By Longfel

Listen, my children, and hear
Of the midnight ride of Paul Revere,
On the eighteenth of April in Seventy-five;

Hardly a man is now alive
Who remembers that famous day and year.

He said to his friend, "If the British march
By land or sea from the town to-night,

Hang a lantern aloft in the belfry arch
Of the North Church tower, as a signal light.

One, if by land, and two, if by sea;
And I on the opposite shore will be,
Ready to ride and spread the alarm
Through every Middlesex village and farm,

For the country folk to be up and to arm."

Then he said, "Good-night;" and with our

Silently rowed to the Charlestown shore
Just as the moon rose over the bay,
Where, swinging wide at her moorings, lay

The Somerset, British man-of-war,
A phantom ship, with each mast and spar

Across the moon like a prison bar,
And a huge black hulk, that was magnified

By its own reflection in the tide.
Meanwhile, his friend through alley and street

Wanders and watches with eager ears,
Till, in the silence around him, he hears

"The muster of men at the barrack's door,
The sound of arms, and the tramp of feet,

And the measured tread of the grenadiers
Marching down to their boats on the shore.

Then he climbed to the tower of the old North Church,
By the wooden stairs, with stealthy tread,
To the belfry chamber,

And started the perch
On the sombre rafters,
Made

Masses and moving shapes
By the trembling ladder, steep and tall,
To the highest window in the wall,
Where he paused to listen, and looked down

A moment on the roofs of the town,
Add the moonlight flowing over all.
Beneath in the churchyard, lay the dead

In their night encampment on the hill,
Wrapped in silence so deep and still
That he could hear, like a sentinel's tread,
The watchful night wind, as it went,
Creeping along from tent to tent,
And seeming to whisper, "All is well!"

A moment only he feels the spell
Of the place and hour, and the secret dread
Of the lonely belfry and the dead,
For suddenly all his thoughts are bent

On a shadowy something far away,
Where the river widens to meet the bay
A line of black, that bends and floats
On the rising tide, like a bridge of boats.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Indianapolis Traction and Terminal Company, whose men went on strike Friday, attempted to run its cars Sunday, but gave up when notified by Superintendent of Police Hyland that the police would be unable to prevent bloodshed unless the cars were withdrawn. Joseph Johnson, a striking motorman, was shot and wounded by a policeman who fired into the crowd that surged around the first car sent out. AN UNUSUAL SWIMMING FEAT.

Menaced Man Draws Loaded Rowboat Seven Miles in Hudson River.

New York.—With hands and feet menaced, Henry Ellonsky swam eight miles drawing a rowboat containing seven men, the total weight approximating 1,260 pounds.

Ellonsky, with a harness arrangement over his shoulders, took the water at the Manhattan end of Brooklyn bridge. Towing the boat load, he headed for the battery, churning the waters of the river while passing craft saluted. Eddying water pushed Ellonsky beneath a dock less than a quarter of a mile from the starting point, but the 260-pound swimmer from New London, Conn., got headed for the battery again.

A strong wind and cross-tide made the journey hard, but the young giant kept kicking and pawing until within 200 yards of the shore, when boats went to his assistance. Ellonsky was in the water two hours and twenty minutes.

New York Plans Big Dock.
