Spending Tax

When Washington gets ready to throw overboard the unbalanced tax structure that has grown up through the years in order to substitute a sane and sound war tax program, three quite separate considerations must be kept in mind.

First, obviously, a scientific tax system must raise a terrific amount of money. The National Bureau of Economic Research says $40,000,000,000, or about a third of our anticipated national income for next year.

Second, it must obtain that money from those who have the ability to pay without distress or economic disaster.

And third, it must take money from those who otherwise would spend it so as to produce inflation.

The problem really divides into two parts, each calling for a different type of tax.

For the raising of a large, if not adequate amount of revenue, according to ability to pay, the income tax generally is considerable suitable. Not the motly collection of good and bad provisions which we now have, but a scientifically designed income tax based upon fundamental and permanent principles.

For the prevention of inflation, what could be more sane than a tax on spending, so graduated as to rest most heavily upon those items which are least necessary and the production of which has been eliminated or stringently regulated in favor of war goods?

In effect, of course, such a tax is a sales tax. In normal times there is strong opposition to any sales tax. But these are not normal times.

The most effective argument against a sales tax is the fact that it hits the little fellow, who spends most of his income, harder than it does the more prosperous who can save much or what they receive.

There are increasingly many who, disliking the sales tax on general principle, believe that the very qualities which in ordinary times, make it anti-social are the ones which now make it desirable.

But to be fair and effective, any sales tax we adopt must be a spending tax. It must encourage saving, particularly through war bonds and insurance, and the paying off of bills and mortgages, by exempting such items from any substantial tax burden.

It must rest lightly upon the actual necessities of life, notably food, clothing and shelter, for within certain bounds these are both essential and relatively plentiful.

It must bear heavily upon such items as automobiles, refrigerators, washers, etc.—manufacture of which has been virtually suspended—and upon luxuries, particularly of the import classifications.

The Treasury's idea of a spending tax was sound. Unfortunately it was hastily concocted, undigested and unrefined. But the fundamental theory is worthy of intelligent consideration.

Hitting the high spots has a habit of giving folks an awful jolt.

New Plane Flies So Fast Pilot Can't Follow His Map

YOUNGSTOWN, O. (UP) — Note to the Axis: Don't underestimate the speed of the U. S. Air Corps' new P-47 Thunderbolt. It traveled so fast recently that an army pilot landed it at the New Castle, Pa., airport thinking that he was coming in at New Castle, Ind.

Declared the pilot, "It flew so fast I could not follow maps to keep track of my position."

THE PAYOFF

NEW YORK.—Jay Hanna Dean, the eminent loudspeaker, opened his yap wider than usual following a baseball game at Sportsman's Park, St. Louis, the other afternoon, and stuck his foot smack dab into it.

Following broadcasts, commentators plug war bonds, and this was Dizzy Dean's way of doing it on this particular occasion: "I wish I had a gun and I wuz in that Europe."

Listeners immediately flooded the station with telephone calls and wires: "What's keeping you?"

RING-RUSTY after months in the Navy, Specialist First Class Freddie Cochrane didn't have a chance against Fritznie of the Many Zivics at the Garden the other night.

The best thing about the rematch was Sailor Red Cochrane's explanation: "I simply ran out of gas," he said. "Zivic had an S card."

Broadway saloon and Johnny Kilbane out of Cleveland with their hands up and chips on their shoulders.

EVEN Chicago Bears see plenty of football at Notre Dame.

Two former Bruin backs now grace the campus—Bob Snyder as freshman coach and Young Bussey as an apprentice seaman in the 30-day V-7 indoctrination program. Bussey understudied Sid Luckman.

Naturally, Snyder and Bussey are high on Angelo Bertelli, the quarterback who handles the ball and does the passing in the Bear-style T now being used by the Irish.

"With a little more experience, Bertelli could step right in and give Luckman an argument for the starting job with the Bears," says Bussey.

But any one of Notre Dame's 1941 opponents will testify that Angelo Bertelli was well seasoned a year ago.

AND now "Share Your Car" clubs for the purpose of providing transportation to football games. Michigan alumni are the first in line.

Judging by the number of cars parked outside New York tracks, raccoons haven't time for such details.

WHEN the first North American Mustang combat plane crossed the channel from England and appeared over Europe, the Nazis didn't fire at it. The plane, so the story goes, flew around the German positions unmolested and during some of the German planes to come up and give it a battle. But nothing happened.

Finally the pilot dove down and cut loose with a few bursts from his machine guns on an exposed German ground position. That brought action. Nazi anti-aircraft opened up and gave this lone pilot everything he had.

A short time later, when other Mustangs were being put through their trial flights over England, much to the test pilots' surprise the British anti-aircraft batteries opened up on the new and unfamiliar plane, sending them scurrying for cover.

