Two Pride of Pampa High School Band members are embarking for San Antonio early tomorrow to participate in the All-State Band activities there, Director Charles Johnson said today.

Anthony Gilreath and Jenni Shufelberger are among 200 outstanding Texas high school band students who were chosen as members of the All-State Band. Gilreath plays the bass clarinet and Shufelberger, alto clarinet. They qualified for All-State at competition in Lubbock on Jan. 6.

Thursday and Friday, the two Pampa students will be rehearsing with the other 198 band members at the San Antonio Convention Center in preparation for the All-State Band's annual performance Saturday, Johnson said.

On Feb. 3, a number of Pampa High School and Middle School band students received honors at Solo and Ensemble Contest at West Texas State University in Canyon.

A first division is the highest rating given to a student on any solo or ensemble, Johnson said.

The following high school band members received first division ratings on Class II solos: Christy Hoover, Angi Long, Julie Powell, Kerri White, all on flute; Daryl Auwen, cornet; and Donnie Medley, percussion.

Brass choir members who received a first division are Daryl Auwen, Troy Avendano, Maressa Bailey, Micah Brooks, Amy Forister, Scott Hahn, Danny Hendricks, Tammy Lane, Michael Malone, Bradley Newman, Joseph Nunn, Heidi Phetteplace, Jeremy Roberts, Richie Thompson and Brandon Wood.

District Judge McIlhany revokes probations for three people

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

District Judge Grainger McIlhany revoked the probations of three people Monday in 31st District Court, ordering them to serve active terms after finding they had violated their probations.

Harold Eugene McPherson, 23, of 209 S. Nelson, was sentenced to nine years in the state penitentiary following a probation revocation hearing.

District Attorney Harold Comer said McPherson received an eight-year probation sentence on June 18, 1984 on a burglary charge.

On Dec. 20, 1989, that sentence was extended for one year after McPherson committed another offense.

On Jan. 26, a motion was filed to revoke McPherson's probation on an injury to a child charge.

Comer said McPherson admitted "pinching" a three-year-old child in the breast area in an attempt to get the child to be quiet. Injury to a child under the age of 15 is a third-degree felony.

In an unrelated case, Antonio Garcia Galaviz, 27, of HCR Box 125, White Deer, was sentenced to two years in the Gray County jail by Judge McIlhany after his probation on a driving while intoxicated conviction was revoked.

Comer said that on Jan. 14 Galaviz was arrested for driving while intoxicated, violating his probation. Galaviz was convicted on June 21, 1988 for driving while intoxicated and received a two-year probation sentence, according to court records.

In a third case heard by McIlhany on Monday, William Shelton Cook, 24, of Amarillo, was sentenced to five years in the state penitentiary after his probation was revoked.

Cook received a five-year probation sentence on June 11, 1987 on an unauthorized use of a motor vehicle conviction.

Comer said Cook violated his probation by failing to report to his probation officer as ordered, by becoming delinquent on his fines and court costs, by becoming delinquent on restitution and by failing to reimburse the court for his defense fees.

Motion to revoke probatioq was filed Sept. 2, 1988, but Cook was just located recently after he was arrested in Potter County on a driving while intoxicated charge.

He had been incarcerated in Potter County on the DWI charge since Sept. 28.

During the hearing Monday, Jeane Roper, head probation officer in Gray County, recommended that Cook be given a second chance and placed on the Intensive Supervised Probation and have his probation extended for one year, until June 11, 1993.

"This time he's been incarcerated and this has gotten his attention," Roper said.

She added that considering the short length of time Cook would serve on a five-year sentence because of the state's overcrowded prison problem, probation would be better.

"I hope we would have an alternative other than prison," she told Judge McIlhany.

McIlhany said, "His whole whereabouts is pretty much a blank to the state. I don't see any reason why he should be left on probation. We haven't had anyone in a long time who has completely ignored the rules."

The judge said not sentencing him to prison just because the state does not have room for him is not a valid reason to continue Cook on probation.

Cook testified, "I learned my lesson this time and I feel I can hold up to my word this time."

When asked by Comer why he went 18 months without reporting to his probation officer as directed, Cook said he and his probation officer at the time were not getting along.

Court-appointed attorney J.A. "Gene" Martindale told the judge that he believed Cook was sincere when he told the court he would now comply with his probation.

Comer told Judge McIlhany, "I'm going to have to part with the probation officer on this one. I don't know of a more flagrant violation a probationer can commit than failing to report ... that's the easiest thing you can do on probation."

Judge's ruling against Reagan poses executive privilege test

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A ruling that former President Reagan must testify at an Iran-Contra trial could lead to a major constitutional battle over the right of presidents to refuse to testify or reveal confidential documents in court.

U.S. District Court Judge Harold Greene on Monday ordered Reagan to provide videotaped testimony at the trial of former national security adviser John Poindexter.

But the judge gave Reagan and President Bush until Friday to invoke executive privilege to avoid testimony by the former president.

Greene also renewed his order that Reagan immediately turn over 33 diary entries to Poindexter. Reagan promptly invoked executive privilege to avoid turning portions of his diaries over to Poindexter.

However, there was no immediate decision on whether Reagan would agree to provide a videotaped deposition before the start of Poindexter's trial.

"It would be inconceivable ... to exempt Mr. Reagan from the duty of every citizen to give evidence that will permit the reaching of a just outcome of this criminal prosecution," Greene said Monday.

Legal scholars said the judge's order could lead to a new Supreme Court test of executive privilege, the doctrine invoked to shield presidents from court appearances or divulging confidential information.

"It remains to be seen what Reagan will do," said Georgetown University law professor Samuel Dash, who was chief counsel to the Senate Watergate committee in the mid-1970s.

When Reagan was president, Dash noted, "he told the American people he believed he should be open completely in the Iran-Contra case. I don't know whether he has changed his mind."

If Reagan refuses to testify on the basis of executive privilege, Greene could postpone the Poindexter trial - now scheduled to begin Feb. 20 - while the matter is appealed directly to the Supreme Court.

Given the importance of the issue, the high court could expedite consideration of the case and hear arguments in the spring.

The court's last word on executive privilege was provided in 1974 when it ordered President Richard M. Nixon to provide White House tape recordings to a prosecutor in the Watergate bugging case.

The justices in 1974 unanimously said, "The general assertion of privilege must yield to the demonstrated, specific need for evidence in a pending criminal trial."

But New York University law professor Bernard Schwartz said the ruling's impact is not clear-cut.

"What would have happened if Nixon raised a claim of national security?" Schwartz asked, suggesting the outcome might have been different.

Poindexter is charged with conspiracy, obstructing Congress and making false statements.

Invoking executive privilege regarding the diary entries will allow Reagan to gain access to a secret filing in which Poindexter told why he needs the diaries.

If Reagan determines the excerpts contain admissible evidence not available from other sources, "the former president may decide to waive his claim of privilege," said Reagan attorney Theodore Olson.

Greene said he will allow Poindexter to question Reagan on a wide range of subjects in the Iran-Contra affair, including whether Reagan approved Poindexter's denials to Congress that former White House national security aide Oliver L. North was raising money and providing military advice to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

Poindexter also will be allowed to ask Reagan about "the president's knowledge regarding the relationship of Oliver North with specific individuals involved in Iran-Contra activities."

The president told the investigative Tower Board on Jan. 26, 1987, that he did not know the National Security Council staff was helping the Contras.

Poindexter has said Reagan took notes at meetings focusing on congressional inquiries into North's activities to help the Contras.

Officials say school funding plan could devastate property tax rates

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

State Rep. Warren Chisum and Pampa school superintendent Dr. Harry Griffith agree that a new, court-mandated state financing plan for public schools must include new state taxes or it could devastate local property tax rates.

Recently the Texas Supreme Court ruled the state's method of funding discriminates against property-poor districts. The Legislature has until May 1 to come up with a new funding plan.

Current options include redistribution of the current $4.8 billion in state aid and $5.2 billion in local property taxes, consolidation of school tax districts by county or an increase in state taxes to pump at least another billion dollars into state coffers for education.

"There's probably a good reason to put more money into the system," Chisum said. "We can probably broaden the sales tax base. We probably have to put in another billion dollars as well as maybe some voluntary consolidation."

Griffith said since the wealthiest districts in Texas currently receive virtually no state aid, any redistribution would come from taking money from "average wealthy districts" such as Pampa.

"If that happens, Pampa will experience a catastrophic loss," Griffith said adding that Pampa currently spends $500 less per student than the national average and $300 less than the state average.

"Forty-five percent of our revenue comes from the state," he said. "If they take that away, our property taxpayers can't make that up."

Texas Education Agency Commissioner William Kirby said earlier this week that a redistribution plan will put local school boards in "a vise" of being forced to drastically increase local taxes to make up for the drop in state aid.

Chisum said the legislative fight over school funding, which will include discussions of state tax increases, will be as hot an issue as the recent debate over workman's compensation.

"The only difference is we're working toward a May 1 deadline that the court has set," Chisum said. "If we want to choose, we will have to get something done. Not everyone in this deal is going to win, though. There will be some losers."

He added that if the Legislature does not arrive at a plan the court deems fair, he feels certain they have their own plan waiting in the wings.

Chisum said he would rather see new sales taxes passed than a state income tax, which Kirby proposed as a partial solution to the funding problem.

Griffith said consolidation of school tax districts from the present 1,066 to a bi-county district system would reduce the number to 254, something he opposes but thinks has a good chance of passage.

"It would level us down," said Lefors Superintendent Ed Gilliland. "We spend greater than the average amount for our students and it would bring us down. I'm totally against it."

Liberal party leaders attack Gorbachev's plan

By ANN IMSE
 Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) - Liberal Communist Party leaders today attacked Mikhail S. Gorbachev's daring plan for ending the party's monopoly on power as not radical enough to solve the country's pressing problems, participants said.

But Politburo member Yegor K. Ligachev, a hard-liner, called for a careful review of the Soviet president's proposals, which would fundamentally alter this nation's system of government.

Gorbachev on Monday opened a pivotal session of the Central Committee by proposing the party abandon its guaranteed monopoly on power and be forced to compete with other parties for the right to lead the country.

Some speakers at today's Central Committee session criticized the platform, saying it was "based on old dogmas," said Alexander Fomin, a coal miner invited as a guest of the meeting.

"There were not enough radical proposals to solve the party's problems," Fomin in a summary of today's debate he offered during a break in the closed-door session.

He did not detail the objections, and the Soviet media carried no details of today's session.

Another participant, Gen. Igor I. Kurenoi, said Ligachev, who last week came under attack in a newspaper for his conservative views, called in a speech for reviewing Gorbachev's proposals carefully.

The 69-year-old Soviet leader also pointed out shortcomings of the leadership's policies but did not propose solutions, Fomin said.

Gorbachev is in the middle of an intense struggle between progressives and conservatives over whether to completely abandon the centralized system of government in favor of a multiparty political system with a more capitalist economy.

The session has taken on crisis proportions because of the worsening Soviet economy and a rise in ethnic unrest throughout the country. It comes on the heels of a breathtaking series of revolts against old orthodox socialist governments in six East bloc nations.

On Monday, Gorbachev told the party's policy-making Central Committee that by letting outmoded ideas govern their policy, socialist countries had during the 20th century isolated themselves from "the general flow of civilization."

But his proposal met with stiff resistance in the largely conservative 249-member body. One participant said committee members did not applaud Gorbachev or anyone else on the first day of the two-day closed session.

Speaking confidently just days after rumors swept the world that he might step down as party chief, Gorbachev on Monday presented a new political program for the Communist Party based on a bill of rights.

