Minor Shocks Add To Disaster Terror

By VICTOR YEPES

MEXICO CITY (UP)-Minor new shocks added early today to the terror wrought by Mexico's worst earthquake in 48 years. Loss of life was high from destroyed buildings and from floods, fires and landslides spawned by the tremblors.

The known dead was 46 with some 600 persons ipjured and dozens missing. The death toll increased as thousands of volunteer rescue workers dug through the debris of homes and apartment houses in Mexico City, the hardest hit in the 160,000 square mile area rocked by the quakes. Another 114 persons were reported killed, but the reports were un-confirmed. A spokesman for the governor of Michoacan State on Tourists Tell City reported 72 drowned in floods, but Mexico's minister of hydraulic Of Massive the Pacific Ocean west of Mexico "inaccurate."

ATTENTION ALL PAMPA VOTERS

Exercise Your Right To Help DETERMINE PAMPA'S FUTURE

VOTE TUESDAY!

HERE IS THE ISSUE:

We in Pampa have the opportunity to rejoin the Canadian River Municipal Water Authority and protect our future rights for the water that we may be needing in future years.

The reason we withdrew from the CRMWA in 1955 was due to the excessive cost of water and the large quantity that was required that we pay for whether needed or

By rejoining the Authority now we have a new beginning and are not assumingany financial obligation, and will have a voice in all future transactions.

If A Majority Votes No we lose our rights for water in the Canadian River.

If A Majority Votes Yes we will take a new look at the future water for Pampa, and if the price is excessive we will again withdraw as we did in 1955.

It is hoped that the voters of Pampa will think of the future water needs before casting their votes, but be sure and cast your vote either YES or NO. This is our opportunity to either get back in the CRMWA, or we will be out and have no voice in what happens to this new supply of water.

If we rejoin the CRMWA, the City of Pampa still retains the right to approve or disapprove any future contract that may be negotiated.

I would like to say something in accordance with Kathy's letter, I am a freshman in high school and I am allowed to go out on dates. I don't think it's old fashioned for the boy to meet the girl's parents before he takes her

Is it old fashioned to say thank you after someone has given you something or done something for you? Is it old fashioned to always be courteous and to always have good manners? Of course it isn't, Therefore, why is it old fashioned for the boy who wants to take you out to speak to your parents first? It shows good manners and is courteous of the boy to speak to your parents first. Your parents are looking out for you and they want to know the boy you are going to go out with.

Sometimes they can see something about him that you can't Therefore, sometimes they won't let you go out with him. Don't be mad at them. They are only looking out for your good. You should respect their judgment, They are older than you and know more about this crazy, mixed-up world than you do. I am very thankful for my parents and I respect their judgment very mucn.

Sometimes I can't go out with someone because my folks don't think he is a very good driver. I don't like speed and reckless driving and I im very grateful for my parents' opinions. They can see things that are blind to me and they keep me from getting

The parents should not overdo It and not let you go out with him until he has visited them for several evenings, though. That would only make the boy feel funny and might even make him not want to take you out. It might also keep others boys from asking you out.

Justice And Mercy

The libertarian philosophy provides more than a potential turning point in the current political debacle. In essence it is a way of life, based upon the reality which is man as well as man's relationship to eternal truth both spiritual and material.

Thus, in an effort to understand more about man and his nature, it is inevitable that justice must come into the discussion.

What is justice? The ancient Babylonians and Egyptians, although differing in many areas of their basic ethnics, agreed that justice was simply balance. The scales, still in use today as a symbol of justice, were considered by these early civilizations as emblematic of the natural forces of life.

Ma-at, the god of justice of the Egyptian pantheon, was usually depicted carrying his scales with which to weigh to actions and the choices of men. Ma-at's personal symbol was the feather. The pharoah's belief provided that at death all of a man's evil deeds were put into one side of the scale. On the other side, the feather of Ma-at was placed. If the feather outweighed the evil, the individual was slated for a sojourn in the Egyptian heaven. If the evil outweighed the feather, then the soul would journey into the abode of the dead-never-to-be_

It was from this ancient balance idea that the concept of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth developed. This was the lex talionis which provided that if the scales of nature were tipped in any direction or to any degree, than an equal amount of tipping in the exact opposite direction had to take place. This was compelled by the laws of these early peoples.

As time passed, however, something else was learned. Bodies of religious thought dating from apuroximately 300 B. C. onward, tended to extol the virtues of a new quality, not noted prior to that time. Justice in absolute began to give way to mercy in the non-absolute. Mercy and charity, both attributes of love, began to modify the powers and the intensity of governments.

While a just man could insist on the eye for an eye decision, a merciful man might go beyond this point in ameliorating the punishment which might otherwise fall to the lot of another who had wronged him. The advance of civilization began to be noted at this point. The understanding of freedom, which is based on justice in one sense, expanded another sense as the powers of government were reduced or eliminated in particular instances.

Down through the ages this tendency to modify justice and to temper it with mercy has been clearly shown. The progress has been neither smooth nor certain. Human beings are not infallible. And, further, there are grave questions as to whether, in some instances, mercy cannot be interpreted by some as a sign of weakness and hence an Invitation for some further trespass.

During the days of Henry VIII of England, Louis-V of France and elsewhere, there were literally hundreds of crimes which carried the death penalty. Property was scarce and of incalculable value. Crimes against property were treated in capital fashion.

Yet, the more man came to believe in God, the more he tended to put the matter of punishment for evil into God's hands, rather than into the hands of the state.

It can be shown, we believe, that the concept of justice maintained in absolute balance according to lex talionis must inevitably contain some traces of collectivist intent. The right of the individual to be merciful is superseded by the state which demands that the scales be righted, even if cruelty must be invoked. The state is universally concerned with mass and with equality. The inequality of individualism, which has resulted in all civilizing influences and is a more sure base for freedom than is justice, did not come into widespread usage until the founding of the American colonies.

Then, for something close to 150 years prior to the Declaration of Independence and the war of separation with Britain, the concept of individual responsibility gained its ascendancy. During this period, justice was notably absent in the collectivized meaning of the word. There were few instruments of justice such as courts and policemen which could function. It must have been that giant injustice did occur, yet, in the end, it must also have been that circumstances provided for more mercy since the result of those 150 years of freedom provided us with so many incentives to assume individual responsibility.

Perhaps, in time, as man develops, he will find that justice, which is natural, is inferior to mercy, charity and love, which occupy a stratum above pure justice. Whether or not this can be discerned at this time, we must remark that mercy, charity and love are better indices of freedom than an eye for an eye.

"The capitalist system (as opposed to socialism) has seven main key features or pillars, which might be described as the pillars of capitalism, as opposed again to those of socialism:

"I. Private Property in the Means of Production . . . and also in land and consumption-goods. . . coupled with freedom NOT to sell, or buy - if one does not personally want to.

"II. Freedom to save, invest, in herit and bequeath. "III. Free markets, . . meaning Uncontrolled prices, and freedom 'brutally' to charge 'what the traffic will bear' (for one's own property,) and to buy in the cheapest market in one's own
