

Harlow lawyers charge testimony altered

Special to The Pampa News

LUBBOCK — A gas company claim of oil well tampering spawned countercharges of deliberate testimony altering Monday as the Dorchester-Harlow trial entered its third week.

Exchanges were lively at times in the 99th District Court in Lubbock as attorneys battled during the second day of testimony by a petroleum expert.

The expert, Phil Moses of CORE Laboratories, continued to insist that oil had been injected into two Harlow Corporation wells in Section 117 south of Pampa.

Harlow attorneys tried to point out inconsistencies in Moses' testimony and questioned why and how he changed his deposition only hours before he began testifying Friday.

Dorchester Gas Producing Co. is suing Harlow for $500,000 in damages and a halt to what it claims is production of its gas in the West Panhandle Field. Harlow contends it is lawfully producing casinghead gas with oil.

Moses was hired by Dorchester to test two Harlow wells this summer. He said those wells were producing gas identical to Dorchester's gas well on the same property — that is, free gas apart from oil.

He said he found strong evidence that the oil and gas in Harlow's wells were not flowing together and came from different sources. Unlike what he would expect, Moses said oil in Harlow's wells was devoid of lighter hydrocarbons.

Lead Harlow attorney Broadus Spivey objected to Moses giving more answers than asked for by Dorchester lead counsel Robert Templeton. At one point, Moses remarked to the jury, "If you have any questions, I'll be happy to answer them."

Moses reiterated Friday's testimony that the oil he tested definitely was induced into the wells from the surface. But he had no explanations as to how, only speculation.

Spivey zeroed in on the change Moses made in his deposition. The modification was slipped under Moses' motel room door the night before Moses took the stand. It had been notarized by Susan McKissick, a member of Dorchester's legal team.

In the July 18 deposition, Moses said he had no evidence that extraneous oil had been injected into Harlow well No. 1. He said Monday he reversed that statement based on new data from a nearby Phillips well and previously unavailable analysis of a sample from Harlow well No. 2.

For emphasis, Spivey ripped the original copy of the modification from Moses' deposition and introduced it into evidence, sparking a mild objection from Templeton.

The No. 2 sample was taken June 12, Moses noted. He estimated the oil was added sometime between May 15 and June 1. The only motive he could think of was to alter his test results, he said.

Under cross examination by Pat Long, representing the lease owners, Moses indicated that all the samples from both wells basically were similar, except the June 12 sample from No. 2. He also conceded he had access to the Phillips data beforehand.

Long tried to show that fingerprint tests indicated the oil in the Phillips well was more comparable to Harlow's oil than it was to other wells tested. But Moses insisted the oil was not native to Harlow's wells, although it was Panhandle crude oil.

Spivey suggested it would be stupid to think someone would "load a well with oil that did not match properly." Moses, responding to Templeton, said only a scientist would be able to tell the difference in oil types.

"Was Dorchester stupid or lucky?" Templeton asked. "Lucky," Moses replied.

Long brought up previous testimony Moses made at Federal Energy Regulatory Commission hearings currently under way in Washington, D.C.

Before his deposition was taken, Moses said the oil was put into Harlow's wells for fracturing purposes. Moses later said in his deposition that it was not fracturing oil but then did not change his opinion at a subsequent FERC hearing.

Harlow attorneys tried to show that findings from samples of the No. 2 well were not applicable to No. 1. They argued the changes in the oil were made by heat and weathering caused by pumping and bailing.

Harlow's position is that it is unrealistic to expect that extraneous oil sitting in a well bore at least 12 days would retain its original characteristics and not mix with existing oil and gas.

Moses explained to Templeton that the well's apparatus was not in operation after he took several of the samples.

The trial recessed early this afternoon and resumes Wednesday morning.

Hearing on budget set for Aug. 28

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

Pampa city commissioners today set Aug. 28 at 9:30 a.m. as the date for a public hearing on the proposed operating budget for fiscal year 1984-1985.

The proposed budget of approximately $8.3 million represents about an 8.9 percent increase over the 1983-1984 budget, City Manager Mack Wofford said. Included in the budget is an 8 percent property tax hike and a $1 each increase in water, sewer and waste collection rates to raise an additional $600,000 about this year's budget of $7.7 million, he noted.

The budget hearing will be held in conjunction with the city commission's regular meeting. Also slated for a public hearing that date is a rate increase request by Energas.

City Attorney Don Lane discussed a proposed litter ordinance submitted for consideration by the city from the Municipal Committee of Clean Pampa, Inc. Lane said the committee, with Kirk Duncan as chairman, has been reviewing city ordinances for possible revisions to strengthen enforcement against littering problems throughout the city.

Lane said the recommendations noted specific problems to be addressed in city ordinances and suggested consolidation of some sections and clarification of terms. The committee also suggested revision of fines and penalties for violators of the litter ordinance.

Though he recognized the good intentions of the suggestions, Lane said some of the recommendations "would be very difficult to enforce," especially those requiring definite proof of responsibility for violations in some areas where several people could be using the same trash containers or where several people could be traveling in a vehicle from which litter is tossed.

But he said many of the recommendations were worthwhile and concerned problems needing to be solved by better enforcement.

He said further studies need to be made to develop a final ordinance proposal. Mayor Calvin Whatley appointed Commissioners David McDaniel and E. L. "Smiley" Henderson to meet with Lane and the Clean Pampa committee to develop a final proposal to be considered at the next regular meeting.

Duncan said the committee wanted the input from the commission and appreciated the further study with commission members.

In other business, the commission approved on first reading an ordinance prohibiting parking on the east side of Somerville Street south about 200 feet from Francis Street. Public Works Director Allyn Moore said the change will affect only about four or five parking spaces near the new exits from the Citizens Bank and Trust Co.'s new drive-up facility.

Chamber board OKs drive for new offices

The Pampa Chamber of Commerce board of directors today unanimously approved a drive to raise the money to build new chamber offices and community meeting rooms.

Chamber of Commerce President Marion John said the project "will have an impact on the chamber and the community for some time to come."

Ed Myatt, past chamber president and the organizer of the project, explained the proposal to the board.

The chamber of commerce needs a new building because it doesn't have enough space in the present offices in the Hughes Building, Myatt said. He said civic organizations also need more space for meetings.

Myatt said a new headquarters for the chamber would "revitalize" the organization and help promote Pampa.

"We need something the community can look up to," he said.

Myatt said those who will work to raise money for the project should follow the example of the organizing committee for the Los Angeles Olympics.

"We need to go for the gold," he said.

The project director said the group needs to raise $350,000 to pay for the new building. The money will be raised through private donations, he said, including donations from business and industry, civic organizations, chamber members and individuals. Donations to the building fund could be spread out over two or three years, according to the discussion.

Myatt started the drive with a personal check for $10,000. Funds will be deposited with Phil Gentry at First National Bank.

The proposed 50 x 100-foot, concrete-panel building would house chamber offices, two rooms where local organizations could meet and a small kitchen. The building could be expanded later to include a dining hall for up to 250 people, Myatt said. A location for the proposed building hasn't been selected, he added.

He said the group expects to raise the money in time for the chamber to move into the new headquarters by 1985. The slogan for the fund drive will be "We'll Arrive in '85."

FATAL ACCIDENT—Pampa firefighters and witnesses look at the remains of a 1974 Pontiac Grand Prix, burned in a freak accident east of Skellytown Monday that took the life of 4-year-old Brandy Lynn Harris of Hamlin. The child's stepfather, Anthony Coffee of Hamlin, suffered second degree burns to his arms and hands when he tried to save her from the burning vehicle. DPS investigators say the car ran over a truck brake drum lying in the roadway and burst into flames when the drum ruptured the gasoline tank. (Staff photo)

4-year-old girl killed in freak accident

Despite the efforts of her frantic mother and stepfather to save her, a 4-year-old Hamlin child died in a freak accident Monday on Texas Highway 152 near Skellytown.

The child, Brandy Lynn Harris, was pronounced dead at the scene, 1.8 miles east of Skellytown, by Grand County Justice of the Peace Buddy Davis of Panhandle.

Her stepfather, Anthony Dean Coffee, 23, of Hamlin, was in satisfactory condition with second-degree burns on his arms and hands early today at Coronado Community Hospital, said spokeswoman Linda Haynes.

A dispatcher from the Amarillo Department of Public Safety said today that a 1974 Pontiac Grand Prix, driven by Coffee, was westbound on Texas 152. The vehicle apparently struck a truck brake drum lying in the roadway, rupturing the vehicle's gasoline tank and causing it to burst into flames.

L.M. Scribner of Pampa, an eyewitness to the accident, said he had just crossed the bridge east of Skellytown shortly after 12:30 p.m. when he saw a large piece of pipe lying in the highway. He said the pipe looked like a piece of 6- or 8-inch pipe with a collar on one end that had been cut in half. Scribner swerved to avoid the pipe and continued up the hill, and the Grand Prix was about 100 yards behind him, he said. After a moment, Scribner looked into his rearview mirror and saw the Grand Prix burst into flames.

The driver of the Grand Prix pulled to the side of the road about three-quarters of the way up the west side of the hill, he said. The occupants — a man, woman and two children — escaped from the burning vehicle.

Scribner said the woman attempted to pull a third child from the vehicle, but for some reason was unable to get the child out. The man then tried to pull the child from the flaming automobile, but a ball of fire burst from the vehicle, enveloping the man. Scribner said it appeared that the child was caught inside the vehicle and could not be pulled free.

Scribner said a man who came up on the accident in a company vehicle used the company radio to call for the fire department and ambulance. Members of the Skellytown ambulance service were called about 12:50 p.m. and transported the burned man, later identified as Anthony Coffee; his wife, Theresa, 22, and their two children, Misty, 3, and Michael, five months, all of Hamlin. Mrs. Coffee and her two children were treated and released from Coronado Community Hospital.

Skellytown firefighters had controlled the fire by the time Pampa firefighters arrived on the scene, said Charles Elliott of the Pampa Fire Department.

The fire destroyed the Grand Prix, which was surrounded by puddles of melted metal.

DPS Trooper Danny Pierce said early today that before the accident, two workmen working near the highway saw a semi-tractor truck lose the brake drum. Based on a description of the vehicle and with two possible names that were on the truck, DPS Trooper Roland McGill of Panhandle located the truck and the driver.

The driver, not identified by Pierce, told McGill that he was driving up the hill east of Skellytown when he heard a loud noise. Thinking he had a flat tire, he stopped the truck on the hill to look. Finding nothing wrong, he continued his trip. It was not until McGill told him of the Coffees' accident and the two inspected the truck that the driver found he had lost a brake drum. Pierce said losing the brake drum was an unfortunate accident, and no charges will be filed.

Luis Flores, DPS trooper out of Pampa, investigated the accident, aided by DPS troopers Pierce, Richard Smart of Borger and McGill.

Funeral arrangements for Brandy Harris are pending at Ed Brown and Sons Funeral Home in Borger.

Lake opponents want people represented

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

WHEELER — It was only a routine post-election meeting to canvass ballots, but the Wheeler County Courthouse was packed Monday as the Wheeler County Water Board confirmed the results of the Sweetwater Creek Reservoir election.

A group of residents who opposed construction of the lake gave the board petitions threatening to oust board members if they did not represent their constituencies.

By a vote of 1,128 to 1,095, Wheeler County voters passed a proposition authorizing the construction and local support of the Sweetwater Creek Reservoir, a proposed 2,500-acre lake to be built seven miles east of Wheeler, north of Highway 152. However, voters rejected the levy of a maintenance tax by a vote of 968 to 1,112, according to original returns.

Upon canvassing the election results, board members found a five-vote discrepancy in precinct 4 (Allison) for the second proposition, which changed the final vote for the maintenance tax to 968 for and 1,107 against.

"And this is all we're going to do at this meeting," board chairman Pete Burton told residents as he looked over the agenda for the Monday meeting. He added that any further action would be taken at the board's next meeting in September or at a called meeting.

Although the dam construction proposition was approved, opponents say that it only passed in two precincts in Shamrock and was soundly defeated in the other seven precincts. As a result, they claim, favorable votes by board members from other parts of the county, including Wheeler and Mobeetie, do not reflect "the will of the people."

Opponents gave board members Dan Macina of Shamrock, Kent Sims and Pete Burton of Wheeler and Melvin May of Mobeetie petitions noting that if they do not vote "in accordance with the mandate of those he is appointed to represent," the opponents will ask the agencies that appointed the members to replace them.

Opponent Tom Puryear said that one board member, Woodrow Sims of Shamrock, would not be given a petition because Shamrock voters passed both resolutions.

The Wheeler County Water District was established in 1983 by the Texas Legislature. Last August, Wheeler County voters approved the establishment of the board, the members of which are appointed by the different city and county governments.

The petitions are addressed to each of the four board members in question and the city or county board that appointed them. Each notes that the proposition was "soundly defeated" in their district and that opponents protests actions taken by the board, which they think are in "contravention to the wishes of the voters he was

McLean board approves budget

By CATHY SPAULDING
Staff Writer

McLEAN — With the state requiring teacher pay hikes and curriculum changes, school officials here are looking at a possible 6 cent per $100 valuation tax increase to support its tight budget.

Trustees with the McLean Independent School Board approved the school's budget for the 1984-85 school year at their regular meeting Monday. A public hearing for the budget is set for 5 p.m. Aug. 30. The tax rate may not be set until September or October.

At $1,205,637, the 1985 budget shows a 7.14 percent increase over 1984's budget of $1,119,593.

"It will have to be amended," observed McLean ISD superintendent Jack Rutherford, noting that the school has not yet received confirmed figures from the Texas Education Agency. In two education reform measures passed earlier this year, the Texas Legislature requires changes in school curricula and teacher pay scales.