"Man and his well-being are put in the center of the party's policy from now on and forever," he said. The speech, released later by Tass, did not detail the rights he wants to enshrine in the party's platform.

Gorbachev did not suggest that the party give up efforts to lead the country. Instead, he said it "intends to struggle for the role of ruling party, but strictly in the framework of the democratic process, rejecting any kind of legal or political advantage."

At some point, he said, growing pluralism "can lead to the creation of parties."

Gorbachev called for an end to a tenet of Leninism called "democratic centralism," which demands strict allegiance by the party's 20 million members to decisions made at the top.

He said the party's views on managing the economy and the government should no longer be pressed on Soviet society.

Lefors math team captures three trophies

LEFORS - Lefors High School math team brought home three trophies from a Saturday math and science competition at Levelland.

South Plains College Math and Science Contest in Levelland featured more than 200 contestants from Lubbock High, Lubbock Monterey, Lubbock Dunbar-Struggs, Lubbock Estacado, Seminole, Tulia, Plainview, Levelland, Littlefield, Meadow, Springlake-Earth, Shallowater, Sundown, Southland, Hale Center, Smyer and Lefors.

The competition was different from other area math/science contests because there was no division between large and small schools, and each school entered a team at each grade level, opposed to one high school team per school.

Following are the individual award winners in each grade division from Lefors High School:

Senior team: John Call, first in calculator, third in number sense, eighth in math; Kevin Mayfield, fifth in calculator; Jennifer Moore, sixth in calculator.

Sophomore team: Chad Quarles, second in calculator, fifth in number sense; Mickey Nunn, sixth in calculator, eighth in number sense; Andrew Swires, 10th in calculator.

Freshman team: Michelle Shedeck, first in calculator; Alta Joslyn, second in calculator; Ginger Hannon, fourth in calculator.

Overall math team trophy was awarded on the basis of combined scores in the calculator, number sense and math competitions.

The freshman team won the first place team trophy, and the sophomore and senior teams each won the third place team trophies in their divisions.

To complete teams at each of the three grade levels, several students volunteered to compete at higher grade levels.

Two eighth-grade students, Alta Joslyn and Ginger Hannon, teamed up with freshman Michelle Shedeck to complete the freshman team.

Andrew Swires and Jennifer Moore also competed in higher grades in order to complete their respective teams.

The next contest for the Lefors team will be the Lefors Math/Science Contest set for Feb. 17.

Cheney defends military budget to Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) - Defense Secretary Dick Cheney says his $292.1 billion defense budget provides an "orderly restructuring" of the military, but Democrats call it a weak response to revolutionary changes in Eastern Europe.

The defense secretary said Monday the Bush administration's plan to modernize its strategic forces, reduce troop levels in Europe and cancel some 20 conventional programs "preserves the elements of what we think is essential in terms of protecting the nation's security."

The budget proposal for fiscal 1991 would allow the United States to look back in a decade and say, "we did in fact undertake a build-down, a careful, orderly restructuring of our forces," Cheney told the Senate Budget Committee.

The Pentagon chief and Gen. Colin Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, were taking their defense of the administration's military spending plan to the House Armed Services Committee today.

Democrats on the Senate Budget Committee targeted the administration's call for an increase in funds for several big-ticket, strategic weapons, including the B-2 stealth bomber, the Strategic Defense Initiative and the two land-based, nuclear missiles.

"I think you're behind the power curve with regard to world events," Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., chairman of the Budget Committee, told Cheney.

The Democratic chairman questioned why the administration wants to raise spending on SDI by nearly $1 billion to $4.5 billion, and spend $5.5 billion for five B-2 bombers and $2.8 billion for the multiple-warhead, rail-garrison MX missile.

The president's budget also includes $202 million for the single-warhead, Midgetman missile.

"Why don't we wait and see what kind of world we're going to be living in in a very short period of time rather than going ahead and committing ourselves to these programs?" Sasser asked.

Cheney said the Pentagon is reviewing the strategic programs and will decide later whether to scale them back.

"I inherited all these systems," Cheney said. "That's what Congress approved at the recommendation of the administration. You have to look at each one on its merits in terms of deciding."

Sasser suggested that perhaps the administration should "push these programs off until your review is completed."

But a Republican on the panel, Sen. Warren Rudman of New Hampshire, took a different approach, suggesting that an additional increase in strategic modernization might be in order.

"When you have that kind of instability, you don't drop your guard," he said.

The administration also came under attack from some Democrats for the president's plan to reduce forces in Europe to 225,000.

Program set to help children cope with competition

Dr. Lynne Thibodeaux, 4-H and youth development specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, is to present a program for the public on helping children cope with competition at 7 p.m. Thursday in the Pampa High School Auditorium.

"We have all heard of public outbursts by irate parents at various competitive events," said Joe VanZandt, county extension agent. "Sometimes the public displays are aimed at whoever is in charge, but at other times, they are aimed at the youth involved. But probably more damaging to youngsters growing up is what is said at home in the privacy of the family."

VanZandt said that all this has an impact on a person's self-worth because how one copes with being judged by others directly affects both children and adults.

"A major part of our American society involves competition," VanZandt explained, "and it applies to almost all aspects of our lives. A person cannot go through life experiencing only success. Most 'successful' people in life have learned how to deal with personal defeat as a youngster and then built on those inner support strengths."

Adults should allow young people to experience the pain of defeat and then help them deal with the loss in a positive way, VanZandt stressed.

"Sometimes parents try to relieve their own childhood through their children's activities, which in turn robs the children of developing their own personality traits," he added.

"Probably the most difficult thing is for parents to take an objective look at themselves and their own interactions with their children," the county agent said. "Too many times, we get caught up in the whirl of everyday living and cannot back away far enough to take an objective view of the family relationships."

Parents and children are encouraged to attend the free program titled "Learning to Help Your Child Cope With Competition" Thursday, sponsored by the Gray County Agricultural Extension office.

National Guard, local businesses sponsoring M*A*S*H blood drive

Four area businesses and the Army National Guard are joining together to sponsor the first local M*A*S*H Blood Drive at the Texas Army National Guard Armory on Hwy. 60 East this Saturday.

Bobby Thomas of Coffee Memorial Blood Center in Amarillo said the event will begin at 11 a.m. and conclude at 7 that evening.

"We're going to be giving away M*A*S*H shirts to the first 100 people who donate blood," Thomas said.

Business sponsors of the event include First National Bank, Frank's Foods, KGRO/KOMX Radio and The Pampa News.

"We've had this in Amarillo for several years," Thomas said. "This is our first year to have it in Pampa. We'd like to make it an annual event."

Thomas said the goal for the drive is 150 pints of blood.

"We'll have the whole thing fixed up like a M*A*S*H unit and we'll have someone there dressed like Cpl. Klinger and the whole thing," Thomas said.

He added that KOMX will be doing broadcasts through the day reminding people to donate blood.

Coffee Memorial Blood Center serves 20 hospitals in the 26-county Panhandle area, including Pampa.

School

McLean and Grandview-Hopkins will be in the same district with the same tax rate. Chisum and Griffith agreed that under that scenario, the state would probably encourage those districts to also consolidate operations.

Gilliland said he and other Lefors school officials would be "screaming bloody murder" to state representatives when the special session begins on Feb. 27.

"But reality sets in and you realize that what will happen is what's good for Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio, Houston, Austin and El Paso, the biggest districts. That's where the power is," Gilliland said.

While Griffith is concerned a funding plan could severely hurt the Pampa district, he has no doubt that equitable funding is needed.

"The wealthiest school districts and the poorest school districts in the nation are both here in Texas," he said.

The court ruling which struck down the current funding plan shows that per-student spending in Texas ranges from $2,112 in the poorest communities to $19,333 in the richest areas.

Investigators study scene of plane crash that killed candidate's children

By TED BRIDIS
Associated Press Writer

COALGATE, Okla. (AP) — Investigators arrived Monday at the scene of a small plane crash that killed four people, including two children of a congressional candidate.

The plane, which disappeared in stormy weather Wednesday night while on a campaign trip, was the focus of an intensive search by volunteers from three states before it was found Sunday night by a woman feeding cattle in rural southeast Oklahoma.

A team from the state medical examiner's began its investigation at the site Monday, and investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board and the FAA also were at the scene.

Workers used a backhoe to move the wreckage, allowing rescuers to remove the bodies of the victims.

"We're starting our preliminary investigation this morning," said Ray Wall of the NTSB Fort Worth office.

Wall said weather reports show the plane was going through a frontal zone when it disappeared Wednesday night. Evidence at the crash site indicated it was heading toward McAlester, he said.

Kecia Brewster, 16, and Kent Brewster, 13, had accompanied their father, State Rep. Bill Brewster, D-Marietta, as he kicked off his campaign for the 3rd District congressional seat. They left McAlester Wednesday night for Ardmore while Brewster and his wife, Suzie, flew in another plane to Oklahoma City. A third plane carrying campaign workers and Brewster's other daughter landed safely in Ardmore.

Also on the downed plane were Herb Pate, 32, publisher of The Madill Record, and pilot Jack Kirkpatrick, 43, of Broken Arrow.

Foggy weather and rain had hampered the search, which began early Thursday, forcing searchers to cover the ground on foot, on horseback and in four-wheel-drive vehicles while airplanes and helicopters were grounded. The search area, which contained thick woods and tall grass, covered an 80-mile stretch from McAlester to Ardmore.

State Rep. Don Duke, D-Ardmore, praised the efforts of volunteers from Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas who participated in the search.

"I have never in my life, and I'm 57 years old, seen an outpouring from the heart by so many people as I've seen this weekend," he said. "It's not only a testament to Bill Brewster, but a testament to the Pate family and the Kirkpatrick family. I think it's also a testament to the people of those three states that they're caring, loving people."

Lt. Carolyn Wroblewski, spokeswoman for the Civil Air Patrol in Ardmore, said about 60 aircraft took part.

"It was a long tough road and we're just sorry the way it turned out," she said.

Coal County Commissioner Johnny D. Ward said the ground search for the plane had been concentrated just a mile from where the plane was found, about 7 1/2 miles north of Coalgate.

"We were kind of leaving the open areas to the air search," Ward said. "One of the pilots told me it resembled a land dump. That's why he didn't recognize it."

The nose of the plane buried itself about 6 feet into the mud in a boggy area about 10 feet from a small clump of trees, the highway patrol said.

Three victims' bodies were in the main wreckage, which is about the size of a car, and a fourth was in a smaller portion of the plane about 10 feet away, authorities said.

"We believe it crashed within 30 minutes of departure, but that won't be known for awhile," Highway Patrol Lt. Mike Grimes said after the plane was found Sunday. "We're basing that estimate on the distance the plane was from its departure point."

Freda Rogers, who lives about 100 yards from the crash site, was feeding cattle on her property about 4 p.m. Sunday when she saw something shiny, said Patrol Lt. Stewart Meyer said. Ms. Rogers called Coal County Sheriff Joe Stone, who confirmed the plane was the missing aircraft, Meyer said.

The wreckage was located in a boggy area about 4 1/2 miles east of Oklahoma 75, authorities said.

"We deeply regret the sad ending of this tragedy," Gov. Henry Bellmon said in a statement issued by his office. "Shirley and I send our heartfelt sympathies to the families and friends of the accident victims. Those who joined in the difficult search and who spent long hours in attempting to locate the plane deserve the gratitude of all Oklahomans."

