for the same number of years. The judge fined Coit $500.

Special agents of the Internal Revenue Service had developed evidence for the government proving that Coit had claimed a niece, Alma L. Coit, as a dependent on his tax return from 1950 through 1958 although Coit had never contributed to the support of this niece.

The ex-postal employee is 33 years of age, graduated from Southern University, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, with a degree in Business Administration and had been employed by the U. S. Post Office 10 years at the time of his income tax indictment. He is married to a school teacher in the Dallas public school system. Coit was represented in court by attorney C. B. Bunkley, Jr.

Home Demonstration Agent's Column
By MRS. VIDA KREKLOW

Chances are, off hand, that you can't think of anything to eat that is better than a good broiled steak. A broiled steak has nearly everything in its favor. It smells so good while it's broiling that the whole family lines up to eat. It's simple to prepare; it can be done in a short time; it's good from a nutritional standpoint; broiling cuts do not cost any more than some other cuts, and yet, women do not broil meat as often as they would like to. Why?

Home makers have answered the question for me. It's too big a job to clean up the broiler, that's why. There is one way to skip that job and that's to turn the heat down or move the meat down if the broiler unit won't work except at one setting. Gas stoves can be regulated more easily than electric units.

Remember these pointers in broiling:

Broil meat at a moderate to low temperature. If the meat drips, spatters and the drippings burn on the pan, the temperature is too high. Moisture as well as fat is lost when the fire is too hot—and meat which has lost its moisture is usually tough and dry. A steak can't be juicy if it is over cooked. It's the juice which spatters all over the stove and is so hard to clean off. So—take it easy on the heat.

The time required to broil steak depends on how thick it is and how big it is. Work this time table any way you want to. Some like rare meat and some like it well done. This turns out a medium done steak:

One-inch steak 15 to 25 minutes, or 8 to 13 minutes per side. Turn only once; 1½ inch thick steak 25 to 35 minutes and a 2-inch steak will take from 35 to 45 minutes.

Sirloin, porterhouse, T-bone, club steak, fillet mignon & ground beef patties are all good broiling cuts. DON'T broil round steak; it's better fried or used as a Swiss steak.

Salt when steak is placed on the platter ready to eat, or salt the first side when it's brown and ready to turn. Salt goes into the meat only a quarter of an inch and must be salted some at the table anyway.

Don't turn a steak with a fork. A fork will leave a place for the juice to escape and besides a steak can slip off a fork, so be safe and use tongs to handle any meat which is cooking.

To clean the broiler (and we were speaking of broilers), let it soak in suds while you eat, or sprinkle it with soap flakes or detergent and cover with a wet dish cloth or paper towels. When clean up time comes you will be able to use the wet towels and wipe the broiler clean.

We had a good series of Home Demonstration club meetings on broiling steaks and some say that they are enjoying broiled steaks for the first time. A little salt, pepper and the juice of half a lemon when it's done and you are ready to eat.

The standby foods served with steak is a green salad, a baked potato and a fresh fruit for dessert. A sirloin steak is one of the best buys at the meat counter today. Get one and have steak to-night.

The first official shot of the Civil War was fired on April 12, 1861, and exactly 100 years later that act will be re-enacted at Charleston, S.C., as a part of the Civil War Centennial activities.

One person who would especially like to be on hand for the re-enactment is the Rev. Fred W. Dibble of Reagan whose mother and father both witnessed the bombardment of Fort Sumter by Southern sympathizers.

Rev. Dibble, a retired Methodist minister who for many years served churches in the east Texas area, drove down from his home recently to chat awhile about his favorite subject, the Civil War, and tell us some of the stories he recalled hearing his mother and father tell about the War.

His mother, a small child at the time, watched the bombardment of the Union garrison from her home only a few blocks from one of the batteries which fired on the fort. The father also watched the exchange of shots and related the story of the bombardment to the Rev. Dibble many times.

The mother and father both fled to Orangeburg, South Carolina, in 1862 where residents were free from the fear until 1865 when Sherman began his march to the sea. During the closing days of the war, the mother probably saw more of the horrors of war than she would have seen had she remained in Charleston.

The father enlisted in the Confederate Army soon after going to Orangeburg and served in General Stonewall Jackson's command. The particular brigade he belonged to was commanded by Brigadier General Johnson Hagood who surrendered his troops on April 26, 1865, at Bentonville, North Carolina.

