

SPEAKER URGES ACTION ON TAX LEGISLATION

SAYS CONGRESS SHOULD PASS IT AT SESSION

Senate Democratic Leader Joins Speaker in Favoring Enactment

WASHINGTON, June 24.—Speaker Joseph W. Byrns today favored enactment of President Roosevelt's tax redistribution program by this session of congress, even "if we have to stay here all summer."

He added, however, that it still was doubtful whether that would be done. Byrns predicted there would be little opposition to the program if it were brought to a vote in the house.

Democratic Senate Leader Joseph P. Robinson, joined with Byrns in favoring enactment this session, but some senators believed the program of higher inheritance and income taxes on the rich and larger levies on big corporations was too important and complex to be undertaken this late in the session.

Leaders hoped to clarify the situation soon by obtaining a direct statement of the president's desires. They were expected to try during the day to arrange an appointment with him. Byrns argued for action this session, so that business could know "what is ahead of it" and congress could avoid a long session next year.

WASHINGTON June 24.—Congressional leaders, believing that President Roosevelt will want congress held in session until his program on higher taxes can be acted upon, arranged to discuss the situation with him today and to proceed to consideration of the tax question this week.

Carbon Man Gets $40 Per Acre On His Berry Crop

E. H. Boyett of Carbon has had unusual success with his berry crop this year and states that if he had raised more berries he could have sold them easily. On a 12-acre patch he raised and sold 2,400 gallons of berries, which he readily sold at 20 cents a gallon, making a total income of $480 from the 12 acres, or an average of $40 per acre.

Seven Jurors Are Chosen For Lowe Trial at Eastland

The defense and prosecution expected to complete the jury in the Jep Lowe trial on charges of murder in connection with the death of Seaman Garrison, before nightfall, as seven jurors had been selected from the original venire by 2:30 Monday afternoon. Administrators of New NRA Organization

To Emily Newel Blair, head of the old consumers' advisory board, went the distinction of being the only woman named to the membership on the new NRA Advisory Board.

Right hand man to James L. O'Neill in the new NRA will be Leon C. Marshall, economist, whom President Roosevelt named head of the important new board of review.

Hoping "to save all that is good of NRA," James L. O'Neill, formerly its control officer, became head of the stopgap organization created by President Roosevelt to replace the outlawed bureau.

NEW CLUES ARE GIVEN IN MYSTERY OF MISSING TOURISTS BY FILLING STATION OWNER

SANTA FE, N. M., June 24.—Authorities seeking the "missing tourists" two East St. Louis, Ill., couples who disappeared May 22, today found their first definite clues.

Investigations along the entire stretch of road from El Paso to Albuquerque, N. M., convinced Governor Clyde Tingley and his aides that: 1—The two couples were slain. 2—Their bodies are hidden somewhere along the highway between Albuquerque and Gallup, N. M. 3—The slayer drove the car in which they had been touring from the point of slaying to Dallas, where it was abandoned.

In addition the officers obtained the first definite description of the man driving the car and who was believed to have been the slayer. All hope of finding the four persons, Mr. and Mrs. George Lorus and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Heberer, alive, was abandoned when experts found blood stains on the left door of the Lorus car.

Yesterday the Lorus car was driven from El Paso to Albuquerque. Mrs. R. S. Cole, proprietor of a filling station 40 miles southwest of Albuquerque, identified the car as one that stopped at her station and gave a complete description of the man driving it at that time.

Entomologist Says Widow Spiders Are Not More Numerous

DALLAS, Tex.—Black widow spiders are not more numerous this year than ever before, according to Roy Melvin, assistant entomologist at Dallas, but people just notice them more because their attention has so frequently been called to them.

People have read about them and when they see one they call the local newspaper or tell their friends about it, he said, where formerly they gave it scant attention.

The black widow spider is also known as the hour-glass spider. It is shiny black and is recognizable by the red, or crimson, mark on the underside of its abdomen.

On young spiders the mark resembles a bar or stripe but as the spider grows the mark gets narrower in the middle until at last it is shaped like an hour glass, Melvin said.

The male black widow spider is much smaller than the female. A full grown female may be slightly more than half an inch long. The head is usually small in comparison to the body, which may become as large as a marble.