Bellmon also canceled Monday's State of the State address to the opening session of the Legislature. The Speaker's Ball, traditionally held to celebrate the opening of the legislative session, was postponed for two weeks.

Rotting fruit lies on the ground under dead trees in a grove west of Harlingen.

December freeze depletes orange, grapefruit crops

By JOEL WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

WESLACO (AP) — Don't look for any Texas grapefruit or oranges for the next year or two.

The stores won't have them.

December's hard freeze killed or damaged so many trees in the Lower Rio Grande Valley that there won't be a crop worth marketing for the next year or two, say citrus growers and scientists who are still assessing the damage.

"There will be a few pieces of fruit out there, but not a commercial crop," said Ray Prewett, executive vice president of Texas Citrus Mutual, a McAllen-based growers' organization.

Texas' 35,000-acre citrus industry is concentrated in three counties at the subtropical southern tip of the state.

December's freeze killed more than half of those trees, said Dr. Richard Hensz, director of the Texas A&I Citrus Center in Weslaco.

Trees that did survive won't recover enough to produce a marketable crop for a year or longer, Hensz said Monday at a meeting to discuss freeze damage and recovery with more than 200 citrus growers from South Texas and northern Mexico.

"There will not be a commercial crop this fall," Hensz said.

December's arctic blast killed up to three-fourths of the trees that survived a devastating 1983 freeze and roughly half the trees planted since then, Hensz said.

Many trees planted since 1983 were just coming into full production this year. It takes four to five years for trees to mature and produce a good crop.

"I would have had a heck of a crop this fall," said Mark McCaleb, who was just getting started in the business.

His small grove of three-year-old navel orange trees near Weslaco was just maturing until the freeze wiped them out, he said. But he plans to buy another 15 acres and stay in the business.

Trees that survived the December 1989 freeze will not produce much for next fall's crop because the cold killed the tender "fruit wood" that will not grow back for a year or two, Hensz said.

If a crop is produced the next year, he added, "it will have to be a pretty small one."

One consolation, Hensz said, is that more growers have tree insurance this year than they did in 1983.

The Texas Department of Agriculture estimates the damage to this year's citrus crop was $46.8 million, or more than half the crop's total estimated value of $80 million.

Including other fruit and vegetable crops, the Dec. 22-24 freeze caused $138 million in crop losses in South Texas and left more than 17,500 agricultural workers unemployed, according to the TDA.

Long-term damage to citrus trees could reach the hundreds of millions of dollars, Prewett said. Tree damage after the 1983 freeze was about $500 million, but there were twice as many acres planted then.

Hensz said it could be months before some of the trees die and make possible an accurate assessment of the damage.

"The big decision we've got to make is whether these old trees are worth trying to save," said Bob Smith, who manages about 1,000 acres of citrus near Mission. "We won't know that until we wait and see how they recover."

Man arrested in slaying of parents

CLEBURNE (AP) — An unemployed Cleburne area man was being held in lieu of $2 million bail in the shotgun slayings of his parents at their home in Johnson County.

Sheriff's department spokeswoman Pam Jetsel said David Hart initially telephoned officers and said his parents were missing and "there was blood all over" the house.

Jetsel said that Hart, 21, later told Sheriff Eddy Boggs and other investigators that he had shot his parents to death.

Police found the body of Betty Hart Sr., 53, a carpenter, and Harvey Hart, 49, in a van parked beside Interstate 35, about four miles from their home.

"He couldn't tell us why he did it," Jetsel said. "He gave no reason."

Wal-Mart offering scholarship to local high school senior

Pampa Wal-Mart officials announce the formation of a $1,000 Wal-Mart Foundation Community Scholarship to be presented to an area high school senior this spring.

The scholarship, payable over a one-year period and awarded to a college- or university-bound student, will be based on the student's scholastic and academic achievements, extracurricular and work activities, and financial need.

"We are very pleased to offer this annual scholarship to a deserving area student on behalf of our store and the company," said Rocky Brown, Pampa store manager. "Through Wal-Mart's scholarship program, we can contribute to the quality of life in the community and the opportunities of our area youth."

Brown explained that a team of judges, consisting of area business and community leaders, would be formed to evaluate the applications and make a final selection following student interviews.

Interested students may obtain applications from their school counselor or administrative office, he said. Applications must be returned to the school by the third week of February.

The Pampa Wal-Mart scholarship is one of more than 1,300 scholarships totaling more than $1.3 million being given by the retail chain based in Bentonville, Ark. The chain covers 27 states and is comprised of 1,325 stores.

PRI claims lead in local elections

LA PAZ, Mexico (AP) — The ruling party is claiming a lead in local elections in the border state of Baja California Sur, the official news agency Notimex says.

It said Monday that the two main opposition parties have conceded the unofficial lead claimed by the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, with about a third of the vote counted.

But neither the conservative National Action Party or the leftist Democratic Revolutionary Party conceded final victory to the PRI, which has ruled Mexico for 60 straight years.

Voters went to the polls Sunday to elect four mayors and 15 councilmen.

Auto insurance rates going up again

By SCOTT ROTHSCHILD
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — A healthy and competitive market in the automobile insurance industry led to adoption of an average 2.88 percent increase in premiums, State Board of Insurance members said.

Insurers on Monday appeared before the Insurance Board wanting a 12.8 percent increase, while the board's staff recommended a 6 percent jump.

Board member Jo Ann Howard of Austin proposed the 2.88 percent increase, noting that in 1988, nearly two-thirds of the auto insurance policies were written below the board-set rate.

She also said that the lower increase will encourage insurers to contain medical costs.

"It's past time that insurance companies look at holding down the cost and not passing on the cost," Mrs. Howard said.

The rates take effect May 1.

In approving the increase, the three-member board also departed from a tradition of accepting estimates of expenses from insurance companies in determining rates.

The board said it would only consider actual expenses to help calculate rates.

The industry-generated estimates usually are higher than the actual expenses.

Although the 2.88 percent increase was more than recommended by the state's consumer office, Kay Doughty, general counsel of the Office of Consumer Protection, said the change in figuring expenses was a big victory.

"That for us is a major achievement because that's something we've been arguing in favor of," Ms. Doughty said.

John Hildreth, director of the Southwest office of Consumers Union, said the decision on expenses will prevent insurance companies from passing on certain costs to the consumer, such as lobbying expenses.

"The industry should control their costs and pass on only actual and reasonable expenses to consumers," Hildreth said.

Doughty's office had recommended a 2.3 percent decrease in premiums.

"The rates are going to go up statewide for everybody, but not by very much," Doughty said.

Actual figures on how the board's decision would affect the 52 different rating territories in Texas were unavailable.

Rick Gentry, a spokesman for the insurance industry, said it was too early to tell what effect the rates will have.

"It's an extremely competitive market in Texas and I think today's decision will enhance that competition," Gentry said.

"Whatever happens generally remains to be seen. Obviously, each company is very carefully watching the results of today's hearing and I'm sure there will be some adjustments in the marketplace," he said.

Board member Richard Reynolds of Flower Mound initially proposed a 6 percent increase because of rising medical and court costs, which he blamed on trial lawyers.

But Chairman Paul Wrotenberg agreed with Howard's proposal and Reynolds later joined in to make the decision unanimous.

Let the people go, Mikhail Gorbachev

"They shot at everything that was moving, even people on their balconies," an eyewitness told The New York Times. It sounds like the Red Army invasion of Afghanistan 10 years ago. But the descriptions are of the Red Army invasion of another country, Azerbaijan, just last month.

True, Afghanistan in 1980 was an independent country, while Azerbaijan in 1990 has been a captive nation of the Soviet Union for some 70 years. Yet in 1980 the otherwise weak president, Jimmy Carter, denounced the Soviet invasion, whereas in 1990 President George Bush, supposedly a strong president, has given qualified support to this Soviet invasion.

What's going on? One obvious difference: This time the Soviets have more successfully manipulated outside opinion and Western leaders. The Red Army invaded after two weeks of the majority Azeris, who are Moslems, killing minority Armenians, who are Christians.

But there's more to this than the Soviets wish us to know, as has been revealed by Gary Kasparov, the world chess champion and one of the most independent figures in the Soviet Union. He is also a native of Baku, the Azerbaijan city the Red Army just conquered, and the son of a Jewish father and an Armenian mother. He spent days chartering a plane — something nearly impossible in the socialist Soviet Union — to fly out of Baku 60 Armenian relatives and friends threatened with death. Two relatives have already been killed.

Despite this obvious concern for Armenians, reports the Associated Press, "Kasparov said Moscow either was unwilling or unable to solve ethnic disputes involving Azerbaijan and Armenia, and he called for individuals to begin direct negotiations between the republics. He volunteered to act as a mediator himself."

Kasparov also noted that most Armenians had already been evacuated by the time the Red Army assaulted Baku. Reports the AP: "Therefore, he said, he believed the military action was intended to crush the Azerbaijani independence movement, not stop the killing, as Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said." Kasparov went on to warn: "I fear that what is now happening in Azerbaijan may lead to a terrible bloodbath in the whole country."

What we may have here is a classic Soviet ploy: Stir things up among minority groups (the KGB has been there all along). Then paint the Red Army massacre as a "rescue," while getting gullible Western leaders to approve. Since Bush last year remained mostly quiet after the Red Chinese massacre of the democracy movement in Tiananmen Square, the Kremlin probably figured, correctly, that it could likewise massacre the Azerbaijani independence movement with impunity. Moscow also figures that this massacre will dampen enthusiasm for independence by other captive nations, such as volatile Lithuania.

Bush should reverse himself and call on Moscow to grant independence to Azerbaijan, Armenia and all other captive nations. An independent Azerbaijan and Armenia could settle their problems far better than Moscow has done.

Poverty, hunger and other evils

Countless numbers of homeless people living on the streets ... a health care system that serves only some of the people ... widespread hunger and malnutrition ... enormous gaps between rich and poor. American in the Reagan-Bush years? No — the Soviet Union and its allies in the Gorbachev era and before.

Americans had always assumed that though people in the East bloc had no freedom, no democracy and no Cabbage Patch dolls, they at least could count on economic security. They might not be rich, but — unlike here — no one was starving to death in the gutters. The Soviet ambassador to the U.S. dramatized the point a couple of years ago by giving a $5,000 donation to homeless activist Mitch Snyder.

That gesture, like the entire communist enterprise, was a hollow fraud. The Soviet people and their fellows in Eastern Europe, it's become clear, were even worse off than the fiercest anti-communists imagined. Communism may be vanishing, but before it goes, the full scope of its debacle ought to be known.

For years, the evidence has been trickling in that even by the standards of success established by the Left, East bloc socialism has been a disaster. In 1984, Harvard scholar Nicholas Eberstadt exposed the health crisis afflicting the Russian people. Life expectancy, he pointed out, was six years lower than in Western Europe. Infant mortality was three times higher. Death rates were rising for every age group.

"Measured by the health of its people," he wrote, "the Soviet Union is no longer a developed nation." And things were getting worse, not better. Deteriorating health isn't the whole story. Thanks to the advent of glasnost, the Soviet press is now publicizing a whole range of ills that were supposed to be unique to capitalism.

Cathy Young, a writer who grew up in Moscow, reports in the New Republic magazine that "some independent Soviet journalists put the number of transient and homeless people at 700,000; Moscow News claims there are 3 million." Many of those who have housing, she notes, are living in the equivalent of homeless shelters, without even such essential commodities as running water. Those with real apartments, which are typically small, Spartan and overcrowded, are the lucky ones.