It was from that experience that the R. A. F. figured out why their first Mustang flight over occupied France had been unable to stir up any air opposition.

The trouble was simply that the Mustang, known in the United States as the P-51, looks so much like the German ME-109 that it takes an expert to tell 'em apart when the planes are in the air.

It is from this similarity that a story has been spread in England and passed back to the United States that the Mustang was developed naturally that with the particular laminar flow airfoil wing called for in the basic design, it would give most efficient performance and meet British specifications best with the characteristic squared wing tips and tail surfaces which make it resemble the ME-109. So the design was approved that way.

NORTH AMERICAN insists there were never any ex-Messerschmitt designers working on the Mustang designs. There are some ex-Germans working for North American, but all of them go back to the pre-Messerschmitt era of aviation.

Some of them are men who came to the United States with Tony Fokker after the last war and stayed with the Fokker organization as it was successively merged into General Aviation Company and North American.

When the first 10 Mustangs came off the assembly line two of them were given to United States Army Air Forces for tests. Their performance was so much better than the United States Army Air Forces had anticipated that a contract was given for a considerable number of the ships under the P-51 designation.

Men Make the Navy

... THE NAVY MAKES MEN

A fairly accurate phrase describing the typical U. S. Navy or Naval Reserve sailor seems to be that "a sailor is made not born," for he has never set foot aboard a ship larger than a canoe or a row boat and doesn't know the layout of a ship from its stern. From Shipping Day (the day a new recruit is sent off to Navy Training Station) to the end of his shore leave training, the new bluejackets' days and nights are crammed full of new experiences. When finally he is assigned to active duty, "boots"—the Navy's name for the recruits derived from the regulation canvas leggings he must wear from a seasoned sailor, but he has hardened up a bit; absorbed a lot of basic sea-faring knowledge; fallen into the habit of regular living; learned to keep his quarters, equipment and person clean and "conditioned himself to react automatically to the spoken command. "Boots" on his way to the Training Station he is probably a well-educated, neat-appearing chap who had stood next to him at the recruiting station had been rejected because, of all things, he chewed his nails. Later on he will realize that the Navy doctors had a lot of experience with sailors and know a fingernail chewer is apt to be a nervous guy who is likely to go to pieces when the big guns start thundering and leave his shipmates in a bad hole. When "boots" arrives at the Training Station he is probably one of the fifteen or twenty new men who are shipping for four years in the Naval Reserve—active duty only as long as the emergency period lasts—or for a six-year enlistment in the Regular Navy. Within a couple of hours after his arrival at the Training Station "boots" has been given another dental examination, been introduced to the official Navy haircut by the "Mad Russian" as recruits call the Navy barber, been given another physical examination, packed up his civilian clothing and all personal items except his wallet, toothbrush and shaving kit for mailing home. One complete set of uniforms was issued to him and he complained a bit because they seemed loose fitting. A few weeks later he will be glad he was issued uniforms a trifle large for, unless he proves to be an outstanding exception, he will take on from five to fifteen pounds, at the same time changing a lot of that flabby civilian flesh to solid-sea-going muscle. He finds that his company barracks are spottish. The wood floor is scrubbed and waxed. If he has a hammock his barracks will have four parallel lines of gal-

State Law Is Scrapped for Duration To Aid City Transportation System

AUSTIN, Tex. (UP)—Texas ditched another state law this week, deciding to ignore it in the interest of winning the war. Effective Sept. 21, state departments at Austin were placed on staggered hours as a step to cooperate with the City of Austin in its war time transportation program. The act making the appropriation for maintenance of state departments says: "Excepting herefrom Sundays and state legal holidays, office hours of state departments shall be from 8 o'clock a. m. to 5 o'clock p. m. with one hour off at noon, provided however, that all departments shall be allowed to close at noon on Saturdays."

ment Compensation Commission, State Department of Health and State Department of Public Welfare. They will quit at 5:30 p. m. Last arrivals, at 8:45 a. m., will be the employees of the adjutant general's office, Lower Colorado River Authority, Public Roads Administration, State Railroad Commission and Selective Service headquarters. Their work will end at 5:45 p. m. The plan takes into consideration the location of the offices, some of which are in the state capitol and state office buildings, and others in rented offices in downtown business buildings. The Department of Public Safety, being situated at Camp Mabry, does not enter into the downtown traffic problem. Affected by the schedule are approximately 500 workers in the highway department, 400 in the health department, 280 in the unemployment section, 200 in the comptroller's office, 150 in the railroad commission, 112 in the State Board of Control and 110 in the State Department of Public Welfare. The other departments range from 100 down to a minimum of four in the veterans service office. Since May, fuel tax collections have been from $200,000 to $1,000,000 less than for the corresponding months of 1941. Net decrease in collections for the year was $1,404,417, after deducting refunds that are allowed for gasoline used in motor boats, in farm work or in operations not involving use of state highways.