According to business manager Shirley Johnson, this year's increase is less than in the past.

"This year there is less than 10 percent increase in the budget, which normally rises 13 percent each year," she said.

The bulk of the budget's increases comes in salary increases. Johnson reported that all school employees except the administration will have a 14 percent across - the - board salary increase.

Teacher salaries rose $56,000 to a total faculty payroll of $466,000. Salaries for the two principals rose to $65,400. Substitute teacher salaries are budgeted at $7,000.

Despite the salary increases, most other expenses remained at last year's rate or were cut.

Anticipating $414,593 in state aid and about $60,000 from such revenue as gate receipts, cafeteria charges, city tax funds, interest and federal reimbursements, Johnson figures a total revenue of $474,943, before taxes. She said that the school needed to collect at least $730,694 in local ad valorem taxes to pay the estimated $1.25 million expenses.

The school also faces an additional $15,000 for special education expenses that were not included in the original figures.

The total 1984 McLean ISD taxable value was $78,875,236, "only $800,000 more than last year," Johnson said.

"The state recommended that we not set the tax rate until September," Johnson said, warning that the district may face a large tax increase.

appointed to represent" and are in "blanket disregard of his constituency."

Such action, the petition says, are grounds for removal.

"Section 5-i of the legislation which established the Wheeler County Water District states in plain terms: 'Each board member shall relay the mandate of the people to the board,'" Puryear said, adding that the board is broken down into five districts with a board member representing each district.

The petition asks the Wheeler County Commissioners, the cities of Mobeetie and Wheeler to replace their appointees if they fail to vote according to the "mandate of the people."

"This is not a recall petition," he said, noting that the petition calls on the board members to "publicly acknowledge the mandate and declare that he will take all actions to effect the will of the people."

May looked at the petition and said, "I don't know what it means other than that they are going to try to remove us."

"The people I talked to were all for it. I guess the opponents never did talk to me."

Burton also defended his votes on the board.

"I was appointed by the city of Wheeler, where I served for 18 years," he said. "The city asked me to serve on the board."

"The people should be the ones to decide and they did."

Residents and board members are still not certain what the split in the vote tallies mean. Lake supporters say that the passage of the first proposition shows that residents want the lake to be built.

Burton figured that voters were not sure what the maintenance tax proposition was about.

Opponents say that the clear vote was against the maintenance tax, not for the lake.

Board member Kent Sims said that the board was waiting to hear from the bonding attorney before taking further action.

have it debt - free when it's handed over to the chamber of commerce," Myatt told the board members.

"It's going to require the cooperation of everybody in town to do it," he added.

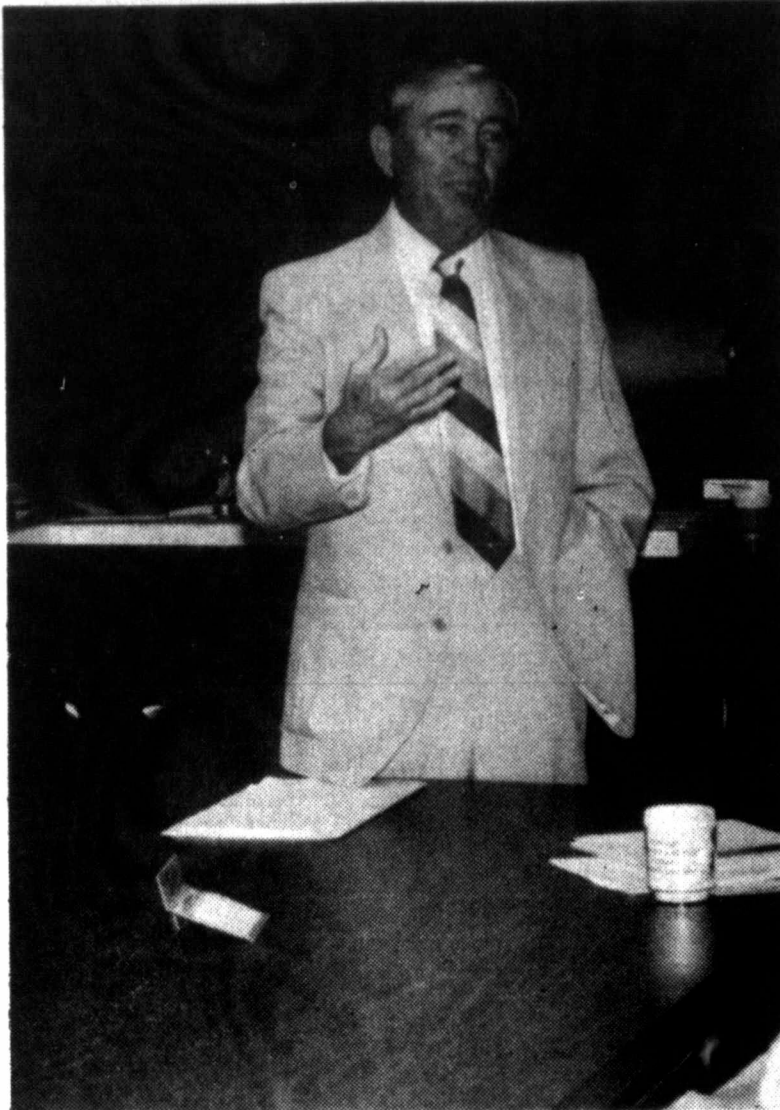

He said the new building would be an asset to the Pampa chamber's 700 members. He said the Panhandle's second - largest town should "act like it" in its promotion.

The fund drive for the new building will be explained to the chamber members at a special luncheon on August 28. Fund drive committee members will be selected, and the campaign will begin after the meeting of the membership.

After Myatt's presentation, all of the board members present announced support for the project. Board member Reed Echols, though, pointed out that the United Way campaign kicks off next month and could conflict with the drive to raise money for the building.

Myatt said it's never a good time to raise money, but he expects enough support to build the new chamber headquarters.

"I think the community can afford it, and I think the time is now," he said.

Lefors OKs property tax increase

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

LEFORS — Lefors City Council members approved a 3 - percent increase in its property tax rate at its regular meeting Monday night.

The new tax rate will be 31 cents per $100 valuation, up 1 cent from the 30 - cent rate approved last year.

The new rate is expected to generate only about $700 in additional income this year, Mayor R.B. White said.

State law permits the 3 - percent increase to be passed without having public hearings.

Council members said the new income still was not enough to meet all the needs of the city.

"We're just about half" the tax rate for other comparable - sized cities in the area, the mayor said.

Councilman John Ashford said last year's increase, which amounted to about a 275 percent hike from the previous year, did not generate the funds it had been expected to do.

He said the increase had been planned to bring about $17,000 in property tax revenue into the city's coffers. But exemptions granted to residents over age 65 eliminated much of the expected increase, resulting in only about $2,000 extra revenue for the year, from about $9,000 to $11,000.

Councilman Walter Elliott said there was "no way we can stay here with nothing, and that's what we've been doing."

But while noting the need to find additional revenue for future projects and needs, the councilmen settled on the 3 - percent hike for this year.

White said he had received a letter from the Gray County Appraisal District on assessed property values for the city this year. The district reported Lefors had total appraised and assessed property valuations of $7,592,693, with a taxable value of $7,144,655.

The tax rate was adopted last night to allow the GCAD to send out city tax statements.

In related revenue matters, the council decided stricter enforcement of tax and utility collections needed to be followed.

The mayor said he and City Secretary Yvonne Pittman had been working to get delinquent taxes paid. Other efforts are being made to collect on delinquent water and gas utility bills.

Elliott said the city needed to be tougher on cutting off utilities for past due bills. He said the billing cards noted that utilities would be cut off if the bills were not paid by the 25th of the month.

"We can't continue to pay interest on money people are continually owing us," he said. He noted some people can pay large phone bills "but thumb their noses at utility bills."

Ashford said if the city had a regulation requiring utility shut-offs for late bills, "let's enforce it."

White said some allowance should be made for those who have legitimate problems that delay payments. "There are times you have to make exceptions," he said. But he said some of the people currently delinquent had been consistently delinquent for years.

"I don't think that many of them are real exceptions," Ashford said.

The council recommended that Water Superintendent Mike Steele be instructed to cut off utilities if bills are not paid by the 25th of the month unless other arrangements are made by the city office.

In other matters, councilmen said there were too many problems in the city with young people and other residents using three - wheelers and motorcycles illegally on city streets.

The mayor said he had instructed City Marshal Gary McFall to issue no more warnings. "We've warned them enough," White said. "We've got kids not even 12 years old driving up and down the streets" on three - wheelers.

Other council members agreed, saying "there's too much of that going on." Derrell McCathern said. "We've got to get some place for the kids to go instead of running up and down the city streets."

McCathern said he had noted other problems, such as people parking in the middle of the streets to chat and young people drinking in the open at public places at night.

Mike Shedeck also complained about the use of three - wheelers on the street, noting his children had almost been run over by some. He agreed something should be done to get the problem under control.

Council member Betty Hannon said parents ought to make efforts to watch their children and "cut down on a lot of this."

Two equipment companies representatives appeared before the council to discuss purchase or lease agreements on a new backhoe for the city.

Alan Hagemier of A and E Equipment Liquidators at Borger said he had looked at the city's current backhoe and said it definitely could use replacement. He said a government agency could buy a new one at a great discount. In addition, a new backhoe would have less maintenance problems to contend with, he said.

Lonnie Carter of Decker Equipment Co. from Amarillo said his firm could arrange a lease purchase agreement. The city would not have to appropriate total purchase price all at once, he said, only having to appropriate lease payments for a year at a time. He said the city would have the option of selling the backhoe after a year if not satisfied with it.

The council advised both representatives to submit bids according to specifications the city will provide.

Gene Barber, engineering consultant from Pampa, said he expected to hear about the city's water grant application for Texas Community Development Program funds.

Mattox: Policies similar to ones refunded still for sale

AUSTIN (AP) — Several insurance companies sell policies "very similar" to one that resulted in the largest consumer restitution payment in state history, Attorney General Jim Mattox says.

Mattox on Monday mailed out $10.2 million in refunds from the settlement of a lawsuit involving about 2,000 Texans who bought the policy from the Academy Life Insurance Co. of Valley Forge, Pa.

"We consider to be an unconscionable policy, a policy that charged elderly citizens an extremely high premium," Mattox said.

The attorney general's office obtained the settlement in May, based on an investigation into marketing practices used to sell an insurance policy known as the Estate Conservation Plan, officials said.

According to Mattox, the first-year premium for the policy was so high that many buyers wouldn't recover their investment.

Mattox said a 74-year-old man was charged a first-year premium of $5,000 for a life insurance policy with a face value of $6,000. His second-year premium to keep the policy in force was $1,665, Mattox said, so that a year and a day after buying the policy, the man had paid $6,665.

Mattox said the marketing was aimed at elderly people, many of whom didn't understand what they were buying.

Lyndon L. Olson Jr., chairman of the State Board of Insurance, said five other companies are being investigated for selling similar policies.

"Just as we presented the Academy case to the attorney general, I anticipate we will be sending others to him in the future for prosecution as the facts warrant," Olson said.

Assistant Attorney General William Goodman said the policy was sold as an estate plan which would allow the buyer to avoid some inheritance taxes.

"What was not disclosed was the entire first-year premium went into life insurance. Ninety-nine percent (of buyers) thought they were buying an investment annuity; 99 percent did not know they were buying insurance," Goodman said.

Mattox said his office was able to pursue Academy Life because a provision of the policy was not approved by the State Board of Insurance.

However, approximately 20 other companies offer "very similar" policies which appear to have been approved for sale by the board, Mattox said.

Doggett-Graham debates unsettled

AUSTIN (AP) — Republican U.S. Senate candidate Phil Gramm and Democrat Lloyd Doggett have accepted invitations to debate — but at different sessions.

Gramm on Monday said he has accepted a September debate invitation from two San Antonio groups. Doggett said he has accepted invitations to six sessions in October and that he is willing to debate Gramm in the Republican's hometown.

The two are battling for the seat being vacated by retiring GOP Sen. John Tower.

Gramm said he accepted an invitation to participate in a debate proposed for Sept. 11 by the San Antonio Bar Association and Bexar County Medical Society.

"I believe this debate will provide an excellent forum for the people of San Antonio and of Texas to see the clear-cut differences between the positions of Mr. Doggett and myself on the key issues facing Texas and the nation," Gramm said.

Spokesman Bill Collier said

Doggett had declined the San Antonio invitation a week ago because he had scheduled a fund-raiser for that night.

"Here we are trying to schedule meaningful debates in the month of October — when people want to hear about the campaign — and they accept the only one we have had to turn down," Collier said. "I have no doubt they knew we declined it."

Gramm said he thought the San Antonio session would enable him "to contrast my support for a balanced budget amendment (to the Constitution) and opposition to increased taxes to his (Doggett's) opposition to a balanced budget amendment and support for more taxes."

Gramm also said he wanted to compare "my support of and his opposition to increased military preparedness and our stand on traditional Texas values."

Doggett has said he wants a series of debates beginning shortly after Labor Day and continuing until the Nov. 6 election.

He said Monday he would debate Gramm between Sept. 15 and Sept. 30 in Gramm's hometown, College Station, "in his mother's living room if he likes," because Gramm has been reluctant to debate except during September.

"I intend to smoke Phil Gramm out. I will debate Phil before any credible news organization that is willing to broadcast the debate to the people of Texas," Doggett said.

"Phil Gramm assumes that during that month (October), the people of Texas will forget his abysmal record — a record of callousness and insensitivity to the needs of ordinary Texans, while serving at the beck and call of selfish special interests," Doggett charged.