Poverty, far from being eradicated, is rampant. As many as 17 percent of Soviets live below the official poverty line, which probably understates the situation. Poverty in the Soviet Union, says Young, is worse than in the U.S., because it "is much more likely to result in malnutrition."

An economist writing in one prominent Soviet newspaper said that income distribution is even more unequal in the Soviet than in the U.S. By Western standards, he argued, 86 percent of the Soviet population is poor. The health care system, health officials concede, serves no more than 60 percent of the people. Soviet miners have to go on strike just to get soap.

Despite some advantages — higher educational levels, a briefer experience with communist rule and proximity to the West — Eastern Europe doesn't have it much better. East Germans aren't heading to the West just out of disenchantment with their rulers. They're also fleeing for their lives.

Eberstadt, in a recent study for the congressional Joint Economic Committee, says that the countries of Eastern Europe have replicated a Soviet achievement: actually reducing life spans during peacetime — which for an industrialized society is unprecedented and, it was once thought, virtually impossible.

Since 1965, the average life expectancy at age 1 in Western Europe has risen from 71.8 years to 74.7 years. In Eastern Europe, it's fallen from 71.4 years to 70.9 years. Every country in the region has suffered the same setback. Infant mortality has declined, but it's still at least two-thirds higher than on our side of the Iron Curtain.

Why are communist societies so sickly? One reason is the self-destructive health habits of their people, which may be a symptom of frustration and despair. Why quit smoking? So you can live a few more years under communism? Another is that these governments have cut spending on medical care and wasted much of what they have spent.

People under communism used to make a joke: Capitalism means the exploitation of man by man, while socialism means just the reverse. They, and we, didn't know the half of it. The dismantling of these regimes, avowedly dedicated to the interests of the poor, will be a victory for the poor as well as everyone else.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Tuesday, Feb. 6, the 37th day of 1990. There are 328 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Feb. 6, 1788, Massachusetts became the sixth state to ratify the U.S. Constitution.

On this date: In 1778, the United States won official recognition from France as the two nations signed a pair of treaties in Paris.

In 1895, baseball legend Babe Ruth was born in Baltimore.

In 1899, a peace treaty between the United States and Spain was ratified by the U.S. Senate.

In 1933, the 20th Amendment to the Constitution — the "lame duck" amendment — was declared in effect.

In 1952, Britain's King George VI died; he was succeeded to the throne by his daughter, Elizabeth II.

In 1959, the United States successfully test-fired for the first time a Titan intercontinental ballistic missile from Cape Canaveral.

He won't eat oat bran either

I am very proud of myself for never eating a single ounce of oat bran during the "Great Oat Bran Crusade." That is, I didn't eat my oat bran unless somebody slipped in a spoonful in one of my daily cheeseburgers.

The primary reason I didn't eat any oat bran other than the fact I firmly believe oats are for horses and ground chuck is for people, is I am sick and tired of being told what I should and shouldn't eat.

What you eat, I firmly believe, is nobody else's business but your own.

These feelings go back to childhood.

Childhood is a difficult time because mothers are always on constant what-food-is-good-for-you patrol.

In my house it was liver. My mother served liver about once every two weeks.

The first time I ever saw liver on my plate, I knew I didn't like it.

"How do you know you aren't going to like it if you haven't tried it?" my mother, and about ten billion other mothers, would say.

I just knew, that's all. I don't have to try aluminum siding first before I know for a fact I don't like it. And the same went for liver.

"But liver is good for you," my mother would say next.

I didn't care. I didn't care if the fact I wouldn't eat liver would cut my life span in half. I reasoned I'd rather live a few good years liverless than a full lifetime of trying to get it down my gullet.

Teachers also told me what I should eat. My second-grade teacher wouldn't allow any member of her class to leave the lunchroom until their plates were completely clean.

This means I was faced with the hard situation of having to eat English peas which they served in school lunchrooms about three times a week.

I hated English peas. I still hate English peas and I hate anybody who doesn't.

I didn't hate English peas as much as I did liver, but they were a close second.

At some point during the second grade, I went on an English pea strike. Gandhi would have been proud.

I simply said to myself, "I'm not going to eat one more English pea even if it means I have to sit in this lunchroom until I'm 35, which is probably when I'll die anyway since I don't eat liver."

School officials finally called in federal arbitrators to mediate the dispute. After hearing all the testimony, and sampling some of the English peas themselves, the arbitrators ruled if I would agree to eat chalk three times a week, I couldn't be forced to eat English peas too. At least chalk was crunchy.

I smelled a laboratory rat in the oat bran thing from the very start. As soon as somebody said oat bran is helpful in reducing cholesterol, there were more oat bran commercials on television than laundry detergent commercials.

Any day I expected to see a commercial that said, "Tide. The only laundry detergent with oat bran."

But now a study published in the New England Journal of Medicine has shown that oat bran has no special cholesterol lowering benefit. Oat bran, the study concluded, was "over-hyped."

Oat bran, as it turns out, may have been just another health food fad that made a lot of people a lot of bucks.

The next time another hype like that comes along, do like me, and just say no. It's the right thing to do.

And what about the working fathers?

By SARAH OVERSTREET

A recent study by the U.S. Department of Labor reports that 61 percent of all working-age women will have jobs by the year 2000.

But that isn't the part of the study that intrigued me most; no, it's this admission from whoever wrote the Labor Department report:

"The institutions and policies that govern the workplace should be reformed to allow women to participate fully in the economy and to ensure that men and women have the time and resources needed to invest in their children."

Thanks, guys, we all needed that. But what else is new? Why don't you tell that to the folks up on the Hill? They're about 20 years behind you and not even working up a sweat trying to catch up.

If I sound a little cynical, it comes from watching friends with children try to cope with the demands of career and family in an era that preaches equality of the sexes while making sure they can't achieve it.

And I'm not talking about just women here, although when all the apportioning is done it is usually women who end up short in the economic department: lower salaries, lower savings, lower pension funds. I'm also talking about men who really want to be as involved with their children as their wives are, but can't.

To equally share in child-rearing and careers, there must be equal opportunity for each partner to do both. But there certainly isn't, and the corporate world has done very little to rectify the situation.

Let's look at a young couple who want to spend comparable amounts of time with their children. They decide they'll both work half-time, and devote relatively the same amount of time to child-rearing. Here's what they'll face:

When they're out job hunting, they'll find a limited number of employers that are willing to hire people on a half-time basis. If they do manage to find half-time jobs, they'll discover, in almost all cases, that none of those part-time jobs carry any benefits.

That means no health insurance or retirement benefits for either partner, even though together they work 40 or more hours a week.

If they were just one person working 40 hours, that person could receive benefits. What family with children can afford to do without health insurance? What working person should be forced to forego retirement benefits?

If corporate America or our elected representatives had any interest in assisting two-career couples who also want to take relatively equal roles in their children's upbringing, it would be this simple:

They could develop a flexible program that would allow employees who work a percentage of a 40-hour week to receive that same percentage of normal benefits. For example, a half-time employee's retirement account would be credited with half the amount of a full-time employee. If the employee works a percentage other than half, that percentage would be put into a retirement account.

A similar set of guidelines could apply to health benefits. A plan could be developed that would allow separate health insurance policies to work in tandem. After one partner's benefits were used up, the other partner's would kick in, up to its limits.

In the labor department report, industrial and demographic forecaster Marvin J. Cetron recommends companies become more involved in day care, and develop flexible schedules for mothers that include job-sharing, extended leaves of absence and "telecommuting" arrangements that allow people to work from home.

That's a good place to start, Marv. But flexible schedules only for mothers? Aren't any of your buddies fathers?

Ship pilot testifies in trial of fired skipper Hazelwood on Exxon Valdez accident

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — The pilot who helped steer the Exxon Valdez the night it spilled its load smiled at Skipper Joseph Hazelwood, then testified he smelled alcohol on his old friend's breath hours before the ship ran aground.

William E. Murphy, testifying under immunity from prosecution, greeted Hazelwood on the first day of testimony in the fired Exxon captain's trial on charges stemming from the nation's worst oil spill.

But he proceeded to give damaging evidence against the 43-year-old captain.

Murphy recalled joining Hazelwood and two other crew members for lunch in Valdez, where their tanker had picked up its cargo of oil last March.

They had pizza, he remembered, and he and Hazelwood drank iced tea. After lunch, he said he dropped off the captain across the street from a bar called the Pipeline Club, and when he next saw Hazelwood aboard the Exxon Valdez about eight hours later, there was the smell of alcohol about him.

"While on the bridge did you notice any signs that he had been drinking?" Assistant District Attorney Brent Cole asked.

"No," replied Murphy. "Except I smelled something I associated with alcohol on his breath."

Within 30 minutes, he said, Hazelwood had gone below and remained there about an hour while Murphy checked the weather conditions facing the ship in its tricky passage through the Valdez Narrows.

"It's not unusual for masters to leave the bridge," said Murphy, but added, "It wasn't typical to be gone for that long in the narrows."

Hazelwood is on trial in Anchorage Superior Court on a felony charge of second-degree mischief, and misdemeanor charges of reckless endangerment, negligent discharge of oil and operating a vessel while intoxicated. The maximum penalty for conviction on all counts is seven years, three months in prison and $61,000 in fines.

To prove criminal mischief the state must show that Hazelwood recklessly created a risk of damage to the property of another in excess of $100,000.

Murphy, who said he is president of the Southwest Alaska Pilot's Association, was not aboard the Exxon Valdez when it ran aground. Under rules at the time, pilots were required to guide outbound ships to a point just short of Bligh Reef.

The rules have been changed to require pilots, local boat handlers familiar with coastal waters, to remain aboard past Bligh Reef, which the Exxon Valdez struck on March 24, spilling more than 10 million gallons of crude.

Before he left the ship, Murphy said, he saw Hazelwood again.

"I reminded him there was ice reported ahead," he testified.

"Did you observe any indications that the captain had been drinking then?" asked Cole.

"The same observations as previously," said Murphy. "The same smell."

Murphy's testimony came shortly after Cole's opening statement that portrayed Hazelwood as drunk and absent from his post when the Exxon Valdez crashed onto the reef. He maintained that Hazelwood spent the seven hours before the trip in a bar ordering vodka.

Defense attorney Dick Madson told jurors Hazelwood acted professionally and showed no signs of drunkenness before or during the ordeal: "He did not stagger. He did not slur his words. He was cool, calm and collected as a captain should be...."

"This was a maritime accident," he told jurors. "Captain Hazelwood was not responsible for that accident."

The tanker's hull was ripped open when it ran into rocks March 24. The spill killed thousands of fish, birds and animals and blackened hundreds of miles of shoreline. Exxon has said it spent more than $2 billion on the cleanup.

The prosecution and defense were divided on several key issues. The prosecutor claimed Hazelwood left control of his ship to unqualified crew members who lacked the certification to pilot the vessel through Prince William Sound.

Madson said the crewmen clearly were qualified and familiar with the area even if they lacked licenses.

South Africa's Conservative Party fights 'leftist' moves

By DAVID CRARY
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The country's leading right-wing political party has branded President F.W. Klerk's historic overtures to the black majority as "leftist" and declared that whites would fight the moves.

The opposition party's declaration came amid growing signs that de Klerk's dramatic announcements Friday may not have ended this country's days of violent confrontation.

Cabinet ministers said Monday that special government protection would be required for whites in any new political arrangement, and they reaffirmed government support for segregated neighborhoods and public schools.

"The Afrikaner nation is not prepared to live under an overwhelmingly ANC government," said a statement Monday from the Conservative Party, which won 31 percent of the white vote in a general election in September.