Like many spiders, the black widow turns on her mate and eats him after a brief courtship.

The bite of the black widow spider affects human beings in varying fashions. Some persons are no more harmed than if they had been stung by a bee, Melvin said. Others find the bite exceedingly painful and to some it is fatal.

Lights In Capitol Dome Shut Off As Flood Swept Austin

AUSTIN, Tex.—For the first time in years the state capitol dome at Austin failed to shine as a beacon light for aviators and travelers coming over the hills into Austin.

When Colorado River floods inundated the Austin municipal light plant, connection was made to the privately-operated power lines, but the service was restricted.

Cutting off flood lights from the capitol dome was one of the current saving plans adopted.

Water and power also were shut off from the state capitol, resulting in much inconvenience to state departments and some discomfort to state employees.

How important water and electricity are in the every day run of state business was not realized until they were lacking.

The state Land Office, the Secretary of State's office and other departments that regularly make photostatic copies of documents were greatly handicapped.

Discomforts to state workers was considerable. Some complained bitterly. Others, like Associate Justice Frank Hawkins of the State Court of Criminal Appeals, took the situation philosophically.

He told stories of similar hardships in earlier days in Texas, so amazingly that his hearers ceased to complain.

Margaret Waley Will Go On Trial Friday, July 5th

TACOMA, Wash., June 24.—Mrs. Mararet Waley, accused accomplice in the Weyerhaeuser kidnaping, will go on trial July 5 on charges of kidnaping. Federal Judge E. E. Cushman ruled today.

Mrs. Waley remained in her jail cell in Olympia today while her attorney, Steve O'Brien of Tacoma, tried to have the trial delayed until July 9. Harmon M. Waley, her husband, was sentenced last Friday to 45 years in federal prison.

Failure to Wear 10-Gallon Hats Is Cause of Ducking

BORGER, Tex.—Because they failed to wear 10-gallon sombreros to advertise the July 4 rodeo celebration to be held here, two prominent citizens were ducked in the swimming pool.

The victims were J. C. Phillips, publisher of the Borger Daily Herald, and H. W. Price, head of the Huber Petroleum company.

The men were seized by the "Sherlock Holmes committee" and tied to a ducking stool while the band played a funeral dirge.

Senate Considers His Confirmation

MATAGORDA IS INUNDATED BY FLOODWATER

MATAGORDA, Tex., June 24.—Floodwaters of the angry Colorado river, which caused damage estimated at more than $6,000,000 during the past 10 days, poured through this city today and lost themselves in Matagorda Bay.

Matagorda was inundated today by backwater which was miles wide at the mouth of the stream. Water was eight inches deep in the residential section.

There was no danger to human life, but highways were washed out and railway schedules halted because of the high water. It was feared the highway bridge north of town would be washed away.

GATE RATE FOR GAS DISCUSSED AT A HEARING

AUSTIN, June 24.—Fairness of the 40 cent per thousand cubic feet rate charged by West Texas gas companies for domestic gas delivered at the gates of 42 West Texas communities, was subject of a hearing today before Olin Culberson, head of the gas utilities division of the railroad commission.

Culberson announced he would recommend that the commission overrule an objection that the commission had no power to fix the gate rate where the same company distributes gas to consumers.

He made a similar ruling on an objection that a gate rate is fixed, the commission also must specify the burner tip rate. The same questions are pending decisions in a case now before the third court of civil appeals.

An agreement was reached on the value of physical properties used in transmitting gas. The figure was $5,640,609, admitted by both sides to be the reproduction cost.

Web Worms May Be Removed From Pecans With Torch

SAN ANTONIO, Tex.—Web worms which have infested large numbers of pecan trees since the start of wet weather, can be exterminated by using an improvised agricultural agent.

According to Fred W. Mally, agricultural agent, a one end wrapped bag saturated with kerosene can be used to burn worms out of infested trees. Spraying is not advisable, Mally said, because the web protects the worms.

Web worms are similar to those frequently infest mulberry, and plum trees. Mally said he was not exterminated they eventually strip the entire foliage.

that reminds me...