Damaged ship to sail to Galveston

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — The ruptured British tanker that spilled some 2.27 million gallons of oil into the Gulf of Mexico will sail Thursday into Galveston Bay, where it will be readied for inspection, officials said.

The vessel Alvenus will be emptied of any explosive chemicals once it arrives in the bay, then will move to Galveston for an investigators' inspection and repairs, Coast Guard officials said in an article published in the Houston Chronicle today.

Coast Guard spokesmen said four tugboats, a salvage ship, a Coast Guard cutter and helicopters will escort the Alvenus, which ruptured July 30 about 11 miles off Cameron, La.

Meanwhile, about 130 workers were cleaning t oil-tainted sand along Galveston Island's east end Monday, said Scott Simpson, head of Simpson Environmental Services.

U.S. Coast Guard spokesman James Tanner said beaches on the island's west end, which received the brunt of the spill, had "hot spots" where a new blanket of oil comes in with each high tide.

Ed Vicker, a Houston attorney representing the Alvenus' owners, told the Chronicle that costs of the cleanup had reached "a little under $2 million" by Saturday.

The ship's owners have assumed responsibility for the cleanup, which is expected to take weeks, but have petitioned a court to limit their liability to $3.8 million.

Tax plank is still GOP platform centerpiece

DALLAS (AP) — Republican platform writers are arguing over the final shape of a plank stronger than President Reagan wanted but not as tough as conservatives sought that "categorically" rejects tax increases to shrink huge federal budget deficits.

A proposed draft of the GOP platform was released late Monday in advance of the start today of a line-by-line review and revision of the document by the 106-member Platform Committee. The panel is expected to wrap up its work later this week and offer the platform for ratification Aug. 21 at the Republican National Convention.

The document largely reflects positions Reagan has espoused over the last 3½ years and sidesteps many issues over which Republicans are divided. In contrast with the 1980 platform, the proposed document omits calls for military superiority over the Soviet Union, abolition of the departments of Energy and Education and insistence that future judicial appointments "respect the sanctity of human life."

The tax plank, the focus of a battle among the White House and Republican conservatives and moderates, is intended to provide Reagan with campaign ammunition against the claim of Democratic challenger Walter Mondale that tax increases are inevitable next year regardless of who wins the election because of deficits nearing $170 billion.

"Democrats claim deficits are caused by Americans' paying too little in taxes," the draft GOP platform said. "Nonsense. We categorically reject proposals to increase taxes in a misguided effort to balance the budget."

Arguing that "Americans are better off than they were four years ago and they're still improving," the proposed document said the most important goal was to keep the economic recovery going.

"We therefore oppose any attempts to increase taxes which would harm the recovery and reverse the trend to restoring control of the economy to individual Americans," it said.

The categorical rejection goes beyond the statement Reagan had urged the platform writers to accept, that he would go along with a tax increase only as "a last resort."

At the same time, the proposed plank was not as toughly worded as the language advocated by Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., who told platform writers Monday, "we must emphatically and unambiguously close the door upon tax increases, however defined, both now and in the foreseeable future."

Kemp said his language "leaves the door obviously open for any president under unforeseeable circumstances" to raise taxes, but added: "There is no reason I can see — and it can be said unambiguously — to raise taxes."

Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., urged similar language, arguing that Republicans should tell Americans "we ain't going to pass tax increases unless there's a major national emergency."

All sides agreed that a compromise would be worked out acceptable to the White House and platform writers, avoiding a floor fight at the convention.

"We don't want to do anything the president would have to disavow or publicly repudiate," said Sen. Robert Kasten, R-Wis., chairman of the economic progress subcommittee responsible for shaping the tax statement.

He said regardless of how ironclad the anti-tax statement is, some will see it as containing an escape hatch. "Whatever we say, somebody's going to say, yeah, but," Kasten remarked.

Computer foulup delays many food stamps

HOUSTON (AP) — Poor residents in Houston, San Antonio and the Rio Grande Valley will be most affected by computer foulups that already have left thousands without their monthly food stamps, a Texas Department of Human Resources spokesman says.

Problems with computers in Austin and Houston delayed the mailing of food stamps mainly to new applicants, or those who were filing some sort of change in their household status, including new jobs, addresses or income, said Martin Dukler, the agency's deputy programs commissioner.

He said pile-ups probably will occur in only the three areas of the state — Houston, San Antonio and the Rio Grande Valley — which have the largest number of food stamp recipients.

"Some of our machinery simply broke down, as it does every once in a while," Dukler said Monday. "Most of the equipment failures were here in Austin, but another piece also broke down in Houston, which complicated the situation there."

About 3,000 Houstonians were affected.

The agency had to unhook its computer system and reconnect it when the Austin office was moved, said regional administrator Verna Mainprize.

"The move took several days and, since then, we haven't been able to keep the system up continuously and are several days behind on our data entries," Ms. Mainprize said.

Meanwhile, workers at local food pantries are finding it difficult to feed everyone who comes to them.

"Our phones have been ringing off the wall since Thursday," Rina Rosenberg, program director for the Houston Interfaith Hunger Coalition, said Monday.

"Nineteen of our pantries in the poorer sections of town are already out of food entirely, and others are beginning to run really low," Ms. Rosenberg said.

Ms. Rosenberg said church pantries planned to ask their congregations to donate food or money to help stock their kitchens.

Betty Wiederhold, coordinator of a food shelter just north of downtown Houston, said: "We usually handle about 800 hungry people a month. Just during the three days we were open last week, though, we had more than 300 people come in looking for food."

What's wrong with legal advertising?

Chief Justice Warren Burger took a swipe last week at lawyers who advertise their services. Burger said legal advertising looked too much like the peddling of "automobiles, dog food, cosmetics and hair tonic." To that we respectfully reply, so what?

What Burger objects to is the "not always pleasant spectacle" of legal ads in newspapers and on the airways that could contradict the supposedly high professional standards of lawyers. His remarks imply that the standards of lawyers are somehow far above the standards of people who market cars, dog food and other products and services. This contention is wide open to debate.

An average man on the street might think, with some justification, that the standards of the legal profession have fallen below those of many other occupations. What else is he to think when he reads about lawyers who help sue anything that moves and then collect a third of the judgment? Or about lawyers who prey on the elderly? Or about those who consider the justice system a mere game, such as the nationally known lawyer Alan Dershowitz, who said, "Nothing gives me greater satisfaction than to get a guilty man off free"?

Burger also implies that there is something sleazy about advertising. He seems to be saying that lawyers lower themselves by communicating to potential clients through advertising media. Again, we politely disagree.

Advertising is a way for people to communicate with each other in the marketplace. The customer is looking for someone who can render a service to him. The lawyer is looking for customers whom he can help for a fee. Advertising brings them together.

In this age of specialization, citizens need some means of sorting through the various types of law offices. Accident claims, workmen's compensation, divorce, probate, immigration — these are a few areas of legal dispute that can require lawyers with specialized skills. Advertising can help people find the right lawyer.

It would be unfortunate if the chief justice's words led to a renewed ban on advertising by lawyers.

Playing to Texas crowds

What's the choice anyway? When you campaign in Texas, you talk "common sense," "realism" and law and order, as did Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro on their recent pilgrimage to Austin, Houston and San Antonio.

The Mondale campaign has got to carry Texas. "Got to" in the starkest, most imperative sense. No Democratic candidate in this century, from Wilson to Carter, won without carrying Texas, which in 1984 will award the third - largest number of electoral votes.

Mondale's task is formidable. Republican poll-taker Lance Tarrance calculates the Reagan - Bush lead at 27 percentage points. In 1980, Reagan - Bush cleaned Carter - Mondale's plow in Texas — by 629,000 votes.

Enter Mondale and Ferraro acting down - home as all get - out and talking of a natural affinity for everything Texan. Well, goshamighty, I reckon a Texas should be plumb proud. Three whole stops in Texas — Austin, Houston and San Antonio — and no San Francisco convention - style rhetoric about how the U.S. threatens world peace and Reaganism grinds down the poor.

Just earnest platitudes of the sort judged most appealing to citizens of a patriotic, free - enterprise - oriented state. ("What Texans and Americans want is common sense." "If you obey the law, you should be protected. If you break the law you should pay for it.")

And, well, what's likely to come of it all? Possibly a lot less than Mondale and Ferraro would prefer. Observe:

1. Mondale - Ferraro's Austin crowd, the largest of the tour, was less than half the size of President Reagan's just days earlier. Only a combined 5,000 turned out for the Democrats in Houston and San Antonio.

Attorney General Jim Mattox sent his employees off to the rally with an admonition not to miss "this historic event." Still, many came just to see and hear the nation's first female major - party vice - presidential candidate.

In San Antonio, many spectators left after she spoke. Said, one to a newspaper reporter, "I came to see her. I didn't come to see him. He's kind of dull and boring." Trouble is, of course, the "dull - and - boring" one is at the top of the ticket — the one for whom most votes ultimately will be cast, or not cast.

2. Mining the mother lode of patriotism and down - home value is a job to which Ronald Reagan has successfully applied himself since, well, forever. Mondale, by contrast, spent the primary season foraging among the special - interest groups, with their intensely specialized agendas.

Having won the nomination, Mondale imagines he now can switch convincingly to broad themes of patriotism and hard work, in order to make a run at Middle - America's votes. I wonder how this will be received. Like a Better Business Bureau speech by J.R. Ewing? As for Ferraro, why, yes, she's just your everyday, plain - folks housewife with two resort homes and a millionaire real - estate - developer husband.

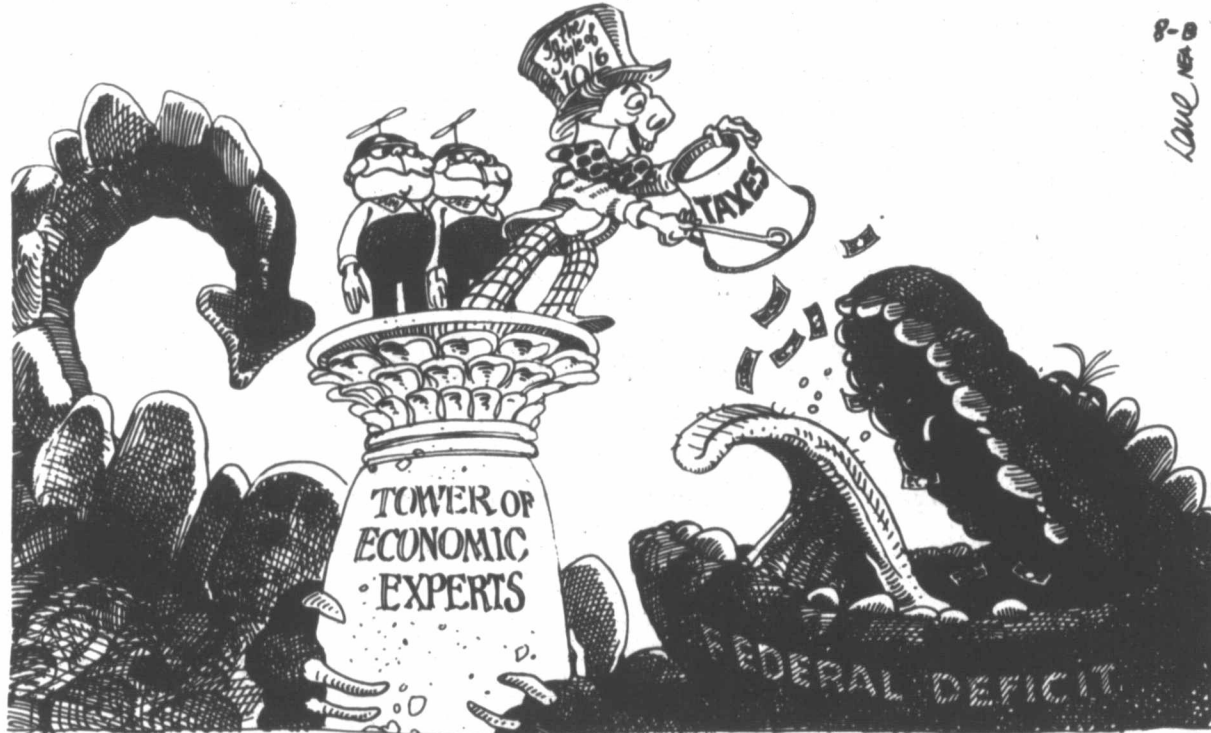

3. The post - San Francisco rhetoric of the Democratic presidential slate is soothingly centrist — for now. But the program of the Democratic ticket leaves the candidates vulnerable to attack. The party firmly supports "gay rights" and abortion - on - demand.

Mondale's new - found concern with the federal deficit exposes him to queries such as where was he anyway when the bulk of today's spending programs got started? Where he was, of course, was in the Senate, voting with fellow Democrats for every proposal to appropriate and spend more of the taxpayer's resources, except on defense, naturally. In consequence, the new, fiscally responsible Walter Mondale wants to raise the taxes of those same hard - working citizens he lauds so lavishly.

"Tax and tax, spend and spend, elect and elect." Once the formula worked wonders for Democratic candidates. But as Texans say, that ol' dog won't hunt any more. According to the polls, most voters, here and elsewhere, want the deficit reduced by spending cuts.

Concerning foreign policy, Mondale and Ferraro were all but mute while in Texas. Very smart. Support for a nuclear freeze, for gentler treatment of the Soviet Union and for near - total apathy to Communist advances in Central America — Mondalian positions all — are not high in these parts, unless I miss my guess.

Well, of course, it's early days, and Mondale and Ferraro promise to come back and see us real soon. Perhaps they'd better.

Today in History

Today is Tuesday, Aug. 14, the 227th day of 1984. There are 139 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Aug. 14, 1945, Japan announced it would surrender, ending World War II.