De Klerk, in a momentous speech Friday, lifted bans on more than 60 anti-apartheid groups, including the African National Congress guerrilla movement. He also promised to soon free jailed ANC leader Nelson Mandela in hopes of clearing the way for negotiations on black-white power sharing.

However, De Klerk, leader of the governing National Party, did not say he would accept the principle of one-man, one-vote.

Andries Treurnicht, the Conservative Party leader, said Monday that South Africa's 5 million whites faced "the hour of truth."

His party applied for a permit for a mass march in Pretoria on Feb. 15 to launch a "freedom struggle" aimed at protecting whites from domination by the black majority.

Police used tear gas and buckshot Monday to disperse throngs of black protesters in Tembisa and Thokoza, two black townships near Johannesburg. Several people reportedly were injured, and angry youths erected street barricades.

In Brussels, Belgium, foreign ministers of the European Community cautiously welcomed the reforms announced by de Klerk but urged further measures to dismantle apartheid.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher met in London with Jesse Jackson, the black American civil rights leader, who was on his way to South Africa. A spokesman said she asked him to carry this message: "Tell Mr. Mandela how many hopes ride on him for the future of his country."

Several far-right groups have vowed to resist de Klerk's reforms. Fears of an extremist backlash increased after an attack Sunday on the British Embassy in Pretoria.

Assailants shot out windows at the embassy, a day after right-wing graffiti was spray-painted on the building. Embassy spokesman John Sawyer said it was suspected that the assailants were angered by Britain's support for de Klerk.

Robert von Tonder, leader of a group that seeks a whites-only homeland, said de Klerk's changes could prompt the formation of an underground white guerrilla movement.

Five whites were arrested recently on suspicion of planning attacks against de Klerk and other government leaders as well as anti-apartheid activists.

Most right-wing whites are Afrikaners. Primarily of Dutch descent, they began settling in South Africa more than 300 years ago and now account for 60 percent of the 5 million whites. There are about 28 million blacks.

In Parliament, Constitutional Development Minister Gerrit Viljoen said the government sought a new constitution to ensure all South Africans a full, equal franchise in a multiparty democracy. This should be achieved "without prejudicing the rights of minorities against domination," he said.

Other Cabinet ministers on Monday defended segregation of neighborhoods and public schools. "Black people should be running their own education, and white people should be running their own education," said Stoffel van der Merwe, who oversees education for blacks.

Herman Kriel, minister of planning and provincial affairs, said the government had no plans to repeal the Group Areas Act, which mandates segregation of residential areas.

Oliver North begins appeal of Iran-Contra conviction

By PETE YOST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oliver L. North is asking a federal appeals court to reverse his convictions in the Iran-Contra affair on grounds that former President Reagan should have been called as a trial witness.

In oral arguments today before the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, North's lawyers also were expected to assert that North's prosecution was tainted by the former White House aide's immunized testimony to Congress.

North was convicted on May 4, 1989, of obstructing Congress, altering and destroying National Security Council documents and accepting an illegal gratuity.

The obstruction charge involved a 1985 shipment of Hawk missiles to Iran, while the documents that were destroyed showed North's assistance to the Nicaraguan Contras. The gratuity was a $13,800 home security system which North accepted from Richard Secord, who North enlisted to run supplies to the rebels fighting the Nicaraguan government.

U.S. District Court Judge Gerhard Gesell on July 5 placed North on probation for two years, fined him $150,000 and sentenced him to 1,200 hours of community service. North is performing the community service while appealing the convictions and fine.

The three-member panel hearing his appeal includes Judges Laurence Silberman and David Sentelle, both Reagan administration appointees, and Carter administration appointee Abner Mikva.

Silberman was undersecretary of labor during the Nixon administration and in 1974-75 was a deputy attorney general. He was appointed to the appeals court in 1985.

Mikva, on the appeals court since 1979, is a former congressman from Illinois. Sentelle, appointed to the court in 1987, is a former federal judge in North Carolina.

North's central arguments in his appeal include:

- Reagan's testimony would have been "critically important" in North's defense of the obstruction charge. The defense contends Reagan would have corroborated North's assertion that the president and his top advisers decided that in order to protect the lives of U.S.

hostages held in Lebanon, they wouldn't disclose U.S. involvement with the November 1985 Hawk shipment.

But Iran-Contra prosecutors say North was unable to identify a single instance where Reagan directly told him to obstruct Congress. Gesell quashed North's subpoena for Reagan, saying there was no evidence in the record that Reagan had authorized illegal conduct by North.

Gesell and prosecutors disregarded North's Fifth Amendment rights by failing to ensure that North's immunized testimony didn't taint the criminal case. Under a 1972 Supreme Court ruling, prosecutors must show that no use was made of a defendant's immunized testimony.

Iran-Contra prosecutors said the government and the court took "extraordinary protective procedures" to assure North's immunized testimony didn't contribute to his conviction.

The jury should have been told North was entitled to acquittal if it concluded that his superiors in the administration had authorized some of the activities for which he was accused of crimes.

The judge told the jury that defense was relevant only if North was specifically ordered and directed by a superior to act contrary to the law. Iran-Contra prosecutors argue that North "failed to offer sufficient evidence that his conduct was authorized" and so wasn't entitled to have the jury consider it as a defense.

Meanwhile, on Monday U.S. District Judge Harold Greene ordered Reagan to provide videotaped testimony at the trial of former national security adviser John Poindexter. The judge gave Reagan and President Bush until Friday to invoke executive privilege to avoid testimony by the former president.

Former Czech official found dead

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — A former high-ranking Communist official ousted during the November revolution for his part in crushing Czechoslovakia's 1968 reforms has committed suicide, the state news agency said today.

The body of Viliam Salgovic, 70, was found by his wife hanging in the laundry room of his home in the Slovak capital Bratislava late Monday, CTK said.

Salgovic, a former member of Slovakia's Communist party Politburo, was the first senior member of the old leadership known to have committed suicide following last fall's peaceful revolution.

At least two police officers have killed themselves since November, while former Prague Communist party boss Antonin Kapek was hospitalized with severe injuries after trying to shoot himself last month.

Salgovic, a longtime member of senior Communist ranks, served as deputy interior minister during the crushing of the 1968 "Prague Spring" reforms of Alexander Dubcek. In this post, he is thought to have controlled the State Security forces and served as Czechoslovakia's link to the Soviet KGB secret police.

Hong Kong — the world capital of conspicuous consumption

By DAN BIERS
Associated Press Writer

HONG KONG (AP) — Walk into any 7-Eleven store in this British colony, look past the Sturpee machine to the liquor selection and start counting; chances are up to a dozen brands of French cognac will be on display.

Welcome to Hong Kong, where prosperity and an obsession with status blend to create what may be the world's capital of conspicuous consumption.

Cognac flows like water, luxury cars jam the streets, pricy portable telephones are the rage and droves of people spend small fortunes on flashy wristwatches.

"There's a lot of ostentatious display among Hong Kong people ... because the achievement of wealth is such a driving force in people's lives," explained S.K. Cheong, head of marketing for Television Broadcasts Ltd., the territory's No. 1 television station.

A recent international survey conducted by the marketing firm Backer Spielvogel Bates Worldwide found that nearly half of Hong Kong people say owning expensive cars and jewelry are important goals.

Only one-third of Japanese and one-quarter of Americans surveyed felt the same way.

Here are the stats that tell the story:

- About 12 percent of the private cars on Hong Kong roads are Mercedes-Benz, which cost from nearly $40,000 to more than three times that amount, according to C.P. Moore, managing director of the local dealership.

- "As far as we know, that is the highest penetration on Earth" for Mercedes, he said.

- Nearly 1,000 Rolls Royce luxury automobiles, which can cost almost $400,000, cruise the local streets, giving this tiny British colony of 5.7 million people the "highest concentration of Rolls Royces in the world," said Russell Blythe, sales and marketing manager of the Hong Kong dealer.

- Nearly 50 brands of wristwatches, most of them among the priciest on the market, were advertised on Hong Kong's four television channels last year.

- Bulgari, an exclusive Italian manufacturer of jewelry, has two stores in Hong Kong and eight for the rest of the world. The most popular Bulgari watches cost about $4,500 but are often out of stock here.

- About 100 fur retailers are listed in the 1990 telephone book of this sub-tropical city, whose climatic claim to fame is stifling heat and humidity for much of the year.

- About 70,000 handheld portable telephones, which generally cost $1,500 or more, have been sold in Hong Kong, although pay phones and community phones are ubiquitous.

- Per capita consumption of cognac is widely believed to be the highest in the world, with 357,000 cases of brandy entering the colony last year, or slightly more than one bottle per person age 20 or older.

- Shelves of neighborhood food stands often are stocked with bottles priced at $200.

- In explaining such sales, local analysts note that the rapid growth of Hong Kong's export-led economy in the past decade made millionaires of many local entrepreneurs and left countless other people with money to spend. The low business and personal tax rates in the colony have ensured a high level of disposable income.

- But the thirst for status, or "face," among the local Chinese appears to be the main driving force behind the colony's consumption.

"When they have accumulated some wealth they like to spend it on visible things to show off," says Joseph Wan, finance director for Dickson Concepts Ltd., which has recorded 50 percent compound annual growth for the past five years by selling expensive name brands in Hong Kong and elsewhere in the region.

Still, the local demand for status-enhancing products may not be limitless. Sales of some luxury goods fell after Chinese troops ruthlessly quashed the pro-democracy movement in Beijing, and the long-term health of the market is unclear with Hong Kong being handed over to Communist China in 1997.

But for now, capitalism and conspicuous consumption remain very much alive in the territory.

"I see it as a beauty of Hong Kong rather than a minus," said James J.S. Wong, host of the popular late-night talk show "No Restrictions Tonight." "You work hard and you make your fortune, and now you're allowed to show that."

"It's another form of freedom."

Richard Brenneke, a former CIA contract agent, testified in September 1988 during a federal court trial in Denver that the CIA had set up a systematic program to raise money for the Nicaraguan Contras.

Support for the Contras first became a point of controversy in 1984, when Congress cut off aid to the rebels.

The late William Casey, then director of the CIA, and Lt. Col.

Oliver North, then a White House aide, wanted to set up self-sustaining operations that would not be dependent on Congress for approval and funding.

One operation was the program to sell arms to Iran and divert the profits to the Contras, a scheme that led to North's resignation and subsequent prosecution for his role in the affair.

Brenneke said the CIA effort to raise money for covert operations involved a number of schemes to siphon funds from financial institutions "at the expense of an insurance company," meaning the federal deposit insurance program, The Post reported.

After the trial, Brenneke told The Post that the banking and S&L officials involved in such schemes were required to sign "secrecy agreements" with the CIA.

Federal authorities are investigating Houston developer Robert L. Corson, a former owner of Vision Banc Savings in Kingsville who has since been barred from dealing with federally insured institutions, the newspaper said. One former CIA operative told The Post that Corson frequently carried large sums of cash from country to country for the agency.

Corson, the newspaper said, is identified in federal law enforcement records as a "known money launderer."

The CIA would neither confirm nor deny whether Corson had a relationship with the agency.

Vision Banc Savings had assets of $70 million when Corson bought it in early 1986. Four months later, the thrift was insolvent, in part because of $20 million in loans that were made to help finance a Florida land deal.

One of the people who helped arrange the Florida land transaction was Miami lawyer Lawrence Freeman, a convicted money launderer with ties to CIA agents and organized crime figures. Hill Financial Savings in Red Hill, Pa., put up $80 million to help seal the deal.