"Cy" Perkins has the real thing all bottled up for inspection, the dreaded black widow spider, "Cy" who is the popular and aggressive manager of the Higginbotham-Bryant Lumber Company, is creating quite an interest with the specimen. It has the proverbial red hour glass spot on its belly according to the book. After a careful inspection most of us have seen lots of them. Its a good idea to stay away from spiders, snakes, bugs and ants, any kind and to swat them whenever they get in the way.

So Many times one gets up in the Congressional house and attempts to pass something or stick it around the constitution that is entirely foreign to the Constitution. Most of them are selfish ideas and because their pet bills have been interfered with by the constitution. Thank God that any time that it comes to changing the constitution it takes 48 states to say what's what.

Just one year ago the Harriman Hosiery Mills of Tennessee closed up shop and threw over 600 employees out of a job because General Hugh Johnson took away their Blue Eagle. Today the Blue Eagle is a thing of the past. Funny how things change and what a mess it causes for the moment. A little thought in the matter and it could have all been avoided—but at that its the things we try to do that get us somewhere. There is no question but what recovery is still in the making and that it will soon be complete.

College Talks Reveal New World Attitude

This being the season when hopeful young college graduates step down from the rostrum and look timorously out at a cold and faintly hostile world, it is worth while to see just what they are getting in the way of farewell advice from their mentors.

The ring of the baccalaureate sermon and the commencement address is abroad in the land again. If we listen carefully, we can get at least a cross-section of the ideas of our educators—and if the cross-section lacks unity, it is none the less interesting for that.

Dr. Harold W. Dodds, president of Princeton, warns Princeton seniors that boredom is a greater danger than the fast tempo of modern life, while Cornell's seniors are told by Dr. Julius Bixler of Harvard that "a change in the direction of some form of collectivism" seems to be on the horizon.

Dr. James B. Conant, Harvard's president, tells his graduates that "fear and apprehension are in the air and the dread of tomorrow colors the views of even some of the sanest members of the community"; and Dr. Vaughan Dabney reminds seniors at Colby that "a dangerous age develops character," adding that "conflict is better than complacency."

While all this is happening, Nicholas Murray Butler reminds Columbia University's graduates that what is wrong with the 20th century is chiefly a "fundamental and far-reaching lack of moral integrity." Dr. William Mather Lewis tells Irving School seniors that Americans are "the best half-educated people in the world," and graduates of Tufts are urged by Dr. Lee S. McColester to meditate on the world's need for "calm, sane, and constructive leadership."

Carrying the record a little farther, we find Amherst graduates hearing from Dr. Henry S. Leiper that the depression was caused "not by ignoramus, but by intelligent men who did not have the dynamic resources to keep themselves straight."

President Tyler Dennett of Williams tells his seniors that they have been the beneficiaries of "a system which did not distribute wealth in proportion to the effort of those who created it," and Dean Virginia Gildersleeve urges the young women of Barnard to mix "a certain degree of skepticism" with their natural enthusiasm toward life.

Now when you add all these together, you can detect the outlines of a change that has come over American thought in recent years. There is little of the old complacency that used to be so common on commencement platforms.

If the college graduate of 1935 doesn't realize that he is going out into a confused and drifting world, it won't be because his educators have failed to tell him about it.

Scientist Calms Fear of Dust Storms

With the threat of widespread dust storms allayed by recent heavy rains, it is comforting to sit back and listen to a less hysterical view of the situation than that shouted to the country by various experts a few weeks ago, when the menace was at its height.

Such view is that of Dr. J. W. Humphrey, of the U. S. Weather Bureau, who discounts the dire prophecies of America's great grain belt turning into a vast unproductive waste.

Only a complete climatic upheaval such as the one that occurred centuries ago to transform fertile North African lands into the Sahara could leave our midwest a desert, the scientist avers.

That transformation came through countless ages while Europe was emerging from its ice cap, and involved great shifting of air current to new courses as the ice melted their northern ranges.

Therefore, as long as the frozen north remains frozen, Humphrey declares, no radical climatic changes is scheduled for this country—and he adds that, though the ice probably will melt there some day, such happening is unlikely for the next 5000 or perhaps 10,000 years.