On this date: Ten years ago: The Cyprus peace talks broke down, creating the threat of new fighting between Greek Cypriot and Turkish troops on the island.

Five years ago: Secretary of State Cyrus Vance reprimanded UN Ambassador Andrew Young for meeting in July with a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

One year ago: President Reagan visited Mexico, where he received both a welcome and a word of caution from President Miguel de la Madrid. The Mexican leader cautioned against "shows of force," an apparent reference to Reagan's Central America policy.

Today's birthdays: Newspaper columnist Russell Baker is 59. Actress Alice Ghostley and singer Buddy Greco are 58.

White men finally minority

Statistics released recently by the government indicated that for the first time ever, white men make up a minority in the nation's work force. Statistis don't lie. In 1983, according to the study, the percentage of white males in the work force totaled only 49.8 percent.

This is marvelous news. I am a white man, I work and, finally, I am in a minority.

You don't know how tough it has been not being in a minority the last several years when more and more minorities started getting all sorts of attention while working white men were being ignored.

I would go to cocktail parties and stand around for hours without having anybody to talk to. I could hear their whispers, however.

"Him? Oh, he's nobody, just another white man," people would whisper as I passed by.

As a white man, I often have felt terribly left out in modern society because I was never invited to any marches or demonstrations or asked to be a part of any coalitions.

I mentioned this feeling of inferiority to a friend of mine, who is a black man.

"So what do you honky — I mean, white men — do while everybody else is out marching and demonstrating or forming coalitions?"

"We play golf and have our BMWs tuned up," I answered.

"You guys must all be bored to death," said my friend.

He doesn't know the half of it. The only time most white men ever got to march was when they were in the service, and then they had to get up at 5 in the morning and march through swamps and nobody ever paid any attention to them.

And what have we ever had to demonstrate against as a group, besides one of our own? Phil Donahue, for stirring up all those women on his television program?

But I think it is going to be much better for working white men in this country now that we finally are in a minority of our own. We can hold our heads high and be proud of who we are, and if we want to march or demonstrate, we finally have a legitimate reason to do so.

"So what do you want to do tonight, honey?" the wife asks her husband.

"I am going out tonight," the husband replies. "I am attending a meeting to plan the 'More Jobs For White Men' rally Saturday."

"Really, sweetie pie," replies the wife, "do you really think you ought to worry your handsome self over such a thing?"

"You probably don't realize it," the husband snaps back, "but I have a mind, too, and I intend to use it!"

I want to thank the government for issuing its report that puts working white males in a minority.

It's the first time I have felt this good about myself in years.

Who owns the sea bottom?

On March 10, 1983, President Ronald Reagan proclaimed that the ocean, on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, for 200 miles out from our shores is under U.S. jurisdiction. That is, it belongs to us.

Thus, at one stroke he more than doubled the size of the United States. Instead of 2.3 billion, it now embraces 6.2 billion acres. The new, under-ocean territory is being charted by our National Oceanic & Atmospheric Administration and the Geological Survey.

Of course much of the new acreage is rather soggy, being under water, but the wettest part may be the most valuable, for the sea contains not only a lot of fish, oysters, clams, turtles, etc., but on the sea bottom are valuable minerals that have been accumulating for ages. For example, off the Pacific Coast is the Juan de Fuca Ridge, which is rich in sulfides, cadmium and silver.

Our grandparents had no idea how much oil and natural gas we would find under the sea, and as man explores the sea - bed further out, he will probably discover vastly more. But to whom will it belong? There is room for difference of opinion here, for other nations, too, covet oil, gas and minerals. As people burn up the oil and gas, they go out into deeper water to drill for more.

It would be embarrassing if, as our drillers and dredges move out into the Pacific, they meet Japanese, Korean or Russian drillers and dredgers, searching the same sea - bottom for its wealth.

Historically, there is a three - mile limit. This means that every coastal nation owns the sea and sea - bed out three miles from its coast, measuring from the water's edge at low tide. Beyond this are the "high seas," on which the rule could be expressed as "finders - keepers: losers - weepers."

The three - mile limit to each coastal nation's jurisdiction carries the force of international law, but it is not adhered to by all nations. The United States and Great Britain have approved it, and so have France, West Germany, the Netherlands and Japan, but the Scandinavian nations claim a strip four miles wide; Egypt, Spain, Italy, Greece, Yugoslavia — all on the Mediterranean — lay claim to six miles; Mexico says it must be nine miles; the USSR and a few smaller countries claim 12 miles. So there is still much disagreement over this, largely because some coastlines are very irregular, having bays, inlets, and straits that, under a three - mile rule, would bring the high seas almost to their doorsteps.

Reagan's bold declaration will cause Americans to feel justified in mining and drilling the sea - bed out much further than before. Other nations will likely do the same, causing a clash. It seems doubtful that any one mileage limit will satisfy all nations.

Wars have been engendered by lesser causes. Before this occurs, an international commission or court should examine each case in which two or more nations claim the same sea - bed and try to arrive at a compromise that all will accept.

WASHED OUT—A pair of railroad tracks that run through Glencoe, Pa., southeast of Somerset, Pa., are twisted after being washed out by five inches of rain that fell Monday morning. Two persons are confirmed missing and two more are suspected to be missing.

Rainfall in East, fires in the West

By The Associated Press
Thunderstorms soaked the soggy East for a fourth day Monday, where floodwaters swept away two people in Pennsylvania, washed out roads in West Virginia, and trapped motorists in Maryland.

In the West, lightning-sparked brush fires burned hundreds of thousands of acres Monday in California, Oregon and Washington. In Washington state, flames came within 300 yards of a nuclear reactor.

In Pennsylvania, where rain-swollen rivers have already caused $3.5 million in damage, two people were missing and believed drowned after floodwaters surged through the southwestern farming community of Glencoe, authorities said.

A 17-year-old boy watched helplessly as his father was swept away by high water, state police said. The same youth had taken a woman and her young children from their flooded home to higher ground earlier in the day. The woman had started back to her house, however, and disappeared in the floodwaters.

"All I want is my wife back," said Ken Phillipi, whose wife, Pam, was believed to have been swept away. His children, both younger than 3 years old, clutched his knees as he stood outside his flooded home on Monday night.

Heavy rains sent water swirling through the streets of Baltimore Monday morning, snarling rush-hour traffic and stranding some motorists, authorities said. Flood warnings were in effect Monday in central and western Maryland and 14 counties in eastern West Virginia, and high water and washed-out roads and bridges trapped residents in their homes in some areas, the National Weather Service said.

U.S. 219, a major north-south route in West Virginia, was blocked by floodwaters in two places, at Burt Bridge and Kerens, the state Department of Highways reported.

"We have a major problem on our hands. I can't ever remember it being like this here," said Donna McGee of the highway department office in Elkins.

The storms are being spawned by a stagnant system that has been hanging to the west of the Appalachian mountains since Friday, and no clearing was expected before Wednesday, according to the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo.

While the East fought off water, the West battled fire. Vast areas of dry brushland, ignited by lightning, burned Monday in three states.

In south-central Washington, firefighters Monday controlled a blaze that swept through the 570-square-mile Hanford nuclear reservation, blackening more than 200,000 acres.

"There was no damage to any Department of Energy facility," Karen Wheelless, a department spokeswoman, said Monday. "All are secure and safe and operating."

In southeastern Oregon, some 200 firefighters continued battling blazes that have charred more than 51,000 acres, officials said. Rugged terrain and winds gusting

Museum acquires new pieces

DALLAS (AP) — Officials of the Dallas Museum of Art say they have added three new pieces, including the bust of an Egyptian pharaoh.

The museum on Monday announced the acquisition of works spanning the period from 1300 B.C. to 1932.

The other pieces are an oil painting by the 18th Century Italian artist Canaletto and an early carved boxwood figure by Henry Moore.

Churchgoers cheer for Solidarity

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Stirred by a priest's declaration that Solidarity's ideals will outlast its enemies, hundreds of supporters cheered Lech Walesa after a Mass marking today's anniversary of strikes that spawned the now-banned union.

Walesa, who help establish the union four years ago, and about 2,500 other worshipers raised their hands in victory signs during the Mass Monday evening in St. Brygida's, the parish church for the Lenin Shipyards where Solidarity was formed in 1980 as the Soviet bloc's first and only independent trade movement.

"Working people should be able to unite in the trade unions of their choice," said the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko in his sermon as Walesa sat at the side of the altar.

"Solidarity remains an ideal in the heart of the nation," Popieluszko said. "Nobody can defeat this ideal because it is strongly rooted in the hearts of millions and many paid a high price for it."

Authorities imposed martial law in December 1981 to suppress, then outlaw Solidarity and discourage bold sentiments of freedom inspired by the union's existence.

Popieluszko is one of the most outspoken priests in Poland's Roman Catholic Church, a rallying point for Poles opposed to authoritarian state rule.

He has been indicted on charges of abusing religious freedom in his sermons.

Popieluszko also faces charges of stockpiling illegal pro-Solidarity literature and explosives in his Warsaw apartment. The priest has denied the allegations, and the government has not said whether his case will come under an amnesty it says covers some 35,000 prisoners, including hundreds of political ones.

The priest repeated demands by Walesa and many of Solidarity activists freed under the amnesty that all political prisoners must be given their freedom.

"Dignity demands the release of all political prisoners without any exceptions," Popieluszko said.

"And first of all is Bogdan Lis," Lis, a founder of Solidarity's underground committee, was caught by authorities in June, a month before the amnesty was approved by Parliament. He is under investigation for treason, a crime which can be punished by death and which is not covered by the amnesty.

Rousing applause interrupted Popieluszko's sermon. As the Mass came to a close, Walesa joined the worshipers in making the victory sign associated with Solidarity and singing "Boze Cos Polske" (God Who Watches Over Poland), a patriotic religious hymn.

Jurors will hear tape of 'terrible domestic argument'

KEOKUK, Iowa (AP) — Jurors in the trial of a chiropractor charged with killing his wife and cutting her apart with a chain saw will hear a tape of a "terrible domestic argument" the woman secretly recorded before she vanished, a defense lawyer said.

District Judge James Havercamp said he will keep court in session today until 32 potential jurors are questioned and a 12-member jury selected to consider first-degree murder charges against Dr. James Klindt, 36, a former Davenport West High School track star.

Authorities allege Klindt cut up the body of his wife, Joyce, with a chain saw in March 1983 and dumped the pieces into the Mississippi River.

Klindt contends that his wife moved away because of their marital problems.

Attorneys interviewed 17 potential jurors Monday, the first day of jury selection, asking if their judgment would be affected by "more than unpleasant" pictures of the torso or a videotape of the autopsy.

Prosecutors are expected to offer as evidence sophisticated genetic tests proving the torso, pulled from the Mississippi by a fisherman April 16, 1983, is that of Mrs. Klindt, 34.

Defense attorney Larry Scalise asked potential jurors how they would react to a 48-minute recording of "a terrible domestic argument" the Klindts had on March 16 or 17 of 1983.

Scalise described the tape as "an angry shouting argument with all the dirty words sometimes people say when they argue." He said that Klindt reveals to his wife on the tape that there is another woman in his life.

"Do you think that because he was having an affair with another person or because he lied to his wife and ran around that you can make the leap to murder?" Scalise asked.

"Are you going to get so mad at James Klindt that you'll say, 'I don't need to see anymore, I don't need to hear anymore, I vote guilty'? Are you going to be that kind of juror?"

Police say Mrs. Klindt made the recording and gave it to close friends the day before she died.

Foreclosure sale scheduled

DALLAS (AP) — Federal officials have posted about 500 condominium units near Interstate 30 for foreclosure sale as part of a continuing liquidation of the defunct Empire Savings & Loan Association of Mesquite.

A spokeswoman for the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. said the units had been financed at Empire by fewer than 40 individuals who purchased the condos as investment property.

FSLIC spokeswoman Becky Speece said the agency took control of Empire on March 14 after the association was declared insolvent because of questionable loans for condominium construction along I-30 in Rowlett, Garland and Mesquite.

The FSLIC in earlier foreclosure sales took control of larger condominium properties including completed condo projects and land awaiting condominium construction.

On June 5, in the largest such sale, the FSLIC took control of about 155 properties.

The 500 units scheduled for foreclosure sales Sept. 4 include completed and "substantially complete" condos, Ms. Speece said. Some of the posted condos were purchased by owner-occupants, but the majority were bought as investments, Ms. Speece said.

Results of a study of the I-30 condos conducted on behalf of the FSLIC showed 2,231 completed condominiums between LBJ Freeway and Lake Ray Hubbard, and another 1,067 under construction.

Mondale graduated from Army's journalism school

By PAUL STEVENS
Associated Press Writer
INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — When Walter F. Mondale was a private, the Army sent him to school to learn to write news stories and take pictures.

Actor Tony Dow later went to the same school, but, like Mondale, he found success in front of the cameras, not behind them.

Mondale, now the Democratic presidential nominee, and Dow, the older brother on the "Leave it to Beaver" TV series, are among thousands who have graduated from the military's journalism school.

Today the school — now named the Defense Information School — annually teaches about 2,000 soldiers, sailors, airmen, Coast Guardsmen and Marines how to inform their military comrades and the public about activities of the armed services.

"In the skill area, we're as close to one journalism school as another," says Army Col. Gary L. Werner, commandant of the school at Fort Benjamin Harrison. "We've always had very high expectations for our students."

Officers, enlisted personnel and civilians are trained in such areas as writing a news story, operating a radio or TV studio, dealing with the news media, laying out a newspaper, or taking a photograph.

They then carry these skills back to their base or post of assignment, where they might work for one of about 630 military newspapers or some 920 Armed Forces Radio and Television outlets around the world. The training also might serve them in writing news releases in public affairs offices or as liaison officers between the civilian press and the military.