Assistant U.S. Attorney John Smith, who heads the fraud division of the U.S. Attorney's office in Houston, would not divulge details of the Justice Department's investigations into Corson's dealings. He said one involves prosecutors in Texas, Florida and Pennsylvania.

The 22 collapsed S&Ls not only include large institutions such as Mainland Savings in Houston and Sunbelt Savings in Dallas, but tiny thrifts such as Vision Banc Savings.

Eighteen of the 22 were either owned or controlled by people with links to organized crime, the CIA or both, The Post said.

Covering the federally insured deposits of the thrifts could cost taxpayers an estimated $13 billion.

Monroe said although he is convinced the CIA either masterminded or condoned a certain amount of S&L fraud, proving it would be extremely difficult.

He said CIA and high government officials who might have had ties to people involved in S&L fraud created a facade of "plausible deniability" that they were involved in anything improper.

"It's like trying to grab smoke," said Bruce Maffeo, former special prosecutor with the Justice Department's Organized Crime Strike Force in Brooklyn.

Reports by the staff of a congressional subcommittee and the General Accounting Office said fraud was a key factor in most of the nation's S&L failures.

Restrictions on the anti-apartheid movement and said Mandela would soon be set free.

"Unfortunately, the obstacles that were in the way, which prevented his release on Friday, still exist," Mrs. Mandela said after the four-hour visit at the Victor Verster prison farm.

"It ... doesn't depend on him when he will be released," she said. But in answer to repeated questions about the obstacles, she said Mandela still demands the complete lifting of the state of emergency.

On Friday, de Klerk legalized the African National Congress, placed a moratorium on executions and lifted restrictions on hundreds of individuals and scores of anti-apartheid organizations.

His actions met many, but not all, of the conditions the ANC and Mandela had set for the start of negotiations to end apartheid and give the disenfranchised black majority a voice in the government.

Under the emergency regulations that remain in effect, the government can detain anyone for up to six months without charge. Police have wide powers to ban meetings or speeches and restrict television or photo coverage of their own actions in dealing with political unrest.

Newspaper investigation ties CIA to savings & loan failures

HOUSTON (AP) — A newspaper's eight-month investigation into savings and loan fraud produced evidence that suggests CIA and organized crime involvement in the failure of 22 thrifts, including 16 in Texas.

The Houston Post cited court documents, sworn testimony, law enforcement records and interviews with key government investigators and prosecutors in its report Sunday. Those sources suggest the CIA may have used part of the proceeds from S&L fraud to help pay for covert operations that Congress was unwilling to support publicly.

The CIA denied that the agency has used savings and loans to fund covert activities. "That would be a violation of U.S. laws, and we do not violate U.S. laws," said CIA spokesman Mark Mansfield.

The Post, however, said it found evidence that the CIA has intervened in criminal investigations involving agency operatives accused of S&L fraud.

Lloyd Monroe, a former prosecutor with the Justice Department's organized crime strike force, said the federal agencies responsible for investigating S&L fraud are "being precluded from investigating wrongdoing that is possibly being conducted in the name of national security."

Richard Brenneke, a former CIA contract agent, testified in September 1988 during a federal court trial in Denver that the CIA had set up a systematic program to raise money for the Nicaraguan Contras.

Mandela's wife calls for more pressure on white-led government to free husband

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

PAARL, South Africa (AP) — The white-led government still must be pressured into further reforms before Nelson Mandela can go free, his wife said after a visit with the imprisoned black leader.

Winnie Mandela said after Sunday's visit that conditions include lifting the 31/2-year-old state of emergency, and she appealed for renewed pressure on authorities to lift it.

The visit came two days after President F.W. de Klerk, in a historic speech, lifted numerous restrictions on the anti-apartheid movement and said Mandela would soon be set free.

Domestic quarrel leaves four dead

JOLIET, Ill. (AP) — A gunman with a history of psychiatric problems took four family members hostage early Monday morning before killing three of them and committing suicide, authorities said.

The fourth hostage, believed to be the assailant's wife, was injured in the attack, said Lt. Steve Rathbun of the Will County sheriff's office. He said authorities believed, but had not confirmed, that those killed were the couple's teen-age children.

The injured woman was taken to St. Joseph's Medical Center in Joliet, Rathbun said.

Humor, toughness boost Ann Richard's gubernatorial bid

By PEGGY FIKAC
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN (AP) — State Treasurer Ann Richards says gender shouldn't make a difference in her race for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, but a framed needlepoint in her office stabs at the issue anyway.

"Roosters crow — Hens deliver," she says.

The slogan reflects Ms. Richards' humor and self-assurance as she seeks to become the second woman governor in Texas history.

Those traits won her national attention in 1988, when she gave the keynote speech to the Democratic National Convention.

Her down-home delivery made the speech memorable, although Ms. Richards later credited others for some of the best lines — including her description of George Bush as being born "with a silver foot in his mouth."

To hear her tell it, other people share credit for initiating most of her political accomplishments.

In her autobiography last year, Ms. Richards writes of her longtime political involvement. But her first bid for office, that of Travis County commissioner in 1976, came at the urging of supporters who first had asked her husband to run. David Richards, an attorney, declined. Ms. Richards won the job.

Her 1982 race for treasurer also began with supporters' calls. Although she first had to ask just what the state treasurer did, her modernization of Texas government's banking operations has made money for the state and won her praise.

The decision to run for governor came about two years ago, in part because Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and former San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros decided against running.

"I had a number of phone calls from people who encouraged me to think seriously about the race, but essentially the decision was mine," she said.

As she faces former Gov. Mark White and Attorney General Jim Mattox in the March 13 Democratic primary, Ms. Richards said her approach to politics is a plus.

"I think that it's one of my greatest assets that I am not consumed with a burning, driving ego and ambition," she said. "I think I'm much more pragmatic about public service. It is an onerous responsibility. It is a big job."

Ms. Richards insists that the issues she pushes, including education and ethics, cut across gender lines — despite a newspaper poll that showed her supported by 43 percent of female Democratic voters, compared to 27 percent of Democratic men.

She said she doesn't think men will vote against her just because she's a woman, and added, "I don't think that women vote for women just because they're women. ... If they feel the candidates are roughly equal, then they may give the woman the benefit of the doubt and vote for her."

To raise money for her campaign, Ms. Richards has traveled around the country and has had fund-raisers featuring entertainers Lily Tomlin and Marlo Thomas. Her last campaign finance report showed she had raised $1.36 million and spent $1.15 million. She deftly answers personal questions about her alcoholism treatment, which came just before the dissolution of her 30-year marriage, by saying that handling those crises made her stronger.

"I expect it to be brought up the rest of my life. It's a part of me," said Ms. Richards, 56. "I consider it one of my strengths. I really believe that we are strengthened in adversity."

But her campaign focus is on other issues, with public education her top priority.

The Texas Supreme Court, finding glaring disparities between rich and poor districts, has ordered changes in the public school finance system.

"Education is it. No. 1," she said. "It has such a pervasive influence on what we're able to accomplish in economic development. It is so directly related to the crime rate. ... Education demands all of our energies."

It's important to involve school administrators, teachers and parents in changing education, said Ms. Richards, who has called for a statewide assembly to do just that.

An ethics commission also is needed for elected officials and candidates, she said, and people appointed by the governor to run state agencies should be trained to properly analyze budgets, handle personnel and make ethical decisions.

As she maps a plan for the state's future, Ms. Richards reflects on the changes that have made possible a race she didn't dream of as a young girl growing up in the Waco suburb of Lakeview.

"Obviously, I could never have from the time I was a young girl envisioned myself becoming governor of Texas," she said. "Women didn't have the opportunity to do those things. When we did, it was because we were the wife of someone, not because we had earned it in our own right."

That's how the state's first governor got the post: Miriam "Ma" Ferguson served in 1925-27 and 1933-35 after her husband was impeached in 1917.

Ms. Richards said she's thankful for Mrs. Ferguson's precedent because it saves her from "that 'first' syndrome."

"I try hard not to be symbolic," she said. "I do worry that my performance is going to reflect on opportunities that are afforded other women, because there has been a certain domino effect in saying, 'If she can do the job, well then, maybe the next one can as well.'"

Identifiable pattern difficult to detect in mail bomb investigation

ENTERPRISE, Ala. (AP) — FBI agents have grilled a Bible-quoting junk dealer, fingerprinted an alleged gun runner and dug up a septic tank looking for a typewriter, but how close they are to solving a series of mail bombings that killed a judge and a lawyer no one is saying.

Scores of federal agents, who set up offices in a vacant bank building two weeks ago, have made some splashy raids that provided grist for rumor mills. But it appears no arrests are imminent in the December bombings.

The latest action by the FBI, a daylong search Friday of the home and print shop of an Enterprise man indicted on gun exportation charges, left investigators with more than a dozen boxes of confiscated documents to examine.

Doug Marshall, an FBI spokesman in Mobile, said Friday the investigation here would continue indefinitely.

The most well-known figure in the investigation, salvage store owner Robert Wayne O'Ferrell, has been closely scrutinized but not charged.

"It's time for them to bark up another tree," he said Friday.

Brian Fleming, the print shop operator subjected to the search on Friday, has not been charged either.

Fleming and his wife have been fingerprinted but not questioned in the case, said their attorney, John Knowles. Knowles said authorities are making a futile attempt to link the bomb cases to Fleming's indictment on a charge of conspiring to export firearms, reportedly to Northern Ireland.

Fleming pleaded innocent and is free on $5,000 bail.

O'Ferrell said that he has made copies of court documents at Fleming's print shop but that he doesn't know Fleming well.

Killed in the December bomb attacks were Judge Robert Vance of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and civil rights attorney Robert Robinson of Savannah, Ga. Bombs were also mailed to the 11th Circuit headquarters in Atlanta and an NAACP chapter in Jacksonville, Fla., but did not explode.

A much-coveted clue is the typewriter used to write a letter, signed "Americans for a Competent Federal Judicial System," claiming responsibility for the bombs and threatening more violence. The FBI has searched pawn shops, O'Ferrell's store, a septic tank, a lake, schools, a trash dump and Fort Rucker for the typewriter but apparently has not found it.

Federal sources have said the letter, received in December by an Atlanta TV station, appeared to have been written on the same typewriter as a document O'Ferrell prepared in 1988 in a case before the 11th Circuit.

Vance sat on a panel that ruled against O'Ferrell when O'Ferrell sued his former employer, Gulf Life Insurance Co., in an employment compensation case. In a legal brief he prepared while acting as his own attorney, O'Ferrell called the judicial system corrupt.

FBI officials are quick to note that the investigation is continuing full-scale in other cities, notably Atlanta.

Silly putty celebrates 40 years

It still stretches, bounces, molds, lifts pictures from newspapers and makes money for Binney & Smith Inc., in Easton, Pa., where executive Dennis Malloy poses Wednesday with new colored versions of Silly Putty, now 40 years old. More than 200 million "eggs" of the accidentally discovered material have been sold since 1950. (AP LaserPhoto)

By DAVID S. MARTIN
Associated Press Writer

EASTON, Pa. (AP) — Forty years after a copy writer for a small advertising agency took a taffy-like substance invented by accident and called it Silly Putty, the toy in the plastic egg is still making an impression.

Binney & Smith Inc., Silly Putty's maker, sells more than 3 million eggs a year of the bouncable, moldable, stretchable toy capable of lifting images from newspapers.

And this spring, the Easton-based company plans to add four fluorescent colors of Silly Putty to the pinkish silicone rubber.