So it seems, if we take the brighter view, that the prophets of gloom might well seek a new field in which to play their Jeremiah roles, while government officials and farm leaders go intelligently about their task of combating erosion and other factors giving rise to the dust menace.

When a city is sick, the people look to the Chamber of Commerce to care for it. When it is doing well, they look to the Chamber of Commerce to make it still better. When things go wrong, the Chamber of Commerce is blamed for it. When it is prosperous, they give no praise. Such is life.

Seven Americans win sweepstakes prizes. Huey can wipe them off his prospect list.

The world would be a better place if the cobbler stuck his last, and the Hollywood actress to her first.

Summer Sweethearts

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Katharine, heart-broken, believes he has deserted her. She goes to New Mexico with a friend, starting secret annulment proceedings meantime.

Sally Moon, who has snared Michael into a sort of engagement, unaware of his marriage to Katharine, makes plans for a wedding. During rehearsal of the ceremony Michael's memory returns. He explains to Sally and her father what happened, sets of immediately for New Mexico. Finally he arrives at the inn where Katharine is staying.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XL

Katharine hadn't wanted, really, to go on the motor trip with the Millard's. Dirk Millard and his handsome, resourceful, managing Hilda had been very insistent, however. It was to be a two-day picnic in the mountains. Oh, but they often did it! And they were going east soon—Dirk was having a show on Fifth avenue, and this would be their last chance. Miss Strykhurst really must come. Evelyn Vincent, too. Frank Millard, Dirk's big, handsome brother, a football player at Berkeley, was going along. Frank had "fallen for" Katharine, Hilda said enthusiastically. The party would simply be spoiled if Katharine did not come.

More to please Evelyn than for any other reason, the girl had consented. Frank Millard's attentions were not unpleasant; indeed, she found herself liking the big fellow with the rich, scalloped, golden hair and the beautiful profile.

She went.

They had tents and bedding rolls; they had a de luxe equipment of cups and plates and spoons and forks, all neatly fitted into a great leather case strapped on the side of the big touring car. There was space in the trunk at the back for their few bags. It was all very gay and casual and Bohemian.

After the sun of Roanoke the green of the mountains was cool and grateful. Streams tinkled in unexpected places. Dirk broiled bacon and made coffee and Hilda asked Frank to open jars of caviar and produced salted crackers and jellies from nowhere. A de luxe picnic.

They had their sketching things and the days were full, what with trout fishing and chatter and bathing in crystal-cool rivers and playing Dirk's pet gramophone which went with him wherever he went.

"He took it with him to Russia last year," Hilda said. "Imagine, my dear, Russia!"

She talked incessantly, spreading her hands, punctuating all her sentences with gestures and lifted eye-brows and smiles. Almost, in this amusing company, Katharine forgot what the summer and the early days of autumn had been like. She enjoyed it and thought she wished it could go on forever.

Frank Millard worshipped her with his eyes and his inarticulate words. The others smiled on them benignly, as though they saw romance blossoming and were glad of it.

SLAYER TO DIE BEFORE FIRING SQUAD AFTER TRADITION OF FRONTIER DAYS

Bullets to End Utah Murderer's Years of Dodging Doom

By United Press
SALT LAKE CITY, Utah. — A crash of rifle fire in the state prison yard will put an end on June 26 to one of the strangest criminal cases in Utah's history.

For five years, Delbert Green, sentenced to die for a triple murder, has dodged death in a series of appeals, retrials, and resentencings. His last appeal finally has failed. The highest state courts have decreed that he must die before a firing squad.

Execution by rifle fire, common in Europe and Central America, is still sensational in the United States. In Utah, men condemned to death by the state get their choice of noose or firing squad.

It is nearly 10 years since a man has died before a firing squad in the United States for a civilian offense. Utah is the only state which still provides the penalty common in frontier days.

Delbert Green, killer of his wife, mother-in-law, and uncle at Farmington, Utah, refused the bullet.

"Neither," he replied laconically to the judge's question.

So the judge chose for him the firing squad, which has been the almost unanimous choice of the condemned in Utah since the state has offered it.

Preparations are complete. In the prison yard, against a stone wall, will stand a chair. Here with wrists, ankles, and elbows bound to the chair, will sit Delbert Green.