Among the graduates who have gone on to successful journalism careers outside the military are Paul Page, chief announcer for the

Indianapolis 500 radio network; I.W. (Bill) Cole, dean emeritus of Northwestern University's Medill School of Journalism and director of its Gannett Urban Journalism Center, and Gene Siskel, movie critic for the Chicago Tribune and co-host of the syndicated television program "At The Movies."

"I owe my career to it," said Siskel, 38, who graduated from the military school in 1968. "It was my first exposure to journalism. Based on my 10 weeks there, I decided to go into journalism."

The armed forces began their own training program for military journalists shortly after World War II. Before then, they drew many of their public affairs officers from the civilian press.

The first military public affairs school was formed in 1946 as the Army Information School at Carlisle Barracks, Pa. It evolved into the Armed Forces Information School at Fort Slocum, N.Y., in the early 1950s, when Mondale took the course.

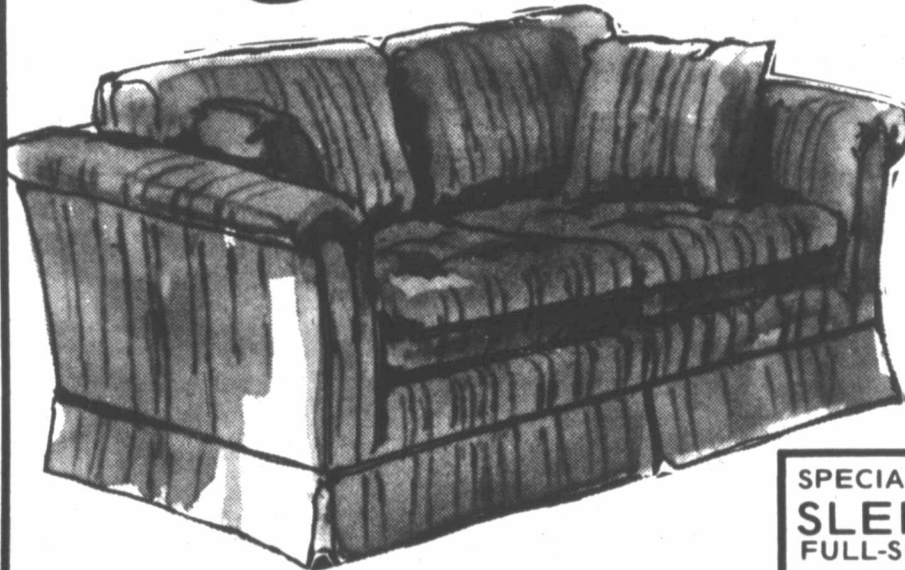

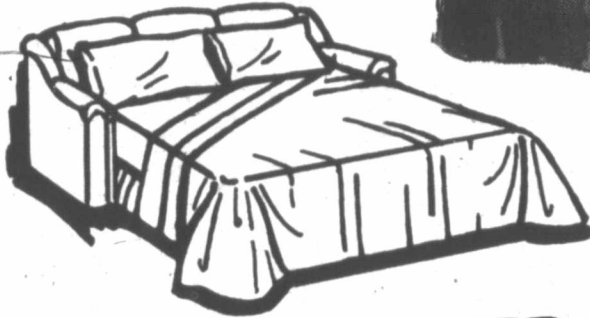

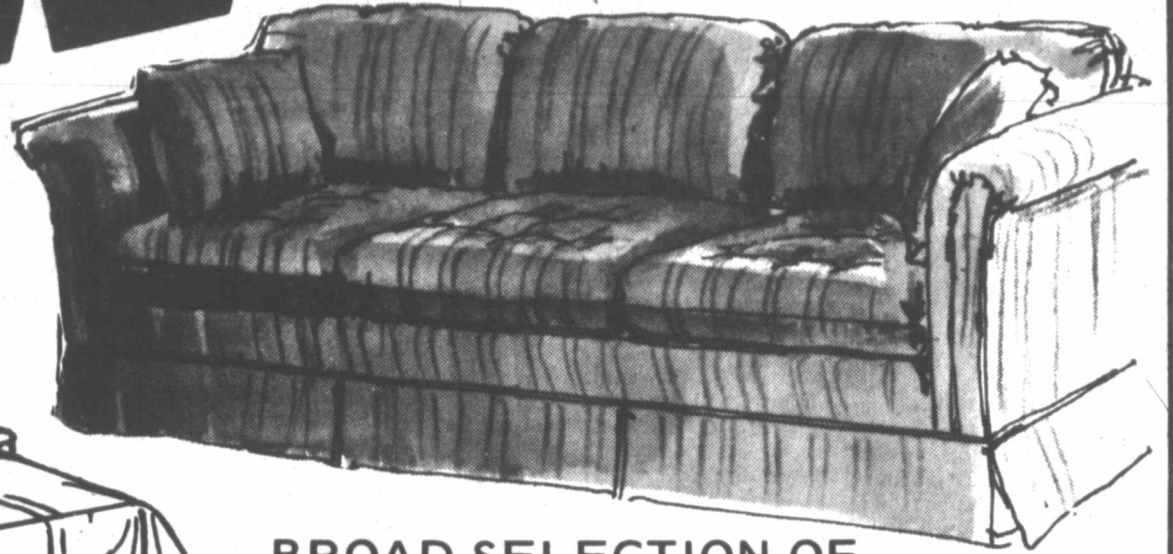

Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara issued a charter establishing the present school in 1964 and the school moved to Fort Harrison a year later.

School officials are proud of the letter they received from Mondale in 1979 when, as vice president of the United States and a former graduate, he wrote to laud the school's accreditation by the North Central Board of the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education.

Biotechnology cuts years off breeding time

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — With test tubes, laboratory dishes and needles finer than an infant's hair, researchers are finding dramatic shortcuts in the ancient, patient science of breeding plants and animals.

"A bundle of techniques known as 'biotechnology' is cutting years off the traditional timetable and eroding the natural barrier between species that can't be mated or crossed. With techniques such as growing plant cells in laboratory dishes and transplanting genes between plants or animals, researchers hope to produce:

—Crops that need no fertilizer.
—Pigs and cattle that grow twice as fast.

—Plants that resist disease, drought, bugs, herbicides and salinity.

—Leaner meat and more nutritious grain.

Such improvements should add $5.6 billion a year to the international crop yield before the turn of the century, and $20 billion a year after that, says L. William Teweles & Co., a Milwaukee agricultural consulting firm.

Researchers find themselves in a "very early stage of a field that is now really beginning to explode," says Winston Brill of Cetus Madison Corp. in Madison, Wis., one of many new research companies at the forefront of the technology.

Their work focuses on genes, which make up the chemical blueprints for every cell in every living thing.

It may take 3,000 genes to run a one-cell organism and a plant or animal can require about 1,000 times as many. In the massive library of genes, the biotechnologist wants to insert another gene to make a tomato less watery or a pig grow faster.

The first commercial benefits, experts say, probably will appear in tomatoes and potatoes.

Campbell Soup, for example, already is testing seeds for tomatoes with more solids and less water. Commercially grown tomatoes are now about 95 percent water, and less water would mean less waste to process, a Campbell spokesman said.

Similarly, Frito-Lay is trying to develop a more solid potato for its potato chips. It also wants a potato plant that resists disease better, yields more potatoes per acre and produces less sugar, which makes potatoes turn brown, a spokesman said.

Frito-Lay and the firm doing research for Campbell, DNA Plant Technology Corp. of Cinnaminson, N.J., grow plant cells in a laboratory to produce quickly many new strains to choose from.

Typically, a leaf is put in a laboratory dish with chemicals that encourage its individual cells to divide repeatedly and form clumps of cells. The clumps are moved into other chemicals that encourage shoots and roots to grow, and whole plants then develop.

With this process a single leaf can produce hundreds of genetically different plants. Nobody knows exactly why they differ. Maybe genes in leaf cells change slightly in their exposure to the environment, and the laboratory chemicals encourage other changes.

Another trick, used by Frito-Lay and DNA Plant Technology, produces plants from species that can't be crossed in standard breeding. "Protoplast fusion" means removing the walls of two plant cells, fusing the cells and growing them into a hybrid plant.

The most direct approach for transferring genetic characteristics, transplanting genes, is far more advanced in one-celled organisms than in plants or animals. The transplant of a virus gene into bacteria produced a vaccine for hoof-and-mouth disease in 1981, for example.

Current studies involve altering bacteria to fertilize plants, stave off frost damage to crops, or even produce an enzyme that converts a slaughterhouse byproduct into cocoa butter, which is used in making candy bars and hair and skin conditioners.

In plants or animals, gene transplants pose problems such as growing a whole plant from the cell that gets the gene. But researcher Brill of Cetus Madison believes genetically altered plants, probably tomatoes or potatoes, may be sold in about five years.

Only one or two genes can be transplanted now, he says, and the first benefits probably will involve the simplest transplants. So disease resistance and, in crops like corn, increased nutritional value are likely candidates. More efficient photosynthesis may be an early improvement too.

Developing plants to grow in salty soil may take 20 to 50 years, Brill says. Salt injures plants in many ways, and hundreds of genes might have to be transplanted to gain resistance to all of them.

George Kidd of the Teweles consulting company expects the first plants altered by transplanted genes to be sold in the early 1990s. And by the year 2000, he says, transplants will make corn and wheat crops look a lot different.

Corn plants will be about one-third shorter with two or three ears per stalk, he says, rather than one. Both modifications will make mechanical harvesting easier. Other changes include resistance to disease and herbicides, and more efficient use of fertilizer.

Wheat also will be shorter to avoid being blown over, Kidd says. Each seed will put up 10 or 15 stalks instead of four or five, and the head of the stalk will contain twice the grain. The plant will use fertilizer more efficiently and resist disease and harm from insecticides.

Gene transplants also may pay off for animals. So far they have given Thomas Wagner of Ohio University in Athens a lot of oversized mice and potential help for the livestock industry.

Wagner created his mice with the gene that orders production of growth hormone in cattle. He altered the gene to order more hormone, and then, with a needle less than a thousandth of an inch wide, injected it into a mouse egg cell that had been fertilized only hours before. The gene was incorporated into the library of mouse genes by a cell mechanism that repairs broken genetic strands. The result: a scaled-up mouse, weighing twice as much as normal but eating only half-again as much food, a 30 percent increase in efficiency. Such mice pass along the growth characteristic to their offspring. "There is absolutely no scientific reason whatsoever which would indicate livestock wouldn't function the same way," says Wagner, who is now trying his technique with cattle.

Texas family's home made over for magazine

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

What happens when a team of magazine editors from New York descends on a middle class family in Katy, Texas, to make over the family home, redo the woman's hair and clothes, and even provide a new set of recipes?

According to Diana Hindt, winner of McCall's Magazine's "Reader of the Year" contest, it is sheer bliss.

Mrs. Hindt won for herself and family a prize worth an estimated $150,000 after her letter was selected from among thousands sent in by readers.

Between February and May, the magazine's editors and the New York design firm of Scruggs-Meyers remodeled the family's two-car garage into a master bedroom and bath, redid the kitchen, redecorated the rest of the house, providing new furniture and appliances (including a central air conditioner), and flew Mrs.

Hindt to New York for a beauty makeover and a new wardrobe.

According to Robert Stein, editor of McCall's, the idea for the three-year-old feature originated as a decorating story.

"As we discussed it further, we decided to see if we could take one reader each year and do for her personally what we try to do for all our readers — to dramatize the way the ideas in the magazine apply to people's lives."

McCall's wasn't seeking a typical reader, added Stein, "because there isn't one." The Hindts are the first to agree that they are not a typical all-American family. As part owner of a small petroleum equipment company, Mrs. Hindt, 33, is the main breadwinner. Her husband, Bill, 47, is an importer and wholesaler of antiques and reproductions, but says "I'm the kind of husband who likes to stay at home."

Both were divorced when they met. They married 13 years ago and began the task of melding themselves, her daughter, and his four children into a family and later their son was born.

Although the family may not conform to the average, it was a typical home furnishings problem — lack of space — that led Mrs. Hindt to enter the contest.

With six children, the family needed more room than their three-bedroom ranch in a suburb of Houston provided. But they couldn't afford to remodel it themselves. A burning desire to convert that garage into a master bedroom and bath led her to write the winning letter.

Nevertheless, Mrs. Hindt recalled recently that she didn't tell her family — even her husband — that she had entered. "It sounded like such a crazy thing to do. I just wrote the letter and mailed it."

She finally did tell the family when she learned she was a finalist and that several McCall's editors were coming to meet the Hindts.

After being selected, she got a chance to describe her "dream house" to an editor and two designers. "I went into my ultimate fantasy about ripping out walls. I told them I wanted to have more space and more function out of the space I had," she said.

Home furnishings editor Ellen Frankel and the design team of Scruggs-Meyers came up with solutions that have made major differences, she said.

The most spectacular change was the creation of a new master bedroom and bath in the former garage. But almost as exciting for the family was the gutting and remaking of the kitchen. The new kitchen has a greenhouse at one end now, new appliances including a microwave oven and trash compactor, new cabinets and a center island that can function as a work and serving area as well as a place for informal meals.

The designers also lightened the house by painting the walls in light colors, and selecting golden oak furniture and neutral upholstery fabrics in the main living areas.

"Now all the color is in the accessories, which means I can change the way the rooms look by changing accessories," she said.

The family has been living in the redone house since early May, but has not quite gotten used to it.

"I walk around here and feel like I'm baby-sitting somebody else's house. But you can't enter the house without feeling good," she said.