These colors mark the first change in the product since Peter C. Hodgson borrowed $147 in 1950 to market a researcher's failed attempt at making synthetic rubber during World War II.

"Dads and moms may get a little jealous because they didn't have these things, but maybe their kids will share," said Dennis Malloy, Binney & Smith's director of business development.

The privately held company, which also makes Crayola crayons and Liquitex fine arts products, recommend it for patients recovering from hand or wrist injuries.

And New York City artist George Horner uses Silly Putty in his work, which sells for as much as $5,000.

"I do consider myself a serious artist even though I work with Silly Putty," said Horner, whose works inside Silly Putty-filled frames address topics such as homelessness and AIDS. "I sort of like to fool people's expectations."

At the modern plant in northeastern Pennsylvania, Binney & Smith makes an average of 300 pounds a day of Silly Putty, about 12,000 eggs a day.

To make Silly Putty, silicone rubber is first swirled in 225-pound blobs with ingredients to keep it from puddling.

After the pink goo — warm from the stirring — is poured from the vat designed to mix mortar, it is cut up into chunks resembling oversized loaves of homemade bread.

These are then fed through a machine designed for cutting taffy. Rows of Silly Putty drop onto a conveyor, and workers place the 13.3-gram disks resembling chopped hot dogs into red plastic eggs.

Malloy said he expected the old-fashioned pink putty to continue to sell well despite the bright colors and other innovations on the drawing board.

"This isn't the last you'll see of new things in Silly Putty," he promised.

bought the rights to Silly Putty in 1977, a year after Hodgson's death.

Hodgson's son, Peter Jr., said Silly Putty's simplicity has allowed it to stretch over two generations.

"It really is what it says it is: a liquid solid," said Hodgson, a professor of Russian literature at the University of California, Los Angeles. "It's just a paradox, a kind of puzzle, an enigma you can hold in your hand."

The elder Hodgson, who envisioned Silly Putty as a therapeutic diversion for adults, began the business in a converted barn in North Branford, Conn., and shipped the product to retailers in pasteboard egg crates.

Since then, more than 200 million eggs of Silly Putty — more than 3,000 tons — have been sold.

Silly Putty, which has survived copycats such as Nutty Putty and Goofy Goo, has been pressed into service in some unusual ways.

The elder Hodgson gave Apollo 8 astronauts Silly Putty in sterling silver eggs for their 1968 trip to the moon, and they used it to keep tools from floating away in weightlessness.

Austin American-Statesman

FORT HOOD, Texas (AP) — The TV reporter in high heels asked the young woman in black combat boots, "Did you really get shot at?"

"Yes, I got shot at," answered Army 1st Lt. Colleen M. Watson, her playful grin framed by a camouflage helmet and olive green chin strap.

"And, yes, they were real bullets."

Then she laughed, this veteran of the Panama invasion, this military police platoon leader with the new Army Commendation medal for meritorious service pinned to her fatigue shirt.

"A lot of people have asked me that."

Americans did double-takes at the news reports in the days following the U.S. invasion of Panama. There were photos of a female marksman who killed a Panamanian Defense Force fighter from 215 yards, newsprint about females who hit the dirt, dodged bullets, fired M-16s and did what women in the U.S. military have never done.

In the largest American combat operation since Vietnam, women performed a highly visible and perilous duty. Their role in the invasion is reviving the debate about women and war.

Panama invasion showed new generation of military women

In the past decade, women have joined the military in record numbers. Today, one of every 10 members of America's military is female — 224,000 of the 2.1 million active duty officers and enlisted personnel in the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps.

Many of these new recruits wear combat fatigues, leap alongside men into muddy foxholes, refuel fighter planes in midair and repair ship engines. Yet, for much of the public at-large, the vision of female military personnel remains frozen in time.

Considering that as recently as the 1970s, field exercises for women consisted of a night in a pup tent, no wonder the prevailing public idea of women in the military is more WAC, more WAVE, than GI Joan.

In Panama, 25-year-old Watson, who stands 5-foot-4 — (add an inch with her helmet on) — led an MP platoon in securing checkpoints and key installations on the outskirts of Panama City. Their role was to clear the way for the infantry, but a gun-battle erupted pinning Watson's detachment in the middle.

"The soldier (from Fort Hood) who got killed was from my machine-gunner," Watson said. "He was real close (to me). We got caught in the cross-fire and bullets were flying everywhere."

Private 1st Class Scott L. Roth was posthumously awarded the Purple Heart medal.

At a recent welcoming ceremony at the Central Texas Army post, eight other soldiers from the 401st Headquarters also were presented medals by Lt. Gen. Richard Graves, III Corps and Fort Hood commander.

"An army must have the will to win," the general said, "and you have exhibited a will to excel in tough conditions." He told the troops that they are "in a word, winners."

Among the citations Graves presented was the Army Commendation for meritorious service to Watson, one of 12 women from the post sent to Panama.

Watson, of Bennington, Vt., was credited with leadership in capturing several Panamanian Defense Force soldiers, but said her platoon deserved the credit. "They really came through for me."

Watson joined the Army four years ago upon graduating from college with a degree in zoology. She had originally planned to become a doctor, but changed her mind while in school, where she joined the ROTC.

Finding herself in combat was something she said she never expected — "not on that scale anyway." In the hours leading up to the gunbattle as she realized her precarious position, she said, "my immediate reaction was shock. I said, 'Wow!' I was pretty excited about it!"

The Department of Defense historically has prohibited women from serving in combat units or commanding combat troops, but women are allowed in the military police.

"Our job," she explained, "is to make sure the forces get to the front line safely. At times, that makes us vulnerable targets to the enemy, and that's what happened in our case. We were caught in the middle. But I didn't think about being a woman out there. Whether you're a male or a female, you're out there with a job to do. That job doesn't change based on gender."

Watson said she couldn't give an absolute "yes" or "no" to the question of women being allowed to serve in all combat situations. But, she said, "as far as the military police corps, for our mission, it didn't hinder it in any way."

Three women served in her platoon.

"There is always going to be somebody who says 'No, they don't belong here,'" Watson said. "But there's not a whole lot we can do about it except keep on doing our jobs. (In Panama) I proved it to myself and the other females proved it."

For Watson, the Army sales pitch "Be All That You Can Be" spoke to her directly. "I joined because I wanted to do something exciting after graduating from college. I liked the idea of traveling, and I thought it would be a challenge. It certainly has been that."

She said she would be eager to accept a similar assignment in the future. "I'm not saying I want another war, and I'm not anxious to be shot at again, but this sort of experience really pulls the unit together. It makes us more of a family."

Watson, who has one sister, said the decision to join the Army was a shock to her mother. "My mother had always been so happy that she had two girls. She always said, 'I don't have to worry about you being drafted.'"

But her father who had served in the medical service corps was ecstatic over her decision, she said.

Watson said maybe the time has come for a Barbie doll clad in jungle fatigues.

CURTIS POWELL,
NORTH CAROLINA PARAMEDIC

DEAR CURTIS: Right! Since a catastrophe can be only a heartbeat away, everyone should be prepared to step in and give (literally) a helping hand in an emergency.

DEAR ABBY: "Joann Amore, Normal, Ill." wrote to you urging people to learn cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR). Ms. Amore and others who have taken CPR are to be commended for their unselfish commitment — unselfish because they learned CPR to benefit others, since no one can administer CPR to himself.

Too many people believe that the rescue squad or emergency medical service is only a phone call away. They fail to realize that time is critical!

The American Heart Association's statistics show that if someone has cardiac arrest and CPR is delayed, every second after four minutes is critical. There are miraculous exceptions — especially in cold-water drowning cases involving children. However, when CPR is delayed beyond about six minutes, there is a very high probability of permanent brain damage.

From the moment a victim's heart stops, it can take more than four minutes for someone to reach a phone, dial the number and tell the dispatcher "who, what, when and where." Then the dispatcher must relay that information to the ambulance/rescue crew. The crew must then get en route and travel. It could take a minute or more after arrival for them to unload their gear and carry it in to where the victim is. Then they must resuscitate the victim!

Controversy surrounds Richardson's early exit

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — University of Arkansas Athletic Director Frank Broyles said Razorback Coach Nolan Richardson broke no rules by leaving the court before the end of regulation play in Austin on Sunday, but the chief interpreter of rules for the NCAA disagrees.

Texas held a one-point lead, 84-83, when an intentional foul was called on Arkansas' Lee Mayberry as Lance Blanks of Texas headed up for a shot on the right side of the basket. There were 14 seconds left in regulation.

Richardson removed his jacket and walked past the Longhorn bench to the dressing room. Blanks' two free throws put Texas up 86-83, but Travis Mays missed a free throw and Mayberry hit a 3-pointer with seconds left to send the game into overtime.

Arkansas won 103-96. "I was right on the edge of getting a technical, and when I get to that point, it's time to get out," Richardson said. "I've told our players that if they take their practice to the game, they don't need a coach. I guess they proved me right."

Broyles issued a five-paragraph statement Monday in support of Richardson, in which he said the coach was within the rules by leaving early.

The officials called no technical foul against Richardson for the early exit, but Ed Steitz, the National Collegiate Athletic Association's chief rules interpreter, said one should have been levied.

Steitz, in a telephone interview from his home in East Long Meadow, Mass., told an Austin broadcaster Monday night that a coach or team attendant may only leave the coach's box to point out a scorer's mistake or if a fight breaks out. Otherwise, he may leave only under an extreme emergency, such as a heart attack.

The NCAA official said Paul

Galvan, the Southwest Conference's supervisor of men's basketball officials, had asked him for a clarification on the rule.

Steitz said Richardson's actions violated both the intent and spirit of the rules. He called Richardson's departure embarrassing for the coach, officials, the Southwest Conference and officiating as a profession.

Texas Coach Tom Penders also said Richardson should have received a technical foul for walking onto the court before he left. "If what he did wasn't showing up the officials, then I've never seen anybody showed up," Penders said.

Broyles defended Richardson's action and complimented the team on the win.

"Winning on the road is difficult enough, especially with 16,000 fans pulling against you," Broyles said. "The difficulty was aggravated by an article in Saturday's Austin paper that indicated the Southwest Conference supervisor of officials agreed with Texas Coach Tom Penders that there were 'a number of questionable calls' in the first Arkansas-Texas game."

"We have been assured by the supervisor of officials that he did not talk to anyone about his meeting with Penders," Broyles said. "However, the article made it sound as if he and Penders agreed and the timing of the article was deplorable since it appeared on the eve of the second Arkansas-Texas game. The game officials were subjected to undue pressure because of the publicity the issue received."

"Under these adverse circumstances, I fully support Coach Richardson's judgment and his actions late in the game," Broyles said. "He decided it was better to leave the arena than to risk a technical foul that would have taken any chance his team had to win. It should be emphasized that Coach Richardson's actions both in leaving the court and in returning to it for the overtime were entirely permissible under the rules of the game and I fully appreciate the reasons why Coach Richardson believed that it was in the best interest of his team for him to act as he did."

John Triplett, sports editor of the Austin American-Statesman, said Monday night that the newspaper stands by its story. In Saturday editions, the newspaper reported that Galvan said in a telephone interview that he agreed with Penders that some calls were questionable when Arkansas and Texas played in Fayetteville.

The victory was the 11th in a row for third-ranked Arkansas, tying No. 1 Missouri for the longest current streak in the nation. The Razorbacks are 19-2 for the season, 10-0 in the SWC. Texas fell to 14-6 and 7-3.

Notre Dame strikes own deal with NBC

By RONALD BLUM
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Notre Dame, the most famous football school in the nation, is going off on its own.