A black hood will be over his head. He will have seen nothing after entering the prison yard, not even the chair where death will come for him, nor the grim muzzles of the rifles.

Five men, whose names will never be disclosed by the state, will draw rifles at random from a stack. One gun will be loaded with blanks, the others will have regulation ball cartridges in the breach. No one will know which rifle is harmless.

This is how a man will die in Utah for murder... bound and blindfolded in a chair, unable to see the muzzles of five rifles in which death lurks... He is Delbert Green, left, confessed and convicted murderer of his wife, mother-in-law, and uncle... Not for 10 years has there been a civilian execution like this in Utah, the only state which now provides the firing squad.

The five executioners will go by a guarded passage to a doorway that looks out across the prison yard at the stone wall. Through slits in a temporary canvas covering, they will see Green seated in his plain wooden chair. A "target" set in place by the prison physician will mark his heart.

Through the slits in the canvas the five men will aim at the "heart target." At a given word the five will fire. Four bullets will plunge into Delbert Green's body at almost point blank range.

The prison physician will make a brief examination to be sure the bullets have done their work. The only peacetime firing squad carried out its grim mission.

drinking coffee from an enameled cup. Her fair hair was ruffled; there was a deep apricot on her rounded cheeks. The pale girl who had alighted from the eastern train a few weeks ago could scarcely have been recognized in this bronzed Aurora.

"Fun! It's been marvelous," she said simply to the blond giant at her feet. "I never in my life had such a glorious time."

"Honestly do you mean it?" Frank Millard wanted to know. "I mean it's swell if you do, because we do this all the time and you're staying forever, aren't you?"

"Oh, I don't know about that!" She was laughing, but some inner terror for an instant darkened her eyes and chilled her smile.

It was sweet to be admired, to be the center of this agreeable group. Why couldn't this be enough for her? Why should her thoughts go arking back to one man, out of all the world, who had flout her?

Frank drove on the homeward drive and the three insisted that she sit beside him in the front seat. Hilda was heavily tactful about this; Katharine didn't mind. They were nice people and they liked her and showed it. She glowed in the atmosphere of admiration and easy laughter. Frank didn't talk much—he wasn't given to idle chatter—but every now and then he gave her an eloquent look.

He had to give most of his attention to the driving, however. There were traitorous dips in this canon road. Sometimes a sheer sheer drop appeared on their left without an instant's warning. But Frank had a sure hand on the wheel. Katharine wasn't afraid. They took the journey in leisurely fashion. It was the way, Hilda explained, they liked to travel. That night they camped on the edge of the desert under the stars. Frank had his guitar with him—he'd been in a college orchestra—and he played "Parlex moi d'armour" with a good deal of feeling. The stars and the music and the campfire all more an unforgettable scene.

Life would be so simple, Katharine argued with herself, if one could follow the line of least resistance. She might, for example, marry Frank Millard and bear him fine children and love him quite uncritically and make a sort of picnic of existence. But she had muddled up her life before she met him. She liked him a lot—he was as likable as a big Newfoundland or a friendly child. But love? Well, she had known that once; it hadn't been exactly pleasant. It had been all dizzy heights and awful depths. She would try to steer clear of it in the future.

All of this she thought as Frank strummed the plaintive music and the smoke of Dirk's and Hilda's cigarettes curled toward the red glow of the campfire. Evelyn Vincent was asleep, propped rather uncomfortably against the seat cushions of the car. Presently they all untied their bedding rolls and said yawning good nights. The women had the tent. Dirk and Frank arranged their beds by the fire.

Katharine did not sleep for a long time. A mod of wakefulness was upon her and, for the life of her, sleep would not come. She could see now great, unwinking blue stars through the tent flap. Miss Vincent snored, and Hilda stirred uneasily in her sleep.

The music echoed in Katharine's brain.

"Speak to me of love..."

After a long time her eyes closed and she breathed easily and quietly. There were tears on her cheeks.

No one was moving about when she awoke. Dressing hastily, running her ivory comb through her flyaway curls, she glanced out to see that Frank and his brother lay in the relaxed and rather touching abandon of persons deeply asleep.