Growing Child

Helping a child develop good self-concept

Self-concept is the way we think about ourselves and the feelings we have about ourselves. These thoughts and feelings can be positive or they can be negative. The person who has positive thoughts and feelings is said to have a healthy self-concept.

As adults, we can control and influence our feelings about ourselves. We can accept or reject others' opinions. We can monitor the events in our lives that cause us to feel one way or the other about ourselves.

A young child's self-concept, though, is determined mostly by the "messages" he receives from others, particularly his mother and father, according to Growing Child, the monthly child development newsletter. These messages can be deliberate or unconscious, verbal or non-verbal.

Sometimes the message the child receives is not what the parents really intend. For example, a parent may insist on doing everything for the child, even the most simple things the child could do for himself. The parent thinks he or she is sending the message: "I'm doing all these things for you because I love you."

But really, the unconscious, non-verbal message the child may be getting is: "Always rely on Mom and Dad to do everything for you because you're dumb and helpless."

To understand a child's self-concept you have to try to see the world from his perspective. Even very young children are extremely occupied with developing competence — that is, learning to do things themselves. It is this continued striving for competence that pushes children to try new challenges and lead them from one stage of development to the next. Parents can watch for the things a child CAN DO for himself and encourage him to do them, even if he cannot do them perfectly. The more he learns to do for himself, the more positive his self-concept will be.

One of the most important factors in the development of self-concept is the parents' attitudes towards the child's successes and failures. If the most important people in his life view him as "dumb" or "helpless," it will be almost impossible for him to develop positive feelings of self-worth. Mockery and sarcasm are like the hot sun that causes a flower to wither. But praise is like the nurturing food that helps the self-concept develop and blossom.

The Growing Child newsletter follows a child's development month-by-month, from birth to six years old. For more information and a free sample newsletter, write to Growing Child, P.O. Box 620 N. Lafayette, Ind., 47902. Include child's birthdate when writing.

Dear Abby

Husband is in fifth gear while wife still in 'park'

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1984 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I, who have been married a little less than two years, recently had a frank discussion about our sex lives. He told me he loves me, is always aroused around me and wants sex at least three times a week. I told him I love him, too, but I am not constantly aroused in his presence and once a week is enough for me. I lied. (The truth is twice a month would be enough for me.) He has told me that he doesn't want me to fake how much I am enjoying it. He would be horrified if he knew how much faking I have done.

This is the first major conflict to come up in our marriage, and I don't know what to do. I think a good compromise would be once a week, but sometimes I cringe when he touches me because I'm usually not interested.

Help! Thanks for being an impartial party.

MISMATCHED IN NEW MEXICO

DEAR MISMATCHED: It's apparent that sex is far more important to your husband than it is to you. That is not to say that you are "wrong"—or he is. You put it well when you sign yourself "mismatched."

In order for a marriage to endure, it must be based on honesty (no faking). A marriage counselor could direct you to a competent sex therapist. Ideally, you and your husband should see a counselor together. But if he refuses, go alone.

DEAR ABBY: This is serious. We are senior citizens who visited a Catholic church in a nearby town. A nice young man and an older man took up the collection. We sat in the last row by the stairs. The young man finished collecting downstairs and started to go up into the choir to collect. As he was going up the winding stairs, he put his hand in the collection basket and took a handful of money, which he transferred to his own pocket!

My husband saw him take the money, poked me to look, and we both saw him pocket the money. We could not believe what our eyes had seen.

We wonder how much he took.

and how long this has been going on. What should we do?

EYEWITNESSES

DEAR WITNESSES: Tell the priest what you saw. And be prepared to confront the alleged thief should it be necessary.

***

DEAR ABBY: Six months ago I gave birth to twin boys. My husband and I are proud of our twins, but why must strangers be so obnoxious when they see twin babies?

If I hear another person say, "Oh, double trouble" or, "I'll bet you have your hands full," I will scream. They are not trouble—they are a joy. And yes, I do have my hands full, but so does every parent with even one small child.

In addition to those comments, I find myself answering the same dumb questions over and over: No, they are not identical. Yes, twins do run in my family. Yes, I work. Yes, I knew I was having twins. No, I did not give them rhyming names.

I get some compliments, but for every compliment, I hear the "double trouble" put-down. I am so afraid my twins will grow up believing it, and they'll have a poor self-image.

Is there an appropriate answer for these idiots who assume that all twins are double trouble?

MOTHER OF TWINS

DEAR MOTHER: Try this: "I consider myself twice blessed."

***

CONFIDENTIAL TO "CAUTIOUS IN VANCOUVER, B.C.": When you say, "I trust everybody, but I always cut the cards," what you're really saying is, "I trust nobody."

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG

AP Newsfeatures

Q — I am going to put red cedar siding on the outside of my house and hope to do it myself with the help of my son. We are having considerable discussion as to whether to use red cedar shakes or cedar plywood. I also have heard you can get red cedar hardboard. What can you tell me about it?

A — Hardboard siding in rough cedar texture has the same characteristics as regular exterior hardboard and can be finished almost any way you wish. The best way to make a choice among the shakes, plywood or hardboard is to get one of the companies that sell it to advise you where the product can be seen, preferably in the makeup of a house.

Q — We saw a question in your column from a fellow who dropped white paint on a brick wall. Rather than scrubbing with turpentine, an easier method would be one my husband and I used when trying to solve a problem we had when concrete was splattered against the brick front of our bungalow from the roof to the ground by vandals. We got a small can of brick-colored rust-inhibiting paint, thinned it with paint thinner to a water consistency, then painted the affected areas, being careful not to get paint on the mortar. Don't worry if the paint doesn't exactly match. It will sink into the bricks without a trace. We don't know why this happens, but it works. The paint can be lightened or darkened with a few drops of black or white paint.

A — No such question-and-answer that we can recall. Nevertheless, your explanation is most interesting. Thanks.

Q — Our attic has been unoccupied for years. Now I plan to finish it. There is loose fill insulation in the attic floor. Should it be removed or left the way it is?

A — If you were starting from scratch, there would be little need to place insulation in the attic floor, since its main purpose is to keep heat from the main part of the house from going into the attic.

But, since it already is there, you might as well let it stay. The trouble of removing it might not be worth whatever is gained from it.

BUILDING FROM GROUND UP—Gayle Driggers of McColl, S.C. sits on the edge of the newly constructed foundation of her house in an area of the small town devastated by tornadoes

March 28. The photo was taken several weeks ago during a tour of the path of the destructive storms to see how people were coping with the aftermath. (AP Laserphoto)

Recovery progressing but rubble reminds victims of March storm

By MOIRA BAILEY
Associated Press Writer
BENNETTSVILLE, S.C. (AP) — Rubble litters parking lots, 200 families make do in trailers and tree stumps stand where oaks once offered shade — signs that it will take years to "get rid of the reminders" of the tornadoes that plowed through the Carolinas 4½ months ago.

On March 28, a series of tornadoes toppled homes, churches and businesses; tore trees from the ground; and killed 59 people and injured 1,300 others.

Budget cuts left National Weather Service offices in the Carolinas understaffed, weakening the tornado warning system, members of a National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration survey team said last week. And a more sophisticated radar unit, which reportedly won't be available until the end of the decade, would have detected tornadoes that were not picked up, the NOAA report said.

But for the people who lived through them, it's rebuilding and turning to other matters that count.

"It's not the main topic of conversation any more," Bennettville, S.C., Mayor Johnny Weaver said last week. "We recently had a close sheriff's race. That took everybody's mind off of it."

Weaver said he's answering "mostly dog and trash calls" again in his community of almost 9,000 people.

But there are plenty of reminders in towns like Bennettville, Newberry, Winnsboro and McColl, S.C., and in Red Springs, N.C., among the hardest hit by the tornadoes' fury.

Shopping carts, a time clock hanging by a wire and glass litter the Northwood Shopping Center parking lot. The center itself remains in piles of bulky metal, its future uncertain as its Atlanta owners mull over insurance proceeds, Weaver said.

Off to one side is a makeshift drug store, open for business since April in a trailer.

"This has become like a little landmark. Sometimes they'll bring a picnic," says Ann Williams, assistant store manager.

Eight miles away in McColl, Gayle Driggers sat outside her temporary mobile home and stared across Lee Street at a newly laid brick foundation.

"That's where my house was," she said.

Lee Street, virtually impassable the night of March 28, now is lined with government-supplied mobile homes.

More than 200 families in South Carolina's five-county disaster area still live in temporary houses or trailers, said Ray Kemp of the Federal Emergency Management Agency. He estimated they'll be in permanent homes by Christmas.

"The street just about empties out every time we have a black cloud," Mrs. Driggers said.

In Newberry, all that remains of the 129-year-old St. Luke's Episcopal Church is a signboard listing services. The Rev. Stanley Carter said it could be spring before the church is rebuilt.

"I feel like it will be many, many years before we get rid of the reminders," said Fire Chief Lewis Lee of Newberry, where more than 100 buildings were damaged.

Old buttons capture fancy of collector in East Texas

By LEE ANN NEILL
The Tyler Courier-Times
TYLER, Texas (AP) — "I have so many buttons that I never even tried to count them," says button collector Sarah Lipscomb of Tyler.

In fact, she has so many that she ran out of space on her walls and had to put the remaining ones on shelves in a separate room.

"I have over 300 c¢'s in my shelves with buttons in them ranging from black etchings that were popular during Queen Victoria's reign to what we call picture or story buttons of fairy tales, nursery rhymes and biblical stories," said Mrs. Lipscomb.

Mrs. Lipscomb, 83, a native of Boston, began collecting buttons almost 50 years ago. Before coming to Texas from Connecticut, she ran a museum, and published a magazine and an encyclopedia on the subject.

"People think buttons are just fasteners on clothes, but to me, they are works of art," she said.

"I became interested in buttons during the Depression when we had to make changes and I had a lot of time on my hands. A friend showed me some old, valuable buttons and the arts and crafts of them caught my attention," Mrs. Lipscomb remembered. She also said that the local library helped her research the origins of buttons and brought out a lot of early resources.

"I have a strong appreciation for 18th century buttons because of the handwork and time that went into making them," said Mrs. Lipscomb. Many of those buttons are made from copper and the designs had to be hammered on by hand, she said, and no two are alike.

Perhaps the most prestigious of her 18th century buttons were those worn on the coats of state representatives at George Washington's inauguration. "Some have 'Long Live The President' on them but England supporters had 'Long Live the King' printed on theirs," she noted.

Another set she has from this period are hand-painted on ivory and worth more than $2,000.

"This set has 23 buttons in it that I personally saw taken off the coat," she said.

She said complete sets of buttons are so valuable because they are very rare. "When families would divide an estate, the buttons would usually get separated, too," she said.

Mrs. Lipscomb also collects buttons from the 19th century, many of which were called paperweights and were made of glass.

"This was the beginning of fashion buttons for women. Before this time, men were the only ones who displayed their buttons," she said.

Mrs. Lipscomb added that the colors became softer and decorations such as butterflies and flowers began to appear.

Most of her buttons are American made but she says foreign-made buttons also are very interesting. "Every country makes buttons and most are made from the countries' natural resources," she adds. "I have seen buttons made of leather, wood, snake skin, gem stones, ivory, bones and even human skin."

Mrs. Lipscomb doesn't collect any later than the 19th century because the newer ones are machine-made and are not so interesting.

"Modern technology has taken the talent away from the people. I know people could still make beautiful buttons but because of cost, they aren't allowed to," Mrs. Lipscomb said.

In addition to collecting, Mrs. Lipscomb also enjoys teaching others about buttons. "People are always coming to me with buttons that they think are authentic collector's items, but I tell them that everything that comes out of 'grandmother's button box' is not a truly old button."

She said that authentic buttons are hard to find and recommends searching with the help of specialty dealers. "We use to have to search for them in the old days, but now they have dealers just like they do for stamps and other collectibles," she said.

Tower left with $891,119 in surplus funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. John Tower, who announced last August that he would not seek re-election, still had $891,119 in campaign cash on hand as of mid-year after refunding $114,605 to contributors, according to his campaign finance reports.

Tower, R-Texas, could legally pocket the remaining money, but press secretary Linda Hill said he will use it instead to "help elect other Republican senators," eventually through a political action committee he plans to set up.

Under federal election laws, surplus congressional campaign funds can be used for "any lawful purpose," including personal use, if the candidate was holding office on Jan. 8, 1980.

Candidates who did not hold congressional office until after that date are subject to campaign finance law amendments that prohibit personal use of surplus campaign money.

"He's going to use none of it for personal use," Ms. Hill said. "All will be used in one way or another to promote other Republicans, either in direct contributions, voter registration or through places like the National Republican Senatorial Committee."

The Tower Senate Club, Tower's authorized campaign finance committee, had donated $177,000 to Republican candidates or committees as of June 30, the end of the current reporting period. Since he is no longer a candidate, Tower is not required to file another report with the Federal Election Commission until the end of the year.

According to his latest report, Tower donated $75,000 to the National Republican Senatorial Committee. Associated Republicans of Texas received $37,000, the Dallas County Republican Host Committee received $25,000, Dallas County Republicans received $15,000 and $15,000 went to the Victory '84 Fund.

Surplus campaign funds are not subject to the $20,000 limit on contributions to party committees.

Individual candidates who had received Tower funds included Larry Combest, who is up against Democrat Don Richards in the race for the seat vacated by Lubbock Congressman Kent Hance. Hance had run for Tower's seat, but lost in the Democratic runoff to Austin state Sen. Lloyd Doggett.

Combest had received $3,000. Jack Hammond, who is running against El Paso Congressman Ron Coleman, received $1,000.

Ms. Hill said Tower intended to donate the maximum allowable to College Station Congressman Phil Gramm.