Rev. Dibble has found his father's name on several musters of General Hagood's command prior to the surrender date but his name does not appear among those laying down their arms at Bentonville. He is inclined to believe that his father went AWOL rather than surrender with the rest of his brigade.

The Rev. Dibble is not only the son of a Confederate veteran but also the grandson of a soldier of the South, for his grandfather enlisted in the Confederate Army early in the war. He was discharged soon afterwards and worked at the Charleston arsenal for the duration.

Our visit with the Rev. Dibble was made especially enjoyable by a number of documents of Civil War vintage which he brought along with him. We were most impressed by the reproduction of the South Carolina Ordinance of Secession reproduced from the original shortly after the secession convention met in December of 1860.

The reproduction is a huge thing almost three feet high and about four feet wide. It bears the signatures of almost 200 delegates to the convention and the Rev. Dibble recalled that one signer, Dr. James H. Carlisle, later was president of Wofford College in Spartanburg, S. C. Rev. Dibble was educated at Wofford College and remembered that Dr. Carlisle was president emeritus of the school when he graduated.

Among the other items this son and grandson of the Confederacy showed us were several Confederate military orders, the likes of which we never saw before, and a "Civil War valentine"—a simple white card inscribed with a valentine poem in a beautiful handwriting.

We asked in this space some time ago for a copy of an old Civil War song entitled "Georgia Rose" which we hoped some reader would recall. Thanks to Mrs. Leora Stoneham of Belton, we now have a copy and would be happy to send a copy to readers who will send a stamped envelope along with their request.

It's a beautiful song and we think Civil War fans would enjoy seeing it.

Texas observance of the Civil War Centennial was inaugurated recently with the issuance of a 24-page booklet by the state's Civil War Centennial Commission suggesting ways that local organizations may properly note the 100th anniversary of the great conflict.

According to the booklet, no re-enactment of battles that occurred in Texas will be planned during the Centennial but rather the stress will be placed on the bravery and deeds of all men and women who fought for their cause.

Sites of the military events which occurred in Texas during the war will, however, be memorialized in some way. Chief among these events will be a ceremony noting the Battle of Sabine Pass where Lt. Dick Dowling with a handful of men repulsed a Federal force of several thousand on September 8, 1863.

The booklet just issued by the Texas Commission carries a picture of the Dowling monument erected several years ago at the site of the battle and a portion of the inscription on the monument.

The Battle of Sabine Pass was actually an isolated incident in the war but attracted widespread attention and comment because of the one-sided forces involved. Dowling had only 47 men in his Company F, Texas Heavy Artillery, while the Federal forces consisted of four warships and about twelve hundred men.

The Confederate forces under Dowling's command not only repulsed the Federal forces but captured two gunboats mounting 13 guns of the heaviest caliber and about 350 prisoners.

Lieutenant Dowling later wrote in his report that all his men "behaved like heroes, not a man flinched from his post. Our motto was victory or death."

The battle became so widely acclaimed that Confederate president Jefferson Davis was inspired to say of it "There is no parallel in ancient or modern warfare to the victory of Dowling and his men at Sabine Pass, considering the great odds against which they had to contend."

There are actually two monuments commemorating Dowling's feat at Sabine Pass, one erected by the state and the other by the Texas Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy.

The state monument, built during the Texas centennial at a cost of $7,500, lists all the names of the Confederates involved and gives a brief sketch of the battle.

The UDC monument also sketches the battle with a short description and is inscribed to "Dick Dowling and his . . . Irish patriots."

The unusual thing about the two monuments is that they give conflicting figures concerning the number of both Confederates and Union forces involved.

The state monument quotes from the official report of Lt. Dowling in numbering the Confederates at 47 and also states that there were twelve hundred Union forces involved.

The U.D.C. monument says that Dowling had 42 men and that the enemy was composed of an army of fifteen thousand.

Whatever the correct number, the feat was an unusual one even for Texans and the U.D.C. along with other state organizations will hold a ceremony on the site in 1963.

Perhaps this is the wrong time of the year to be saying anything about taking care of our ranges, but it is a good time to look around over the country and see whether or not they have been taken care of. For years grass has been taken for granted. It either rained and there was grass, or it didn't rain, and there wasn't any grass.

We know now that grass must be taken care of if it is kept healthy and productive. After all, ranchers are primarily grass producers, since their livestock are dependent upon the grass for their livelihood. From the way a lot of the country looks people have been taking care of their stock all right, but haven't given much thought to the rangeland. If we will take care of our grass, the grass will take care of our livestock!