Notre Dame became the first college to negotiate its own deal with a major network, agreeing Monday to sell its home football games to NBC in a five-year deal that starts in 1991. In the process, Notre Dame raised doubts about the rest of college football's contracts with ABC and ESPN.

ABC and ESPN thought they had acquired rights to Notre Dame home games when they agreed to exclusive contracts with the College Football Association, made up of 64 schools.

Terms of Notre Dame's deal were not announced but television executives speculated that it is worth between $40 million and $75 million.

While NBC officials smirked at their coup during a news conference Monday at South Bend, Ind., ABC issued a bitter statement that hinted at litigation.

"ABC Sports intends to pursue all remedies available to protect its agreement with the CFA from interference by third parties, including NBC Sports, and to ensure participation of all CFA member institutions," the network said.

ESPN, which is 80 percent owned by Capital Cities Inc., ABC's parent, declined comment.

NBC said it was legally free to conclude a deal with the Fighting Irish since the school had not committed to the CFA's package.

"We did not interfere with an existing relationship," Dick Ebersol, president of NBC Sports, said.

ABC announced on Jan. 17 that it had purchased rights to CFA games for $210 million over five years. ESPN announced on Oct. 4, 1989, that it had bought the group's cable rights for $110 million over five years.

"It would be premature to speculate on how the CFA membership may be affected," David Ogreaan, the CFA's assistant executive director for television, said. "The CFA television committee will review the situation and consult with the membership. Both ABC and ESPN, with whom the CFA has agreements commencing in 1991, have expressed interest in continuing their relationship with the CFA."

Notre Dame said it had not given the CFA any guarantees it would be part of the new television package.

"In the process of negotiating new contracts, Notre Dame's position was we would not indicate our position until we had a chance to review that contract," Notre Dame athletic director Dick Rosenthal said, adding that he believed negotiations were conducted with the "highest form of business ethics."

The CFA disagreed with Rosenthal's account. "The CFA was clearly under the impression and certainly felt that Notre Dame would participate," Ogreaan said.

Ebersol said NBC had "no intention or any basis to seek out other schools." But he added that NBC "would stand by and see what the developments are in the other schools."

Sam Jankovich, athletic director at the University of Miami, said he would not rule out a similar plan for the Hurricanes, the 1989 national champions.

"Miami did approve the latest TV agreement that was proposed by the CFA with ABC, but we have not signed off officially on this proposal," Jankovich said. "At this point, we're going to have to take a step back and assess today's developments. We will have to look at how the CFA's plan might be accepted and then determine what impact it would have on the University of

Sexton paces Pampa grapplers at regionals

Harvesters conclude wrestling season with 6th-place finish

AMARILLO — Pampa's Phillip Sexton finished second at last Saturday's regional wrestling meet at Amarillo High, but was defeated in a wrestle-off to end his bid for a trip to the state meet.

Sexton won two matches to advance to the championship finals, where he lost an 8-1 decision to Gary Nabors of Caprock. However, Chris Guillen of Tascosa, who finished third, challenged Sexton to a wrestle-off.

Guillen pinned the PHS sophomore in 1:13 to clinch a spot on the state tournament team.

The wrestle-offs challenged the third-place finisher to challenge the second-place finisher if the two had not previously met in the tourney. The winner earned a state meet berth.

"Everything was set up perfect for Phillip, but he got beat in the challenge matches," said Pampa coach Steve Kuhn, whose team concluded the season with a sixth-place regional finish (24 points).

Two other Pampa wrestlers, Chad Chairez and Bill Larkin, finished third in their respective weight classes.

Chairez, who was seeded fourth in the tourney, missed a trip to state by one point in overtime. After finishing third at 112 pounds, he challenged second-place John Trujillo of Palo Duro for the runner-up spot.

The two wrestled to a 2-2 at the end of regulation. In overtime, Trujillo reversed a hold to go up by two, but Chairez moved back within a point with an escape as the clock ticked down to 15 seconds. The Pampa freshman was unable to score a takedown before time expired.

"Chad really fought his heart out for it," Kuhn said. "When they wrestled at the beginning of the year, he pinned Chad, so Chad improved a lot over the season."

"But Trujillo's a senior and Chad's only a freshman, so he's got a lot of time."

Larkin won three out of his four matches, losing only to Matt Miller of Boys Ranch in the championship semifinals of the 152-pound bracket. Miller finished second to Jeremie Wilson of Tascosa.

Tascosa won the Region 1 championship with 133 points, 34 more than Caprock, its next-closest competitor.

Seven other wrestlers, including Jimmy Corley, Darin Wyatt, Dusty Weatherly, Frank Jara, Will Hacker, Buddy Plunk and Chris Archibald, competed at the regional meet for Pampa.

"Everybody had a good tournament and improved a lot over the year," Kuhn said. "I look for good things for them next year."

Sixers run winning streak to 12 games

By The Associated Press

All of the Philadelphia 76ers are playing like All-Stars right now. That includes injured Charles Barkley, who will be the team's only representative in the All-Star Game — like it or not.

The 76ers extended the NBA's longest winning streak of the season to 12 games Monday night, beating the Utah Jazz 114-89.

Barkley, nursing a strained leg muscle, scored 16 points in 27 minutes. He wanted to pass up Sunday's All-Star Game at Miami to rest, but says the league pressured him into playing.

Philadelphia scored the last 14 points of the first quarter for a 35-21 lead. The 76ers were ahead 60-43 at halftime and used a 16-2 burst to make it 90-59 after three quarters.

Karl Malone had 29 points and Blue Edwards 14 for Utah, which lost for only the third time in 14 games.

Hersey Hawkins scored 20 points for Philadelphia and Johnny Dawkins added 16. The 76ers have been particularly successful with their Hawkins-Dawkins backcourt.

"It seems like I know where Johnny is going to be, and he knows where I'm going," Hawkins said. "It seems like that's been happening all during this streak, and I hope it keeps up."

So does Dawkins. "It certainly is a good feeling," he said. "It's also something that you feel you have to protect like it's the most valuable thing in the world."

Bugel reported to be Cardinals' new head coach

PHOENIX (AP) — After a search of almost three months, the Phoenix Cardinals have finally found a coach.

The NFL team scheduled a news conference today to introduce the coach, reportedly Washington Redskins assistant Joe Bugel.

WTIG-TV in Washington, D.C., and KTAR Radio in Phoenix both reported Monday night that Bugel will become the 30th coach in the Cardinals' 70-year history and the franchise's sixth since 1979.

Cardinals spokesman Paul Jensen refused to identify the man he said the team would introduce today as its new coach.

"I've told the Cardinals I wouldn't say anything, and I hope you can appreciate that," Bugel told the Arizona Republic late Monday from his Virginia home.

Bugel, 49, has been a Redskins assistant for nine seasons and has 15 years of NFL experience. He started as offensive line coach for the Detroit Lions in 1975-76 and coached the Houston Oilers offensive line from 1977-80.

Bugel coached at four colleges, including his alma mater, Western Kentucky from 1964-68. He also was at Navy (1969-72), Iowa State (1973) and Ohio State (1974) before coming to the Cardinals.

Bugel was among seven finalists for the Cardinals job, which opened when Gene Stallings was fired Nov. 20 in the middle of his fourth season.

Other finalists were San Francisco 49ers offensive coordinator Mike Holmgren, Los Angeles Rams defensive coordinator Fritz Shurmur, Fresno State coach Jim Sweeney, Cincinnati Bengals offensive coordinator Bruce Coslet, New York Giants defensive coordinator Bill Belichick and Cardinals interim coach Hank Kuhlmann.

Shurmur, 57, and Sweeney, 60, both were finalists for the Cardinals job before Stallings was hired in 1986.

Stallings, 54, had a 23-34-1 record when fired after announcing that he would not seek renewal of his contract at the end of the season. He subsequently returned to college coaching when he signed Jan. 11 with Alabama.

Kuhlmann, in his fourth year as running backs coach, was 0-5 after replacing Stallings. The Cardinals lost their last six games to finish 5-11, the club's fifth consecutive losing season.

Kuhlmann was interviewed for the job Jan. 5 by Phoenix general manager Larry Wilson, who was given the authority by Cardinals owner Bill Bidwill to hire a coach.

Wilson spent most of Monday meeting with Bidwill about the coaching search.

Coslet originally was interviewed Dec. 28, Belichick on Jan. 15, Sweeney on Jan. 22, Bugel on Jan. 23, Shurmur on Jan. 25 and Holmgren last Thursday at Indianapolis during the NFL's National Scouting Combine.

Wilson met again with Bugel on Friday at Indianapolis and on Saturday with Holmgren, Coslet and Belichick.

Simmons reaches No. 10 on NCAA career scoring list

By The Associated Press

The "L Train" just keeps chugging along. Lionel "L Train" Simmons' latest stop is 10th place on the NCAA career scoring list. The 6-foot-7 senior reached that station Monday night when he scored 26 points in leading No. 14 La Salle to its ninth straight victory, 72-59 over St. Peter's.

Simmons, with 2,845 points, passed Otis Birdsong, who scored 2,832 at Houston from 1973-77.

Simmons needs six points to pass Indiana State's Larry Bird for ninth place.

"I never expected to score this many points in my career," Simmons said. "Every high school player comes into college hoping to score 1,000 points in his career. I felt I was lucky to get 2,000, but I never even dreamed it would reach 3,000."

In other Top 25 games, it was No. 6 Syracuse 74, Seton Hall 65; No. 9 UNLV 105, San Jose State 69; No. 10 Purdue 67, Northwestern 60 and No. 11 LSU 86, Mississippi State 68.

Simmons scored eight points as La Salle (17-1, 8-0 Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference) took a 16-4 lead and never trailed.

No. 6 Syracuse 74, Seton Hall 65
Stephen Thompson scored 26 points and Syracuse made seven of 10 free throws over the final 2:23 to extend its dominance over the Pirates to 19 games. Syracuse (17-3, 7-3 Big East) won its fifth straight. Seton Hall hasn't beaten Syracuse since 1981.

Derrick Coleman added 19 points for Syracuse.

Anthony Avent, who led Seton Hall with 21 points, hit a layup with 3:25 left to pull the Pirates to within 63-58. Seton Hall began fouling a team that shoots only 64 percent at the line, but Coleman made three of four free throws and reserve Tony Scott hit four of six.

Ironically, the Orangemen missed five straight free throws after taking a 57-43 lead with 11:29 to play. They also went four minutes without a field goal to let the Pirates back into the game.

No. 9 UNLV 105, San Jose St. 69

Larry Johnson had 18 points and 16 rebounds and five teammates also scored in double figures. The Rebels opened a 22-point lead midway through the first half and widened the gap to 37 points late in the game with the regulars on the bench.

Johnson did his damage while playing only 22 minutes.

No. 10 Purdue 67, Northwestern 60

Stephen Scheffler scored 16 points, including the basket that broke a 59-59 tie. A basket by Tony Jones and four straight free throws by Woody Austin in the closing minute sealed the decision.

Northwestern trailed by 11 points in the first half and nine in the second but rallied to go ahead 54-51 before Purdue mounted its own comeback.

Scheffler, who leads the nation in field goal percentage, hit all seven of his shots.

No. 11 LSU 86, Mississippi St. 68

LSU had lost five straight to Mississippi State but Stanley Roberts scored 17 of his 23 points in the second half.

With Chris Jackson and Shaquille O'Neal both having off nights, Roberts picked up the slack along with Maurice Williamson, who scored 20 points.