JOB CORPS TRAINEES—At the nation's largest Job Corps center in Morganfield, Ky., Derrset Brown, foreground, of Charleston, S.C. joins other trainees in a roofing class. They are applying their new skills to renovate some buildings on the sprawling campus which houses 2,600 trainees from eight states participating in the government program.

Job center moves from 'unrest' to success

By DAVID McCORMICK
Associated Press Writer
MORGANFIELD, Ky. (AP) — When the federal government opened a trial Job Corps center here almost 20 years ago, it was plagued by what was politely referred to in the mid-1960s as "unrest."

Townpeople were afraid of the place, and the staff wasn't quite sure if it was running a vocational school or a juvenile detention center.

A lot of people thought it was a doomed experiment. Among them was Union County's chief executive, Bob Hite. "I didn't think it would last long at all," Hite recalled. "It was a bad scene."

"I don't believe anyone at the time knew what the major intent of the program was," said Gerald Oettle, then the center's recreation director and now its administrator.

Yet, since its start as a two-year experiment, the Jobs Corps has become one of the government's most respected social welfare programs and one of the few to escape reduced funding under the Reagan administration.

The Earle C. Clements Center at Morganfield, one of the first to be established, is now the largest center in the nation, with 2,600 trainees from eight states and a staff of 755.

"It's had steady support throughout its history," said Steve McManus, a spokesman for the U.S. Labor Department. "The program works."

Job Corps provides vocational and social instruction to underprivileged trainees, both male and female, between 16 and 21 years of age. About 40,000 of them at any given time are housed and fed at the 107 Job Corps centers around the country.

Trainees are taught a skill, schooled in math and English, are given spending money and shown how to budget it. They are lectured on motivation, and are placed in jobs when they graduate after about a year. All this costs about $9,000 per student, money the government says is well spent.

"This program has been evaluated and studied to death," said Peter Rell, its national director. "In every comparison that's been done, it's been found that our kids hold more jobs, are less dependent on welfare and pay more taxes. It breaks that cycle of poverty."

"If the government wasn't able to put a pencil to us and demonstrate that the average person who completes this program will absolutely pay enough in extra taxes to pay for his time here, they'd have closed us up, and rightfully so," Oettle said.

The national program has a $585 million budget, which Rell said will increase to $600 million next year. "I think this speaks well for the program," he said. "A lot of social programs have had to fight very hard to justify themselves."

The Job Corps is unusual among federal programs in two key respects.

One is that most of the centers are run for profit by private companies contracted by the government. The most active of these is the Singer Co., which operates 12 centers, including Clements.

Gene Baker, regional director of Singer's Job Corps operations, declined to say how much profit the company makes on its centers, but he acknowledged that there is competition for the contracts and that Singer would like to win more.

The other notable aspect of the program is the discipline it requires of trainees. Students are in class seven hours a day and confined to the center for most of their stay.

"It's not a picnic," said Union County Judge-Executive Hite, who sits on a community relations advisory board for the Clements Center. "They either go to class or

Residents object to hospital

OVILLA, Texas (AP) — A resident of this Ellis County community who is leading the fight against construction of a 64-bed psychiatric hospital says about 700 people have signed petitions opposing the facility.

The city council has also passed a resolution opposing the hospital's proposed location, about one mile south of the community, because it would threaten its growth.

Linda Mayberry, leader of the citizens' fight, said the proposed site is not served with adequate water and sewer facilities. Ms. Mayberry said residents are also concerned because Ovilla does not have a police department to patrol the area.

Women to back Republicans, Reagan's daughter contends

DALLAS (AP) — Maureen Reagan says most women will still vote Republican in November despite the Democratic campaign of the first woman vice presidential candidate, Geraldine Ferraro.

"Women vote for a variety of reasons," Ms. Reagan said Sunday. "They vote for their economic well-being, for national security — and for reasons unique to them such as enforcing child-support payments."

"What they want is to make sure everybody is listening to them and talking to them," she said.

Ms. Reagan said the administration of her father, Ronald Reagan, and the Republican Party are meeting those concerns.

A California delegate and consultant to the Republican National Committee, Ms. Reagan spoke briefly at the opening ceremonies for "Jewish Life in America: Fulfilling the American Dream," an exhibition on display at the Central Dallas Public Library through Sept. 8.

U.S. Sen. Paula Hawkins of Florida, Republican National Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf, and U.S. Rep. Steve Bartlett of Dallas also spoke at the ceremony. Both Fahrenkopf and Mrs. Hawkins told the crowd the Republican platform will include a plank condemning bigotry and anti-Semitism.

Astro-Graph

by bernice bede osol
Aug. 15, 1984

This coming year you will have opportunity to expand your circle of friends and acquaintances. New pals will be made in areas where you share a common interest.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Try to keep your social calendar open today. There's a possibility a fun, spur-of-the-moment, event may cause you to want to alter your plans. The areas in which you'll be the luckiest in the year ahead are revealed in your Astro-Graph predictions for the coming year. To get yours, mail $1 to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Benefits could come today through family contacts or relatives. What transpires will be of a material or financial nature.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Your judgment is good today, but your initial appraisal of matters might be slightly off target. Take a hard second look.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) In matters which are financially meaningful to you today, use your own judgment rather than relying on the advice or suggestions of well-meaning friends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Take advantage of any opportunities that come your way today through your social contacts. Their offers may be withdrawn if you hesitate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Your best ideas will come to you get off alone in quiet surroundings. Your own home may offer the best sanctuary.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) If you are planning something social today, it will prove wise not to include persons who do not get along too well with one another.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) This is one of those unusual days where you may be extremely lucky in material ways, but have problems maintaining harmony in your relationships.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Even though your methods will appear a trifle unusual to others today, you will produce desirable results in situations which get off on the wrong foot.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) There's a chance you'll be involved in an enterprise today which won't be conducted along conventional lines, yet you'll know exactly what you're doing.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Unusual benefits may be derived today through a partnership arrangement with a person with whom you don't normally deal. You'll be in harmony.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Setbacks tend to arouse your ingenuity today, especially in critical career situations. When pressed, you'll come up with the right answers.

Sandberg's charge

Led by Ryno, the Cubs run wild

LOS ANGELES (NEA) — There is a little boy's "gee whizz" quality to Ryne Sandberg's contemplation of his personal odyssey this baseball season. He has gone from a largely obscure ballplayer for the Chicago Cubs to a celebrated major leaguer.

In a moment of rash exuberance St. Louis manager Whitey Herzog called Sandberg "the greatest player I've ever seen." That was inspired by the sight of Ryne cracking five hits in one afternoon against the Cardinals, two of them home runs off ace reliever Bruce Sutter.

Sandberg, 24, who started at second base for the National League in the All-Star Game and played the full nine innings, is vital to the Chicago Cubs.

His fielding and hitting have been of inestimable value in making the Cubs — the most futile team in the majors for the last four decades — a respectable challenger for the NL East title.

Ryno, as the other Cubs call him, hasn't been around long enough to act diffident or downright annoyed by the attention suddenly directed his way.

The prominence is all as new to him as it is to the contending Cubs.

"I didn't know anything about the image of the Cubs," he shrugs. "I spent four years in the minors with the Phillies organization. I didn't follow major-league baseball that much."

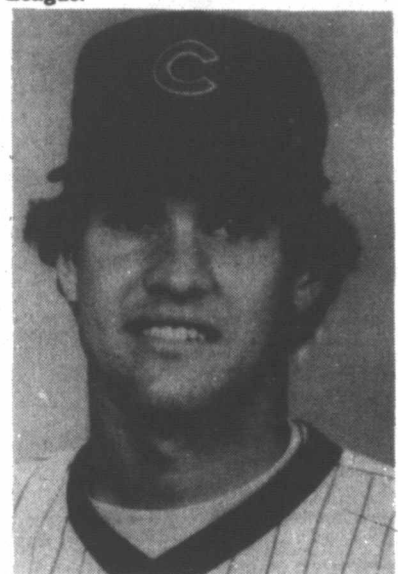

Three years ago, Sandberg was toiling in Oklahoma City as a shortstop, the only position he had ever really played until he got to the big leagues. Then Dallas Green, who had managed the Phillies, was hired to renovate the Cubs in October 1981. That winter, Sandberg was a virtual throw-in on a deal that sent Philadelphia's aging shortstop, Larry Bowa, to Chicago for another shortstop, Ivan DeJesus.

"Dallas Green," says Ryne, "might have been the only guy who thought I could play shortstop then." Yet because of Bowa, Green didn't even project Sandberg in the Cub lineup at that post. He was moved to third base as a Cubs rookie in 1982. In his first 32 at bats, he collected exactly one base hit.

But the Cubs were uniquely qualified to be patient with him. Without Sandberg they had not had a winning record in 10 years. They couldn't get much worse. Eventually, over 156 games, playing a new position, he elevated himself to a .271 batting average and acclaim as the team's best rookie.

The Cubs also tinkered with him in September — once more they were far out of the pennant race — as a second baseman. That became his position in '83 with the acquisition of Ron Cey, who could only play third. Ryne then won a Golden Glove as best second baseman in the National League.

Ryne Sandberg

"I didn't think of myself as a third baseman," Sandberg recalls. "I had good range, which was wasted at third. I'm happier at second."

Last season he led the league's second basemen in fielding percentage — .986 for 158 games — and participated in the most double plays. His offensive productivity remained steady. And he provided speed with 37 stolen bases, the most by a Cub second baseman since the legendary Johnny Evers in 1907.

Still, none of this was the kind of prelude to signal what was to happen to Ryne Sandberg this spring and early summer.

He went into the All-Star break with more hits than any other man in the majors (and a robust batting average of .335). He was tied with Juan Samuel of the Phillies for most triples and Glenn Hubbard of Atlanta for most doubles. His home run total had already exceeded his 1982-83 levels, and he was in the top seven in runs batted in. He remained a blazer on the bases, caught only twice in 17 base-stealing attempts. And he played brilliantly in the field.

"I don't know how he can play any better, if he lives to be 100," said coach Don Zimmer of the Cubs.

For the record, Sandberg turns 25 on Sept. 18.

He was named for an old Yankee pitcher, Ryne Duren, whom his father had seen pitch. In Spokane, Wash., young Sandberg became an All-American high-school quarterback. He signed a letter of intent to attend nearby Washington State, but opted for baseball instead when the Phillies drafted him. He explains, "It offered me a longer playing career."

Sandberg has no magical explanation for his sprouting in '84.

"I'm putting everything together," he says. "I feel myself getting more aggressive at the plate. I swing with authority now."

One of Sandberg's peers, veteran infielder Bill Madlock of the Pittsburgh Pirates, for instance, merely calls him "the best player in the league."

Braves, Padres play basebrawl

An AP Sports Analysis By JOHN NELSON AP Sports Writer

The Atlanta Braves and San Diego Padres were playing a game of baseball, and a hockey game broke out.

It was as tasteless a display of prepubescent petulance as ever has been witnessed on a ball field. It made the thugs of the National Hockey League look like renaissance men.

It was bad enough when two managers, two coaches and nine players were ejected for their parts in a beanball war and series of bench-clearing fights, but then the fans at Atlanta also became involved, resulting in five civilian arrests.

Invectives were hurled, bats were wielded, beer mugs and beer were thrown, arms and fists were swung, bodies hurtled like missiles from scattered corners of the stands — and it never seemed to stop.

It started with the first pitch of Sunday's game when Atlanta pitcher Pascual Perez hit Alan Wiggins in the back. A mistake, he said. The Padres didn't believe him.

Three San Diego pitchers then took four tries at Perez until Craig Lefferts finally hit him in the eighth inning, spurring the first of two riots. And, when Atlanta's Donnie Moore hit Graig Nettles on his hindmost portion in the ninth inning, the benches cleared again in uncontrollable fury.

Even Bob Horner, who is on the Braves' disabled list with a broken right wrist, was on the field in the ninth inning, wearing his cast and an Atlanta uniform after starting the day in the press box wearing street clothes.

John McSherry, chief of the besieged umpiring crew, could not have assessed the damage more succinctly when he said: "It really set back the game." All the way to the Dark Ages.

After it was over — with Atlanta winning 5-3, by the way — the name-calling began. It wasn't much prettier than the scene on the field.

Braves Manager Joe Torre called Padres Manager Dick Williams an idiot "with a capital 'I'" and likened the San Diego skipper to Hitler. Williams accused Torre of orchestrating a plot of intimidation, "but we can't be intimidated. We won't be intimidated." It sounded like grade school stuff.

Perez said the pitch that hit Wiggins slipped out of his hand.

Karate championships to be held in Pampa

The first U.S.A. Tae Kwon Do Karate Championships will be held Sept. 28 at the Pampa High School fieldhouse.

Registration will be held from 9 to 11 a.m. at high school gym with the final demonstrations getting underway at 5 p.m.

All competitors are required to wear regular Tae Kwon Do or Karate uniforms and protective hand and foot gear. Foam rubber material will be mandatory for all free-fight competitors.

All competitors must be students of an established school or club, whose instructor holds the rank of at least a first degree black belt.

Rules from the Amateur Organization of Karate will be followed. There will be no face contact. There will be two points for kicking and one point for hand techniques.

Entry fee is $25 for black belt fighting or forms (one or both) and $20 for white-brown belt fighting and forms and $15 for one.

Admission is $4 for adults and $3 for children.

Blount named as player relations head

By BOB GREENE AP Sports Writer

While National Football League teams made wholesale cuts to reach their roster limits of 70 players, the NFL office increased its staff by one.

Mel Blount, who retired prior to this season after starting at cornerback with the Pittsburgh Steelers for 14 years, was named Monday as the league's director of player relations, replacing the late Buddy Young, who died in an automobile accident last September.