There are different kinds of grasses, differing in their growth habits, and other characteristics, just as there are different kinds of livestock. The ranchers will know the differences in livestock, and so do they need to know the different characteristics of the grasses and other forage plants and the management requirements of each if they are to get the most out of them.

Grazing our ranges properly means grazing them at an intensity which will maintain adequate cover for soil protection and maintain or improve the quantity and quality of desirable vegetation. Proper grazing of ranges improves or maintains the vigor and high production of the major forage species and permits the accumulation of litter and mulch necessary for soil, water, and plant conservation.

It just doesn't rain a great deal in this section of the country. We need to keep and hold as much of that last rain as we possibly can for sometimes it is a long time between rains. When rains don't come for three or more months, drouth is sitting right in the saddle with the rancher. Periods of three or more months without rain have occurred for 31%, just about one-third, of the time.

These figures are taken from rainfall records for the last 52 years at San Angelo. Records show that the drouth is the rancher's business partner for just about a third of the time. Some would believe that it doesn't rain like it used to. But the facts are that many ranchers aren't making effective use of the rains that do come.

The practical meaning of what has been said to the rancher is this: to obtain maximum yields of forage for his livestock it is necessary to maintain enough top growth at all times to manufacture the food that the roots must have to remain vigorous. Top growth also protects the roots from high soil temperatures. Without this adequate top growth, the rancher will not have a high quality range capable of supporting the maximum number of livestock. Indeed, if too much top growth is removed, he faces the danger of losing his soil, water, vigorous high producing plants, and eventually his range altogether.

Experience shows that grass will continue to produce the most forage for livestock when it is grazed correctly.

State Fair To Present "The Sound Of Music"

Dallas.—"The Sound of Music," the musical comedy hit by Rodgers and Hammerstein, will be the headline theatrical attraction at the 1961 State Fair of Texas, Oct. 7-22.

The national company of the show starring Florence Henderson will present 24 performances in State Fair Music Hall during the Fair. There will be performances nightly Oct. 7-22, with matinees on Saturdays, Sundays and Wednesdays.

"The Sound of Music" is the last great musical collaboration of composer Richard Rodgers and the late lyricist Oscar Hammerstein II. The warm, human story is adapted from the best-selling book, "The Trapp Family Singers," that tells about a world-famous real-life family singing group.

Many of the songs have become familiar favorites. They include Do Re Mi, Climb Every Mountain, The Sound of Music, My Favorite Things, You Are Sixteen, The Lonely Goatherd, How Can Love Survive, So Long Farewell, Ordinary Couple, and Edelweiss.

In addition to the lovely Miss Henderson in the role of Maria, a young postulant, the National Company of 50 singers and actors includes John Myers as the austere Austrian Naval Captain Von Trapp and the great oratorio singer Beatrice Krebs as the Mother Abbess.

"The Sound of Music" has been hailed as one of the most entertaining of all Rodgers and Hammerstein musicals. It is a "family show" in every respect.

The original New York production has been running on Broadway still playing to capacity audiences at every performance.

MERRY MAKERS MEET

Mrs. L. T. Wilson and Mrs. Ernest Finnigan were guests when Miss John Alexander entertained the Merry Makers "42" club on Thursday in the club room of the Memorial Building. Refreshments were served to three tables of players at a local cafe.

Woman's Club Has Special Music Program

The Eldorado Woman's club met Tuesday afternoon at the Memorial building for a program on music appreciation with Mrs. J. D. Huckaby as leader.

Mrs. James Page talked on the history of music. She stated that in order to fully appreciate music it was necessary to know something of its history. Mrs. Page then presented a number of Mrs. Oliver Teele's music pupils in a program of music of the 16th, 17, and 18th centuries, and of modern day music. Judy Hext played a number by Bach's 16th century music, and an 18th century number by George Gershwin. Kaye Harkey played one of Chopin's compositions. Ted DuBose gave a vocal number and Larry McGinnes sang a solo with Kaye Harkey at the piano. The girl's sextette composed of Terry Phelps, Lynda McGinnes, Barbara Fry, Karon Kemble, Jan Davis and Genelle Edmiston sang one number. Mrs. Wilson Page closed the program with a sacred vocal solo.

Mrs. C. N. Clark and Mrs. Jess Blaylock were hostesses and served a delicious plate to the following members: Mmes. L. D. Ochsen, Edwin Jackson, P. S. Dudley, Lummie Whitten, R. D.