A chief petty officer, who will act as his commander during the training period will give instructions in slinging these hammocks on the pipes. The petty officer will also explain that from now on the sailor's sea bag will be his closet until he arrives on shipboard and is assigned a personal locker. About this time a bugle, or more likely a bugle played from a recording over an amplified system, will introduce the new recruit to his Navy meal. The cafeteria system is used and each recruit will be given a metal tray divided somewhat in the manner blue-plates are divided. The tray will be heaped with bread and butter, a bowl of soup, meat and vegetables, a green salad, dessert, and a pint-sized mug of Navy coffee—called "Joe" or "Java."

SERIAL STORY LUCKY PENNY

BY GLORIA KAYE

give me a ring whenever you're ready. "Thanks for dropping in," Jim said. "We'll keep in touch with you." PERRY was thankful for Jim's invitation to dinner. A steakh at Pietro's would hit the spot. All through dinner, Penny was silent. Her thoughts were on a plan that was daring, and dangerous. It must not fail. She decided to say nothing about it to Jim until she had worked out all the details. "I'd like to come back to the office tonight, Jim. I've got a lot of work to do," she said. That night she sat so puzzled thought over her typewriter. Penny discarded page after page of copy. For more than an hour she concentrated on a short, one-page thesis. When she finished, she smiled at Jim. "I'm not going to show this to you just yet, Jim," she said. "But I want to reserve a page of advertising space in the Courier, and a spot on the front page. I'm not going to pay a thousand dollars, either. You'll just have to trust me to pay for the space."

"Your credit's good," he said. "Provided you can give me two references, both of them millionaires." "I could," said Penny, "but I won't. And don't look for this copy. It's for a circular you're going to print, when I'm ready." "Okay, Penny. The place is yours. Whenever you're ready, just shoot. Just let me in on it a little ahead of time," Jim asked. "You're the big gun behind the campaign," she told him. "Without you I couldn't do a thing. Without you, in fact, I wouldn't be here." "Without you," Jim said, sincerely, "being here would be worthwhile." THE street was bathed in moonlight. Walking beside Jim, Penny found new contentment. They talked pleasantly of many things. At her door, Jim pressed Penny's hand in his own. Her lips were inviting. He kissed her, tenderly. "Good night, Penny," he whispered. She watched him as he marched jauntily back toward the foot of the hill. His kiss would be another memory to treasure forever. Penny found Midge in bed, reading. "Hello, there," her roommate called cheerfully. "This is a fine time to be coming home. I know. You were detained at the office. You'd better think up a better excuse than that."

County Enlists Almost Half Of Quota For Navy

The two-week "Lexington Volunteers" recruiting drive, launched by the Navy Department last Monday, is expected to lend stimulus to Naval enlistments for the North Texas district during September and serve to boost the month's total past the goal of 3,600 recruits, Lieut. L. H. Rideout, Jr., officer-in-charge, announced today.

Latest figures show that nearly 2,500 enlistments have been handled at the main station in Dallas, and Lieutenant Rideout pointed out that a whirlwind campaign during the final days of September will bring in the recruits necessary to round out the month's quota of 3,600 men.

To date, total figures for the month include 15 recruits from Eastland County, where the September quota is 34.

Every man recruited during the two-week "Lexington Volunteer" campaign, prompted by the launching Sept. 26 of a new aircraft carrier bearing that name, will receive certificates which they may keep as mementoes. Lieutenant Rideout explained that 10,000 more blue-jackets than are ordinarily enlisted nationally during a two-week period are anticipated.

A recruiting officer will be in Dallas Sept. 29 - 30 and Oct. 1 to interview applicants for the Seabees, popular overseas construction regiment. Applicants should remember that physical examinations must be passed and two letters of recommendation must be presented to the Dallas recruiting station anytime before Sept. 29.

DO YOU READ THE TELEGRAM
"LET ME TELL YOU — business is terrible! My store was so empty last week that I didn't take in enough to pay my overhead. If it gets any worse I won't be able to buy anything but my morning paper!"
"YES, DEAR, IT WAS A SURPRISE. A dozen replies the very next day—I guess it's because everybody reads the Daily Telegram Want Ads."
THE man or woman who makes his daily investment in a newspaper rarely, if ever, voluntarily gives up that privilege—regardless of the necessity for watching pennies. Poor man and rich man, business man and laborer, housewife and office girl—the newspaper is their primary source of information in all fields of general interest. The foreign situation? A job? New legislation? Tomorrow's dinner? The answer can be found today, and every day in the newspaper. The newspaper is the reviewing stand from which individuals are able to analyze issues of the day. It is the modern market place for merchandise and messages.