Restless, Katharine strolled about. She needed exercise, she told herself. Before the sun came up she would have a brief walk. Just as far as that mesquite bush in the middle distance...

She walked along, absorbed in her thoughts. Tomorrow she would be back at Silencia; the pleasant, easy life would begin again, with sun-drenched days filled with sketching and music and bridge, and the books in the library of the adobe house. It was not a bad life, but for a young, restless, eager girl it was not everything.

She glanced over her shoulder. Perhaps she had better be turning back. Someone would waken and miss her, perhaps be alarmed. But when she looked in the direction from which she had come she could see nothing of the car or the peaked tent or the sleeping men. Her heart beating a little faster, she whirled, increasing her pace. Her feet, in their russet boots, squeaked in the sand, slipping with every step. Oh, but she'd see them all in a minute. She would hear Frank's hearty laugh and smell the smoke of the breakfast fire and the god scent of boiling coffee.

She walked as quickly as she could, shielding her eyes from the rising sun. That was east... and certainly she had walked west when she started. Or had she?

Silence and sand and cactus. A gopher that hopped out from the shadow of a bush and stared at her curiously. Silence and a wheeling red ball in the heavens.

Katharine was lost.

Michael went up to the great iron bell that dangled between two redwood posts and pulled the rope vigorously. A dark-skinned girl in a print frock appeared, stroking her crisp apron and smiling at him with a flash of dazzling white teeth.

"Miss Strykhurst? But she has gone..."

His heart sank like lead in his breast. Gone? Gone where?

The dark-haired maid did not seem to know. But she would call Miss Daisy Ingram. Miss Daisy would tell the gentleman.

Michael found himself in a cool, low-ceiled room with white walls and niches in which curious bright figures appeared. Over the polished floor the heels of Miss Daisy's came tapping.

"A friend of Miss Katharine's? Well, how very nice." She beamed at the young man. "They've gone to the mountains. A matter of several hundred miles, I believe. You will wait until they return?"

Michael said, rather grimly: "If you can tell me the way I'll follow them."

The Rehabilitation Clients Made Rapid Progress in May

AUSTIN.—With the aid of 78 rural home supervisors, Texas rural rehabilitation clients in May made rapid progress toward permanent self-maintenance, according to a report issued last week by the rural department of the Texas relief commission.

Home supervisors made 5,548 home visits, and interviewed 3,605 clients in county relief offices, giving instruction in canning, gardening, and other features of home economy. These visits and interviews benefitted 14,515 families representing 70,377 individuals.

Outstanding was the home canning program conducted by the home supervisors in an effort to see that rural families provide themselves with sufficient food for next winter. From 3,683 gardens, 21,005 quarts of vegetables were canned, in addition to 11,307 quarts of fruits and 294 cans of meat. The food supply was further enlarged by 1,743 quarts of preserves, 2,077 quarts of jellies, 715 pounds of stored vegetables, 269 quarts of pickles, and 20 quarts of grauel. All conservation of food was done in the homes of the clients, special portable canners being carried from house to house by the supervisors.

Surpluses in milk, eggs, and garden products were exchanged in many instances for cans, clothes, fruit jar lids and other necessities.

On rainy days when full time could not be devoted to food conservation or yard improvements, women in the families devoted their energies to production and repair of mattresses, pillows, bed spreads, sheets, pillow cases and garments.

Yard improvements included cleaning, fencing yards and gardens, planting shrubbery and flowers.

In addition to the above programs, rural supervisors gave assistance in uses of food, meal planning, refrigeration budgeting, repairing equipment, care of clothing, and helped clients add the following items to their home equipment: cook stoves, utensils, sealers, tables, chairs, sewing machines, washing machines, beds, springs, mattresses, pillows, quilts, smoothing irons, tubs, wash boilers.

Senate Secretary Is Invited to Visit "Where West Ends"

By United Press
AUSTIN.—Bob Barker, secretary of the Texas senate, having official correspondence with the secretary of the California senate, sent with it an invitation for the Californian to visit him in Austin.

Barker added that if the visit were out of session time he would be found at Fort Worth, "where the west begins."

The reply brought an invitation to Barker to visit the Californian at Sacramento in session time, or after sessions, at Balboa, "where the west ends."