Blount, 38, played on four Super Bowl championship teams with the Steelers and was selected to the Pro Bowl five times. His 57 interceptions tie him for seventh place on the NFL's all-time list.

"One area I would like to concentrate on is finding off-season jobs for the players to make sure they are ready for a career after football," Blount said. "Playing professional football is a short-lived career. Not everyone is as fortunate as I was to play 14 years."

One of those who may not even start an NFL career is quarterback Bruce Grant, the son of former Minnesota Vikings Coach Bud Grant.

A free agent from the University of Minnesota-Duluth, Bruce Grant was one of three players cut by the Vikings. His father resigned as coach of the Vikings last winter after 17 years in the job.

Several other players were placed on various exempt lists to enable the Vikings to reduce their roster to 70, with former New York Giant linebacker Brad Van Pelt put in the "did not report" category.

The St. Louis Cardinals obtained second-year linebacker John Harper from the Atlanta Falcons for an undisclosed draft choice, veteran defensive end Brison Manor was traded by the Denver Broncos to the Tampa Bay Buccaneers for an undisclosed future draft choice, tight end Jerome Barkum, cut by the Giants after walking out of camp, signed with the Washington Redskins and the San Francisco 49ers signed veteran quarterback Joe Montana to a new six-year contract.

The Giants cut eight players, including eight-year veteran receiver Johnny Perkins.

DON'T KISS $8,938 GOODBYE

That's how much you could lose just on resale value if you don't buy a John Deere

Looking for a big discount when you buy a tractor? Don't get stuck with an even bigger discount when you want to sell it.

Always consider resale value when you price a field tractor. Because the differences among brands may sometimes be bigger than ANY purchase incentive.

Compare John Deere with our two leading competitors. According to the Spring 1984 Official Guide of the National Farm and Power Equipment Dealers Association, the average 5-year-old John Deere 4440 sells for 106 percent of its 1979 list price. One leading competitor averages 87 percent of its 1979 list price. The other averages 73 percent.

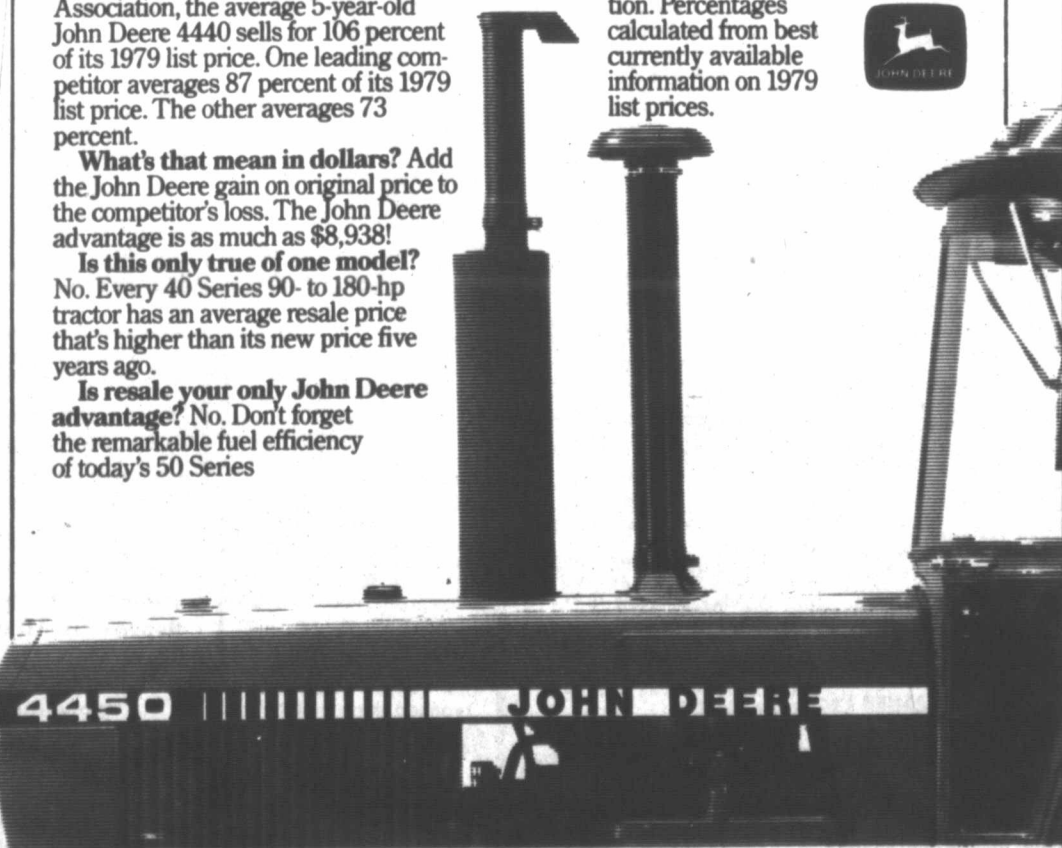

What's that mean in dollars? Add the John Deere gain on original price to the competitor's loss. The John Deere advantage is as much as $8,938!

Is this only true of one model? No. Every 40 Series 90- to 180-hp tractor has an average resale price that's higher than its new price five years ago.

Is resale your only John Deere advantage? No. Don't forget the remarkable fuel efficiency of today's 50 Series

John Deere tractors. And don't forget our unmatched reputation for high quality and high reliability. See your John Deere dealer. He'll be happy to explain the big difference between a low-price tractor and a low-cost John Deere: 100-hp 4050, 120-hp 4250, 140-hp 4450, 165-hp 4650 or 190-hp 4850.

NOTE: Average resale prices taken from Spring 1984 Official Guide of The National Farm and Power Equipment Dealers Association. Percentages calculated from best currently available information on 1979 list prices.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A judge sentenced two teen-agers to three years in a youth facility for the robbery of the Hollywood Hills home of actress Penny Marshall, despite an apology from one of the two.

Miss Marshall, who starred in the canceled television series "Laverne and Shirley," had testified she was confronted by two intruders dressed as Japanese warriors. She said she gave one of them $400 in cash and $3,000 in traveler's checks.

Anthony Pierson, 18, and Daniel Sheppard, 19, were sentenced Monday by Superior Court Judge Henry Nelson to serve three years in California Youth Authority custody, court clerk Mike Hart said.

The two had pleaded guilty in June to one count each of robbery in the March 13 incident.

Sheppard also pleaded guilty to an allegation he used a nunchaku — an outlawed martial arts weapon consisting of two metal or wood bars connected by a chain — during the robbery. Pierson pleaded guilty also to using a Japanese sword in the robbery.

The two, jailed in lieu of $20,000 bail each since their arrests the night of the incident, had faced up to seven years in jail.

Miss Marshall, 41, testified at a preliminary hearing that one of the intruders apologized.

"He said if he had known it was my house, he wouldn't have broken in, because he liked the show," she said.

LONDON (AP) — Former Prime Minister Edward Heath says burglars that broke into his home took items "of immense personal and sentimental value," including a medal awarded him by the late Pope Paul VI.

The stolen items included silver salvers presented to him by the artillery company he once commanded, a model of a ship made by Napoleon prisoners of war in 1810 and gifts he received while prime minister of the Conservative government between 1970 and 1974.

"I am very grieved. They are things which could never be replaced," said Heath, 68, who found the items missing Saturday when he returned from a yachting regatta.

News in brief

ROME (AP) — A magistrate has indicted 180 people in connection with five years of terrorist activities in Rome by the leftist Red Brigades guerrillas.

Magistrate Rosario Priore's action Monday ended two years of investigation into scores of attacks by the Red Brigades from 1978 through 1982. No trial dates were set.

Priore said he would delay a decision on jailed union leader Luigi Scricciolo and his wife, both accused of attempted espionage for Bulgaria, pending further investigation.

Scricciolo, former leader of the international section of the Socialist-dominated UIL labor union, and his estranged wife, Paola, were arrested in February 1982.

They are accused of trying to establish contacts between the Red Brigades and Bulgarian officials when the Brigades kidnaped U.S. Brig. Gen. James Dozier on Dec. 17, 1981. Dozier was rescued by police six weeks later.

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski and other top government officials have received a pay raise that nearly doubles their salaries, the government newspaper reports.

Reagan bombing remark gets scrutiny

LOS ANGELES (AP) — While Democratic presidential hopeful Walter Mondale criticized President Reagan for joking that the Soviet Union was about to be bombed, White House officials sought to learn the cause of the slip-up that allowed the joke to be recorded by news networks.

CBS and NBC aired their recordings of the President's remarks on Monday evening's news programs, two days after Reagan told the joke while testing a microphone prior to his regular Saturday radio address from his ranch near Santa Barbara.

As recorded by CBS, the President said, "My fellow Americans, I'm pleased to tell you today that I've signed legislation that will outlaw Russia forever. We begin bombing in five minutes."

A White House official, who spoke only on the condition that he not be identified, confirmed the President had made the statement, but said it was merely a joke by a man who likes to tell jokes.

"It's unfortunate that it got out."

COP lauded for disarming bomb on bus

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A "real hero" policeman who spotted a ticking bomb on a bus carrying Turkish Olympic athletes' luggage disarmed it by pulling out the right wire, the police chief said, but authorities were left wondering how the bomb got there.

Officer James Pearson discovered the bomb as he checked the bus while it was unloading at Los Angeles International Airport about 5:45 p.m. Monday, minutes after Turkish athletes and officials had left another bus at the airport.

The 52 members of the Turkish delegation were among thousands of athletes and officials who poured out of the city a day after the Summer Olympics ended.

No one was injured, and "no one has taken any credit" for planting the bomb, said police Chief Daryl Gates, although immediate speculation centered on Armenian terrorists who had threatened to attack the Turkish athletes. Such an attack was a chief worry of Olympic security planners.

Publicity about the incident touched off a spate of telephoned bomb threats, Gates said, forcing the evacuation of about 6,000 people from three terminals of the one of the nation's busiest airports.

And at Dulles Airport outside Washington, D.C., authorities herded U.S. medalists and their guests off buses as a "purely precautionary" measure, said airport spokesman David Hess. The buses were searched, delaying athletes who were in the capital for a parade today, about 1 1/2 hours.

Los Angeles police said it was not known how the bomb was planted in the wheel well, evading a security network that law enforcement officials said was particularly aimed at protecting high-risk nations like Turkey.

The Turkish delegation had traveled to the airport on two other buses to board an Air France jet and were already inside the terminal when the bomb was found. But there were "several people," possibly Olympic security guards, aboard the baggage bus when Pearson found the bomb, Gates said, and it could have caused "severe damage" had it gone off.

Gates said Pearson, 40, and a nine-year police veteran, "spotted something that shouldn't have been there."

The bomb was ticking and as Pearson grabbed it, an alarm went off, "indicating the bomb was ready to blow," Gates said.

"He reached up and pulled out what he thought was the right wire" and then "raced about 60 yards" to carry the bomb away from the bus, Gates said. The bomb squad was then called, and the bomb was neutralized, Gates said at the airport.

He called Pearson "a real hero."

Boeing rolls out last of its 727 line

SEATTLE (AP) — When the last Boeing 727 rolls out of production today, it will mark the first time the Boeing Commercial Airplane Co. has stopped building a commercial jetliner model.

The 727, introduced in 1962, is being discontinued because newer airplanes fly with a smaller crew, use less fuel and are quieter, said spokesman Tom Cole.

"I don't want to say it's obsolete, because they will still be flying. But in the future we won't be selling any of them," Cole said.

The 727 is Boeing's second line of jets and is the first model to be discontinued, Cole said. A modified version of the 707, Boeing's oldest line, still is being produced for the military.

Cole said the last 727 model brings the total sold to 1,832 since the first craft was produced 22 years ago.

Cole said the 727 will be replaced by the larger 176-passenger 757 and the 140-seat 737-300, both of which have two-crew members. The 727 required three crew members.

he said. He added that the White House was investigating to see how the slip-up occurred and to make sure it didn't happen again.

But Mondale, speaking in Minneapolis, said of the joke, "I don't think it is very funny."

"When the world hears those sorts of things, maybe some will dismiss it as some kind of joke; others may think it means something."

Officially, administration spokesmen continued to decline all comment, insisting that anything the President said before he went on the air was off the record.

Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, the Democratic vice presidential candidate, also criticized the comment.

"I don't know how you feel, but I don't think it is a joking matter," she told a campaign audience in Los Angeles.

There was also criticism abroad. The opposition party in West Germany, the Social Democrats, issued a press release calling Reagan "an irresponsible old man" and the leftist Green Party said the "perverse joke... makes the blood of every reasonable person run cold."

The prestigious Paris newspaper Le Monde headlined its story about the comment, "Gaffe." And in Britain, an opposition member of Parliament, Labor's David Winnick, urged Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher "to tell President Reagan that the British people are not amused by his sick form of humor."

The recording of Reagan's radio broadcasts is handled by the White House Communications Agency. One official source predicted there would be "recriminations" in the agency because precautions to prevent such an incident from happening were already supposed to be in effect after previous embarrassing Reagan comments made into live microphones that were thought to be off.

No reporters or network technicians were present at the recording session, but the joke was heard and recorded at the White House press center in Santa Barbara, miles from the ranch.

CBS and Cable News Network recorded the full remark, and NBC recorded part of it. But all three networks declined to air it, citing an understanding with the White House that remarks during microphone checks would be off the record.

However, CBS and NBC decided to air their recordings Monday after other news organizations, including The Associated Press, carried detailed reports of what was said. Print reporters were not a party to the understanding, worked out in 1982 after the previous Reagan slip-ups.

CBS President Edwin Joyce explained that "it is customary that once an off-the-record comment is reported by any news organization, others are no longer obligated to treat the information as off the record."
